Proposal hopes to unify campus

Michelle Kalbeitzer

Staff

Major changes involving new buildings and renovating the old ones are proposed to make the campus at the University of Idaho "more like a village."

"The current Student Union location doesn't draw from the central location of campus as well as it could," Joanne Reece, director of Capital Planning, said. "We want to do things better. The campus needs to be reworked a little bit to be up with the times."

President Elisabeth Zinser assigned a task force the duties of developing a University Center that meshed the different people on campus as well as the different programs together in one central area, instead of them being spread all over campus like they currently are.

The major theme behind the University Center is "trying to build a physical place to fulfill the need of bringing students and faculty together," UI Professor of Architecture Nels Reese said. "Students like the idea of having more than just a six or seven hour activity place."

Joanne Reece believes that the Center is the way to bring the Greek population, residence hall, and off-campus people all together in one place. The Center will not be composed of one building but rather a cluster of five to eight different buildings glued together for proximity.

"The University Center will be a series of new space and facility enhancements which best serve the needs to the university community, complement the teaching, research, and extension mission of the university, and realize the attributes of our preferred Living-Learning Environment at the University of Idaho."

Some of the goals of the new Center that will make it a living-learning environment are:

- Supporting a higher level of alumni interaction with the campus and the community of Moscow.

- Bringing segments of the campus community together in lounges, eateries, and other informal settings to meet, eat, and talk.

- Providing clustered student services conveniently located for their most responsive, effective delivery.

- Expanding recreation and wellness experiences for the campus community.

- Creating private and semi-private "hangout" and study spaces.

- Enhancing access to cultural and artistic programs and events.

The new Center will be composed of many things such as a large eatery, student media, bookstore, post office, arts and culture facilities, administrative offices, leisurely activity spaces, and many other things, all in near proximity of one another.

Housing is a hot topic and it is being addressed with the new pro-

Professors attend leadership conference

Two University of Idaho professors spoke at Leadership Directions and Connections, a woman's leadership conference held Feb. 11 and 12 at the University Inn Best Western.

Mary Dupree, professor in the School of Music, served as moderator, and Nancy Wannamaker, professor of Family and Consumer Sciences, was a panelist during Saturday's Balancing Work and Family: Workable Model workshop. Other panelists included Marilyn Howard, principal of Moscow's West Park Elementary, and Elaine Vincenti, juvenile probation officer and director of Latah County Youth Services.

Panelists discussed the challenges of balancing work and family and how it affects many women. Panelists shared stories of struggles, strategies for coping, and the realization that "superwoman" does not exist.

"Never underestimate the power of guilt," said Howard as she discussed some of her rules for living. "We're going to feel guilty no matter what we do. It keeps us grounded."

Some of Howard's other rules for living included "if you can just live through the next two weeks, everything will be okay" and "when choices come up, ask yourself how much difference will they make five years from now."

"When you make those choices, your family will always win out," said Howard. "It's important to find a balance, and it helps to give yourself permission not to be perfect."

In addition to being a juvenile probation officer, Vincenti has also been a member of the Moscow School Board, and was instrumental in bringing an alternative school to Moscow.

Vincenti chose to be a stay-at-home mom until her son was 13 and her daughter was in the fourth grade. "I am very glad I could make the choice to stay at home," Vincenti said.

Vincenti said that the children she supervises come from families where parents struggle to provide supervision. "Many of the parents failed to set limits early," Vincenti said. "Then when the children get into serious trouble in their teen years, it's too late to clamp down."

She also said that many of these children come from families with a low value on school, substance abuse problems, but in spite of all of this, the parents still care.

"They are only people, with not a lot of resources. They can only do what they can do," said Vincenti.

Wannamaker discussed conclusions from her study of working with men and women. The purpose of the study was to examine gender on perceptions of work and family.

"The study found that more females than males reported work and family issues

Pennies lost, pennies found

Adam Gardels

What might all the lost money be worth some day? One University of Idaho professor believes it might be worth "billions" of dollars to the university.

"It was winter break of 1981 and I found three cents. It was a brand new year and so I said 'Why don't I save all the money I find,' said Terry Armstrong, professor of education and founder of the "Found Money Fund." Anderson and a secretary in the president's office decided to save all the money they found to throw a party at the end of the year.

"At the end of the year we had only 10 dollars and 31 cents, and that's not enough for a party," said Armstrong. With dreams of a big party Armstrong placed the money in the "Found Money Fund" to be used for the UI Bicentennial in 2089.

An "a-political committee" will be established to oversee the use of the fund's interest. The committee will "review single page requests by campus organizations and departments" that need the interest accumulated by the fund. "If someone would have done this for us at the turn of the last century we would have a huge scholarship fund. We need to start taking care of our grand children."

"We need a birthday present," said Armstrong. "At the bicentennial we will start spending just the interest." The fund has $30,677.46, starting from only 18 cents in January 1981. The fund has made $15,200.43 in interest. "In the year posals as well.

Currently they are converting dorm space to single rooms with little kitchen features.

The new campus development plans will build "affordable housing for a more independent lifestyle close in to campus," Joanne Reece said.

"Over time we will be building more apartment-like units. We will be replacing Park Village Apartments and hoping to accomplish more single and two person apartment buildings for students," Reece said. These apartment units will be built around the Wallace Complex and Theophilus Tower area. Students living here will have the option to buy meal tickets if they wish.

One of the purposes of the long range development plan of the campus is to get a better understanding of student needs.

According to Reece one of those needs is for more indoor and outdoor recreation space. Reece said that they are looking at the possibility of building a single building with the sole purpose of recreation and fitness training.

"What we are proposing to do is add 100,000 square feet over time in the UCC area with the renovation of UCC, psychology, and communication buildings," Reece said.

This includes "tearing down the old Art and Architecture Annex, Theater Arts, TAAC/Womens Center, and the Satellite Sub. All of these structure will be replaced in appropriate alternate spaces," she said.

Three teams of six to eight advanced architect students and a team leader gathered to put forth their ideas of what the University Center could look like. Nels Reece said, "The idea is to try to get a lot of ideas and energy pumped in a short period of time." This student charrette lasted many consecutive hours and was designed to "create a vision of what the university can be."

The results of the charrette gave three different proposals of what the new Center could look like. The three proposals differ in the number of buildings that need to be built and which building will contain what, but they were all composed of a similar "village-like atmosphere."

"The idea first came to me from a student back in 1980," Reece said. "When I saw the student's work I was very supportive of it. The more I saw it the more I liked it."

The ideas were shown to President Richard Gibb but the concept was put on the back burner due to other pressing problems at the time.

A complete report of the Center and its implications will be compiled for President Zinser to review. "She needs to at least feel that it's a good idea," Reece said.

Sean Wilson, ASUI President, recently returned from a five day trip to Santa Barbara where he toured many other student unions "to give us some ideas about where we want to go." Wilson talked to many architects and contractors about different ideas.

"I envision the University Center being much more 20th century," Wilson said.

"The Student Union should be the one building above all the others that says 'come in.'"

Funding for the Center will come from the state, student fees, institutional money and private sources.

"It will take probably a decade for it to be in place," Joanne Reece said. "But we want to start now because it's so important to the long-term vitality of UI."

ASUI Vice President Damon Darakjy said, "It is a very historic moment for us. Even if they (students) are not here when it is completed this is something that they can plan for students that will be at the university for years to come."

2089 the trust fund could be worth billions! It doubles every seven or eight years," said Armstrong.

The fund gained national attention in the early Eighties following an AP press release blanketing the country with the details about the fund.

"Then we got a call from NBC. I and another faculty member were to be guests on a TV game show called 'Fantasy.' They put us in a plastic box with $50 bills. Then they blew these bills around. We got to keep everything we could grab and we walked away with $2500 for the fund," said Armstrong.

"Finders"—those who give lost money to the fund—send money in from all over the world. "A lot of the money is sent to me through the mail," said Armstrong, who keeps a log of who gives him money and from where it comes. Of the seven finders who turned in money yesterday one penny was found on the floor of the U.S. Capital Building and mailed to Armstrong.

Holding up a cup of found quarters waiting to be put into the fund, Armstrong said, "It's lost money so it doesn't belong to us in the first place."

For Armstrong the thrill of finding money is most important. "People don't even pick up a penny but we do. For me finding money is a real high," he said. Armstrong believes that there are "Degrees of difficulty in finding money." Under a parking meter might be a level one, money four feet away might be a level two and a level three might be money buried in the snow, he said.

Fifty dollars is the largest denomination found. Armstrong pointed out that he advertised in the paper for the rightful return of this money but no one claimed it.

Over the years Farm House is the living group that has donated the most money with $262 cumulatively and Delta Tau Delta in a close second with $229.

Armstrong issued a challenge to see which living group could find the most money by the end of the year. "We need all the freshman members of every living group to check the couches for found money and turn it into me before May 1." Found Money may be turned into Armstrong at room 507A in the Education Building.

were more of a current need," said Wannamaker. "Female staff members reported needing a supportive work environment."

The study concluded that gender differences occur between work and family needs, but women were more likely to acknowledge them.

"Men and women report similar work and family priorities and family care taking roles," said Wannamaker. "In the future, employers may need to respond to these needs."

"Women talk to other women and expect supervisors to understand that they are also mothers, and have some sensitivity in the workplace. Men haven't asked for that in the past," Wannamaker added. "I'm not saying that women aren't competent, but there needs to be an understanding that they aren't just employees."

UI acquires Sweet Avenue property

The University of Idaho has acquired approximately 10 acres of land formerly owned by Burlington Northern Railroad on Sweet Avenue between Main Street and Railroad Street.

According to Jerry Wallace, UI vice president for finance and administration, the university has been trying to acquire this property for over six years. Acquisition of the property was contingent on a thorough environmental cleanup of the acreage, which has been occupied by oil distributors and other industrial users for most of the past century. Environmental assessments of the property in 1989 and 1992, sponsored by UI, identified a variety of contaminants, which have been removed from the soil.

"Clean up of this site involved hard work and considerable expense for several tenants," Wallace said in a prepared statement.

"The environmental remediation benefits the university, the city, the student families who live across the street, and all the citizens of Moscow. It also removed a potential source of contamination for Paradise Creek," he said.

The Idaho Division of Environmental Quality monitored all of the remediation activities to ensure the cleanup effort meets regulatory requirements. Professor Ronald Crawford of the UI Center for Hazardous Waste Remediation Research will continue to monitor groundwater quality for at least two years.

"Dr. Dale Ralston (UI professor of hydrogeology) is also interested in doing a hydrogeologic characterization of the site, which will add quite a bit to our knowledge of groundwater flow in the area," Crawford said.

In the short term, portions of the property will be used for parking. The university's Long Range Campus Development Plan "Vision 2020" will identify future uses of the site.

Survey to find recreation needs

Plans could include campus recreation center

Russ Wright

Staff

Some 3,000 University of Idaho students will soon have the chance to voice their recreational wishes to UI administration through a survey put together by Campus Recreation and Sports Management Group.

The projected date for mailing the survey is sometime in mid-February, said Lathen.

"I strongly encourage students to fill out the survey and return it, so we can get the best data possible," he said.

Calvin Lathen, director of Campus Recreation, said the Sports Management Group—the consulting firm hired to look at UI's campus sports and recreational facilities and programs—is hoping to get 2,000 replies to the questionnaire randomly mailed to full-time undergraduate and graduate students.

The survey will include questions on how often current recreation facilities on campus are used and a wish list of future possibilities students might like to see—such as an ice rink.

The wish list asks respondents to rank the possibilities in order of importance and how often they would use the facility.

Lathen said his office regularly takes suggestions from students about Campus Recreation facilities and programs.

Occasionally, he said, a petition for a request will be turned in to his office—often around two or three times a year.

Lathen wants students to know his office is open to suggestions and often follows student recommendations.

"We had a petition to keep the weight rooms open longer," said Lathen, "and we accomplished that. We also had a petition requesting a change in the lap swim time for the Swim Center, and we did that, too."

This year, Campus Recreation sponsored a ski race at Silver Mountain in Wallace. Three other local universities and colleges participated as well. Lathen said the ski race was a success.

Part of the reason Lathen and Sports Management Group thought the survey should be done was to cope with the rapidly expanding intramural sports programs.

"We had 130 intramural basketball teams last year," said Lathen. "This year we have 148." Lathen said Campus Recreation officials are running into problems because of the growth, often finding time and space conflicts.

"One of the first things the Sports Management Group determined was that we are very short on sport and recreational facilities," said Lathen.

One of the possibilities currently being examined by university officials is a campus recreation center.

Karrie Bergman is a UI student who traveled as a representative with two other students and four administration officials to a symposium in Cincinnati last year to examine some possibilities for a future recreation center.

"I think it's an excellent idea," said Bergman. "It gives students a place to exercise and play sports without worrying (about) intramural or sports programs." Bergman said she knows some students who are hesitant to go to the Kibbie Dome during football or basketball practice because they feel out of place.

"We visited a facility in Oxford, Ohio which was just three weeks old," said Bergman.

The facility had a fruit and juice bar which was also loaded with low-fat foods, an indoor soccer field, a soft-surface room for aerobics, weight rooms, basketball courts and many other attractions. The group also visited a similar facility in Toledo, Ohio.

"It gives the people in the P.E. programs a chance to work in their fields, too," said Bergman. The two facilities in Ohio offered fat testing, individualized diet programs and other options offered by Physical Education majors. "I was so impressed. The facilities were always full, and the students there really seemed to enjoy them," Bergman said.

Lathen posed a rhetorical question regarding the recreation center possibility: "Why would the university want to do something like this? Many other schools have constructed student recreation centers. They're common in institutions our size and larger."

"The biggest benefit would be student recruitment and retention. Both of these areas were enhanced in universities that have student recreation centers."

Student enrollment breaks record once again

Spring semester enrollment has reached a record high with 11,573 students attending the University of Idaho.

This year's spring enrollment represents a 2.9 percent increase over last year's 11,243.

Of the UI students enrolled for this semester, 9,400 are taking courses on the Moscow campus. Another 1,427 are at UI's resident instructional centers at Coeur d'Alene, Boise and Idaho Falls, and the remaining 746 are taking either Video Outreach or Continuing Education courses.

Scholarship set up in honor of retired professor

The family of retired University of Idaho Professor Ya-Yen Wang has established and endowed the Ya-Yen Wang Memorial Scholarship for $20,000 to benefit junior and senior mathematics students. The scholarship is especially intended to encourage women to study mathematics.

Wang, associate professor of mathematics and professor emeritus of computer science, died in Bellevue, Wash. on Jan. 16.

Wang taught mathematics at UI from 1960 to 1982. She retired from the Computer Science Department in 1992.

Contributions to the scholarship can be made through the UI Gift Receiving Office.

Pre-paid phone card use growing on campuses

Judy Braginsky
College Press

When Arizona State University freshman Dan Gibson gazed at his first dorm phone bill, he says, "I felt bad, very bad." During one month alone, the bill totaled $100 for long-distance calls made to friends at other campuses. The bill's arrival put an immediate damper on his tendency to call buddies around the clock to gab.

Gibson rallied quickly, however, when he discovered a new item being hawked on campuses—the pre-paid phone card. Sold in increments of $5, $10, $20 and more, the disposable cards operate on a flat per-minute rate no matter what time of day you call. In most cases, there are no added costs for prime-time calling, toll calls, busy signals or unanswered calls. The cards are "activated" after purchase by dialing 800, a personal ID number and the phone number.

Gibson says he's now a regular user, buying the cards in $10 and $20 increments as a way to help control his phone call budget.

"The pre-paid cards I buy cost about 12.5 cents a minute and are a much better deal than the 20 to 30 cents a minute charged by AT&T, which runs the phone service at my dorm," he says. "Now, I buy a card when I want to make a call and limit the call to my purchased time. I just warn my friends not to take it personally when we get cut off, which happens when you talk past your limit."

In other countries, pre-paid phone cards have been popular ways of chatting since the mid-1980s, when they were first introduced in Europe and Japan. The debit cards have become available in the U.S. only in the past two years. Research already shows that almost half of pre-paid phone card purchasers in this nation are between ages 18 to 24. To date, more than 300 different companies are vying for collegiate business, knowing that college students are big users of pay phones. Those with phone credit or calling cards frequently max out their limit, and parents are reluctant to provide them with personal telephone credit cards.

"Pre-paid phone cards are very popular back home in Singapore," says Southern Illinois University senior Sanjay Seth. "The cards come decorated with different designs that users collect like trading cards. Some cards carry pictures of popular tourists spots like the mer-lion statue."

Wayne State University post-graduate student Christine Clay also got turned on to pre-phone cards while traveling abroad. While the cards are newly available on her campus and aren't popular yet, she says this is only because U.S. students don't know what they are. Clay is taking additional studies at Wayne State University in Wayne, Neb., after spending two years as a Peace Corps volunteer in Ghana.

"The country sold its own pre-paid card called the Ghana Card," she says. "Using it was neat. You didn't have to scrape up money and then insert all the coins into the coin box. I'd buy $5 cards and use them a lot to call my mother. I was surprised to see the cards in this country."

Indeed, international students who have used the cards back home buy the cards regularly on campus, says Michael Shupp, general merchandise manager at Iowa State University in Ames. "I started selling the cards two years ago, and sales are increasing," he says. "I expect the market to really take off."

Jim Skiersch, director of the bookstore at Southern Illinois University, says there's a big difference among the various companies selling pre-paid phone cards. "Stores have to know how competitive the market is and make sure they offer cards with good rates and reliable service," he says.

Calling rates, services and features vary from company to

Universities will pay grads that can't find jobs

College Press Service

ROCHESTER, N.Y.—It's an annual rite of spring: College seniors lie awake at night and fret they'll graduate with a huge debt, 100 resumes out, no job in sight, and Mom and Dad as their new landlords.

If only college came with some sort of guarantee, say many wistful college students. Now at least one does. Beginning next year, entering students at St. John Fisher College can qualify for a program that will pay students $417 per month, up to $5,000, if they aren't offered a job that requires a college degree within six months of their graduation.

But the new program, dubbed the Fisher Commitment, is hardly a license to lie on the sofa and take it easy. Before students qualify for the payout, they must meet a strict set of guidelines.

While in school, participating students will be required to join selected campus activities, complete a job-related internship, map out career goals with an academic adviser and graduate with at least a 2.75 grade point average.

After graduation, job seekers must stay in contact with the college's career office and show proof that they're diligently sending those resumes out.

In return, Fisher will provide guidance from career counselors and local job mentors every step of the way.

Dr. William Pickett, president of the college, says the strength of the program isn't in the potential payments after graduation, but in the educational plan itself. "A college degree is not a magic piece of paper," says Pickett. "It has to be a symbol of some real change that has happened in a student's life."

Mines dean elected to national academy

Robert W. Bartlett, dean of the University of Idaho College of Mines and Earth Resources, has been elected to the National Academy of Engineering.

According to the NAE, the "election to the Academy is among the highest professional distinctions accorded an engineer."

UI President Elisabeth Zinser called Bartlett's award "an important first for the University of Idaho."

"This national recognition demonstrates Dean Bartlett's extraordinary achievements in his field of engineering, and no surprisingly, we celebrate that these qualities as a scholar correspond with his fine qualities as a teacher and as a leader in the industry," Zinser said in a prepared statement.

Bartlett, who has been COMER dean at UI since 1987, was honored for his industrial and academic research in solution mining and extractive metallurgy and for significant applications to practice.

Before coming to UI, he was a metallurgist with EG&G Idaho, Inc., in Idaho Falls. He spent seven years as an associate professor of metallurgy at Stanford University. Bartlett also held top research posts with several major mineral companies, including Anaconda Minerals Company, Kennecott Corporation and the Stanford Research Institute.

Bartlett has written dozens of scholarly articles published in professional journals and holds numerous patents. He completed a new textbook in metallurgy last year and continues to teach at least one class each semester.

The university community will celebrate Bartlett's honor in Boise on Friday and on the Moscow campus as part of Engineering Week on Feb. 23. For further information on the events call University Communications at 885-6291.

be billed to the user's credit card each month. The PhoneCash card of TLC The Long Distance Company offers rates based on time and distance rather than just per minute, says TLC's Vice President of Marketing Tammy Franklin. "So the closer you call, the cheaper the rate," Franklin says.

Additionally, a two-for-one deal offered by the University Calling Card of Jardine Associates Inc. gives students who buy a pre-paid card with 40 minutes of time a second card, with less time, free of charge to give to a friend.

Further, some companies provide customized and private label cards. For example, the Quest Liberty card can depict fine art reproductions of paintings by van Gogh or Seurat. Other companies feature include ski and beach scenes, stock reports and even soap opera updates.

Card sellers tout other advantages to the card besides the obvious 50 percent savings or more over regular calling cards.

"If you're in a roommate situation, rather than split the phone bill, each student can use his or her own card to keep their phone tabs separate," Shupp says. "And if you lose your pre-paid card, you're just out of the money left on the card, where you could be out up to $1,000 if someone gets ahold of your regular calling card. And I've seen this happen."

Disadvantages to pre-paid cards seem few. "Some rates are higher than others, so you need to understand what you're buying," Shupp says. Dan Gibson adds that the sound quality sometimes isn't that great "and you end up shouting."

But Josh Dalton, a University of Arizona freshman, friend of Gibson's and enthusiastic pre-paid card user, appreciates the lack of billing stress "because your 'bill' is instantly taken off the card. And for students, the less stress the better."

Condom Day observed on Valentine's Day

College Press Service

WASHINGTON—Since Valentine's Day is a day for lovers, the American Social Health Association wants to remind those amorously inclined to "love responsibly."

That's why the group has declared Feb. 14 National Condom Day.

"Loving responsibly means carefully considering whether you are ready to enter a sexual relationship, having the courage to talk openly about one another's sexual history and taking preventive measures against sexually transmitted diseases," says Peggy Clarke, ASHA president.

"The male latex condom remains the most highly effective measure for preventing STD infection," Clarke says. "Fortunately, women also have a new option, the female condom, which is almost as effective. Either way, it's crucial to use condoms consistently and correctly."

Even in cyberspace, free speech has limits

The Information Revolution is underway, and with it come new standards in conduct and even morality, in some cases. Computers and the implications of what they are capable of have changed and will continue to change the world. However, some things shouldn't change.

Last Thursday, Jake Baker, a student at the University of Michigan in Detroit, was arrested and charged on a federal count of transmitting a threat to injure. Mr. Baker allegedly posted messages to the Internet describing the imaginary binding, rape, torture and murder of a former classmate. According to prosecutors, Mr. Baker posted messages like this one: "Torture is foreplay, rape is romance, snuff (killing) is climax."

If convicted, Mr. Baker faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison. In his defense, he claims that he was within his First Amendment rights in posting the messages openly on the Net, that he was simply exercising his right to free speech.

Over the past several years, the connectivity of the Net to every facet of our lives has increased exponentially. This has created innumerable opportunities for understanding and advancement; in addition, it has created all sorts of new types of crimes, as AT & T and a recently released gentleman who hacked under the handle of Phiber Optik can tell you. However, even though some of the cyberpaths to legal trouble are new, they fall under old arguments and principles.

The Supreme Court has established, through years of argument and legal principle-setting, that although quite broad in scope, the First Amendment is not limitless. Yelling "Fire!" in a crowded theater, for instance, does not constitute protected speech. Anyone who has ever flown on an airline knows that even jokes about hijacking also fall out of bounds.

There exists one other unprotected form of speech: threats. Legally, these fall under the definition of assault, and are punishable by fines and/or jail. This is the gray area where Mr. Baker's messages lie. Even though they were on the Internet, a medium that so far has proved itself to be anarchic, they are still illegal and should be punished.

A fine line exists here, a line that marks the difference between censorship and obeying the law. The Internet resists censorship, and that is how it should be. It was built to be self-repairing, a forum for free and clear information exchange, and this is how the Net must remain.

However, Mr. Baker's alleged threats cannot be ignored. Not only do they violate American law, they violate the Internet's central principle: freedom to conduct one's business unhindered and unafraid, a principle this country has built itself upon for over two centuries.

Shame on you, Jake.

Valentine's Day: A Head-to-Head Commentary

A reason to celebrate

I love Valentine's Day. Even without a significant other, Valentine's Day is great. It reinforces the idea that love really is the most important part of our lives and should be celebrated. Granted, some people may be a little bitter about previous experiences, but I think we all hold on to the idea that we will find that one person who will make us happy. That is what Valentine's Day is all about. Not Hallmark cards, candy or even flowers, but the idea that people were meant to be in pairs.

My friend Aaron dares to argue that we shouldn't celebrate Valentine's Day. I think he is wrong, and I also think he might be in the bitter category, so I'm going to give him, and you, some reasons to like Valentine's Day.

Valentine's Day comes second only to Halloween for the plethora of chocolate. What more can I say? I love any holiday associated with chocolate! Chocolate hearts, chocolate roses, chocolate anything...yummy!

And what about florists? This is the second busiest day out of the year for them. How dare Aaron try to put florists out of business. His own mom is a florist.

Don't forget about the paper doily people. Without this holiday, they too would be out of business.

The color red. What a great color! Besides Christmas, no other time of the year has red in so many store windows. I love to window shop and to see the decorations store owners put up for Valentine's Day can compete with Christmas in my book. I know, this is very sappy, but we all have this side to us, some just choose not to show it too often. That is another reason for this holiday. Without it, some people may never catch that glimpse of sappiness in themselves, or others.

Remember those cool Valentines from elementary school? They had Garfield or Snoopy on them and said silly thing like "Be Mine" and "I Wuv You." Valentine's Day was great back then. We would get those heart shaped sugar-packed candies that said "I Love You" or "Be My Friend." That was big stuff when I was a kid. It was very important that the right person got the right candy. It was much easier to tell someone you loved them that way. I think we need to carry some of those candies with us all the time, we would never have a problem expressing how we feel.

I think we should celebrate Valentine's Day twice a year! This is the one day out of the year that some of us get flowers. I know, how about a paid federal holiday? That way, you can spend it with the person you love. You could do all kinds of romantic things like going away for the weekend, go out to dinner and dance 'til dawn, and sleep late.

For us single types, we can play with our dogs all day, or get together with friends and bitch about members of the opposite sex. There is nothing like knowing other people are in the same boat you are. Then, we will all go home and realize we don't really mean most of

The harsh realities of V-Day

Ah, Valentine's Day, that amorous festival of love and loving that carries with it connotations of paper hearts, chocolate candy, and flowers. And now, tongue firmly in cheek, I must set myself at task to make the general public aware of the rarely discussed negative side of Valentine's Day. As much as I hate to be labeled a spoilsport, it is my responsibility as a journalist to point out the harsh realities of this supposedly "innocent" holiday.

The origins of this holiday are dubious. There are several contrasting theories concerning the dawn of Valentine's Day. One of the theories is that the holiday had its beginnings in the old (and really boneheaded) English belief that birds choose their mates on Feb. 14.

Most people who believed this were subsequently burned at the stake, so the idea eventually "burned out." The official name for Valentine's Day at this point in history was National Bird Copulation Day.

Other experts have said that the holiday stems from the ancient Roman festival of Lupercalia in which men took leather strips and whipped women with them to make them (the women) more fertile. My, doesn't that sound romantic. Happy Sado-Masochism Day, sweetie!

It has also been suggested that this special day of love was named after two early Christian saints by the name of "Valentine." Oh yeah, that sounds believable! Just because one of the Valentines secretly married young couples (performed the ceremonies, that is) and the other one used to receive special heart-shaped notes from children, they want to trace the roots of St. Valentine's Day to them! Where do people get these far-fetched ideas?

It becomes obvious to anybody who has done any research that Valentine's Day is actually named after the infamous Valentine's Day Massacre of 1929, wherein four mobsters dressed up as policemen and shot seven rival gang members. The people of Chicago were so terrified that they would also be killed they sent little paper hearts to the mob leaders to pledge that "my life is yours." To really get on the crime bosses' good side, the citizens would supplement the paper hearts with gifts of chocolate candies and flowers (mobsters were more "sensitive" back then and notorious for blatant displays of their "feminine side").

That is how St. Valentine's Day was really started: as a mob extortion scheme. So, as a holiday, I don't think it has much merit. Arbor Day had better motives than this evil day. There are several other negative aspects to Valentine's Day, some of which have very convincing statistics (which I made up) to provide scientific evidence supporting my research.

First of all, because of the blatant sexual themes promoted on Valentine's Day, sexually transmitted diseases increase by 77 percent on this day alone. Sexual activity as a whole jumps up a whopping 65 percent, except in Washington, DC., where the rate is much higher at 243 percent, especially in the near vicinity of the White House. Why don't we just rename the holiday "National Condom Advertisement Week," since that is what it is turn-

Affirmative action: An idea whose time has passed

We've all heard the horror stories about affirmative action and the negative effects it has had upon our society.

For those of you who don't know what affirmative action is, let me bring you up to speed. A federal mandate was passed some 30 years ago declaring that the federal government and any institution or business which received any sort of federal funds should ensure that a representative portion of minorities are included in the ranks of the agency's/business' employees. Affirmative action says this portion of minorities should roughly equal the percentage of minorities found in the national population.

That the intent of affirmative action was a noble one, I'll freely admit. But the implementation of the intent and reality came into conflict.

Instead of creating equality and fairness, affirmative action has had the effect of further dividing Americans and creating racial strife in the workplace. U.S. News & World Report had a lengthy story in last week's edition about the favored treatment minorities and females have received as a result of the federal law and the consequences of such treatment.

This is what the magazine has to say about affirmative action and its results: it didn't work and has probably created more problems than it has solved.

Minorities and women, according to statistics provided by the magazine, are still not fairly represented in the jobs which are held to be prestigious by Americans: doctors, lawyers, architects, scientists, etc. Additionally, minorities and women are still underpaid for those jobs they do hold as compared to the average white male's earnings. Black and Hispanic women have it the worst—earning just over 50 percent of what the average white male brings home.

Is this just? Obviously not. Affirmative action's original intent was to rectify these sorts of statistics, and while pay for minorities and women has gone up slightly since 1975, it has not increased enough (i.e. equal to that which white males are earning).

Affirmative action is not working. Instead of trying to create an artificial equality, why don't we try to build a real equality by providing the same quality of education to our children regardless of whether they live in the inner city or in rural areas?

It has long been known that the current educational system spends much more money per child in suburban and rural areas than it does on children in urban areas. Why? It's called property value, mis amigos.

Tax revenue for schools is based upon the assessed property value of the surrounding community—if the property value is low, so is the revenue for the schools.

Consequently, children living in impoverished inner-city areas receive a substandard education. Is this what we call equality? And most of us know that a large portion of the minority population occupy the inner cities.

We've all heard the story about the Caucasian male turned away from a school or a job even though he possessed higher qualifications or test scores or grades than the minority or female candidate who was hired or accepted.

A Hispanic activist, Linda Chavez, talking about affirmative action's effects on some minority students, said in the Feb. 13 issue of U.S. News & World Report: "You can't fool kids. They come into a university, they haven't had the preparation, and it's a very disheartening experience for some of them."

Hmmm... If we want equality—if minorities want equality, then why is everyone accepting these artificial standards to achieve it? Shouldn't we be asking for true equality where everyone has the same opportunity if they have the same qualifications? You can argue that there is still a lot of racism out there—and there is. But why are we following a quota system which puts unqualified people into jobs or schools for which they are unprepared? Shouldn't we instead be concentrating on preparing them to have the necessary skills?

Let's begin again by equalizing educational opportunities in our public school system. Then, and only then, can we claim to pursue true equality. Affirmative action is like cough medicine. As a friend told me, it treats the symptoms, not the disease.

And everyone has heard the tales of despair from lonely souls whose worst nightmare is Valentine's Day. Alone at home they sit, wishing that they had someone to send them gifts of affection.

The seriously forsaken loners often commit suicide, year after year (especially those who are unsuccessful). As a nation with such a horrible history of exclusion, do we really want to promote a holiday that deliberately leaves some people out? As an avowed liberal, I think not.

The United States was founded so that nobody would have to work for a living and no one would ever suffer, physically or emotionally. Celebrating Valentine's Day is a violation of everything America stands for!

Of course, there is an economic up side to Valentine's Day, especially for card companies, florists, candy manufacturers, and condom makers. But has anyone stopped to think about what this is doing to our planet? Greeting card companies are destroying our fragile ecosystem by their mass slaughter of trees to manufacture their products. Oh sure, the cards say "recycled paper" on the back of them, but who really believes that?

And by buying flowers, we are promoting the enslavement of plants who will be butchered for the sake of human "romance." I don't know how people can sleep at night with the thought of plants, chained up in greenhouses, just waiting for the knives to come...ghastly!

And candy manufacturers are just promoting bad health habits. Wouldn't giving heart-shaped celery sticks and bran muffins make more sense?

Valentine's Day was named after a brutal murder. It promotes the Mafia, sexual promiscuity, loneliness, exclusion, deforestation, plant abuse, and poor health habits. It should not be a holiday.

CELEBRATE •FROM PAGE 7

it, we just like to act tough. That happens when you spend too much time without a Valentine. I think most single people secretly like this holiday. Some of us even buy ourselves roses. Valentine's Days isn't just for lovers, it is for single people too.

So, for those of you who are a little angry about Valentine's Day, take heart (pun intended), there are reasons for all of us to celebrate this day.

Just because we don't have our own valentine, doesn't mean that next year we won't. And for those of you who do come in pairs, it's time to celebrate!

Letters to the Editor

"White" blues a misnomer

As a blues fan, I would feel as if I were doing this unique American music tradition a disservice if I did not clarify some historical issues which I discussed at ASUI's Open Mike Nite, and which were reported by Mr. Mike Maas.

"White 60's Blues," as I and Mr. Casterson were billed, refers to a period in the British music scene (roughly '63 to '69) in which young students such as Eric Clapton, Jimmy Page, Keith Richards, and Brian Jones (to name a few) embraced the blues as their own and gave birth to a "blues scene" in England.

It is a bitter irony that many young Americans had to be re-introduced to this unique musical form through these "blues ambassadors" from across the sea, as it wasn't socially acceptable for white kids to listen to "juke joint music."

If any "white suburban punks" had the blues "passed on" to them, it was more likely from the Yardbirds covering Muddy Waters' "I'm a Man" or Led Zeppelin doing Willie Dixon's "You Shook Me." As Muddy Waters once sang, "The blues had a baby and they named it Rock-n-Roll."

Also, thirty years prior to industry buzz words such as "grunge," distorted guitars were the mainstay of British blues. That was the point that I attempted to make last Saturday night, and I apologize if it did not come out clearer.

Finally, my name is spelled G-A-L-A-N-E-K.

Thank you for letting me clarify these points and thanks to Mr. Maas for his coverage of Open Mike Nite.

—Joe Galanek

Protesters wasting time

I am writing concerning the protesters who gather in front of Moscow's only abortion doctor's clinic. I will, in this letter, remain neutral on the subject. What I cannot remain neutral on nor tolerate are the double standards and hypocrisy I see.

In 1992 in Latah County, fifty-four people died of starvation and twelve froze to death. Is it a crueler "murder" to abort a fetus or let someone spend 1 1/2 months dying slowly of starvation or one week slowly freezing to death? Most of those were the elderly or impaired who could not make it to the food bank or meet for Energy Assistance.

And, most of the protesters are here on Daddy's money while driving Daddy's car. Why don't you take Daddy's car and deliver food from the food bank to those in need?

Why don't you take Daddy's car and drive those needing it to an Energy Assistance appointment? And why don't you use Daddy's car to gather food for the food bank?

—J. Charles Brown

Do warts have rights?

When considering the unborn, one should recollect the analogue of organic matter composing the human body, as that is what unborn are for pregnant people. In particular, warts become a piece of the person's body who has them and possess DNA unique to that of the person who has them, just like the unborn.

Now, it is known that the average human has a right to remove warts from themselves. So then, should every human have a right to remove any foreign matter from their person with whatever means at their disposal given their resource constraints, they will be affecting their body only.

Note: giving rights to unborn is like giving rights to all other matter comprising a person, and will then give rights to fat, hair, cancer, warts....

—Jesse M. Grune

MSAC hours of operation a joke

This letter is written in hopes that someone at UI will take notice. My problem is not with the MSAC per se, but rather with the computer lab that is located in the same building.

It's my understanding that the MSAC was established to help students with Math and Statistics classes by providing tutors at various times during the week. As far as I know, this is actually taking place.

However, I'm not sure I understand why "we" as students are paying a university employee to sit there for 40 hours a week just so we can be run out of the computer lab whenever she feels like it!

Numerous times this semester I have gone to the MSAC to work in the computer lab and found a note on the door saying, "The MSAC will be closing at (insert some ungodly time here) today. Sorry for the inconvenience."

Yeah right! First of all, why does the computer lab fall under her control? The last time I checked every other computer lab on campus is open roughly from 7:00 a.m. until anywhere from 10:00 p.m. to 2:00 a.m. There is a lock on the door going into room 109, the actual tutoring room, so why not lock that and leave the outside door open so students can work in the lab?

Another example worth citing is the time I was run out of there earlier this semester around 3:30 in the afternoon. Naturally, I was upset, since the building is supposed to stay open until 5 p.m., but as I was walking out, I realized why we were being run out. Debbie Beaver had decided that she needed to have a "pizza party" that afternoon in the MSAC, so she just "closed up shop" when it was convenient for her!

I think a change is in order here. The students on this campus are entitled to a decent working environment; one free from the constraints of pizza parties and lunch breaks!

If room 102 in the MSAC is not going to function like all the other computer labs on campus then what's the point? The computers in that room should be available from early morning to late evening; regardless of Debbie Beaver's pizza snacks!!

—Andy Hyde

Van Leer performs as Malcolm X

Jeremy Chase
Staff

Darryl Van Leer, a traveling performance artist, will star as Malcom X in "Rated: Malcom X" Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Borah Theater. Van Leer will be giving his character impression and delivering excerpts from two of Malcom X's more famous speeches.

Jenny Moore, speakers and lectures chair for ASUI Productions, describes Van Leer and his performances as very dynamic and emotional. "He takes different speeches Malcom X has given, and links them together in an hour and a half performance," she said.

Van Leer brings a wealth of experience with him for Thursday's program. He started his career on the Black Entertainment Network's Bobby Jones Gospel Show as a background vocalist, writer, and photographer.

From there, he has also appeared in national commercials and has done stand up comedy in such "hot spots" as The Comic Strip and Catch a Rising Star in New York. More recently, Van Leer appeared in the 1993 Penny Marshall film "A League of Their Own."

Moore said that Van Leer's performance will be a combination of two Malcom X speeches: "Message to the Grass Roots" and "The Ballot or the Bullet."

"Message to the Grass Roots," originally delivered Nov. 10, 1963, in Detroit, Michigan, deals with what Malcom X defines as a "true" revolution.

As he explains it, there is no such thing as a non-violent revolution, and that revolution is based on land, which is the basis for freedom, justice, and equality.

In "The Ballot or the Bullet," delivered in 1964, Malcom X attacks the United States Constitution for violating its promise of justice and equality for all people, as well as the human rights of Afro-Americans.

Moore, who saw Van Leer last year as Martin Luther King, Jr. at the Borah Theater, said that his performance was exceptional. "As an audience member last year, it was one of the most emotional things I've ever seen in my life," she said. "It was very powerful."

Van Leer's performance is all part of the University of Idaho's celebration of February as Black History Month. Moore said that Van Leer's performance was originally going to be "From the Gallows to the Gavel," which features Van Leer doing character impressions of several prominent black men in history. Due to this change in promos, though, tickets bought for Rated: Malcom X may still read "From the Gallows to the Gavel." Moore said that this mix-up is unintentional and isn't supposed to be misleading.

Tickets may be purchased at Ticket Express, located in the Student Union. Prices are $3 for UI students with their ID and $5 for everyone else. A brief intermission will be part of the program.

Questions may be directed to Jenny Moore at 885-6485 or during her office hours at the ASUI Productions office, located in the Student Union.

Her hours are Monday and Wednesday from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. and 4:30 to 5:30 p.m., and 3:30 to 6:30 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday.

Love comes in every language

International students share their customs

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Feb. 14, in the year of 270, St. Valentine was martyred for refusing to give up Christianity.

How he became a patron saint for the day of love still remains a mystery. Nevertheless, romance is celebrated around the world on Valentine's Day:

- In Bulgaria the day is called viti-culturist Day. The custom is based on the God of Dionysus and includes festivals and wine drinking.
- In Japan, the persistence of chocolate companies to introduce Valentine's Day paid off.

Women show their personal expressions by giving lots and lots of chocolate.

- Suleman Khan from Thailand/Pakistan says his custom is to give a card to the girls that are good friends, including his mom.
- In Nicaragua there is a public party where couples enjoy time together.
- One student from Guatemala said that a lot of flowers are given as well as gifts and cards.
- Dahono Haryanto, from Indonesia, says Valentine's Day is celebrated in Jakarta, the capital, with dating on the weekends.
- Mostafa Tabatabaei says his home country, Iran, doesn't celebrate Valentine's (but they celebrate the first day of spring as the new year).
- Yechiam Karu of Israel says his country doesn't celebrate Valentine's either, but if you want to date someone you invite them to drink coffee. If they don't like coffee, he says you're out of luck.
- Ishfaq Ahmed of Pakistan says that every day is in some way

Valentine's Day. Loving another is life, not art. He says that romance is not a matter of celebration but rather a personal and private phenomenon.

•An anonymous student from Canada said that Valentine's Day is very commercialized and is just another way for people to spend money on "silly stuff that either dies, makes you fat, or keeps the pulp and paper industry going."

If this is how you feel about Valentine's Day, there are plenty of reasons apart from romance to celebrate:

- The birthdays of Nicolaus Copernicus, Polish scientist and astronomist; Richard Allen, first black to be regularly ordained in the Methodist Church; or Anna Howard Shaw, American Suffrage leader. (Tomorrow is Susan B. Anthony's birthday—celebrate at the Women's Center.)
- Oregon Statehood Day!
- Literacy Day, honoring the campaign to wipe out illiteracy in Liberia.

If all else fails, buy yourself a box of chocolates and guiltlessly take a bite out of every single one.

Mauchley duo presents impressive performance

Joey Wellman
Staff

What do you get with four flying hands, 176 ivory keys and two Lionel Hampton School of Music piano professors? A spectacular performance full of energy and emotion.

Jay and Sandy Mauchley, duopianists, gave an impressive show of talent at their recital Feb. 9. Held in the recital hall, the room was full of anxious and devoted spectators of the local couple. This type of recital requires two pianos, set up opposite of each other and fitting together like a puzzle.

The husband-wife team always began with a smile and a nod. Before one of the pieces, Jay informed the audience that they like to play opposite of each other, so they may "fight at a safe distance."

First on the program was Mozart's Sonata in F major, K. 497, a majestic piece, ranking among the greatest orchestral and chamber compositions. For thirty minutes, the Mauchleys played a sweet and endearing Adagio; Allegro di molto movement, a lyrical and melodic Andante section and a technically spirited Allegro movement.

Next were three Slavonic Dances by Antonin Dvorak. The dance in G minor jumped off to a brilliant start with a playful, foot-tapping rhythm. The dance in E minor was a very passionate piece while the last dance in C Major was very rapid and spirited.

Perhaps the most impressive of all pieces was the last song before intermission—Tocatta, Op. 2, by Henryk-Mikolaj Gorecki. Full of dissonances, driving octaves and a couple of glissandos, there was constant rhythmic motion, keeping listeners alert with anticipation. The end literally brought the pianists flying off their benches.

Vocalise and It's Lovely Here, two romantic pieces by Sergei Rachmaninoff, displayed the Mauchleys emotional and expressive side. The recital ended with three movements from Petrouchka, by Igor Stravinsky.

Virtuosic and colorful, the pieces were dramatic, mystical, magical and animated.

After three call backs, the duo performed a lyrical encore piece. The Mauchleys have been performing together for 14 years. "As an undergrad, I played a lot of two-piano stuff," said Jay. "It interests me a lot and when I came here (and met Sandy), she was interested in it too," he said.

The Mauchleys have appeared in recitals throughout the United States, as well as with several orchestras. Popular adjudicators, clinicians and teachers, they have both been awarded the "Master Teacher Certificate" from the Music Teachers' National Association, and the "Alumni Award for Faculty Excellence" at the University of Idaho.

When asked what it is like to be a husband-wife team, there was a laugh in the background. "It is neat to be able to share something you enjoy," said Jay.

Sandy said that being married, you expect more of the other person. "It can be intense, but you learn to leave that at the end of rehearsals," she said.

Next fall, the Mauchleys plan to play in a few places, including Indiana and Texas. They also plan to explore new literature. If you missed this recital, keep your eyes open and be sure to attend the next one. This musical team should not be missed.

Students organize non-traditional groups for support

Jeffrey Albertson
Staff

Traditionally college students are in their late teens to early twenties and worry about life, tests, parties and the future.

A random cross section of any college class these days will show how that is changing. College students will always have the same worries, goals and desires, but the average age of college students is expanding. With the job market becoming more and more competitive many people are leaving their current jobs to return to schooling and a chance at a better career.

Enter the non-traditional student. Average age: 26 and older.

Dennis Stone is precisely that. Stone, who previously worked as a taxi driver in San Jose, California, decided that school was the best place to invest in his future.

Having been away from school for so long made the transition back a little scary, Stone said. In order to combat that, Stone, along with several students he met in a freshmen transition class at the University of Idaho, decided to put together a group specifically aimed towards non-traditional students.

The group has already held two meetings and is just getting organized.

"We decided that we need a place to meet, talk and get to know each other," Stone said. He also said that the main idea behind the group is to get acquainted with people who are similar in age and who share the same background and experience.

So far the group has held two meetings, one in the Student Union and one Friday at the Beanery in Moscow. A regular meeting place has yet to be established.

The group has distributed flyers around campus in trying to solicit people to come out. Eventually the members hope to get together and not only help with the transition back to school but talk about techniques for coping with job, family, and school as well as a chance to socialize.

"(School) is the best thing that has happened to me," Stone said, despite the fact that he acknowledges it is more pressure than any other job.

The Nontraditional Student Association was formed to help deal with that pressure. If interested call 885-1990 to get on a mailing list and find out times for the next meetings.

Environmental awareness through art

Amy Ridenour
Lifestyles Editor

Has anyone ventured near the University of Idaho Library Plaza since Sunday? If they have, they probably noticed something a bit unusual.

As part of Earth Day 1995, Andrea Henkles and Al Wildey, two University of Idaho graduate students in the Art Department, have designed a temporary public sculpture that will be completed on Earth Day, April 21.

"A zillion people have been stopping by and looking at it," says Wildey.

Last Sunday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., four on-site sculptures were constructed where they will remain until Earth Day, when the rest of the construction will be completed.

The final construction will be done with help from volunteers throughout the university and the Moscow community.

The sculpture is made from milk jugs attached to a framework of the same material, but weighing approximately 1,000 pounds. The milk jugs are provided by Moscow Recycling.

The first installation is comprised of 1,000 milk jugs, each one hand washed by the artists. According to Wildey, the jugs had some old milk in them and they feared that "the smell would drive people away."

There are several reasons that plastic milk jugs were selected for use: the material can be re-used and re-recycled, it withstands inclement weather, and the material is readily available.

"The Tower of Babel" will be completed over several weeks' time, with the final touches on Earth Day and will appear as a "ruin" to create the illusion that the tower was recently excavated. The first two installations will change, but on March 12, "Running Fence" will be installed and this will actually become a part of the final tower. The next installation will be in two weeks, changing the existing structure.

The Library Plaza was chosen as the site for several logistic and metaphorical reasons.

The area is physically and conceptually ideal, and is accessible to both the community and the campus. This reflects the idea that "in order to resolve historical, and environmental, and culture conflicts, we must arrive at a 'common ground,'" according to a press release.

Through art, the Tower addresses many issues that the media discusses frequently such as multiculturalism, public artwork, and problems in the environment. This project is also presented to open our minds to issues such as consumption and recycling, collaboration and community, art and solutions.

The following is a timeline for the installations. Each installation was inspired by other artists and their "earthworks":

- Feb. 12 "Spiral Jetty," original by Robert Smithson.
- Feb. 26 "Cleansing of Bad Names," inspired by Muriel Euccelese.

- March 12 "Running Fence," Christo.
- March 26 "Arch," Andy Goldsworthy.
- April 15 "Tower of Babel."
- April 21 Earth Day, "Tower" is completed.
- April 28 Deconstruction of

"Tower."
This project is designed to involve the campus and community. Anyone who is interested in participating in the phenomenal project should contact Al Wildey at 883-3230 or Andrea Henkels at 885-5614 for more information.

Guitar trio performs a variety of music

Mike Maas
Staff

The Falla Guitar Trio entertained the University of Idaho Friday night with a program ranging from J.S. Bach to jazz.

The trio, named after guitarist/composer Manuel de Falla, is comprised of Dusan Bogdanovic, Terry Graves, and Kenton Youngstrom. Bogdanovic is an accomplished composer as well as guitarist; two of the compositions performed were his.

Friday evening began with a fast-and-nasty Spanish piece written by Manuel de Falla, "Miller's Dance." The ensemble was quite at home in any style or genre, but they did seem most at home playing traditional Spanish material.

The second piece performed was J.S. Bach's Sonata in G, all four movements. Terry Graves introduced the piece describing how the group adapted it to three guitars. Two of the guitars each played one of the two original melody lines, while the third covered the continuo, which was "everything else," the bass line and harpsichord parts. It was an effective performance, rendering Bach slightly soulful in some places, something rather difficult to do.

Graves and Youngstrom performed the next three dances by Enrique Granados. Again, the two were comfortable and played well. Especially impressive was the dynamic contrast they employed, jumping from a brusque, loud sound to an almost inaudible level.

Bogdanovic rejoined the group for the next piece, Fandango by Padre Antonio Soler, a Baroque-era composer. As Youngstrom pointed out before they performed it, though, it's unlike most baroque pieces in its treatment of rhythm and melody. That is, it was a bit too funky and melodic to be a Baroque composition. The piece was basically improvisational in nature, except that the improvisations were written out. It featured much call-and-answer play between two of the guitars, with the third playing the repeated bass-line fragment that permeated the entire piece. The fragment was very repetitious, and this piece tended to drag on, but the ensemble clearly enjoyed the interaction it employed.

After intermission, the trio performed the first of two Bogdanovic pieces, the Eastern-inspired Pastorale. It contrasted with his decidedly Western Three Straws, performed later in the evening.

Samuel Barber's Excursions was next, arranged by Youngstrom. It was divided into three movements, each exploring a different American genre of music. The ensemble wasn't sure exactly what was intended for the first movement, though; it sounded like a mixture of folk-song types. The second was definitely a blues, complete with "boogie-woogie bass line." The third was a hoe-down/Appalachia inspired work.

This American theme continued into the next piece, Bogdanovic's Three Straws. Performed by Youngstrom and Bogdanovic only, it was three movements. The first and third were both based on a famous folk melody, and the composer treated the theme uniquely both times.

Before the ensemble ended with another piece by their namesake, Manuel de Falla, they performed two jazz selections. The first was written by Youngstrom, appropriately called Blues in G. The group was humorously enjoyable playing these pieces, getting fairly cheesy in some parts, especially Youngstrom when soloing.

For an encore, the trio played a Spanish song that segued into Chick Corea's "Spain." Apparently, the chorale-like introductory piece was the inspiration for Corea when he wrote "Spain." This was arguably the best performance of the evening, demonstrating the trio's skills very effectively, and the guitar timbre well-complemented the composer's idea. The Falla Guitar Trio are residents of the University of Redlands in southern California, and have made a number of recordings on the Concord Records label. In addition to the concert, while the trio was here at UI they held a master class at the school of music as well as presentations to the students of the Genesee School District.

SUGAR RAY LEMONADE AND BROWNIES

No—it is not a boxer. Well, yes it is, but not this time. There's a new force in the world today, the force of a new band called, drum roll please, Sugar Ray.

A blend of Anthrax with a dash of the Beastie Boys brings to you the sound of Sugar Ray, which brings a variety of music to the industry.

Sugar Ray's first song, "Snug Harbor" starts out in a disco style with the weird sounds merging into a heavy sounding guitar playing by the band. It sounds like the Village People meets the Beastie Boys and Anthrax.

The songs on the album range from rage music to Beastie Boys style rap. The second song "Rhyme Stealer" sounds a little like Rage Against the Machine. The third song "Iron Mic" is a revamp of the 70's disco. The song is complete with the single chords and special sounds which disco can only claim until now.

Sugar Ray is a melting pot with their album Lemonade and Brownies, which has the flavor of disco, metal, rage and punk-rap music. Their music can bring out many things. The lyrics really don't mean as much as the titles of the songs, but the band can at least play music. At first it sounds like they are having fun until they turn their disco beat into a nice piece of metal, pounding it into a sharp point.

The most humorous song on the album would be "Danzig Needs A Hug." I would have to agree with the band, Danzig does need a nice little hug.

Sugar Ray is definitely a band with talent. I don't know about the name of the band, but the music is great. It's hard at one point while at the next it is bringing you back to a bad John Travolta flick. It is difficult to find a band out there that can actually wander aimlessly into different genres and do it successfully.

Yet, Sugar Ray does it. Sugar Ray is up on the release list this year from Atlantic records. Being on Atlantic means that the listener will be able to find their album at the local music store in the mall or downtown. This album would even be nice to listen to while you're on a road trip.

Raptosh to read poems

Poet Diane Raptosh will be reading in the Law School courtroom Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Raptosh was raised in Nampa and attended the College of Idaho (renamed as Albertson College of Idaho), where she now teaches, and the University of Michigan.

Being Italian in Nampa was not conducive to ethnic identity, but visits from and to grandparents in Detroit kept her from missing out on it completely.

Her most recent book, West of Now, includes poems in two distinct sections. The first, "Place Names," examines the effect the west had on her life and the lives of others. It involves the relationship between place and person.

The second, "Blood Ties," focuses on her search for understanding of her ethnicity through memory, study and examination. The edge between history and imagination blurs in memories of family gatherings.

One of the promising new Idaho Poets, Raptosh is well worth an hour's listen.

Heart Disease: a women's problem

Although many women consider heart disease a man's problem, heart disease is the number one killer of women in the United States, accounting for 28 percent of all deaths. Furthermore, the death rate from heart attacks for African-American women is about twice that of Caucasian women. Although considerable progress has been made in reducing the incidence of cardiovascular disease, it is clear that much remains to be done to achieve the goal of markedly decreasing the morbidity and mortality associated with heart disease in women.

It is now established that high density lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol, the so-called "good" cholesterol, is a strong predictor of cardiovascular disease in women.

According to the newest research findings, women with low HDL levels are at the highest risk of heart disease mortality, while women with high HDL levels appear to have a strong protection from disease. Accordingly, women are now being urged to test and monitor their HDL levels and to take steps to increase HDL cholesterol. These steps include maintaining a healthy weight, being physically active and avoiding smoking.

Based on new scientific data, it has been documented that even regular, non-strenuous walking can increase HDL levels by 10 percent while losing as few as five pounds can increase HDL cholesterol by 2-3 percent.

The Student Health Services can help you achieve improved health. Have your cholesterol levels checked periodically. Attend the "Quit Tobacco" group to end your tobacco habit or quit on your own, make an appointment with the nutritionist to reduce body weight and learn a way of living for improved health. Add 30 minutes of brisk walking to your daily schedule three to five times a week.

The Idaho Vandals stumbled, but stayed in the postseason race over the weekend, picking up a home split in NCAA Big Sky women's basketball action.

SATURDAY

Mindy Rice and Ari Skorpik keyed a late Idaho run and propelled the Vandals to a 75-61 victory over Big Sky cellar dweller Idaho State.

Idaho State's Stacy Nelson buried a rebound putback to get the Bengals within two at 59-57 with five minutes left in the game, but it was all Vandals from there.

Skorpik had seven points and Rice six in a 16-2 Idaho run through the final five minutes.

Idaho's Cathy Payne drilled a 19-foot three-pointer from the top of the key to give Idaho a 43-41 edge at the 13:07 mark of the second half. Idaho never trailed again.

The game was close throughout the first half as neither team led by more than four points, but the Vandals turned up the heat in the half two outscoring the Bengals 44-26.

"I wasn't real pleased with our effort in the first half," Idaho coach Julie Holt said. "But in the second half it was excellent. It was a great team effort."

Skorpik and freshman guard Kelli Johnson paced Idaho with 16 points apiece, while junior center Mindy Rice added 15 points and ten rebounds. Junior forward Kerri Wykes added a solid effort as well with nine points and nine boards.

"This was a big win for us," Holt said. It keeps us alive in the Big Sky Tournament race. But you have to go one game at a time."

FRIDAY

Boise State could have won a wrestling match against Idaho as the Bronco tag team of Michelle Schultz and Verna Guild proved too much to overcome for the Vandals in a 72-68 BSU win.

Schultz, a 5-foot 9-inch guard and the Big Sky's leading scorer (18 ppg), went off for 29 points Saturday while BSU's 6-5 center Guild converted on countless lob passes to pump in 21 points. The duo accounted for 70 percent of the Boise State offense and provided a solid inside-outside combination that withstood Idaho's relentless defensive pressure.

Schultz canned two free throws to put the Broncos up 70-64 with 2:05 remaining. The points would prove to be the winning margin.

Rice buried a layup and a 17-foot jumper to put the Vandals within two at 70-68 with 1:22 left in regulation, but with Idaho needing only a defensive stop UI forward Shannon Anderson fouled Schultz in the backcourt. The Boise State junior knocked in two more free throws and forced the Vandals into a two possession score and foul strategy. Idaho couldn't connect at the offensive end and Boise State couldn't lose.

A full-court trap by the Vandals forced countless Boise turnovers in the first half and gave Idaho a solid first half cushion. Rice nailed an eight-foot jumper to give the Vandals their largest lead at 39-22, but the Broncos whittled the advantage down to 12 by halftime.

"We were disappointed at halftime. We didn't do a good job against the press," Boise State coach June Daugherty said. "But give Idaho credit. They put some full-court, three-quarter court and half court presses against us. It was tough."

Idaho State's Nicole Davis (44) swats the shot of Idaho's Kelli Johnson (5) while ISU's Holly Togiaia (35) stands tall. The blocked shot wasn't enough as the Vandals pulled out the 75-61 triumph.

The Broncos went on a 19-5 run to take a 49-47 lead six minutes into the second half.

"I think part of the letdown was we got a little nervous and a little scared," Holt said. "We aren't used to having big leads and as they got closer we lost our confidence."

Rice drilled another eight-foot jumper with 6:09 remaining to give the Vandals their last lead at 60-57.

Rice led the Vandals with 28 points and added eight rebounds. Skorpik, who had hit on all three of her first half trey attempts made only one field goal in the second half and finished 4-18 from the field for 15 points.

"Not only did Michelle Schultz have a monster game offensively, but I thought she was the difference in shutting down Skorpik in the second half," Daugherty said.

Idaho's road woes continue in southern Idaho

Ben Carr
Staff

Idaho went into last weekend's games thinking playoffs. With four weeks remaining before the Big Sky men's basketball tournament the Vandals southern Idaho vacation didn't go at all as planned.

SATURDAY

Idaho went into Pocatello determined to end ISU's 13 game home-winning streak and shut down the Big Sky's second-leading offense as well as its top scorer, forward Jim Potter who enlightened the Kibbie Dome with 21 points in UI's previous meeting with the Bengals.

With time running out in the game and Idaho down by one, Mark Leslie threw up a 3-pointer that was well short of the rim. The air ball was rebounded by Chad Coates, but Coates missed a layin at the buzzer and ISU won 70-69.

"We made big plays tonight. Last night we gave away a game," Idaho coach Joe Cravens said. "Tonight we just couldn't get a break."

The Vandals did have their chances. Harry Harrison canned a pair of free throws with 3:06 left on the clock to put Idaho up 69-65, but Idaho State's Lorenzo Watkins buried two free throws 20 seconds later and Shabaka Lands nailed a baseline trey at the 1:48 mark for the final margin.

A Harrison free throw with 4:57 remaining in the second half gave the Vandals their largest lead at 65-58. The free throw capped a 12-4 Idaho run, but ISU finished the game with a 12-4 run of its own and the win.

Nate Gardner started the first half hot for the Vandals. The 6-foot 8-inch center scored six of the Vandals' first eight points, but finished the contest with just 11 points and seven rebounds.

Despite poor shooting from the three-point line (2-8), Idaho guard Mark Leslie was able to put up 18 points. The 6-foot point-guard also contributed nine assists on the game, well above his 3.5 assists per game average. Ben Johnson and Shawn Dirden each chipped in 13 points, on a combined 9 of 19 shooting from the floor.

Overall, Idaho improved its play from Friday evening. The Vandals decreased their turnovers from 19 to 14 and shot a solid 15 of 17 from the free-throw line.

Potter finished with 16 points, and Donnell Morgan finished with 15 for ISU.

Comeback kid makes rebounding look easy

Damon Barkdull
Staff

Injuries can be tough, but recuperating is even harder.

If anybody knows this, it's University of Idaho basketball player Kerri Wykes.

Wykes suffered a devastating knee injury only five games into the 1993-94 season. The knee injury was especially hard for Wykes, because she had done so well in her freshmen and sophomore seasons.

Wykes as a freshmen pulled down 29 rebounds, and shot 100 percent from the free-throw line. In her sophomore year, the Coeur d'Alene native opened the season with ten rebounds against Nevada, and pulled down 31 rebounds against Big Sky Conference foes.

Anyone who suffers from a knee injury has a difficult time coming back, but for Wykes, rehabilitation was just another day on the job.

"I spent some time in the gym, and through a lot of hard work I was able to make myself stronger and put myself in better shape," Wykes said.

"For Kerri to come back ahead of schedule from her knee injury shows her character and how hard she works," UI women's basketball coach Julie Holt said.

The worst thing for Wykes was sitting on the bench.

"It was really hard, because I saw my team struggling, and I knew I couldn't do anything about it," Wykes said.

This year, Wykes has made her comeback, leading the Vandals with 131 total rebounds.

Rebounding has always been Wykes' specialty, and 5-foot 11-inch forward says that she has never been much of a scorer.

"All through high school I was the designated rebounder, and I never got the same credit that the scorers did...I think that the ability to rebound can be underrated," Wykes said.

In her senior year at Coeur d'Alene High School, Wykes led her team in rebounds and helped her team to an Idaho State Championship in the 1991-92 season. Since then, her parents have moved from Coeur d'Alene to Minnesota, and Wykes has considered moving out there to teach.

"My parents really want me to move out to Minnesota with them, but I don't know about that. I wouldn't mind teaching in Oregon, because I have been there several times and enjoy the area," Wykes said.

Majoring in Elementary Education, Wykes does want to become a teacher, but doesn't want to think about working right now, as she still has a couple years of college left.

When Wykes isn't physically punishing people to get a rebound, she takes time to tee it up at the local golf course.

"I like to play golf, it's a hard game, and my dad got me into it when I was a little kid," Wykes said.

For now, Wykes is content that her team struggled early on, and she knows the potential damage her team could do next year.

"This year hasn't looked so good...we're struggling, but we've gotten much better—and we're picking up wins here and there," Wykes said, "with the way we have improved, we will win the Big Sky Conference next year."

Wykes' statement may be bold, but her confidence is up since the new arrival of Coach Holt.

"I used to never have any confidence, but Julie took me aside and helped me out a lot," Wykes said.

"I'm really impressed with her work ethic, she just needed a little guidance," Holt said.

Wykes believes that the work ethic she gets from basketball can help in her everyday life.

"Basketball has taught me the meaning of working together as a team, and conducting proper work ethic," Wykes said, "and these fundamentals that I've learned from basketball could help me out when I get a job."

Some of the greatest athletes in professional sports have not come back success-

Bart Stageberg

Vandal forward Kerri Wykes has been an opponent's nightmare on the glass. The junior leads Idaho in rebounding and is fifth among all Big Sky players.

fully from knee injuries, but the Comeback Kid has certainly proved her point: that hard work can get you anywhere in life.

Come verdict time the Juice will be loose

I know you are sick of hearing about the O.J. Simpson trial, but I have a little different view of it than the rest of the world.

O.J. Simpson will be set free one way or another, so this whole trial is a waste of money for everyone involved. First of all O.J. is innocent, and even if you think he isn't, it must be proven beyond a doubt that he is guilty and that is trying to prove the impossible.

Simpson, possibly the greatest running back that has ever lived (Until Emmitt Smith, of course) has too many things going for him to live the rest of his life in a prison cell. He is a very generous man that has devoted much of his time and money to charity. He is also a highly respected man in society both as an athlete and as a human being.

Many people say he is guilty just so they can see a highly influential athlete go down in flames. I'm sorry to tell you people this, but that will never happen.

If O.J. did it, why would he have left his hat and the infamous bloody glove for the police to find without looking any further than the crime scene? Heck, why didn't he just sit on the bodies and wait for the cavalry to come and arrest him at the sight? Why would he leave a trail of blood in "THE WHITE FORD BRONCO" that we have all come to know and love, and if he's going to do that, why not leave a business card in Nicole's right hand? Why would he paint the carpet of his home red with blood? He may as well tattoo the word "guilty" across his forehead. Ready for an answer? O.J. Simpson is not a dumb man and he is a little brighter than to play pin the tail on O.J. with the police.

OK, for my next critics who say he acted in rage, think about this: how long were Nicole and Ron Goldman dating? If it was an act of rage, wouldn't it have happened sometime before June 12 of last year? If there is one thing that I agree with, it is that O.J. was a jealous man, but when you have a wife that looks like that you'd better be a little protective.

Whether it's DNA or the bloody glove, too many mistakes were made in this case. Someone of this stature, if planning to kill his ex-wife, would not leave a trail leading to his front door—it would be too obvious. Act of rage is one thing, but an act of stupidity is another. Even a blind man would try and cover his trail and a blind man probably wouldn't even know where his trail begins. So for a man that can see just fine and is very smart at the same time, not to cover his tracks means only one thing: HE WAS FRAMED!

If O.J. did kill Nicole and Ron and if he did do it out of rage, he still would have had to have the time to do it. With the county coroner playing with the time of death like a pinball machine and the dog barking at thirty different times, OJ would have to have been Father Time himself to pinpoint the time of death. So once again O.J. is in the clear, because his driver picked him up somewhere near the time of death that everyone keeps trying to exactly pinpoint.

If there is one thing that O.J. is guilty of, it is just being O.J. Simpson. WHEN he is found innocent, and WHEN he is set free to start his life again, he will have the Rhesus Monkey on his back labeling him as the man that got off because he had money and the stardom to go along with it.

The fact still remains: the reason O.J. will get off is because he is innocent—it has nothing to do with his stardom, or his money.

FRIDAY

The biggest story before Friday's game against BSU was the personnel changes the Broncos have been forced to deal with. Boise State was playing without seven-foot center John Coker, who is out for the next 2-3 weeks with an ankle injury. The Broncos did get starting guard Damon Archibald back, who had been out with a knee injury for the past month.

Idaho began the game with a spectacular offensive showing that kept the 10,613 Bronco fans in attendance quiet for most of the first half. Idaho outscored BSU 36-24 before the intermission, including a 13-2 run in the opening minutes of the game that gave Idaho the lead for the remainder of the half.

The Vandals took advantage of the absence of BSU's Coker, the leading shot blocker in the Big Sky. Of Idaho's 36 first half points, 24 came from within fifteen feet of the basket.

Idaho was plagued by poor free-throw shooting in the first half (2 of 7 from the line) but still managed to maintain the lead. In the second half, Idaho's dismal charity shooting sank to new depths as the Vandals finished the game shooting 5 of 17 from the line.

Coach Joe Cravens was dismayed by Idaho's inability to score the easy points.

"You can't win when you shoot 30 percent from the free-throw line," Cravens said. "You look at several key plays and that's the difference in the game."

Other key notes include Idaho's 19 turnovers, compared to 10 for the Broncos.

A controversial non-call by the officials may have changed the complexion of the game with 4:37 left. Idaho's Dirden drove the lane and put a lay-up high off the glass when BSU guard Sherman Morris appeared to slap the ball off the backboard keeping it from going in, the apparent goaltend went uncalled and prevented Idaho from tying the game.

Leslie came on strong for Idaho and scored 21 points on 8 for 17 shooting, including three 3-pointers. Dirden added his own 15 points but was only 3 of 11 in the second half missing several easy jump shots late in the game.

Idaho couldn't overcome the four point lead BSU had in the last minutes of the half despite a late layin by Ben Johnson. Dirden also missed a late 3-pointer to end the game 68-64.
