Wilson to meet with Board of Education

Melica Johnson

Staff

ASUI President Sean Wilson is meeting with the State Board of Education at Boise State University today to discuss the pros and cons of BSU starting an engineering degree program.

"BSU is jumping the gun in trying to take a whole program that is better off here because, there are more developers there," said Wilson.

Micron made BSU a six million dollar offer to move the engineering program to Boise. "If you figure how much it's going to take to start the program there, it's a heckuva lot more than six million dollars," said Wilson, "six million dollars is a drop in the bucket."

According to Wilson, there are UI alumni that donate millions of dollars to the university which is comparable, if not equal, to what Micron has offered BSU for an engineering program.

"We don't need to get into the money argument with BSU," said Wilson, "the simple fact is that we have established an engineering program and curriculum here that is one of the best in the world."

According to Wilson, "The issue has grown way out of proportion." Most of the Idaho legislature is from the Boise area and since BSU is located in the capital city, Wilson feels the legislature is more in support of BSU.

There are technicians (2 yr. degree or less), who are usually involved with the hands on operation of technology and the repair of equipment; technologists (2-4 yr. degree), who apply current knowledge to produce and implement designs with state of the art knowledge; and engineers (4 yr. degree), who apply a theoretical basis for technology to discover new technology.

UI produces engineers, "Who are basically the top of the heap," said Wilson. The difference between the technology program and the engineering program is the depth of math and sciences required.

Micron, BSU, and what most of the silicon corporations in Boise want, is somebody who can produce technologists. "The UI has been lacking in that area, because we basically produce engineers," said Wilson.

Weldon R. Tovey, Associate Dean for Academic and Student Affairs for the Engineering Department, believes that Micron's offer to BSU, has caused a lot of wasted effort and tension between faculties which wasn't there before.

"I can understand why Micron would like to have a college of engineering right there in their

Demand for Student Services increasing

Jennifer N. Eng

Staff

The University of Idaho's New Student Services department is under a greater demand than usual this year. The department is reporting a substantial increase in requests over previous years for information about the university and what it may offer potential students.

New Student Services was excited about the increase in requests over the previous year, but also a little surprised at the increase in requests from out-of-state students.

According to Thomas Lawford of New Student Services, last year there were a total of 20,000 requests for information about the university. So far this year there have been a total of 15,000 requests with 38 percent of those inquiries from state residents. It surprised the department to see that only 5,700 requests were from state residents with the rest from potential out-of-state students. Even with the cost of out-of-state tuition rising, people out-of-state are still interested in UI.

Not only is there an increase in requests for information, but over the past eight years there has also been a steady increase in the amount of incoming students. In 1986 there was a total of 1600 first time freshman and transfer students. In 1994 there were 1879 new students.

The New Student Services department is doing a lot of recruiting right now. At the moment they have three representatives traveling to various high schools recruiting new students for the university. Lawford also commented that they also plan to travel to local community colleges and other key community colleges in the northwest where they have a high success rate for recruitment.

Not only is the university sending people out to bring in more students, but they are also mailing out a great deal of information. On the average there are about 1,000 requests per month that reach New Student Services. In one month the department noted that they sent out about 50,000 publications.

In the next few months New Student Services should see even more requests from the information from ACT and SAT scores which students provide when they take those exams. High school students will be graduating in May and June which also remains a factor for the information increase.

Faculty Council fights for benefits

Russ Wright

Staff

University of Idaho's Faculty Council is fighting an administration attempt to reduce retiree health benefits for current employees.

The Risk Management Office, headed by Carol Grupp, commissioned a study to look into UI retirement health benefits last year and used data from two different accounting firms hired in years past to look into the costs associated with the program.

The Faculty Council, which objected to the findings and the possibility of "freezing university contributions to some or all retirees," commissioned its own study of the problem and came up with different recommendations.

"(The Faculty Council) looked at the issue for about five weeks," said Grupp. "There aren't any easy answers. It's not the kind of problem that's going to be resolved in a short study. I view this as an ongoing process."

"I think faculty and staff health benefits are critical," said Alan Place, a professor in Mechanical Engineering and one of the authors of the report to the Faculty Council. Place noted the health benefit for retirees often resulted in an equivalent of a 45 percent contribution to their retirement pay. Place is worried current and future retirees of UI are faced with a "loss of a major benefit."

Grupp said the caps which may be placed on health benefits will not affect current retirees but rather future retirees.

The Faculty Council's study found several faults with the Risk Management Office's report—namely that the two accounting firms hired, Coopers & Lybrand in 1990 and Milliman and Robertson in 1992, to study the program figured in inflation rates for medical costs which are no longer current.

Coopers and Lybrand predicted an annual "health care cost inflation rate" of 22 percent, eventually slowing down to six percent after 30 years. Milliman and Robertson used a rate of 12 percent with a drop to six percent in just 12 years.

The inflation of costs for medical care has slowed much faster than both studies predicted and,

Sigma Phi Epsilon moves to UI

Adam Gardels
Staff

The University of Idaho's Greek system will be home to the nation's largest fraternity—if the men of Sigma Phi Epsilon are successful in their attempts to become a chapter.
 Last fall the national and regional representatives of Sigma Phi Epsilon felt the UI was in need of their chapter, said Wayne Gehring, Vice President of Recruitment. "The representatives petitioned the Greek system and we were accepted," he said.
 Gehring and four others form the colony strive to include others into their fraternity. "The biggest difference is that we are un-housed, and that's our advantage. You can live wherever you want," boasts Gehring. "Our long term goal is to have a house. That's down the road a way," he said.
 The Sigma Phi Epsilons look to hold joint social activities with other fraternities. Gehring also stressed that, "WSU has a large Sigma Phi Epsilon house."

WSU presents housing expansion plan

Christine Erme
Staff

Washington State University announced last Friday plans to construct two new residence halls and four new apartment complexes to add 3,200 beds to its Pullman campus by the year 2005.

The new expansion project will increase WSU's housing expansion capacity to 9,522, from its current 6,387. Sallie Giffen, WSU vice president for business affairs, said that projects will be funded from the universities housing and dining system.

"We don't plan to raise housing costs to pay for this. We think that the room rates will cover the cost of financing," said Giffen. "We hope to break even on this, but it depends on the housing. We try to keep it affordable. We don't plan to make any money on this, but we have budgeted in reserves for construction."

The 10-year plan was developed in response to forecasts of rising enrollments. Enrollment at WSU is expected to increase approximately 34 percent from 17,800 to 24,000.

The first new apartment complex, now under construction will be open in August, and early planning is underway for a 600 bed residence hall to open in 1997. Projected costs of the new apartment complex is $11 million and the projected cost for the new residence hall is $20-25 million.

Giffen said the new residence halls try to offer what today's students prefer in the way of more independent living conditions.

"Right now we have very few single or private rooms," said Giffen. "We want to provide more single rooms, semi-private bathrooms, possibly cooking arrangements, and shared living spaces with lounges and living room." Locations for the projects have not been determined, but nine sites have been identified in the plan for evaluation.

"The locations will be separate and in friendly sizes," said Giffen. "The nine possibilities were based solely on proximity to campus and existing utilities, but no pros and cons have been discussed about them."

HIV most contagious first two months

College Press Service
ANN ARBOR, Mich.—Your chances of acquiring HIV—the virus that causes AIDS—may be a lot higher if you have sex with someone who was infected within the past two months, according to University of Michigan researchers.

“People are most infectious during the first 60 days after acquiring the virus, and they appear to be far more infectious during this phase than scientists previously believed,” said James S. Koopman, UM professor of epidemiology.

Graduate Students Organize in Support of Student Aid

The National Association of Graduate-Professional Students (NAGPS), a nonprofit organization representing graduate students from all across the United States, has begun organizing graduate students in support of student financial aid. The organizing has centered around keeping current student aid programs that have recently come under attack by some seeking to cut the federal budget.

“We are opposed to any attempts to eliminate the student loan interest exemption feature of the federal student loan program,” said Kevin Boyer, NAGPS Executive Director. The Republican Contract with America identifies the interest exemption—a less than $2 billion per year student aid benefit—as part of potential spending cuts. “The interest exemption is the backbone of the federal student loan program,” noted Boyer. “By paying loan interest while students are still in school, the federal government makes school affordable to many who would not otherwise be able to pursue their education.”

According to the American Council on Education, repealing this student aid program could add as much as $33,000 to the debt of a graduate student who borrowed money for undergraduate and graduate school—making the total debt burden as much as $100,000. Graduate students are affected most severely because of the cumulative effect of accrued interest over more years.

“NAGPS is calling upon all students, but particularly graduate students, to contact their Congressional Representatives and Senators to let them know of the serious repercussions if the interest exemption is eliminated,” said Boyer. “The loss of the exemption is certain to dramatically effect the ability of the nation’s graduate schools to recruit and retain graduate students, and would have an ultimately negative effect upon our nation’s competitiveness.”

Students interested in more detailed information about the interest exemption should send e-mail to 71551.3365@compuserve.com or call NAGPS at (708) 256-1562.

NAGPS is a nonprofit organization representing some 450,000 graduate students through their on campus student governments. It supports graduate education and graduate student quality-of-life. Individual membership is available for $35. For an application, contact NAGPS.

County libraries hold drawings

The Latah County Free Library System is giving away two free tickets to anywhere Horizon Air flies as part of the Love Your Seven Latah Libraries fundraiser. This year’s event will be a drawing for the tickets and for art objects donated by area artists. The art objects are on display at the Moscow Public Library located at 110 S. Jefferson.

Drawings for the airline tickets and for the art objects will be held at the Moscow Public Library at 3 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 12.

Tickets for both drawings are on sale at the Moscow Public Library and at all library branches throughout the county. Tickets will also be on sale at the Library’s table at the Palouse Empire Mall this Saturday.

The cost of tickets for the drawings are $3 or two tickets for $5 for the airline tickets and $1 or twelve tickets for $10 for the art object drawings. For more information please call Judy Wallins at 885-6307 or 882-3634.

No more lines at UI pharmacy

Dawn Casey

Staff

Filling prescriptions and counting pills are not the only duties carried out by the white lab coat wearing people behind that unusually high chin-level counter. The pharmacists at the University of Idaho Student Health Service do far more than that—and they are doing it in style.

“We don’t stand behind a counter,” said Mary Blair, the new pharmacist at the Health Service. Students do not have to approach those traditional counters—which were originally developed back when prescriptions were remedies concocted in secret. The UI pharmacists sit at conversation-friendly desks which promotes the counseling integral to a pharmacist’s duties.

Students do not have to wait in lines either. Pharmacy Director Ed Wimer said that during flu seasons of previous years, “there were lines down the hall.” Good news for the sick—a second pharmacist at the added work station speeds up the prescription filling process.

“We’re getting away from just dispensing to being an information source,” Blair said, “We verbally counsel every person who gets a prescription.”

She said that counting pills is a very small part of the job. Making sure the dose correlates with the diagnosis and any other drugs the patient is taking is important before handing over a prescription.

Outrageous prices can be avoided with some prescription drugs at the Health Service. Birth control pills, for example, are only $5 compared to $30 at most supermarkets. “We try to pass along a good price the students,” Blair said.

She and Wimer work closely with the physicians at the Health Service. Opposed to large supermarkets or drugstores where doctors are often difficult to reach by phone—patients often wait hours anticipating a phone call—the UI pharmacists are just down the hall from those who prescribe the drugs.

Teamwork between the doctors and pharmacists at UI also eliminates common difficulties in deciphering the infamous handwriting of the typical doctor. Distinguishing between an “I” and an “O” in Midrin and Motrin—not an uncommon task for a pharmacist—can be facilitated when the person who wrote it is in the same building.

The effort of the teamwork, however, combined with a new computer network, goes to the benefit of the patient. A terminal at each of the pharmacists’ desks screens for drug interaction and checks for allergies that the patient neglected to mention or that the doctor might have overlooked.

Each patient also receives a drug consultation print-out from the computer, which Blair said reinforces the verbal counseling.

The pharmacy is open Monday through Friday and students can have the cost of their prescription tacked on to their student account.

according to the Faculty Council's study, "is estimated in the 4-6 percent range."

Although the university's insurance carrier has been able to offer rates lower than regional averages, Grupp said the 4-6 percent figure is probably low. "Our carrier said the average rate of health care cost increases is around 14 percent," said Grupp.

Additionally, both firms assumed an adherence by the university to a law known as FA106. The law was intended to protect pension funds for retirees of private corporations. Private corporations are required by the law to report pension plans as "unfunded liabilities." Many retirees of the Gulf Corporation in the Wallace area were robbed of their retirement benefits when the corporation moved many of its assets overseas and declared itself bankrupt in the United States.

Such a scenario, members of the ad hoc committee which drafted the report said, is unlikely to ever exist with any government agency simply because "governmental entities operate year to year on appropriations voted by the elected representatives of the people," and therefore the entire operating budget of the university might well be considered and unfunded liability. The report rejected the premise of applying the requirements of FA106 to the university.

Grupp said it is not the scenario possibility but rather the fact that the Government Standards for Accounting Board may change its policy and ask government entities to adhere to such laws as FA106. Grupp said the university wanted to be prepared for such a contingency.

The Faculty Council study argued the retiree health benefits should not be singled out as a separate "risk pool" in the university's health care coverage costs and instead "should be treated as an integral component of the benefits package, with common risk pool and budgeting procedures."

"Retired employees have earned this," said Gerald Marousek, professor of Agricultural Economics and Chair of the Faculty Council's committee to study the problem. "We have a problem with the basic, fundamental assumptions" taken by the draft report of the Risk Management Office.

Marousek pointed out that many UI retirees continue to come in to work after they have retired. He also noted that a significant portion of the UI's endowment funds are provided by gifts from UI retirees.

John A. Jacquez and Carl P. Simon, along with Ira M. Longini, Jr., of Emory University, published the first study of how the primary phase—roughly the first 60 days of infection—affects the spread of HIV in the November 1994 issue of the "Journal of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndromes."

"We're saying the initial two-month period immediately following infection is the key factor controlling transmission of the virus and the spread of the epidemic," explained Koopman.

According to the study, rates of infectivity during the primary infection phase may be as much as 100 to 1,000 times higher than in the long asymptomatic phase that follows, which can last for years.

"As in the case with the flu or chicken pox, people are most infectious just before antibodies to the virus appear in their system," said Jacquez, a UM professor emeritus of physiology and of biostatistics. The difference, he added, is that HIV is transmitted "through needles and sexual contact."

While the researchers emphasize the results of the study is preliminary, they do add that people should keep a few things in mind:

•Since HIV-antibodies do not appear until near the end of the two-month primary infection phase, a negative blood test is no guarantee your sexual partner does not have the virus. "A person with a negative blood test may have a better chance of being highly contagious than a person with a positive test," said Simon, UM professor of mathematics and professor of economics and public policy.

•Since many people are not ill during the highly contagious first phase of infection, "counting on symptoms to tell you that infection has occurred is a mistake," according to Simon.

•The more sexual partners you have, the greater the risk of infection, because you increase the odds of having sex with someone during his or her primary infection phase.

"The highest risk group includes men and women involved in a regular sexual relationship with someone who has many sexual encounters with other people," Simon said.

backyard," said Tovey, "but I don't think their reasoning is very valid." Tovey says that most major companies, especially high-tech companies, typically don't expect their graduates to come from a local university. "They like to have a variety and recruit nationwide," said Tovey.

"All of the investigation to this point, indicates that Idaho really can't afford two major engineering colleges," said Tovey, "and it would be expensive and foolish to do it."

Wilson says he understands the need to compromise and also the need to find out through rational methods how UI can best administer the engineering programs throughout the state. "I just want to make sure the students here know what position we're taking and that the administration knows where we're at," said Wilson who believes that as Boise continues to grow, then so will the battle.

Abortion insert explained

"I think the students deserve an explanation."

"I don't think a state-funded newspaper should be printing that kind of stuff."

"Lawsuits may be in order."

Those were just three comments the Argonaut received over the phone following the inclusion of a pro-life advertising insert in Tuesday's edition. The insert featured photos of babies in the womb, mothers, explanations of abortion techniques, and heartfelt emotional pleas to stop killing human beings. One person thought running the 12-page insert demonstrated an editorial stance by the Argonaut (size is never a factor). Another thought it was a gross miss-use of funds, and yet another thought the Argonaut should have refused to accept the advertising.

Here's the explanation: The Argonaut has the right to refuse any advertising. The Argonaut also has the right to print anything that is not libelous. Like a stainless-steel shield, the First Amendment protects all publications. Just because the Argonaut is funded by students through various governments, it by no means diminishes First Amendment protection. We chose to print it.

Why? One, it's an advertisement and specifically says so on all 12 pages. Two, it doesn't attack and demean any group of people. Three, it does not present a level of obscenity or tastelessness that would cause the advertising manager or editor in chief to refuse it.

That's it. That's exactly why it ran, and also like why over 100 other student newspapers have made the same decision, totaling over 100,000 copies in print:

But that doesn't answer all the questions, or address all the issues readers were concerned about. For instance, "This seems like a blatant editorial stance and should get equal coverage."

No it doesn't. We never hide a stance by subversively printing propaganda. That's not our method of doing business. Few legitimate publications would ever consider it. If we have a stance, we'll tell you up front, and the information will be found under the word "Argonaut" at the top of the page. For the record, we have no stance. Michelle Kalbeitzer, with her photo next to her column, has a stance.

"But you do refuse some advertising, don't you?" Yes, we do. We refuse ads that are illegal, such as hard-liquor advertising. Other than that, we accept nearly everything. Here's why: we believe UI students are intelligent, and we (as students ourselves) make it a point not to judge what's acceptable for other students any more than we have to—university students are capable of developing responsible conclusions themselves.

For the most part, they are already doing that.

THE BITTERSWEET IRONY OF AMERICAN POLITICS

Is Chuck a 'Jello Train' victim?

Chuck Woolery, lovable host of The Dating Game, has been hit by a train. I heard this interesting tidbit of information just last night. My unnamed source, Mr. Dan Taylor (232 Cedar Avenue, Twin Falls, Idaho), who is a dear friend of mine (except when playing Monopoly) was so excited by the news that he called long-distance from Southern Idaho just to tell me.

Apparently he was watching some cable television show when a man with a watermelon on his head announced that Chuck Woolery, the lovable host of TV's The Dating Game, had been hit by a train earlier that day. My friend Dan (who shall remain anonymous) called me because he wanted to make sure Chuck was actually dead before he (Dan) threw a party in celebration.

I told Dan that I knew nothing of the sort. Quick as a whip, I assembled a news research team to get to the bottom of this amazing news story. We spent two days sifting through the library, looking through newspapers for clues. For a while, we smelled a coverup. Then, we realized that I needed some fresh socks. We also came to the conclusion that people should never throw their uneaten tuna sandwiches in the garbage can in the library.

Aaron Schab

Eventually we discovered the reason we couldn't find any recent coverage of the Chuck Woolery/train incident.

Apparently, the news show my good friend Mr. Taylor saw was a rerun on the new Cable Rerun News network, where all they show is reruns of old newscasts. So Chuck had been hit by a train and lived!

According to a secret document that I received from a guy in the alley behind the Student Union, Chuck Woolery was hit by a train on the night of March 30, 1983. "So how come he still looks so lovable if he did the cha-cha-cha with a choo-choo?" you may ask. Well, it turns out that the train that hit Chuck was made completely out of Jello.

No kidding! The secret document that I have in my possession details how the United States Department of Energy was making special trains made out of Jello to transport nuclear waste to disposal sites. The rationale behind this logic was that should the container holding the nuclear waste accidentally leak, it would be absorbed by the Jello.

Unfortunately, Jello does not absorb things, since it's smooth and a bit jiggly. Nor will it support heavy objects, and the government soon realized that, but not before spending four hundred bazillion dollars of tax money on the project, which was code-named "Operation Yummy Nukes."

Anyway, back to our dear friend Chuck Woolery, the lovable host of The Dating Game. He found out about this project and, being the hard-hitting journalist that he is, went to investigate. While interviewing the railroad tracks to uncover the story, Chuck was hit by the infamous "Jello Train." The train derailed, but Chuck was not injured. In fact, right after the accident, he filled his lovable host belly with jiggly Jello treats. "Operation Yummy Nukes" was halted shortly after the "Chuck Woolery Incident." The Department of Energy felt that their money would be better spent by releasing radiation into the atmosphere at Hanford, WA and Southern Utah.

Chuck Woolery has kept his silence for twelve years now. Apparently, the DOE let him take the Jello train home and put it in his fridge, so now he is never without yummy, jiggly, gelatin treats. No wonder he is so lovable! (Did I mention that he is the host of TV's The Dating Game?)

So yes, it is true that Chuck Woolery was once hit by a train. However, the damage was entirely mental, so that although he may be really stupid, at least he still has a good physical appearance. And we all know that's what really counts, don't we?

Dying is boring; it's debris and destruction that's fun

If nothing else happens in this brave new year of 1995, let it be said that it started with a bang, not a whimper.

Avalanches in California, shootings at clinics all over the eastern United States; things haven't been slow.

Sometimes, though, I have to wonder about the importance we, as people and as the media, place on certain events. Take, for example, the recent disaster in Kobe, Japan. A 7.2 earthquake is unarguably newsworthy; so are the massive fires afterward and the 5,000 or so people who died in the temblor. I certainly don't begrudge them the media coverage; better to see shots of what used to be Kobe than the ongoing parade of bloodsuckers and bastards making up the public crucifixion of O.J.

However, I sure don't remember this much coverage a decade ago, when the Union Carbide spill in Bhopal, India killed 2,000 people and injured a few thousand more. The volcanic eruptions and subsequent boiling mudslides in Columbia a few years ago also didn't get much coverage. I grant you that not as many people were killed, but I think you have a better chance of surviving burial in rubble than you do burial in superheated volcanic mud.

Hell, let's get down to serious events. What about the tropical monsoons that thrashed Bangladesh a couple of years ago? Those claimed upwards of 100,000 people, or roughly 20 Kobe-quakes. Or better yet, let's talk about Tangshan, China. In July of 1976, an earthquake that rang the bell at 8.0 struck Tangshan. After all was said and done, the total death toll came in at a whopping 750,000 Chinese sent on to meet their ancestors. Hello; does anyone remember hearing about three-quarters of a million people kicking off nearly twenty years ago? I doubt it.

For all our supposed caring about tragedies and disasters in our lives, we seem to be attentive to only a select few. Just in earthquakes alone, almost 1.1 million people have died in the last two decades or so. That doesn't count avalanches, forest fires, hurricanes, tornadoes, tsunamis, wars, traffic jams or any other form of disaster that can catch us unawares. Yet, only a fraction of them ever are seen by the media or noted by any worldwide organization like the Red Cross. Why is that?

Undoubtedly, part of the problem is the fact that there only exists a finite amount of resources for any particular problem. Even the most powerful agency on Earth (which right now is either Microsoft or the Catholic Church; I haven't been keeping tabs) can't take care of everything that comes along. Such is life.

But, I think that the true reason behind it all is that most of us just don't care. Let's face it; most of us don't know anyone in Kobe or Tangshan or Bhopal, much less Columbia or Bangladesh or any other place you could name. For people, the general rule of thumb is: if we don't know them, we don't care. Call it callousness or a survival adaptation, but it's something that we've all developed to one degree or another.

Man may be the only animal that recognizes the inevitability of death, and perhaps does so reluctantly, but at some unconscious level we accept it as part of being alive. It's not the death that interests us, but the ancillary effects. Destruction, human failure, Nature having a piss-poor day; that's what we want to see. After a point, even that pales, and so we turn to other things to hold our interests. It's part of human nature that we often prefer Seinfeld to slaughter.

In the end, after getting through the initial thoughts on the way we prioritize attention to tragedies, the point I'm approaching refers to the title. Death is part of the price of being alive, and really not an event to be agonized over or be unduly concerned about. Some methods may be better than others, not to mention faster, but the end result is the same. Devoting too much mental space to it is a waste of time, and detracts from our lives.

Follow Blue Oyster Cult's advice. Don't fear the reaper.

Don't forget to mourn the unborn

Michelle Kalbeitzer

The nation recently mourned the drowning deaths of two small boys in South Carolina. Their short lives were abruptly ended at the hands of their own mother. We were outraged that this woman violated everything that motherhood stood for. She had an obligation to give her children the security and comfort that they would need when life dealt them a crooked hand. Instead of doing this, she compromised the lives of her sons for her own convenience.

After this tragedy occurred, people flocked to the television talk shows to discuss the injustice of it all, the injustice of a mother knowingly taking the lives of her children. It was heartbreaking to realize that those two boys will never have the chance to laugh at funny faces or cry over their first love.

There is nothing the mother can say to the people of this country that will justify her behavior. She had absolutely no right to take the lives of her children, even if it is true that she is their mother.

It is very ironic that this country believes what that mother did was wrong. In the United States, there are thousands of children whose deaths go unnoticed. Their deaths are just as monstrous and unjustified as the deaths in South Carolina. So why is it that you never hear about all of these children?

It is because they are unborn children. The discrepancy lies here. The country is outraged when two young lives are ended prematurely by their mother, but not even a glance is given towards the other children that are not even given the ability to deny their own death. They too will never experience the joys that life has to offer.

Many people debate whether the unborn child really constitutes as life. Imagine a worldwide virus that affects the reproductive ability of every woman on this planet, and because of this virus, impregnation is impossible. Quite obviously, the human species would become extinct. Why would it become extinct? Because without fetuses growing inside their mothers there is no new life to replace those who have died.

Each individual living on this planet possesses life. And no one can state, with any certainty, that a fetus does not possess the same soul as we do. Anyone who has proof that ending the growth of a fetus does not indeed stop a soul and a life from continuing, I invite you to step forward with this proof. And may I remind you that the heart of an unborn child begins beating within four weeks after conception. If this does not constitute as life, then neither does the heart beating in your own chest.

Many women claim, "It is my body, therefore I have the right to terminate the pregnancy if I wish." To that argument I respond: We DO NOT OWN our children. Therefore we, both men and women, have no right in deciding such major decisions as life or death. Children are not possessions. As parents, it is our responsibility to give them the knowledge and direction they need to make educated decisions in life. But we are again forfeiting that chance for them.

Why is it that the right of a woman's personal choice became more important than the right to life? Because that is what it boils down to when the argument of "It's my body" comes into play. The argument itself is one meant for the convenience of the party involved.

If you do not want the responsibilities of parenting, then you have no business participating in unprotected sex. I certainly do not wish to see a child brought in this world and abused by the parents that never wanted him or her to begin with, although I am not saying abortion is the right solution in this case. I am saying that adoption is the way to go.

I empathize with those women who are pregnant as a result of rape. Unfortunately, many things happen in life that are unfair but don't continue the wrongs by passing it on to an undeserving child. Make the best of the situation by giving the child to an adoption agency.

If you found yourself agreeing with the beginning of this article and the sadness of young lives being ended prematurely, then maybe you should reconsider your position on abortion. Those unborn children suffer the same indecencies.

Letters to the Editor

Focus on issues, not accusations

I'm writing in response to the Jan. 24 letter to the Argonaut submitted by John Gustafson.

Has the Democratic Party eroded so far that their political maneuvering is centered around condemning Newt Gingrich's noble efforts to wipe clean from the Congressional record all slanderous comments unfairly made towards him? John, I doubt very much that our nation's most dynamic leader took a day away from cleaning up the mess the Democrats made of our nation to strike a few comments off the record, and so what if he did! Come on, John, pull your head out of your ass! If you would take a few minutes to step off your tear-stained soapbox you'll find that there are more important issues at hand. Issues that our nation's most powerful political party is confronting right now. Issues such as how to prepare our liberally defeated and morally corrupt country for the light that is about to shine on it when we put the new Republican President and Congress to work, righting all that you knee-jerk, flaming, bleeding heart liberals have screwed up.

Given the sheer magnitude of approval by the American people for our Republican Party, I can't believe that you would dare compare it to the Nazis. In implying this, are you not in fact saying that all God-fearing, conservative Americans are morally corrupt themselves? John, perhaps that fetish attachment to the Nazi party is just some twisted reflection of your own inner strife!

Ridenbaugh features graduate artwork

Jeremy Chase

Staff

For anyone interested in seeing a wide array of mixed media art, the opening reception of the Graduate Art Students Review Exhibition will be from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. today.

The exhibition is at the University Gallery located in Ridenbaugh Hall.

"There will be a lot of different mediums to look at," Kathleen Brotherton said. "There's going to be things ranging from photography to sculpture."

Brotherton, who is a student coordinator for the event, said that the event will feature three pieces from 14 graduate art students as part of a required project.

"This is a review of where they're at in their graduate studies," she said.

With the project as part of their coursework, the students will be working to receive their MFA (Master of Fine Arts) certificate.

Brotherton said that the diversity among the artwork displayed makes the exhibition a unique event. Different media for pieces will be used such as painting, collage, photography, sculpture, ceramics, and textiles.

"Everyone has a different perspective with their work," Brotherton said. "It's great to see how many different things there are."

Refreshments will be served today for those in attendance at the opening reception. The exhibition will run through Feb. 7.

The "Catch of the Day" by Rich Briggs (left) and Lars Rosenblab's "Disco I" (above), were two of the pieces displayed at a graduate student exhibition at Ridenbaugh Hall. The exhibition will continue through Feb. 7.

Bob Boyd offers tips on love

Aaron Schab

Staff

Bob Boyd is coming to town! By now, everybody has seen the signs plastered around campus: "Bob Boyd is coming to town!" teases one small flyer. "Bob Boyd reveals the secrets of intimacy!" promises another poster. But just who is this Bob Boyd guy? And what does he have to say?

"I will be sharing some of the secrets of how to have an exciting love life," says Dr. Bob Boyd, Jr., who addresses topics such as "The Number One Secret of Intimacy" and "The Art of Loving" using a unique blend of scientific research, psychological studies, personal experience, and Biblical viewpoints.

In the past seven years, Dr. Boyd has spoken to thousands of students from over a hundred different university campuses across the United States, all of whom have responded enthusiastically to his speeches.

He has taken his message of "how to get good dates" to such prestigious schools as Auburn University, Penn State, and the University of Nebraska. This is Bob's first visit to the University of Idaho.

Dr. Boyd's speeches focus on maintaining relationships with the person you love. "Love is not just a feeling, because feelings come and go," Dr. Boyd says. "True love has to do with a commitment to the other person's well-being." Bob also gives pointers on how a person can achieve intimacy in a love relationship, both emotionally, and physically. To tie it all together, Dr. Boyd integrates what the Bible has to say about the topics he covers in his lectures.

All of Dr. Boyd's seminar, which he writes himself, is written with the college student in mind, so his lectures are sure to be of interest to all students of all religious persuasions.

Some of the topics covered will include the how to have an exciting love life, secrets of love and romance, taking the initiative to meet the kind of people you want to establish romantic relationships with, the Bond of Commitment, and many others.

He also addresses how a personal relationship with God can help build relationships.

"Religion can be boring," Dr. Boyd says, "but a personal relationship with God is the most exciting thing in life." He stresses that "vertical love from God can help horizontal relationships between people who love each other."

Bob Boyd has been a conference speaker and evangelist for the past ten years. He lives with his wife, Mallory, and their three sons in Virginia Beach, Va. A state champion wrestler in high school, Bob graduated from the College of William and Mary with an undergraduate degree in the honors program in biology.

He then went on to earn his masters of theology degree magna cum laude from Dallas Theological Seminary, and later receiving his doctorate from Asbury Theological Seminary. "I am educated beyond my intelligence," Bob jokes.

While working as a full-time pastor, Dr. Boyd found that "I was speaking frequently to students and found that there was a great deal of response." Shortly afterwards, Bob was invited to become an International Speaker with the Campus Crusade for Christ, an international, non-denominational Christian organization with over 700 chapters.

Dr. Boyd's visit to UI is sponsored by the Campus Crusade for Christ, Baptist Student Ministry, and the Nazarene College Fellowship.

Dr. Boyd will be speaking on both Jan. 31 and Feb. 1 at the Administration Auditorium. Time for both lectures is 8 pm. Admission is free, so every one who is interested in discovering "The Number One Secret of Intimacy" and "The Art of Loving" is strongly encouraged to attend.

High school Bandfest today

Mike Maas
Staff

The University of Idaho will host its eighteenth annual high school Bandfest tomorrow, filling the Student Union with musicians from all over the Northwest.

Eighteen years ago, UI professor of music Robert Spevacek teamed up with Gary Green, who was at that time an instructor at Spokane's University High School. Because concert bands didn't have the audiences that jazz bands did, Spevacek and Green wanted to create an event that would showcase the concert groups. They invited various high school bands from Washington and Oregon to play, and hosted the event at UI.

This year, there are two schools from Oregon and five from Washington represented. Kamiakin High School, a group from Washington directed by John Owen, has attended the festival every year since its inception. Spevacek said that once a school is invited, they are always welcome in the succeeding years.

The proceedings are in no way a competition, the main objective is simply to allow the schools to hear what other bands are doing. All of the schools that attend have in their program a common piece, providing a frame of reference to the public and the other groups. This year, that piece is David Holsinger's "On A Hymn Song of Philip Bliss."

Mixed in throughout the day's performances are various ensembles from UI. These include the UI percussion ensemble, brass quintet, trombone ensemble, the Northwest Wind Quintet, and a grand finale performance by the UI Wind Ensemble, directed by Robert Spevacek.

The final group will also aid music professor Dan Bukvich in a demonstration, "How Music is Constructed."

While the primary purpose of the bandfest is performance, it also allows high school students a look at the university. Prospective music students can use the visit to audition for acceptance into the music school.

Bridgette Dyer, a freshman at UI and graduate of one of this year's festival participants, Sandy High School, said "It was a good opportunity for me to visit UI, and see the ensembles that represent the college." Dyer said that this experience was the major catalyst in her decision to attend school here.

The festival takes place in the Student Union Ballroom from 9 am to approximately 5 pm. It is free and open to the public.

Time to ring in the new year

Those of you who have already broken your New Year's resolution can give it another shot.

This Sunday the Chinese New Year will be celebrated by the Chinese students of the university.

Yaping Zong, President of the Chinese Student and Scholar Association, says that the festival will be celebrated the traditional way—with lots of food, music, and of course, resolution making.

The basic features and core of Chinese traditional culture are moral principles. Many of the customs of festivals are associated with ancient taboos and superstitions. At traditional festival times, Chinese overseas think of their motherland and yearn for the cohesive force that traditional Chinese culture brings.

Mary Furnari, International Student Advisor, says that the festival is the largest holiday of the year for the Chinese. "It's equivalent to the Christmas of the United States," Furnari says.

While teaching in China, Furnari noticed that traveling during the New Year was busy since people go many miles to be with their families.

The Chinese New Year is celebrated on the first day of the first month of the old lunar calendar. It usually marks the end of the harvest year. Zong says that many families get together to discuss their past bounties and make goals for another good year.

Furnari says the festival is filled with fireworks, parades, and food.

Although many no longer believe in the superstitions of the festival, some are still practiced. For example, cleaning the house before the New Year will sweep out the old and keep in the new. Eating noodles on New Year will bring long life.

Zong says it sometimes takes months for Chinese students to adjust to the cultural changes in America, especially moving away from the strong family ties that many Chinese hold. The Chinese constitute the largest part of the international population on campus.

The celebration will be held this Sunday at 6 p.m. in the Student Union. Everyone is welcome.

Concert to raise money

An evening of music and dancing will help raise money for the Lewis-Clark State College's Center for Arts and History piano fund.

On store for the cabaret-style event is a champagne and wine cocktail hour at 7 p.m. with music provided by the Lakeside Combo jazz trio followed by a musical program at 8 p.m. featuring show tunes, classical selections and music from the 1940's era.

The musical program will feature vocal performances by Denise Turner, John Jordan and Connie Gibbar. Also set to perform are instrumentalist Bill Perconti, saxophone, Gary Gemberling, trumpet, Toni Pierce and Katherine Baker, flutes as well as piano solos from Marin Jacobson and Michael Zearott.

"An elegant evening of music is in answer to many requests we have received at the Center for Arts for a night-on-the-town type of event," Leslie Esselburn Center Director said. "Fund raising for the purchase of a grand piano provides a good focus for such an evening."

The Dozier-Jarvis-Jensen Quartet will be performing after the musical performances at which time specialty desserts and coffee will be served.

"Piano Keys, Please!" is the second in a series of special events to raise funds for the purchase of a piano for the Center for Arts and History.

Currently a Yamaha Grand Piano is on loan to the Center through a special corporate program sponsored by the Yamaha Piano Company.

Tickets for the event are $25 per person and must be purchased in advance as seating is limited. For ticket information, contact the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts and History, (208) 799-2243.

AMIE COMEAUX MOVING OUT

For those country music fans out there, this up-and-coming country singer is definitely someone to listen to.

Just 17 years old, and already Amie Comeaux has a hit on her hands. Comeaux sings with a maturity and clarity that some female musicians fail to achieve until much later in their careers.

The first song, which is also the title track, "Moving Out," reflects her age. The lyrics sing of two young women moving away from home for the first time, and the parental perils that may befall them: "I can tell by the look on my daddy's face, he don't like it/He thinks I'm gonna throw wild parties every night and start drinking, that's what he's thinking."

The rest of the album talks about everything from breaking up to cheating boyfriends to first loves.

"Taking It Back" sings of the realization that an old relationship is all take and no give: "You don't get Jill when you don't give Jack/You broke my heart now I'm taking it back."

Probably the best song on the album is "Who's She to You"

which is about an old flame showing up "If she says hello, will you tell me goodbye/Who's she to you, and darlin' who am I." This song has a great blend of guitar, piano, and has an easy-going beat.

Most of the music on this album has great potential. It tends to get repetitive at times since Comeaux sings songs with mostly moderate to slow tempos.

Moving Out is a great album for country music fans. It is on the Dolvdor label and can be purchased at most major record stores

LATCHO DROM ORIGINAL MOTION PICTURE SOUNDTRACK

When one thinks of the Caroline record label, one probably doesn't think of Hungarian folk music. The original soundtrack from the 1993 French film Latcho Drom makes that new connection.

The album takes us on a musical journey, starting in India and ending in Spain, with stops in Egypt, Turkey, Romania, Hungary, Slovakia, Hungary and France. Composed entirely of traditional folk music, it is an ambient, down-to-earth collection of music that offers us a look at the culture from which the music originated.

Tracks like the energetic "Bambi Saidi" from Egypt and the Hungarian "Cigany Himnusz" let you envision children and families dancing in the streets to the sound of fiddles and makeshift percussion during a festival. The Romanian "Balada Conducatorului" paints the image of a sad old man singing stories of times past in an ancient tavern for a collection of villagers gathered about him on the dirty floor and wooden benches. You can almost see an old widow sitting in the window of her Prague flat, moaning out the haunting "Auschwitz."

This album is a wonderful collection, both for the world music aficionado and anyone interested in or fascinated by the rich cultures of Asia, North Africa and Southern Europe.

WOODSTOCK '94

It was a weekend of music, rain, and mud. An old farmer's field filled to capacity with over 350,000 people, all moshing, all becoming a unified generation even if it was for a brief few days.

It was an event which is known as Woodstock. Now out on Atlantic records is the official release from that spectacular event in music and cultural history. Woodstock '94 is a double-CD album.

The first disc is filled with a multitude of bands ranging from Live to Nine Inch Nails, as well as stage announcements. Starting out disc one is Live's "Selling The Drama." The song includes everything the band said to the milling crowd beneath the stage.

Disc one also offers Blues Traveler with their song "But Anyway." Everything on the discs is mixed in well with a balance between the heavy with the mellow.

The Cranberries were one of the highlights on the album, with the Dolores O'Riordan, the vocalist, opening up by telling the crowd that the song "Dreams" is from a singular verse.

Some other bands which stand out on the album are Green Day, Primus, Nine Inch Nails, Metallica and Peter Gabriel.

Green Day turned their song "When I Come Around" from their show at Woodstock into a video for MTV. The only reason to buy the album would be to get a few of the bands. Some of the bands on the album chose the wrong song to put on to the album. One of the bands who made this mistake was Rollins Band with their song "Right Here Too Much," and another was Cypress Hill with "How I Could Just Kill A Man."

Nine Inch Nails did a superb job on their song "Happiness In Slavery." Nine Inch Nails also did a fabulous job in their live performance, even drawing the attention of David Letterman, who complimented Nine Inch Nails on their performance.

The final song on the album ending out disc two is "Biko" by Peter Gabriel. I think that "Biko" was probably one of the most languid songs I have heard in awhile. Definitely made me a Peter Gabriel fan.

Woodstock '94 is an album for the music collector. You should not just buy it for the amount of music and talent on the two discs, but also to have a cultural event recorded. I wish I could have been there to see the show, but with the album I live some of what I missed out on.

Backcountry fluff provides exhilarating ride

Joa Harrison

Staff

When we think of snowcat or helicopter skiing, North Idaho isn't the first place that comes to mind. Most likely we envision regions such as the Canadian Rockies, Bugaboos, or Ruby Mountains. The Inland Empire might be adequate for lift-served skiing, but when it comes to laying fresh tracks through waist deep fluff we figure we have to go elsewhere.

That is, we had to until a UI graduate fulfilled his dream of starting a local snowcat skiing operation. Through careful planning and an amazing amount of hard work, Steve Matthews and his partner Terri Rengstorff are providing access to an entire region of terrain only previously approached by the most hardy of backcountry skiers.

This ski season started off spectacularly, many resorts were able to open far earlier than normal and snowfall just didn't seem to be stopping. Like all earthly things, it couldn't last forever. By the end of December snowfall began to wane and by early January it had completely stopped. Though the cold weather had protected the snow from hardening, it couldn't protect it from the onslaught of holiday skiers who were making mogul fields out of what normally would be powder runs.

Longing for some new scenery, I gave Peak Adventures a call and booked a trip. Now all I could do was pray for new snow before the trip; even a catskiing operation couldn't possibly pull off fresh turns with the dry spell we were having.

After the 30 minute drive from Coeur d' Alene, I pulled into Cataldo and was greeted by the smiling faces of Peak Adventures' owners and guides, Steve and Terri. Four other customers joined us. After filling out paperwork and listening to an in-depth safety talk we were off.

Just seven of us and 25 square miles of choice skiing, at least according to Steve. I wasn't so sure how choice it was going to be—we hadn't had any fresh snow in over a week. During the 30 minute shuttle to the cat, Terri assured me we would find good snow—she and Steve had been exploring this area for six years, they could find it.

Before boarding the cat and starting up the mountain we were all given avalanche transceivers and taught how to use them. Partnering up, we then got to practice finding each other's hidden transceiver. I had the opportunity to partner up with Terri. After hiding her transceiver under snow some distance away, she sent me searching. Having used transceivers before, I was pretty confident I could find it. Much to my surprise, I was having no luck tracking the signal. After much searching, I returned to Terri to explain my failure. As it turned out, she had forgotten to turn the unit on before she hid it. Though comical at the time, it served as a grim lesson of the danger in skiing backcountry without a properly operating transceiver.

Owning a snowcat skiing business has been the dream of Steve Matthews ever since he started traveling into the backcountry. After graduating from the University of Idaho in 1986, Steve used his marketing degree to land him a sponsorship with several snowboard companies. This enabled him to access the backcountry many times during competitions and photo shoots. Using this experience, and combining it with a desire to spend his life doing what he loves, he partnered up with Terri (herself a WSU graduate) and started Peak Adventures.

Although Peak Adventures is considered a skiing operation, our group comprised mostly of snowboarders, including Steve and Terri. Other members of the group alpine skied while I telemarked. Having such a wide range of "snow sliders" didn't prove to be a problem, as Peak Adventures' brochure says, "There are no politics on the cat."

After an hour long cat ride, we arrived at the top of Mt. Pearson. The view was amazing; at over 6,200 feet, Mt. Pearson is one of the highest peaks in the St. Joe mountains. Below us huge bowls led off in every direction.

Though the entire area was skiable, only part of the mountain could be accessed by the cat without too much loss of vertical. All of our runs would be between 800 and 1,500 feet; any longer and the snowcat would be forced into a lengthy shuttle. Short runs allowed us to ski only the very best snow. As Steve said, we'd be "lickin' the icing off the cake."

And what an icing! In the glades sun had softened the snow so turns were smooth and creamy, while in the trees snow was light and dry. Rarely did we ever cross another track. Though previous skiers had left their mark, the abundant terrain allowed us to skirt the used snow and leave our own signatures.

Throughout the day safety was constantly emphasized. Unlike many guided skiing trips (and Warren Miller films), we were never allowed to do "mass starts." We skied in pairs, only after each pair was down to a safe area, would the lead guide radio up to remaining skiers that it was safe for the next pair to ski. Such a system assured no more than two skiers risked being caught in an avalanche at any one time. In the past entire ski parties have been buried because they failed to take this simple precaution.

Safety equipment was everywhere, in the snowcat and with the guides. Both Steve and Terri wore backpacks containing rescue gear and first-aid kits. They also each wore cellular phones which we were taught to use in case of an emergency. Since we were 25 miles from the closest paved road all rescues would take place by helicopter. If a medical flight was impossible due to weather or other circumstances the snowcat was equipped with a rescue sled and evacuation equipment.

After skiing runs like Treelicious, Psycho Thriller, Skinhorse Alley and Bumps, Jumps and Stumps we were ready to go home. The day had been great! Not only had we gotten to ski fresh snow all day, we were treated to scenery and atmosphere only the backcountry can provide. Tired and content, we loaded into the cat for the last time and headed down the mountain.

Part way down we stopped for hot drinks. Looking back we could see the sunset reflecting off our tracks. Beyond our tracks snow remained undisturbed, waiting, perhaps beckoning for us to come back. Some of us will.

And when we do, we will leave our telltale signatures. Then the snow will come again and once more the playground will be new.

For more information about skiing or snowboarding the backcountry by snowcat, contact Peak Adventures Snowcat Skiing, Box 58, Cataldo, ID 83810. (208) 664-8687 or (208) 682-3200.

Remember: Prepare for winter in the backcountry

If you are going outdoors for recreation this winter, make sure you are prepared for the worst.

Always dress warmly and bring an adequate first aid kit. A thorough knowledge of first aid procedures is perhaps the most important tool on any trip.

Familiarize yourself with the terrain you will be traveling or staying in, especially if you are heading to the high country.

Never travel alone and let someone know where you are going and when you plan to return.

It is also essential to learn avalanche detection and survival techniques. Carry avalanche rescue gear, and be able to use it.

It doesn't take a major disaster to ruin a fun weekend outside; play smart and play safe.

For more information on winter sporting and avalanche safety, contact the UI Outdoor Program at 885-6810.

UI hydrogeology professor offers aquifer insight

Erik Marone
Staff

Editor's Note: This article follows-up a series about efforts to gain federal protection for Eastern Columbia Plateau Aquifer system.

It is always hard to discern between facts and propaganda, especially in a confrontation as political as the current Sole Source Aquifer battle being waged in Eastern Washington and North Idaho. Even harder can be finding an impartial voice.

Dr. Dale Ralston, professor of hydrogeology at the University of Idaho, is that impartial voice. He has not done any work for anyone involved in the Sole Source Aquifer or SSA campaigns, but has reviewed about half of the research available on the Eastern Columbia Plateau Aquifer System. He offers scientific insight into the research.

The EPA is primarily using the much criticized U.S. Geologic Survey's comprehensive computer model for their research. Ralston said of the USGS report, "There is a lot we don't know. You can't really criticize the study for being incomplete because there's a lot of data that doesn't exist."

He feels the data collected to date is adequate but it is not being considered on some important levels. Ralston says "There needs to be more consideration of the time lag."

Although the aquifers are hydraulically connected, the amount of time it takes for water to flow both vertically and horizontally has not been established. The shallow aquifer below Moscow is 200 feet deep, with water 5,000 years old.

The deep aquifer is 1,000 feet with 35,000 year old water. Ralston said this time lag effectively isolates the two water tables. He points out major gasoline spills and human sewage introduced as long as 100 years ago have not polluted the deep aquifer.

Ralston questions the area SSA would protect. "Why doesn't this SSA go all the way down to the Dalles, Oregon?" The basalts composing the Eastern Columbia Plateau Aquifer System are the same all the way down the Columbia river basin.

He says a judgment call might have been made differently had time considerations been taken into account. Ralston feels smaller SSAs are a much more effective method of ground water management.

"It would be much more rational if it were a Pullman-Moscow aquifer." He points to the Lewiston SSA protecting the shallower aquifer and not subsequent water tables as a perfect example.

Ralston sees the larger area as counter-productive. If the protected area is smaller it gives political advantage to concerned parties and greater attention to details of preserving ground water quality.

As for the SSA designation itself, Ralston feels it would be useful for changing public perception about ground water management, but is not necessary. He sees no need for Federal intervention.

Ralston said, "I am more and more convinced that local management is the most efficient."

He feels a sensible management scheme taking into account land and water use for decades to come will provide more than adequate ground water protection.

The EPA's decision on the SSA is expected in the next few months, following the public comment period which ends Feb. 17.

Commissioner's meeting successful

Dave Claycomb
Staff

Gov. Phil Batt apologized and said his request for all Idaho's Fish and Game commissioners resignations was, "premature and ill-conceived."

Batt's statement followed on the heels of his request made earlier this month for the resignation of all the commissioners. Batt would have chose which resignations to accept.

"It violates my own advice to use common sense in governmental action," Batt said of the request. He did say some issues still need addressing. Batt cited the incident last year where a Fish and Game publication criticized Sen. Larry Craig over his position on salmon.

After a separate meeting with the Fish and Game commissioners, Idaho Fish and Game Director Jerry Conley said a letter of apology will be sent to Craig.

Another issue concerning Gov. Batt was the proposed bombing range for Mountain Home Air Force Base. Conley said Idaho Fish and Game is not against the bombing range and is helping to find an acceptable location.

The Governor's apology may have been related to a recently released report that showed that Idaho sportsmen are overwhelmingly in favor of the job that the Idaho Dept. of Fish and Game is doing. Only 10 percent of the people surveyed were dissatisfied with their performance.

Also in jeopardy, was Conleys job. The six Fish and Game Commissioners have the ability to hire and fire the Director of Fish and Game and many believed the resignation of the Commissioners would lead to the end of Conley's tenure.

"This wasn't the situation that any of us wanted to be in the first place, but I believe that things worked out for the best. I am very pleased with the outcome" said Keith Carlson, Fish and Game Commissioner of the Clearwater District, and newly elected chairman of the Fish and Game commissioners. Conley, who has been the Director of Idaho Fish and Game since 1980, said he is glad most differences have been cleared and looks forward to working with Batt and the commissioners to meet the needs of Idaho sportsmen. Conley also jokingly added, although his job looks secure once again, "a Fish and Game director's job is never truly secure. I am at the disposal of Idaho sportsmen as well as the commissioners, and I only get a 30 day extension on my contract each month."

Vandals play sloppy; Weber State romps

Damon Barkdull

Staff

Mama said there'd be days like this. That's probably what University of Idaho coach Joe Cravens was thinking, after witnessing the thumping his Vandals took against Weber State.

Turnovers, cold shooting, and all around Idaho sloppy play helped the Weber State Wildcats (10-7) to defeat the Vandals 73-56 in Big Sky Conference basketball action Thursday.

5,912 hostile fans watched the game start out slowly. Weber State first got on the scoreboard with a lay-up by Jeff Lentfer. Idaho's Mark Leslie soon tied the score at two, before Weber State went on an 18-4 run. After short scoring runs by Weber State, Idaho found itself down 40-19 at the half. Part of Idaho's first half problems were the 10 turnovers, along with shooting 32 percent from the field.

Idaho's first half woes continued into the second half, as Weber State's Kevin Smith scored a lay-up to make it 42-19 in favor of the Wildcats. Idaho's leading scorer and rebounder Harry Harrison was ineffective the entire game. The junior had just five points and eight rebounds. Harrison came into Thursday's game not feeling well, with a temperature of 103 degrees.

Weber State's bigger line-up pounded the ball inside, and shot the ball well from three-point land, including a 6-11 first half three-point barrage.

Idaho made a mini-run towards the end of the game, as Shawn Dirден hit two free throws with under 3:00 remaining, to cut Weber State's lead to 66-54.

After a brief moment of Vandal hopefulness, Idaho once more could not shoot the ball, ending the game shooting just 37 percent.

Leslie led the Vandals with 14 points while Dirден added 13.

Although it was evident that Idaho couldn't get things going in the beginning, Cravens was upset with his team's efforts on the road.

"We came out here and didn't except the challenge. I've got guys who can play well at home, but I need to find some guys who can play well for me on the road," Cravens said. "I'm embarrassed for our fans and our team. I'm very disappointed, we just didn't execute."

The Vandal's frustration showed on the court when Dirден was awarded a technical foul for talking back to the referee with 44 seconds left in the game.

"We showed no heart...guys may think we played hard, but we just didn't compete," said Cravens.

Idaho (7-9) is 0-6 on the road, and will try to redeem themselves Saturday, as they travel to Northern Arizona for a Big Sky Conference matchup.

"I promise my guys will play harder at Northern Arizona," said Cravens.

Tracksters at home in Dome

Ben Carr

Staff

The University of Idaho campus will be filled with track and field athletes from across the Northwest this weekend.

Teams from Washington, Oregon, Montana, and Idaho will be in town to test their athletic abilities in the Moscow-McDonald's Scoring Invitational track meet.

This weekend's invitational is the first scored meet of the season for the men's track team. The men were in action last weekend in Cheney. The McDonald's meet is also the first meet of the year for the women's track team.

Teams competing will include: Pac-10 schools Washington and Washington State and Also Big Sky teams Montana, Montana State, Boise State, and Eastern Washington.

Scott Lorek, head coach for women's track, is excited about this weekend.

"It's going to be a great meet. A great competition. We've got some individuals who will do very well this weekend," Lorek said.

For all their experience—the Idaho women's team is returning twelve letter winners from last year—the Vandals are still a young team. The women's team is fielding ten freshmen alongside the older veterans.

"We've got a young team," Lorek said. "We've got a lot of potential. This is one of those years where you start looking for the team leaders to come out. We're anxious to see who'll step up."

Of the few seniors on the team, Lorek looks for big things from Heidi Bodwell to lead the team by her example. Bodwell competes in the long jump and 55 and 200 meter sprint events.

The men's track team is also expecting improved performances from its athletes who competed last weekend in Cheney.

Thaddeus Hathaway placed third last weekend with a high jump of 6-7 and qualified for the Big Sky Championship in March. Leonard Brittner was close behind Hathaway with a leap of 6-5.

The men's team is also spurred on by the third and fourth place finishes of Neils Kruller and Jason St. Hill in the 55 meter dash last weekend.

Coach Lorek is also emphasizing the outdoor championships later this spring. The Idaho team is limited in indoor competition because it cannot get big points from the discus and javelin events. Idaho has the personnel to dominate these events in competition, but they are only outdoor events.

The track teams are excited about this weekend's tournament and have been looking forward to it since October when they began practicing.

"This will be fun," Lorek said. "This will be a good measuring stick for where we are compared to other teams."

Events in the meet will be held on

UI pole vaulter Pat McFadden practices for the U.S. Indoor Heptathlon. The track meet will be in the Kibbie Dome Feb. 10-11.

Joa Harrison

both Friday and Saturday and Lorek says the competition will be spectator friendly.

"Having the tournament on both days means it will be a lot easier to watch. It's only a few hours each day, and the competition should be really exciting," Lorek said.

The competition begins tonight with the field events at 4 p.m. and track events will begin at 6 p.m. The competition continues on Saturday with the field events beginning at 9:30 a.m. and track events starting at 10:00 a.m.

Tormey wastes no time as new head coach

Kevin Neuendorf

Staff

Idaho head football coach Chris Tormey has been on the job less than three weeks.

In this time, he's had two week-long recruiting trips, has held two team meetings, and hired three assistant coaches, but has not yet been able to move his family to Moscow.

Oh, the life of a football coach.

Tormey announced, Tuesday, that George Yarno, Paul Skansi and Casey Dunn will join his coaching staff.

Yarno will serve as Idaho's offensive line coach and as the offensive coordinator. Skansi will serve as Idaho's wide receivers coach, and Dunn will be a restricted earnings coach working with defensive backs.

Yarno joins the Vandals after serving as offensive line coach at Washington State University for the past four years.

"I'm very excited to now be an active part of the offense and be involved in play calling," said Yarno.

Yarno said he doesn't foresee any big changes to Idaho's traditionally high powered offense.

The 37-year-old a graduate of Ferris High School in Spokane, was a two-time all-Pac-10 pick at Washington State as a defensive lineman and spent 12 seasons as an offensive lineman in the National Football League with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers(1979-84, 1985-87), Atlanta Falcons(1988) and the Green Bay Packers(1990).

"George has 12 years of NFL experience, is an outstanding offensive line coach and has experience with the one-back offense," Tormey said. "He recruited Eastern Washington and Idaho when he was at WSU and will do the same here."

George's older brother, John, was an all-American center at the University of Idaho in 1976 and eventually became a starter for the Seattle Seahawks.

The 34-year old Skansi is a former University of Washington and Seattle Seahawk star receiver and last year served as an unofficial volunteer coach for the Huskies.

"Paul was an outstanding player and a guy with a lot of integrity," Tormey said. "He will give us great name recognition in western Washington which is one of the areas he will recruit. He also brings a great background in the passing game."

Skansi was a four-year starter at the University of Washington and finished as the Huskie's all-time leading receiver with 138 catches for 1,723 yards and 15 touchdowns. He then enjoyed a nine-year career in the NFL, eight of those years with the Seattle Seahawks(1984-91).

Tormey described, ex-Vandal great, Casey Dunn, as a "perfect fit."

"He has great Idaho ties, is a great young coach who has a bright future in the profession and really relates to the players."

The 25-year old Dunn was without question one of the greatest offensive players in Vandal history. He is Idaho's all-time leader in reception yards with 3,847 and receptions with 268.

He led the NCAA, Division I-AA, in receptions in 1990 with 88 and finished his career ranked second behind Jerry Rice in I-AA career receptions and career yards.

Tormey expressed that he is very pleased with the personnel he has hired for his first staff.

The new Vandal head will announce his last remaining full-time coaching appointment sometime after national letter of intent signing day on Feb. 1.

Tennis takes a turn at UI

When Idaho hired Greg South this past year, they probably got more than they bargained for. From the reactions of his players, it is clear that South has made a major difference in Vandal tennis.

South credits the improvement to having a great group of kids. "They come out and play hard every day, and when I tell them something, they make sure they know what I want, and they go out and do it," said South. "I told them when I got here that it was time to start dreaming again, and I really meant that."

What do Idaho tennis and New Zealand have in common? Mark Hadley and Gwen Nikora, both of whom are from the same high school, and both of whom are making Idaho tennis a success. The Idaho men return the same line-up as last season, and the women are deep as well. Hadley, and Keith

Mark Vanderwall

Bradbury are at the top for the men, whereas Nikora, and Shaley Denler head the list of women.

Bradbury sees the future as very optimistic, saying, "Within the next two years, we will be one of the top ranked schools in the Northwest."

When Idaho makes the move to the Big West, the tennis program will only get better.

The conference tournaments are then held at Ojai, which is also home to the Pac-10 tourney as well. This could give Idaho a chance to play against greater competition, and tremendously boost their recruiting power as well.

Idaho has big plans for the future, and have many good recruits that are interested in the tennis program as well. South has changed Idaho from a defensive to an offensive minded team. "I'm trying to teach them how the game is played, not just how to hit the ball," said South on his new techniques.

Offense and aggressive play will help this team grow, and South said, "Wouldn't you rather be in the driver's seat, and be in control, rather than waiting for someone else's move, I know I sure would."

Conditioning has been a big part of making the players feel they are more prepared to play. "We are in such better shape," said Nikora.

There is a whole new attitude around the tennis courts, and most of that can be attributed to a coach that cares about his player's. "I thought about transferring," said, Hadley. "Coach has really made the difference form me, and I think the rest of the team as well."

The university, as well as the coach and team, have a whole new frame of mind, and it is centered on winning. The excitement on the faces of the players tells the whole story, they are finally seeing the changes, and that is making them believe in themselves. They are really looking forward to the start of the season, and also to the changes that are taking place in UI tennis.

Vandals hope to axe 'Jacks

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

The Idaho Vandals meet Big Sky Conference foe Northern Arizona Saturday with hopes of climbing back into the league race.

MEN

The Vandals, who play in Flagstaff, have been led all year by power forward Harry Harrison. The 6-foot 7-inch junior leads the Big Sky in rebounding, pulling down 11.2 boards a game. In addition the Brunswick, Georgia native is third in the conference in field goal percentage at .585 and ninth in scoring, chipping in 13.8 points per contest. Harrison has 11 double doubles in Idaho's 12 games this season.

The Lumberjacks, who have lost 12 in a row to the Vandals, will need to control the UI backcourt. Guard Mark Leslie is averaging 13.1 points a game on the year and backcourt mate Shawn Dirden has averaged 16.3 points a game and has shot 53 percent from the field in the last seven games.

Northern Arizona has been paced all year by forward Brad Snyder (14.4 ppg) and guard Jon Rondeno (12.0 ppg).

WOMEN

Idaho, which hosts the Arizona rivals, has lost four straight games since coming back from the winter break and is winless thus far in Big Sky play.

The Vandals two-sport star Mindy Rice should be a nightmare for NAU defenders. The 6-1 junior posts a team-high 17.4 points a game and also leads the club in rebounding with an 8.4 average.

The young backcourt is another strength for the Vandal-5. Sophomore point guard Ari Skorpik averages 13.1 points a game while freshman Kelli Johnson contributes 10.2.

Idaho will need a smothering defense to force turnovers as NAU will look to exploit the Vandals short front-line. Centers Jeri Hymas and Brenda Rademacher, both 6-3, will not play. Hymas is academically ineligible and Rademacher left the team for personal reasons.

Amy Yanish (13.9 ppg) and Shaunice Warr (12.2 ppg) pace the Lumberjacks.
