Fire in silo sets off alarms in residence halls

Lisa Lannigan
Staff

Some residents on the University of Idaho campus have been keeping their windows shut to keep the smoke from a fire in the neighboring power plant from setting off their alarms. Fire engines were called to Theophilus Tower last Thursday afternoon when an alarm was set off on the eighth floor. Darrell Daniel with the Moscow Fire Department says smoke from smoldering wood chips in a storage facility at the plant set off the alarm, sending residents out of the building. "Another alarm at Gault and Upham went off as well," Daniel said. Matthew Oulman with the UI safety office said the fire was well contained within the storage silo. "The silo has been emptied, most of the wood is gone," he said. "All we can do is get the wood out. "The fire is in an enclosed space," Oulman explained. Rather than burning with large flames like an open fire would, Oulman said the fire only smolders. Smoke from the chips poured from the top of the silo, creating problems for those living around the plant. "With the hot weather, students are keeping their windows open. Smoke gets into the buildings and sets the fire alarms off," Oulman said. According to the safety office, putting water on the burning chips would only create a larger mess. "It's not effective to dump water on it," Oulman said. Wood chips are stored in the silo to provide fuel for the steam-powered plant. The plant then provides heat for all the buildings on campus. "There should be no effect on the buildings," Oulman said. Joanne Paige, resident assistant on Neely Hall, said the smoke would fill rooms. "I didn't know what was going on, I was just told to keep all the windows shut," Paige said. Oulman predicted the smoke from the silo would go away by Friday night. Smoke continued to pour from the silo over the weekend. Another fire alarm was tripped Sunday evening, sending Gault and Upham residents out on the Theophilus Tower lawn. Although upset at being sent from their rooms for a second time, residents were able to joke about the false alarm. "If it goes off a third time, I'm going to set off a real fire," joked Matt Baldwin. Jokes about gas masks and marshmallow roasting circled the crowd as residents waited for the okay to go back into the building. A change in wind direction Monday sent smoke toward the Student Union. It is still unknown at this time how long the smoldering chips will continue to fill campus with smoke.

KUOI to celebrate 50th anniversary in November

Sean Tetpon

University of Idaho's KUOI, 89.3 FM will celebrate 50 years of broadcasting in November. The student-run radio station plans giveaways, a concert and remote broadcasting to commemorate its birthday. KUOI Promotions Director Erik Marone said Friday the station will conduct "organized" on-air giveaways for the first time in KUOI history. "We have been getting some albums in from stations to be given away," Marone said, "We are giving away t-shirts and will be talking to local merchants about gift certificates." Marone said a concert at UI featuring a national "headliner" is in the works. "We have a good-sized budget to get a band. We are working with ASUI Productions for a really big show." A list of possible bands is up for review. KUOI commenced broadcasting on Nov. 15, 1945. The station aired on AM radio through the early 1970's. In 1976, KUOI began transmitting at 50 watts in FM stereo.

Jeff Kimberling, chief engineer of KUOI, said Friday a January 1994 power upgrade from 50 watts to 400 watts enabled the station to broadcast throughout the Moscow and Pullman area. Prior to the 350 watt jump, the station signal was strongest primarily on the UI campus. "It took us five years of paperwork to get up to 400 watts, and only one day to install the equipment," Kimberling said. "It was a huge legal mess." Kimberling said the station has acquired a remote unit and satellite receiving gear which allows broadcasting from outside the studio. "All we have to do is set up somewhere and start broadcasting," said Marone. "Because we have this technology, we will start getting out and being on campus, making more of an image for KUOI." Remote broadcasts will take place around campus in weeks to come. Marone said the increasing exposure KUOI is seeking will compel the station to become more professional. Marone also said some people have expressed the worry as KUOI attempts to become more professional, it will become

Sexual harassment tops student discrimination complaints

Janet Birdsall
Staff

Hiring, firing and keeping employees is becoming more difficult. The hiring process is especially sticky as questions on applications and during interviews can lead to discrimination complaints. "Generally, there's not much that is really illegal to ask, except about disability and age," said Marilyn Shuler, director of the Idaho Human Rights Commission. However, asking questions about personal topics such as marital status, arrest records, and citizenship may leave the employer open to discrimination charges. "If you don't need to know it, don't ask it. It's better to just ask the person directly what you need to know," said Shuler. She recommends all questions be job-related, and all applicants be asked the same questions. IHRC handles cases dealing with disability, race, religion, sex, and age. Among college students, sexual harassment tops the list. "We get a lot of sexual harassment complaints," Shuler said. IHRC is increasingly finding harassment did occur, but often it was not protested. "They better make sure that they're protesting it," she said. If they aren't protesting, they might not have a strong case. Since nothing is technically illegal about sexual advances in the workplace unless they are unwelcome and unwanted, the victim needs to show it happened and it was unwelcome and unwanted. The burden of proof rests on the person bringing the complaint. While IHRC deals with discrimination, the Idaho Department of Labor deals with employment laws. "In Idaho, an employer is not required to give breaks, lunch, or anything like that," said Dawn McLees, a labor compliance officer in Coeur d'Alene. Idaho practices "at will" employment, which means employers can fire employees without reason or notice. It also means employees can quit without reason or notice to the employer.

When someone is not paid the money they are entitled to, they can fill out a wage claim form at any Job Service office. The one-page form is sent to the Department of Labor, where it is reviewed. If it is a valid claim, officials contact the employer and try to negotiate a settlement. When a settlement is not reached, the case could go to a hearing, where a penalty could be levied. Sometimes the files are turned over to the legal department for litigation. "That's very rare... in a lot of cases, it's a simple case of misunderstanding between employer and employee." Neither IHRC nor the Labor Department charge fees for their services. IHRC accepts collect calls at (208) 334-2873. The Labor Department can be reached at (208)769-1579.

Batt deal to go under federal microscope

Boise—Federal policy makers put Gov. Phil Batt's deal for resumed radioactive dumping under their microscope on Tuesday in what the governor hopes will lead to the eventual removal of all nuclear waste from Idaho.

It is a proposition distasteful to both sides, but one Batt made in good faith to finally end the often-bitter seven-year confrontation between the state and the Energy Department over nuclear waste storage at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

Based on the long string of broken promises and commitments over the past four decades, deal critics warn the federal government cannot be trusted to keep its word, written or otherwise.

But the governor maintains that as bad as his deal might seem, the alternatives could be significantly worse.

In exchange for a court-enforceable guarantee that all waste will be shipped out of Idaho in 40 years, Batt offered to voluntarily allow 968 new waste shipments to be dumped at the INEL during the same period—968 shipments more than polls indicate the vast majority of Idaho voters want.

But as politically obnoxious as Batt's proposal might be to most of his constituents, it is also far short of what Assistant Energy Secretary Thomas Grumbly has reportedly been demanding during the past three months of negotiations.

By midday Friday the Energy Department will advise Batt whether it is taking or leaving a deal that includes only half the waste it wants to dump in eastern Idaho and none of the material at Washington's Hanford nuclear reservation or being piled up by commercial reactors throughout the nation.

The deal also has a much longer life span than government negotiators wanted in their most recent counter offers that Batt rejected and that many Idaho voters believe is reasonable considering potential environmental problems dumping creates.

The governor, however, believes it offers the state the kind of protection from being betrayed later on that cannot be provided by five-year or even 10-year schemes. In addition, it replaces vague verbal promises that the hundreds of tons of waste already stored at INEL will be cleaned up with the firm deadline of Dec. 31, 2035, for removal of all waste with specific performance benchmarks that must be met along the way.

Seemingly whipsawed by government negotiators on one side and his critics at home on the other, Batt went a step farther in making what he called his final best offer when he publicly disclosed the details last week, ending the months of secrecy surrounding the waste talks.

That decision miffed Grumbly, who told Batt last Friday that federal negotiators "were surprised that you held a press conference concerning your counterproposal before we had an opportunity to review it."

But Batt had advised Grumbly in the letter accompanying the terms of the deal that they would be publicly disclosed. And a week earlier Clinton administration officials apparently leaked to the Washington, D.C., trade publication "Inside Energy" some terms of an offer seemingly more favorable to the state that Batt supposedly rejected—an offer the governor said was never made.

The governor tried to establish a more cordial relationship with federal officials over the waste issue right after taking office in January. But he acknowledged six weeks ago that "early in my administration they were not as up front with me as I would have liked.

"As a result, I was finding out about their decisions through the press instead of through personal phone calls or visits," he said in a speech prepared for the Idaho Falls Chamber of Commerce, INEL's number-one booster.

"I decided not to trust the federal government and get any agreements in writing through a court order," he said.

Batt administration officials are also hoping that making terms of his deal public will mute growing congressional support to force new dumping down Idaho's throat by demonstrating just how reasonable the state is being.

Congressmen oppose nuclear waste imports

PORTLAND, Ore.—Reps. Ron Wyden, a Democrat, and Jim Bunn, a Republican, have joined forces to block the U.S. government from importing foreign nuclear waste.

The two Oregon congressmen unveiled legislation Friday that would prohibit the importation of foreign nuclear waste until the U.S. government has an operational disposal or storage site for domestic waste.

An exception would be made if the President determines that the country of origin is suspected in the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

The U.S. Department of Energy has proposed the importation of spent fuel rods from nuclear reactors in 41 countries. The waste would come through 10 ports—one of them the Port of Portland.

Under the DOE plan, up to 19 tons of high-level nuclear waste would be shipped through Portland to the Hanford Nuclear Reservation near Richland, Wash., or the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory near Idaho Falls.

Wyden called the plan "an environmental disaster looking for a place to happen."

The Wyden-Bunn bill also would allow ports to set their own guidelines to ensure the safe shipment and handling of nuclear materials.

"DOE has not fully considered the radiation risks port workers and area residents could face, even under the best case scenario," Wyden said. "And they have ignored the very real terrorist threat associated with importing radioactive waste."

Mike Graine, assistant director of the Oregon Department of Energy, said the state supports the bill because it would ensure "that the shipment of radioactive materials through Oregon occurs safely."

Scientists support Endangered Species Act

CORVALLIS, Ore.—A prestigious group of biologists finds the Endangered Species Act is scientifically sound and should be maintained, with a few improvements.

"The original justifications for the law remain valid and many of the criticisms of it could be addressed at little cost to the federal government," said Jane Lubchenco, professor of zoology at Oregon State University and coauthor of a report in Friday's issue of the journal Science.

The Endangered Species Act is up for renewal this year in Congress, where it has been the subject of fierce debate.

The report noted there is wide support in the scientific community for the act, but suggested it could be amended to protect more habitat through tax incentives for private landowners, more careful consideration of the most endangered ecosystems, and low-cost land exchanges.

The report noted that recent advances in scientific understanding of biodiversity "have underscored the importance of species protection for human welfare."

More than 20 candidates vie for Polish presidency

WARSAW, Poland—A businessman who waged a strong challenge to President Lech Walesa in 1990 elections said Monday he will run again.

This time, however, Stanislaw Tyminski is not expected to play a significant role. More than 20 candidates are running.

Walesa, who announced his reelection bid Friday during observances of the Solidarity union's 15th anniversary, is not favored either. The hardships of reform have battered his popularity, and opinion polls put him far behind ex-communist leader Aleksander Kwasniewski.

Walesa has vowed to continue his decades-long struggle against communism and make sure the nation's 6-year-old democratic and market reforms succeed.

Tyminski appeared at a news conference Monday, threatening again to reveal the contents of his trademark black briefcase and claiming it held embarrassing information about other candidates.

He said he counted on the same electorate as in 1990—Poles dissatisfied with and confused by market reforms. That year, he advanced to the second round, beating a range of politicians favored in the polls.

Bosnian president tells hunger strikers to eat

France (AP)—On day 27 of a hunger strike to protest France and the West's lack of resolve in Bosnia, France's celebrated theater director Ariane Mnouchkine received a surprise visit Wednesday from an admirer.

It was Bosnia's President Alija Izetbegovic, who on the last day of a hectic French trip drove to Mnouchkine's Theatre du Soleil east of Paris to thank her and three colleagues also on a hunger strike—and to tell them they should start eating again.

"Stop your strike. You have achieved your aim. France has finally chosen an appropriate stance toward Bosnia-Herzegovina. Since yesterday I think the situation has changed fundamentally," he said just hours after NATO jets bombed Bosnian Serb targets in retaliation for deadly shelling of the capital.

Mnouchkine and three other French theater figures have been on their hunger strike since Aug. 4. Before that, in the wake of the Serbs' violating the U.N. "safe areas" of Srebrenica and Zepa, they had collected over 10,000 signatures from artists and writers worldwide calling on the West to use military means to protect Bosnia.

But they decided signatures were not enough, that words must be matched by physical commitment, and decided on a hunger strike.

They received two letters of support from French President Jacques Chirac and messages of thanks from Sarajevo, but mostly met with indifference on the part of the French public.

Fraternities help YWCA

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Even though school has just started, local fraternities have been busy helping out the community.

Early in August the Young Women's Christian Association chapter in Troy was faced with a dilemma, their food bank was getting low on food. Jennifer Reuter reported over the summer, fifty new families signed on for assistance. This raised the monthly average to 100 families needing assistance.

"Last year the average was between sixty and seventy families," Reuter said. "But this year, every month there are more families." Reuter said the numbers aren't declining, only increasing. The YWCA attributes this jump to the shut down of the Whitepine Food Bank in Deary.

In response to this, the YWCA asked University of Idaho Greek organizations if they could lend a hand. One week before rush began, a flyer was left in each chapter's mailbox at Student Advisory Services asking each house to take one month out of the school year to contribute food.

Fifty percent of the people the Troy YWCA assists are Moscow residents, while the other 50 percent are rural residents of Latah county. Reuter also noted it is not the same families that need assistance every week or every month.

Every week the YWCA donates about 20 pounds of food, or two bags to each family. With 100 families, the YWCA goes through about 2,000 pounds of food per month. With the shelves bare, the YWCA can use all the help they can get. Alpha Kappa Lambda was the first fraternity to respond to the YWCA's request for help. The fraternity will be responsible for collecting food for September to help the YWCA.

This is not the first time the men of Alpha Kappa Lambda have gone out of their way to help the community.

Last spring the men camped outside the old Jeff's Foods parking lot to bring in food for the same cause. Another project Alpha Kappa Lambda has been heavily involved with is assisting Habitat for Humanity in building homes. The men of Alpha Kappa Lambda volunteer time out of their school schedules to help build lower cost housing in Latah County.

Last year, the fraternity also helped build a thrift store on Jackson and Third in their spare time. A new project they're getting involved in is an adult literacy program.

Vincent Perez, the philanthropy chairman for Alpha Kappa Lambda, says they're not looking for notoriety, just trying to raise awareness and trying to make a difference.

"We're looking for other houses to get involved in the food drive every month. Like friendly competition," said Perez.

On that note, other chapters are starting to get involved. As of Tuesday morning Gamma Phi Beta had taken responsibility for collecting food for October. However, Reuter noted only September and October have been spoken for, there are still months available.

Any chapter or organization that would like to help, or would like more information can get a hold of Jennifer Reuter at 883-3438. With the numbers needing food steadily increasing the YWCA encourages every chapter to get involved.

Clint Cook announces resignation from Senate

Andrew T. White
Staff

Clint Cook resigned from his position as ASUI senator effective Sept. 1, 1995, citing the time commitment it takes to be a senator as his reason.

He plans on continuing his education at the University of Idaho as well as operating his own business.

"I plan to pursue a contract with Potlatch Corp. which entails engineering drafting work," said Cook. He has had several other contracts with firms in the Northwest.

His work outside of school consists of engineering and computer expertise. He prepares computer aided designs for businesses needing them.

The success of his business and academic commitments are reasons for stepping down. Cook is currently a junior.

Carter, Olesen, and Neely are living groups represented by Cook. He also served on the Safety Task Force and University Housing and Dining committees.

The Safety Task Force was one committee Cook particularly enjoyed being a part of. The Safety Task Force committee is responsible for making the campus a safer and better learning environment for students. The committee works with various entities and is determined to make the university a better place to learn.

"Going to my living groups and talking to people and getting them to participate in ASUI, was my best experience as a senator," said Cook. He served in the senate for about 10 months before resigning.

Many of the residents in halls Cook represented were sad to see him leave. Many students living in halls represented by him said he did a "first class job." Cook said several people had sent e-mail telling him they would miss him and appreciated all he had done.

Cook's colleague Scott Wimer also recently resigned from the senate. Any interested students are invited to apply for the vacant positions. Applications for the positions are being accepted until Sept. 27. The positions will be appointments by Sean Wilson, president of ASUI.

Cook's advice for future senators is, "You need to represent the students at the university to the best of your abilities."

Beta Theta Pi fraternity wins awards

Jennifer Eng
Staff

The men of the Gamma Gamma chapter of Beta Theta Pi at the University of Idaho were honored this summer by their national chapter with two prestigious awards. The Gamma Gamma chapter received the Francis Sisson Award as well as the Virginia Tech award at their annual national convention held Aug. 3-6 in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Andrew Longeteig, the Beta Theta Pi corresponding secretary said, "These awards were definitely an honor, especially since it was first time since 1989 that we have won any national awards."

The first award, the Francis Sisson Award was awarded to 30 Beta Theta Pi chapters this year in the United States and in Canada. This is the highest honor possible for individual chapters and is awarded to as many chapters that earn it.

The Francis Sisson Award is given to chapters that comply with 19 different criteria ranging from scholarship, risk management, philanthropic events and campus involvement as well as many others that emphasize leadership and excellence.

The Beta Theta Pi chapter also won the Virginia Tech Award for chapter scholarship. Ten chapters of Beta Theta Pi on campuses in the U.S. and Canada make up 10 different regions.

Of these 10 regions only one chapter in each region will receive this award each year.

This honor is awarded based on how high a grade point average the chapter achieves. The Gamma Gamma chapter competed for the Virginia Tech Award for the scholarship award with schools like Oregon State, Willamette, Washington State University, Arizona State and Puget Sound University.

Longeteig commented the house is quite proud of these awards. "The last two years have been trying times for the Beta house," said Longeteig.

Longeteig noted the Betas feel the awards they received reflects upon the strength of the UI Greek system as well as the strength of their own chapter. Longeteig said, "These awards are the icing on the cake for all the work we've accomplished."

Beta Theta Pi is represented on 147 campuses by eleven colonies and 136 chapters in the U.S. and Canada. There are 110,000 living members including 7,500 undergraduate members.

Poll: Dole leads GOP race in Michigan

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — U.S. Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole holds a commanding lead in the GOP presidential sweepstakes in Michigan and is deadlocked with President Clinton, a new poll shows.

The EPIC-MRA Inc. survey, due out Monday, showed Dole with 43 percent of the support in the crowded Republican presidential field. No other Republican candidate got double-digit support.

Texas Sen. Phil Gramm had 9 percent, while political commentator Pat Buchanan got 8 percent. California Gov. Pete Wilson received 5 percent, while six other Republican candidates got no more than three percent each.

"Dole looks pretty solid," said EPIC-MRA pollster Ed Sarpolus. "The amazing thing is typically in polls like this the undecided (total) is larger than anybody's vote. In this, Dole has a 2-1 lead over undecided.

"That means even if you took the 26 percent undecided and gave it to somebody else in the field, they still can't catch Dole.

"Looking at these numbers, in order to win in Michigan against Dole, somebody's going to have to take votes away from Dole. They can't just do it on their own."

Sarpolus said the Dole campaign in Michigan has been locking up endorsements from top party leaders. Those include Secretary of State Candice Miller, House Speaker Paul Hillebrands and Senate Majority Leader Dick Posthumus.

Dole also has former Michigan GOP Chairman David Doyle working on his Michigan campaign.

When paired against Clinton in a hypothetical race, Dole got 44 percent, while Clinton had 45 percent. Because that margin lies within the poll's four percentage point margin of error, it works out to a statistical dead heat.

"It is possible to be one and not the other," he said. "The programming and sound of KUOI are not going to change at all."

As the station launches promotions for its golden anniversary, KUOI is urgently seeking to establish a news department. "Anyone looking into broadcast journalism and interested in getting practical experience with news writing for broadcast production, we can get it to you," Marone said.

KUOI is also looking for music processors to screen new music prior to broadcasting. The station has a library of approximately 40,000 albums and compact discs. New music arrives weekly.

The all-volunteer radio station consists of 40 to 45 disc jockeys and nine staff members.

Students and non-students are encouraged to apply. Applications are available on the third floor of the Student Union.

Congresswoman shows off first born to constituents, media

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—Congresswoman Enid Waldholtz says she plans to return to Washington sometime next week—with one slight change in her daily routine.

In between floor votes and committee meetings, she will be rushing to a private room in the Capitol to care for her newborn daughter.

"I'm looking forward to this between votes," Waldholtz said from her hospital bed Saturday, cradling the sleeping baby wrapped in a white blanket with a pink bow on her head of dark hair.

Waldholtz, 36, and her husband

Joe, 32, proudly showed off Elizabeth Greene to the news media nearly two days after giving birth by Cesarean section to the 7-pound, 7-ounce infant.

"I'm feeling much better today," she said. "I needed to get a little sleep" before appearing in public.

Waldholtz saw her Salt Lake doctor Wednesday for a regular appointment following a radio interview. But labor was induced that afternoon because Waldholtz was suffering from a mild case of toxemia. The child was born at 7:11 p.m. Thursday.

The due date was Sept. 21 and many of her colleagues were excited about the possibility of the birth taking place in Washington during the session, she said.

"But this is really the best of both worlds—to have it at home and during the August recess," Waldholtz said.

Waldholtz, a Republican, is the second member of Congress to have a baby while in office. The first was then-Rep. Yvonne Braithwaite Burke, 20 years ago.

Waldholtz said she's received dozens of calls from colleagues and friends, as well as flowers, which lined the window sill and table tops of her private room in LDS Hospital.

She said the child was not named after anyone, while Greene is Waldholtz' maiden name.

A stuffed, gray elephant sat at the foot of her bed. Waldholtz said the gift came from Hogle Zoo, which is located in her Salt Lake district.

But one of the best gifts came from House Speaker Newt Gingrich, who arranged a private office for the first-year Congresswoman in the Capitol—perk only senior members and leadership usually enjoy.

The small room will be equipped with a bassinet, couch, television, phone and computer.

Husband Joe, who works as an unpaid aide to his wife, will watch the child while mother attends to congressional business. Once a feeding schedule is established, the couple plans to hire someone to watch their daughter, Waldholtz said.

"The doctor said I need my rest, but there is absolutely no reason why I can't continue my work," she said.

"While I was pregnant I carried out my duties during one of the most demanding sessions ever."

Clinton meets with former Wyoming governor, ranchers

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP)—Before ending his August vacation, President Clinton met with former Wyoming Gov. Mike Sullivan and a number of ranchers to hear their "personal stories" about business in the West.

"It was just an opportunity for him to listen to some of their concerns about an important part of the West," Sullivan said. "He listened intently. I think everybody was pleased with the nature of the meeting."

The meeting came on Wednesday, the day before the first family departed for Hawaii.

The Clintons spent 17 days vacationing in the Jackson area. And the meeting was, in part, a counterpoint to a gathering the president held in Yellowstone with a group of environmentalists.

Sullivan said topics ranged from ranching to federal stewardship of public lands.

"Grazing issues were a large part of the conversation," the former chief executive acknowledged.

Clinton's Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt has sought to better protect public range by instituting a series of grazing reforms. Among those would be a hike in grazing fees, which is hotly contested by stockmen.

White House press spokeswoman Ginny Terzano said the get-together was a "private meeting" in which ranchers told "their personal stories."

"They are not big, wealthy ranchers," Terzano said. "Many of them are in the red. They wanted to make sure Washington understands their concerns and said that politics need to be put to the side."

The members of the private meeting also talked about private development and their worries about having people move to the area who are less tolerant of the land and wildlife.

The president did not meet with three local families whose ranches in Spring Gulch are the focus of a preservation effort.

But an Interior Department official has met with the board of the Spring Gulch Preserve to discuss the effort. The president is expected to see the material later.

Dole criticizes airstrike halt, renews threat to lift arms embargo

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole on Saturday strongly criticized halting the NATO bombing of Bosnian Serbs, saying it was premature and that rebels should be forced to loosen their hold on Sarajevo.

Dole, the leading Republican presidential candidate, also threatened to strengthen efforts to override President Clinton's veto of a bipartisan bill that would have lifted the arms embargo on Bosnia.

At the time, Clinton asserted that the measure would widen the four-year war and drag U.S. forces into the fighting.

Dole said he would postpone seeking a two-thirds majority to override the Aug. 11 veto "only if NATO military action proves to be part of a new and effective policy which leads to a just and lasting peace settlement."

"The past three and a half years have demonstrated that Serb promises are worthless and that the only meaningful measure of progress must be results on the ground in Bosnia," Dole said in a statement.

Dole's comments came just hours before NATO allies issued an ultimatum to Bosnian Serb rebels, giving them "a brief period" to end their hold on Sarajevo and other U.N. "safe areas" or be hit by more air attacks.

NATO Secretary General Willy Claes told the Bosnian Serbs to remove their heavy guns, give U.N. personnel and aid agencies complete freedom of movement and allow the reopening of the Sarajevo airport.

If not, he said, NATO and U.N. commanders are authorized to renew the attacks that were suspended Friday. The alliance set no fixed deadline, but officials spoke in terms of hours, rather than days.

Dole said "it is not enough to get the Serbs to Geneva" to negotiate an end to the war "because the Serb military continues to threaten Sarajevo."

"I believe that the halt in NATO's bombing campaign was premature. At the very least, the Serbs must not be allowed to keep a stranglehold on Sarajevo and other so-called safe areas," Dole added.

"In my view, the only hope for achieving a just and lasting settlement in Bosnia is to keep the pressure on the Bosnian Serbs and the Milosevic regime," he added. "Therefore, in my view, the Clinton administration should exercise its leadership in NATO in support of continued NATO military action, at least until the siege of Sarajevo is lifted."

President Clinton spent the day in Honolulu, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II. He didn't immediately issue any policy statements related to Bosnia.

Meanwhile, U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke met with NATO ambassadors for more than eight hours to discuss strategy, urging the Western allies to maintain the threat of airstrikes against the rebel Serbs.

NATO attacked the Serbs last week with the biggest military operation in its history after U.N. investigators blamed them an Aug. 28 mortar attack on a Sarajevo market that killed 37 people.

After three days of airstrikes, NATO called a pause Friday to give negotiators time to convince Bosnian Serbs to comply with U.N. demands.

Chenoweth gives up on spending freeze

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (AP)—Rep. Helen Chenoweth has given up on the push for a balanced budget in five years and a freeze on federal spending, a cornerstone in her campaign.

The Idaho Republican this week warned the solution is too extreme. A spending freeze would overheat the economy and devalue the dollar; slowing the rate of increased expenditures is the better option, she said.

"Unfortunately, we're increasing the decrease so we can balance the budget in seven years, not five," she said.

Chenoweth added she supports imposing smaller spending rises across the board, except for veterans' services.

"They were promised," she said. "I think they are sacred. I think promises should be sacred."

Even so, she did not discount the possibility Veterans Administration hospitals may be closed and the promised care delivered at community hospitals.

The deficit continues to plague the economic stability of American families because it spawns uncertainty for businesses and farms, she said.

"We cannot bank today on what the government may do," she said. "We live under an ever-changing regulatory climate that brings such uncertainty."

Chenoweth said she supports a deficit-reduction bill sponsored by Rep. Michael Crapo, R-Idaho.

Dubbed the "Lock Box," the measure requires all savings from eliminating government operations be applied to the national debt instead of being spent elsewhere.

Locals and Alumni hope to restore historic Albion school

Associated Press
ALBION, ID—As the third Albion Campus Festival celebrates the memory of the former teacher's college, history is crumbling into ruins.

Once an architectural beauty, the closed school campus is little more than a courtyard of boarded-up brick buildings and broken windows.

Locals keep the lawn trimmed, but they cannot stop the weeds which grow out of 100-year-old mortar in some of the buildings.

Unused for 40 years, the Albion State Normal School—which at one time graduated 40 percent of the teachers in Idaho—is now more a classroom for ghost stories than a tribute to the history of education in Idaho.

Vandals, poor tenants and age have taken their toll.

The bottom floor of Comish Hall, once a majestic dormitory and the largest of the eight buildings still standing, is sealed with plywood. A sign at the one-time entrance, warns trespassers of the danger of asbestos inside.

Albion residents, who built the first building in 1893 from rock mined locally, are scrapping to preserve the school as a tribute to education in Idaho.

Rep. Jim Kempton, R-Albion, is lobbying the Legislature for funds and support to save the school campus.

A project to renovate the first structure built on the campus, simply referred to as the 1893 building, was completed in 1993.

Kempton, through the Albion Campus Centennial Commission and the Albion Campus Festival committee, is working to bring in more money for a complete restoration project.

The annual festival of arts, crafts and alumni is one way to draw attention to the plight of the campus, Albion Mayor Don Danner said.

"There's a lot of historical and architectural significance here," he said.

"We're interested in preserving this site for the historical significance, but also for the next generation. Education has an important role in the history of Idaho."

State Board of Education gears up for mission discussions

Associated Press
BOISE—A study commissioned by the state Board of Education to re-examine the missions of Idaho's universities due soon will serve as a precursor to discussions about the future of higher education in Idaho. Those discussions will command much of the board's attention this fall and probably will spill into the Legislature this winter. Members of the State Board of Education believed they knew what the state needed from its universities in 1983, when they assigned specific responsibilities to each, along with a prohibition on duplicating efforts. The University of Idaho would focus on agriculture, engineering, architecture and other professional programs. Idaho State University would concentrate on the health professions. Boise State would be concerned with social sciences, business and the performing arts. But that was 1983. Idaho's economy was in recession. About 6,000 more Idahoans worked in farming and ranching than today.

Much has changed—except for the responsibilities assigned to the three universities. Decisions made a dozen years ago recently put state leaders in the position of saying no to $6 million for a Boise-based engineering program. Steve Ahrens, the executive director for the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, said the discussion will "help determine whether Idaho can be competitive in a national and international economy that is changing at blinding speed."

Former UI basketball player is back in jail

Associated Press
 Former Idaho basketball player Jevon Green is back in a Moscow jail after a judge increased his bail to $25,000. Green had previously posted a $5,000 bond for a series of probation violations last May. Green was not prepared to go to court for a hearing last Wednesday and his case was continued to Sept. 18. Green's public defender Robert Tunncliff told 2nd District Judge John Bengtson that he had not seen Green since July 31, despite repeated calls to his home.

Tunncliff said he sent two letters to Green in care of the University of Idaho athletic department without a response. Mike Moser, Green's probation officer, told Bengtson that Green had missed three August meetings and had moved from his apartment without permission. Green was granted school release after producing a class schedule from the University of Idaho with 17 credit hours. Bengtson added a stipulation that Green's teachers keep track of his daily attendance.

Daughter says Defense Ministry confirms father alive

Associated Press

MADRID, Spain (AP)—The wife and the daughter of a Spanish military officer that Bosnian Serb TV reported was killed in a NATO airstrike said Thursday the Spanish Defense Ministry had confirmed he was alive.

"We have no idea when he's coming home, but he's alive, he's fine," said Paloma Garcia Romero, his daughter.

Three Spanish European Union officials had been scheduled to meet with the Bosnian Serbs, along with Irish monitor James Fitzgibbon and Dutch monitor Peter Schoonenwolf, when NATO launched the airstrikes Wednesday.

All five had been reported killed by Bosnian Serb TV.

However, both Garcia Romero and her mother said Thursday the Defense Ministry had confirmed that Brig. Gen. Jose Luis Garcia Esponera was alive after new Bosnian Serb television footage was made available, showing him and two fellow EU monitors, Ambassador Fernando Sanchez Rau and Maj. Zenon Luis Quintana.

The television footage reportedly shot Thursday afternoon clearly shows Sanchez Rau talking with the Bosnian Serbs through an interpreter.

Garcia Esponera and Quintana were seen sitting in chairs and walking down a hall. All three were dressed in white military uniforms.

It was not possible to identify two other men in similar uniforms.

The Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA quoted Serb official Miroslav Toholj Thursday as saying all the five monitors had left Serb-held territories on Thursday, but that could not be independently confirmed.

"There were some security reasons for the gentlemen from the EU mission to be protected from the people's revolt and the dangers caused by... NATO attacks," Tojolj said. "They are now out of danger and are returning to their jobs and families."

known," Sarpolus said. "People have definite opinions about them. There's no disputing who these two men are. That's why a race between them could be very close."

Sarpolus cautioned that the GOP presidential primary numbers could change dramatically in the next few months and especially after early voting in Iowa and New Hampshire. Michigan's presidential primary will come next March 19.

Gov. John Engler has increasingly been mentioned as a possible vice presidential pick for the eventual GOP winner.

The survey found 48 percent of Michigan voters believe Engler should take the No. 2 spot on the ticket if it were offered to him. More than a third, 36 percent, said he should decline it, while 16 percent were undecided.

Sarpolus said those numbers reflect what some national political observers have been saying.

That is that Engler "has the credentials, but doesn't have the persona of a vice presidential candidate," Sarpolus said.

"His numbers show that people think he makes a great governor but right now they don't perceive him of being of vice presidential caliber. That might take some image changing."

Sarpolus said the short, chunky and balding Engler did not fit the typical voter's ideal of a national candidate, which is tall, thinner, and with a full head of hair.

"He has the credentials, but he doesn't really look like a vice president," he said.

The results on the Clinton-Dole matchup and the Engler vice presidential question were based on responses from 600 active voters. Those results have a margin of error of 4 percentage points either way.

The results about the GOP presidential primary are based on responses from 214 active Republican voters. Those results have a margin of error of 6 percentage points either way.

The statewide telephone survey was done Aug. 23-28.

Where Diversity Reigns

What exactly are 'values' anyway?

Bob Dole, a Republican looking for the party's nod for the presidential race next year, is seeking to gain the support of the far right by appealing to the fear of fading American values—or rather, as Dole puts it, values under “attack” by elitist liberals.

What are American values? Can anyone point to a behavior or a principle and call it uniquely or distinctly American? Maybe, but the assertion would be highly debatable. However, the “American values” Dole fears are disappearing are not the same values which his grandfather would have defended.

Values change over time and are highly subjective even when they are in vogue. To insinuate that the attack on American values is something new is ridiculous. Cultural values are always under attack. Not according to Dole however. He says we all need to embrace “the traditional American values that have guided us from the beginning.”

Most modern Americans would not want to live under the cultural values which were popular in 1776. The values held in esteem back then are often viewed as repressive and based mostly on old Christian religious beliefs—something which would not fare well in today's modern American society.

Radical, ill-considered statements like those made by Dole are both the result and the problem with the presidential nomination process of both the Democrats and the Republicans: both processes are heavily controlled by activist party members whose views happen to be somewhat extreme when compared to those of mainstream America. In order for a candidate to gain the party's nomination, he or she must first appeal to the far right or the far left.

Moderates have little choice but to largely ignore the extremist rhetoric which seems to suddenly spout from the mouths of politicians during the nomination process, or, as may happen in 1996, third-party or independent candidates may suddenly seem more attractive and viable.

Maybe there is a reason why Colin Powell is remaining so quiet. Perhaps he has decided to let the extremist rhetoric pile up for a while (and it will be a long while—national conventions won't be taking place until sometime next summer) before he leaps in to declare his candidacy as an independent. By next June, mainstream Americans will be so fed up with radical agendas that an independent president elected in November won't seem like such a long shot after all.

In either case, extremist, minority agendas have a disproportionate control over who gets elected and who doesn't. Moderates—who do not blindly bind themselves to either one party or the other—are losing out in the long run.

Moscow water fit to drink?

Strolling across campus the other day, I noticed several t-shirts bearing such phrases as “Mean People Suck,” “MTV Sucks,” and this, that and the other thing sucks.

Well I'm here to tell you what really sucks: Moscow water.

The other day, I turned on the tap, and water came out BROWN. A very dark, disturbing brown. The bouquet was reminiscent of sulfur, the taste of sewage.

Some say it's just rust, others say it's harmless minerals. I cannot print what I say it is, lest I offend some gentle reader.

Don't even try to tell me this stuff is safe to drink.

The water here is a repeat offender. Several years back, I was on the UI campus and signs were posted all about warning students against consumption of said toxic water. The odor then was reminiscent of Roundup herbicide.

Showering is perplexing. I don't know if I come out cleaner or dirtier, or for that matter if I'm showering in what I flushed yesterday.

I tried to buy a water filter pitcher, but the town has run dry. The whole city is out of them.

I was forced to buy bottled

Cori Flowers

water. It's expensive but far more palatable than watered-down refuse.

And speaking of cost, I pay $290 a month to live in a 12-foot by 12-foot cubicle, and I can't even utilize the liquid producing section of my miniature kitchen center. Either I should be refunded the purchase price of a semester's worth of water, or they should issue water filters at registration.

You know that stuff they water the grass with? Well now they're trying to make us drink it. I say if it looks like sewage, smells like sewage and tastes like sewage, then by golly it IS sewage.

But never fear, I have the solution.

Students unite! Rise up from the nameless, faceless, thirsty masses and take a stand! Show how you really feel about bad water!

I have organized a small band of loyal and fearless individuals. Join us in our quest to purify Moscow water.

Here are several non-violent options even pacifistic Hindu gurus would be proud of.

Number one: we stop drinking water altogether. After a few days, we'll be dropping like flies. While recovering from dehydration in our hospital rooms, we can plan out several lawsuits against a large number of fraternities, sororities, university departments and water treatment facilities.

Number two: don't shower. Faculty, staff, classmates and friends will soon pool together their money and supply you with a comprehensive water filtration system.

Number three (my personal favorite): we can all start wearing t-shirts that say “Moscow Water Sucks.”

I think that if we all work together on this one, we can come up with some really viable solutions.

If you have any other great ideas to help in this never-ending saga of polluted Palouse water, please feel free to submit them to me in care of this paper. In the meantime, I'm going to the screenprinters and then to another city for one of those holy and sacred British water filters.

Time for diplomatic solutions in Bosnia is nearing an end

I am not a proponent of war, but I have this to say about the recent NATO action in ex-Yugoslavia: It's about time.

For a nation such as ours that makes so much noise about human rights—going as far as to ponder whether or not Hillary Clinton should go to China—we've sure taken our time in dealing with the gross humanitarian abuses occurring in Bosnia.

Too many in this nation fear, and have feared, increased U.S. involvement in Bosnia would lead to a Vietnamese conflict that would contribute only to the further decimation of the local population and the further deepening of the national debt. I think the real 'fear' is that the United States will get little more than a warm, fuzzy feeling from helping our fellow human beings bring an end to 40 months of bitter and destructive conflict.

Remember back in 1990-91 when we had that Great Patriotic War, when there was a Republican in the White House and we fought for Freedom and Justice in Kuwait?

Hogwash.

Brian Davidson

We fought to keep our cars and industry running on the crude oil that comes out of the Middle East by the billions of barrels. We fought to keep a totalitarian regime (Iraq)—a country where the oil wealth is in the hands of a select few—from bullying another totalitarian regime (Kuwait) where the oil wealth is in the hands of a select few who were buddy-buddy with the United States.

Too bad there's no oil in Bosnia—a country which had been experimenting with peaceful democracy until their next-door neighbors, who didn't want them to set up shop without including them, decided to pick a fight.

That war would be over and the United States would be looking for other resource-rich countries in need of defense. But since the only things Bosnia is known for are rolling green hills, shell craters and the Sarajevo Winter Olympics, interest in giving them a helping hand has been feeble to say the least.

Then again, we're really not sure who to help, are we? It used to be the Bosnian Muslims and Croats on the news at night, darting through Sniper Alley and falling victim to dastardly attacks by the 'bad guys' who were looking to blow innocent civilians to bits. But the Muslims and Croats seem to have joined the Serbs in the Bad Guy club, blowing up retreating Serb civilian populations with no more compunction than was shown by their enemies whom they called evil satanic boogerheads (not a direct quote, I'm just paraphrasing).

Never has so much politicking gone into deciding whether or not the United States—by itself, or through the United Nations or NATO—would become involved in a foreign war. Republicans felt safe to ignore the civil war, passing it off as a European problem—apparently forgetting that past European problems have ballooned into two of the most destructive wars ever to be fought on the face of the planet. Most others felt it safe to avoid the question, seeing as the 25th anniversary of the end of the Vietnam War would soon loom like a thundercloud over a country that has forgotten the meaning of the phrase “Forgive and Forget”.

Europe tried to find a solution, but more politics got in the way. Who should send how many troops to what part of ex-Yugoslavia, and for how long? Finally, the United Nations was called in. French, British and Dutch peacekeepers were plunked down in defensive positions in the middle of a war zone, providing international cannon fodder for Serbs weary of picking off Muslims and Croats one by one. The Serbs assumed, and quite correctly, that taking potshots at international peacekeepers would garner them more coverage on the world's television networks.

That was their big mistake. Though some have turned the U.N.'s 'lackluster' performance in Bosnia into a reason to dismantle the organization altogether, the attacks on these peacekeepers has done more to galvanize international interest in stopping the Bosnian war than the miles of footage of fleeing refugees. These are OUR boys they're shooting, so it's about time we get involved. The 'humanitarian' effort starts first with the foreign troops with the help of the natives still on the periphery.

I will not knock the U.N. It was founded in a spirit of international peace, cooperation and idealism that this world needs in massive intravenous doses. They tried, and try still, to broker peace through negotiations. They tried, and try still, to defend the defenseless. They are doing their job.

Now NATO is in Bosnia, trying to bring an end to the conflict through destructive means. Maybe they're not there for the most righteous of reasons, but at least they're finally doing something. War is not, by far, the most ideal diplomatic tool, but it is most effective in dealing with factions who hold such low reverence for peace.

Marine wildlife being decimated

Without most Americans realizing it, this country's oceans and marine wildlife are being decimated. The oceans, once considered vast and inexhaustible, are in peril. Congress has the opportunity this year to turn the tide in favor of commercially, recreationally, and ecologically valuable fisheries resources when the Magnuson-Fishery Conservation and Management Act, the nation's primary tool for managing and protecting U.S. fisheries, comes up for review. Some of our legislators have rightly recognized the catastrophic state of our oceans and put the long-needed reform of this U.S. fisheries law at the top of Congress' 1995 legislative agenda. Bills to reform the Magnuson Act were introduced in both the House and Senate the first day Congress convened.

How our representatives in Congress handle the problems inherent in the management of our fisheries today will determine their success or failure for years to come. This grim situation has been placed on the congressional fast track, with both the House of Representatives and the Senate expected to vote on their bills, H.R. 39 and S. 39, by the end of May. From a historical perspective, the Magnuson Act accomplished what it was originally designed for in the 1970s: Phase out foreign fishing and build the U.S. commercial fishing fleet. But rather than checking the growth of our own fleet to let depleted fish populations rebuild, the new system simply "Americanized" the problem and encouraged virtually unregulated growth. By putting short-term economic gain ahead of long-term profitability and ecological balance, we now are faced with too many boats chasing too few fish.

The situation today points to the Act's shortcomings: Economic and ecological disaster from overfishing, unselective fishing practices, habitat destruction, and government mismanagement. For example, in New England, healthy fisheries sustained fishing communities for hundreds of years. Now, the situation is bleak, with fisheries collapsing and tens of thousands of people already out of work. In the Gulf of Mexico, an estimated 95 percent of commercially-caught fish spend all or part of their lives in the estuaries and shallow inshore areas, yet these essential fish habitats, which act as breeding, feeding, and nursery grounds for shrimp and other important species, are being lost so fast that there may not be a viable fishery for our children. In the Pacific Northwest, habitat loss has led to the extirpation of many of the region's salmon populations. And in the waters off Alaska, bycatch, or non-target take of fish and other wildlife, is at record highs. Last year, more than 700 million pounds of fish were thrown back dead or dying. That staggering figure is more than the total haul New England's fleet brings in each year! We need to prevent these types of harmful practices.

Fish are one of our last great public resources. As such, our entire nation has a stake in what happens to our fisheries and benefits from those that are ecologically and economically sustainable. In fact, the government estimates that the nation as a whole would directly generate an extra $3 billion in revenue if our fisheries were managed sustainably. Doesn't our fishing industry deserve the opportunity to be its most productive? And, don't our children deserve healthy oceans and fisheries in their future?

The Marine Fish Conservation Network, an 80-member coalition of local and national fishing and conservation groups, is working to raise awareness of marine fish issues across the nation. We urge you to help. Your concerns, when voiced to your members of Congress, can make a difference, but only if they hear from you today about conserving our fisheries. Who better than our young people to take the lead in saving this great public resource?

If we expect to keep America's rich fishing heritage alive, the law must be strengthened to eliminate overfishing, reduce bycatch, conserve essential fish habitat and reform the regional fishing management system that has been dominated by the industry and has contributed to the demise of our nation's fisheries.

Otherwise, we risk leaving barren seas for our children. And, what kind of legacy is that?

—Bill Mott, campaign director
The Marine Fish Conservation Network

FBI covering up Ruby Ridge

The Federal Bureau of Investigation will continue its long-standing policy of conspiracy to obstruct justice to conceal wrongdoing when the Senate looks into what happened at Ruby Ridge.

The FBI has lied to Congress, the courts, and the Department of Justice about illegal break-ins, mail openings, sanctioned assassinations, and the framing of political dissidents for murder for the past 25 years.

FBI Director Louis Freeh was a former special agent, and so he should not be shocked by the cover-up of the killing of Vicki Weaver.

Responsibility refreshing

"It wasn't anybody's fault, just one of those things that happens sometimes." These were the words Brian Wallace told the Arg. staff after he fell from the P.E. building roof on Tuesday last, breaking his back.

What an amazing breath of fresh air this is in the aftermath of two previous falls and the resulting suits against the university. Brian, thank you for taking responsibility for your misfortunes. Responsibility seems to be in short supply lately.

No hidden agenda in CCF/LFF

In the Aug. 29, 1995 issue of the Argonaut there was a letter written by Michael Godbold regarding Living Faith Fellowship and Campus Christian Fellowship. In this letter, Mike refers to LFF as a mind controlling cult. He rants and raves about secret agendas and hidden motives.

It is because of his crying "BEWARE... BEWARE" that I almost left the best thing that has ever happened in my life.

Luckily, I was not so easily duped by someone who has an open hate agenda against a local church.

I have been going to LFF for a year and eight months. I am a member of the JCD (Joshua, Caleb, and Deborah) company that Mike refers to as a company highly trained to manipulate you into going to church.

I must agree with him. I have been trained through this company, but the training was not how to manipulate.

The training I received dealt with praying for people, developing a close personal relationship with Jesus Christ, and I learned how much the pastors of LFF care for every single person on our campus. What has all this training done in my life—it's nothing short of a miracle. If you don't believe me, ask my parents. I am growing closer to a personal God, growing closer to my friends, growing in personal responsibility, growing in integrity.

The emptiness that once encompassed my entire being has been filled. I am filled with love, compassion, joy and peace. I would hope that you, the reader, before taking stock of what Mike or I have written, would come to LFF at least once. Evaluate our statements for yourself. I am confident that the God I serve can help you see the truth in this matter.

—Daniel Martin

Please drive safely around Moscow

I'm writing this open letter to all the new residents of Moscow who drive our city's streets. We in Moscow take great pride in the fact the Moscow is a Pedestrian Priority Zone. For those of you who are unfamiliar with the term "pedestrian," let me explain. A pedestrian is anyone who motivates by means of their feet—walking.

The fine for not yielding to a pedestrian in the city of Moscow is $47.00, and our police officers will ticket you for not yielding the right of way.

This means that anytime a pedestrian is waiting in a crosswalk, motorists—drivers—are to yield so that the pedestrian can cross the street.

In the downtown area, while pedestrians should use crosswalks, they also have priority crossing in the middle of Main Street.

I would like to welcome all new residents to Moscow and wish you safe driving and walking. Just remember the pedestrian has the right of way.

Link Transportation Systems

Women need right to choose

Antiabortionist right-wing groups in America choose to try and grant rights to the unborn, tissues within a placenta which are tissue-wise connected to a woman. As such, those groups want to grant rights to parts of a woman rather than to the whole woman comprised of those parts. Doing so communizes a woman's body parts and thus makes any woman a societal slave.

Over time, women have slowly gained ground to be recognized as humans, individuals with equal rights as males.

Proposing and passing laws to make women societal-slaves will be a stepping stone to further making women treated as inferior members of society as they once were in America, and still are in some other countries.

Those who love women will want them to be treated as equals, never as societal slaves, inferior beings. Therefore, those who love women will never pursue legislation to make women societal slaves.

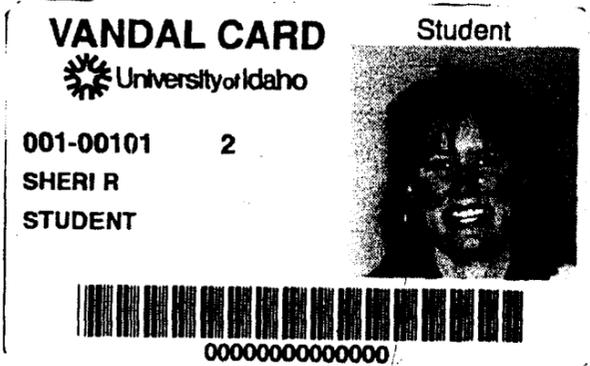

If you love any woman, you will therefore never vote for legislation to prevent women from having full rights to their bodies, legislation such as that which prevents or limits a woman's right to have an abortion if she so chooses to do so.

OUTDOOR TIP OF THE WEEK:

When buying a tent, you want to look for several things: a rain-fly that goes all the way to the ground prevents wind from coming up under the fly and shaking your tent and making you feel like you could land in Kansas any second. Also, driving rain cannot come up under the fly, soaking you and your stuff. A fly that creates a vestibule is also great to have. This gives you more room outside the body of the tent for wet dogs, wet boots and smelly socks. Certain shapes provide the most wind stability; domes are the most stable. A three season tent will keep you warmer than a two season in case you get caught off guard in a cold spell. The lighter your tent is the happier you will be when hiking 10 to 15 miles in a day. Five to seven pounds is a good range to shoot for. Freestanding tents are great if you plan on doing any hiking in desert areas or any place that has a lot of rock. With a freestanding tent, you don't need to drive stakes and if you are camping on a rock shelf, freedom from staking your tent will make your life much easier. Many new tents offer clips for securing the tent to its poles instead of sleeves. This makes set-up much easier without sacrificing strength. Reliable names include The North Face, Quest, Sierra Designs and Kelly.

TRIP TO EAGLE CAP

Sign-ups are this week for a hiking trip to Aneroid Lake in the Eagle Cap Wilderness taking place this coming weekend. The purpose of the trip is to prepare the ski huts UI uses in the winter. It won't be all work and no play however. Only two and a half hours away in northeastern Oregon, Eagle Cap is one of the most beautiful areas in the Northwest for hiking in the summer and skiing in the winter.

Transportation will be provided in car pools at no cost. Participants will be required to bring their own food and gear. A pre-trip meeting will be held Thursday evening. If you have any questions or want to sign-up, talk to the Outdoor Program in the basement of the Student Union.

WHITewater RAFTING

A one day rafting trip on the Lower Salmon is planned for Sept. 9. The cost is $25 and transportation, rafts and guides are provided. This is a great trip for those who have never been rafting before and even those experienced river-rats will find some interesting waves. The van leaves Saturday morning at 7 a.m. from the Student Union parking lot. A pre-trip meeting is scheduled for Sept. 7 at 5 p.m. There is still space available but it is going quickly so sign up today with the Outdoor Program in the basement of the Student Union.

OTHER SIGN-UPS

*The first session of Intro. to Rockclimbing begins Sept. 11. Sign-up this week. Cost is $15. The next session begins Sept. 25 if you miss this one.

*Sign-ups are also being taken for Intro. to Kayak which begins Sept. 13 at 7 p.m. Cost is $15 and class is held at the Swim Center.

*A whitewater Instructional Kayak trip is being planned for Sept. 16 and sign-ups are this week. See story on page 17 for more information.

All programs are sponsored by the Outdoor Program and fees are due when signing-up in the basement of the Student Union.

Fun within one hour of campus

Jerri Lake
Staff

Non-stop excitement, suspense, frustration and no peace or quiet! Welcome to the University of Idaho.

If you enjoy camping, hiking, fishing, hunting, photography, watching birds, animals or the outdoors in general, there are several places to go and things to do in about an hour's drive.

Currently the fishing season is open in Idaho and Washington. Species available in our general area include several varieties of trout, Steelhead, Salmon, Largemouth bass, Smallmouth bass, Bullhead catfish, Channel catfish, Tiger muskie, Bluegill, Crappie and Sturgeon.

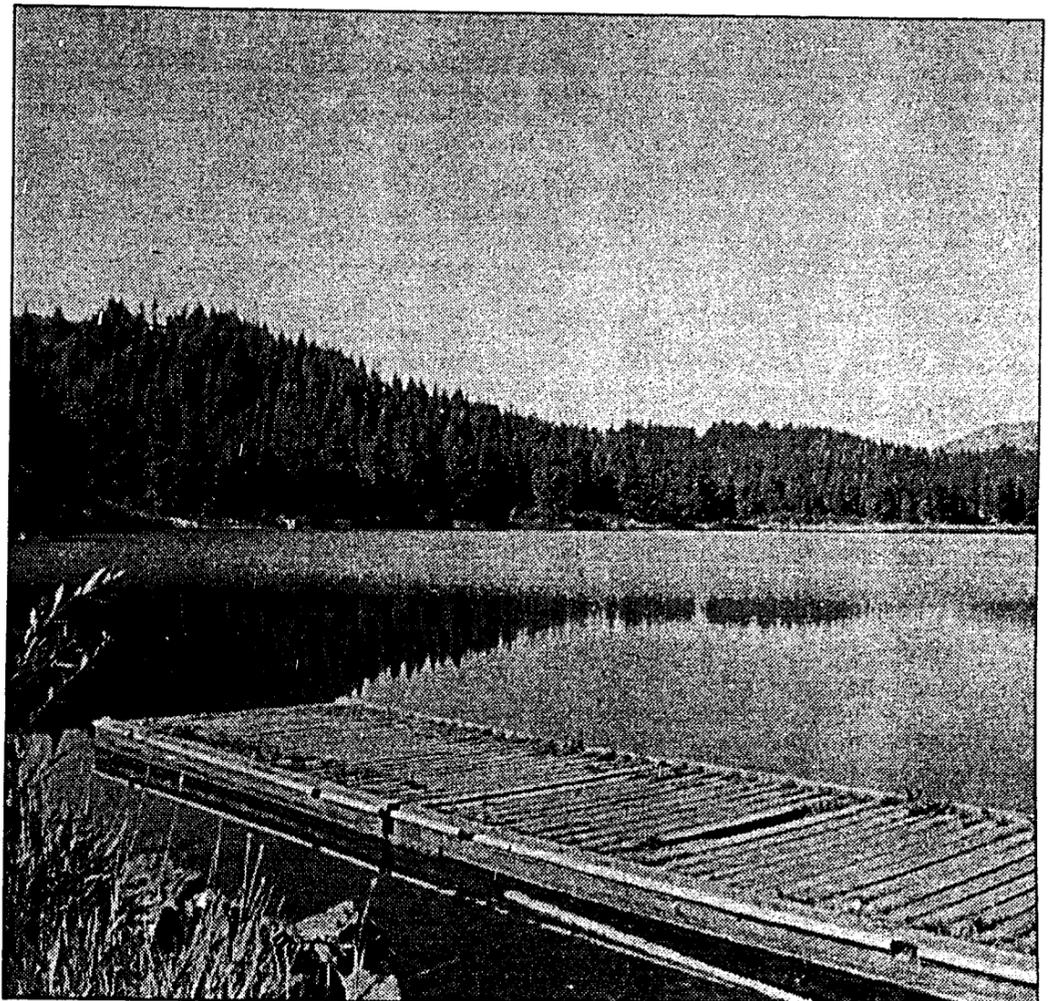

In Idaho, north up Highway 95 is the Palouse River. Trout is the main species and it is open all year.

East on Highway 8 outside of Troy is Spring Valley Reservoir. This man made lake is only 18 miles from UI and has trout, Bluegill, Largemouth bass and Tiger muskie. If you have access to a boat, electric motors are the only kind allowed. The lake also has a swimming beach and several camp sites. The camp sites are dry, but drinking water is only a short walk. A hiking trail wanders around the entire lake and the walk is easy. By the road and across the reservoir are several floating docks to fish from.

South East off Highway 3 is the Potlatch River. The river's main fish is trout and the limit is only two. South down Highway 95 is Lewiston, Idaho and Clarkston, Wash. These communities are located on the confluence of the Snake and Clearwater rivers. The rivers have trout, Channel catfish, Largemouth bass, Smallmouth bass and during the runs, Steelhead trout and Salmon.

If you want some exciting year round fun, the Carp and Squawfish measure about 20-26 inches and are a lot of fun to catch. Removing Squawfish from the rivers is a great advantage because they eat a lot of Steelhead and Salmon smolts. Because of their eating habits, sometimes there is a reward for Squawfish.

There are several state parks with swimming, camping, picnicking, boating and fishing located around these dual communities. Most have well-kept lawns, sandy beaches, modern restrooms, barbecue grills and tables.

Nestled in the pine trees is Spring Valley Reservoir, home for trout, Largemouth bass, Bluegill and Tiger muskie.

Wave runners can be rented in two locations: Mac's Cycle, located in Clarkston, Wash. and Northwest Wave runners located in Asotin, Wash. Mac's also has Jet Skis. Because it is late in the season, the companies require you call ahead for reservations.

The Snake and Clearwater rivers also allow water skiing, wind sailing, rafting and sprint boat racing. West of us in Washington state is the Snake River, with camping, fishing, boating and water skiing. From Pullman, the closest river recreation area is Wawawai Landing and Park. North of Pullman off Highway 27 is Kamiak Butte campground, nestled in pine trees.

Species to hunt in Idaho and Washington include: whitetail and Mule deer, elk, Black bear, mountain lion, pheasants, quail, Mourning dove, grouse, chukar, gray partridge, Cottontail rabbits, Jack rabbits, Snowshoe hare, ducks and geese.

In Idaho, early archery deer and elk seasons are currently open in some units and will close Sept. 24. The late seasons opens in December. Black bear and Mountain lion seasons open on Sept. 15.

The general season for deer and elk, most upland game birds, duck and geese opens in October. Washington species and seasons are approximately the same as Idaho. Be sure to stop by a local sporting goods store in the state you want to hunt or fish to get current copies of the hunting and fishing regulations. They may also be able to direct you to a general area for the species you wish to pursue.

Out of state residents will have to buy non-resident licenses, permits or tags depending upon species. Archery hunting in Idaho for resident and non-resident requires completion of a special class or proof of a prior archery hunting permit.

If you have not taken a hunter education class in Idaho or your home state, you will be required to do so if you were born after Jan. 1, 1975. In Washington the date is Jan. 1, 1972. A Washington license from the preceding year is considered legal proof of successful completion. For more information, check the regulations. In the Pullman area, you can get copies of regulations at Payless, Finches Grocery and Dissmore's IGA. In Idaho, almost every sporting goods store has copies.

Our area has many outdoor activities reasonably close to UI. Take advantage of the activities that appeal to you so your time here will be more enjoyable and rewarding.

Volunteers needed for meandering

Jennifer Swift

The Palouse-Clearwater Environmental Institute is working hard to improve the quality of water here on the Palouse.

The mission statement for PCEI is "to increase citizen involvement in decisions that effect the region's environment," said Adam Thornbrough, water quality program coordinator.

One project that needs the help of citizens is the Paradise Creek Restoration Project. The goal of this project is to restore about 1,200 feet of Paradise Creek to approximately the shape it would be had construction not interfered. The section marked for improvement is near the corner of Sixth Street and Mountain View in Moscow.

"The channel itself is basically a straight ditch and by putting meanders back in the stream, we can create habitat for in-stream organisms. The other end of the biological aspect is we will be also putting in vegetation along the stream which provides habitat for out of stream organisms," said Thornbrough.

Some of those organisms include macro-invertebrate habitat, in particular stone-flies and caddis flies. Although these insects don't sound very pleasant, they are necessary if Cut-throat trout are ever to come back to Paradise Creek. "Right now, as far as we know, Paradise Creek does not support Cut-throat trout," said Thornbrough. This is a long term goal for the restoration project.

Vegetation to be planted includes willow trees, Ponderosa pine, aspen, alder, and other plants that can be found locally. Smaller fruit bearing plants and shrubbery will also be added to increase habitats for insects and animals. In order to add these meanders and vegetation, volunteers are needed to help do the planting and adding of snags, and a downstream sediment dam.

"We'd like to have people on site, crews of anywhere between 10 and 20 volunteers on the site at all times, if possible. People can come out and spend a couple of hours any time or spend a Saturday out there," said Thornbrough.

PCEI has been around for almost 10 years, but it hasn't always been known by that name. The organization originally started as the Hanford Watch, which was formed after the Chernobyl nuclear disaster in Russia in 1986. The program moved away from nuclear issues altogether and focused on sustainable agriculture issues. A transportation program was added later and finally the water quality program.

The first phase of reconstruction began on Aug. 28 with the ground breaking and on-site mobilization for excavation. On Sept. 8, the excavation is expected to be completed and this is where the volunteers come in. Local citizens will help with the installation of the down-

Small town of Avery rich with possibilities

"Arrive as a stranger, leave as a friend." So the bumper sticker says of the town of Avery, Idaho. It is a town that has it all: trees, a paved road, an indoor pay phone, and an interesting history. It also has the St. Joe river, home to lots of fish.

To look at this town with a population of about 80, you'd never know it was a booming railroad town of over 1,100 only 70 years ago. Originally homesteaded in 1894 and designated a major division point for the Chicago-Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railroad in 1908, it was a center of commerce and activity. Avery was nearly destroyed in the great fire of 1910 by a 20 mile solid line of fire, but a handful of volunteers refused to evacuate, setting backfires in an attempt to save the town. Their efforts were successful, only one building was lost and over 200 residents were able to return to their homes after fleeing to eastern Washington to avoid the fire.

Today, Avery relies on logging and tourism. Hunting and fishing are some of the more popular activities in the area. "There's tons of fish in this river," says Tony, owner of the Avery Trading Post, proud home of Avery's only indoor pay phone. "People ask me what I'm going to do when I sell, leave? I say absolutely not, I'll be here every weekend. You can't beat this country."

Even if the fish aren't biting, the St. Joe area is some of the more beautiful country in north Idaho. A number of trails are available for hiking and camping, and one could float the river for an afternoon, letting the current carry you through the scenic and peaceful valley. As for the river itself, it is an angler's paradise, full of deep pools and plenty of rocks for fish to hide behind. Tall trees and steep banks line the river, casting long shadows over the water and offering seclusion from the road, which parallels the river from St. Maries to just outside of Montana.

Avery is the model rustic backwoods town. It's the home of a few houses, a bar and restaurant, a trailer park, a store and historic Avery Work Center, owned by the U.S. Forest Service since the turn of the century. You'll hear locals tell stories about the great fire, fishing, hunting, pet bobcats and cougars people used to terrorize bar patrons with.

There will be an extensive mountain bike trail going in that will follow old railroad tracks from Lookout Pass to Avery, running over old train trestles and through a network of more than 20 tunnels.

With a terrific stretch of river for fishing and its small town charm, Avery offers a great weekend getaway. From Moscow, it's a three-hour drive, and well worth it. Although it has some wonderful riverside spots to do homework, you'd do better to leave the books at home and appreciate some of the great outdoors that Idaho has to offer.

One of the more visible projects of PCEI on campus is the bat boxes along the creek next to the baseball fields. These were installed to encourage the nesting of bats, which help control insects, such as mosquitoes, that bother people. They are a natural control and prevents the use of electronic bug zappers. The natural habitat for bats in the city has been reduce, so the boxes were installed to bring more bats into Moscow.

PCEI also has literature on ground water quality, drinking water quality, the Paradise Creek watershed, and data on the macro-invertebrate habitat in the creek.

They are also working with the Idaho Water Research Program on building a demonstration wetland project to treat sewage effluent. There will be a habitat enhancement program associated with the wetland project. PCEI also sponsors programs in sustainable agriculture and transportation.

There are plans for a commuter shuttle to run between Moscow, Troy, Genesee and Potlatch to help control pollution associated with too many cars on the road.

Roadrunners no match for Vandals

Dan Eckles

Sports Editor

The Idaho Vandals spoiled any opportunity for the New Mexico State Roadrunners to end their Labor Day weekend on an up-note, pounding the Big West foes 15-12, 15-13, 15-5 Monday night in Memorial Gym.

The Roadrunners (1-4) dropped three of four matches in Pullman at the Cougar Challenge hosted by Washington State University and looked to salvage something out of their trip to the Palouse, but the UI crew nixed those plans with a solid hitting effort.

Lina Yanchulova, who was named the Big Sky Conference player-of-the-week Monday, powered down 22 kills against only three errors for a .422 hitting performance. The senior outside hitter along with freshman middle blocker Jessica Moore also contributed a team-high 10 digs.

"Lina (Yanchulova) just continues to amaze me," Idaho coach Tom Hilbert said. "She made some shots tonight that were incredible."

Moore and true freshman Beth Craig were the only other Vandal hitters with double figure kill totals, chipping in 10 apiece. The Vandals (4-1) totaled 61 kills and hit .357 as a team, including a .478 game two effort, in the three-game sweep.

Junior setter Lynne Hyland dished out 39 assists and kept the NMSU defense off pace with seven dump kills.

Monday's win extends Idaho's home winning streak to 32 matches, dating back to the 1992 season.

Idaho had little time to rest before its matchup with NMSU after returning from a two-day tournament at the University of San Francisco. Idaho captured second place at the tourney, finishing 3-1 in the round robin format.

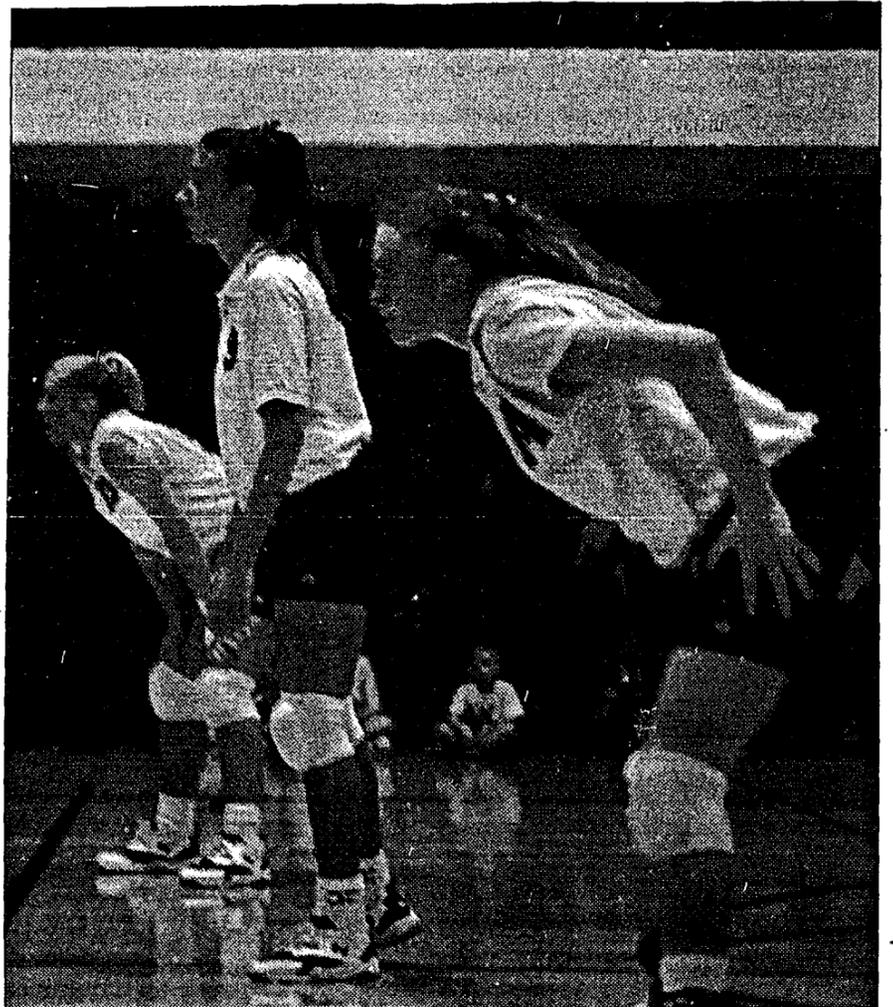

Yanchulova and middle-blocker Louisa Kawulok were named to the all-tournament team. The Bulgarian sensation racked up 71 kills, a .361 hitting percentage and 51 digs in the four matches. Kawulok had 39 kills, a .345 hitting percentage and 21 blocks over the two-day stretch.

The Vandals lost their opener to a solid San Jose State squad 18-16, 15-10, 15-11. SJSU outside-hitter Paola Paz-Soldan pounded the Idaho defense for 23 kills.

The Dons of USF didn't give the UI crew much problem, falling in three games 15-11, 15-13, 15-5. Idaho rallied for 56 kills compared to USF's 42 and outhit the West Coast Conference team .252 to .129. The Vandals also outdug the Dons 67-50.

In UI's third match the Vandals throttled Eastern Michigan 15-9, 15-12, 15-8. Idaho dominated the stat sheet once again, outhitting EMU .229 to .121, outdigging them 51-40 and outblocking them 9-4.

Idaho wrapped up the tournament with a 15-7, 15-7, 15-10 victory over a young Cal-State Northridge club. The Vandal defense was phenomenal allowing the Matadors to hit just .028 in the three game set. Idaho also brought up 83 balls for digs.

The Safeco Classic is Idaho's next home action Sept. 15 and 16. Oral Roberts, Southeast Missouri State and Ca-State Northridge make the trek to Moscow for the annual tournament.

The Vandals will travel to Portland, Ore. to clash with UP, UC-Irvine and Sacramento State Friday and Saturday.

UI offense sputters in opening loss

Damon Barkdull

Thirty-two thousand twenty-four Oregon State fans packed Parker stadium, waiting to see their upstart Beavers pound the Division I-AA Idaho Vandals Saturday.

It didn't happen as the Beavers triumphed 14-7 over the Vandals in a classic defensive struggle.

In fact, the score at the end of the game didn't quite represent how close the Vandals were to winning.

Two big plays by OSU were the difference in this non-conference matchup, including: a 67-yard touchdown run by Cameron Reynolds and a 45-yard pass completion. Subtract these two plays and Idaho's defense basically stuffed an OSU option attack that ranked number five in the nation in rushing last year.

The same swarming Idaho defense that was ranked number one last year against the run, held the Beavers to 161 yards on 47 carries.

Offensively, the Vandals had nothing to brag about.

The Vandals had four offensive series prior to halftime and within those possessions Idaho went backwards 26 yards—roughly 13 possessions for 19 yards.

"We just weren't sharp, I know I wasn't," said UI starting quarterback Eric Hisaw who was later replaced in the third quarter by backup Brian Brennan.

Bruised and abused Idaho quarterbacks couldn't take all the blame, considering the fact a veteran UI offensive line allowed seven sacks.

Idaho collected just 153 yards of total offense and for the first time since 1986 Idaho had been held under 200 yards.

"We weren't able to run effectively on early downs, so we became predictable on late downs," Idaho coach Chris Tormey said at a Tuesday press conference. "That's what those guys (OSU) are, a pressure, attacking defense. If you get into predictable situations you are in trouble."

Both Hisaw and Brennan appeared to be a bit rusty, combining for only 80 passing yards between the two.

One may question UI coach Chris Tormey's lack of confidence in Hisaw.

"We've got two guys that are proven players. Eric was struggling a little bit in the first half so we just thought we'd see if Brian could give us a spark in the second half. I don't know that one out-performed the other," Tormey said of his two quarterbacks.

The Beavers got off to a fast start when OSU's Reynolds scampered off to a 67-yard touchdown run.

Idaho was quick to strike back when Hisaw hit Dwight McKinzie on a short touchdown pass. The eventual Vandal score was capped by a 57-yard drive that saw UI running back Joel Thomas rush for 27 yards.

The Vandals had the chance to take the lead in the game but a 23-yard field-goal attempt by Ryan Woolverton was no good early in the second quarter. Twice before halftime Idaho had excellent field position in OSU territory but was unable to convert, largely because of a blitzing Beaver defense.

Entering the second half, Brennan got the nod and didn't show the spark Tormey had hoped for, finishing a lackluster 7-20 for 29 yards.

Midway through the third quarter OSU again shocked an otherwise stellar Idaho defense and posting a 45-yard pass reception to Terrance Blackwell. Blackwell's reception eventually led to a 2-yard touchdown run by Reynolds.

Although this so-called mismatch between Idaho and Division I-AA opponent OSU may have put a lot of pressure on UI to show what they might accomplish in the Big West, the Beavers had a taste of pressure themselves.

"There was an element of surprise for us; we had no idea what to expect," said OSU's Reynolds.

Overall, something was proved by the Vandals on an overcast day in Corvallis.

"I was surprised we could play that

Big Sky falters in week one

Well, for all of those Big Sky Conference followers who think the conference is every bit as good as Division I-A opponents—think again.

So far this season the BSC has played four I-A teams and show a less than stellar record of 0-4.

Of those four losing teams, two of them were trounced, losing to I-A opponents by more than 20 points.

In fact, the only team in the BSC who won last weekend were our friends over in Missoula—the University of Montana Grizzlies. UM romped over Division II perennial powerhouse Eastern New Mexico by a score of 41-14. The Griz might get their first real taste of competition when they face our Palouse buddies Washington State in Pullman.

The Lumberjacks of Northern Arizona had a tough opener against New Mexico and got jacked, cracked and smacked by the Western Athletic Conference I-A Lobos 45-21. NAU will open up at home next weekend against Cal-State Sacramento.

In other BSC action Montana State dropped its first opener to yet another I-A opponent. MSU was pounded by Colorado State, also of the WAC, in its first season game on the road. The Bobcats then go out on a limb to face NAIA Central Washington in their home opener at Bozeman.

Vandals spell defense T-O-O-M-E-Y

Editor's note: A partial version of this story ran in last Friday's edition of the Argonaut, however due to computer problems it did not run in its entirety. The partial story did not do justice to Mr. Vanderwall or Ms. Toomey. Here is the story as it should have run. We at the Argonaut are sorry for the inconvenience and error.

Mark Vanderwall
Staff

Standing at only 5'4", Sarah Toomey is used to looking up to others, but after last season the roles were reversed and people started looking up at her.

Toomey, a senior from San Juan Capistrano, California, ended up at Idaho due to a poor coaching decision at her former University of Connecticut. Toomey started the 1992 season as a true freshman for the Huskies and went on to become the Big East Conference Freshman-of-the-year after leading the nation in digs. After her coach decided not to give her a full scholarship, Toomey went on a trip back home for the next year to play at Grossmont Junior College to get her Division I-A eligibility back. Toomey was never released by the UCONN coaching staff before she left.

Toomey came to the University of Idaho with the understanding the she would be a defensive specialist here and understand is an understatement for the hurt she put on the rest of the league last year, digging anything within the confines of Memorial Gym.

"I could have gone other places and been an outside hitter, but I've always enjoyed defense and I really wanted to go to a winning program as well, so I came to Idaho," said Toomey.

Another concern of Toomey's was that after leaving UCONN, some schools might overlook her because of her height, but luckily for Idaho there is no clown holding a yard stick standing in front of the Women's locker room here, with a sign saying, "You must be taller than this to play," as there is at many of the other local carnivals.

After a good showing in the alumni game and a lighter schedule than last season, Idaho looks good to repeat the same glory it produced with a 31-3 record last season.

"I think we look as good if not better than we did last year at this time," said Toomey. "We have really good balance offensively and defensively this season, whereas in the past we might have gotten the label as being a stronger offensive team," added Toomey.

While attending the University of Connecticut, Toomey also participated during the indoor track and field season for the Huskies.

"I only competed in the indoor season because of another coaching disaster," said Toomey.

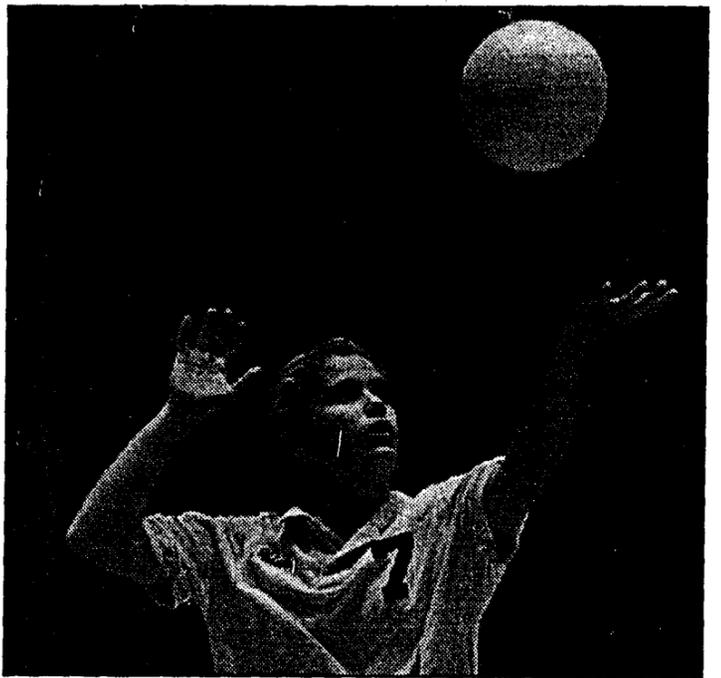

Being a two-sport athlete should come as no surprise to those of you who know about Toomey's past. Her father, Bill Toomey competed for the U.S. Track and Field team at the 1968 Olympics and captured a gold medal in the Decathlon. Her mother, Mary Rand competed for Great Britain in the 1964 Olympics and had her fair share of success as well.

"My mom won a gold in the Long Jump, (Toomey's event in college) a silver in the Pentathlon and a bronze in the 4x100 meter relay," said Toomey.

"I received a lot of pressure from everyone but my parents to follow in the family footsteps," said Toomey. "They were always real supportive of whatever I did."

Sticking with the court instead of the track has paid off for the Vandals as Toomey posted double figures in digs numerous times last season and will be the defensive catalyst once again this year.

After her days on the hard court are over Toomey has plans to become a sports broadcaster. The general communications major will be leaving the University of Idaho this May to start the road to her next success as a valuable member of the work force. As for where to look for Toomey in the next five years, she says, "Your guess is as good as mine."

If Toomey's future holds the same work ethic as she possesses on the hardcourt, you may find your self hitting the sheets some night to the sound of SportsCenter closing a late night Big Show edition to the sound of "This is Sarah Toomey for the entire ESPN crew, have a good night."

Man of steel's real name is Cal not Clark

Mark Vanderwall

As you are preparing to read this column, keep in mind records are meant to be broken, along with arms, legs and egos.

Cal Ripken has made it through the arms and the legs, and never really had to worry about the ego. Tonight he will break the record that has kept him going and more or less made him immune to all of the problems and sicknesses many of us see on a day-to-day basis.

Everyone has been talking about the streak, but what they are forgetting is you and I have taken for granted that we could be alive during Cal's run and better yet, watch this sure to be Hall of Famer surpass a record was once thought to be the toughest of all to beat.

Along with his record breaking streak, Cal has managed to put together many other numbers that are incredible as well. A plethora of Gold Gloves and All-Star appearances only scratch the surface of what he has meant to the game of baseball since his arrival in the early 80's.

Coming from a family deep in baseball heritage, Cal has made his name stand-out from the rest of his family as the greatest. His brother Billy, for those of you who collect cards, is known more for what he wrote on the end of his bat for the 1989 Fleer card than he is for anything he ever did on the field. His father, Cal Sr. was one of the great Oriole managers until his termination in 1988 and the family showed great closeness as both Cal, Cal Sr. and Billy were part of the Baltimore Orioles in 1987 and 1988.

The fact that they were all Orioles should not come as a great surprise when you consider this family made it's home only 25 miles from Camden Yard, in near by Aberdeen, Maryland.

What is almost as shocking as him breaking the record, is that he has been with the same team since his arrival to the big leagues in 1981. At 35, Ripken has taken on a little less and a little grayer hair, but neither has had an effect on the way he plays or loves the game. Ripken will be one of few that can say he lived his childhood dream to the fullest.

He always wanted to play for the Orioles and as if that wasn't enough, he will in all likelihood, end his career with the same team his childhood dream started with, the Orioles.

The man who Ripken will be replacing in the record books is a great story as well and as the old saying goes, "Out with the old and in with the new." The old happens to be a man that seemed to be indestructible during his playing days, until he died of what is now known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

Gehrig compiled what seemed to be an unsurpassable record during his playing days and Ripken almost wasn't able to complete his task as last season was cut short due to the strike. One of the main concerns for the players union was whether or not Ripken would be able to pick up where he left off if the strike did occur. I guess we all know the answer to that question as the page will finally be turned tonight with consecutive game number 2,131.

In a sport that is becoming more widely known for contract disputes and labor negotiations, one man showed there is still some light at the end of the tunnel for those who still play for the love of the game. Money, prestige and attention never crossed the mind of Cal Ripken when it came to being out there everyday to play the game he dreamed about playing since he was young. His love for the game is what got him to this point in his career and it's a shame that the same love is not duplicated by those who were gifted enough to choose the same career. Congratulations Cal for showing that America's pastime holds a place in the future as well.

well defensively. There are a lot of great PAC-10 defenses that haven't played them that well," Tormey said.

The Vandals will take this weekend off and then return to action the following weekend at home against Division II Sonoma State, California. Sonoma was hammered Saturday 59-7 by St. Mary's.

"I think we need to go out and have success on both sides of the ball, but if we don't respect our opponents we will lose," Tormey said. "We have to be two weeks better than we were against OSU."

stay within seven points of Western Michigan, but came up short, losing 28-21. Weber, again has to make the trek to Michigan for yet another non-conference game. This time the Wildcats will try their luck against the middle of Michigan, rather, Central Michigan.

Three teams in the BSC took last weekend off including: Boise State, Eastern Washington, and Idaho State.

Boise State travels to Logan, Utah, Saturday to face Utah State of the Big West Conference. USU, now led by former UI coach John L. Smith, will be looking to knock off the I-AA Broncos who found themselves picked as pre-season national champions in some national college football polls.

A struggling Idaho State football program makes the journey to California to face Cal Poly San Luis Obispo. The overall series between these two schools is in favor of Cal Poly 7-2-0.

The Eastern Washington Eagles get under way this Thursday against SW Texas State. This is the first meeting between these two schools.
