Instate student fees may rise $67

Shelby Beck

University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zinser plans to recommend that the State Board of Education raise student fees by 8.66 percent next semester. The increase is contingent upon an ongoing review that will culminate at a March 16 meeting with students.

Zinser's office, in conjunction with Provost John Yost, Vice President Jerry Wallace and Vice President Hal Godwin, released a memorandum outlining the details of the tuition and fee increase proposal Wednesday.

Under the proposal, the base fee for full-time undergraduates would increase by $67 to make a total of $841 per semester.

A $50 matriculation fee constitutes the largest portion of the fee increase. Only $32 of this $50 fee is needed by UI administrators to balance the 1996 fiscal year operating budget that is likely to pass the state legislature. This year the legislature chose not to use money from the 5.4 percent increase in student tuition and fees last year to fund the operating budget for 1996, which created a shortfall of $1.3 million.

"For us to balance the budget based upon what the legislature will be passing will require us to utilize all of the new revenue that we projected we would receive by virtue of the non-resident tuition increases and would require a matriculation fee of about $32," Fenning said.

Wilson said administrators have told him that the remaining $18 is needed by several different departments, but the decision has not been made as to how the funds will be distributed.

"They all have needs to be addressed. The question is which will pull priority over the others," Wilson said.

The increase also includes a $12 facility fee of which eight dollars will fund the planning and design of the University Center; the four dollars remaining will go to the development of a student recreation facility. Presently, the administration is conducting a survey to determine the extent of student interest in the recreation facility.

"The marvelous thing about the survey is that not only does it identify substantial student interest or lack thereof, but, by virtue of how detailed the survey is, it gives a really good sense of kind of a first cut at what the functional needs would be," said Robert Fenning, assistant vice president of Budget and Planning.

The $4 fee depends on student need and support of the recreation facility. Should students express that they don't want the student recreation facility, the fee will drop off.

"I intend to hold them to that, too," ASUI President Sean Wilson said of the possibility that the $4 fee may be canceled.

A separate $5 increase under the proposal will be divided between Student Union Operations and Programs, the ASUI, and Student Accident Insurance.

The administration also proposed to increase the full-time graduate and professional sur-

Faculty pay raises will wait one more year

Russ Wright

University of Idaho faculty will have to wait one more year to find out if the legislature is willing to pay them what they're worth.

Bonnie Hulstrand, Faculty Council Chair, recently visited Boise to meet with Governor Phil Batt's director of the Division of Financial Management.

"We said we would like to go before the legislature with the Hay Group study to see if we could get them to agree with us," said Hulstrand.

The Hay Group completed a study in December which showed professors throughout Idaho lagging nearly 24 percent behind the average pay for professors at similar universities.

Batt's director said there would be no money available this year to begin bringing Idaho's professors up to the average, said Hulstrand.

"We were a little discouraged, but we're not giving up," Hulstrand said. "This is going to stay on a very active burner until next January."

The lobbying effort by faculty members will spend the next year laying the groundwork for getting a stronger endorsement from the Idaho State Board of Education. The endorsement received this year by the Board was not as strongly worded as many had hoped it would be.

"We were terribly disappointed," said Nick Gier, philosophy professor and president of the Idaho Federation of Teachers. "Next year we ought to organize ourselves more vigorously."

Part of the problem, as Gier sees it, is the Idaho legislature's refusal to allow teachers to "bargain collectively" for pay and other benefits.

"If we had legislation which would allow us to bargain collectively, there would be a lot more interest in supporting the lobbying effort," said Gier.

Roy Mosman, president of the Board of Education and local attorney, refused to comment on the faculty pay endorsement by the Board.

ASUI President Sean Wilson, however, strongly supports the attempt to bring faculty salaries up to average.

Harassment debated in residence hall forum

Christine Ermey

Nearly 100 people filled the Gault/Upham Party Room Tuesday night to hear University of Idaho law Professors Elizabeth Brandt and Jim MacDonald debate legal issues surrounding the harassment of gay students in the residence halls.

Earlier this semester, flyers posted by a gay student on an Upham Hall bulletin board advertising the Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Association were torn down and replaced with flyers reading, "The MEN of Upham hall do not want or need Faggots in our hall."

"If you're going to post signs in a public forum or public place, there is a level at which the law says that you have to be ready to be insulted," said Brandt. "Unfortunately if you're going to get involved in public discourse you're going to have to have a thick skin."

MacDonald said that the rules for a free speech forum such as posting flyers on a bulletin board should be examined in this scenario. "It's not criminal behavior," he said. "The word faggot is not an unprotected word. It's not legally obscene. It's not directed to anybody, it's not an in your face fighting word."

Moderator Bruce Wollenberg, director of the UI Campus Christian Center, posed the scenario of a student posting materials on her residence hall door—which are offensive to other members of the hall—and finding them torn down.

"This is different from being generically insulted on a bulletin board," said Brandt. "This is entering someone's personal space. This is closer to being illegal because it is more threatening."

MacDonald disagreed by saying that perhaps the residence hall doors are in such close proximity to each other that people living on the hall could not look away day after day.

"There may be a problem with what the law calls a captive audience," he said. "It's one thing to do your own thing and develop your own personality and be interested in your own freedom when people who find you offensive can turn their heads. But there may be a problem when day after day, people can't realistically turn their heads, and are forced to live with this offensive material."

MacDonald added, "If you don't like the speech on someone's door, put speech on your own door to counteract it. The antidote for speech that we don't like is speech of our own. If you don't like what someone else is saying, don't shut them up. Toot your own horn."

A member of the audience asked if the First Amendment would be violated if a flyer was posted in a hall that was inaccurately representing the hall.

MacDonald answered, "You have a pure constitutional right not only to speak inaccurately, but short of fraud, you can lie, distort, or be as stupid as you want."

Idaho legislature approves public school funding

Justin Oliver Ruen
Staff

The Idaho Legislature passed a key element of Governor Phil Batt's 1996 budget Monday. Public schools received a total of $697 million in state appropriations, up 7 percent from this year's budget. Senate Bill 1223 must be passed in the Senate before it is sent to the Governor's office for signature into law.

Both Latah County representatives Maynard Miller, R-Moscow and James "Doc" Lucas, R-Moscow voted against the bill. "We were forced to pass a property-tax reduction bill, which took $40 million out of the maintenance and operating funds for public schools," Rep. Miller said.

The property-tax cut has put the fiscal squeeze on Idaho legislators. "We've cut nearly everything in order to make up for the loss in revenue," Miller said. "When we took the $40 million away, it had to come out of higher education and vocational training."

"I agreed with the appropriation bill," Miller said, "but I felt that in the larger and long-term sense it was the wrong way to do it."

According to Miller, 56 local districts have already approved overrides and levies in order to offset revenue lost from property taxes. "What this amounts to is a tax increase. If the local levies are greater than the property-tax relief, they will result in tax increases," Miller said.

Public schools, higher education and vocational training will consume a total of 70 percent of the 1996 budget. The $697 million approved is only for public schools, and does not include higher or vocational education.

Due to the cuts, teachers won't be seeing any sizable pay increases. "This year we are providing 5 percent increases for state workers, but only 1-2 percent pay raises for teachers," Miller said.

Efforts by Rep. Ken Robison, D-Boise, to amend the bill failed. Robison's amendment would have increased public school aid with any budget surplus encountered over the summer. An extra $10 million would have been allotted, with half going toward school funding and half for school construction.

According to Rep. Miller, the bill will likely clear the Senate after which it will be signed by Governor Batt.

Senate Bill 1223 was not the only education-funding legislation to pass the House Monday. According to Rep. James "Doc" Lucas, House Bill 183 puts half of the $7 million generated from the state cigarette tax into juvenile justice and the other toward drug-addiction prevention programs. Originally, all revenue generated from the 10 cent per pack tax was put toward drug-prevention education.

Lucas voted against the measure. "Addiction is directly related to the amount of time a child spends alone. Just talking to them about not using drugs probably works if they have a good, functional family, but too many don't. Those are the people who end up bankrupting the country," Lucas said. "When you send the money to the local schools, they can do whatever they need to in terms of (drug-prevention) programs," which translates into effective prevention, which in turn means lower taxes, said Lucas.

The measure will now go before the Senate. If passed it will be sent to Governor Batt for signature, but if rejected, all money from the cigarette tax would remain dedicated to substance-abuse education. "There might be time to fight this on the Senate side," Lucas said.

The effects of House Bill 183 will certainly be felt locally. "We know that any time you have young people involved in positive activities, that they have less time to get involved in things that are negative," said Moscow Jr. High School Principal Alan Lee.

"We've tried not to preach, but to create programs that interests the students," Lee said. "I'm sure any reduction in funds would hurt our programs significantly."

Senate meeting cancelled, ECC bill postponed

Melica Johnson
Staff

Vice President Damon Darakjy canceled the ASUI Senate meeting Wednesday night, after President Sean Wilson disclosed recent findings on the Early Childhood Center bill to the senate.

"With as much homework that has been done, it still continues to unfold and unfold," Wilson said, who has been hearing a lot of conflicting information on the subject.

Wilson met with some students from the Early Childhood Center Wednesday afternoon and discovered that some of the assumptions the ASUI had made on various ramifications of the bill were false.

It was this information which led Wilson to suggest calling off the meeting.

According to Wilson, the two issues which are being discussed are the welfare of students and the stability of the center.

Senator Scott Wimer said that one thing the senate is trying to do currently is "to sort through and find out what the real issue is."

After becoming more informed about some aspects of the issue, Wilson suggested the senate first meet with Bruce Pitman, dean of students, before making a deciding vote. Pitman, who oversees the ECC, will meet with the senate before the meeting next Wednesday to answer any questions the senators have.

"Especially for an expenditure of this size, to not consult Pitman would be very unwise," Wilson said.

"We want to make sure we don't deal with emotion, but with fact," Wilson said.

Wimer felt it was necessary to call off the meeting because no one had exactly accurate information. "The people that could give us the accurate information weren't there."

Wilson isn't afraid of putting the issue off long enough to make sure everyone is informed enough to make an educated vote on the ECC. "If the heat comes, so be it," Wilson said.

The bill was scheduled to be discussed and perhaps voted on this Wednesday.

FORUM FROM PAGE 1

Another audience member asked if the word "faggot" was considered hate speech and what the definition of hate speech was.

"There is not anti-hate speech legislation in Idaho," said Brandt. "So far in the U.S., nobody has been able to draft a piece of hate speech legislation which could survive constitutional scrutiny. In Idaho we have the malicious harassment statute which cannot place sanctions on speech until it rises to the level of personal threat. Our First Amendment acts as a restriction to criminalize that kind of speech."

MacDonald said, "I have the constitutional right to hate you and tell the world I hate you, but I shouldn't go to jail for it."

Argonaut Interview

Zinser reflects on her past, looks to future of UI

Michelle Kalbeitzer
Staff

Argonaut: What part of the United States are you from and where did you attend school?

Zinser: Well I was born in Pennsylvania but moved to California when I was two, so I consider my home northern California. I went through school at Palo Alto which is in the Stanford community. My dad was involved in business there and with new technology electronic companies so I grew up in what they call Silicon Valley. It was a research intensive kind of environment.

Argonaut: Did you always envision becoming a president at a university?

Zinser: (laugh) No, no. I went to school at Stanford and went into nursing initially. Then I worked on my masters in nursing and taught at the University of California. I worked there in teaching and then I went back and got my doctorate at Berkeley in educational psychology.

At that point I took a job at the University of Washington in Seattle. I worked in the context of the WAMI program. WAMI actually began in 1971 as a concept of how to turn the University of Washington into a four state region medical school. Just about a year before I got involved they had conceived the program. It was so creative and novel that we got some federal funding to set that up on a contract basis with what was then Health Education and Welfare. It was a wonderful contract to help get the program started, and I joined it just a year into the program. Which means I ended up having the opportunity to be a founding member of that team.

I lived in Seattle and was responsible for helping to set up the clinical experiences for medical students all around the four state region. I would go out and try to identify doctors that were interested in teaching and work with them to develop their abilities in teaching. The purpose of it was to have an educator who knew health care and health sciences. It was meaningful training doctors in the more rural areas so they wouldn't all end up locating in cities. So WAMI had a real inherent social value to it, plus it was lots of fun.

Here we are twenty-three years later in the WAMI program and I am back in Idaho...never would have imagined, particularly in this position. I had never been in Moscow before, but I had been in Idaho because I was involved in helping with the program. I loved Idaho and also loved Alaska, and Montana, and tromped around in shoes like that (points to my high-tops) all over the wilderness and took a pack on my back and just had a ball. One of the happiest times of my life was getting involved in that program. But many who were involved in that program and considered successful in it, ended up getting nice career opportunities because we were noticed.

I was invited to come to Kentucky to be responsible for setting up rural health care education programs. I did that for a few years, and then I became a dean of nursing at the University of North Dakota for about six years. Then I thought "oh my, here I am a relatively young dean. Do I want to be an administrator all my life? I'm not too sure. But yes, I think I do. But do I want to be a dean of nursing for the rest of my life?" Which I was very proud to be, but I became interested in academic administration broadly.

I then decided that it would be wise if I did some training in management before I went on to the next level of responsibility. So I took a year out and went back to school in 1981 at MIT. I was the only one from higher education in the program of 55 students, also one of the first women. When I came out of that experience I became the vice president of academic affairs at the University of North Carolina, Greensboro.

And then I was invited to look at a presidency of Gallaudet University. That's a university in Washington D.C. specifically designed for the education of persons who are deaf or hard of hearing. It was a very interesting institution in many, many respects. I showed an interest in that and became a candidate. A big protest occurred because they wanted a deaf person to be president. In all the hundred some years of the school they had never had a deaf person be the president. So I was president for four days and then decided that they had a good point and they needed a deaf president, so I withdrew. It was international news, quite an interesting episode. It was my Andy Warhol moment—one gets 15 minutes of fame in one's life thing, and that was mine.

I went back to Greensboro for a while and then was contacted about this job opportunity and thought it was very interesting. I was looking at two or three things at the time, but Idaho immediately attracted me, because I love the territory. When I came out here for an interview I felt really good about the faculty especially. The meetings on campus left me feeling very good. "I think I need to be there" kind of a feeling. So one thing lead to the next and I got the opportunity and came to Idaho.

Argonaut: Where do you see the university five years from now?
Zinser: I would like to see us retain the importance of the Moscow campus as the principal place of choice in the state university system for students who want to have a residential university experience. That is living, learning, working and serving on the campus and making their college years really a full period of study and scholarship. That goes for the undergraduates as well as graduate students, who like to pursue their graduate studies in a totally absorbed environment.

Much of what we are doing in our campus planning, for the physical campus, is to design the campus with a family of centers that are places for students, faculty and staff to interact with one another in a sense of scholarly community. It's very exciting to see those things develop. It is all designed around the vision of our future here in Moscow as a living and learning community, being our essential forte.

It means a strong liberal arts experience for students no matter what their major might be and a living and learning environment. Now part of what goes with that is having a critical mass of science and laboratories, because a major strength of this university has always been and needs to continue to be science and technology. Then our research centers around the state need to continue to develop. So that the research and development on the more practical side are being carried out and developed in areas that are close to the businesses and organizations that need the information, with a strong tie back to Moscow.

The other aspect of the university of the future, which is not Moscow-centric at all, but Idaho-centric. That is more oriented to the opportunity for people in businesses in the growing areas of the state to have direct services from the university in education and research and be close at hand through centers of instruction. Such as what we do now in Idaho Falls in engineering; what we are developing in Boise in engineering; and in Coeur d'Alene.

So the university of the future to be a strong land-grant university in the 21st Century, means that we have got to set up a network of centers of instruction and centers of research activity in areas that are closely associated with the businesses and organizations of the state that need to use them. The good news is that modern telecommunications and even modern transportation systems are going to develop rather rapidly, which will make it easier for the university to have a network of services close at hand. Like our six faculty in Boise that will soon be 17 faculty. They are UI faculty living and working in Boise in engineering along with their colleagues at Moscow, communicating and having department meetings and student advisement, and other functions going on by compressed video.

So we'll have a good combination: on site access, which is what the businesses and students want, they want to have real people they can talk to close by; and at the same time, the depth of what we can offer will be greater in any of these sites because of the telecommunications capabilities that can tap in to what we're doing in any one of these locations. Those are two of the main themes for the future of the university.

Argonaut: What do you believe is the greatest challenge of the university?

Zinser: It is something we have in common with some other land-grant universities. Where we were located in a rural, agricultural environment of the state and expected to be the University of Idaho serving throughout the state.

Years ago it was possible to meet the needs of engineering and other fields by students coming to school in Moscow. Everybody was happy to put their young people on a train in Bannock County, or Caribou or Bonneville and have them go all the way across the state to the south, out into Oregon, and up the trail to Moscow and then come home for the holidays on this wonderful little train. That was fine for the past, but it's not fine anymore. People want their education closer to home.

For the state of Idaho, as a state that is not going to be populated to the level of 2 million any time soon, the state isn't going to be able to afford duplicate programs in the high cost areas where we currently have statewide responsibilities. At least not without either ending up with outrageous costs or ending up with mediocrity. So the University of Idaho's greatest challenge is to establish these centers of instruction in areas like engineering, and do such a good job of it that the communities such as Boise, Idaho Falls and Coeur d'Alene will be so glad for the services of the university that they would not want it any other way. People then begin to define the University of Idaho as a complex of programs and services rather than as 'that place up in Moscow.'

That's the challenge and we must do it well, because if we don't succeed our problems will be oriented on how to become the college of Moscow or how to become the University of Northern Idaho. That's not our mission; and that's not good for Idaho. For those of us tenacious about retaining our mission, we do so because we believe it is the right thing for Idaho. Rather than having Idaho lose this gem of special character and quality that is the University of Idaho, this approach allows the universities across the state to develop cooperative programs that unite Idaho rather than having Idaho become split up in regions, much more so than it ever has been before.

Argonaut: Where do you see UI athletics going?

Zinser: Well, we are very much focused on our endeavor to progress into the Big West Conference. I am very pleased that we have a wonderful football coach on board, Chris Tormey. And that we've got enthusiastic people also with Joe Cravens, in men's basketball, and Julie Holt and Tom Hilbert on the women's side, among others. We've got a great crew of people to work with and help us move in that direction. We have a huge number of chal-that we had a solid plan for raising money and the attendance. So that we knew when we go into the Big West we can be successful.

It was a very rigorous period of planning because it is a bit marginal. It is going to be a challenge for us located where we are. There is lots of room to move to get more people to come to those games if we can get real creative about the things that go on before, during and after the game.

Argonaut: What's the funniest thing that has ever happened to you?

Zinser: A couple of high school girlfriends and I went on a hike through Desolation Valley in California when we were 14- or 15-years-old. Our dads had gone in advance and put all the usual Girl Scout signs up to show us which way to go. It's a very rugged area. You have to go up to the top of a mountain and down that side, and up another one. We were really into becoming independent and doing this trip. We started out early in the morning and we were supposed to go from Echo Lake over to Fallen Leaf through this particular route that they had set out for us. We ended up losing our way. We had to go all the way back up the mountain we had just come down in order to regroup and get our bearings. So by the time we got into camp at Fallen Leaf it was about 9:00 p.m. Needless to say our families thought they would never see us again. We all thought it was hilarious, of course, but they didn't think it was very funny at all!

lenges in terms of fund raising to finance the move without tapping into state resources or increasing student fees. Secondly, we have a real challenge in getting the attendance up at our games by making football more of an event than just a football game. There is a lot of creative thinking going on, a lot of good plans were defined before I decided to get behind that move. Now we know it's doable, and the people whose support we need know what they must do. A lot of people wanted to do it on an emotional level and I was not willing to do that, because presidents cannot afford to take their institutions one way or the other based on emotion. So I took a good bit of time with my colleagues to work through the issues and ensure charge by $22. Part-time resident undergraduate student fees will increase by $7 per credit hour, while part-time graduate student fees will be raised by $2 per credit hour.

Zinser's memo said nonresident tuition will increase to $2,683 per semester for full-time freshmen enrolling next fall. Continuing full-time nonresident undergraduate students' tuition will be raised on par with the previously implemented multi-year phase-in plan. Part-time students' tuition will increase by $6 per credit hour.

Other Idaho universities have also released their initial notices for fee increases. Boise State University is proposing a fee increase of $91 that will bring their total fees to $881. Idaho State University is proposing a fee increase of $65 that will bring their total fees to $815. Lewis-Clark State College is proposing a fee increase of $62 that will bring their total fees to $768.

A public hearing to discuss the proposal is slated for March 16 at 3 p.m. in the Student Union Building Ballroom. Students are encouraged to share their views on the proposal at the hearing. Students may submit written and oral comments to W. Hal Godwin, Vice President of Student Affairs and University Relations, until March 30.

Zinser's administration will also hold discussions with several campus groups prior to the March 16 meeting.

"The happier the faculty and staff are, the better they can serve the students," said Wilson. Wilson is concerned about the priorities being shown in the matter of faculty pay.

He wholeheartedly believes the university is a resource and those providing the resource should be properly compensated for their efforts.

"If we fail to provide proper compensation," said Wilson, "why are we even here?"

Holden educates, enlightens about disabilities

Jeremy Chase

Staff

Henry Holden, guest speaker for Disability Awareness Week at the University of Idaho, has been on campus this week educating and enlightening students about people with disabilities. Holden will be in Moscow until March 13.

Holden, who spoke to many classes this week, said that the most important thing about people with disabilities is just that: they are people. "People with disabilities are multi-dimensional," he said. "And people don't associate that with disabilities."

Contracting polio at age four, Holden walks with the aid of crutches. But not just any set of crutches—hot pink in Holden's case. Through his work, he has represented people with disabilities across the world. While speaking to a class on social and cultural foundations of counseling on Wednesday, Holden used a slide show that focused on the media, especially newspapers, and their negative portrayal of disabilities. "They're not viewed as dynamic individuals," he said.

Holden said that a person's image of the disabled is very important. "I don't blame people about their negative images when all they see in the media are negative things," he said.

As an example, Holden told a story how the New York Times didn't cover a 2,000 person rally for the disabled, but placed a picture in the paper that misrepresented the event. Displaying the picture on the slide projector, Holden said that the photo showed disabled people as "pathetic, needy, and not positive."

Another negative aspect of print media, Holden said, is the tendency to only cover disabled people if they do something out of the ordinary. As a result, he said that disabled people think that the only way to get recognition is to do something outrageous.

On the other side of the issue, Holden also focused in on the positives he has seen in the print media. Showing more slides to make his point, Holden said that good articles on disabled people are ones that don't use the disability as its primary focus. "It's refreshing to see articles not about disability, but show disability in a photo," he said.

Holden also praised the advertising world for its improved view of disabled people. In particular, Holden showed a slide of a Nordstroms ad that featured a model in a wheelchair.

He also said that disabled people have a buying power of close to 700 billion dollars. "We were assuming that people with disabilities can't achieve," he said. "Images are very, very important."

In other forms of media, Holden wishes that there were more disabled people on network television programs. For an example, he used the show "Life Goes On," which featured an actor with Down Syndrome. "I feel there should be a disabled character on every prime time show," he said. "For the last two years, there hasn't."

As a speaker, Holden said one of his concerns is his lack of visibility in the public eye. In the past, Holden has appeared on Entertainment Tonight, the Today Show, Donahue, and was a regular on the TV shows T.J. Hooker and Hill Street Blues. "I need more exposure," he said. "If I had that visibility, people would come."

One way that Holden tries to get visibility is through comedy. Holden, an accomplished comedian as well as actor, performed at the Administration Auditorium last night, offering impersonations, one-liners, and a humorous look on life from the eyes of a disabled person.

On the UI campus, Holden said his goal was to inform, educate, and enlighten students about people with disabilities. "They're the ones who'll change society," he said. "I want the students to have a healthier attitude." To bring the point home, Holden will continue to visit classes in order to spread his message to as many students as he can.

The bottom line, according to Holden, is for the 48 million people with disabilities in the United States to have a sense of inclusion. He said a good way to begin is to always focus on the person first, and the disability second. "I want them to come into our world," he said.

On similar lines, Holden also said that people, disabled or not, need to focus in on opportunities. "When you see someone with a disability, focus on what they can do, not what they can't do," he said.

To use himself as an example, Holden said that he has participated in many sports, including scuba diving, horse-back riding, bowling, and basketball.

Finally, Holden also said to not let terminology or being "politically correct" interfere with relating to someone with a disability. "There are so many words that are used for people with disabilities," he said. Using words such as crippled, handicapped, wheel-chair bound are examples. "The terminology for me is stud," Holden said.

Hersch to perform at Coffeehouse

Jeffrey Albertson

Staff

James Hersch has been building a solid repertoire for over 13 years, and he will bring himself, a guitar and his music to the University of Idaho tonight in the Vandal Cafe as a part of ASUI Coffeehouse Productions.

Hersch, a native of Minnesota, has been traveling the country bringing his version of straightforward acoustic music to college campuses in Arkansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Montana and Kansas.

The performance begins at 8 p.m. and is open to the public with free admission.

Apart from being nominated for the National Coffeehouse Entertainer for the year two years in a row and being a finalist at the international Kerville Folk Festival Hersch has found his way onto four albums.

Innerweather, his latest release, is an extension of his acoustic performances featuring solely himself and a guitar.

Aside from performing at Coffeehouse Hersch also likes to get out and speak and perform for the community.

He will appear today at Moscow Junior High School at 9:15 a.m., Moscow Care Center at 10:15 a.m., Lena Whitmore Elementary School at 1:15 p.m. and Latah Care Center at 2:45 p.m.

"This is the first time he's done a performance here and gone out into the community," Patti Crow, Music of the Times co-chair for ASUI Coffeehouse productions, said. Hersch has performed at coffeehouse several years earlier and was well received, said Crow.

Hersch has a Bachelor of Arts degree in classical guitar and aside from performing also finds time to venture into the community to speak to creative writing classes, song writing classes and music students about life on the road as a professionally touring musician.

Everyone experiences 'cultural filters'

Once mentioned to Wei Lien from Malaysia that his country is very exotic, warm, and sunny. I do, indeed, have a bright picture of Malaysia: geographical location just north of the equator guarantees the country plenty of sunshine.

Depends how you look at it," he replied, and counted some positive as well as negative features of his country.

Along with the warm climate, I had envisioned only positive features like bright sunshine throughout the year, exotic plants and animals, distinct culture and food, and palm beaches.

Unconsciously, I had created a place that contrasted with anything common, dull, or negative about the place I live. People often mentally create dream-places that in reality are not true. For instance, in Malaysia there are too many mosquitos, Theva, another Malaysian, told me.

We see places through cultural filters. Usually people perceive faraway countries as being exotic and attractive. Our lack of knowledge makes us create our own images of certain places. We fill the gap between our knowledge of the place and reality with our own imaginations.

We attach features to places and see what we are looking for. I am from a Nordic country, Estonia, and for me Malaysia is different, far away, and warm, and therefore an exotic country.

A familiar place to every Argonaut reader is the American West. We see the West through different lenses than outsiders. The majority of people here have not been to Europe, to Southeast Asia, or maybe even the East coast. We are used

International Column

—Karin Kaasik

to the emptiness and long distances between places. A weekend trip to Boise is not a big deal.

As a contrast, people in North-Estonia rarely visit their relatives in South-Estonia more than once a year because of the distance. It is 140 miles. It might be hard to imagine that in several parts of the world 150-250 people live per one square mile (that is true for the most of mainland Europe) while in Idaho we have 12 people per square mile.

Or, that only three hours of driving can take you to another state where people do not understand your language and culture. In some cases, those foreign people can even be hostile and not let you drive further, and demand a visa for entry (as is true on the Estonian-Russian border).

Differences among places result in a distinct way of living in those different places, and in a variety of attitudes and viewpoints. Life differs in densely populated Europe when compared to our West.

For an even more extreme comparison, think about Australia in the faraway corner of the world map. Only one "real" city, Perth, exists on Australian West coast, and it takes six hours to fly to any major city in the country! When comparing our relatively dry and spacious West to Australian continent, we should feel lucky to get our 20 inches of rainfall—in Australia over 50 percent of land (an area that equals to a half of the United States), is desert and gets less than 10 inches of rain!

Peoples' interaction in this huge diversity of natural landscapes makes our world dynamic and complex. This world is becoming more economically, politically, and culturally interdependent. Though the world is getting closer, many small nations are fighting for independence and international identity as nation states (Kurds in the Middle East, Chechens in Chechnya, and the people of Tibet, among several other nations).

Hopefully, the stories in this column both by international and American students will bring more insight to different places and events in the world. Whether you are from a foreign country, or from Idaho, or from California; whether taking part in a world regional geography or international politics class, you can also contribute to this column.

Last fall, students from Kyrgyzstan, Finland, Malaysia, Argentina, Kenya, Ecuador, and an UI student in Australia contributed to the column. If interested, please contact the Argonaut at 885-7825.

Unconsciously, I had created a place that contrasted with anything common, dull, or negative about the place I live.

LC's brew review: European lagers

Erik Marone
Staff

On tap this week are lagers, a style that encompasses most mass-produced American brews. In order to better understand why this style of brew has become so popular in the United States, we'll take a look at how lagering differs from other brewing processes.

Lagered beer is bottom fermented, where other beers are top fermenting. This type of yeast allows the beer to be fermented at lower temperatures for longer periods of time, producing cleaner, clearer beer.

Since many Americans prefer these clean, light beers, Henry's, Budweiser, Coors, Miller and Michelob are but a handful of domestic brews that use this method.

Since many American lagers taste very similar to each other, I decided to concentrate on European brews. The first we'll try is Holland's ever popular Grolsch Pils. Memorable for its distinctive bottle shape and ceramic stopper, it has a very unique maltiness that is almost sweet.

It has a light golden color and aromatic bouquet. Most domestic lagers will try to filter out as much of the yeast characteristics as possible, but the Grolsch yeast strains lend it a different flavor that makes it a very enjoyable brew.

Also from the Netherlands comes Oranjeboom. Touting itself as the "Crown Prince of Lagers," it is less aromatic than the Grolsch, yet is a darker gold color. Its taste is more assertive than the Grolsch; it is less malty and the hops stand out more.

Next on the menu is Ireland's Harp Lager which is produced for Guinness. It is very similar to Oranjeboom in color, body, taste and bouquet. A very smooth, clean brew, Harp is a consistent winner of the Gold Medal at the annual International Monde Selection beer festival in Europe.

The German Bitburger Pils is another highly admired beer. Pale and light, it is a clean, dry brew with a hint of maltiness and pronounced hop-piness which makes for a delicate taste that is lightly bitter.

The final beer we will taste today is widely regarded as the finest pilsner in the world. Coming from the Czech Republic, Pilsner Urquell is indeed a very fine brew. It has a darker gold color and much fuller taste than the other brews. It has a unique bouquet that can be attributed to the brewery's exclusive use of Zatec hops for the Pilsner Urquell. A clean, taste and crisp finish with a nice slightly sweet aftertaste characterize this beer.

All of these beers are quite suitable alternatives to their American counterparts and available locally at the Moscow Wine Company.

Descent tourney draws all kinds

Matt Baldwin
Staff

It was a cold day as a small computer network over in the Student Union showed the crowd the face of war. On March 4, the University of Idaho Association of Computing Machinery with Cactus Computers began a video game tournament.

The game—Descent. The pilots—21 of them.

The battle for the best player on campus and the Moscow area began at 3 p.m. All the pilots took their chairs a maximum of six per round with each round lasting 15 minutes.

Descent, the game being played, is an extremely popular game across the country. The game is set in a space fighter type scenario. You are the pilot of the little ship and you are in a Doom type of perspective. What makes Descent different from Doom is that for the violence level all the player kills are other space ships or other players on a networked game. Another thing is that in Descent the pilot of the ship has a full 360 degrees of movement. This means that the pilot can fly upside down, sideways, or what ever other way the pilot likes.

Just like Doom, Descent was available as shareware. The tournament was playing with the shareware version. The level which everyone played on was the seventh level due to its size and possibility for weapons.

The match was done in double elimination, which means you have two chances and then you're out. In order to advance into the winners boxes you had to be one of the top three pilots.

Scoring was based on a kill/death ratio.

Some of the players included Faried Nawaz, Greg Brown, Chris Toshok and others. They ranged from CS people to grade school kids who came to play. The tournament was open to everyone with no entry fee. The tournament closed around 8 p.m. The champion of UI on Descent is Don Miller, with second place belonging to John Tunge and third place belonging to Trent Jorgensen. Another Descent tournament will more than likely be held next semester sponsored again by the ACM.

KING BELLY

Fans of Belly's last album, Star, may have noticed on that record there were two types of songs: the pop songs, produced by a different person than the rest of the album and intended to be singles, and the grungier album tracks.

That gave it a disjointed feeling, which was slightly disappointing. The group's latest, King, doesn't have this problem. Every track is fully Belly, and the result is a hugely satisfying album.

The band is in good form, turning out eleven either blissfully lively or blissfully plaintive songs covering everything from love-lust topics to the fear of being a so-called Generation Xer. All the tracks are either written or co-written by Tanya Donelly, the lead vocalist and rhythm guitarist. She is permanently in love with the triple meter, sending half the tunes shuffling or waltzing along, and drummer Chris Gorman keeps up beautifully.

The subject matter on King isn't quite as dark as past Belly albums. One wonders if Tanya has fallen in love recently. The title track is a driving shuffle that sounds like it was written in bed (not alone). Most of the song is a tad obscure, but it grows less and less so as it progresses, finally ending with "Baby I can't fake it/ I'd like to see you naked."

Her relationship with that fellow is rather better off than with the man in "Untitled and Unsung," in which he shows up "in tails for a bad time" and she can't enjoy herself with him "unless I got a belly full of wine."

The album is bookended with two songs about painful periods in our lives. The first, "Puberty," takes a look (gladly it's a backwards look) at the drunken fratboy antics that permeated the males in Donelly's life then. The last, "Judas My Heart," is the Generation X lament, "Where I live, there's a lady who walks everywhere on her hands/ she doesn't trust where her feet wanna take her."

The addition of a piano and Donelly's soulful vocal gives the song a slightly gospel feel.

"Super Connected," co-written with new bassist Gail Greenwood, is sung to a new initiate of the music industry. It's not a pleasant introduction, despite the incredibly catchy chorus hook and wailing vocal. Perhaps Donelly is glad she's past that part of the cycle, but recognizes it as a necessary part of the biz.

Musically, all the songs are guitar-driven, straight ahead intellectual pop.

No looped beats or overdubbed vocals, the individual musicians need no assistance in being a damn good quartet. The bottom of the sound is full, a thumpy combination of Gordon's bass drum and Greenwood's playing, covering one end of the spectrum while Donelly's vocals and Thomas Gordon's leads balance the other end.

On King, Belly has been through the harder parts and written the darker songs, and now all they wanna do is make some good music. And they succeed beautifully.

LOOSE VICTORIA WILLIAMS

Her voice is passionate and her life is a tribute to music. She is Victoria Williams.

In her songs her voice carries a resonance of peace and maybe hope to others who may be down on dark times. Her new album Loose contains the songs that other bands performed as a tribute to her when she was fighting Multiple Sclerosis and hospitalized. To help her fight this disease, friends such as Pearl Jam and R.E.M. helped create an album for her.

Now out of the hospital, Williams has been able to record her album Loose and let the world experience the music that could have been stolen from us by M.S. Williams says that she had so many songs that she was unable to put them all on her album.

Her songs are mellow and sung in a beautiful voice. Some may remember the song that Pearl Jam performed of hers, "Crazy Mary." She included that song on her latest album. I find that I like both versions, although her version is more mellow than Pearl Jam's version.

The album includes 16 tracks of beautiful melodies. One song is "You R Loved." In the song she is telling people that we are loved. I find that she is an inspiration to everyone. Following her hospitalization she has come out with many songs that speak of pain, but instead of wallowing in self pity she brings joy to others through her music.

"Century Plant" is another song off of the album Loose. I found that her songs follow the same pattern. After listening to her voice in an interview it is hard to imagine how well she can sing. She brings out a lovely lullaby sound in her voice which to some people may have been destroyed by MS.

If you are into mellow music you will enjoy Victoria Williams. She is an inspiration and a joy to everyone who listens to her. Victoria Williams' Loose album can be found on the Atlantic label and you will definitely find it at all music stores.

Jim's 'Brownies' hit the spot

Helen Hill
Staff

It seems that dumb and/or pathetic is a popular subject right now, the inane a fitting subject for comedy.

All well and good. Not everyone can make something poignant and entertaining from the mundane details of life. Happily, Jim (AKA Scott Dikkers) does so in I Made Some Brownies and they were pretty good, the third in the Jim's Journal collection of cartoon books.

Jim is mundane. No, more exactly, Jim is so realistically boring that it hurts.

He works in a copy store to which he walks, either by the short, direct route or the long way past the park. He tries to read or watch television or take a nap only to be distracted by the antics of his cat, Mr. Peterson, as she steals his paper, meows loudly or climbs over him.

His friends are just as ordinary. Ruth buys craft supplies and actually uses them. Tony complains incessantly about his job, dreams about being great and doesn't do much to improve his chances of getting anywhere. Steve climbs trees "because it would be fun," yells at baseball games and saved the 3-D glasses from a movie he had seen long ago.

Co-worker Dan is a slob who collects videos. Julie complains about the work, but actually does something about finding a new one.

This certainly isn't humor for everyone. My husband called it intellectual sounding sh*t. I thought parts of it hilarious, parts silly, parts too dumb for a chuckle much less a laugh.

It is unique. It is, like the best martinis (I've been told), very dry. It is ironic Realism to the last.

What to look for

One of the most expensive items to operate around the house is your car. Since you put so much money into it for gas, insurance, and repairs, there are some tips to help you find the best professional services.

• Don't leave your car at the nearest establishment for convenience. This is not selecting a shop.

• Read the owner's manual to become familiar with the car and follow the manufacturer's suggested service schedule.

• Ask friends for recommendations. Check local consumer organizations regarding the reputation of shops in your area.

• Look for a neat, well-organized shop. Be wary of a messy place of business.

• All policies (labor costs, guarantees, payment methods) should be posted or explained to you.

• Look for evidence of qualified technicians — trade school diplomas, certificates of advancements and national certifications.

Of course, you can save money if you learn to handle some of the basics yourself, such as an oil change and minor under-the-hood and body maintenance.

21 tips to help you and your car

When you take your car into the shop for a "complete tune-up," a service generally required every 30,000 miles or every two or three years, what services should be included? This question, often controversial even among the automotive service trade, is addressed in a recent newsletter of the Professional Master Technician's Association. The facts are provided by a CD-ROM repair information database, used by technicians to access current and accurate diagnostic and repair information.

Electronic ignition, computerized engine controls and electronic fuel injection have eliminated many of the adjustments that once were part of a traditional tune-up. So most technicians probably would say a tune-up on most cars today is a preventive maintenance service or an engine performance check.

One of the main reasons people bring their vehicles in to their mechanics for a tune-up is because they are experiencing some kind of "driveability" problem: starting, stalling, hesitation on acceleration, poor gas mileage or lack of power. These symptoms seldom are cured with a new set of spark plugs or a few turns of the screwdriver. On today's complex engines a comprehensive performance check is in order.

Another item that should be included is emissions check, now mandatory in 35 states. Most mechanics check the operation of basic emissions control components, but an actual emissions check at the tailpipe is essential to accurate diagnosis.

The following are 21 items that should be included in a complete tune-up according to professionals. The list may vary according to the vehicle and/or shop providing the service, but it is a handy reference for owners seeking quality service.

1. Replace spark plugs.
2. Replace distributor rotor.
3. Check distributor cap and replace it if necessary.
4. Check ignition timing and adjust if necessary.
5. Check ignition performance (firing voltage/ignition patterns).
6. Check ignition wires and replace if necessary.
7. Check ignition idle speed and adjust if necessary.
8. Check choke mechanism (or engines with carburetors).
9. Clean fuel injections.
10. Check compression and/or power balance (to identify bad injectors as well as compression problems).
11. Check manifold intake vacuum to reveal exhaust restrictions.
12. Check battery and charging voltage.
13. Check exhaust emissions to verify fuel mixture, ignition performance and emission controls per-

- formance.
14. Check vehicle computer for presence of any trouble codes.
15. Install new air filter.
16. Replace the fuel filter(s).
17. Replace PCV (positive crankcase ventilation) valve.
18. Check all emissions control components.
19. Check all vital fluids, including engine oil, transmission fluid, coolant, brake and power steering fluid.
20. Check all belts and hoses.
21. Check safety items such as lights, windshield wipers, tires, horn, etc.

For an informative pamphlet listing the eight most common signs your car needs a tune-up, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-sized envelope to Car Care Council, Dept. T, One Grande Lake Drive, Port Clinton, OH 43452.

Don't forget to check the brakes

The cost of crashes is staggering, according to figures from National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. In 1990, the figure was $137.5 billion. Deleting the third attributed to "driving under the influence," there is still a $91.5 billion tab against the sober driver.

An estimated five percent of these accidents are attributed to poor condition of the vehicle: loose steering, a bald tire, bad brakes or other discrepancy. If, through proper preventative maintenance, we could avert just ten percent of these accidents, says the Car Care Council, savings to society could be as much as $475.5 million.

Even with impressive advancements in vehicle safety design, brake-related accidents cause millions of dollars worth of damage and affect thousands of lives each year.

These sophisticated systems, with as many as 160 parts, demand periodic inspection and maintenance. And when the service is needed, anything less than quality workmanship may compromise the safety of the driver, his/her passengers and others on the road.

When having brakes inspected, which should be done at least annually, go to a professional.

He will look beyond the drums, lining and pads with which the layman is familiar. He will examine the critical hydraulic system and the various hardware components that can wear or bind. New brake lining is worthless if the hydraulic system is leaking. He can spot worn bushing that can cause disc brake pad failure, and sticking calipers that can shorten brake lining life.

Tires deserve more attention than they get

We want to keep that car shiny. We wash it, buff it up and do whatever else is needed to make it look spiffy.

When does all this, which really is just aesthetics, we often forget the important areas of the car that must be maintained for proper performance and safety.

Let's talk tires.

Here are tips on making sure your tires are in tip-top shape, to keep you — and others — safe on the roads:

- Check the treads often. You've heard about placing a penny in each tread; if you see the top of Lincoln's head, it is time to look for new tires.
- Make sure there is not any uneven wear, which could mean an alignment problem.

- Make sure the lug nuts are tight.
- Check the treads for inbedded pebbles, glass, nails, and other road debris.

After all this, you can think again about aesthetics.

Clean the tires with a good spray that breaks down dirt, such as 3M's

Kleen-Team heavy-duty tire cleaner.

It removes dirt, grime and grease that eat away your tires.

Don't forget to clean hubcaps thoroughly.

The use of catalytic converters has increased dirt build-up on hubcaps. Check them often.

Don't forget about your car's needs

Ah, spring! The birds are singing, the trees are budding. But your car doesn't look too thrilled. It has been a long, dirty winter, although nothing a good spring cleaning can't fix. The question is: where to begin and with what. Car Care Council warns that the wrong cleaners can do more harm than good.

Let's begin with the exterior. For years the cleaner of choice by many of us has been dish washing liquid or other household detergent, which is handy and relatively inexpensive. The experts tell us, however, that these products often are far too concentrated. On newer cars, they emphasize, the clear-coat finish can be dulled with improper washing. Most manufacturers of car cleaning products now offer special products for washing, cleaning and protecting the vehicle exterior with the new type of finishes. The wrong cleaner or wax can dull the clear-coat finish.

Along with winter muck, tires and wheels also get covered with brake dust. This black dust, prevalent with the new non-asbestos disc brake pads, can be difficult to wash away, according to the Council. New products made specifically for wheel and tire cleaning speed the cleanup process without damaging the bright finish on wheels.

If it seems there is a specific cleaner for every inch of your car, you are correct. Even the vinyl top is at risk you apply the wrong product. Many owners make the mistake of using interior cleaners on the vinyl top. Although this mistake is not irreversible, applying the right product the first time will save elbow grease, money and possible your top.

Like the outside of your car, there are certain materials that are specifically recommended for the interior. For example, you want a vinyl upholstery cleaner that not only cleans but also protects the material from cracking. And you may need fabric and carpet cleaners designed to attack the specific stains in your car. There are two basic types of stains: protein and oil/grease. Protein stains demand an enzyme pre-treatment, while the grease/oil type can be removed with a heavy-duty shampoo containing degreasing agents. Be sure to give these chemicals time to work and remember always to work the stain from the outside in. Floor mats can be cleaned in the same way, finishing with a good shampoo.

Windows are pretty much dessert when it comes to spring cleaning your car. Still, the Council does offer a couple of hints. First, use your favorite commercial glass cleaner. If smudges and road film persist, try rubbing alcohol to cut through to the shine, but don't get any of the paint. And remember to clean all glass on the inside as well as the outside.

Schweitzer offers specials

During UI spring break Schweitzer will be offering a ski special, $7 off the normal student price. Why go to Puerto Vallarta when you can ski for $18 a day? Schweitzer Mountain Resort is also offering Spring Break Ski Passes good for Schweitzers last nine days of skiing. The passes cost $35 for students and $50 for others. The passes are good from April 1 to April 9. Rooms will run $59 a night for those wishing to stay at the Green Gables Hotel.

Palouse triathlon coming soon

Campus Recreation will sponsor the 12th annual Palouse Triathlon on April 23. The event will begin at the Swim Center at 7 a.m. The triathlon is a multi-sport event, consisting of a 1.5 kilometer swim, a 40 kilometer bike ride and a 10 kilometer run. Everyone is welcome to sign up for the event. Registration will continue through April 10, the entry fee is $20 for individuals and $50 for teams. Entry fees include a long sleeve T-shirt. Entry forms are available at Campus Recreation in Memorial Gym room 204 or at local sporting goods stores. All finishers will be awarded a certificate and will be eligible for prize drawings. Call Campus Recreation at 885-6381 or write to 204 Memorial Gym, Moscow, ID 83844-2426 for more information.

Wild Alaska can be seen Tues.

The ASUI Outdoor Program is sponsoring a slideshow and lecture: "Wild Alaska: Land of Extremes" on March 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the Borah Theater. Northwest Reflections will present the show, covering topics ranging from the cultural to the environmental.

The thread that binds the show is wilderness travel. Both presenters are former National Park Service and U.S. Forest Service Rangers who are now educators. Admission is free.

Kloos climbs the wall all winter

Antonio Gonzales

UI student Heidi Kloos checks her footing on the climbing wall upstairs in Memorial Gym.

Erik Marone Staff

Five years ago, faced with a plateau in her mountaineering abilities, Heidi Kloos started rock climbing. Today she is helping to dispel the macho image associated with the sport.

"It got to a point where I couldn't mountaineer without knowledge of climbing and the safety equipment without breaking my neck," Heidi jokes about her early interest in climbing. Mountaineering in Colorado can prove to be unforgiving without climbing skills.

Now at the University of Idaho, she is helping others learn and develop climbing skills. Heidi says climbing has come a long way in the past few years as more people are seeking education and training to help them climb safely. "Once you have taken the time to learn how to climb, it is fairly safe, everything you do has safety precautions," Heidi points out.

Climbing is one of the few sports that has safety equipment for every aspect.

Training is a year-round schedule for climbers. During the winter, Heidi is in the weight room two days a week, on the climbing wall three to four days a week and does distance running to keep in shape for the summer when training is pretty much climbing.

Heidi says that balance is probably the most important thing a climber can develop. Flexibility and finger strength are also essential and will develop the more you climb. Good climbers will learn how to use their feet and hands equally.

This area has plenty to offer climbers. The closest and most accessible climb is Granite Point, near Wawawai. Other popular spots can be found on the south fork of the Clearwater, Post Falls, Spokane and Vantage. For a full-day challenge, Chimney Rock outside of Sandpoint offers a multitude of climbing routes, accessible after a fair hike in from the dirt road that brings you up to the base.

There is also a variety of local indoor and outdoor climbing competitions where climbers have the opportunity to pit their abilities against others in the area. Heidi has been climbing competitively for about two years, and has been placing fairly consistently. "I've won the past two years by default, I was the only one in my category!" she laughs at her success so far.

Her days of solo competition may be numbered. More and more women are taking an interest in this sport that has traditionally been male dominated. Heidi says if any women are interested at getting into climbing, but don't know anyone they can climb with, the best way to start is start showing up at the climbing wall, someone will be more than willing to

• SEE ROCKS PAGE 14

The basics of rock climbing

With interest in rock climbing rapidly increasing, UI offers many opportunities to help you get started, or improve your current abilities.

A brief orientation at the climbing wall teaches climbers proper techniques and safety measures. The facility has all of the equipment you need to start.

Beginning climbers can wear hiking boots or street shoes to start off. As your abilities improve and you are ready for natural rock, a pair of climbing shoes, helmet, carabiners, camming devices, harness and rope are some equipment that will be make your climbing easier. If you are ready for the full-on climbing experience, mountaineering equipment like crampons and ice axes will come in handy.

For a more structured learning environment, the UI Outdoor Program is currently offering a series of climbing courses designed to prepare people about the sport and help climbers improve their techniques. There is also a multitude of professional and corporate training programs available all over the world.

If you want to see how you match up to other climbers, there are several competitions in the area, like the Snake River Rock Rodeo and Cleanup, UI Palouse Pump and Wazzu Winter Warm-up.

If you are concerned about safety or want to know more about climbing before you get into it, drop by the climbing wall and talk to some of the climbers. They will help you understand more about the sport before you give it a try.

The climbing wall is located in the Memorial Gym and is open from 6-10 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays, 11:30-1:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays and from 12-5 p.m. on Saturdays. Orientation sessions are on Wednesdays at 5:00 p.m.

For more information about the Outdoor Program's climbing classes, call the Outdoor Program at 885-6810. For more information about the climbing wall call Campus Recreation at 885-6381.

Engineering student bugels his way to fame

Dave Claycomb Staff

Few people can say that they are the best in the world at anything, but Feb. 19, one University of Idaho student did just that. Corey Jacobsen, a sophomore mechanical engineering major, won the Adult Open Division at the elk bugeling contest in Albuquerque, NM, the site of this year's Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation National Banquet.

To say he was pleased is an understatement, but it should have come as no surprise. Last year, Jacobsen took second in the contest. "Last year was a lot of fun," said Jacobsen, "but winning it this year was even better."

Jacobsen left Lewiston on a Friday morning, and arrived in Albuquerque later that evening. The competition began Saturday morning with the preliminary rounds where over fifty people were trying to become one of five selected to make it to the finals. He had the highest score in the round and easily advanced to the finals on Sunday. "I was really nervous in the final round," said Jacobsen, "Everybody else sounded really good."

All of his worries were for naught, however, since he had the highest score in the final round as well. The judges, a potpourri of wildlife biologists, outfitters, and other hunters, decide who has the best sounding call.

The banquet was a victory for his entire family also. Primos, a manufacturer of elk calls and other hunting accessories, paid to fly

Jacobsen and the rest of his immediate family down for the contest. Jacobsen's father Rocky, actually designed the excellent "Pallet Plate" call that he used to win with. Primos bought the rights to the call earlier this year, and sales for it have been tearing up the market ever since.

Rocky Jacobsen still retains the rights to market the call, and it can be found in stores under the name of "Bugle Tone" or can be ordered directly from his home in Orofino. Primos sells the call under the name of "Ivory Bugler."

Jacobsen's younger sister Misty also used the call to win the youth division. This was the second year in a row that she has won. For winning, Jacobsen received an engraved Model 700 Remington rifle as well as a plaque. His younger sister won a rifle and plaque as well.

He said that he had a great time this year, and is already looking forward to next year's contest. "The banquet is a great time," said Jacobsen "Whether you win or not. Being able to hear the best buglers in the world is a great experience, you can really learn a lot."

Jacobsen is also a highly successful archer. A bear that he shot with his locally made Clearwater Archery bow in 1991 made the Pope and Young record books. He also won the Overall Western Triple Crown Nationals in 1990 with his bow, and took second in 1991 and 1993.

Anyone interested in the call that Jacobsen used to win with can call Rocky Jacobsen at 208-476-3344 or Primos at 601-366-1288.

Skateboarding defines the outdoor experience

Matt Baldwin

I am wondering what are the best place on campus is to skate? Me being from the Boise area, I don't know where to skate around here. It is hard to find a decent place to skate. I'm making an outcry to the ASUI: Construct a place to blade and skate.

One cool place that will be here, maybe, if they get it completed, is the physics building that is under construction. Yeah, you know the one, the big goliath thing right next to the JEB.

Or we can have the engineers on campus create a super new virtual reality unit, so we, the skaters of America, can skate inside cyberspace somewhere.

We can have them put this thing outside so we can feel the wind tapping our head and shoulders or maybe a cop tapping our shoulders saying we can't skate in cyberspace now because the government has control.

One thing is for sure. Be it in cyberspace or in the small hick, podunk town of Moscow Idaho, skating is an outdoor activity which should stay alive and free. Always remember to skate on the edge and pay no attention to those sign which say "NO SKATING."

The outdoors is more than hunting and fishing. Granted those things are cool and everything, but that is not all you can do in the great wide open. You can hike, bike, ski or hooky-bob in the winter. Go hooky-bob on the back of the bumper of some overly large truck and maybe get yourself killed. But hey, it's fun!

The outdoors is a place that one goes when they can't handle the Brady Bunch on TV and must escape Mike and Carol. It is a place most people don't see. Most students here at the University of Idaho only see the outdoors when they are forced to make that walk up to Administration or any other building on campus.

The best part of the outdoors would have to be the alternative things to do other than hiking and fishing. Now who really wants to stand on the side of a glistening river letting a string swirl in the water with a worm at the end of it waiting to be taken by a hungry fish mouth?

I don't want to.

I want to go out, hop on a skateboard and take a cruise down Main St. knocking down pedestrians and maybe getting arrested for it. Skate where it says don't skate and you'll feel better about the outdoors.

Cross-draw conquers Potlatch River

Dave Lewis
Staff

In the spring a man's ideology turns not only to applied biology, but sometimes to paddling a canoe down run-off swollen creeks and rivers. Recently, James Henry Eskridge II and I canoed the Potlatch River between Eagle's Nest Lodge and Little Boulder Creek Campground. Everyone interested in river adventure should take this trip.

The river was near flood stage at Eagle's Nest Lodge when we put our canoe into the water. Contrary to its name, the bed and breakfast dubbed Eagle's Nest Lodge sits deep in the Potlatch Canyon at the forks of the Potlatch.

The East Fork of Potlatch looks like the bigger river because much of the main river is obscured by willows. To avoid the willows, we launched our boat in the East Fork. This affords an exciting, and because of the fast current, immediate passage under a rustic log bridge at the confluence.

There are no big rapids on this stretch of river. But there is some exciting water to float. This section of river is perfect for honing the skills necessary to tackle more challenging rivers. The Potlatch isn't the Salmon by any means, but it is only 30 miles from Moscow and offers little chance for drowning.

Nevertheless, always wear a personal floatation device. What the Potlatch does offer is solitude and beautiful scenery.

There has been little recent logging in this part of the Potlatch Canyon so there are few roads and forest extends to the river's edge.

Great walls of moss covered rock buttressing the southern ridge can be glimpsed through thick stands of Ponderosa Pine and Douglas Fir. The sun was shining that Saturday and its sparkle on the water completed springtime.

The current is fast enough so paddles are needed mainly for steering, giving us time to appreciate natural wonders that should not be missed.

Floating and gawking can lead to trouble on the river, because there are several large rocks that must be missed if warm dry clothes are important.

Jim and I nearly went for an unexpected swim because of one of those rocks. A large boulder loomed out of the river directly in front of the canoe and I was doubly glad to have "Evinrude" Eskridge paddling with me. Few paddle as powerfully, and he also afforded me someone to blame for the near mishap. He didn't seem to mind. I guess with canoes, all is well that ends well.

We knew we were near the end of our float when we sighted the bridge at Little Boulder Creek Campground. The one problem with this float is its short length. It takes only about an hour to make the trip and it left me wishing there was a take-out point further down river.

Actually there are several, but all are below a stretch of water that I have only seen during summer and certainly don't want to see from a canoe during spring high water. However, with an understanding shuttle driver, two trips down the same stretch in an afternoon wouldn't be unthinkable.

To find Eagle's Nest Lodge, take Highway 8 east passed Helmer. Look for the sign and turn right onto the county road. Stay on the gravel until you find the river.

The road to Little Boulder Creek Camp is the paved right turn in Helmer across from the Helmer Store.

help you out. Women should also try to climb with other women. "Don't be intimidated into climbing only with guys," Heidi cautions. "We often have to finesse our way through it—instead of brute strength." Heidi encourages anyone to come into the climbing wall in the Memorial Gym and give it a shot. This once dangerous and daredevil sport is becoming more accessible to everyone, especially with facilities like the climbing wall readily available. If you're ready for a change of pace, climbing is an activity that can provide years of enjoyment.

Anything can happen in Ogden

Mark Vanderwall

Idaho has proven that they can play with the big boys, but with their worst play of the season coming during all of last weekend, there is no telling what can happen. Idaho's terrific guard trio of Ben Johnson, Mark Leslie, and Shawn Dirden were finally feeling the change in temperature as their shooting was colder than an angry mother-in-law. The trio hit just 33 percent of their floor shots, and connected on just 5 of 26 from beyond the three-point arc.

Weber State will have the advantage of playing at home, whereas Montana will be riding an enormous winning streak into the weekend in their quest for the title.

Other schools that may challenge are the other four that remain. Montana State finished as strong as it started. Boise State and Idaho State are both capable of pulling off big wins, and then there are the Vandals, who in the matter of a week managed to pull off a one-point victory over first seed Weber State and then managed to get swept by the Montana schools. If the sweep, Montana State worked over the Vandals in a lopsided contest, beating them 83-56, while Montana won by 16.

Montana is playing too well right now for anyone to beat them, so the battle for second place remains the only question left unanswered. Realize that Weber State is at home, but they aren't playing up to their standards right now. If Idaho can find a way to beat Montana State, they are sitting in pretty good shape against Weber State to face Montana in the finals.

Idaho basketball has been like the weather lately, unpredictable as ever. Just when you think they've put it all together, they're back to their old tricks again. We all know Idaho has the ability to win the big games, so go out and do it! Idaho has been searching for an identity all year long, and there would be no better place to find it than in Ogden, Utah.

Idaho has been an up and down all season, but I hate to say mostly down. The Vandals went into last weekend with a chance for a third place finish, but did anything but prove they deserved it. If the UI-S is alternating weekends to play well then we've got the Big Sky wrapped up.

In a conference that has no real powerhouse, Idaho has found itself in the dark horse position. Weber State and Montana shared the top spot, but Weber prevailed through tie breakers. It is hard to figure out where to put the blame, or if you are going to put it anywhere at all.

Coaching could be a downfall, as could players not giving the same effort night in and night out. Whatever it is, Idaho has found itself at the bottom looking up at the rest of the field.

The key to Idaho going anywhere in the tournament is to get some quality minutes from its bench. To have Todd Spike as your leading scorer, isn't quality minutes per say, but at least he showed that he can be a valuable asset if needed.

Chad Coates and James Jones also had a good weekend, so things in that department are looking up. This is the last weekend of play for the seniors, unless they turn up the intensity and find a way to win in Ogden.

Bobcats end Vandals' season

Dan Eckles

What do Florida International, Mount Saint Mary's, and North Carolina A&T all have that the Idaho Vandals don't? A berth in the 1995 men's NCAA Basketball Tournament.

The Vandals' quest to attend their first Big Dance since 1990 came to a screeching halt Thursday night when the Montana State Bobcats handed Idaho a 77-66 loss in first round action at the canned his fourth three-pointer of the game to make the score 69-63 with 1:13 remaining in regulation. Two MSU dunks and four free throws down the stretch served to nail Vandals coffin and season shut.

Dirden

A 30-point loss to the Bobcats last weekend left some Vandal observers wondering if the UI crew could play with the red-hot Bobcats. Those thoughts were quickly dispelled when Idaho scored the contest's first six points and bolted to a 19-10 lead six minutes into the game.

Kwesi Coleman keyed a Montana State rally that saw the Bobcats fight back to take a 28-27 lead at

“ We were very tired coming in and they are very deep. We just completely ran out of gas and Montana State is a very good team.

—Idaho coach Joe Cravens

Idaho, the tourney's sixth seed, had its dreams of an extended season dashed in the final ten minutes. The Vandals (12-15) held a slim 49-47 edge after Chad Coates hook shot in the paint midway through half two, but the Bobcats (21-7) went on a mini 9-2 run over the next three minutes to take a 56-51 advantage and never trailed again.

Mark Leslie countered for the Vandals with a trey on Idaho's next possession, making the score 56-54 in MSU's favor, but the Bobcats up-tempo style started to take its effect on the Vandals as they gave up a pair of free throws and three straight layups to the Bozeman school.

The Bobcats used their deep bench to wear down an already tired and road weary Vandal club that logged 600 miles through the state of Montana less than a week ago.

“We used every timeout we had and tried to rest every chance we got,” Idaho coach Joe Cravens said. “We were very tired coming in and they are very deep. We just ran completely out of gas and Montana State is a very good team.”

Montana State's Eric Talley gave the Bobcats their largest lead at 69-58 when the senior guard buried two free throws with 2:40 left in the game.

The Vandals made one last gasp when Leslie knocked down a runner in the key and Shawn Dirden the 2:57 mark of the first half.

However, Idaho scored nine of the final 13 points of the half to capture a 36-32 lead at the intermission.

Women's basketball a growing fad across U.S.

Damon Barkdull
Staff

S wishhhh! North Carolina's Charlotte Smith hits a pressured three pointer with seven-tenths of a second left to lead her Tarheels to a 60-59 win over Louisiana Tech in the 1994 championship game of the NCAA Women's Basketball Tournament in Richmond, Va.

This is just one example of the new excitement in NCAA women's basketball.

Newly acquired television coverage along with better athleticism on the women's part has proved to be a huge factor in bringing large crowds. In fact, in the 1993-94 championship game, over 12,000 fans witnessed Smith hit the final three point shot. Tickets were hard to find for this game and it showed as several individuals were arrested for trying to scalp tickets at outrageous prices. Although the game was not a sellout, it was the most fans to ever attend a women's championship game.

This new trend of women's basketball popularity has left fans from all parts of the country jumping on the bandwagon.

Attendance increases have occurred in almost every college that offers women's basketball. The University of Connecticut's average home attendance has increased from 1,350 fans in the 1989-90 season to a 7,875 average for the current season. In the Pacific-10 Conference statistics are similar. The University of Washington has jumped from a 2,726 home game average in 89-90 to a present 4,692 game attendance average. One may speculate that these increases in attendances are purely on the basis of successful programs, but border rival Washington State has also seen the same increase and although the Cougars have put together a solid campaign this winter they are from a national powerhouse.

This domino effect or recent popularity of women's basketball does, however, stop in Moscow, USA.

For example, in a Big Sky Conference matchup against Eastern Washington in Memorial Gym this year only 428 fans came out to watch their Vandals lose an exciting 46-45 affair.

Although the Vandals did struggle this season with a 5-17 overall record, a lack of crowd support by no means gave Idaho a home court advantage and if the student body attendance had been larger — the Eagles may have had a little tougher time withstanding the Memorial Gym mayhem.

Other Big Sky schools have lived up to the national trend as well, watching their women's hoop attendance skyrocket.

The University of Montana has more than doubled their attendance over past years, going from 2,668 average attendance in 89-90 to 5,173 in 1994-95. Montana's in state rival Montana State has also increased its attendance from 784 fans in attendance per game in 89-90 to 1200 fans in 94-95.

There is potential for bigger crowds at Vandal women's hoop contests as witnessed by the University's volleyball program which has consistently brought fans out over the past three years.

Joa Harrison
Fans showed up in droves for the UI volleyball team, however, attendance at women's basketball games has been minimal.

Of more than 200 Division-I volleyball programs in the nation, Idaho placed in the top 20 among attendance last fall.

Idaho volleyball coach Tom Hilbert revamped a losing program when he came in the fall of 1990. Since then Hilbert and his Vandal disciples have been successful in drawing in the fans, vastly because of the extraordinary seasons like the 1994 fall season, where the Vandals rolled to a 33-3 record and a third straight post season berth. Maybe Idaho's women's basketball program needs a shot in the arm.

The Idaho athletic department tried to give the program a shot in the arm last year when it hired Julie Holt. The former Gonzaga head in her first year at Idaho did struggle as most coaches do, but onlookers are confident she will give the Vandals what they need to win. “She's a new coach who received a transitional team. Julie should bring Idaho's program back from the dead,” Boise State Sports Information Director Lori Hays said.

Even if the domino effect of the popularity of women's basketball never hits Idaho, most are confident that women's basketball should excel even more in the eyes of a spectator. But until then, Tennessee women's coach Pat Summit, whose Volunteers have brought in 7,000 plus fans per contest and are a perennial final four club, said that great female athletes must become role models.

“Unfortunately, women are still striving to catch up. It's a tough race. We're still not in front of the pack — we need to develop some

Intramurals on the rise, deadlines near

Ben Carr

The good sportsmanship rules implemented for this year's intramural basketball season are here to stay.

Intramural director Greg Morrison feels that the sportsmanship rules put in place have had nothing but a positive impact on the quality of basketball being played.

Presently, the rules governing player decorum during play are only in place for the basketball season. Next season, Morrison hopes to have good sportsmanship rules on every intramural sport.

"We've only had to eject one team in the five weeks of the season," Morrison said. "Traditionally, basketball is our toughest sport and now we're looking towards implementing the good sportsmanship rules across the board."

The changes in sportsmanship rules are not the only goals of the intramural director; Morrison isn't content with the sports the way they are now.

Morrison is considering changes in both basketball and softball as well as adding more sports to the intramural curriculum.

"The sportsmanship rules for basketball have had a big effect," Morrison said. "Now people are aware it isn't necessary to yell to get your way. The officials think it's good and they're the ones dealing with all the hassles."

Morrison and his staff are considering a six-foot and under category for men's basketball, and co-rec floor hockey will be offered at the same time as volleyball next year.

"The more people I can get to use the sports opportunities on campus means I'm doing my job," Morrison said. "We want as many participants as possible. I don't want to stop where we're at."

Last year 97 teams took the field for spring intramural softball and Morrison expects at least that many for this year, if not more. The intramural council is also looking into the competitive equality between teams of different abilities.

Presently, a team can play in either a competitive or a recreation league.

The recreation league would be those teams interested more in having fun, as opposed to winning consistently. The competitive teams would take the sport much more seriously.

"A lot of times the difference between the two leagues is a matter of skill," Morrison said. "We are trying to find a way to monitor the 'sandbagging' of some teams in the recreation league, but we haven't come up with a way to monitor that yet."

Sign-up deadlines for several sports are approaching as well.

Volleyball and co-rec basketball teams must be signed up by Tuesday, March 14. The softball deadline is Wednesday, March 15. The captains' meeting for softball is Thursday the 16 at 4 p.m. The meeting for volleyball follows at 4:30 p.m. and the captains' meeting for co-rec basketball is at 5 p.m.

All meetings take place in UCC 109.

role models of our own," Summit said.

Some women athletic enthusiasts have even argued that women should have a pro basketball league for themselves, but according to Summit, the biased against female athletes will never let this happen.

"I wish we could stay at home and make the same money playing our sport, but people say we can't jump. We have no genetics to jump and hang in the air, but our sport is a spectator sport," Summit said.

With the direction that women's college hoops is going the sky is the limit. Blacks fought for civil rights. Women fought for the right to vote. Now the ongoing fight for equality in women's sports could finally be coming to an end, but it is up to the spectator or fan to decide what's more exciting to watch.

offense, averaged a Big Sky-leading 85 points per game in the regular season, leaving Cravens to implement a slower offensive scheme that had the Vandals run the shot clock down to 15 seconds before looking to attack the basket.

The plan worked for most of the game until the Vandals fell behind in the final 10 minutes and were forced to push the tempo themselves.

"We missed some free throws and layups down the stretch. I have said all year that there is no margin for error," Cravens said. "They wore us down with their pressure and we got tired."

The Vandals may have been the most mistake-prone at the charity stripe, where they connected on just 5-13 free-throw attempts. Turnovers also plagued Idaho, which gave up the ball 17 times, mostly in key situations.

Leslie, who played his final game as a Vandal Thursday, led Idaho with 18 points while Diriden chipped in 17 in the losing effort.

Quadre Lollis pumped in a game-high 20 points on perfect 7-7 shooting for the third-seeded Bobcats, who got 46 points from their bench. Kwesi Coleman and Mike Elliott came off the bench to add 15 and 11 points respectively.

How to be a low achiever

I have overheard several ways to prepare for class while I was wandering around campus, having lunch at the Student Union or sitting in class. Here's the gist: Make sure you arrive to class at least thirty minutes late. This allows you to miss the ground work for the entire class. It also gives you a tardy instead of an absent. This allows you to miss more classes before being dropped.

It is best to forget your books, paper and pencil. If someone is rotten enough to loan you some, do lots of doodling so you will look busy. Besides, who wants all those notes for, "YUCK—HOMEWORK?"

When you finally leave school, forget to take your study materials home. They would most likely get in the way while watching television. If you do attempt to study, make sure you have lots of friends to copy from. Their notes or ideas might actually be correct. Be sure to have lots of food and loud music to help maintain your concentration. If the phone rings, answer it immediately. If someone asks you to go to the store, pub, or just out, accept quickly. Whether you are out on the town or at home, consume lots of alcoholic beverages or do drugs. This will fine tune your senses for class the next day.

Be sure to stay out late and sleep in late. As a student, you need more sleep than class work.

EXAMS! If you have mastered all of the above study habits, and still do not remember the answers, guess. If the exam is a multiple guess, mark your answers in "E." Hardly anyone uses that column. You can also use the boxes to do "connect the dots" pictures.

As I recall, Tom and Bill, students I knew during my second semester, fit right into this situation. Tom was very good at being late and forgetting his books and supplies. Everyone enjoyed his great excuses. We were amazed because we never heard the same one twice.

Bill was hardly ever late and always had his books. The problem with Bill was staying awake in class. He was a partying fool. He stayed out late, fine tuned his mind and usually forgot to study. The instructor did comment that Bill's art work on tests with dot-to-dot was great.

If you still get a "C" after using this guide, you must have done something wrong. You must receive a "D" or lower so you can blame your grade on the instructor. When you call home for more money, explain how the instructor is a bum. Let Mom and Dad know you may have to repeat that class to graduate. This excuse will allow you to stay in college longer.

If your Mom and Dad fall for your hard luck story, sign up for creative writing next semester. GOOD LUCK!

'People first' harms progress

There is a new commitment in our government to "put people first." What does this mean? Hypothetically, it means that when wildlife comes in conflict with human needs, human needs win. If a wolf kills a farmer's calf what should be done? Who is more important, the wolf or the farmer? When a timber company wants to harvest timber but will harm an endangered species in the process, who is more important, the endangered species or those who support their families with the jobs? If this is an "us against them" argument we all know who will win; the voters of this nation have proven that.

However, this is where I have my problem. It's not us against them, it's us and them. We need them (wildlife), and this is where I find a problem with the so called "putting people first." Going back on the progress we have made in our natural resources because we want to save money would be a mistake. Once we have destroyed a resource it can never be the same. If a well known Idaho politician can say that our salmon can't be endangered if I can buy them on the shelf, where are we headed?

I don't know what the answer is, but I do know that ignoring the problem is not the answer. I know we want a better economy, less regulations, and more say, but at what cost? How long can we continue to put people first? Isn't that what got us the problem of our debt in the first place? If we continue to rape and destroy our natural resources what will be left? A natural deficit, incapable of recovery, instead of a national deficit which can recover in time.

—Jonathan Schooler

Fraternity 'on call' for YWCA

Because the Palouse does a good job of hiding its homeless, it's easy for most of us not to think about them. The men of Alpha Kappa Lambda, however, seemingly never stop thinking about the plight of the homeless. They, indeed, are "on call" for the YWCA of the Palouse. Whether it's food, clothing, and cash or a hardworking painting crew, these caring volunteers respond to requests with alacrity. YW members feel most grateful, and we challenge other Greek house to match this dedication and philanthropy.

Time to get off the 'despite' complex

We are nearing the end of Disability Awareness Week. A number of UI groups have gotten together to sponsor a week of activities including comedy last night.

Comedy that was presented by a fully able Henry Holden. Holden proves beyond a shadow of a doubt the term disabled applies only to those who believe themselves disabled.

The disability, or ability, Holden has is the result of childhood polio. To walk, Holden needs to wear a leg brace and use crutches. With his leg brace and crutches, Holden is as able as anyone. He has participated in more sports than most athletes; diving, bowling and skiing are among some of the sports enjoyed by Holden and other "disabled" people.

If someone were to tell you, "Despite being blonde you can read," what would you think?

Holden travels the country doing comedy shows and acting. He has been a regular on the television shows T. J. Hooker and Hill Street Blues. On students Holden says, "They're the ones who'll change society." He stresses education, with the goal of informing students that everyone is "abled."

Holden has said one of the things he is most bothered by is hearing people say, "Despite your disability you...." There is a point here. If someone were to tell you, "It is great that despite not doing well in calculus you can graduate" or "Despite being blonde you can read," what would you think? Would you feel as if you were being treated as an equal? Disabilities are usually more of a problem to those who are "able" than those who are "disabled."

There is a pin being worn by many administrators involved with Disability Awareness Week. It reads, "Attitudes are the real disability." The fact of the matter is if there is a sport—or any activity—somewhere there is someone with a disability participating and enjoying the experience.

Holden will be around campus today making a couple of presentations before he leaves. At 8:30 a.m. he will be visiting a Communications class in UCC 112 and at noon there will be a brown bag lunch at the College of Education Instructional Media Center. Everyone is welcome to visit either, or both presentations.

It was not so many years ago that the disabled were brushed aside and thought of as a distraction and were treated as less than people. There is no reason to treat anyone as less than fully able. Everyone has things they cannot do well. Some are inept in science, some in language and there are even some who have trouble walking or speaking. The thing is, all of us reading this are human and should be treated as such.

That was the point of the Disability Awareness Week. Right?

—Dennis Sasse

Cereal prices don't need help

Someone must have peed in Uncle Sam's Cheerios. As if Big Brother didn't have enough to do already, two Congressmen, Democratic Representatives Charles Schumer (New York) and Sam Gejdenson (Connecticut) are calling for a Justice Department antitrust investigation into the big breakfast cereal companies. Can you spell "waste of time?"

The sad thing is that Schumer and Gejdenson are completely serious about this. For them, the supposed "price-fixing" that is going on between the big cereal makers—Kellogg's, General Mills, Post/Nabisco and Quaker Oats—is as big an issue as the Balanced Budget Amendment and the War on Poverty.

I am not debating the fact that name-brand cereal is high-priced. The cost of cereal has grown 90 percent in the last ten years. However, there are better ways to deal with the problem than bringing in Uncle Sam to bust some heads. Here's a few suggestions:

Boycott—If you're so concerned about the cost of cereal, boycott it. Hit the manufacturers right where it hurts the most—the pocketbook. Of course, only a wide-scale boycott would hurt these giant companies, but even so you would be saving yourself money by not buying cereal every week. Which leads me to...

Abstain—This is my own personal solution to high breakfast food costs. Not only do I have more cash as a result, but I don't have to worry about going to the grocery store very often, either. Okay, so my growling stomach disturbs my classmates, and I start to get weak and dizzy as 11 a.m. rolls around, but that's just the price I have to pay for my frugality. And let me tell you, lunch never tastes better than when you are in the clutches of near-sickening hunger. Before long, your stomach will shrink, so you will lose weight and save money! What a deal!

Go Generic—Generic brand cereals are a very cost-effective way for those of you who, for various reasons, are not able to abstain from breakfast. Granted, generic cereal does not taste quite as good as the name-brand stuff, but you can get a bag of Tootie Frooties that holds twice as much cereal as a box of Fruit Loops and for about one-third of the cost.

Generic Cereals are a great buy, and if more people bought them, maybe the companies would get the hint.

Steal The Stuff—The cheapest way to get cereal is to steal it. There is nothing cheaper than the five-finger discount. However, stealing is unethical, and more importantly, it is illegal. But, if you get caught, you will be sent to jail and get all of your meals for free!

It is not the proper role for government in this situation for the Justice Department to step in and force the cereal companies to lower their prices. This may be better off for consumers in the short term, but the cereal makers would just lay off workers or find other ways to cut overhead and production costs to maintain their profit margin.

The United States government has much more pressing things to do than worry about the price of a box of Kellogg's Corn Flakes. How about reforming welfare, finding a cure for cancer, or things of that nature?

We don't need more red tape tying up the system. Things are bad enough already.

Keep Uncle Sam out of our breakfast bowls. Let the market forces determine the outcome. This is supposed to be a capitalist nation.

Move people out to create wolf, salmon, snail preserve

Existentialism being the norm in the granola community, I've got a few ideas for the loony environmental left that would take this greenie zeal to the fantastically wacky extremes they seem to enjoy:

PROPOSAL ONE: Move every single person, espresso shack, lentil farmer, house, shopping center and interstate out of the Pacific Northwest and turn it into the biggest wolf, salmon and Snake River Snail preserve in the known universe. This includes, of course, ripping out every single hydroelectric dam, and selling all our collected nuclear fuel and waste as junk jewelry in third world nations. Dislocated populations can move to cheery places, like, oh, Greenland, for instance. Don't forget your parkas.

PROPOSAL TWO: Cut a swath from eastern Montana as far south

as Missouri, extend it from Wyoming to Illinois, and remove every man-made object, including cows. (Note: Cows are not man-made, but are typically deemed environmentally unfriendly because men sort of like to have them around in large numbers.) Shuttle the displaced millions off to useless places such as Nevada and replace them with herds of buffalo and the occasional coyote or wolf pack—since they were there long before Mr. Bad European came along. We'll graciously give all this land back to the Indians since they treated it in a more environmentally-friendly manner. After all, they used every part of the buffalo.

PROPOSAL THREE: Boot every person, factory and freeway out of the Midwest from Michigan to the Gulf coast, and replant that long forgotten forest that we all had our jollies cutting down a hundred or so years ago. Bambi, Thumper and Winnie the Pooh can play in this new Hundred Acre Wood until their stuffing falls out. Also, see if any Indian tribe would buy back Manhattan Island, as is, for 24 bucks and a handful of beads.

If they'll all agree to wear large hats and learn to say comical things like "y'all", those dislocated millions could move to Texas.

PROPOSAL FOUR: Fill a certain radio personality's breathing apertures with quantities of sticky oatmeal.

PROPOSAL FIVE: By all means, we should all have a 50-foot intestinal parasite, pre-installed, as a pet, so these poor creatures don't become extinct. The same goes for all those cute, innocent bacteria, cysts and protozoa who regard our bodies, at the cellular level, as old-growth forests. (Manufacture of Pepto Bismol would thus be outlawed, along with anti-flagellant products such as penicillin.)

PROPOSAL SIX: (Note: Turn back now! You're not ready for this! OK. Don't say that I didn't warn you.) We've got to control certain species that have become too successful for the nation's good. I mean, do we really need all those cows? And ants? There must be trillions of ants in my apartment alone. And who knows how many earthworms there are, crawling under our feet every time we take a walk in the woods? Uh, we also have to do something with the (uuuh boy) human population. I mean, those critters reproduce like rabbits. And talk about environmental impact, whoo! Cows aren't the only creatures on earth that emit methane. And we build houses. Cut down trees. Kill things. Wear fur. So, since we're apt to dirty up those Greenlandish glaciers and squash every last scorpion out in Nevada, we'd better give some more money to NASA so they can shoot us up to the moon, where we can do little environmental damage since there's no nature to speak of at all up there, (let alone air) or so I've heard.

Et voila! Environmental correctness for the 21st century! And besides, it's like a joke how I've heard Crater Tycho has simply fabulous weather in winter.
