Kibbie remodeling options examined

Russ Wright
Staff

A host of alternatives for remodeling the Kibbie Dome is currently being examined by Sports Management Group.

Sports Management Group is a consulting office hired by the University of Idaho to look for some solutions to several problems facing the Kibbie Dome and UI with regards to athletic programs and campus recreation.

UI officials have a couple of goals in mind, said Jerry Wallace, vice president of Finance and Administration.

With its recent move to the I-A division Big West, UI will have to expand the Kibbie Dome to hold enough sports fans in order to acquire the necessary 17,000 average attendance mandated by the NCAA.

Wallace said, however, the university will not try to expand the Kibbie Dome to hold the minimum 30,000 people required by the NCAA to enter into the I-A classification.

"If we average (an attendance of) 17,000, the 30,000 seating capacity rule is not an issue," said Wallace. More likely, said Wallace, the university will try to expand seating to somewhere around 22,000 to 23,000.

The expansion possibilities are not only for the football fans, however. Wallace said the basketball games and other programs—such as the upcoming Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival—will likely benefit from a new and improved Kibbie Dome.

"We're going to review the positioning of offices and sound walls, too," said Wallace.

Sports Management Group has delivered an incomplete draft report to the university, said Bob Fenning, assistant vice-president of budget and planning, but nothing is finalized yet. Fenning expects a final report on the Group's recommendations on Feb. 17.

The Kibbie Dome is not the only target of renovation and remodeling, said Fenning. Other buildings may be targeted as well. The finalization of the recommendations by the Group will depend partly on the results of a random student survey to be done in a few weeks.

Some 3,000 students will be queried on their thoughts about campus recreation and sports programs, among other things.

Costs for the renovations have not yet been determined. Where the money will come from is still up in the air, too. Wallace said the

Sheikh pushing for child care scholarship

Melica Johnson

ASUI Senator Zahrah Sheikh is trying to have a bill passed in the senate that will help alleviate the cost of child care for University of Idaho students with children.

The bill requests that the ASUI give $10,000, in form of a scholarship, to the UI Child Care Center on campus, so they can allocate the money to UI students who need it to help them pay for their children's child care. If passed, the scholarship will be set-up by Feb. 15.

According to the Idaho Child Care Program (ICCP), students with children used to be able to receive "training related expenses."

"The ICCP used to pay anywhere from 75-100% of UI student's child care bills," said Sheikh. The ICCP budget has been changed, and on Feb. 1, ICCP stopped paying as much of child care bills. UI students with children are affected by the changes because ICCP now pays less of the students child care bill.

"The scholarship is a quick way to solve a problem, since the ICCP funding was cut on Feb. 1," Sheikh said. In the future, Sheikh would like to set up an endowment in which $10,000 would be a start. The interest from the money, could then be the base for the scholarship, rather than always taking $10,000 out of the ASUI budget.

Four years ago, a $10,000 scholarship, which lasted four years, was given to the Child Care Center. Students could receive sums of the scholarship money, according to their need. Anywhere from $200-$1,000 was awarded and 50 awards were given out.

"Since it lasted four years, I think we can do it again," said Sheikh, who doesn't think the ASUI is hurting in money with $75,000 extra in the budget.

"Ten-thousand dollars may seem like a lot of money to the ASUI, but when you take 85-100 families who are involved with the Early Childhood Program, and divide it, it isn't that much," said Sheikh, who believes $200 per family is still a help.

"Now that the funding has been cut, a lot of the parents are having problems managing their budget," said Sheikh, who feels students with children don't have many options as to what to do since the cut-back of funds.

Sheikh is concerned for the students with families, because many of them have 2-3 jobs to try and support their families. "What are they supposed to do? They can have their children taken out of the Child Care Center, or they can

STDs at UI on par with national average

Michelle Kalbeitzer
Staff

Sexually transmitted diseases persist as the most pressing health concern of students across the nation's campuses. The reported cases of STDs at the University of Idaho compare similarly with the nation's average.

"The most prominent (STD) on all campuses is chlamydia," Dr. Donald Chin, director of Student Health Services, said. The disease afflicts 10 to 15 percent of people in a college population. Twelve percent of the UI student population has been diagnosed with chlamydia.

People may have chlamydia and not even be aware of it. The disease is asymptomatic—meaning that it shows no symptoms to those who have it. The long-term consequences of untreated chlamydia are irreversible. "It can leave both the male and female sterile by leaving scar tissue on their reproductive organs," Dr. Chin said. The disease can even be passed on from a pregnant mother to her child.

The Student Health Center is offering free chlamydia testing and treatment through the Idaho Department of Public Health. All tests are 100 percent confidential.

The other disease that is very prominent on campus is the human papillo virus, or genital warts. Dr. Chin said, "Nationwide it's on the rise and may even be surpassing chlamydia." He estimates that 1 out of 10 people in the student population have genital warts.

Genital warts are "very, very contagious" and antibiotics are not an effective treatment for the virus. The treatment includes applying acids or liquid nitrogen to the warts, and even this is not a guarantee. Reoccurrence of the virus is extremely high.

Even more alarming is that "there has been a direct cause and relationship between this virus and the cause of cervical cancer in females," according to Dr. Chin.

Herpes is another virus students need to be aware of. The virus causes multiple blisters on the genital regions. Again this is a viral illness in which no cure is available.

Another sexually transmitted disease seen at UI is gonorrhea. If this is left untreated then it can leave both the male and female sterile. Males will experience burning and discharge when they urinate. Most females will appear to be asymptomatic although they too can have pain and discharge. Gonorrhea is treatable with antibiotics.

Hepatitis B is a viral illness transmitted in a way very similar to AIDS. It is transmitted through blood products or sexual intercourse. Symptoms include severe abdominal pain, nausea, jaundice and fatigue. The virus damages the liver and it can cause death. There is a vaccine available. Dr. Chin encourages anyone who works around blood and in hospital settings to get vaccinated for the virus.

Syphilis is on the rise again in the United States. It is a bacteria that is treatable by antibiotics and can be diagnosed with bloodtests. Symptoms include an open sore on the genital region. The sore will disappear but the syphilis is still there. The bacteria will attack the body and do great damage.

Dr. Chin said, "We get many, many requests for HIV tests." He said the majority of the time people are starting new relationships and they want to make sure that everything is all right with them. "The largest growing population of HIV is through young people sharing needles during drug abuse and babies who are born HIV positive from mothers who are infected."

Dr. Chin said the only 100 percent guarantee against STDs is abstinence. If people choose not to be abstinent then a monogamous relationship is important to prohibit diseases from becoming a problem. And of course condoms should be used if people choose not to abstain.

"Education is the most important way to protect their health," Dr. Chin said, "and knowing the consequences of actions."

Greeks learn leadership skills at Order of Omega conference

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Greeks from all over campus came together to learn about leadership at the Student Union for the Order of Omega Leadership Conference last Saturday.

The Order of Omega is a group of past and present Greek leaders who come together and discuss the Greek community. They work together with their experience to form a "fountain of knowledge," as said by Ryan Skeesuck, the group's vice president.

This knowledge is taken back to individual chapters and used to help resolve problems. Skeesuck said the Order of Omega is used to "share knowledge" and present ideas "for the good of the whole."

The leadership conference was geared to show other Greek leaders the wealth of resources on campus available to each chapter and how to mold each chapter into a well rounded, positive body.

The conference was split into two different sessions and lunch. During each session people had a choice of one of four hour long seminars.

The seminars ranged from chapter finance and campus resources to seminars on scholarship programs and the police on campus. Each seminar was hosted by such speakers as Bruce Pitman, the dean of students, Judy Wallins, the director of Tutoring and Academic Assistance Center, as well as many other community leaders and faculty members of the University of Idaho.

Each seminar talked about the theme of the conference, "Chapter Wellness," as well as campus resources and necessity of every chapter to work together as a team. The conference was successful in conveying these as well as other ideas and gave people a lot of great ideas to take back to their chapters. One participant, Brian Sweet, said, "There are a lot of positive things that it (Order of Omega) taught about Greek unity."

The highlight of the afternoon was keynote speaker, Jim Tuman, who spoke at the luncheon. Tuman is an international speaker who has spread his wisdom to over two million people internationally at over 1,500 schools. Tuman has been featured on CBS, ABC, the Today show, Oprah and in many newspapers.

Tuman spoke about the importance of creating a safe environment in sororities and fraternities where members can be "one-hundred percent themselves."

"He made you think about life and enjoying your time here," Skeesuck said. He described Tuman as "incredible."

The Order of Omega Leadership Conference took Skeesuck and others about four months to plan. Skeesuck would like to thank everybody that helped make the conference a success: the workshop speakers, Student Advisory Services and the university.

Computer system prices, loan amounts and sales taxes may vary. See your authorized Apple Campus Reseller or representative for current system prices, loan and tax amounts. Loans are for a minimum of $1,000 to a maximum of $10,000. You may take out more than one loan, but the total of all loans cannot exceed $10,000 annually. A 5.5% loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount. The interest rate is variable, based on the commercial paper rate plus 5.35%. For the month of November, 1994, the interest rate was 10.85% with an Annual Percentage Rate of 12.10%. 8-year loan term with no prepayment penalty. The monthly payment and the Annual Percentage Rate shown assume the 90-day deferral of principal and interest described above and no other deferral of principal or interest. Students may defer principal payments up to 4 years, or until graduation. Deferral will change your monthly payments. The Apple Computer Loan is subject to credit approval. Apple Computer Loan and 90-Day Deferred Payment Plan offers available only to qualifying students, faculty and staff. Argonaut Interview

A conversation about our forests with Dr. David Adams

Adam Gardels

Staff

Photos by Antonio Gonzales

Dr. David Adams is professor of Forest Resources and co-editor of a book called Assessing Forest Ecosystems: Health in the Inland West. The book, released in the fall of 1994, is a compilation of thesis's by 35 scientists and forest resource managers who attended a forest resource convention held in Sun Valley in the fall of 1993. The convention was attended by a wide range of groups, including conservationists, the logging industry and the forest service. The convention was designed to influence the U.S. Congress.

Argonaut: Historically, how have the forests in Idaho changed as a result of man?

Adams: One of the primary changes deals with fire regimes. Fires have always played an important role in shaping the forests of the west. The Indians used fire in various ways before the Europeans settlement. Fire has always been here and part of it has been started by man.

With European settlement, people who settled in the woods wanted to exclude fire around their cabins, farms, ranches and mines. Just the mere presence of people in the forests helped to change how many times the fires burned and how frequently they burned. In many of the fire dependent forests, like southern Idaho for example, the fire frequency was quite narrow, like every two to ten years, there was a low intensity ground fire in many of those forests in southern Idaho. This helped to keep the number of trees per acre relatively low. Also, it altered the species, it favored only those species that could withstand frequent fires.

When we reduced the fire frequency that allowed a greater density of trees and also changed the species composition. Unfortunately the composition of many of the species changed to species that are more susceptible to insects, diseases and fire. We changed the whole complexion of the forest. In northern Idaho the forests we see today are different than those that were here back at the turn of the century.

We are looking at altered forests so a major thrust today is to understand what the natural range of variability, to use that as a base line to understand where we ought to be managing today.

When early day settlers came they needed logs to build their cabins with. Of course mining was one of the main reasons for early settlement. They needed a lot of logs to construct their mines. So they wanted the easiest way to get material, they also wanted the strongest material, and so they went out in the woods and did picking and choosing of the easily available timber. This also altered the complexion of the forest. By making small openings in the forest canopy it encouraged more shade tolerant species, which again are the ones who are more insect and disease susceptible.

Overgrazing in some areas altered the forest vegetation and changed the frequency of fire. If you didn't have a lot of understory vegetation after it had been browsed heavily then it wouldn't burn as frequently.

So the settlement, early logging, fire exclusion, mining and grazing all of these things played a part in changing the forest. The fire regimes—fire suppression—is probably one of the more important factors. With the advent of organizations like the U.S. Forest service, back in 1906, a major thrust of the forest service was fire suppression. That also helped to reduce the frequency of fire. In turn it changed the density and species composition.

Argonaut: What are the major threats to Idaho's forests?

Adams: We have a lot of very dense stands of the wrong species. Particularly in periods of drought, like we've had in the last several years, these kinds of forests become stressed from lack of moisture. If the trees are moisture stressed then the trees are more susceptible to insect and disease damage. Once they've been damaged by insects or disease, and you get a wild fire, you've got a lot of dry dead fuel in a very dense situation that makes control difficult. That's part of the reason why we lost 400,000 acres due to wildfire in Idaho just this past season.

Argonaut: I realize this was kind of controversial in the book but how should forest health be defined?

Adams I think a healthy forest is able to retain its resiliency to respond positively to damaging influences. Just like you and I are not able to bounce back from a cold if we are run down, an unhealthy forest is unable to university is "still hopeful there will be enough interest in it" to pay for the remodeling entirely through private funds.

Each full-time UI student pays $55 a semester into a budget category called "activity center complex," of which the Kibbie Dome is a part. The Kibbie Dome was built after the 1969 fire which destroyed the outdoor Neale Stadium. Originally, the Kibbie Dome was not roofed. The "Dome" part came in 1974. The Kibbie Dome will be paid for by 2010.

Many football fans do not like the Kibbie Dome—preferring instead that football be played outdoors in the elements.

More than likely, recommendations will include, among other things, knocking out the west wall of the Kibbie Dome to provide end zone seating.

drop-out of school, but, I don't think that is fair," said Sheikh. We're all here to go to school and no one should be denied the opportunity to get an education."

Sheikh believes her bias to the issue could be because she is a Child and Family Relations major.

"It really hurt, when I saw some of the names of the children whose parents took them out of the center," said Sheikh, who worked with many of the children at the Child Care Center over Christmas break.

"I can relate the name to the face. It may not matter to the other twelve senators, but I know who these people are."

The non-traditional student number is rising. The average undergraduate student is 26-28 years old. "We shouldn't deny these students rights because of their age, or the choices they've made," said Sheikh. "They've all paid their fees and we should help them out."

Sheikh took on the task of UI child care funding after ASUI President Sean Wilson asked her to look into the problem.

PCEI, ENVI clean Paradise Creek

Organizations can 'adopt' parts of the stream during the project on Earth Day

Christine Ermey
Staff

Soon members of ENVI, a University of Idaho environmental awareness club will be working with the Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute to clean a section of Moscow's Paradise Creek.

Paradise Creek originates in Pond Nine on Moscow Mountain, runs past Mountain View Park, through Moscow and UI, and past Wal-Mart into Pullman. PCEI divides Paradise Creek into sections for the public to adopt.

"We are involved in cleaning Paradise Creek a few times a year," said Marya George, of ENVI. ENVI's section of the creek runs upstream of Main Street, near the Hardee's billboard to Sweet Avenue. "To give you an idea of how dirty our section is, we have found paint cans, auto parts and an entire car body in our section."

Nearly two tons of trash is removed from Paradise Creek each year, and the water quality is ranked the worst in Washington and Idaho. "We pull everything out of the creek, from tires to car parts to Pizza Pipeline containers," said Adam Thornbrough of PCEI.

PCEI cleans the creek every April on the Saturday nearest Earth Day. "This year the clean up falls right on Earth Day, the 22nd," said Thornbrough. "We have about 25 groups involved. Any group, civil organization, boy scouts, girl scouts, school environmental groups can adopt part of the stream. We even have families adopt part of the creek to clean."

Also this year's clean up will include stenciling storm drains to say "Dump no waste—drains to stream."

"We want to raise awareness of where the water from drains goes," said Thornbrough.

"It goes into the stream. We don't want people to pull their trucks up to the storm drains and dump motor oil into them."

Thornbrough said that much of the pollution in the urban area is caused by an erosion problem. He said that there is often no erosion control at construction sites to prevent soils from running off into the stream. "Soils that erode when it rains are also considered pollution because no sediment is kept from going into the stream," said Thornbrough.

Other pollutants include storm drain pollution, regulated pollution from the waste water treatment plant, chemicals dumped into sinks which can damage the sewage treatment plant and agricultural sediment problems.

"Agricultural sediment problems are far less of a problem than urban development problems, because farmers leave a residue on their land to combat erosion," said Thornbrough.

Efforts are being made this year to begin work in Pullman. This is the fifth year PCEI has been involved in the cleaning of Paradise Creek, but has never worked in Pullman in the past.

"It has taken a while to work out details in our program," said Thornbrough. "But we hope to get started in Pullman this year."

Clinton draws distinction between 'reputation and character'

Laurie Goodstein
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—President Clinton drew a distinction between "reputation and character" in an interview Thursday with religion reporters, and said that while he had "increasingly less control" over his reputation, he still had "full control" over his character.

"That's between me and God," he said in the Oval Office session.

Clinton said he had wasted too much time and energy—"emotional as well as intellectual"—worrying about personal attacks made by his opponents, and so had cheated the American people he was elected to serve. "And I'm not going to do it anymore."

"Sometimes you can actually disprove something someone says about you, but a lot of times people can lie about you in ways that you can't disprove," Clinton said.

The president who has been buffeted with questions about his personal morality said he had found strength in his belief in God's unconditional love. He portrayed himself as someone who had sinned and suffered. But he said he found solace in rereading Psalms, especially those in which the Biblical David asks God to wash away his transgressions.

He had spent the morning at the National Prayer Breakfast, the annual gathering where world leaders join students and prisoners on day passes for a few hours of religious inspiration.

Clinton is a Southern Baptist and a regular churchgoer who comfortably weaves scripture into speeches. But among his most outspoken critics are religious people who do not accept Clinton's faith as genuine.

"They don't believe it's genuine because they disagree with me politically," Clinton said. "They don't believe you could be a committed Christian" and still take the positions he has taken in favor of abortion rights and allowing gays in the military.

"The Bible is full of refutations" of his opponents' anti-homosexual viewpoint, Clinton said. Of his critics, he said, "I can't worry about them. Let them think what they want."

Clinton appeared genial and relaxed, and smiled when a questioner mentioned one of his most vociferous clerical critics, the Rev. Jerry Falwell. He talked about the need for welfare reform, and that reducing teen-age pregnancy is a high priority for his administration.

But his left foot spun fast nervous circles as he talked about how "it takes away from my ability to be president...to focus on the American people, if I have to spend all my time trying to answer charges about what people say that I did years ago."

In response to a question about the Christian Coalition, the conservative political organization founded by the Rev. Pat Robertson,

Clinton said, "Everybody knows that they basically are an arm of the Republican Party."

Clinton said he believed that "they will come to be seen more and more like a political party with an agenda," akin to the large European political parties that employ the name "Christian," such as German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democratic Party.

He criticized the Coalition for distributing voter guides in the last election that he said in at least one case erroneously characterized the Democratic candidate's position.

"They're using the emotions of people of faith who are deeply disturbed for good reasons with what's respond resiliently to ward off problems.

A lot of people in natural resource management frown on the use of the term 'forest health.' The concept of the term health as we think in the terms of human beings as an analogue we can't apply to forests' ecosystems. We all understand health, and we have a feeling for what it means for something to be healthy or unhealthy. The problem is that in the minds of some ecologists a forest ecosystem does not die as a person or animal dies. We get sick and then eventually pass on, but a forest ecosystem doesn't do that. It changes conditions, and a condition at a point in time may be altered relative to what it may be in another point in time. Then you can make value judgments to determine if the new condition is better than the old condition. So the analogue isn't perfect in terms of applying it to a forest, but you can apply it pretty well to a tree. But to a group of trees in terms of an ecosystem, it's a little more difficult to visualize. A tree can be vigorous or it can be unhealthy and it does die. For a tree 'health' works pretty good, but for a forest ecosystem 'health' is a more debatable issue.

Argonaut: How can forest health be created?

Adams: I think fostering a healthy forest would be a good term. I think we need to control stand density, so that we don't have so many trees. Particularly in areas that are prone to drought. We need to work back towards a more natural species mix, to have species that are less susceptible to insect and disease damage. We probably need to reintroduce these frequent low intensity ground fires, as a management tool. But in areas that are already very dense it is difficult to put a fire into that, it immediately gets up into the crowns and becomes a catastrophic crown fire and kills the trees. A low intensity fire on the ground will burn fairly rapidly through an area and burn off some of the pine materials on the floor, but not get up in the crowns of the trees, without killing the trees.

Argonaut: What would be the most appropriate management tool for this area?

Adams: Well, we didn't get into specific forest by forest recommendations. Generally I would encourage the regeneration of the more insect and disease resistant species for the particular site. Each site would be a different recommendation. Whether it would be on the south side or the north side of Moscow Mountain it would be a different variation. Whether you are at 3,000 feet or 6,000 feet it would be a different species. Soil type and habitat type as well would govern the species based on the needs of that spot.

Argonaut: How should the future of forest management be changed?

Adams: One thing that you'll have to remember is that the forests that we are looking at now were formed by conditions and practices that occurred 50 to 175 years ago. It is not just what happened here five to 20 years ago. If you look at those trees we can see through the window (pointing over his shoulder at Moscow Mountain) those are probably 75 or 150 year old trees. So what caused that forest are the events and practices that happened quite a while back. Its going to take quite a while to change that forest to something that is more resistant to problems. As a forest is harvested what we can do is make sure we replant the proper species in a proper spacing so it isn't too dense. So we have to match the species to the site and have the right density.

Argonaut: Is it conceivable that management could reach a point where the forest could be turned back to itself?

Adams: No, this would be like saying we are just going to depend on the wheat that naturally comes up on these Palouse hills right here. I don't think we are ever going to be able to rely entirely upon mother nature to manage the forests. This is what we essentially tried to do in wilderness areas, to allow things to progress in a natural fashion. But even there we have altered things, because we've put out some of the forest fires and we've changed the atmosphere that effects the wilderness. So there are things that happen right now even in wilderness areas that are in essence vegetation management.

The conditions that we saw in southern Idaho or west central Idaho—say on the Boise National Forest areas or the Payette National Forest areas—before 1900, were very widely spaced ponderosa pine trees. Now we've got a lot more trees and they're mostly Douglas Fir trees. So we ask "should we go back to the pre-1900 conditions?" Just a very few widely spaced trees, well, I don't think the public will buy into that. I think that we can see that those areas will produce a lot more timbers and other values than what they did in the pre-1900 conditions. So we don't want the dense stands that we have there now, but like wise we don't want to go clear back to the way it was 100 years ago. And so through management we can try to help mother nature along to get the right kind of species mix and the right densities to satisfy our needs for all kinds of values. Be it commodity values like timber, wildlife habitat or clean water.

The big catastrophic wildfires, like we have had recently, completely destroy some wildlife habitats for a long time to come. Like on the Boise forest there were some bull trout populations that were completely wiped out because of the fire. And bull trout is being considered for endangered status. Some managers feel that if they had gone into those bull trout areas and thinned those riparian areas (stream side zone) so they weren't so dense next to the creek—if a fire came along then it wouldn't be one of these hot catastrophic wildfires, rather a more natural low intensity fire that wouldn't have done damage to those water sheds.

“A lot of people in natural resource management frown on the use of the term 'forest health.'”

Toxic waste-eating organism studied for use with potatoes

Dawn Casey
Staff

A bizarre microorganism, French fries, the fertilizer industry and toxic waste sites all have something in common with research at the University of Idaho.

The microorganism—taken from the hot waters of deep sea rift vents and the bubbling sulfur-bearing pools of Yellowstone—lives in a UI laboratory, waiting to be employed as a clean-up agent for waste piles of gypsum in Idaho.

Gypsum is a by-product of the fertilizer production whose waste piles generate mercury, cadmium and lead which are soluble and leach into Idaho ground water. The microorganism has an appetite suitable to render the toxic metals insoluble—making them unable to mix with rainwater and make the trip to your drinking glass.

UI Microbiologist Patricia Hartzell studies Archeoglobus fulgidus, a form of life which thrives under extreme temperatures and can live only in the absence of oxygen.

"Archeoglobus is a form of life based on sulfur instead of oxygen," she said. Key to its usefulness in Idaho is its ability to feed off the sulfur compounds in gypsum, converting the heavy metal salts to sulfides which are insoluble and less toxic to humans.

The difficulty in employing the organism lies in the presence of oxygen, Hartzell said.

Here is where Idaho potatoes enter the picture. Potato peels discarded in the process of making French fries are thrown into the gypsum piles and eliminate the oxygen molecules.

Potato waste contains Lacto bacillus—a bacteria which consumes the oxygen before Archeoglobus is introduced. Once the oxygen is depleted, the organism can survive and go to work on the sulfur compounds.

At this point, the potato peels have been usefully discarded, the ground water is safer, and the organism has filled its belly.

The process is "part of this whole biological cycle," said

Hartzell, "we use what is out there and combine it to help us make better waste products."

And it is convenient for everyone involved.

Simplot—a fertilizer, computer chip and potato chip company—responsible for cleaning up the gypsum stacks, makes use of its own potato peels after they sell fries to McDonald's. Simplot contributes to UI research funds—which in a strange plot twist—could eventually lead to cheap and efficient production of methane gas.

"Archeoglobus is very similar to a group of organisms that produce methane (natural gas)," Hartzell said, "which we all pay a lot of money for." The organism she researches is missing only one enzyme for it to produce mass amounts of natural gas.

A long range goal, Hartzell said, is to add an enzyme through genetic coding and design a containment system where, for example, someone living isolated in the country could convert their waste to a usable methane gas.

going on in our country today, and channeling those emotions into convictions about people in public life that aren't true," Clinton said. "That could hurt their credibility."

Ralph Reed, executive director of the Christian Coalition, responded in a telephone interview that the Coalition's agenda crosses party and ideological lines, and offered as evidence the names of several Democratic candidates he said his group had supported in the last election.

"I'm not questioning his faith," Reed said of Clinton. But "unless this administration reverses its disturbing insensitivity to people of faith and moves back to the center on some of the social issues, (then) a pro-life traditional values Democrat in the model of (former Pennsylvania Gov.) Bob Casey will likely challenge President Clinton in the Democratic primaries in 1996."

At the prayer breakfast, in eight minutes at the pulpit, Clinton preached about the increasing power of words in an age when even the most outrageous allegations quickly find their way into print.

"The communications revolution gives words not only the power to lift up and liberate," Clinton said, but "the power to divide and destroy as never before." He said that "there's not a person in this room...including me," who had not failed to heed the admonition of Saint Paul to "repay no one evil for evil."

In a hoarse voice, he beseeched the crowd that included military brass and Congress members of both parties to "use our words more to build up and unify." More than 2,900 were listening in the ballroom and 900 in an overflow room.

Student aid losing race with costs

To succeed in America, many have been told, one need only follow this equation: education + job = success. As the next generation is finding out, however, putting that sequence into practice isn't easy, especially when it comes to paying for it.

Education has always been pricey, and recent developments reflect that. While Idaho's colleges recently saw a whopping increase in the budget to $229 million, that didn't come without cost. Here at the University of Idaho, out-of-state students are seeing their tuition rise again, while student health insurance rose nearly 50 percent from last semester. At Washington State University, students are waiting for the state legislature to choose a budget proposal for Washington's higher education system. All involve tuition hikes, as much as nine or ten percent in some proposals.

WSU's and UI's situation is not a local phenomenon, unfortunately. Costs are rising everywhere, and the amount of debt the average college student graduates into increases daily. Meanwhile, the $10 billion spent by the government every year falls further behind the tide of fees and tuition hikes.

In Congress now, there is a proposal under debate from President Clinton to try and relieve some of the burden of financing education from the taxpayers. Clinton proposes a tax deduction for middle-class families of up to $10,000 yearly. In theory, this would free up middle-class families to pay for more of their children's education, instead of depending on federal loans and other financial aid. The downside is that it would reduce tax revenue and allow colleges to charge even more in response.

What can be done? If education costs continue to spiral upward, it soon becomes out of reach to all but a few, and we all suffer in the long run when the absence of skilled workers and managers makes itself painfully apparent. Short of nationalizing every university in America, what options exist?

Options do exist. A smaller version of President Clinton's proposal is perhaps feasible. More likely would be a restructuring of the loan system; if the government were to stop guaranteeing all the loans and come up with a better method of computation and paying of interest, an estimated $2 billion could be saved. That $2 billion could be reinvested as loans or grants. Another option would be a "job for education" program, like a civil Peace Corps. Trial programs have been introduced in major cities, with promising results.

Education is an investment in society and in our future, but it's also a promise. When we educate people and send them into the work force, we're making a promise that these people are ready and able to keep the wheels turning and everyone working towards whatever goals we set for ourselves.

More than anything, we need to keep that promise.

—Brandon Nolte

No snow, but beer and sex

Whether we like it or not, winter is not here. The gray skies, the rain and the wind can all add up to some pretty depressing weather. I have noticed that as a whole, this campus is getting a little touchy. I feel it is my personal responsibility to do what I can to improve this school and all those who attend it. That is why I chose to do this job. In the spirit of this statement, I decided to revise some previous ideas and give you all a few things to do while waiting for the snow to fly....

1. Eat ice cream. The cold on your tongue is reminiscent of catching snowflakes and you might be able to fool yourself into believing it is winter.
2. Make anatomically correct mudmen.
3. Make anatomically correct mudwomen.
4. Build a blanket fort. Remember when you were a kid and made those forts out of blankets draped across the backs of chairs? This is the perfect opportunity to relive those childhood memories. Bring a flashlight for shadow puppets.

Jennifer Swift

5. When that gets boring, have sex in the blanket fort.

Admittedly, this may be a bit advanced for some of you out there, so in case you are unfamiliar with this game, don't attempt this at your parents' house.

6. Drink beer in the blanket fort. Again, this game is pretty advanced, so be careful about where you decide to play this. Parents' homes, front yards and the library are examples of where not to use a blanket fort for this purpose.

7. For those of you who have mastered the previous two ideas, try combining them. What fun!

8. Drive to a really cool place and go skiing. Granted, you might need to take a few extra days off of classes to account for drive time, but it will be worth it. If you do this and flunk those classes, don't blame me.

9. Declare war on the neighbors who are still complaining about the noise (even after you pelted their house with snowballs) and cover their windows with mud. They'll think it is still dark out when they wake up. Confusion first thing in the morning is hell and can ruin anyone's day.

10. After drinking beer in your blanket fort, run around campus singing "Here Comes Peter Cottontail" as loud as humanly possible. Not only will this bring the joy of spring to everyone you meet, you might just find a date this way...of course, anyone you meet while you are doing this may not be someone you would want to date.

11. Tip over little kids. Have you ever noticed how bundled up kids are in the winter, regardless of how warm it is? I think parents see what month it is and wrap their children helplessly into ten layers of clothing, for fear the temperature will drop twenty degrees before they get home. These kids are perfect targets. One gentle shove and they tip over like sleeping cows.

12. Study. Eek! I know, boring, but if you do it now, when the really warm weather comes along you can blow it off to go mountain biking and still pull out a "C" come the end of the semester.

13. After your friend has had too much beer, create Big Foot by plastering him or her with mud and grass, then send them to the store for more beer. Check the

A call to arms for all you moderates out there

Perhaps I'm the only person alive on the planet today who is middle-of-the-road, politically speaking.

Or at least it seems that way.

Lately we have all seem to have been inundated with rhetoric from either: a) the far or religious right, b) the liberal left or c) anyone who has their own agenda. If this was a multiple-choice test, I would pick: d) none of the above—let's not hear from any of them.

Just kiddin'. I believe in the right to free speech as much as any other Constitution-fearing American. And I'll fight to defend it for myself and for others. It's a basic tenet of our country and one of the things which makes the good ol' U. S. of A. so great.

But this is the problem as I see it: our entire media and political system have become so polarized, I've begun to feel there is no room for non-partisan discussion of issues. No matter the issue, politicians and the media (and plenty of people I know, too) take a side in accordance with their own political affiliation. They're throwing something called "critical thinking" out the window (along with common sense).

I hope I am not alone in feeling this way. The Democrats and Republicans both make me want to hurl.

I feel alienated from the Republican party for several reasons.

Reason number one: the religious right. Their zealotry (sometimes incorporating violence against abortion clinics) in pushing their own ideas of morality (i.e. anti-homosexual, anti-choice, pro-prison) down everyone else's throat has pushed my idea of sensibility to its limit.

Reason number two: Rush Limbaugh. Enough said. The man couldn't construct a logical argument to save his life. Those of you who think I'm wrong need to take a course in critical thinking or listen to his show more closely.

Reason number three: Newt Gingrich. What a joke. Anyone who publicly admits he feels women should be kept out of combat because they can sit at the keyboards of computers for much longer periods of time than men (who, he says, have the urge to go out and "kill giraffes") should not be the Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives.

I belonged to a combat unit in the Marine Corps for four years. I say if someone can keep up physically and mentally, let 'em be in combat. I saw plenty of men in the Marine Corps who couldn't hack it. If a woman can pack a 100-pound rucksack up and down hills for days on end, effectively shoot a rifle and throw a grenade 60 to 100 meters, she's got my respect. And I never—not once—had an urge to go out and "kill giraffes."

The far right will collapse of its own accord as soon as moderate Americans figure out what's happening.

But here's some good news for you moderate-to-conservative people out there: the liberal left will also disappear (hopefully, it'll take the liberal media along with it). Here's why I feel alienated from the left:

Reason number one: Bill Clinton. Waffle. Fence-sitter. America needs a strong leader in the White House and at the bully pulpit—not someone who negotiates away major tenets of his presidency to the opposition. I voted for him because I thought he would be a good, moderate president—not a wimp. Hillary would make a much better president. She may be a little liberal for my tastes (well, okay—too liberal), but at least she's a strong leader.

Reason number two: Ted Kennedy. The man who would have everyone be either a politician or a bureaucrat in the politicians' employ. If Ted had his way, the government would be out trying to fix your kitchen sink because it'd be afraid you couldn't do the job right.

Reason number three: I'm sick of excessive government. I'm sick of all the friggin' forms I have to fill out for taxes or for financial aid or to buy a car or to go hunting. You should see all the forms you have to fill out just to buy a firearm.

If Dante were writing today, the punishment in the seventh circle of hell would consist of filling out forms for bureaucrats for eternity (and having to stand in line to get the forms).

Every time I turn around, I'm shelling out bucks for big government. Makes me sick.

Parents never change

Jennifer Swift's Jan. 17 column on overprotective parents reminded me of the time when I, 65 years old, visited my mother in Reading, Mass. As I left to go out the door into the driving rain, she exclaimed, "Walter, be sure to wear your rubbers."

College lucky to have cultural access

Friday in the Collette Theater Professor Charles Walton presented a memorable evening of Kurt Weill in Song assisted by adroit student accompanist Luke Henderson and members from the Opera Workshop of the Lionel Hampton School of Music.

Weill-chosen songs came from musicals composed by Weill for productions in this country. The bare stage at the Collette with a battered piano and the player seated on a wooden box, however, brought back visions of the rude cabarets in Berlin where Weill's first songs were sung; this somehow seemed appropriate for the program ranging through light-hearted selections from "One Touch of Venus" (with lyrics by Ogden Nash), the nostalgic "September Song" from Knickerbocker Holiday, and the tragic "Cry the Beloved Country" from Lost in the Stars, Weill's last production before he died in New York in 1950.

In addition to providing personalized accompaniments for Walton, Henderson at the piano also offered a couple of cheerful songs from Lunchtime Follies.

The talented and well-trained singers from the Opera Workshop did a properly dramatic version of "I Love Ice Cream" from Street Scene. The cast included: Jac Hernandez, Tara Lund, Jeremy Tate, Michael Sommese and Joel Corda. Accompanist was Miki Kurosawa.

Students and other members of our collegial community are indeed fortunate in having easy access to cultural events of this high quality without charge. I wonder whether these performances would attract larger audiences if tickets were required at Broadway prices.

Abortion easily prevented

I am writing to support Michelle Kalbeitzer and her article on abortion. I would like to add a little by presenting to the feminine audience ways you can prevent an abortion.

1. To completely prevent the chance of an abortion, don't have sex or even engage in risky petting.

2. If you do have sex, use birth control. Sometimes I am amazed at the number of abortions every year. Do people just not think? Birth control is so available and easy to use that there is no excuse for this high number. They can't all be rape and incest cases or victims of birth control failures. At the Student Health Center, the Pill costs $5 a month, and condoms cost five cents apiece. An abortion can run up to $400 or more. Why do people choose to spend money on an abortion when they could have prevented the whole thing for a fraction of the cost? I can hear your answers, but I say the "heat of the moment" is a poor excuse for unprotected sex.

Unfortunately, all methods of birth control are not 100 percent effective. If you choose to play the field, be willing to accept the consequences. The Pill is around 99 percent effective, but still, that means one woman out of one hundred will get pregnant while taking the Pill. I know two girls that got pregnant while on the Pill, and they didn't miss a pill, either.

3. To prevent a rape pregnancy, avoid rape situations. Rape is never a woman's fault, but she can still take some preventative action. Do not walk alone at night to avoid any prowlers behind bushes. Do not get yourself sloshed at the next party you go to. If you are sober, you won't be conned into going to a guy's room to see his "trophy collection" just to get gang raped by five men. BE CAUTIOUS in all situations.

4. If you do get pregnant and don't want the baby, try to realize that it is not the unborn baby's fault. It is innocent (whether it has a soul or not or whatever) and doesn't deserve to have its life (or its potential for life or whatever) terminated just because the mother accidentally conceived. It must be easy to eliminate such an inconvenience so quickly and quietly, but have mercy and consider alternatives. The high abortion rate has made it very hard for couples who can't have children to adopt others. If you are pro-choice, please choose life. It may be a hard sacrifice to carry the child those nine months, but your baby could bring fulfillment to someone's life, maybe even your own.

—Cathlin Berreth

Public prayer a con game

That was some prayer breakfast the mayor of Moscow had with some far-right preachers last week. It reminded me of the prayer breakfasts Richard Nixon used to have with the Rev. Billy Graham during the Vietnam War. The purpose of such gatherings is to create an appearance of piety for preachers and politicians. They hope it will trick the public into trusting them.

It also reminded me of a wandering Jew who lived some 1,900-odd years ago. There were phonies around in his day, too. And he said this about them:

"Be careful not to parade your religion before others; for then you have no reward from your Father in heaven. And whenever you pray, do not be like the hypocrites, who love to stand and pray in the synagogues and on street corners so that others may see them. Amen, I say to you, they have received their reward. But when you pray, go into a room by yourself, shut the door, and pray to your Father who is in secret; and your Father who sees in secret will reward you" (Matthew 6:1, 5, 6).

Public prayer is an old con game. It didn't fool Jesus of Nazareth. And don't let it fool you, either.

U.S. bailout supports exploitation, not recovery

While following the debate raging over the proposed "bailout" of the Mexican economy, a few things are clear. First of all, there can be no doubt that the crash of our third-largest trading partner's economy would have serious consequences for the United States and the world. Most important for our political and economic leaders, of course, is the negative impact all of this could have on the good ol' U.S.A. Such fears are behind the extraordinary measures taken by the Clinton Administration to back the economic "recovery" of Mexico.

The devaluation of the peso in December and the ensuing crisis have shown the vulnerability of U.S. trade revenues, jobs, and investment earnings. The stock and bond market took a beating until the administration took action to ensure Mexican "stability." The unstable economy and the decreasing buying power of most Mexicans has forced some U.S. businesses (among them Wal-Mart and Ford Motor) to shelve plans for large-scale expansion into Mexico or temporarily shut down their factories there.

On a wider scale, other "developing" nations around the world could still succumb to Mexico's fate and plunge the world into a global economic crisis. For most North Americans, however, the biggest danger associated with the financial crisis south of the border is the large number of illegal immigrants that it could bring into downtown U.S.A.

The issue is of great importance to all concerned, and has caused no small amount of fear in Washington—even enough to make the President circumvent Congressional approval in order to help Mexican leaders dissolve the crisis. According to many here in the United States, the presidential proposal is no more than a "bailout" of Wall Street investors and inept Mexican leadership.

Guest Commentary

By basing its coverage on this assumption, the mainstream media is feeding the United States public a distortion. In fact, Mexico's "revolutionary" government has been led by men with the very best the U.S. has to offer in economic education. Ernesto Zedillo himself, the newly elected president of the country, was trained in the United States.

This current leader and his predecessor, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, are being blamed for the crisis, but they have been nothing but loyal worshipers at the altar of market capitalism. These technocrats have led Mexico down the path determined for all of the "developing" world by the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and Washington, D.C.—a developmentalist philosophy based on rapid market growth at any cost. A key element of this enlightened philosophy are economic "austerity" measures taking money from badly-needed social programs and pumping it into large "security forces."

One thing all of this has meant for Mexico and many other countries is the domination of their economies by multi-national corporations uninterested in environmental or labor regulations. The strip of land occupied by U.S.-owned industry just south of the Mexican border is one of the most polluted in the world. The toxic environment means a high incidence of cancer and other deadly diseases for the people who live there.

Labor conditions in most factories are deplorable, with work-related injuries and unfair management practices the rule rather than the exception. Attempts of workers to organize have been met with massive lay-offs and physical harassment. Underlying all of this, of course, are the starvation-level wages paid by these companies.

For most Mexicans, including those up in arms in Chiapas, market capitalism has done nothing to improve their lives. The capitalist ideal a la Wall Street that Mexico's political and economic leadership has embraced is a hollow principle. A very few get rich, wealth does not trickle down, and the majority of the population remains marginalized.

What the United States and friends are really bailing out is a heartless system based on the exploitation of many. What the United States should do is take a critical look at the economic system it is exporting and recognize that it is not the best path to equitable development on a global scale.

Sawyer Brown returns to Kibbie Dome

Amy Ridenour
Lifestyles Editor

There were lights, there was fog, and there was a Dome full of country music fans enjoying Thursday night's performance.

First to take the stage at the Kibbie Dome was Rick Trevino. The pint-sized Trevino sang his first number one hit, as well as "Just Enough Rope," "Dr. Time," and his brand new single, "Looking for the Light." Trevino charmed the crowd with his wranglers and Texas accent and the crowd was truly appreciative of this up-and-coming new talent.

Former pro-football player Toby Keith took the stage next. His performance featured flashing and moving lights throughout his entire time on stage.

His sense of humor was apparent after he sang his second song about love, a girl and a big 4WD truck, and his token "redneck" song, "You ain't much fun since I quit drinking."

Keith also sang "Boomtown," his latest hit, "Upstairs, downtown," "Who's that man," and an extended version of "A little less talk, and a lot more action" in the middle of which he explained that when a woman peels her label off her beer "it means one thing, and one thing only," she's talking about the "Wild Thing."

Keith ended his performance with "Should've been a cowboy," and was cheered back on stage for an encore performance of John Cougar Mellencamp's "Authority."

Sawyer Brown performed last in the evening. According to some T-shirts, Sawyer Brown was "what you came for" and it was apparent as the band quickly had the entire Dome on their feet.

They sang hits such as "Operator," "The Walk," "This Time," "Dirt Road," and "The Boys and Me." Sawyer Brown introduced the crowd to a newer song, "I don't believe in good-bye," which is sure to be another major hit.

Lead singer Mark Miller showed off his dance moves, popular with the female audience members. The band also performed "Thank God for you," and "The Race is on," a crowd favorite.

For an encore, the band sang three more songs including a newer release, and the ever-popular song "Some girls do." Miller performed the last three numbers with his green John Deere hat with flaps on the sides.

The whole performance was incredible. Sawyer Brown really knows how to entertain and their music is always fantastic live. This years performance was less "showy" than in years past, but Sawyer Brown is so talented that they really don't need the flashy stuff. Sawyer Brown has come a long way from the band that was first discovered on "Star Search" back in the eighties.

For country music fans, this was one of the best concerts in the Palouse area in a long time.

On Feb. 16, Tim McGraw, Little Texas, and Blackhawk will perform at Beasley Performing Arts coliseum. You don't want to miss out.

Mark Miller of Sawyer Brown struts his stuff at the Kibbie Dome Thursday night.

Boston gives name to the 'Game'

Alison Boston brings to life the characters of six women athletes who triumphed despite their circumstances in How She Played The Game.

Boston's one-woman performance is full of energy and spirit. How She Played The Game is not only entertaining but educational as it offers glimpses of the lives of a diversity of female athletes.

The play chronicles the history of multi-sport athlete Eleanora Randolph Sears who shocked spectators by wearing trousers on a public field; Althea Gibson, the first African-American to compete in Wimbledon;

Gertrude Ederle, the first woman to swim across the English channel; Sonja Henie, world champion ice skater ten years in a row; Margarethe Bergmann, Jewish German high jumper, and Babe Didrikson, top female athlete of the century.

Boston, a freelance writer and swimmer, has her own triumph. She used to smoke two packs of cigarettes a day and at one point couldn't even walk a flight of stairs.

"Then one day I decided that if I wanted to swim more than one lap, I was going to have to quit smoking," Boston said in a question/answer period after the performance.

Boston was dynamic in offering an inspirational view of the personal and cultural circumstances that deter many from pursuing athletic achievement as well as other goals.

The play, written by Cynthia Cooper, was first produced in New York off-Broadway and was one of many events scheduled during Washington State University's National Girls and Women in Sports Day

Groupo Condor to play at LCSC

Pre-Columbian flutes, exotic percussion and various acoustic stringed instruments are in store when Groupo Condor, a five piece Andean music ensemble, takes the stage at Lewis-Clark State College's Artists Series Feb. 10.

The group, featuring five players from Peru, Argentina and Mexico, will showcase their traditional South American Folk style of music blending three cultures to create a rich musical heritage. The origins of the music and instruments are Spanish, with their language and guitars; African, with percussion and rhythms, and Native American with the flutes.

Some of the instruments used are the charango, a 10 string guitar made from an armadillo shell, the tiple, a harp-guitar, and the cuatro venezolano, a four stringed instrument similar to a Hawaiian ukulele. Also used are a variety of pan pipes as well as ancient Andean woodwind flutes.

"It's lively because of the percussion but it's almost haunting because of the pan flutes," Leslie Esselburn, Director for the L-C Center for Arts and History said of the groups music.

The program is part of LC's "Spotlight on Diversity" artist series and takes place at 8 p.m. in the Lewiston High School Auditorium.

The event is the fifth in a six part series put on by the L-C Center for Arts and History and is aimed at presenting professional performing artists.

Esselburn said that the 15 year old organization serves the community as well as the college in putting on events centered around a general theme. She said that this years theme "Spotlight on Diversity" has focused on dance and music with a variety of cultures.

Tickets for the performance are $10.50 for adults and $7.50 for students and senior citizens. They can be purchased in advance at Albertson's, Owl Pharmacies and Myklebust's in Lewiston; Music City and Albertson's in Clarkston; First Federal Savings in Grangeville; First Security Bank in Orofino; The Combine in Pullman, and Myklebust's in Moscow.

Tickets can also be purchased at the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts & History, 415 Main in Lewiston or by calling (208) 799-2243.

Exhibit to honor black women in history

Joey Wellman
Staff

In celebration of Black History Month in February and National Women's History Month in March, Washington State University will be presenting "Black Women: Achievements Against the Odds."

The exhibition, 20 illustrated posters of black women in American history, will be on display in the Compton Union Gallery Feb. 6 through March 3. The exhibit was designed to inform viewers of black women whose accomplishments changed American life. "The posters feature different black women who act as representatives of achievements in a variety of areas," said Marty Mullen, program advisor in the Activities and Recreational Sports department at WSU.

Mullen said that the portraits include information about the individuals and their contributions. Little known figures are also combined with famous ones to balance the spectrum. "As a nation, we are unaware of the black accomplishments," she said. "Women suffered dual racism and sexism and overcame both difficulties," Mullen said.

Developed by the Smithsonian

Institute, the exhibit was the first serious museum study about black American women and their successes.

The portraits feature women drawn in carbon pencil by illustrator Nancy Edwards Calder. Unable to credit all women deserving of recognition, those selected represent a wide range of achievements in history.

Examples of women portrayed in the exhibition are Madame C.J. Walker (1867-1919), the first female black American millionaire who started as a washerwoman and worked her way to heading her own cosmetics manufacturing company.

Harriet Tubman (1820-1913), who is familiar for her work in the underground railroad, was the only woman in American history to plan and lead a military raid.

Mullen said that a notebook, which includes a timeline documenting women's accomplishments, will be on display in the gallery. "This puts things into a historical perspective," she said. The timeline ranges from 1746-1982. There will also be a brochure about Pacific Northwest women and national, regional and local material. All documents may be duplicated in the copy center. The exhibition is made possible by grants to the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service from the Smithsonian Institution Office of Equal Opportunity and the Women's Committee of the Smithsonian Associates.

Touring management is provided by Exhibit Touring Services, a program in the College of Fine Arts at Eastern Washington University. Partial funding for ETS is provided by the Washington Commission for the Humanities and the Washington State Arts Commission.

Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Friday. For more information, call 335-9666.

Writing Center offers help for all students

Jeremy Chase
Staff

Any student writer wanting to improve their skills can visit the University of Idaho's Writing Center, located in room nine of the Psychology building.

Mary Ann Judge, who directs the Writing Center, said that their goal is to give students peer tutoring and other help with their writing. "The Writing Center is here to offer one-on-one help for student writing projects," she said.

With 13 undergraduate and four graduate tutors, Judge said that the Writing Center is willing to provide students a service that can be used at any time. Judge continued by saying that each peer tutoring session with a student concentrates on a different area in order to improve skills. "I think students are disappointed that they'll get everything at one time," she said.

Judge said that the student to student interaction that tutors provide should act as a supplement to help they could receive from their professors. "I think that help professors give is valuable, and this program doesn't replace that," she said. "Students have success relating to peer tutors."

Jennifer McFarland, a senior

English major and tutor at the Writing Center, said that the greatest benefit of being a tutor is seeing someone enter the Writing Center frustrated with writing and leave with a stronger sense of confidence. "Most students are good writers," she said. "They just don't know their possibilities."

McFarland also said that the student to student interaction is important in the development of good writing. "We can relate more to student life because we're students," she said. "We're in touch with what it's like." Judge said that the Writing Center doesn't necessarily serve "troubled" writers. "For someone who really wants to improve their writing, they should come in regularly," she said. "Any writer needs another writer to respond to his or her writing."

Immediate solutions or last minute help aren't necessarily part of the Writing Center, either. Judge said that the tutors at the center like to provide students with ways to improve their papers, but won't write them for the students. "We're not a place to get a 'quick-fix' on the paper." In the future, Judge hopes that all students will rely more on the Writing Center and the tutors that work there. "We can help them and we will help them," she said. "Tutors can provide and immediate audience."

From a tutor perspective, McFarland said that though tutors may not know everything about writing, they simply provide a service to students. "We're just there to help people who are willing to open their mind and improve their writing."

In the meantime, Judge said that students wanting help should use teacher comments and expectations from their papers as the basis for what the tutors can help them with. "Writing is an art of communication, and feedback is really important."

Open Mike enters new semester

Mike Maas
Staff

ASUI Productions' first Open Mike Nite of the semester filled the Vandal Cafe with guitarists and their songs Saturday night, beginning their spring semester's coffee-house concert series on an original note.

All that is required to perform at an Open Mike Nite is to arrive early and sign up.

The first act of the evening was John Priest, a mysterious folk singer/guitar player determined not to reveal too much about himself. He began the trend of the evening, playing guitar and singing original songs.

Steve Faust took the stage following Priest, and broke the night's guitar-playing trend by playing autoharp instead. While this was an interesting change in timbre, it also presented some tuning problems for Faust, who had to retune the instrument several times between songs, never to his liking. His self-described Valentine's set was fairly mellow, containing solemn odes, folk ballads, and the Peter Paul and Mary tune "Day is Done." Faust ended with an upbeat medley of Stephen Foster tunes, reprising the piece from his Blue Key talent show performance last year.

The third performer was charismatic Todd Walter of Pullman. His set consisted of three original songs, all based somehow on the road and the woes of never settling down. His first song was about those "flash in the panorama" towns that all look the same from the highway, "Just Passing Through." The second song, "Tom the Toad," was the first song Walter wrote. The moral is "look both ways," something poor Tom forgot to do.

A regular Open Mike performer, Walter is ending his stay in Pullman after this semester. He decided because of this he'd perform a "good-bye" song at each of his remaining Open Mike Nites. This time it was "Where oh Where," and despite containing an evil bar chord, it ended Walter's set on the humbly competent note it started on.

Fourth up was Simien Hein, an ex-statistics teacher at Washington State University. Stating that he "got over" that kind of lifestyle and decided to lead a more interesting one writing songs, Hein launched into his first number. Called "Catching Crabs with Katrina," the instrumental piece utilized alternate tuning and a bit-too-prominent ostanato bass, and according to Hein depicted an Oregon beach in the summer. "Walking Along with You," was a love/obsession song about "being attracted to someone a lot," and the last song was a traditional British song about the crew that attempted to find the Northwest Passage and died of lead poisoning.

The final act of the evening was Joe Gallanack on electric guitar and vocals, and Jesse Casterson on harmonica. They played "white 1960s blues," the kind that became popular in Chicago when blacks migrated north and passed on their music to punk suburban kids. Despite being routed through excessive reverb, Gallanack's open-tuned slide guitar sounded appropriately grungy throughout.

Gallanack and Casterson happily romped through their first number before playing a slow, shuffle blues by Willie Dixon. The introduction was rhythmically free, eventually coagulating when Gallanack settled down to chug along underneath his own vocals. The harmonica added to the authenticity of the sound, but he backed away from the mike and was difficult to hear a lot of the time.

The last song was a Chuck Berry-esque number, basically the same blues style played faster. ASUI Productions is continuing its plan of holding "roving" Open Mike Nites. The next will be on March 4, and will be held at the Farmhouse fraternity.

Music Review

RAW FEED TRIANGLE

With their new record Raw Feed, Triangle sounds like every other loud, rock band out there.

The album is comprised of 13 tracks. The first song, "Blackhill," is the same chord played in a repetitive pace. The vocalist sounds like every other heavy metal vocalist.

"Cheap Thrills," the second track on the album, pretty much sounds like the first track, except this time you get the cheap thrill of having the lead singer scream into his mic.

Along with the second are female backing vocals. You would be able to tell the difference a little better if the male vocals didn't shriek like the female vocals.

This is definitely a guitar-oriented album. Each song is laced with distorted, echoed, and tangible guitar sounds. The band should replace their vocalist.

Triangle is merely a cheap imitation of Metallica. I wouldn't be surprised if they did a cover album of the icon metal band.

I'm not even sure if there is a bassist in the band, considering the songs are taken up with cheap guitar tricks and irritating vocals. Power chords are evident on this album, yet, unlike other power chord bands, Triangle's power chords won't save them from rock death.

I feel somewhat sorry for the band though. They probably have this strange mental picture of being a really talented long haired metal band. I feel even more sorry for the record company for producing these guys.

The company should have spared us music journalists as well as listeners the displeasure of listening to this album.

The final thing that broke me is the drum beat, the weak screaming, the meaningless lyrics. The drummer probably could be replaced with anyone, even an untalented musician. The drum beat consists of pounding on one drum over and over, while every now and then hitting those nice, shiny cymbals. The drummer probably couldn't even figure out how to use his snare and bass drum at the same time from the sound of it.

I would have to say if you bought this album you wasted your money. This album is for the tomb of rock and should be buried as deep as is humanly possible.

The record industry should treat this album like a piece of radioactive trash. But, if you want this sorry excuse for music, the name of the band is Triangle and the album is called Raw Feed. It can be found, hopefully not around here, on the Moonstone Record label.

Vandals play re-run vs. UM, then upset MSU

Damon Barkdull

Deja Vu hit the University of Idaho's men's basketball team Friday as they once again lost a game in the final stretch, falling in a Big Sky Conference game to Montana 76-71. The Vandals did correct their late second half mistakes, with a 79-70 upset over Montana State 79-70 Saturday night.

SATURDAY

Lady Luck was with the Vandals on Saturday night, as were 2,785 fans who witnessed Idaho's win over the favored Montana State Bobcats.

Montana State mounted an early 21-13 lead, before Idaho's Mark Leslie hit a three-pointer to cut MSU's lead to 25-24 with 6:32 left in the first half. Both teams battled back and forth, before UI's Mark Leslie hit a 3-pointer with :01 left in the first half, to give Idaho a 40-39 lead.

well in half two, hitting 50 percent from three-point range. Johnson, Leslie, and Shawn Dirden launched a three-point barrage that eventually helped Idaho to the win.

Leslie scored eight points in the final 11:00 and helped the Vandals to finally secure the win.

Leslie led all scorers with 25 points while Harrison and Dirden each chipped in 15 respectively.

Vandal basketball coach Joe Cravens had asked his seniors Leslie and Johnson to step up their play.

"Benji had to get meaner out there...he's too much like that goody-two-shoes Walley Cleaver. He's the type of kid where you almost want to tell him to drink," Cravens said.

"Coach told Ben and I that we needed to step it up a notch our senior year, he said we should go out with a bang...and we had an excellent game tonight," Leslie said.

Leslie paves way to victory for Vandals

Lately, the Idaho Basketball team has been playing like it's in a Quentin Tarantino movie. Every game ends the same and it's impossible to figure out what's going on.

If you've been to a game you know how frustrating it can be to watch the Vandals play.

The Vandals will play an excellent first half, and even go into halftime leading by a few points. Then, even with the high scoring of Mark Leslie; the usual double-double of scoring and rebounds from forward Harry Harrison; good points from Shawn Dirden; and tough defense from Nate Gardner; Idaho loses.

No one can explain it. Even Idaho coach Joe Cravens can't explain it. After second half losses to Idaho State and Boise State, and another one on Friday against Montana there was no reason to think that Saturday's one point cushion over Montana State would keep Idaho out of the loss column.

"They never cease to amaze me," Cravens said. "We had every reason not to win tonight."

Cravens must have forgotten about his point guard.

Even when you consider the record setting rebounding of Harrison (20 rebounds and 15 points), the consistent scoring of Dirden (15 points) and guard Ben Johnson (14 points), the real story of Saturday's 79-70 victory over the Montana State Bobcats was Mark Leslie.

The six-foot senior from Milwaukee, Wis. refused to allow Idaho to relax in the second half and let their lead slip away, again. A scan down the play-by-play sheet shows how Leslie led the Vandals to victory. Sentence fragments like "Leslie layin'," "Leslie three-pointer top of key," and "Leslie two-foot running leaver" show how Leslie led the Vandal victory.

"He really livened up the game," Harrison said.

That's an understatement.

Leslie scored the first and last points of each half of the game. Leslie ended the first half with a running three pointer with just one second left to give Idaho the lead going into halftime. It only got worse for MSU.

Leslie ended the game scoring the last 10 of 11 Idaho's points when MSU drew within one with 2:33 left to play. Those points secured the victory and tied Idaho with Montana State and Northern Arizona with a 3-4 Big Sky Conference record.

"We felt like this one was do or die," Leslie said. "After four conference losses already, a fifth would have been a heart-breaker. We had to take care of this."

About his own game, Leslie was the modest, but still bathing in the glow of the victory over a tough MSU team.

"That's the best time of the game. You hit a shot and the crowd gets going. You get that feeling that you can't get at any other time in the game," Leslie says with a smile. "But I'm getting old. My body's killing me."

"Mr. Clutch comes through again," Gardner said.

Leslie came into this season expecting to take over as one of the leaders of the young Idaho team. With the departure this year of Orlando Lightfoot and Deon Watson, Leslie was forced to step up and face his teammates as a leader.

"It forced me to be somebody I'm not. I can't just joke around like I used to, otherwise the other guys would feed off that. We can't play like that," Leslie said.

After Friday's loss, where Leslie described himself and the team as "emotionally flat," the point guard led his team into a tight race for the Big Sky Championship and gave the Vandals a high note to head into southern Idaho with games against BSU and ISU.

"We've seen every team," Leslie said. "We feel like we can beat every team we've played against and if we come together we'll win."

Vandal guard Mark Leslie, known to his teammates as "Mr. Clutch," has taken more of a leadership role this season.

1994-95 season has been a tale of two halves

In opening the year, Idaho's men's basketball team pulled off the unexpected, by capturing a win from heavily favored

Washington State, but since then things couldn't have gotten any worse.

Idaho has played some of the best basketball I've seen in the three years that I've been here, but they can't seem to tie the two twenty minute halves together. Idaho has held many leads at the half this year, including leads over Big Sky favorites Idaho State and Boise State. The trend continued this weekend, as they were up by three at the half against a scrappy Montana team, but the Grizzlies proved to be too much for the Vandals, as Idaho once again lost its composure and lost the game as well.

As was the case last week, Idaho battled back from a devastating loss to capture a key Big Sky

Mark Vanderwall

Conference win. Last week Idaho lost a key game on the road to Weber State, and "as was the case this weekend, they somehow found a way to win a tough contest at Northern Arizona, as well as Montana State. If Idaho could somehow find the a way to play the way they did at NAU and here against Montana State, the rest of the Big Sky Conference could be in trouble come tournament time.

On the positive side, the play of the Idaho guards this weekend was unbelievable. Benji Johnson, Shawn Dirden, and Mark Leslie played the best basketball of the year for the Vandals.

The trio scored 50 of Idaho's total against Montana, and 54 against Montana State. The play of Benji Johnson—this weekend may be the key to the rest of Idaho's season. Johnson who was replaced in the starting line-up earlier in the season by Shawn Dirden—may have gotten a little discouraged, but since the Vandals introduction of the three guard offense, Johnson has found his touch again, and in may be just in time to ignite the Vandal offense back into shape.

Leslie and Dirden have played well of late also, and this may also be in part to the three guard introduction. Dirden, the junior from Denver, Colorado, has shaken off the early season jitters to become an integral part of the Vandal offense, averaging just over 10 points on the season, and somewhere closer to 15 in conference play. Leslie, Idaho's leading scorer, hit a key 35 footer seconds before halftime of the Montana State game to give Idaho momentum as well as the lead going into the break. This may be the shot that could turn the Idaho season around. Leslie had 5 treys Saturday night, on his way to a game high 25.

The Idaho inside game hasn't exactly fluttered in the wind, with Harry Harrison leading the inside attack at just over 13 points and 11 rebounds a game. Harrison, the Brunswick, Georgia native, hauled down 20 boards in Saturday night's contest, as well as having 15 points in both weekend games. Nate Gardner, the emotional leader for the Vandals, was held scoreless in the Montana game, and had only 6 against Montana State. This falls well below his 10.3 ppg average going into the Montana series, and foul trouble as well as poor shooting may have been the key to Gardner's so-so showing.

The one thing that Idaho will need to somehow find is a solid bench. Todd Spike, Chad Coates, and James Jones were the only other Vandals to see playing time, and their scoring is anything but prolific.

If Idaho is going to make a run for the BSC championship, they will have to find more scoring from the bench when the starters have an off night. The losses of Jevon Green, Kelly Walker, and Jared Mercer are a key to the shortages from the bench. Idaho made a great move in going to the three guard offense, so that they could get all of their scorers on the floor at once, but if foul trouble or an off night should hit for one of them, they could find themselves in serious trouble. If one or two of the guys off of the bench can establish themselves as a threat, the team itself would probably follow suit in doing the same as a title contender.

Idaho returns to action Friday night against Boise State, and again Saturday night at Idaho State. These two contests could well determine where Idaho will be seeded in the BSC, and even a split on the road could be a momentum booster for the Vandals. The Broncos will be playing without leading scorer and rebounder John Coker, who is sidelined two to three weeks with an ankle injury. If Idaho plays like it did against Montana State and Northern Arizona, the Vandals could very possibly return home with a weekend sweep of the two top teams in the Big Sky Conference, and set themselves in good position for the

Idaho runs into a brick wall against UM, MSU

Dan Eckles

The Idaho Vandals must feel like they are riding a roller coaster. The Vandals have that sick feeling in their stomachs, the one you get from hitting rock bottom after the huge incline.

Idaho was hammered on its annual trip through Montana last weekend, falling to UM and MSU by a combined total of 57 points, a feat not expected after the Vandals swept Northern Arizona and Weber State the week before in Big Sky women's basketball action.

Montana State held true to the old sports philosophy, the good players will do their jobs; you just can't let the supporting cast do theirs.

Idaho's Ari Skorpik and Mindy Rice combined for 41 points but the Vandals saw only three starters score in a 71-58 loss to Montana State.

Eleven Vandals played but just five put the ball in the bucket. To make matters worse Idaho's freshman shooting guard Kelli Johnson (10.6 ppg) was bothered all weekend by a sore back and played only six minutes against the Bobcats.

"We needed a little more punch," Idaho coach Julie Holt said. "If we could have gotten a little more support it certainly would have helped."

The two clubs matched output in the first half, playing to a 30-30 tie at the intermission. After trading buckets in the early minutes of half two, Montana State broke a 43-43 tie with an 8-0 run and was never threatened again.

"The score was no indication of how the game was played," Holt said. "We had a chance to win and we didn't get it."

Skorpik pumped in a career-high 27 points on 8-16 shooting, including 4-6 from three-point land. Rice chipped in 14 points and 10 rebounds in the loss. Reserve guard Melissa McDaniel came off the bench to add eight points.

Montana State's veteran backcourt of senior Sam Fluss and junior Brooke Svendsen put up nearly half of the Bobcats' offensive production, posting 20 and 14 points respectively.

MSU outrebounded the Vandals 39-32 and committed 16 turnovers compared to Idaho's 23. The Bobcats also held an advantage at the charity stripe where they canned 16-24 free throws. Idaho was just 9-14 from the free throw line.

FRIDAY

Missoula is not a fun place for Big Sky teams to venture when it comes to women's basketball. The Vandals took their licks in a 93-49 drubbing at the hands of the Montana Grizzlies.

Not only are the Grizzlies good (17-5, 6-1 BSC), but they have raucous crowd support, 6,580 came out to watch a young struggling Vandal team (4-15, 2-11 BSC) play their Griz on Friday.

Montana outshot Idaho 53 percent to 42 percent. Montana was better at the free throw line 26-30 compared to Idaho's 6-13 effort. The Griz outrebounded the Vandals 40-22. Montana turned the ball over 11 times, Idaho 26. The Grizzlies blocked 12 Vandal shots. Idaho recorded one snuff.

It's easy to see how the Griz 5 pulled out a Griz win.

"Montana is a lot better team than we are, especially at home where they play in front of 6,000 fans," Holt said.

Vandal track races to best outing

Kevin Neuendorf

The Idaho Vandal track team pulled off its most impressive showing yet Saturday at the Human Race Invitational in Cheney, Wash.

The men were once again paced by the performance of sophomore Niels Kruller. Kruller, who on Monday was named the Big Sky's Conference track athlete-of-the-week, used a time of 6.53 seconds to carry him to a first place finish in the 55-meter dash.

Teammates Jason St. Hill and Felix Kamangirira placed second and third, respectively.

"Kruller and St. Hill are both running very well and have been very consistent," Idaho coach Mike Keller said. "Hopefully, once we go up against stronger competition they will run faster yet."

Junior Thad Hathaway placed first in the high jump with a mark of 6-feet 11-inches and freshman Chris Kwaramba placed first in the triple jump with a leap of 49-1. Kwaramba's effort was good enough to qualify him for the Big Sky Championships next month.

The throwing events included strong performances from Idaho's Scott McCarthy and Rick Wassenaar. McCarthy finished third in the 35-pound weight throw with a throw of 55-5 1/2.

Wassenaar used a throw of 48-0 to place fourth and also qualify him for the Big Sky Championships. Sophomore Rich Gere earned a post-season berth as well with a throw of 51-1 3/4 in the 35-pound weight throw.

"Overall, this weekend at the Moscow McDonalds Invitational is the most pivotal," said Keller. "We only have two more weekends, really, where our runners can qualify for the Big Sky Championships."

The women, in only their second meet of the season, had several strong performances at Thorpe Fieldhouse. Junior Jill Wimer placed first in the shot put with a throw of 43-6 1/2 and Emily Wise had a first place finish in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 8.68 seconds. In the high jump, Cindy Smith leaped to a second place finish for the Vandals with a jump of 5-2 1/4.

The Vandals will be back home this weekend when they host the Moscow-McDonald's Open on Saturday.

Decathlon world-record holder Dan O'Brien and other top men and women will also be competing this weekend in the Kibbie Dome at the U.S. Indoor Multi-Event Championships. This event will feature the top multi-event athletes in the country who will all be vying for a spot at this year's World Championships to be held in Barcelona, Spain on March 10-12.

The competition for the men will be the seven-event heptathlon and the women will compete in the pentathlon.

"Of all the indoor events, the heptathlon is my favorite," says Dan O'Brien. "With fewer events, it allows me to concentrate on them and gradually work up to the 10 events of the decathlon."

O'Brien also added that the event should be a real crowd pleaser.

He said that this is a chance for people to see him compete who normally don't get to, and also to see some of the best athletes in the world.

Starting times for the women's events will be at 6:30 p.m. on Friday.

The men will begin at 6:45 p.m. on Friday and at 10:30 a.m. on Saturday and admission is free with your student I.D.

Vandal Notes

Rice honored again

Volleyball Magazine has selected University of Idaho senior Mindy Rice to its All-American third team in its March 1994 edition.

Rice, from Grandview, Idaho, was previously honored as a second team All-American selection by the American Volleyball Coaches Association.

Volleyball Magazine named seven players to the first team, six to the second and six to the third team. The magazine also selected 12 athletes to an honorable mention team.

Rice is the first player in Big Sky Conference history to be named All-American at the Division I level.

The outside hitter was also named the Big Sky Conference MVP after collecting 619 kills for the 31-3 Vandal club that advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

Women's tennis falls

The Idaho women's tennis team fell 7-2 to Cal Poly San Luis Obispo in a Monday morning match in the Kibbie Dome.

The Vandals picked up their two victories at No. 1 and No. 2 singles. Gwen Nikora won in straight sets at No. 1, while Shaley Denler went three sets in winning at No. 2.

"Gwen played an outstanding match at No. 1 singles against a higher rated opponent and defeated her in straight sets," said Vandal coach Greg South. "We started a little slow today, with some injuries and other things. But our team came away thinking that this was a team that we could beat. It really should be interesting to see how it goes when we play them again in a month."

Idaho returns to action on Wednesday in the Kibbie Dome, when the men and women take on Lewis-Clark State. The match is set to begin at noon.

Clark, West promoted

University of Idaho Athletic Director Pete Liske announced on Monday that Kathy Clark and Lance West have both received promotions within the athletic department.

Clark has been promoted from Assistant Athletic Director for Programs to Senior Associate Athletic Director. Clark will oversee the areas of academics, compliance and student-athlete welfare.

West has been promoted from Assistant Athletic Director for Development to Associate Athletic Director. West will oversee the areas of development, marketing and events management.

Clark, a 1967 graduate of Oregon State, joined the Idaho athletic department in 1974 as head of the women's athletic program and head volleyball and track coach. She added assistant athletic director to her title in 1978.

West, a 1986 graduate of Idaho and former Vandal football player, was named regional development director for southern Idaho in 1987 and then was named assistant athletic director in April of 1989.

FRIDAY

Coming into Friday's game against Montana, UI had won four out of the last five meetings with the Grizzlies, and led the overall series 84-58.

The Vandals were looking for another conference win, and things were looking good early, as Idaho ran out to 16-10 lead.

Harrison helped his Vandals maintain the lead in the first half until Montana's Matt Kempfert buried a pair of free throws to tie the score at 21 apiece with 9:18 left before halftime. The Vandals raced back once more, as Harrison went to the charity stripe and connected on both free throws putting UI up 41-38 at the half.

In the second half both the Vandals and the Grizzlies battled back and forth and traded leads,

The Grizzlies made a run, and before UI could yell choke, Montana was up 72-67 with only 1:45 to spare in the game.

A disenchanted crowd of 3,113 watched Idaho, which blew second half leads against Big Sky favorites Idaho State and Boise State earlier this year at home, once again saw their Vandals fold in cruchtime.

After the game, UI basketball coach Cravens was obviously upset.

"This was a rerun of ISU and BSU—we can play everybody tough, but we just don't get it done down the stretch," Cravens said. "I'm very, very unhappy that we let this one slip away."

Leading scorers for Idaho were Mark Leslie with 20 points and Ben Johnson with 18.

There is some speculation as to why UI has so many problems in the latter part of games, but not even coach Cravens could come up with the answers.

"The psyche of this team is beyond me," Cravens said after Friday's loss.

Bart Stageberg

Idaho's Shawn Dirden drives the lane for two of his 15 points in Saturday night's 79-70 triumph over the Montana State Bobcats. Dirden has caught fire since capturing a starting guard spot. The Junior-college transfer from Otero JC is Idaho's third leading scorer.

Harrison, Leslie. Rebounds - UM (Spoja 4), UI 13 (Gardner 5). Total 40 (Kempfert, Covill 7), UI 34 fouls - UM 20, UI 24. Attendance - (Harrison 11). Assists - UM 15 3,113 past forward Harry Harrison, surrounded by a cluster of quote seeking reporters.

"Hey Harry," Leslie calls out loudly, "Tell 'em about that shot I missed on purpose so you could get your twentieth."

As Leslie leaves the locker room, a bag slung across one shoulder, a bag of ice in one hand and a pronounced limp are testament to how hard he played the game.. 10-18 from the field, 5-9 from behind the three-point arc and a game-high 25 points. Leslie crosses the threshold leading from locker room to the basketball court, where he has just had one of the better games of his career. He reaches up on his tiptoes and touches the sign above the doorway.

Vandal Pride.
