Faculty and staff discuss selection of president

Christopher Clancy

Staff

Vision, leadership and cooperation were common themes in discussing qualifications for a new university president during an informal convention of faculty and staff, in Brink Hall, Thursday.

The Presidential Forum, lasting nearly two hours, and attracting about 40 staff and faculty members, was an opportunity to express concerns in comments to be released to the presidential screening committee pre-empting the first meeting of that committee Sept. 25.

The position advertised in the Sept. 8 edition of the Chronicle of Higher Education, describes a list of general qualifications, but according to faculty members, consists mostly of information about the university itself.

At Thursday's meeting those qualifications were expanded to include goals of individual colleges and organizations on campus in addition to qualifications with regard to prospective candidates approach to management and finance.

Addressing the need for "multilateral cooperation," Physics Professor Phil Deutchman said a new president needs to take less of a "top-down" approach to the position than has been the case in past administrations.

"We would like empowerment... someone who understands faculty and staff issues," said Deutchman. "Someone who will say power is in the faculty not in it's administrators," said Professor of Education Ernie Biller adding to comments made by Deutchman and others.

"We want a president who will go to bat for the marketplace of ideas that UI represents," said Deutchman, suggesting that in the past, programs such as the arts and humanities may have been placed at the "back of the bus" to engineering and the sciences.

Another key element of the forum was the agreement the new president should be influential. "We need a great persuader," said Malcolm Renfrew, professor of chemistry emeritus.

Also, said Renfrew, support is needed to maintain UI's position as a leader in research in Idaho, without which UI's number one position could be threatened by competing institutions like Boise State University.

Another topic of the discussion was the development of new tech-

Video teleconferencing connects Idaho schools

Sean Tetpon

Staff

The University of Idaho installed a video teleconferencing link with North Idaho College last Thursday.

NIC is the second school to receive video teleconferencing capabilities from UI's unnamed video teleconferencing project. The project began with a link to Boise State University in October of 1994.

Video teleconferencing rooms at UI, BSU and NIC have two television monitors with a video camera attached on top.

The camera sends an image of the immediate room to one monitor, and the same image to a remote conference room. An incoming video signal is displayed on a second monitor. Thus, each conference room views itself, and the remote site on either monitor.

"A coder/decoder takes video from the camera, converts it to a digital medium, compresses it and sends it out over a phone line," said Steve C. Hall, manager for technology and production services at UI Engineering Outreach. "It is not a standard telephone line. It is a 24 channel line you can send data over, at 1.5 megabits per second. It gives you a higher bandwidth than a normal telephone line," he said.

Hall said the cost of video teleconferencing per hour of use is not much more than making a normal long-distance telephone call.

Michael Lasher, assistant director of telecommunications, said the cost for video teleconferencing between UI and BSU is $10 to $15 an hour.

"The cost of a telephone call to Boise during the day is $12 an hour, just talking on the telephone," he said. "With video teleconferencing you have the ability to do a video conference with a group of people, and talk to them in a real environment, for not much more than the cost of a telephone call."

UI's video teleconferencing system enables faculty, staff and students to teach courses, hold meetings and conduct interviews without leaving campus.

"It has saved a lot of time, and a fair amount of money on trips to Boise for short meetings," said Hall. "They can now be done right

Newly accredited dietetics program provides experience

Janet Birdsall

Staff

It's an old catch-22: employers are looking for experienced personnel; job hunters seek to gain that experience through employment.

In University of Idaho's newly accredited Coordinated Program in Dietetics, students gain hands-on experience while in school. All students complete 1,000 hours of supervised experience—the equivalent of six months' full-time employment—before they graduate, said CPD Professor Rose Forbes.

CPD was just accredited this fall and is the only coordinated program for dietetics in Idaho, said Kathleen Gabel, CPD director. Coordinated programs are those which combine regular classroom instruction with practical experience.

"All the students have clinical experience, all of them have management experience, and all of them have community experience," Gabel said.

Before becoming accredited, the program spent two years in a developmental process to prepare for a site visit. Two site visitors came to inspect UI's program this spring, Gabel said. During their two-day visit, they met with students, faculty and administration.

Students wishing to take the CPD program must apply and interview. They also must complete 70 credits in specified classes.

"We're pretty fussy about getting the students in, and we work hard with them once they are in the program," Forbes said.

Once accepted, juniors take classes at UI and work in Wallace cafeteria. "It's our lab!" Forbes said. They may also work in Moscow schools and the Moscow Care Center.

Seniors go to Spokane, where they attend classes and participate in community nutrition internships for the first part of the fall. These internships can be at the Women, Infant, Children program, the food bank or the heart institute, among other places. Following that, they gain experience in Spokane hospitals. The final 12 weeks of their senior year is spent working as a dietitian.

"They are expected to get up to speed in that hospital in a short period of time. It's tremendously hands-on," Forbes said.

Besides working traditional jobs in hospitals and nursing homes, some students are now being trained in positions such as food brokerage and food distribution. As hospitals face cutbacks, fewer dietitians are being hired at hospitals.

"We try to keep up with what the opportunities are and give our students the opportunities," said Forbes.

Blackfoot outlaws bridge diving

BLACKFOOT, Idaho—The Blackfoot City Council has outlawed diving or jumping from bridges within city limits.

The new ordinance makes jumping from any bridge a misdemeanor which carries a $300 penalty and/or six months in jail.

Blackfoot Police Chief James Jackson advocated the bridge-diving ban in June, when the Snake River was raging under the Old West bridge.

Eight youths urged the council to put up notices about the dangers of diving instead of prohibiting it. They said it is dangerous to dive from the bridges, but it is their right.

Mayor Scott Reese said the issue was liability:

"We're not trying to limit anyone's fun. We need to minimize the risks."

Comments sought on salmon facility

LEWISTON—The public is invited to comment on an environmental assessment for proposed fish facilities at Pittsburg Landing on the Snake River.

The environmental assessment, by the Walla Wall District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, describes the impacts associated with the construction and operation of a temporary fall chinook salmon acclimation facility. The site is located in the Hells Canyon National Recreation Area near Whitebird and in a portion of the Snake River designated as a National Wild and Scenic River.

The goal of the project is to get more endangered adult fall chinook salmon to return to the Snake River upstream of Lower Granite Lake for natural spawning, rather than returning to the Lyons Ferry Hatchery.

The number of returning adult salmon for the past 10 years has been at near-record low levels.

A team of officials from the Corps, the U.S. Forest Service and the Nez Perce Tribal Fisheries Management Office have identified Pittsburg Landing as the preferred site for the facility because it does not require any access improvement. It also does not require any site preparation before construction of the facilities.

Salmon can't afford crime cost

SALMON, Idaho—Some Salmon residents say they want to get tough on crime. But they got sobering news from officials: they can't afford it.

A citizens group wanting tougher enforcement of the laws held a meeting Thursday night.

"There is a problem coming to Salmon, Idaho and if we don't do something about it, we're going to look back 10 years from now and wish we had," said Larry Wade, an organizer of the meeting.

The group wanted a full-time prosecutor, swifter justice, stiffer penalties and hard labor for adult and juvenile offenders.

Magistrate Judge Fred Snook and Deputy Prosecutor Don Robertson said they had to face economic reality.

Robertson said one full-time prosecutor couldn't handle the county's caseload alone. And Snook told them the county didn't have enough money to get tough on crime.

"A judge could literally bankrupt the county if he sent everyone to jail," Snook said.

Lately, there are more candidates for incarceration coming into his court, he said. Since construction of FMC's Beartrack Mine began nearly two years ago, the county's six-bed jail has been overflowing.

Overcrowding in state prisons has compounded the problem. Felons charged with crimes like burglary, normally tried in district court and sentenced to state institutions, are being sent back to counties with charges reduced to misdemeanors.

Snook said cases like that can take up county jail space up to six months. Because extra prisoners go to Blackfoot and cost the county $60 per day each, sometimes he lets prisoners out before they've served their full sentence, Snook said.

The cost of curbing juvenile crime is even greater. Because Lemhi County has no place to detain juveniles, Snook must send them to a state facility at about $90 per day. Often he has to wait months before there's room.

In 1994, Lemhi County spent more than $30,000 housing juveniles compared to $700 in 1992.

Weaver offered shotgun supply, informant says

WASHINGTON—An undercover informant insisted Friday that he did not trick Randy Weaver into making an illegal weapons sale and told a Senate panel the white separatist offered to "supply me with shotguns all day long."

But skeptical senators wrung concessions from the head of the agency that employed the informant that the agency mishandled one aspect of the case.

John Magaw, director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said it was "inexcusable" that an ATF agent characterized Weaver to the U.S. attorney's office as a suspect in bank robberies.

Weaver's sale of two sawed-off shotguns to an ATF informant and Weaver's failure to appear for trial were followed by a shootout and 11-day standoff on Ruby Ridge in northern Idaho in 1992 that killed a deputy U.S. marshal and Weaver's wife and 14-year-old son.

Testifying earlier from behind a partition, informer Kenneth Fadeley, his voice distorted electronically to disguise it, said that Weaver abruptly declared one day in October 1989, "I would like to go to work for you."

At the time, Fadeley, posing as an arms trader, was infiltrating groups of right-wing extremists for ATF.

"I was taken aback" because it was the first time gun sales had come up in a series of discussions between the two, said Fadeley.

Fadeley bought two sawed-off shotguns from Weaver later that month—a charge for which Weaver was acquitted at his 1993 trial.

Abortion clinic arsonist sentenced

PORTLAND—A woman convicted of setting fires at six abortion clinics was sentenced today to 20 years in federal prison.

Rachelle "Shelley" Shannon of Grants Pass already had been convicted of shooting and wounding an abortion doctor in Wichita, Kan., in August 1993.

"I can see here a record of violence," U.S. District Judge James Redden said at a sentencing hearing held under heavy security.

"She's a nice person and good mother and wife," Redden said. "I don't understand how you could go from one to the other but it happened."

Shannon, who had been awaiting sentencing in a Portland jail, pleaded guilty June 7 to 10 federal charges resulting from firebombings at West Coast clinics.

She sat motionless throughout the sentencing hearing and declined to make a statement when Redden asked her if she wished to speak.

Shannon will serve the 20-year sentence—the maximum under federal guidelines—after she completes her prison term for the Kansas shooting. She has about seven years left on the Kansas sentence.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Stephen F. Peifer said Shannon could win early release if she does not communicate with other anti-abortion activists while in prison.

Documents filed by prosecutors indicate that Shannon did not act alone in setting the fires in 1992.

China drafting law against dumping

BEIJING—China, accused by other countries of exporting its goods at below-market prices, is drafting its own anti-dumping laws, an official newspaper said Sunday.

The China Daily's weekly business insert quoted Shi Zhaoyu of the trade ministry as saying officials were developing a law that would target foreign companies selling goods in China at prices lower than cost.

"We've received complaints from enterprises that certain Russian-made asbestos and Japanese color films are selling in China at unreasonably low prices," the paper quoted Shi as saying.

It did not give details of the allegations, and did not say when the draft might be completed.

China would also use the law to respond to accusations that China dumps its own products on overseas markets, Shi said.

China was investigated 37 times for dumping last year, 15 times by the United States. China settled one case in August by agreeing to limit its honey exports to the United States.

Shi said most foreign dumping charges are unfair because they ignore China's low labor costs.

Kidnappers extend deadline for killing hostages

SRINAGAR, India—A Kashmiri separatist group holding a Spokane, Wash., man and three other Westerners hostage extended its Saturday deadline to kill the captives.

But in a statement to a local newspaper, the Al-Faran group warned the Indian government not to waste any more time and to free 15 of its jailed members in exchange for the captives' freedom.

The statement did not set a new deadline.

On Friday, the kidnappers warned that they would execute the hostages if the government did not free 15 imprisoned rebels by Saturday evening. They have already decapitated a Norwegian hostage.

"We are extending the deadline on the appeal of the relatives of the hostages," said the statement to the Al-Sfa newspaper. "We advise the Indian government not to waste any more time and meet our demand and we want to make it clear that the responsibility for the hostages safety is now with the Indian government."

Jammu-Kashmir government's spokesman Kulbhusan Jandial said he has no information on the new deadline and had not seen the statement.

"We can, however, hope that good sense will prevail on the kidnappers and no harm will come to the hostages," Jandial told The Associated Press.

The shadowy Al-Faran group kidnapped six Westerners in the Himalayan mountains of Jammu-Kashmir state more than two months.

McClure honored as distinguished Idahoan

Justin Oliver Ruen

Former U.S. Senator James McClure has been chosen to receive the University of Idaho Alumni Association's Distinguished Idahoan award.

McClure, who served Idaho for 18 years in the Senate and six years in the House of Representatives, is the fourth person to receive the award since its inception in 1978.

The award is given for "distinction in national or international affairs...for the benefit of the United States or the State of Idaho," said Philip Kleffner, Director of Alumni Relations.

Winners of the award are chosen by the UI Alumni Association Board of directors.

"We're trying to pick out the very most distinguished professional lives," Kleffner explained.

McClure was chosen because of "his dedication over the years in public service, his loyalty to the university and support of its causes, and certainly if anyone is the epitome of what the designation is, I would say Senator McClure is that person," said Jim Faucher, President of the UI Alumni Association.

McClure was born in Payette, Idaho and graduated from the UI College of Law in 1950. He worked as an attorney in Payette until his election to Congress in 1966. McClure served six years in the House of Representatives

Campus noise creates problems in Moscow

Mike McNulty
Staff

Recent noise reports are topping the list of complaints at the Moscow Police Department as students and citizens cry out to be heard over the clamor on campus.

Last weekend the MPD responded to 22 noise complaints, most of which were on-campus living groups which border the edge of campus next to residential areas.

Campus Community Police Officer Corporal Carl Wommack said students get a bad rap because of a few loud living groups. He said it is unfortunate some fraternity houses on Nez Perce Drive are positioned so they amplify music out across the Moscow hillside.

Wommack urges students to be more considerate of residents who live around the perimeter of campus.

After 10 p.m. the level of noise can be "no louder than conversation level at the property line," said Wommack.

Recent UI graduate John Fricke lives across the street from several on-campus houses and said the bars and clubs downtown are the place for loud music.

"A guy just can't get a good night sleep around here," said Fricke. "Those punks don't care about anybody but themselves."

UI Senior Jason Mosser, 21 said there aren't enough places for minors to unwind and listen to music. He said the UI and the community itself fails to offer alternative places for younger students to gather after hours.

 “Instead of paying $200 to fly down to Boise for a meeting, we have a video conference,” said Lasher. “Video teleconferencing is much better.”

He said UI will eventually tie into a broader public network, to allow video teleconferencing from any point in the UI network, to any point in the world.

Lasher explained UI has a “state mission” of linking up Idaho schools, and a responsibility to use video teleconferencing in support of Idaho educational programs.

“The ability to bring classes to the people that need them, in the far-flung corners of the state, is really the driving force behind the project,” he said.

Lasher said UI would like to make video teleconferencing possible between regional colleges and smaller communities.

Along with planning events, GDI week coordinators also worked to make rules for games and points. Planners want to make the games fair and organized.

Batt still waiting to hear from feds, but prospects good

Associated Press

BOISE—The federal government still has a few more days to meet Gov. Phil Batt's demands to resolve a long deadlock over nuclear waste, but the prospects look good for a settlement.

After a long day of telephone negotiations Friday, the governor said he felt Assistant Energy Secretary Thomas Grumbley was ready to sign on to major components of a deal that could allow the government to resume radioactive waste dumping at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, with promises that the material eventually will be removed.

The next deadline comes Tuesday afternoon. That gives the government four more days from Friday's original deadline.

"I had an impression in the conversation (with Grumbley) that they were close to some kind of appraisal of our offer," Batt said. "I think it's close to acceptance. I have nothing concrete to base that on."

The governor said it appeared the administration believes there was a way to make the scheme acceptable to both sides. "He said the Department of Energy, the Navy and the Justice Department are working diligently to get an agreement."

There were indications that Batt's cap on new shipments was probably acceptable to the Energy Department with the hang-up being over the timing of the shipments.

There were also suggestions that the Justice Department was uneasy about aspects of the penalty provisions. When he outlined the deal last week, Batt said he would accept minor adjustments but no substantive changes.

The most pressing issue facing the federal government is the Navy's contention that it must immediately resume dumping its spent nuclear fuel at the INEL or the military readiness of its nuclear fleet will be undermined.

Because of that claim, Congress is ready to override a June, 1993, federal court ban on new waste shipments.

The ban is in effect until U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge rules on the state's claim that the federal government improperly determined that waste could be safely stored on top of the 261 tons already at the INEL. That ruling is expected within six weeks.

If a deal is struck, it would have to be approved by Lodge as part of the long-running legal case, and it would include the state dropping its challenge to the government's safety determination.

A second legal challenge by an environmental group would still be pending.

The Navy also is scheduled later this month to argue before a federal appellate court panel that the existing court order should be modified to allow 24 waste shipments to eastern Idaho, again on the argument that national security could be imperiled if that doesn't happen.

It was the uncertainty of the outcomes in court and the certainty that Congress would roll over the state's opposition that prompted Batt to seek a deal to assure eventual removal of all waste from Idaho.

Under the Batt proposal, the state will accept another 968 shipments of high-level waste—97 tons—over the next 40 years, including all of the anticipated Navy waste. In return, the federal government will guarantee that all high-level waste—new and old—and most low-level waste will be completely removed from Idaho by 2036. The court-enforced deal, with specific milestones on processing waste for removal, carries a daily fine of $100,000, adjusted for inflation, beginning Jan. 1, 2036, until all waste is removed.

Elk lodges vote to keep membership men only

Associated Press

LEWISTON—Elks lodges in Lewiston and Grangeville have reaffirmed their policies of restricting membership to men only.

All local Elks lodges are being required by the organization's national leadership to vote on the question of removing the membership requirement.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks has spent $1.3 million in recent years on five lawsuits filed by women in Midwestern states trying to join the club. Elks lost, but has appealed.

In June, national leaders voted to remove the male membership requirement, but the policy will be reconsidered after all local lodges make individual decisions. Local lodges have been told they can continue to exclude women for the time being, but if a lawsuit is filed the national organization will no longer pick up the tab.

Of the 1,200 members of the Lewiston Elks Lodge, only 45 showed up at a meeting Tuesday when the question was put to a vote, said Thomas Eier, chairman of the board of trustees. The vote was 35-10 in favor of retaining the male membership requirement.

"Personally, if it wasn't for the ladies of the Elks we would not have an Elks lodge," Eier said Thursday. "Let's explore having ladies of the Elks on an equal basis as men of the Elks and allow our ritual program to continue as it is right now for the men of the Elks."

Charlotte Nordgaard, president of the Lewiston Ladies Elks Auxiliary, sided with the men's decision.

"We think that we should stay like we are because we have moneymaking events and we help the men, both with money and work," Nordgaard said.

The Grangeville lodge voted 27-20 Wednesday night to retain the male membership requirement.

"A fifth of our membership was there," said Chris Dammon, a past exalted ruler of the Grangeville lodge. "There was a lot of discussion because people didn't understand what the referendum was about."

The Grangeville lodge came under fire in 1992 when two female U.S. Forest Service employees complained that the organization excludes women from membership. Nez Perce Forest Supervisor Mike King issued a memo in May 1992 barring the Forest Service from using the Grangeville lodge for parties, meetings and other functions.

nologies at UI such as distance learning.

"We need a president who understands that the future of education is going to be through the delivery of technology," said Biller.

"More than technology...we have to ask what a university will look like in the 21st century. We need a vision of higher education in the 21st century," said Associate Professor of Education, Bonnie Hulstrand.

With the first deadline for applications drawing near, presidential search committee member and UI Professor of Law, Mark Anderson urged staff and faculty to nominate a candidate.

"If you have a solution to our problem of finding a new president-make a nomination," said Anderson.

According to the ad published in September, applications will continue to be accepted following the Oct. 13 deadline, though, preference will be given to those applications received by Nov. 13.

Fed official: economic weakening no major concern

Associated Press

BOISE—The president of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco agrees with Gov. Phil Batt that there should be no real concern over the slowdown in Idaho's economy that prompted Batt to impose a $26 million budget cut.

Robert Parry, speaking to Idaho political, business and civic leaders on Thursday, said that while the slowdown is more significant than expected were Idaho just tracking the national economy, the state by comparison had performed so strongly in the past while others had done so poorly that it was inevitable its relative standing among the states would decline.

"You had done so well that I think that the slowdown is something I don't think people should be concerned about," Parry said. "I would characterize this period for the state of Idaho as a period of digestion, which I think is quite healthy."

Slowing migration into Idaho as conditions improve elsewhere is a major factor in the state's retreat from the dramatic growth rates of the past.

"The state's economy is making an adjustment from the unsustainable high growth rates of recent years," he said.

Parry's remarks came as Batt attempted to reassure the public that his decision to impose a $26 million reduction in the current budget was as much precautionary as it was required to ensure the state stays in the black.

"We need to be prepared on a precautionary basis for any further slackening in the economy," he told his Economic Stimulus Task Force.

"We have had some things occur in the state that have not helped the economy," he said, specifically citing payroll reductions at a number of major employers.

"While they're not individually enough to impact us severely, they're something to be concerned about," the governor said. "But I don't think this is any real indication that Idaho's economy is weakening."

The governor acknowledged the impact of the 2 percent across-the-board budget cut on public education, which will see $13.3 million slashed from its state aid package during this school year, and he said schools could receive special consideration—and possible restoration of the cash—when lawmakers convene this winter.

"We need to look at a couple more months of income before making that decision," he said.

If the cash is not restored or lawmakers decline to formally endorse its deduction, a statewide property tax increase would be triggered to cover that shortfall for schools.

Even with that prospect, Batt continued to defend his successful demand last winter for $40 million in state-financed property tax cuts—money that critics of the reduction contended could have more than covered the budget shortage Batt is now contemplating.

"The property tax relief was the result of a prolonged public discussion," he said. "We made an appropriate move."

In speaking to his task force of business leaders, however, Batt again emphasized how important it was for the members to come up with strategies to keep Idaho economically strong as growth wanes.

"I'm certain we can't perform any miracles here, but we do need to keep in mind the economy needs to be fostered," the governor said.

The task force began sorting through recommendations of subcommittees on Thursday but was not expected to finalize its list of proposals for Batt until next month.

Among the items under review is a reduction in comparatively high state income tax rates, financed by eliminating or reducing tax deductions, to make Idaho more economically attractive to outsiders, a brake of some kind on escalating values on property owned by the elderly and a temporary sales tax increase to finance expanded vocational education to meet the demands of new businesses.

An increase in either the gasoline tax or vehicle registration fee, which Batt has indicated he will propose this winter, also remained a possibility to generate cash needed to check the deteriorating conditions of Idaho highways.

No, you're all going the wrong way!

Planned Philippine ID system raises fears

Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines—A bill to introduce national identity cards faced rancorous opposition Sunday from lawmakers saying they feared it would lead to repression.

"The idea smacks of a fascist design. Only a militarist mindset could have conceived it," said Sen. Ernesto Herrera, leader of the biggest labor group in the country.

Proponents say the bill, now under debate in the House of Representatives, will help fight crime and terrorism.

If passed, the bill will require all

Filipinos above 17 to carry a standardized ID bearing their photo, thumbprint, signature and a serial number.

Herrera said the proposed ID system reminds him of policies of the late President Ferdinand Marcos, who shut down Congress and stifled political dissent when he placed the country under one-man rule in 1972. Marcos was ousted by a civilian-backed military uprising in 1986.

"The (ID card) system would carry more risks than rewards, with the risks falling on the shoulders of peaceful and law-abiding citizens," warned Sen. Blas Ople, who served as Marcos' labor minister.

IT'S BEEN TOO LONG...

...since the crowds cheered, the band played, and the Vandal spirit soared. Tailgate parties have been a tradition at the University of Idaho, a tradition long forgotten. It's been too long. Times have changed. But once again the crowds are gathering, the band is warming up and the spirit is starting to build, a tradition is about to be renewed.

Walton renounces alliance with militia group

Associated Press

TWIN FALLS—The Idaho Citizens Alliance and the United States Militia Association will not be political allies after all.

Citizens Alliance Chairman Kelly Walton had said his organization would welcome help from the Blackfoot-based militia group and its leader, Samuel Sherwood, to collect signatures on petitions for anti-abortion, anti-gay and education-related initiatives the alliance wants on the 1996 ballot.

But on Friday, Walton repudiated the militia and Sherwood. Walton, a Heyburn contractor, said he now believes six-month-old news reports that Sherwood threatened state legislators, despite Sherwood's denials.

"I'm not going to deal with a group that can't shoot straight, and I'm talking about telling the truth," Walton said.

He said he consulted with several people, including Republican Congressman Helen Chenoweth, before renouncing the militia and Sherwood.

"Chenoweth regards him as a loose cannon. The feeling that I'm getting is that we're just going to avoid this group at all costs," Walton said.

In March, Sherwood was quoted as telling militia colleagues at a meeting in Boise to, "Go up and look legislators in the face, because someday you may be forced to blow it off."

He admitted making the statement about a week later, but since then has denied it.

Late Friday, Sherwood declined to comment on Walton's snub. Bill Tuttle of Twin Falls, state director of the U.S. Militia Association, also was mum.

"That's (Walton's) prerogative," Tuttle said. "I haven't talked to the man. He hasn't explained his reasoning to me."

Walton's repudiation of the militia came just two days after he welcomed its support and called the group a "substantial signature-gathering force."

"When it comes to doing something, I believe in doing it with integrity and doing it right," he said Friday. "If this action costs me a few signatures, so be it. But I think in the long run it will net us many more signatures for wanting to do it right."

Brian Bergquist of the No On One Coalition, which is opposing the Idaho Citizens Alliance's initiatives, said he hoped Walton's renunciation of the militia was not "just a PR thing."

"We hope (Walton) isn't just publicly distancing himself from the militia but that he really does believe and act as if what they're doing is wrong," Bergquist said.

Abortion rights advocates challenge initiative ballot titles

Associated Press

BOISE—Abortion rights activists want the state Supreme Court to void the thousands of signatures already collected on the 1996 ballot.

In its petition filed on Wednesday, a coalition of groups led by the American Civil Liberties Union claimed that Attorney General Alan Lance's legal descriptions of the initiative are inadequate to fully inform voters of its contents.

Alliance founder Kelly Walton called the challenge an "old, worn out strategy" to derail the campaign to restrict abortions. But even if the high court agrees, Walton predicted an initiative under revised legal descriptions would still win ballot status.

At issue specifically is the failure of the so-called ballot titles drafted by Lance to state that the initiative not only prohibits abortion after a fetus is viable, which is the 21st week of pregnancy under Supreme Court rulings, but also imposes new civil penalties on those involved in the prohibited late-term abortions while legalizing some late-term abortions now illegal and criminalizing others now legal.

"What we're asking the court to do is ensure that the people signing the initiative are aware of the radical changes it would make," said Kurt Holzer, who is representing the ACLU in the case. "The current ballot titles amount to false advertising."

Joining the ACLU were the Center for Reproductive Law & Policy and Planned Parenthood Federation of America. The court challenge was formally filed on behalf of two Idaho voters, Joanne Buchin and Elizabeth Barker Brandt.

After a cursory review of the petition, Deputy Attorney General David High said, "We remain convinced that the title we prepared is neutral and objective. If the court determines a better title, we really have no objection."

The high court is expected to handle the case on an expedited schedule. Ballot titles for initiatives have been challenged only twice in Idaho, and the results have been mixed. In 1958, the court ordered the attorney general to revise the title on a right-to-work initiative that was eventually rejected, and two years ago the court let stand the titles given the alliance's anti-gay initiative, which was narrowly defeated.

Lance's version of the so-called short title describes the initiative as "prohibiting abortions beyond the point of viability and providing exceptions." It makes no reference to the imposition of new civil penalties up to three times the amount of any injury suffered from a prohibited abortion.

Compounding that flaw, the court petition contends, is the fact that the initiative is incorporated into existing state law that already makes it a felony to be involved in a prohibited abortion but the petition makes no reference to the fact that violating the initiative's provisions would also be a criminal act.

"Severe punishment of those who violate the ban is clearly a primary purpose of the measure, which must be reflected in the long title," the petition said.

Should the high court side with abortion rights advocates, the alliance would have to start from scratch in collecting the 41,335 registered voter signatures needed to put the initiative on the ballot, and the campaign would not have the benefit of the state fair season that is just ending—a major target for initiative campaigners.

But Walton first predicted the prospect that the court challenge would be successful and then discounted any serious impact on the initiative drive even if the court rewrites the ballot titles.

"If they were to be changed, we still feel very comfortable about getting it on the ballot," he said. "This is one of the more popular ballot issues we have this time, and the signatures come very easy."

Packwood lacking in Socratic honor

Oddly enough, when I think of Senator Bob Packwood, I am reminded of Socrates. Certainly I am not referring to Socrates' life-long search for the truth but rather of his discussions with his old friend Crito. In "The Crito," Plato opens the dialogue with Socrates sleeping soundly (as I assume Packwood is not) in his prison cell after being convicted of corrupting the youth of Athens. Crito enters to tell him of his plan to help him escape and thus avoid having to face the death penalty for which he will have to drink hemlock in the morning.

Socrates awakes and hearing of the plan, begins a long dialectic with Crito about one's responsibility to the state which concludes with them agreeing that the honorable and just thing for him to do is to accept the state's punishment. The argument revolves around the fact that during his entire life, Socrates has had an unwritten agreement with the state to be governed by them. His parents were married by the state, he was educated by the state, and throughout his long life he had many opportunities to leave the state and chose to stay. Finally, after sentencing, he could have chosen banishment from the state as a sentence, but instead chose death.

Senator Packwood is not unlike Socrates. He has spent over 25 years as a U.S. Senator and has accepted all the substantial benefits of being one—he could have left at any time but chose it as a career. Therefore, I believe he has then accepted the unwritten agreement to be governed by the rules of the senate, rules which he was fully aware of; but unlike the honorable Socrates who accepted the process of the court, he wanted the rules to be changed for him all along the way.

In a manner of speaking, like Socrates, he also had a chance to change the sentence. As Senator Barbara Boxer suggested, he could have resigned prior to the hearings and thus avoided the chance of being expelled. By not doing so, he accepted being tried by the senate; therefore, I further believe he has agreed to be judged by their rules and accept the penalty.

The senate set that penalty and a recommendation for expulsion was handed down. Rather than face expulsion or the stripping of all his power, he has now resigned. He will leave the senate with a substantial pension and full benefits. In his resignation speech, he said resigning "is the honorable thing to do." Even without considering the actions which brought him before the committee, I submit that honor is something that Mr. Packwood knows nothing about.

N.I.C. ATHLETICS; GENDER EQUITY

Voters already said 'no' once

It got voted out once, and now they're trying to get it back on the 1996 ballot.

Yes, boys and girls, lace up your jackboots and sport your fancy riding crops, Proposition One is rearing its ugly head again.

The United States Militia Association and the Idaho Citizen's Alliance are both gung-ho to put yet another anti-gay, anti-abortion initiative on the 1996 ballot. (Because I know how conscientious and restrained the right wing can be, I have included several parenthetical footnotes they were too sensitive and caring to write into the original draft of "Son of Proposition One").

While this latest redneck sideshow makes me a most unhappy camper, I am the queen of egalitarianism, and I refuse to let my vision be blurred by outrage. I can truly and honestly admire the militia for several things—their loyalty to their country, their fierce independence and their staunch support for the right to keep and bear arms.

If you recall the thrilling days of 1994, our old friend Proposition One was voted on and narrowly rejected by Idaho voters.

Now it (or its new and improved, squishier version) is going to be on the ballot again, and what do you think will happen if it passes this time?

I can tell you what will happen.

First, any material dealing with homosexuality will be removed and banned from public libraries and classrooms. Several minor restrictions will be placed on the availability of abortions. (All blond haired, blue-eyed children will receive A's in history).

Corinne Flowers

Then homosexuals will be banned from all types of contractual partnerships. Abortions will be available to women under 18 only with parental consent—and then only in the first trimester.

Then only in cases of rape or incest. Then only when the woman's life is in danger. (Jews, African-Americans and Asians will have unlimited access to pregnancy termination).

Then books dealing with homosexuality will not be available to anyone under 18. Reproductive choices will be available only to those who meet a specific list of criteria, have money or pull the right strings. By the time you get through the red tape, it will be too late to have an abortion anyway—first trimester, remember? (No more immigrants, this land belongs to the white male!)

Then homosexuals will be discriminated against, denied jobs, cast out from society. Women from all walks of life will be forced or coerced into carrying to full term—regardless of their emotional, physical or mental state. (Put on your pink triangles, ladies, it's off to Rancho del Relocacion for a comprehensive new diet and exercise program!)

Then finally homosexuality will not only be immoral, but illegal, as will reproductive freedom. (But dammit, the white European male is a dying species!)

I admit the parenthetical parts are slightly humorous exaggerations. But take a good look at what I'm saying here. A hard look.

Don't think it can happen? Look how easy it is to go from one step to another. It's just a smooth, easy transition from freedom to slavery.

Look at your history book. How many progressive societies have fallen under the dictatorship of elitist special interest groups?

Don't think it can happen? It's only Idaho. Being gay and having abortions will only be illegal in Idaho (Washington... Oregon... Montana...).

Think I'm exaggerating? Well, sit back and watch, because it will.

Better yet, don't sit back! Stand up for your rights. Sign every petition. Vote on every initiative.

The people who place so much emphasis on our individuality, freedom and rights are trying to take those very things away.

And the one right they place so much emphasis on is the one I will exercise when they come to my door and try to lynch my gay friends and put restrictions on my body. That's when I'll put the barrel of my Second Amendment right in their pudgy militia faces and say "Hey—NO MEANS NO."

Choosing a hero today is much harder than it used to be

Americans have always defied logic when they chose their heroes, but this latest form of hero-worship frankly buffoons me.

We seem to have arrived at that place in time where heroes seem to be so scarce that we will grasp on to the first person who saunters noisily onto the stage of society as if they're passing out life preservers on the Titanic.

If you don't believe Americans choose odd heroes as of late, consider the following examples:

RANDY WEAVER: I sympathize with this man in the fact that he lost a son and wife to bullets, but that is where my sympathies end. He is a white supremacist, and though he does have civil rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution, we should not turn him, nor his cause, into things to be worshipped. His philosophies are bent on denying these same celebrated civil rights to others who do not happen to be white. This is the stuff of a hypocrite, not a hero.

PHIL BATT: Idaho's governor is a good man, but those Republicans who support him are a little skewed in their thinking. Because he is fighting against the Federal government over nuclear waste disposal at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, he is branded a hero, and at the same time rides the popularity wave caused by the furor over "states rights," whereas when Cecil Andrus did the same thing just a scant few years ago, he was branded a Communist who did not hold the interests of his country dear to his heart.

CAL RIPKEN: He may be a good ball player, and playing in over 2,300 consecutive games is quite an achievement—especially for an overgrown schoolboy who goes on strike because he feels his multi-million dollar salary is "unfair" and should be greatly increased.

THE NEWS MEDIA: Our national news organizations, who are quicker on the Voting Public Pleasure Button than even most Republican presidential candidates, have presented us with a paradox of their own: they run features and write stories about the right-wing militia movements whose distrust of the federal government seems to go to the point that at least one of them is willing to blow up a federal building and kill 169 innocent people in the process, deploring them as narrow-minded extremist terrorists every step of the way. Then they turn around and run features and write stories depicting people, such as Weaver, David Koresh and Timothy McVeigh, as victims of a heavy-handed federal government bent on the abolition of individual rights—especially those associated with the right to purchase tanks and bazookas. This time around, it's our government which is the enemy; the entity not deserving our trust.

NOTE: For those of you prejudiced against a certain trial taking place in Los Angeles, please forgive me for breaking the Argonaut's taboo barring coverage of the event in any form. To ease your pain, I will not make reference to those two annoying letters of the alphabet, but will instead refer to that person as "Grapefruit".

GRAPEFRUIT: Adding more fuel to the furor over constipation—uh, conspiracy, rather—theories which seem to be the latest political fad to sweep the country, certain lawyers (who make Cal Ripken's bank account look like Bob Cratchitt's) want us to think that because a certain Sandpoint resident may have lied over saying the Forbidden Word, Grapefruit was framed and is therefore innocent of any wrongdoing. The real victims of the crime have been forgotten.

MIKE PLASTER: The habitual columnist for WSU's Daily Evergreen, who seems to be an excellent prose writer, presented to his public an Indiana Jones persona via mug shot and an article indicating the many wily ways one could use to entice a member of the opposite sex into (I'll put it colloquially so as not to disturb our more sensitive readers) jumping one's bones over a back massage.

If that doesn't make him Hero Material (and if that isn't responsible journalism), I don't know what will (or is).

Letters to the Editor

Look into religions before joining

I am writing again about Living Faith Fellowship and Campus Christian Fellowship. There have been two letters to the editor in support of LFF/CCF both written by JCDs (Joseph Fitzgerald and Daniel Martin) arguing that my claims that LFF/CCF is a mind control cult are wrong. Yet they never addressed the critical claims that make LFF/CCF a manipulative, secretive organization.

They haven't denied that when a person signs up for a Bible-study through CCF that the information gathered is divided and assigned among the JCD company. Nor have they denied the fact that after every time a JCD contacts that person they fill out forms about what is said and how to better manipulate the person into LFF. Why is an organization that teaches openness, honesty and transparency hiding these things? Why would they use them?

Sadly, like all cults that can't defend their methods to the public, they attack the person exposing their manipulative ways. Dan Martin attacks my character by saying that I am "ranting and raving." I do not feel that I am verging on insanity, only that I was betrayed and hurt by an organization that claims to follow Christ.

I am puzzled that they can use these techniques that clearly are unscriptural and ungodly. Nor do I have "an open agenda against a local church." I am merely taking the knowledge that I have gained through five and a half years of manipulation and spiritual abuse and letting others know of the possibility that they too may be abused under that same system. Better yet, by letting the students know of the full scope of abuses at LFF/CCF, they will now be able to make an informed decision and choice.

If you choose to attend LFF or CCF, that is your God-given choice. I can only relate what my personal experience has been and inform you of the possible consequences when you give power to those that abuse. Don't be fooled by smiles, great music, attractive people, free dinners and handshakes. Look deeper. Find out who a church leadership is accountable to outside of the organization and how much power they have to change that organization.

God, though almighty, isn't good enough to scare some into obedience. Please choose carefully in everything you do; it may have hidden consequences. Most of all, question everything. Without questioning, you are a blind believer.

God is the light. Use your eyes and all of your senses to discover the truth.

Abortion an evil shadow

I would like to take a moment to say that I stand with Alfred Lemmo (Letters, Sept. 8th) when he says that abortion is an evil shadow hanging over the conscience of America. Although I feel compassion towards the misguided young people of today who are not taught any longer to assume a mature and thoughtful responsibility for their sexual actions, I cannot accept and justify the act of aborting an unborn child.

There are alternatives to abortion. I know of a wonderful young woman who, finding herself in a difficult situation, placed her unborn child up for adoption. Her baby was taken in by a loving couple who were unable to have a child of their own. Some of my best friends were adopted. They've been nurtured by kind adoptive parents who have loved them and raised them well.

As a country, I feel that we should first check our moral values, then remedy the difficulties, just mentioned, through the use of adoption services, not by abortions.

Responsible pet ownership needed

Welcome to the Northwest and welcome back to the Palouse everyone! Now that you have settled in, you are ready to adopt a pet—or are you? If you reside in a rental unit, please make sure the lease allows companion animals. Soon enough one of your neighbors will notice the smallest kitten or puppy and the management will request that you "get rid" of your pet or you will be evicted. Please think carefully what is at stake for the innocent pet before buying or adopting it.

To make pet ownership a success, you need to consider a number of factors: if you have a fenced yard, it is likely to be a good home for a large breed (retriever, greyhound, or malamute). For a smaller home, without a fenced exercise area, near a busy street, a small breed such as a terrier, poodle, dachshund or cocker spaniel would do better. Cats do well in any size house. Pet cats are kept indoors by knowledgeable owners. This prevents losing your cat to injury, other animals or to traffic accidents. If you adopt a cute little puppy or kitten remember that they are not pups/kittens forever, but they need your love and care forever.

Owners often go through several pets which will be kept for one to two years, after which the companion animal will be dumped into the already flooded pet market either by giving it away to another owner, through a newspaper or radio ad, or by leaving it at the local shelter. A big step toward solving this pet tragedy would be to teach people to consider the pet. Are you in a position to offer the pet a permanent home, and are you ready to accept responsibility for the companion animal's care for the rest of its life?

Pet overpopulation is enormous:

in the United States alone, as many as 14 million unwanted dogs and 15 million unwanted cats were reported killed in shelters and pounds. Of course, this number needs to be viewed as a minimum because many shelters did not respond to the survey on which this report is based. Many dogs and cats die outside the shelter as well. Homeless companion animals roam urban and rural areas. They die of disease, starvation, in traffic accidents, fall prey to other animals or are killed by humans. This mass killing of innocent companion animals—most of which were young and healthy—must be stopped. To help slow down this tragic destruction of unfortunate fine animals, we strongly urge pet population control by neutering and spaying rather than by killing.

As we all know, owning a pet is one of the few joys in life that is ours for the asking. We know of the unfailing love a dog has for his family. Cats owners tell us of the beauty and warmth of their purring friends. Certainly, companion animal ownership is one of the greatest satisfactions we can depend on in our uncertain world.

You can help: your donations will be used for our adoption/foster program, co-payment for the spay/neuter program, telephone pet adoption service and purchase of immediately needed pet medicine and supplies. Volunteers and foster homes are urgently needed. Please call 509-332-2508.

Here are excerpts of editorials from publications in various countries:

The New York Times, New York, on U.S.-Cuba relations:

Frustrated as they watch foreign companies making deals with Cuba, American business executives have increased pressure on the Clinton administration to end the American economic embargo. This is a healthy sign. Corporate pressure was a key element in the recent change in policy toward Vietnam.

Cuba does not loom large as a market for the United States. But for some businesses it could represent significant opportunities, and it is galling for these companies' executives to watch helplessly while corporations from Japan, Canada, Europe and other Latin American nations take advantage of Cuba's new openness.

Executives confronting Assistant Secretary of State Alexander Watson at a recent State Department briefing, however, received the worn, formulaic response: "This administration will maintain the embargo until major democratic change takes place in Cuba."

The business people at the meeting were not mollified. They pointed out to Watson the inconsistency in Washington's stance toward other Communist countries where trade has gone forward despite the presence of authoritarian governments.

Cuba has kept its commitments to the United States on immigration. With the end of the cold war, it poses no security threat to the United States. Yet the sanctions on Havana are tighter than those imposed on Iraq. Legislation now before Congress which President Clinton has sensibly threatened to veto—would tighten sanctions even further.

The legislation has clearly alarmed many business people. Some of its provisions would threaten their subsidiaries in other countries that already do business with Cuba. If the executives are serious about changing Cuba policy, they need to help the administration find the courage to take on the conservative lobby, and make their wishes known to Congress. They are on the right track.

The Financial Times, London, on U.S.-German relations:

Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany remains the West's single most effective bridge-builder to Moscow, and his latest visit to the Russian capital confirms that role. It could prove an increasingly difficult task.

The U.S.-inspired tougher Western action in former Yugoslavia has been condemned not just by (Soviet President Boris) Yeltsin but by all those seeking to wave the Russian nationalist flag in the forthcoming elections there. It will undoubtedly encourage a growing mood of anti-Americanism.

The U.S. political establishment has been angered by Russia's renewed cultivation of Iran. Russian support for lifting U.N. sanctions against Iraq has also been a bone of contention. Now the two former rivals are at loggerheads over the routing of a pipeline to bring oil from the new fields of the Caspian Sea and central Asia to the outside world.

It is not in Germany's nor in Europe's interest to see that sterile superpower rivalry re-emerge. The German chancellor can use his influence to make it clear that a new mood of anti-Americanism in Russia would be as unwelcome in Bonn and Brussels as it would be in Washington.

The Jerusalem Post on the 3,000th birthday of Jerusalem:

If there is one thing Israelis neither need nor want from an American ambassador it is to have their intelligence insulted. For Ambassador Martin Indyk to say he had snubbed the opening celebrations of Jerusalem's 3,000th birthday because of a previous engagement is to give the white lies of diplomacy a bad name. To use this excuse after claiming that the event was "cultural" and therefore warranted only the presence of the cultural attaché is to add insult to injury.

The reason Indyk did not attend the celebration is plain as it is obvious: The Clinton administration decided that it would not be in the U.S. interest to do so. Washington has a perfect right to assume that its ambassador's appearance at the Israeli celebrations in Jerusalem would compromise its position as an "honest broker" in the Israel-Arab negotiations, and it is its prerogative to draw the appropriate conclusions from this assumption. But if the U.S. really considers Israel a friend and an ally, it should spare it the patronizing excuses.

La Stampa, Turin, Italy, on French nuclear testing:

The fact that the French nuclear test coincides with the 50th anniversary of Hiroshima and that the power of both explosions was similar, has perhaps been Jacques Chirac's greatest blunder. It has also offered opposers to nuclear weapons an excellent emotive and propagandistic platform. It has also affected the conscience of people who ask themselves why France should suddenly decide to experiment or improve its nuclear capabilities.

Obviously, the French scientists insist that underground tests like those carried out in Mururoa, will carry no consequence on the environment. It is also true to say that—politically—Chirac's decision has its own motivations: in this insidious world, nuclear deterrence hasn't yet exhausted its task.

Nevertheless, the fact that such a complex decision has been carried out at this time and with these methods does not help France.

Asahi Shimbun, Tokyo, on French nuclear testing:

The French government denounced (Japanese) Finance Minister Masayoshi Takemura's participation in a rally in Tahiti against the nuclear tests as an intolerable interference in France's affairs and instructed France's ambassador to Japan to remain in Paris for "consultations." Takemura responded by saying, "The French government's reaction is proof that my visit to Tahiti was worth the effort." There is no question his act was an effective form of protest.

The French Foreign Ministry's characterization of his actions as interference in the internal affairs of France must have been influenced by its own form of logic. Grounds for the French government's action may be that a Japanese Cabinet minister participated in a demonstration within the territorial limits of France. Granted the Mururoa Atoll and Tahiti are part of France. But those South Pacific islands came to their ties with France through colonialism. If the test sites were in France proper, the French would have shown an interest in the tests that could not compare to the intensity displayed now.

OUTDOOR TIP OF THE WEEK:

Choosing food for a backpacking trip can be difficult. You want to balance good nutrition with light weight and small bulk. Some of your best sources of protein are legumes such as in a dehydrated soup. Packaged rice and bean, noodles and sauce and potatoes and sauce, are also great for easy meals. You don't need to waste fuel simmering it for ten minutes. Just bring it to a boil, then cover with a lid and wrap in a towel to hold the heat. Bread is another frustration on the trail. Pita bread is great to bring because it is flat, hard to crush and you can stuff anything you like into it. Tortillas are also easy to pack and add carbohydrates to any meal. Cheese keeps well for up to a week even in summer as long as it is kept on your pack away from the sun. For salt cravings, crackers or salted peanuts are easy to carry. Trail mix, which can include practically anything you want from peanuts to M&M's to coconut, is handy for on the move snacking. The most important thing about feeding yourself on the trail is to keep it interesting, healthy and light weight. Use your imagination and learn what works and what doesn't from each trip you take.

UPCOMING TRIPS AND CLASSES:

Instructional Kayak Trip I, day trip is coming up on Sept. 16. Participants will learn to maneuver through class I and II whitewater. The fee is $20 and covers the cost of transportation and instruction. Participants are required to provide their own kayak which can be rented at the Outdoor Rental Center in the basement of the Student Union for $15 a day plus deposit. In order to go on this trip, participants need to have attended at least one pool session. For more info, see the UI Outdoor Program in the basement of the Student Union.

Rockclimbing I "On the Rocks" is being offered Sept. 23. There will be one class session on Sept. 21, followed by a day trip to nearby climbing areas. Equipment, knots, belaying technique and climbing movements will be the focus of this course. The fee for this class is $20 and sign-ups are on-going at the Outdoor Program in the basement of the Student Union.

Waverunning wet, wild, wonderful

The last time I went up the Snake River, I was in a 30-foot, twin engine jet boat. The water was higher because of spring runoff, and the boat glided over the rapids easily.

Now, two and a half months later, water is lower, exposing rocks and making the rapids more turbulent. Even now, this was no challenge for a 30-foot jet boat. However, this time I would be making the trip on a wave runner.

A wave runner is a small jet boat that you sit on. It is about the size of a snowmobile, has almost the same engine, and is operated about the same way.

When I pulled into the parking lot in front of the office, two other fun loving water nuts were putting on wet suits. After parking, I went into the office to meet our guide and sign the necessary paperwork allowing me to go on this trip.

The other two riders had never been on a wave runner. J.R. Seaman, Lewiston, is in the Sociology department with Lewis-Clark State College and his brother, Scott Seaman, was visiting for the Labor Day weekend from Quincey, Mass. I was more experienced because I had ridden one for about ten minutes three days before at a beach party.

Our guide, Mike Townsend, said he would cover all the operation and safety tips with us after we drove the two blocks to the marina. The wave runners were tied to a dock next to Jean, an antique steam stern wheeler being restored.

After we put on life jackets, Townsend explained the operation and safety procedures.

Safety is extremely important while riding a wave runner. While sitting on the unit, attach the emergency kill switch cord to your life jacket to turn off the boat in case you fall off.

We were instructed to be observant to what was happening around us while riding. We had to look behind us often in case a larger boat came too close. Jet or ski boats create a large wake behind them that can capsize a wave runner if you do not see it soon enough. Also, if you want to turn, you may turn into the path of a larger boat and be injured or killed. It may sound stupid, but you also have to be aware of any boat coming at you so you can get out of the way. Several accidents have happened because the person riding the wave runner did not get out of the way of an on coming boat.

Running the waves on the Snake river is easy if you have the right equipment.

When pulling up behind another craft, slow down and come up beside them, not behind them. If you see a boat ahead of you with a flag in the air, slow down and move to the side. The raised flag shows a down water skier.

After we received these safety tips, we idled our units out of the marina into the river. We played around for about 15 minutes getting used to the wave runners before heading up river.

On the way up we stopped at an old ranch site at Buffalo Eddy to stretch our legs. This is the location of several famous petroglyph's. These drawings on the rocks have been on several outdoor programs, in National Geographic magazine, and many documentaries through the years.

During the trip you will go through a few small rapids and one larger one. Shortly before we got to the small rapids, our guide stopped to give us instructions on how to navigate rapids. We played in the small rapids to prepare for the larger one.

When entering rapids, it is important not to go fast. When you go fast, you will go over one wave and plow down into the next, washing you off the wave runner.

The two companies in the Lewiston-Clarkston valley that rent wave runners are Northwest Wave Runners in Asotin and Mac's Cycle in Clarkston, both in Washington. Both companies rent by the hour, half-day or full day. Each company requires you call ahead for reservations. Neither company allows booze.

Northwest Wave Runners is the only one offering guided tours. The tour includes a wave runner for the 24 mile trip up river to a restaurant called Beamer's Landing. Beamer's is located by the mouth of the Grand Ronde River and lunch is included as part of the tour. The entire trip takes between four and five hours, depending on how much you play.

Whether you go for an hour, half-day, all day or the tour, bring your sunglasses and sun screen because you will have fun.

Biking to campus easier than driving

Erik Marone

Staff

If you are one of the many who have brought your car to school, you've experienced it. If you drive anywhere, you're going to lose that precious commodity, a parking space, if you were lucky enough to get one in the first place.

As many University of Idaho students have discovered, one of the quickest and easiest ways to get around town and campus is by bicycle. Jim Vollbrecht, a mechanic at Follett's Mountain Sports in Moscow, says there is a wide variety of bike styles available, the most important thing to do is select the bike that best fits what you'll be using it for. "The things we generally emphasize to people is that they get a bike that they like, one that they'll use," Vollbrecht says. "And that basically comes down to one that's comfortable and generally in a budget. Most students don't want to spend a lot of money."

Bike prices start around $225 and go up from there. Brands that are more popular locally are Specialized, Giant, Trek, Scott and Cannondale. "Basically, if you go to any of the bike shops locally, you can't buy a truly bad bike, every bike shop in this area sells quality bikes, you're not going to get burned around here," says Vollbrecht.

If you're looking for a higher quality bike, expect to spend a little more. "Bikes in the three to four hundred dollar range are when you start getting into a much higher quality frame. The geometry of the frames become much more performance oriented," Vollbrecht explains. "The bikes will track better off-road, you'll have a lot more control of the bike. You could do things like this with a $225 bike, but it might or might not make it."

For commuting, Vollbrecht strongly recommends a helmet. "If you do everything right, you can be hit. My older brother would be dead had he been riding without a helmet. He got run over from behind by an 84-year old man and got dragged over a hundred yards before the guy realized he'd run over somebody and came to a stop."

He also recommends that bicyclists familiarize themselves with motor vehicle laws, as they apply to bikes as well for the most part. "If you ride the wrong way down a one way street or ride at night without a light, you will be ticketed. If you ride under the influence of alcohol, you will have your driver's license suspended. It does count against your insurance rating as well."

Vollbrecht urges caution and courtesy when commuting on the sidewalks. It is very easy to hit pedestrians or people stepping out of buildings or if you are traveling much faster than the foot traffic. When riding on roadways always ride with traffic, never against it.

For bike security, the Kryptonite U-locks work the best. A lot of people don't use them, however, because they are heavy and hard to carry. As a direct result of this, bikes get stolen. For locking your bike on campus during the day, cable locks have proven effective. "If you don't lock your bike, there will always be someone who wants it more than you do," Vollbrecht warns.

Bicycles are a compact, affordable alternative to automobile transportation and in many ways a much more reasonable means of getting around town and campus. As many students have found, investing some of their financial aid in a bike has resulted in less parking problems, easier campus access and many opportunities to use their bikes for recreation as well as transportation.

Rafting the Salmon a great study break

Jennifer Swift
Outdoors Editor

Sun, sand, water and waves all added up to a great time this past Saturday.

Myself, along with twenty-four other people, braved the shaky weather to go whitewater rafting on the lower Salmon with the University of Idaho Outdoor Program. When we left Moscow at 7:15 a.m., people were looking overhead and predicting the weather as if each were qualified meteorologists. Some of us preferred the "think positive" method and promised a great day. Luckily, we were right. With clouds overhead for most of the drive, it was a surprise to everyone in the vans when sunny skies prevailed over our launch site near the town of White Bird.

After the routine safety talk by Sean Wilson, ASUI president and summer-time river guide, we all piled into three rafts and started paddling. Steve Bowman, a graduate student from Maine and Scott Rulander, who works at the Outdoor Rental Center, were the other two raft guides on the trip.

Bowman has been a river guide in Maine for the last five years. "We did mostly day trips back east. I guided on the Kennebec and Dead rivers and probably have 150-175 runs on them," he said. "If I do too much of this stuff (academics) I'll go crazy. I'm into rafting because it is a fun thing to do."

Rulander has just started guiding this summer. He has run this section of the river twice, once in a kayak and once before in a raft. He learned to guide through the trips offered by the Outdoor Program.

Wilson has been a guide for three years with a commercial company. "I must have run this section of the river at least 60 times," he said.

We knew we were in good hands so it was easy to sit back and enjoy the trip. We immediately started the trip down the river with a nice little ice-breaker of a rapid. Nothing too big but a promise of things to come. After this first set of waves, we floated in the sun and enjoyed the peace and quiet of the river. This was shattered after about two minutes with the sounds of a full scale water war between the two other rafts. Voting on retreat, my raft grabbed our paddles and quickly pulled out of range.

This was the pattern that dictated the rest of the trip, small but fun rapids followed by plenty of time to relax, get wet, and work on our end-of-the-season tans. We pulled into a small beach for lunch and a chance to dry out from the water wars. We also got a chance to surf a nice rapid, which entails soaking one side of the boat. After lunch was when the more interesting rapids, class II and III, showed us their stuff but all rafts conquered these potential nasty spots without any problems, thanks to hard paddling and excellent guiding.

It is difficult to come home after an experience such as this but as Bowman said, it is good to get away from the academics and enjoy yourself once and a while. Thanks to the UI Outdoor Program, opportunities such as this are easy to find.

Jennifer Swift

Students from many countries enjoyed the lower Salmon river this weekend during the UI Outdoor Program's raft trip.

Vandal volleyball moves to 6-2

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

The only thing that stands between the Idaho Vandals and a perfect season are teams from central California.

Idaho went into last weekend's tourney at the University of Portland with a 4-1 record, the lone blemish, a loss to a tough San Jose State Spartan club 11 days ago. The Vandals came out of the weekend 6-2, falling to another squad from the sunshine state, Sacramento State.

The Vandals opened the two-day, four-team tourney Friday night with a 15-12, 15-9, 10-15, 15-6 win over the host Pilots.

The Sac-State Hornets swept UI with a 15-13, 15-11, 15-9 win, but the Vandals bounced back to knock off Cal-Irvine 11-15, 15-3, 15-4, 15-6.

Lina Yanchulova put her teammates on her back and single-handedly navigated the Vandals to a win over the Pilots. The Bulgarian native pounded 25 kills and added 12 digs in the UI triumph.

"Lina was phenomenal against Portland. She took it to a new level," Idaho coach Tom Hilbert said. "She has to be one of the leading outside hitters in the country."

Yanchulova's stats back up Hilbert's compliments. The senior already has 172 kills on the young season and is averaging an astronomical 6.6 kills per game. In addition she has tallied a team-leading 98 digs.

Junior setter Lynne Hyland did her fair share as well against UP, dishing out 60 assists. Hyland and Yanchulova were both named the all-tournament team.

The stat sheet was relatively equal as the Pilots boasted five players with nine or more kills. Idaho hit .199 as a team in the match compared to UP's .185. The Vandals totaled 52 digs in the match while Portland notched 46.

Yanchulova again came up big for Idaho against Sac-State with 29 kills, but the Hornets' Jill Haas, Jennifer Miles and Lyn-Dee Engle combined to power down 43 kills of their own.

The difference in the match proved to be Idaho's 28 hitting errors. The Hornets committed only 17. Sac-State served up seven aces and made only two service errors compared to Idaho's six aces and eight unforced errors at the service line.

"I was happy with the way we played at times and I was unhappy with the way we played at times. We gave up a lot of runs of points that I wasn't happy with," Hilbert said. "Sac-State is a good enough team, if you give up runs of points they'll beat you."

Hilbert said his team is more than capable of beating Sac-St. and San Jose St. but emphasized a lack of consistency has been the Vandals' downfall.

"We've struggled passing the ball at times ... We need to get into practice and work those things out," Hilbert said. "When you don't pass well you can't get into your offense and find a flow or tempo."

After a first game setback against UC-Irvine the Vandals had little problem with the Aardvarks, giving up just 13 points in the ensuing three games.

The Vandals doubled the Aardvarks attacking efforts, outhitting the California school .250 to .134. Yanchulova lived up to her consistent efforts with 25 kills while Jemena Yocum chipped in 12 and Louisa Kawulok 11. Yanchulova and Yocum also contributed 27 digs.

Hilbert continued to experiment with his lineup moving Yocum to the left side hitter position and inserting sophomore Kyle Leonard into the lineup on the right side. Early results have been pleasant as Leonard produced five kills and 11 digs against UCI.

Idaho women capture second place Sat.

The UI Golf Course was played in record time this weekend as participants exchanged golf clubs for running shoes.

Jessica Bissonette from Whitman, broke away from the pack to win by 25 seconds (18:48.9) over the nearest competitor and 34 seconds over third-place Maggie Hurst of Idaho.

Idaho's womens' team took second place as a team behind Palouse rival Washington State and which placed 10 runners-place in the top 40.

Shelly Zickler took 7th and Angie Mathison 9th to round out UI runners in the top 10.

On the men's side the results looked more like Franky goes against Montana, as Idaho's Frank Bruder was the lone Vandal to place in the top 40 finishing a strong sixth in a tough men's field.

Montana took the men's title, finishing nearly 30 points ahead of Washington State.

University of Idaho students got a chance to show off their softball skills last weekend in the annual co-rec intramural tournament. The Longballers knocked off the Boo Radleys Sunday to win the tourney title. Jimbo's Squad and Ber Fer N Stuff tied for third. Dave Balenzano

Thomas out two weeks after knee surgery

Idaho Vandals junior running back Joel Thomas had successful arthroscopic knee surgery Monday morning in Moscow to repair torn cartilage in his left knee.

The initial prognosis is, Thomas will be out for two weeks and will miss Saturday's home opener against Sonoma State. But, he could be ready to return to practice on Sept. 24 in preparation for Idaho's Big Sky Conference opener at Idaho State on Sept. 30.

Thomas rushed for 67 yards on 24 carries in the Vandals' 14-7 loss at Oregon State Sept. 2. In a reserve role last season Thomas finished sixth in the Big Sky in rushing with 653 yards and led the conference in rushing touchdowns with 11.

Soccer club loses to Whitworth

A last minute score handed the Idaho soccer club a 3-2 loss in Spokane Sunday afternoon.

The Whitworth College Pirates broke a 2-2 tie in the final minute to give the Vandals a loss in their season opener. The game was the first for the Vandals in the new Pacific Northwest Soccer League.

Idaho fell behind 2-0, but rallied back to tie the score late in the second half on a pair of goals by James Hall. Dave Walker provided the assist on both scores.

The Vandals host a yet to be determined team Sunday at 1 p.m.

UI's Barlow plays bigger than his size

Damon Barkdull

Staff

At 5-foot 9-inches tall and 174-pounds, some may speculate that freshman wide receiver Rocky Barlow isn't quite big enough to play college football.

Wrong.

The crafty wide receiver decided to play football for the University of Idaho after an outstanding high school athletic career at Timberline High School in Pierce, Idaho.

Among his accomplishments at Timberline include being named all-state football in Idaho's A-3 division and playing in the North Idaho all-star game. Barlow also had a successful campaign as a basketball player, leading his team to the Central Idaho League playoffs his senior year.

Obviously the Pierce native had the ability to be an outstanding high school football player but what made him decide to play college football?

"I wanted to come up here and stay close to the family and I knew I could play," Barlow said.

Sure, Barlow had confidence in himself but what did his friends and family think about the idea of him playing?

"Everybody knew I was a good athlete and everybody knows that Idaho has had a lot of short, fast receivers, so I figured I could play," Barlow said. "My parents wanted me to play basketball or baseball—either one. Football was the last choice for them. I think my dad excepts it more than my mom. Whenever I tell my mom that I might get to play she gets scared."

Fortunately for Barlow, he doesn't concede to fear as easily as his mother.

"You get hit pretty good a few times but if you know the game of football, you know how to take a hit," Barlow said with a slight grin on his face.

Actually, Barlow knows more than just the game of football and is an excellent basketball and baseball player.

"I can't really choose my favorite sport. I like all three sports, I just think I'm a little better in football. Size is a little more important in basketball, I thought, so I went for football," Barlow said.

Lack of size didn't slow down area junior colleges from wanting the Timberline High grad as a point guard. In fact, Walla Walla and North Idaho College both offered Barlow full or partial scholarships. The three-sport phenom wanted to stay close to home and eventually decided that walking on at Idaho was the right choice.

Although Barlow is only a freshman (redshirted last season), he is

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

RECENTLY,
MORNINGSTAR CALLED US CHEAP.
IT'S NOT EVERY DAY
YOU GET A COMPLIMENT
LIKE THAT.

All financial companies charge operating fees and expenses — some more than others. Of course, the lower the expenses you pay, the better. That way more of your money goes where it should — towards building a comfortable future.

We make low expenses a high priority.

Because of our size and our exclusive focus on serving the needs of educational and research communities, TIAA-CREF's costs are among the lowest in the insurance and mutual funds industries.¹

In fact, Morningstar, Inc. — one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information — says, "Size isn't a constraint; it... enables CREF to realize a remarkable economy of scale."² According to Morningstar's data, CREF's "minuscule" 0.31% average fund expense charge was less than half that charged by comparable funds.³

TIAA's traditional annuity also charges no fees

aside from a very modest operating expense of 1/4 of 1% of annuity assets. Interest and dividends are reported after all operating costs have been deducted. Standard & Poor's calls TIAA's costs "exceptionally low."⁴

Of course, expenses are only one factor to consider when you make an investment decision. While we're committed to keeping our expenses down, we spare nothing in trying to provide top-quality investment choices, financial expertise, and personal service. Because that can make a difference in the long run, too.

TIAA-CREF seeks performance, not profit.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe people would like to spend more on retirement, not on their retirement company. If you'd like to see how our approach can help keep more of your money working for you, call us at 1 800 842-2776 (8 a.m. to 11 p.m. ET, weekdays). We'd consider it a compliment.

A new game for armchair quarterbacks

As fall rears its head and pigskins start to take flight, a different type of football is making a name for itself with those sports fans who are either too old or uncoordinated to get out on the turf for real.

Fantasy football is the latest legal gambling craze to hit the market of sports-related betting. Fantasy football originated a few years back and has grown steadily every year since then. It enables the customer to act as the manager of a team of sorts that is made up of a combination of players from throughout the league.

When you start to make up your team, strategy becomes the focus of attention from the first minute you open the entry form. The strategy arises due to the fact that in most leagues team owners have a salary cap they have to stay under in order to fill their roster.

With each company the rules are different, but the general consensus is a team is made up of two quarterbacks, three running backs, five wide receivers, two kickers, and an offensive and defensive team. The prices of the players are based on the way they performed the prior season, with the best being more expensive than those who rarely played. Rookies go for the league minimum of $15,000, so another chance you are taking is getting a rookie that will come in and be an instant success, instead of picking one that will just sit on the bench with a fancy bandanna on his head, thus earning you no fantasy points.

In years past the key for my team has been picking up players inadvertently left off the original roster. There are always a few players left off of the overall roster for whatever reason and picked for the league minimum by any team that discovers the error by the company.

Anyway, that is just a little background on how the salary cap works. Many people first thought they could pick whoever they wanted, but this takes all the strategy out of it. Picking 12 great players is about as hard as puking when you get the head spins, but not nearly as messy.

With a lot of recent success, I welcome those of you who are trying this for the first time. You may find yourself as excited about players you hate as you are about those you still love, for I have realized that the only way to be successful is to find a way to root for those you despise.

The entry fee for the league I play in is a cool $125 a team, but if you win your league or win the entire league you can pay that off with ease. The grand prize for winning the whole thing is a trip for two to the Caribbean for seven days and seven nights. If you win this I doubt you will ever hear another complaint from your girlfriend about wanting to watch Lassie re-runs on Sunday afternoons.

Fantasy sports besides football are also becoming a large success as fantasy sports in general are becoming one of the fastest growing forms of legalized gambling in America. Watch out Las Vegas, there is a new game in town in which the only option to fold lies solely in putting your roster back in your wallet at the bar. The money is all paid up front and the gambling lasts up to 18 weeks, depending on the way the byes are placed. If you love watching sports anyway, this is just added incentive to root for your favorite and not so favorite players to do well on Sunday. You may find yourself in church with your walk-man on and roster in hand, but just remember that what you are doing is perfectly legal and in reality you haven't sinned.

Broncos throttle USU, Cougs drop Griz

Andrew Longeteig

Staff

Boise State 38, Utah State 14
John L. Smith proababy doesn't enjoy losing to Boise State—especially twice within one year. On Saturday the Broncos spanked Division I Utah State, now coached by the former UI front man Smith, by a score of 38-14 Saturday in Logan, Utah.

BSU quarterback Tony Hilde tossed three touchdown passes and running back Tommy Edwards gained 102 yards on 20 carries. Edwards replaced 1994 first team All-Big Sky tailback K.C. Adams who is academically ineligible.

Hilde went deep early, hooking up with Ryan Ikebe for a 77-yard scoring pass for BSU's first score.

USU (0-2) retaliated with two short field goals of 18 and 21 yards.

With two seconds left in the first quarter, BSU's Andre Horace returned a kick-off 94 yards for a touchdown, giving the Broncos a 14-6 lead.

The Aggies managed only one more score, a 2-yard scamper by Abu Wilson with 36 seconds remaining in the game.

After six seasons at Idaho, Smith left for the Big West—the Vandals' new conference in 1996. As UI head coach he lost to BSU last year ending a 12-game winning streak.

BSU, also bolting for the Big West next season, is 1-0. They are currently No. 5 in the Sports Network I-AA poll.

Washington State 38, Montana 21
The Washington State Cougars did what few teams can do—contain elusive Montana Grizzly quarterback Dave Dickenson.

WSU held Dickenson to 322 yards passing and the Cougar running attack gained 204 yards in a sloppy 38-21 win before 28,312 in Pullman's Martin Stadium.

The Division I-AA Grizzlies (1-1), however, put up quite a fight against the Pac-10 Cougars (1-1).

In the fourth quarter, Dickenson threw a 16-yard touchdown pass that would have cut the score to 24-21, but it was nullified by an offensive pass interference call. The Grizzlies ultimately missed a field goal.

The Cougars, who boasted the third best rush defense in the country last year, held UM's impotent ground game to minus-6 yards.

However, WSU had their best team-rushing performance in nearly two years. Running back Frank Madu gained 114 yards on 20 carries and Derek Sparks carried the ball 15 times for 81 yards.

Dickenson, the Big Sky offensive MVP in 1993 and 1994, was under pressure from the massive and athletic WSU defensive line for most of the game. He was sacked six times.

The game was mired with 25 penalties, 14 by WSU.

Montana State 34, Central Washington 14
MSU running back Matt Engleking rushed for 169 yards and one score to help the Bobcats to a 34-14 victory over NAIA Central Washington in Bozeman.

Defensive back Omar Turner intercepted CWU's Jon Kinta in the first quarter to set up MSU's first score, a 34-yard Geoff Groshelle field goal.

The Bobcats (1-1) also scored on short touchdown runs by Engleking and T.T. Ryan.

GWU (0-1) rallied midway through the second quarter after an interception return for a touchdown and a 51-yard pass play from Kinta to E.J. Henderson, cutting the lead to 17-14.

In the second half, the MSU defense held CWU scoreless.

Idaho State 28, Cal Poly-SLO 22
Idaho State tailback Alf Anderson scored on a 42-yard run with 1:27 left in the game to boost the Bengals to a 28-22 win over Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo.

Anderson gained 129 yards on 21 carries. The Mustangs were down 21-6 late in the third quarter, then bounced back with two scores. Cal Poly quarterback Mike Fisher hit Jon Peck for a 17-yard touchdown and James Tuthill kicked a 38-yard field goal to cut the Bengals' lead to 21-15.

After Anderson's touchdown, the Mustangs (1-1) scored with 12 seconds remaining on an 18-yard touchdown pass from Fisher to Peck.

ISU quarterback Rob Wetta was 19-of-36 for 196 yards passing. The Bengals are 1-0 on the season.

Northern Arizona 62, Sacramento State 7
NAU's Archie Amerson ran for three touchdowns and 115 yards on 12 carries as the Lumberjacks pummeled Sacramento State 62-7 in Flagstaff, Ariz.

Amerson opened the floodgates with a 58-yard touchdown run in the first quarter. He was spelled by running back Claude Torrey who gained 130 yards on 16 carries and also scored NAU's last two touchdowns.

The Lumberjacks (1-1) were helped by kicker Kevin O'Leary who booted field goals of 43, 34 and 33 yards.

listed as second string on the wide receiver depth chart and has a more than likely chance to play later this season.

"Hopefully I'll get to play this year. I should get some playing time," Barlow said.

So how does this modest freshman stay motivated during the season.

"I've been an athlete all my life. It's been one of my dreams - to play in the NFL is a definite dream. But college comes first," Barlow said. "I don't think I'm an over-achiever. I do come out and work hard everyday but everybody should." Barlow has set high goals for himself and so far he's shattered everyone's doubts about possible failure.

Vandal fans can come out and watch Barlow, as well as many other promising young UI players when the Vandal junior varsity faces Walla Walla junior college Saturday, Sept. 22 in the Kibbie Dome.
