'Bikes for Babes' ride benefits Toys for Tots

Lisa Lannigan Staff

While most of campus slept in Saturday morning, several people on motorcycles gathered outside Wallace Center at the University of Idaho to help support Toys for Tots.

The rally, called "Bikes for Babes", was the idea of Rich Wells, a resident assistant at Gault Hall.

With help from the Marine Corps, the Moscow Police Department and other local sponsors, Wells' idea became reality.

Students and other community members participating in the event were asked to bring a cash or toy donations.

Wells said he didn't know how many people to expect. "Anywhere from two to 20," Wells said. In all, 13 motorcycles with both men and women riding came to contribute toys and go for a ride.

Jason Linscott, another resident assistant at Gault, says the draw of a bike rally is the chance to ride with a group. "The more people, the more fun it is," Linscott said.

Several UI students thought it would be fun too. Devin Cole, a sophomore, saw fliers for the event around campus.

"I like to ride," Cole said. "I just haven't found many people to ride with."

Sgt. Marianne Campbell gathered toys and donations from the bikers for the Toys for Tots program. Last year, the program collected and distributed 700 toys for needy children in Moscow. "We've had marvelous donations from the community," Campbell said.

Saturday's bike rally contributed $60 in donations and 35 toys for local children.

"All the toys will be distributed to kids in the community," Campbell assured.

Motorcycles at the event ranged from Harleys to Hondas. Brian Gordon, a senior, said he'd participated in rallies before. "Usually they're not as diverse as this ride," Gordon said.

A police escort guided the bikes out of town. Cpl. Bob Marr with the Moscow Police Department drove the escorting D.A.R.E. car. Marr said he was more than happy to do this, although he confessed he'd rather be riding, too. Marr owns an old BMW motorcycle with over 200,000 miles on it. "It's hard to stay in the car, especially with the nice weather," Marr said.

The riders appreciated the sunny weather Saturday for their 60 mile ride through Potlach and Deary, then back to Moscow. The rally ended at Ted's Burger Express, another sponsor of the event.

Bikers rode 60 miles through Potlach and Deary before stopping at Ted's Burger Express, a sponsor of the event, in Moscow.

Peace Corps seeks volunteers on UI campus

Justin Oliver Ruen Staff

Are you cut out for "the toughest job you'll ever love?" Peace Corps recruiter Jonathan Nguyen sure hopes so.

There are approximately 6,000 Peace Corps volunteers, with 3,000 being recruited each year. About a dozen students are recruited every year at the University of Idaho.

"Every year, we are at the UI twice. We find that the students here, especially agricultural, forestry and science students are people we are looking for," Nguyen said.

"The Peace Corps was created in 1961 by President John F. Kennedy and has three objectives," said Nguyen. "To provide technical assistance to developing nations, to teach Americans about other cultures, and vice versa, and to bring back what Americans have learned overseas to the United States and share their knowledge about other cultures with other Americans."

Peace Corps volunteers are sent overseas for two years. Recruits must be over 18 years of age, a U.S. citizen and be in good health. Most programs require a bachelor's degree, either a technical or liberal arts major. Exceptions would include people with agricultural, business, carpentry, masonry or plumbing experience.

Volunteer experience and a year of either French or Spanish language study is also required.

Once serving, everything including transportation, food, housing and health care is provided. After finishing their two-year project, volunteers are paid $5,400 and also given deferred or canceled student loans and possibly graduate study credits.

Nguyen served for three years, working in Guatemalan fisheries. "Fisheries is a project that is being developed in Africa and also South and Central America. Volunteers are basically teaching the locals how to increase the production of fish," he said.

Teachers comprise one-third of all Peace

Corps volunteers. "In Eastern Europe, we have English teachers who are teaching in Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Russia," Nguyen explained. "We just started to promote our English-speaking programs in Eastern Europe three or four years ago, so it is a new program."

What do people say after their service in the Peace Corps? "Nine out of 10 volunteers say they would rejoin the Peace Corps and volunteer again," Nguyen said. "Most say it has been a life-changing experience, stimulating in both personal and professional growth."

For more about the Peace Corps, you can reach Jonathan Nguyen at 1-800-424-8580.

Foreign war POWs, MIAs honored in ceremony

"I was 75 miles from Nagasaki when the bomb was dropped," said former POW Bud Kirchoff. "I was working in a coal mine, and I didn't hear that the war was over for three days."

A war prisoner for over three years, Kirchoff was also forced to take part in the Death March of Bataan. He was among the veterans honored Friday at the Idaho POW/MIA Recognition Day ceremony held on the Administration Building lawn.

Special guest Lt. Col. K.R. Liston-Wakefield spoke to the audience of cadets, veterans, and their families about the "mantle of honor" veterans pass on to the cadets. He asked the crowd to remember and respect those who served their country in the armed services.

"I ask all of you here today to honor our POWs, our veterans, and the men and women who are missing. Think about that commitment. Think about that sacrifice," Liston-Wakefield said.

The campus shook at noon as the Cougars of VAQ-139 from Whidbey Island performed a fly-by tribute in missing-man formation. Cougar LTJG

Football players have criminal records

MOSCOW—Ten football players at the University of Idaho have criminal records that range from drunken driving to petty theft.

In a report filed this week with the State Board of Education, university officials said that "history demonstrates an average of one serious incident per year generally involving football and men's basketball program participants."

But an Idaho Statesman court check in Ada and Latah counties of the 74-man team showed that five were convicted in 1995 and two had repeat offenses.

Athletic Director Pete Liske said he considered all the charges against the football players serious. Liske said he was only aware of quarterback Brian Brennan's arrest last winter on drunken-driving charges. Brennan eventually pleaded guilty to minor consumption of alcohol.

"We're going to go through all of the court records and find out what is there," Liske said. "We need to get a handle on each case separately."

None of the players has been suspended, although one football player's scholarship was revoked last spring and two basketball players were suspended over the winter.

A court check of Boise State University football players earlier this week showed that 17 of the 95 on a preseason roster had been charged with crimes ranging from battery to alcohol-related offenses. BSU reported to the state that only seven athletes on all sports teams had been charged with crimes in the past year.

Liske said the University of Idaho did not do any court checks for its six-page report to the state. The information was gathered through interviews with current and past athletic department officials.

Police say attack racially motivated

SPOKANE—An 81-year-old white man was beaten in an attack police say was racially motivated.

Peter LaBeck, a retired Air Force sergeant, was walking downtown last week when three black youths approached him.

"They just walked up and called me ugly white trash," LaBeck said Friday. The teen-agers swore at him and said they were going to beat him up.

LaBeck said only one of the boys punched him, while the other two cheered their companion on. He was hit in the face and head. His lower dentures broke in two.

His eyes were blackened, his nose broken in four places.

LaBeck had nearly $100 in his wallet but wasn't robbed, police said.

Police caught up with the teens shortly after the attack Wednesday. They accused LaBeck of yelling racial slurs at them and denied hitting him, police said.

ting him, police said.

Adrian Washington, 16, was booked for investigation of third-degree assault. Police said witnesses identified him as the youth who hit LaBeck.

The teen has 13 prior arrests for assault, drugs, theft and disorderly conduct.

Another teen-ager was cited and released for carrying a dangerous weapon. The third youth was not arrested, police said.

Witnesses told police LaBeck didn't say anything to the youths before they confronted him.

LaBeck said he rides a bus downtown every day to go to church at Our Lady of Lourdes Cathedral. Then he walks to McDonald's a couple of blocks away for a cheeseburger.

When the bruised LaBeck shuffled into restaurant on Friday, several employees came over to visit while he ate. One brought him flowers.

"My eyes are hurt, but I can still see pretty girls," LaBeck said. "Thank goodness for that."

LaBeck and his wife, Elsie, have lived on the city's South Hill for 40 years.

Dozens of people came forward to offer money and even free dental services to LaBeck.

He was pleased with the offers, but LaBeck said he didn't need any money. He said he could get his teeth fixed at Fairchild Air Force Base.

When it turned out he couldn't see anyone at the base until next month, a Spokane dentist promised to replace LaBeck's dentures for free this week.

LaBeck's not letting the attack change his routine or his outlook.

"I'm a Christian, so I'll forgive them for doing this to me," he said.

Democrats scaring elderly about Medicare, says Pete Wilson

ST. LOUIS—California Gov. Pete Wilson is accusing Democrats of unfairly frightening the elderly in their attacks on the GOP's plan to revamp Medicare.

Wilson, seeking the Republican presidential nomination, said Saturday that President Clinton was aware that the Medicare fund was in danger of bankruptcy. The Democrats say Republicans are overstating the program's financial problems.

Wilson spoke at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Clayton, where he attended a reception. A group of supporters in the St. Louis is planning a $500-a-person fund-raising dinner here Nov. 21 for Wilson.

Wilson, who grew up in St. Louis County, told reporters he planned to emphasize four issues: ending affirmative action, getting tough on illegal immigrants, changing welfare and cracking down on crime.

He said the nation's borders must be secure. Of welfare, he said current programs have good intentions but discourage marriage and reward teen-agers who have babies out of wedlock.

Asked about the possibility of Gen. Colin Powell running for president, Wilson said, "General Powell is an old friend and a fine man. He would be an attractive candidate, but I was with him recently and he wasn't sure what he would do."

U.N. chief meets top officials for Yugoslavia

UNITED NATIONS—The U.N. chief met with his top officials for former Yugoslavia on Saturday to discuss what role the United Nations should play if the U.S. peace plan for Bosnia succeeds.

Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali met with the deputy force commander for the peacekeeping mission, Gen. Barry Ashton; the top civilian official for former Yugoslavia, Yasushi Akashi; and mediator Thorvald Stoltenberg.

Boutros-Ghali's office released a brief statement after the two and a half hour meeting backing the American peace mission in former Yugoslavia, which appears to have overtaken U.N. diplomacy in the region.

The regular U.N. budget ran out of money in mid-August, and the organization is borrowing from a separate peacekeeping fund to keep functioning. The money problems would probably diminish U.N. participation in implementation of any peace plan.

The American proposal would split Bosnia roughly in half between the Serb rebels and a Muslim-Croat confederation.

Caribbean nations hold record of domestic violence

UNITED NATIONS—The Caribbean Community nations of Barbados, Antigua Suriname have one thing in common with the United States, Japan and Canada: a record of violence against women.

A U.N. report issued at the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing said about a quarter of the females in those nations has been beaten by an intimate partner at least once.

"The most pervasive form of gender-based violence against women is reported to be abuse by a husband or intimate partner," said the U.N. report titled "World's Women: 1995 Trends and Statistics."

National surveys found that 30 percent of the women in Antigua, Barbados, Suriname and Mexico have been physically abused by their partners. Meanwhile, 28 percent of the U.S. women and 25 percent of the Canadian women have suffered a similar fate.

In Japan and Costa Rica, the picture was worst.

About 59 percent of the Japanese women interviewed at women's groups, adult education classes and through the media, said they had been beaten by spouses or lovers at least once in their lives.

In Costa Rica, 54 percent of the women interviewed at child welfare clinics had also suffered physical abuse from partners.

"Gender-based violence against women crosses all cultural, religious and regional boundaries and is a major problem in every country in which it has been studied," the U.N. report said.

"Women assault their partners too, but less frequently and seriously than men and usually in self-defense," the report said.

Environmentalists press Clinton to save salmon

WASHINGTON—Environmentalists want President Clinton to bite the bullet, follow the law and spend what it takes to save several salmon species from extinction in the Pacific Northwest.

Along with tribal leaders and fishing groups, they lobbied the White House last week for the most ambitious plans to help the salmon, in some cases at the expense of hydropower production at dams on the Snake and Columbia Rivers.

Shippers, irrigators and representatives of industries dependent on cheap electricity want Congress to waive federal laws protecting the fish and set a limit on salmon spending at around $300 million a year.

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., chairman of the Appropriations Committee, already has set legislation in motion to suspend the laws at least temporarily and cap salmon expenses of the region's largest power wholesaler, the Bonneville Power Administration.

Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., likes that idea but also wants to extend the spending protection to public utilities who otherwise might see BPA passing on higher costs to them.

Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., is reluctant to go along with exemptions to the environmental laws as a way to reduce salmon costs, but she isn't ruling anything out.

Hair Etc. makes a difference for chemotherapy patients

Sean Tetpon

They come looking to replace what was lost: the hair they once had on their head. They leave looking more like their former selves, with a renewed sense of self-esteem.

The side-effects of chemotherapy and radiation treatments are alarming. On top of feeling utterly sick inside, many cancer patients experience dramatic hair loss and discoloring of their skin. Cancer treatments rob patients of their appearance.

Hair Etc. can help them get it back. Salon owner Julie Caudillo and her sister Janet Young, provide free services for cancer patients seeking to recapture their looks. They custom fit wigs and consult their clients on special cosmetics used to combat skin discoloration.

Young said clients can be timid. "They call us and usually do not know what to say. I was told I can get a wig from you?"

Young breaks the ice by setting up an appointment. When the client arrives at Hair Etc., their head is measured. "Hopefully, they have come before they lost their hair," Young said. "When treatments begin, they usually lose their hair right away."

"We will take a piece of their hair. Then we will look through books to find a picture of what hair style they like, and make a photocopy of it." Head measurements, hair color, even pieces of hair, are kept on file.

The file information is sent to the American Cancer Society in Boise. A few weeks later, the ACS sends the salon some wigs.

Clients are called back to the salon for a fitting, and are shown proper care for their wigs.

The ACS provides wigs and cosmetics at no charge for Hair Etc.'s clients. Caudillo and Young provide their time for free.

"I enjoy it," said Young. "It makes me feel like I am doing something to help people. I wish I could do more."

Local chapter receives national Alpha Kappa Lambda awards

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Repetition is sometimes a good thing, something the men of the Alpha Phi chapter of Alpha Kappa Lambda at the University of Idaho know well. The men came back from their annual National Conclave in Atlanta, Georgia with two awards for the second straight year.

The men of the Alpha Phi chapter AKL came back after the National Conclave held Aug. 3-5 with the Fraternity Education Award and the Religious Activities Award.

Jeff Allen the vice president of AKL commented, "We're really excited about the awards. After only our fifth year nobody expected us to already be competing nationally."

The Fraternity Education Award was given to the Alpha Phi chapter in recognition of several changes they have made in the past few years. The honor is received every year by one chapter with the best program for the education of its members and pledges.

Putting the men of AKL over the top this summer was their change to a new fraternity education program called the Kai Program. Essentially this program allows the fraternity a shorter pledge period of only six weeks without cramming all of the knowledge of the fraternity into one pledge semester.

As the fraternity men progress through their years with the chapter

We're really excited about the awards. After only our fifth year nobody expected us to already be competing nationally.

—Jeff Allen, vice president of Alpha Kappa Lambda they continue their education of the fraternity as they needs to know it. This program encourages its pledges and members to be more active and stay involved even in the final few years living with the chapter.

The men of AKL feel their chapter's enthusiastic and successful participation in this program led to winning the national award.

The second award they received was the Religious Activities Award.

Also given annually, this award honors the chapter that displays the best programming in religious areas of interest.

The men of AKL were awarded this award for their participation in a weekly Bible study group that met at the chapter house.

One other criteria they met was a high percentage of members involved in church organizations and consistently outstanding use of the rituals of the chapter.

Last year at the National Conclave the Alpha Phi chapter won the National President's Award and the Rush Award. The National President's Award is given to the most improved chapter. The Rush Award is based on how many pledges a chapter takes over the course of the year as well as their retention rate.

Allen noted, "That year we pledged twenty-eight men and only de-pledged one."

This year the fraternity men are working hard as a chapter with the Founder's Award as their goal. Allen stated, "We're going to do as much as we can in every area." Allen continued to say the chapter has the capability to do it. Allen noted "It's our year."

Parking problems plague pedalers

Mike McNulty
Staff

University of Idaho safety officers and facility managers have been busy issuing warnings to bikes left in staircases, hallways and handicap areas to meet fire and safety codes on campus.

With the nice weather and growing automobile parking problem, students, staff and faculty are choosing to ride their bikes to campus, but several people are violating parking rules.

Occupational Health and Safety Inspector George Porter at the Environmental Health and Safety Office said part of the problem may be not enough bike racks on campus but mostly people just don't want to walk from the designated parking areas to class.

"People are not using the spaces already available," said Porter. "They just want to park right where their class is."

Porter said when one person locks their bike to a railing others assume it is all right to do so and the problem just gets worse. He said that while he is issuing warnings to bikes in prohibited areas the designated racks are often empty.

Bicycles that are identified as repeated offenders will be removed with bolt cutters or electric grinders said Porter and UI is not responsible for damage to, or loss of, bicycles, chains, locks or other equipment if the bike is parked in a prohibited area.

Porter said people are becoming aware of bicycle regulations with the help of Corporal Carl Wommack and the rest of the Moscow Police Department who have issued hundreds of the now mandatory bike registrations and given out copies of local policies.

Also the EHS recently made a bicycle video which has been given out to the library, local bike shops, the police and university residences to stress regulations, safety tips and local rules as well as addressing the parking problem on campus.

Porter said the importance of bike regulations needs to reach everyone who commutes to campus, because if riders do not pay attention to the rules they may lose some privileges like riding on the campus walkways.

"It's up to the bicycle users now," said Porter. "Because the alternative to having people comply is to become more restrictive with policy."

Impounded bikes are held at the Campus Subdivision Police Department located at the corner of Third and Line Streets. There is no charge to pick them up.

Information about bicycle regulations and safety tips can be found in the Student Policies and Information book or by reaching the commander of the Campus Substation Corporal Wommack at 885-7074.

Warm weather brings more bicycles to campus which causes parking problems.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

MORNINGSTAR CALLED US CHEAP.
IT'S NOT EVERY DAY
YOU GET A COMPLIMENT
LIKE THAT.

All financial companies charge operating fees and expenses — some more than others. Of course, the lower the expenses you pay, the better. That way more of your money goes where it should — towards building a comfortable future.

We make low expenses a high priority.

Because of our size and our exclusive focus on serving the needs of educational and research communities, TIAA-CREF's costs are among the lowest in the insurance and mutual funds industries.<sup>1</sup>

In fact, Morningstar, Inc. — one of the nation's leading sources of variable annuity and mutual fund information — says, "Size isn't a constraint; it... enables CREF to realize a remarkable economy of scale."<sup>2</sup> According to Morningstar's data, CREF's "minuscule" 0.31% average fund expense charge was less than half that charged by comparable funds.<sup>3</sup>

TIAA's traditional annuity also charges no fees

aside from a very modest operating expense of 1/4 of 1% of annuity assets. Interest and dividends are reported after all operating costs have been deducted. Standard & Poor's calls TIAA's costs "exceptionally low."<sup>4</sup>

Of course, expenses are only one factor to consider when you make an investment decision. While we're committed to keeping our expenses down, we spare nothing in trying to provide top-quality investment choices, financial expertise, and personal service. Because that can make a difference in the long run, too.

TIAA-CREF seeks performance, not profit.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe people would like to spend more on retirement, not on their retirement company. If you'd like to see how our approach can help keep more of your money working for you, call us at 1 800 842-2776 (8 a.m. to 11 p.m. ET, weekdays). We'd consider it a compliment.

Ensuring the future

ACLU, school district debate release of names

Associated Press
BOISE—The American Civil Liberties Union and the Madison School District are still arguing over who should know the names of the mother and child who sued the district in 1990 over graduation prayers.

The ACLU wants a federal judge to reverse an earlier ruling that the names must be revealed to school district lawyers, citing threats against the plaintiffs this summer in a newspaper article.

But the Rexburg-based district contends the ACLU is using the mother and child as "an excuse to advance its own program financed by taxpayers of various school districts."

District lawyers also say they need the plaintiffs' names to prepare a proper defense and to determine if the family has standing to challenge a policy allowing student-led prayers at Madison High School graduation ceremonies.

"We do not know if any of the purported plaintiffs actually ever listened to a prayer at graduation originally and we do not have any idea without deposing them how they, as opposed to some ACLU attorney, interpret what has transpired recently at graduation," the district wrote in a legal brief.

However, the ACLU says U.S. District Judge Lynn Winmill can decide on that question without school district lawyers learning

Survey reveals students have problems with computers

Christopher Clancy
Staff

A recent survey, conducted by the Argonaut, suggests students have some misunderstandings and common complaints with UI computer labs. Of the 50 people surveyed the most common complaints were overcrowding, slow connections, limited off campus connections and not enough lab hours.

One person wrote of "The Bad air, and a feeling of claustrophobia," another complained of "dreary, unhealthy fluorescent lighting," and "noxious fumes from printers."

Dickinson said the labs ventilation has been increased dramatically since last year, but the labs do get crowded at times. During peak hours students have lined up to use some labs, especially room 10 located in the basement of the Administration Building.

One of the best solutions to the problem of overcrowding, said Dickinson, is to simply "use another lab," and avoid peak hours when competition for lab computers is greater. Most labs are open 23 hours a day. The one hour of downtime is necessary for routine maintenance. Later or earlier hours are the best times to avoid the rush, said Dickinson.

According to the survey, the most popular labs are those located in the Administration Building and the Student Union. Meanwhile, labs in other nearby buildings, such as the ones in the Education building, remain empty.

"I don't know why people don't use the labs in the Ed building," said Carl Brenner of Computer Services. Last Fall AT&T donated a new PC Lab in room 202 of that building. "Those are some of the best computers on campus," said Brenner. Room 202 is equipped with 20, 486/66 computers, two CD ROMs and a laser printer.

Other similarly equipped labs exist in the Wallace complex basement and JEB room 211. Dickinson stressed that Wallace computers are not restricted to residents' use and could provide students with another way to escape crowds. Some of the fastest com-

The program promotes well-being for cancer patients undergoing treatment. The program brochure reads, "By choosing treatment, you are helping yourself to recover on the inside. Doesn't the outside of you also deserve to be treated kindly?"

A member of the ACS approached Caudillo over two years ago, and asked if her salon would provide services to cancer patients. Caudillo and Young have participated ever since.

Sue Smith, administrative assistant for programs of the ACS, said the organization appreciates the great deal of time and effort Hair Etc. gives to cancer patients.

Young's efforts have taken her out of the salon and into the homes of some clients who cannot get into town.

She recently visited a particular client, fit her for a wig, and delivered the wig to her after it arrived from ACS. "She was not doing well at all. She did not have any hair, so she was glad to get a wig," said Young. "Three weeks later, her husband brought back the wig back and said, 'I thought you could use it, we do not need it anymore.'" Young's client had passed away.

"Two clients that I know of have died," she said, holding back her emotion. "That is heartbreaking."

Hair Etc. sees over 20 clients who take part in the Look Good...Feel Better program, and the number is growing.

"They are hearing about it through their doctor, or their support group," she said of new clients. "Sometimes they come in and say, 'I had no idea there was any place in town that did this!'"

Hair Etc. is the only salon in Moscow which provides free services for cancer patients.

have been given false hope that he may be alive or his remains found," Danielson said in a prepared statement. "He served, not because he was asked to, but because he believed what he was doing was the right thing to do."

Civilian Mark Stephensen, whose father was missing in action, read a proclamation by Gov. Phil Batt. The governor proclaimed Sept. 10-16 to be "POW/MIA Recognition Week," and Sept. 15 to be "Idaho POW/MIA Recognition Day." He noted that nearly 2000 Americans are still missing from the Vietnam War. Eleven of those are from Idaho.

Robert "Wolf" Painter, who helps sponsor POW/MIA activities in the Hoodoo Valley, came down from Spirit Lake for Friday's ceremony and reception.

"I rode down here this morning. I was a bit overwhelmed when I got here," Painter said, referring to seeing the ROTC cadets. He said he was disappointed with the low student turn-out, however.

"If people are looking for someone to thank for the freedoms they've got in this country, it's the veterans," Painter said.

BSU President embarrassed by legal problems

Associated Press
BOISE—Boise State University President Charles Ruch, embarrassed by the spate of legal problems his athletes have had, announced a policy on Thursday to crack down on student-athletes running afoul of the law.

Ruch said those athletes will be subject to no less than suspension and possibly expulsion from the team. All athletes will be required to disclose any criminal history by months end or face dismissal from the athletic program. And coaches will make reference and record checks on new recruits.

Ruch's announcement came after The Idaho Statesman reported that court records showed 17 BSU football players have been charged with crimes other than traffic infractions in Ada County since 1992, and a dozen of the athletes have appeared in court since September 1994.

But in a report ordered by the state Board of Education, BSU said only seven athletes from all sports were charged with crimes in the past year.

School officials said they failed to check local court records or talk to police in preparing their report for next week's board meeting in Pocatello.

Ruch and athletic director Gene Bleymaier said they were unaware the university had access to the criminal records.

"I suspect that we will do a whole lot before the next board meeting," Ruch said in predicting the new policy. "We obviously will report this to the board."

Bleymaier said the report had been based solely on criminal charges known to coaches. But after learning of the newspaper's findings, he said the university will run every athlete's name through Ada County court records and amend the report.

The latest player in trouble is third-string fullback John Tia. He was suspended from the team on Wednesday after a scuffle with a sheriff's deputy at a campus study hall.

Tia, 25, was charged with two misdemeanor counts of trespassing and resisting arrest or obstructing a police officer. He was released after posting $600 bond pending an Oct. 10 court appearance.

"I'm just sick. Completely sick," coach Pokey Allen said. "I've told the team there's nothing I can do. If you get in trouble, you're suspended indefinitely and it doesn't matter what it is."

Bleymaier said he and Allen put players on notice that their behavior is under scrutiny after starting quarterback Tony Hilde was arrested last month during a scuffle with Boise police officers.

Tia is among six Broncos who are scheduled to appear in court in the next five months to face criminal charges.

“I'm just sick. I've told the team there's nothing I can do. If you get in trouble, you're suspended indefinitely and it doesn't matter what it is.

—Pokey Allen
 BSU football coach

Hilde was charged with four misdemeanors in the Aug. 27 incident. He will appear in court Oct. 5 on charges of assault, battery, resisting arrest and being in a city park after dark. Allen placed him on team probation.

The Board of Education asked for reports from all the state's universities about athletes' legal troubles after a series of offenses, including statutory rape charges against Idaho State University football players.

Boise State said in its report that seven of its 330 athletes were charged with crimes in the past year, four with misdemeanors and three with felonies.

The Idaho Statesman's examination was based on the football team's preseason roster and did not include athletes in other sports. The search was limited to Ada County charges.

Idaho State University said in its report to the board that three athletes were arrested in 1994-95 and six were arrested in 1993-94. Football players accounted for the majority of the arrests.

The University of Idaho reported it has "an average of one serious incident per year over the last decade, generally involving football and men's basketball program participants."

puters on campus—Pentium based PCs—are located in Wallace, said Dickinson.

In addition to the new 6100/66 Power Macintosh lab in Administration Building, room 221, another Macintosh lab will also be added in the Art and Architecture building by spring, adding to the overall availability of computers on campus.

Although, the majority of people polled were satisfied with Computer Services on campus, a most expressed the need for faster, more reliable internet service. Many of the difficulties experienced by users in both labs and off campus are related to inadequate communications infrastructure, said Dickinson.

"We've had problems with labs running slow. Demand is overwhelming the system." Many of the problems associated with the labs such as, computers not "booting" properly or "crashing", comes from a backlog of information on the network that cause everything to get "bogged down," said Dickinson.

With many improvements to the infrastructure, and acquisition of new hardware, including a new server and eight 28.8 high speed modems online just last week, many of the problems can be solved. Off campus users with 28.8 data transfer modems can reach the network at 885-2896, though

Dickinson urges users to use this faster connection only if they can support it.

An ongoing infrastructure project is re-wiring the campus and should be complete before the end of the year, said Dickinson. The project, involving the use of fiber optic wiring, will increase the bandwidth of portions of the existing network allowing information to flow more quickly from servers in administration to individual lab computers.

A common complaint associated with availability of computers stems from students playing games in campus labs. In response, some labs have restricted the use of games during peak hours, said Dickinson.

the plaintiffs' names. The court has ruled that in any event the names would not be released to the public or the Madison School Board.

No date has been set for a hearing on the arguments. "The only reason defendants are seeking disclosure of plaintiffs' names is because they know plaintiffs will dismiss the case if such disclosure is required," an ACLU brief says.

"The school policy being challenged in this case either is, or is not, constitutional. No damages are being sought. The policy is being attacked on its face and any student—and every student—has the right to make that challenge," it says. "It does not matter why plaintiffs object to prayers or what plaintiffs' own religious beliefs are."

Boise lawyer James Lynch, representing the school district, said without knowing the names, there is no way to determine if the Jane Doe and child R. Doe listed as the plaintiffs actually are people with an interest in the case.

The group may not be asking for monetary damages, but Lynch said ACLU lawyers "have missed few opportunities to seek recovery of their attorneys fees at an inflated rate in order to fund their on-going activity."

The Madison case returned to the forefront earlier this year after the U.S. Supreme Court decided a lawsuit on the same issue from the Grangeville School District was moot because the students involved had already graduated.

As a result, Lynch said, "The board members, the principals and even the teachers are berated by the ACLU for failure to endorse views which are not shared by the vast majority of the patrons of a school district."

But ACLU attorney Stephen Pevar said the plaintiffs' names should not be revealed because the family has a credible fear of violence and other reprisal for challenging "a majoritarian religious practice."

Touchstone resigns from ASUI Senate

Andrew White
Staff

Allison Touchtone resigned from her position as ASUI senator Tuesday. She currently is working half time for the University of Idaho in the state 4-H offices.

Touchtone is responsible for the state 4-H teen conference which has been held for the last 80 years. Her responsibilities include facilitating 4-H kids from all over the state of Idaho.

"I have really enjoyed working and interacting with the living groups that I have represented over the years," Touchtone said. She has been a senator for 3 years and a Vice President for 1 year. "I have represented living groups from all over the campus," Touchtone said.

Senator Sue Pierce said, "It's too bad, she was a great leader and I've known her for many years. I hope whoever replaces her will have the same motivation and leadership skills that Allison had."

Touchtone's future plans are to teach high school agriculture. She has a bachelors degree in Agricultural education and is working on her masters degree.

ASUI President Sean Wilson said, "Allison is happier, she put in a lot of time and she has made a decision that she needed to make, it's probably best."

Senator Christa Manis said, "I think the ASUI lost a valuable person, I wish her the best of luck."

"I'm glad to be part of the 4-H program," Touchtone said. "I am an extension associate with the 4-H office."

So far Touchtone has not been replaced. Applications for the vacant seat will be accepted until Sept 27. The position will be an appointment by Wilson.

Two other ASUI senators have stepped down, Clint Cook and Scott Wimer. Any interested students are invited to apply for empty senate positions.

Dairyman brandishes gun at water resources officer

Associated Press

BLISS, Idaho—A dairyman's pistol persuaded a state worker to back off an inspection last week, leaving in question whether the large dairy's wells are depriving a neighboring rancher of spring water.

Jake Bosma displayed a holstered gun, but Idaho Department of Water Resources employee Dallas

Tryon did not feel threatened, said Allen Merritt, southern regional manager for Water Resources.

"(Tryon) said that Mr. Bosma did not point the gun at him and he stated that it was time to leave the property, and he departed," said a memo by another state inspector, Nick Cizmich of the Division of Environmental Quality.

Clinton indicates support for Dole welfare plan

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—President Clinton voiced support for a Senate welfare overhaul plan sponsored by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole on Saturday, saying it puts the nation "within striking distance" of true welfare reform.

Although the measure contains some elements he has resisted in the past, Clinton pronounced it far preferable to a more restrictive welfare bill that passed the House last March.

Clinton used his weekly seven-minute radio address to praise the Senate for "wisdom and courage" in a series of votes last week that he said made the legislation more acceptable to him.

Meanwhile, Dole predicted passage of the measure with bipartisan support on Tuesday.

The GOP leader, teaming up with House Speaker Newt Gingrich for the GOP radio response, called the bill "historic legislation to truly end welfare as a way of life" and said it would "dramatically overhaul 60 years of failed welfare policy."

"Once the Senate passes our plan...we will get together and we'll resolve the few differences there are, and I hope President Clinton will then sign the bill," Dole said.

Despite Dole's characterization of the differences between House and Senate versions as few, they were large enough to draw a threatened veto on the House version.

Deputy press secretary Mary Ellen Glynn said Saturday that veto threat still stood.

The president's support for the Dole legislation came reluctantly and only in the context of the harsher provisions of the House legislation.

"We're on the verge of coming to grips with one of the most fundamental social problems of our time—moving people from welfare to work," Clinton said. "Now we must finish the job and we can't let ideological extremism and politics as usual get in the way. Make no mistake: If Congress walks away from this bipartisan progress, they will kill welfare reform."

Dole's bill sends federal welfare, job training and child care programs to the states in block grants, curbs spending by $70 billion, and ends Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the federal guarantee of cash assistance.

Making it more palatable to the administration were votes in the Senate to set aside $8 billion for child care for single mothers on welfare who would be required to work and to establish a $1 billion emergency grant fund for states.

The House-passed version would put a family cap on benefits, ban them entirely for mothers younger than 18 with children born out of wedlock and cut spending by $122 billion.

"After months of sometimes bitter debate, we are now within striking distance of transforming the welfare system," Clinton said.

But he suggested the House-passed version continued to reflect "bipartisan extremism."

A House-Senate conference committee will work out a final version.

"We'll be working hard to build on the bipartisan progress we've made this week (in the Senate). We must not let it fall apart when the House and Senate meet to resolve their differences," Clinton said.

Despite Clinton's praise for the Senate plan, many influential Democrats are still criticizing it as too severe.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, a New York Democrat and the Senate's leading welfare scholar, even threatened to withhold his support for Clinton in 1996 if he doesn't veto the bill.

Melissa Skolfield, a spokeswoman for the Department of Health and Human Services, said that despite differences with Moynihan and others, the Senate bill is "moving in the right direction" as far as the administration is concerned.

Gingrich, meanwhile, in his joint radio message with Dole, asserted that the agenda of Republicans who seized control of both houses of Congress last November is on track.

"Balancing the budget. Cutting taxes. Replacing our failed welfare system with one that works. Protecting, preserving and strengthening Medicare. Those are the Republican goals for the next 60 days," Gingrich said.

Packwood's successor will be elected by mail

Associated Press
SALEM, Ore.—Gov. John Kitzhaber's move to let voters instead of party insiders pick nominees to replace Sen. Bob Packwood has led at least two potential candidates to drop out.

There are still plenty of contenders hoping to become the next U.S. senator from Oregon, though.

Kitzhaber announced Thursday that Oregon voters will select Packwood's replacement in the nation's first congressional election to be held by mail.

The primary will be held Dec. 5 and the general election Jan. 30, both by mail ballots. The winner will be sworn in Feb. 2.

Ballots will be mailed to registered voters about three weeks before the primary and general elections. The ballots must be at the local election offices by Election Day.

Special drop boxes also will be set up in each county for those who enjoy getting out and casting their ballots on election day.

Kitzhaber had the option of calling a primary election or allowing the parties to select their nominees, a process that would have been faster.

However, the governor said he chose the primary election route because he wanted as many people as possible to help decide who should replace Packwood.

The Oregon Republican announced Sept. 7 that he would resign over charges of sexual and official misconduct. He leaves office Oct. 1.

In the wake of Kitzhaber's announcement, one possible candidate, former Gov. Barbara Roberts, said there already are several impressive Democratic contenders and that she wants to devote herself to her new job as head of the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard.

U.S. Rep. Wes Cooley, a Republican, had said he would have run only if the candidates were chosen in party conventions.

"I can't suspend my work on timber, grazing, balancing the budget or any other issue for five months and claim to serve them to the best of my ability," Cooley said.

Oregon's other Republican congressman, Rep. Jim Bunn, said

Thursday he still hadn't decided whether to run.

Republicans who have announced they will try to succeed Packwood are Oregon Senate President Gordon Smith, State Labor Commissioner Jack Roberts and State School Superintendent Norma Paulus.

On the Democratic side, Ron Wyden, one of the candidates for Packwood's seat, supported holding a primary to select the nominees.

"One of the lessons from the Packwood matter is that there needs to be public involvement in important issues so that the choices aren't made behind closed doors," he said Thursday. "I believe in people's right to participate."

But another Democratic contender, Rep. Peter DeFazio, favored party conventions so that the seat could be filled more quickly.

He said Thursday he is running nonetheless.

"I am the only Democrat in the race with a track record of working on behalf of the entire state and not just the narrower interests of Portland," the Eugene representative said.

Rep. Elizabeth Furse also is seeking the Democratic nomination.

"I'm very happy to run in whatever race is going," she said. "I think my campaign can do very well in a mail-in ballot. I'd like to get it going as soon as possible."

Oregon has been conducting local elections by mail since 1981.

The state's election law allows the secretary of state to decide on a case-by-case basis whether to hold an election by mail. Both Secretary of State Phil Keisling and the governor supported it for the Senate election because, they said, it would be cheaper than setting up polling places.

Kitzhaber vetoed a bill this summer that would have ordered all Oregon elections conducted by mail.

He said the Legislature needed to study the issue more before getting rid of traditional polling places for good.

Some Democrats and Republicans alike had complained that a strict vote-by-mail system would open the door to fraud and do away with the American tradition of getting out to vote on election day.

Backers of the idea argued that mail voting saves money and boosts turnout.

Tryon arrived at Bosma's dairy to count the number of cows Bosma was milking while two Division of Environmental Quality employees wanted to see the dairy's sewage containment system.

Both issues are controversial because a neighboring ranch family draws its drinking water from a spring immediately downhill from Bosma's dairy.

The neighbors have been drinking from the spring since 1925, but Bosma's operation is less than a year old.

The neighbors fear Bosma may be watering more milk cows than his domestic water permit allows. They also worry that manure-tainted water may seep into the area's soils and contaminate their spring.

Bosma has told Water Resources he is milking 400 cows—50 more than his domestic water permit allows, Merritt said.

Water Resources is poised to issue a violation, but written requests for cow counts have gone unanswered, Merritt said. Last Monday's on-site inspection was intended to settle the matter.

Bosma refused to allow the state workers onto his land Monday morning.

He agreed to let Tryon return at 4 p.m. to count the milking cows. But when Tryon arrived, Bosma was carrying the pistol, Cizmich said.

Bosma's dairy was designed for 1,400 cows, but its domestic water right allows him to pump for no more than 350 dairy cows. Bosma is claiming another "historic" water right for 350 beef cattle, but that water cannot go to dairy cows, Merritt said.

Freedom of the press still exists

The freedom of the press. Such a powerful right. The free speech clause in the First Amendment of the Bill of Rights in the U.S. Constitution reads: "Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press."

However, at last Wednesday's ASUI Senate meeting, Senator Brian Kane suggested that they—the senate—hold a press conference with the media and ask us to put anything that may tarnish the reputation of the University of Idaho on the inside or back pages of our newspapers. When he made this suggestion, he was referring to a story that ran in the Moscow-Pullman Daily News on Sept. 11 concerning a large number of UI students who received some sort of alcohol citation, like Minor in Possession. (Sorry, I do not have this information on hand at this time. So I cannot give exact numbers or the period of time this conclusion was made in.)

I find these words rather appalling.

The U.S. Congress cannot even make or shouldn't even suggest making a law abridging the freedom of the press. (Even though, at times, I'm sure ol' Newtie or "Loverboy" Packwood would like to keep things out of the press, like their affairs or sexual harassment charges. I'm sure they would even like to hold a press conference with the media and kindly suggest that we put reputation damaging material on the inside or back pages of our newspapers so nobody will see them.)

If Congress did suggest such a law, just think of all the problems it would cause. Not only would they be amending the American peoples' First Amendment rights, but there would no longer be anyone around to criticize the government and keep it in line. The press is a check on the government. If it did not exist, the American people would not know what mishaps the government was up to and voters would be misinformed.

This would probably make some people happy—like, possibly, Newtie and "Loverboy" Packwood, but I think a majority of the people would be seriously pissed off. There could be riots!

But here we have ASUI Senator Kane making this crude suggestion. I was shocked to hear it come from his mouth, since he has appeared to be a media advocate in the past. Perhaps he had a change of heart over the summer. I was even more shocked to see that other people at the meeting had the chutzpah to agree with him.

At least ASUI Senator Christa Manis rebutted Kane's suggestion.

It gives me some hope that there is someone on the ASUI Senate who respects the freedom of the press.

ONE OF THESE THINGS IS NOT LIKE THE OTHERS...

Turn the tables on the owners

The life of a greyhound is not a good one. From the time they are old enough to run their life is an inhumane and continuous cycle of feast and famine, speed and confinement, beatings and neglect, torture and abuse.

But if the life of a greyhound is horrific, its death is much worse.

For years we have known the business which goes on behind the scenes of greyhound racing is a very bad business.

But it seems nothing ever really gets done. An allegation here, an investigation there.

In the Sept. 15 issue of the Idaho Spokesman Review, writer J. Todd Foster uncovered more horrors from the concentration camp we call the Coeur d'Alene Greyhound Track.

The Idaho Department of Law Enforcement and the Oregon Racing Commission are investigating dog trainer and kennel owner Gary Burman, 62. His racing contract was canceled two weeks ago because of the investigation. The National Greyhound Association may ban Burman for life from racing.

Several park employees have stepped forward to testify of the atrocities which occur at the park—including several deaths by electrocution. Burman denies it all, but after the interview with

Corinne Flowers

Foster, he packed his bags and left town.

Of course, the abuse is widespread and reaches far beyond the perimeters of Post Falls. Reports of shooting, throat slashing and beating are all too common. Another report surfaced of a trainer who took a claw hammer and beat six puppies to death because they were the result of an unauthorized breeding.

The body of one dog was recovered from the local landfill for autopsy, and it was discovered that a long swath of skin had been removed from the shoulders to the hips by a sharp instrument. No one knows why.

Track owners proclaim their innocence and deny all wrongdoing. They say they believe in the welfare of the greyhounds.

Track management and the racing commission simply laugh at these allegations.

The organization Greyhound Pets of America is concerned with providing adoptive homes for greyhounds but does not take a position for or against racing. They also point out the track pays to have dogs killed by pain-free lethal injection; therefore, there is no reason for these types of abuses to occur.

Let's take a step back and look at this thing objectively. What is the greyhound industry? Well, they breed dogs. The dogs run around a track. Round and round. They chase a rabbit. It's not even a real rabbit. They never catch it. (Well, sometimes they do). People bet money on which skinny dog will win. Boy, sounds exciting to me; can't think of a better way to spend an afternoon. The entire industry is just really unnecessary. Does it benefit the animals? No. Does it benefit the gamblers? In the long run, no. Does it benefit the track owners and dog breeders? Yep.

One individual testified under lie detector to the following incident: during a night of drinking, smoking and snorting, a group of dog owners decided to get together for a fun evening of "Tijuana hot plate." One of the slow dogs was placed in a room where the floor had been hosed down. A stiff wire was shoved into her rear end and an alligator clip attached to her lip, the other end attached to a metal gate to provide a ground. A jolt of electricity later and she was on her

How much for salmon recovery? Enough with E.N.U.F.

According to some, persecution of endangered Columbia River salmon will transform them into the next Randy Weaver.

Since deficit spending has been in vogue ever since scientists stumbled upon the need for space-based Laser Tag equipment to blow up incoming shipments of Russian vodka and Japanese automobiles, there are no holds barred. SPEND, they all say. It's not enough to tell them Everyone Needs Unlimited Funds. As far as they're concerned, Everyone Has Always Had Unlimited Funds.

But now as Republicans and Democrats alike—with the help of President Clinton—are trying to put a spending cap on how much federal money will be spent to "save" endangered salmon and salmon runs in the Columbia River, we get the most animated political poo-poo battles since Senator Jesse Helms sponsored a bill that would make it legal to shoot homosexuals for sport.

"For environmentalists," said Jim Baker of the Sierra Club, "all bets are off on what the administration will do on salmon. . .there is no way you could ever make a convincing case that it (the cap) would be good for the fish because it allows federal agencies to be lawless."

Aside from his fishy references, he sounds like a Weaver lawyer, doesn't he?

What a spending cap, though! Makes that baseball salary cap debacle look like chump change. A tentative agreement worked out by local heads of the National Marine Fisheries Service, the Bonneville Power Administration and the Northwest Power Planning Council would dedicate $435 million dollars every year for 10 years to aid salmon recovery.

The bill could go as high as $475 million for the last four years, not including drought years where more money will be spent to purchase reservoir water. Without the cap, prices could go as high as $600 million a year by 2001. That's only four years away.

Let's do a little arithmetic here and toss a few assumptions in to sweeten the mix. Let's assume there are no drought years, and the cap is successfully held to $435 million a year. That amounts to no less than $4.5 billion entirely earmarked to salmon recovery. That's a lot of money for the government to spend—and when I say the government, I truly do mean we, the taxpayers, since as far as I know we are the only cash cow the government has around to milk.

True, most of this money will come in the form of foregone power that could have been produced if the water had not been dedicated to salmon recovery, so that means not all of that staggering sum will be tax money. The rest will be paid out in higher electricity bills.

Remember also this $4.5 billion is the minimum the government wishes to pay. During drought years the amount will go even higher, and without spending caps, higher still.

Now think about this: our government is broke, and is aching at every joint to get rid of excess expenditure fat. Some have even dared suggesting cuts in the Golden Calf of Government Programs, Social Security.

Welfare has come under the gun as well along with the programs that administer Stafford Loans and Pell grants without which most of us here would be flipping burgers at Burger World with Beavis and Butthead.

Shouldn't we cut fish welfare before we cut human welfare?

Before you cry out in indignant shock at my politically and environmentally incorrect nebbishness, stop and think: are fish more important than humans? Are humans more important than fish? Limiting—or heaven forbid, cutting—fish welfare will not solve our fiscal problems, but it would be a step in the right direction. There are valid points on each side of the argument, but as a human being, you can guess which side I lean towards.

CORRECTION: My column of last Tuesday contained two factual errors related to baseball thingy Cal Ripken. He will not play in 2,300 consecutive games until sometime in 1997. Also, Ripken did not support the baseball strike nor ask for an increased salary. To every baseball fan from the five boroughs who pointed out these tragic errors, I offer my most humble and abject apologies. ;)

Tailgate party a 'bona fide success'

And so it begins.

Is it just me or has anyone else noticed you never see ASUI President Sean Wilson and Vice-

Dennis Sasse

President Damon Darakjy with Beavis and Butthead? Coincidence? You decide.

Thanks to the NEA, MTV, Christine Ermev and the UI drama department for letting me print this excerpt from the original—and in no way related to reality—performance art piece entitled: "Skool Daze and Phalitics"

Beavis: "Butthead, what did the dean mean when he said, 'You were elected to be President and Vice-President'?"

Butthead: "You butt-munch, it means like we have like a whole lot of other peoples' money. Uh, dude we should, you know, like have a party."

Beavis: "Yeah, that would be cool. We could invite lots of chicks."

Butthead: "Beavis, you dumb-ass we need to get a band. Chicks dig bands."

Beavis: "Duh, oh yeah, bands are cool. Don't get a band that sucks."

Butthead: "Beavis you suck. We'll get a cool band, like the one that plays at the pizza place. They rock."

Beavis: "That would rule."

Butthead: "Like we could tell people we're having a $10,000 party and, you know, the whole world is invited."

Beavis: "Yeah, we're there dude."

In unison: (To Judas Priest's Breakin' the Law) "We're gettin' a band, gettin' a band..."

Has racism really come to an end?

There is a new trend—or, rather, a renewed trend, depending on your knowledge of the history of blacks in America—afoot among certain African-American intellectuals, and how much headway they make in forwarding their ideas may decide how fast we can reduce racism in our country.

Social critic Dinesh D'Souza—who is black—has recently authored a book entitled The End of Racism in which he posits that old-fashioned racism has been displaced by a kind of rationalized discrimination towards blacks.

Rationalized? How can discrimination be explained away (the less obvious structure of D'Souza's argument suggests rationalized discrimination is equal to acceptable racism) by simple arguments having to do with perceptions of African-Americans living in high-crime urban areas?

According to U.S. News & World Report, just 5 percent of all blacks live in high-crime inner-city areas where single-parent families are the rule rather than the exception, where drugs seem to be a way of life and death by violence is a daily occurrence. Yet it seems the rest of the country would take this image and apply it to all blacks resulting in what D'Souza terms rationalized discrimination.

The new intellectual movement is partly the result of the ineffective and costly legal battles the civil rights movement has sought out over the past 30 years in seeking to give blacks and other minorities equal footing by lobbying Congress to pass anti-discrimination and affirmative action laws and seeking to have discriminatory laws struck down through the courts.

Don't get me wrong—plenty of headway has been made in the legal arena in attempting to end discrimination. However, we must question whether these laws have done more to help African-Americans and other minorities than they have to hurt them.

Given the fact that minorities have made little headway in landing jobs comparable in pay and status in proportion to those jobs held by whites since the majority of these laws were passed 30 years ago, we might be inclined to re-examine how effective these laws have been.

But does this mean we should subscribe to the ideas of D'Souza, Alan Keyes—who is a black Republican presidential candidate, and Glenn Loury who all claim to one degree or another that blacks should stop viewing themselves as victims and begin to accept mainstream culture and values (i.e. white culture and values)?

Are whites so far beyond redemption that it is not possible for us to accept mainstream black culture and values (not that of the 5 percent mentioned above) and treat it with equality? It would appear that some black intellectuals have thrown in the towel and given us a resounding "YES!" as an answer—or at least their prodding of African-Americans to accept mainstream/white values would seem to indicate this.

Certainly racism would end much faster if blacks—who constitute about 12 percent of the population—began to accept white values and culture as part of their own. But asking them to do this is a kind of racism in itself. The deeper structure of this argument implies that black culture is somehow inferior—perhaps even invalid—and should be abandoned in the interests of ending racism (or rationalized discrimination if you buy the arguments of D'Souza—which I do not) and promoting the economic viability of African-Americans.

I believe we should continue on the path recently begun by some to educate those who hold mainstream values to accept and understand minority culture and practice inclusion rather than exclusion. Although this will, admittedly, take longer than the route suggested by D'Souza, Keyes and others, it will, I would hope, in the end allow blacks and other minorities to keep their culture and values and still be accepted on an equal footing by whites.

Laws demanding equality lend the perception to minorities that they need the help of the government to become equal. Minority acceptance of mainstream culture and values delegitimizes and devalues their own and is just another form of racism.

However, mainstream acceptance of other cultures and other values accomplishes everything both the new intellectual movement and the civil rights movement have set out to accomplish: equality.

Nearly 4000 students showed up for the game Saturday, ASUI President Sean Wilson said he thought about 5,500 attended the ASUI tailgate party. Of course Sean Wilson and Vice President Damon Darakjy were there doing valuable political stuff. Beavis and Butthead were scheduled to appear but were called away on business at the last minute and were unable to attend. Despite the last minute cancellation of Beavis and Butthead the first tailgate party in years went off without a hitch.

The ASUI tailgate party was a bona fide success. Sean Wilson looked like a proud new father. It was a major coup for Wilson. He has given the students something tangible to justify the existence of the senate. And has proven tailgate parties can be a reality at UI. Could this be the basis for a re-election bid? Nah, Sean says he wants out.

It is great tailgate parties are coming back to UI, I hope this will begin a new tradition. I hope the organizers will be less divisive of the student body next time.

Wilson wrote, "I hope you are as enthused as I am that this will open new doors for those traditional unspoken boundaries between off-campus students, Residence Halls, and Greeks. As a student, no matter your age, race, or gender, this is a time to come together with fellow students, alumni, faculty and staff to share in our community as it gathers as a family of VANDALS!!"

A question to the ASUI senate. Why were over half the students excluded from the $1,000 challenge?

An alumni group bet Wilson $1,000 of student money that he could not double student attendance at the game. He responded by throwing the tailgate party and issuing the $1,000 challenge. The challenge was to living groups and residence halls that the group with the highest attendance at the party could win $1,000. The DGs won the money; my congratulations.

The problem I have with this contest was over 50 percent, perhaps even 60 percent of the student body lives off campus. This was exclusionary because no one living off campus even had a chance at winning. Student fees from all students was at risk, why not include everyone? Had attendance not doubled Wilson would have had to pay the $1,000 out of ASUI funds—read student fees. If student fees are being risked, all students should share in the opportunity for reward.

There were many other possible ways the $1,000 challenge could have been structured to include ALL students. I have been consistently disappointed by this senate. They have consistently ignored issues affecting off-campus residents. Last semester it took the senate months to help student parents pay for daycare at the ECC; yet in a matter of days the senate can organize a campus-wide party. At least they have their priorities.

A high ranking ASUI official took time away from his exhausting political schedule to say hello—funny thing was Diamond Damon D. was toting a beer; and admitted it. I only bring this up because he was quite rude in not offering me one.

Which reminds me; the university alcohol policy was in force, but it was not enforced. Hypocrites. The university needs to scrap the alcohol policy or enforce it. What a chickenshit affair the tailgate party was. There were postings informing tailgaters that alcohol consumption, possession, sale, coveting, etc. was illegal; yet, people drank. Good for them, tailgate parties involve beer. Matt, a student here at UI said, "I'm surprised they're not selling beer. You got a hot day, you got kids, you got a band, isn't that the idea of tailgate parties?"

The university looked the other way and pretended not to notice the beer—even when Tom Morris of Z-fun announced, "Please keep the beverage of your choice in a plastic beverage receptacle." Shame on them. How hypocritical can things get? Enforce the rule or lose it. This is the era of Helen, Newt, and post-yuppie conservatism—when restrictive legislation is supposed to be repealed. If the university has a policy that is not enforced, let us be brave, stand up and say, "In the sake of all we hold dear, help stop bitter beer face."

I hope no one gets the impression that I am against tailgate parties; on the contrary Wilson and the ASUI should be commended—they finally have accomplished something.

way to the local landfill. She was lucky, it doesn't always work the first time.

It is very difficult for me to understand how this can be entertaining to these people.

But being the open-minded individual that you all know I am, I will certainly try.

I guess it could be fun watching animals thrash and squirm and die, so I'm going to try it.

Okay, first I'm going to get some dog breeders, and I'm going to starve them and stick them in the butt with large gauge needles attached to syringes full of steroids. Then they can chase a big ol' steak around a track. And whoever loses gets a sound beating with a large stick. Then I'll round up all of those losers. Some of them, I'll just shoot. This is my way of saying I care. Then the really slow, worthless ones will have their throats cut. Slightly more painful, but just as effective, and slower so I can watch the blood gush and hum to myself.

Then I'll find myself some trainers. They get to spend days inside an obscenely small wooden box soaked in diesel fuel—the fuel keeps the bugs and icky bitey things away, gotta keep 'em comfy. Oh, Mr. Trainer, did you want a smoke?

Damn, this is a hoot!

Now I'm really starting to enjoy this, I can understand why they do this for fun.

Now, since the track owners feign innocence—and who am I to question authority—they're going to get off easy. They'll be lined up for a free "vitamin shot," and then we'll take those bodies to the landfill, too.

But wait, I'm saving the best for last.

For my finale I'm going to get Gary Burman—it's a small world, I'll run into him someday—and take him by force to some dark, scary place with a cold, wet floor. I'm going to strip him down naked and stick a big wire up his ass and an alligator clip to his upper lip. I'll explain that he's just too darn slow and old. We can't even afford to feed him and keep him around for breeding purposes. Sorry, pup. Then we'll turn on the juice. Oops, not enough. There we go. Um, try again. Yeah, third time's a charm. We'll all laugh and it will be a great deal of fun. We'll dump his body in the landfill too.

What's that? Am I alarming you? How can I compare human beings to dogs? How can I compare worthless, corrupt butchers to graceful, beautiful animals?

Do you think that electrocution is any less painful because you are a dog? That even though you are a sentient, feeling being your only purpose is to run, and when you can't do that anymore you are a waste? That after living a life of pain and misery your death gets to be an amusing spectacle for curious onlookers? Is this okay with you? Because it definitely isn't okay with me.

OUTDOOR TIP OF THE WEEK:

With plenty of great weather left ahead of us, many students are using their bikes to get around town. However, many bikers aren't fully aware of the laws that apply to bikes.

When riding on the road, the laws for motor vehicles are for the most part in effect for bikes. You must use hand signals when turning and ride with the traffic, not against.

When riding on the sidewalk, your speed should be such that you can control your bike in foot traffic without endangering pedestrians.

When overtaking a pedestrian or another bike, you should give an audible signal such as "On your right," so they know where you are and won't get in your way.

Riding under the influence of alcohol or other drugs will get you the equivalent of a DUI and you can have your license suspended.

City ordinance requires that you license your bike with the city. These licenses are free at the campus substation on the corner of Line and Third streets.

This will help police to trace your bike in the event that it is stolen. After dusk, you have to have a headlight on your bike.

This also enables other traffic to see you and will help avoid accidents. Headlights are cheap and will save you money in tickets in the long run.

Any moving violation on a bike will go on your driving record and will affect your insurance rating.

Just remember to keep your eyes out for other traffic, whether it be pedestrians, other bikers or cars. Be careful and be safe.

HUFF'N PUFF'N FUN RUN

Moscow Parks and Rec and the University of Idaho Campus Rec are co-sponsoring the 12th Annual Huff'n Puff'n Fun Run. The 5 km and 10 km course is scheduled to kick off 10 a.m. Oct. 7.

Registration is on-going. If you register before Sept. 29 the fee is $12, which includes a t-shirt. After that date, the fee is $14. Registration will take place at both Moscow Parks and Rec and Campus Rec.

For more information call 883-7085.

Steelhead: For a reelin' good time!

Jerri Lake
Staff

Water spraying from the line peeling off your reel covers your face.

Your pole is bent to the shape of a quarter moon as the fish swims downstream.

Suddenly the Steelhead explodes from the water. Its tail walks across the water, shaking it's head vigorously trying to throw the lure from its mouth.

Your adrenalin is pumping and you tell yourself, this is what fishing is all about.

The Steelhead is a subspecies of Rainbow trout that lives most of its life in the ocean. It returns to fresh water only to spawn.

The "A" run of Steelhead consists mostly of fish that have spent only one year in the ocean. These fish usually arrive in Lewiston around August and will weigh about four to eight pounds. The "B" run spends about two years before returning and shows up around September.

This fish is over 31 inches and will weigh about 10 to 25 pounds.

About 50 miles east of Lewiston on the Clearwater River is Ahsahka, Idaho, home of two fish hatcheries. Ahsahka is located near Dworshak Dam and the confluence of the North Fork and main stem of the Clearwater River. The eastern side of the North Fork is Dworshak National Fish Hatchery, the largest combined producer of Steelhead and spring Chinook salmon in the world. On the other side of the North Fork, is the Idaho State Fish and Game Hatchery. Dworshak hatchery collects get to be four to five inches, Fish and Game sends a crew to the Dworshak hatchery to clip the adipose fin. The clipping enables the hatchery fish to be identified from wild fish. Only fish with clipped fins are legal to Steelhead smolts are helped around nine dams while traveling approximately 500 miles to reach the ocean. On their return, they will swim up fish ladders to get around the dams.

Rod Nichols, from Fish and Game, said the number of hatchery fish returning is keeping the numbers up, but the number of wild Steelhead is still decreasing. This decrease is cutting into the gene pool of the stronger, wild fish. Nichols also urges all people fishing to observe the rules and read the regulations. This will help preserve the wild run for future fish.

"A" run Steelhead arrived later than normal this year which is throwing off the count on "B" run fish. The "A" run looks to be as good as last year, but the "B" run is low. The cause could be a low survival of fish during their cycle, or hopefully they are late like the "A" run.

Last Sunday evening, I staked out the boat launch ramp in Clarkston, hoping to see lots of Steelhead being brought in. I discovered, only a few were being caught.

While fishing for bass, John Freand of Lewiston said, "I only saw one Steelhead caught, but we caught several on bass." His string of Smallmouth bass proved he was right. He had sever 15 million eggs a year from returning adult fish. The average adult Steelhead produces about 65 hundred eggs. Some eggs are given to the State of Idaho Fish and Game to hatch and raise for various stocking programs within the state. All others are raised for migration to the Pacific ocean.

When Steelhead fingerlings keep. Before being released, the trout will be seven to nine inches.

Each year the Dworshak hatchery releases about 2.3 million Steelhead smolts for their migration to the ocean. As the juvenile fish migrate, they imprint the smell of their river. The imprinting enables them to smell the river of their birth.

The Outdoors comes to the Web

Jennifer Swift
Outdoors Editor

Bringing the outdoors into your home is easier than ever with the growing popularity of the World Wide Web.

The resources for outdoor adventurers is staggering since creating homepages has become so easy. Several magazines and companies have web pages that contain a plethora of information on hiking, biking, fishing, gear, and anything else you can think of that pertains to the outdoors.

There are several ways to find these sights. On the University of Idaho Home Page there is a Recreation link that takes you to several sites, including the Chalmer's Climbing Archive. If you want to go directly to Chalmer's, the address is <http://www.dtek.chalmers.se:80/climbing>. You can also access Yahoo to get a good list of sites to choose from.

To get a more comprehensive list of sites go into a search engine, such as Webcrawler on Netscape, and type in 'outdoor'. From there, a list is generated that contains all sites that have the word 'outdoor' in its text. Webcrawler came up with almost 1900 sites to choose from. This can be a bit intimidating but go ahead and dive in. Take a look around for areas that interest you. The one drawback is with this type of search engine, you get everything and anything with the word outdoor in it's text. One page I found was a eulogy for someone's dead pet hamster.

One of the most information packed pages is GORP-Great Outdoor Recreation Home Page, the address is: <http://www.gorp.com>. You name it, it is on this page. This site includes links to several outdoor magazines, articles and tips. There is even a link to Northwest River Supplies, located here in Moscow.

If you want to go directly to one of the on-line magazines, one of the best to check out is Outside On-Line at <http://web2.starwave.com:80/outside/online/inside.html>. One of the great features of this site is the Interactive Gear Guy. You can ask specific questions and have them answered by an expert on equipment. The page also includes articles, classifieds, advice on buying gear, and links to other outdoor sites and newsgroups.

For someone who is looking to do a little shopping, there are several companies that have homepages where you can see what is for sale and get information. Campmor has its own homepage at <http://www.campmor.com/>. Although it only contains black and white sketches of the product, if you know exactly what you are looking for, check out this page for ordering information, what to look for when buying gear and great prices. This catalog carries North Face, Marmot and other big names in outdoor equipment.

The University of Idaho Outdoor Program also has a homepage that gives basic run-down on the program and a fall schedule should be added soon. It is located at <http://www.uidaho.edu/~huber921/outdoor/>.

For fishing enthusiasts, take a look at Fishing Fool's World at <http://www.webcom.com/~towns/fish/fish.html>. This site has links to outfitters in many states, including the Northwest. It also has great pictures and articles. More fishing information can be found on Outdoor Northwest at <http://www.accelerated.com/OutdoorNW/>. As the title implies, it is a guide to the outdoors in this area of the country. Hikers and bikers will also find information on areas to check out.

For people interested in finding great places to go hiking that are close by, Hiking in E.OR/W. ID is a valuable site to have on your bookmark. This page, located at <http://www.primenet.com/~larrysu/hiking.html>, is a comprehensive look at hikes in the area. There are in-depth descriptions of trails, areas and facilities.

The resources available on the web are too numerous to even scratch the surface of in one article but hopefully you will find some interesting stuff in the pages I have mentioned. There are also many newsgroups devoted to mountain biking, hunting, fishing, you name it. So take a few minutes to browse the net, do a little shopping and who knows, you might even learn something or find a new place to do your thing.

Upcoming Trips

The University of Idaho Outdoor Program is now taking sign-ups for the following upcoming trips. Enroll at the Outdoor Program office in the basement of the Student Union. Fees are due upon sign-up.

*River Canyon Backpacking Trip: This trip is planned for Sept. 22 to 24. A trip meeting is planned on Sept. 20 at 5 p.m. in the program office. The fee is $20 and this covers the cost of transportation. Participants are required to bring their own food and camp gear. No special skills are required.

*Basic Rockclimbing I: This is a beginners class. There will be one class session on Sept. 21 followed by a day trip on Sept. 23 to nearby climbing areas. The fee is $20 which covers the cost of instruction, transportation and equipment.

*Basic Rockclimbing II: This course is for climbers who have had Rock I or previous experience. There will be a class session on Sept. 28, followed by a day trip to nearby climbing areas on Sept. 30. The fee is $20 which covers the cost of instruction, transportation and equipment.

*Instructional Kayak II: This trip will take place Sept. 30-Oct. 1. Participants must have attended one pool session. The destination is the North Fork of the Clearwater river. The fee is $35 which covers the cost of transportation and instruction. The cost of kayak rental, camping gear and food is the responsibility of the participants.

eral, with three about 12 inches or over.

About a half-hour later, John Nelson from Davenport, Wash. came in with two "A" run fish. He caught one on a green wigglewart and the other using a bobber with a black lead head jig and shrimp. Nelson recommends that you not fish for Steelhead. He said if you catch one, you will be hooked for life.

You do not need a boat or fancy fishing equipment to catch one. Anything capable of handling a four to 25 pound fish will do. I saw several people fishing from the levies along both rivers hoping to catch a Steelhead swimming next to shore.

There is also Small and Largemouth bass, Channel catfish, trout and Squawfish available. Because Squawfish eat several Steelhead smolts per day, the Squawfish reward deadline was extended to Sept. 24. Register at the Greenbelt Station by the Clarkston boat ramp. Pre registration is required and is free. There were two first place, $125 winners last week.

There are toilets located in several areas along the levies for your convenience. Tackle shops for your gear, license and Steelhead tags, fast and slow food restaurants and gas stations are close by. Grab your fishin' rigs and head to Lewiston or Clarkston for some reelin' good times.

"Where the men are men..."

Erik Marone

My friend's jaw dropped in disbelief, "What do you mean you're bringing a girl?" I felt like I should apologize, as though I had just violated some unwritten law of the wild. "MEN go fishing, women stay at home and complain about it," he informed me. I couldn't very well tell my girlfriend she couldn't go now that we had been planning the trip for over a week. She had really been looking forward to learning the art of fly fishing.

We arrived at the river early the next morning, my friend's dubious outlook on this excursion was apparent throughout the three-hour drive. After a quick lesson and a little practice, she was casting like a veteran, and she was having a great time. I was ecstatic. Not only does she like to fish, she's pretty good at it, what more do I need in a woman?

On the way home, I started thinking about the great outdoors, where the men are manly and these hardy, rugged men conquer the elements, battle nature and test their mettle against all that mother nature cares to throw at them. The outdoors is definitely not the place for women.

But you know what? It's more fun with them. This first became apparent to me when we allowed a few women to come with us on the grueling hike into Stanley Hot Springs. Sure, they packed in their own gear, shared the camp chores and never once complained, but something just wasn't right. They were females in a male's doing that 'bonding' thing. There was some point that night when something became clear to me: "Hey, this is a hell of a lot more interesting with women here, and not just because swimwear is optional." The rest of the weekend was much more pleasant once all of the men had overcome the deep-seated belief that women had no place in the great outdoors.

Another friend of mine used to get into a fight with his wife whenever he wanted to go exercise his manliness with Mother Nature. He would plan fishing and hunting trips weeks in advance so his wife had plenty of time to ready herself for it, but the night before he left, he always expected to spend an hour or two hashing it out with her. One time, he let her come along on a hiking trip to the Mallard-Larkins and both their eyes were opened. Now she plans all the trips and he has trouble finding the time to keep up with her. If they fight now, it's because he can't go on the trips.

Hey, let's face it, guys. Just because they don't eat, sleep and breathe the outdoors, a lot of women will probably enjoy it just as much as we do. The next time she complains about you taking that week off to spend in hunting camp, invite her along. You might just save yourself hours of grief down the road, hours you can spend working on her aversion to football.

Somebody forgot to tell the football players at Sonoma State that Cossacks were famed Soviet warring horsemen.

Instead of putting up a fight and going for a ride, the Rohnert Park, Calif. school got taken for a ride and beaten to pulp in Idaho's 66-3 NCAA football shellacking Saturday afternoon.

The Vandals (1-1) manhandled the non-scholarship Division II school, compiling 502 yards of total offense and giving up just 186 on defense. Idaho scored on seven of its first eight possessions and cruised into the lockerroom with a 49-3 halftime advantage. The 63-point victory margin was Idaho's largest since a 77-14 trouncing of Lehigh two years ago and is tied for the third highest mark in school history.

An Idaho offense that struggled futilely on the road against Oregon State two weeks had about as much problem as a tank running over a cattle guard, tallying its first score three minutes into the game. Idaho sophomore quarterback Brian Brennan found a streaking Dwight McKinzie for a 29-yard touchdown pass to cap an eight-play 75-yard drive to start the game.

Sonoma State's Ray Gambol took the ensuing kickoff nine yards before a bone-jarring hit by Idaho's Avery Griggs dislodged the ball and gave the UI crew another chance to tack on a TD. Four plays later Griggs was the recipient of a 16-yard touchdown pass from Brennan and the route was on, even before the SSU offense had touched the ball.

"We needed to come out and prove a point and we did that. We made a lot of big plays in the first half," Idaho coach Chris Tormey said.

Sonoma State's only offensive success came on a 45-yard field goal from kicker Brendan McMurtrie with 2:42 left in the first quarter.

Speculation arose early last week how the Vandal rushing attack would fare after starting running back Joel Thomas was forced to undergo arthroscopic surgery to repair torn cartilage in his left knee eight days ago. All worries were quashed after fleet-footed senior Lavoni Kidd ran wild over the

A locomotive named Vandal squealed out "Choo Choo Baby" and the rest of the trains got off the tracks over the weekend at the Safeco/Branegan's Classic.

Idaho ran over Oral Roberts, Southeast Missouri State and Cal-State Northridge en-route to collecting its second straight tournament crown. In the process the Vandals ran their home-winning streak to 35, the eighth longest mark in NCAA history.

The Vandals got their first home test of the season Friday night against the Golden Eagles of Oral Roberts (10-1). The Vandals got a run for their money splitting the first two games before eventually winning 18-16, 15-6, 15-11, 15-8.

Idaho fell behind 7-2 in the opening set, but battled back to tie the score at 13 thanks in large part to outside hitter Jemena Yocom. The sophomore came off the bench after the early funk to hammer eight kills in the first game against only one error. Idaho blew two game points and even faced elimination at 16-15, but still persevered.

"Jemena was the reason we won the first game. I'm proud of her effort tonight. She was awesome," Hilbert said.

Oral Roberts came out blazing in game two and took an 8-1 advantage. The Golden Eagles never let the Vandals (9-2) into the game, allowing the UI crew just six points.

The momentum turned again after a fiery speech from Idaho coach Tom Hilbert at the break. The Vandals stymied all ORU efforts early in game three, bolting to an 11-0 lead.

Yocom, who went on to win the tournament's Most Valuable Player Award, finished with a team-high 19 kills. Lina Yanchulova added 18 kills and Jessica Moore chipped in 14.

"This feels really good," Hilbert said. "This Oral Roberts team has some very good volleyball players. They are going to win a lot of matches and nobody knows that because it is such a new team."

Yocom turned in another stellar effort Saturday afternoon, ham-

Ryder Cup proves golf's Olympic equal

This weekend marks the start of the greatest golf event of the season, as the United States posts its best against Europe's.

Lanny Wadkins leads a hand-picked group of 12 Americans into battle against a group of Europeans that will be without their emotional leader Jose Maria Olazabal due to a season-ending foot injury, but the greater importance of this loss will be, who will Seve Ballesteros play with in Olazabal's absence?

The tournament, if you haven't already guessed, is the Ryder Cup, held, beginning Sept. 22, at Oak Hill Country Club in Pittsford, New York.

The Ryder Cup has as much tradition as getting your best friend drunk on their 21st birthday, only I don't recommend playing golf while drinking heavily because you may find that friend of yours passed out in a fairway bunker.

The tradition of the Ryder Cup started in 1927 at the Worcester Country Club in Worcester, Massachusetts. Walter Hagen captained the United States team to victory in the first match against the British team, but the trophy didn't originate until the next match was held. Samuel Ryder, a British seed merchant fell in love with the idea of professional players from opposite parts of the globe playing a game they loved for no commission, so he quickly agreed to patent a trophy to be given to the winner of the next matches. That trophy would stay with the United States from 1935 until 1983 for the most part, a span of 21 competitions, suffering only one loss in 1957. After the sigh of dominance was all but glowing like a neon sign, the competition was adapted to its present state in 1979 to allow all continental European players to participate, rather than just the British players as it was up until this time.

The transition proved very beneficial right from the start, as the Europeans swept the competition from 1985 through 1991 until the U.S. got the cup back in 1993, (The last time the Ryder Cup was held.)

Organizers speculate that this weekend's events will generate millions of dollars in spending by the fans, thus being a key revenue maker for the PGA. With all this money coming in and the most prestigious golf trophy on the line, the tradition of the Ryder Cup hasn't changed. Samuel Ryder died in 1936, but he would probably take pleasure in knowing that the cup that bears his name has withstood the test of time, as well as the tests of money. The 12 individuals from each team still don't get paid for this tournament, but it is still one of the major goals each of them has at the start of the year, because of the honor that it brings to the winning country.

Seats range in price from $750 to $1,000, but the players who gather the crowds willing to pay this kind of money are not on the receiving end of a cent of this. Yet it has its best players all lining up at the door to have a shot at being named to golf's greatest event.

The United States team is made up of some seasoned veterans as well as those who are making their first appearance for the red, white, and blue. The European team may hold a slight advantage in experience with the likes of Seve Ballesteros and Nick Faldo leading the way.

The U.S. team is captained by Lanny Wadkins. The other 12 players include Fred Couples, Ben Crenshaw, Brad Faxon, Jay Haas, Peter Jacobsen, Tom Lehman, Davis Love III, Jeff Maggert, Phil Mickelson, Corey Pavin, Loren Roberts and Curtis Strange.

The European team is headed by Bernard Gallacher. The Eurosquad is made up of Seve Ballesteros, Howard Clark, Nick Faldo, David Gilford, Mark James, Per-Ulrik Johansson, Bernhard Langer, Colin Mongomerie, Costantino Rocca, Sam Torrance, Philip Walton, and Ian Woosnam.

With the names of greatness absent from the U.S. roster for the first time in many years, it may be a year for the younger generation to make its mark. Names like Tom Watson, Jack Nicklaus, and Raymond Floyd are absent from the team, thus giving the up and coming players a chance to carry on the tradition of the Ryder Cup and maybe make a name for themselves in the process.

On the other side of the ocean, the big names are still there with the exception of Nick Price. There are however, also the names of Howard Clark, Mark James, and Philip Walton holding their place on the roster. These are not your average household names of the golf world.

The winner of the Cup this weekend will make a name for its team during what most people would call a transition period for both teams.

This is one of the rare times that you will see players playing alternate shot and match play, so the focus is a little different and having a bad hole doesn't leave you out in the cold as it would during the season tournaments.

I realize that most people don't enjoy watching the game of golf, but this is one weekend that I would recommend it. The 24 greatest players all gather in one place to do battle, not for money, not for individual glory, but as a team competing for their respective countries.

Kidd takes modest look at football career

Damon Barkdull

Staff

There weren't any doubts, the Vandals would trounce Sonoma State. On the way to a laughable win by the University of Idaho, several heroes emerged on defense, offense, and special teams, including backup running back Lavoni Kidd.

Kidd, a senior from Lingbergh High School in Renton, Washington, ducked, dodged, and juked his way through an onslaught of Cossack defenders for 138 yards on 20 carries and two touchdowns.

After an impressive showing, Kidd feels his performance might have been the same, regardless of the team Idaho was playing.

"I believe that had I played against anybody, I have enough confidence in my ability that I could play," Kidd said. "Of course Sonoma State wasn't the biggest challenge but I've played against big schools and produced. I think as far as having a big game, it's because I wanted to have a good game," Kidd said.

Even with an impressive performance on Kidd's part—he's his own worst critic.

Kidd

"Generally I'm happy with my performance. But I'm kind of tough on myself because I know I could've played a bit better," Kidd said modestly. "A couple of times I was open in the field and could've scored. I don't know if it was nervousness or what. That's behind me and I'm going to do better next time."

The 5-foot 5-inch 175-pound tailback started against the Cossacks in place of the injured Joel Thomas. Although it is likely that Thomas will return against Idaho State, Kidd feels confident in his role as backup.

"I hope they (UI coaches) feel confident in my play. When Joel (Thomas) gets healthy I think we can break games wide open," Kidd said. "We're two different types of players and with both of us in the game at the same time, I think it can break open a whole different kind of game for Idaho," Kidd said.

Since coming to Idaho in 1992, Kidd has always had to prove himself. In his red-shirt freshmen year Kidd began the season as the number 4 runningback and slowly moved up the depth chart, finishing the season with 331 yards on only 55 carries, including a 49-yard scurry in UI's 62-16 win at Boise State. As a sophomore, the Wichita, Kansas born tailback rushed for 185 yards and two scores and also returned three kickoffs for 63 yards.

"Since I've been here, I've had it in my mind that I didn't have to start to make things happen. If Joel (Thomas) comes back and he starts, that's no problem with me, as long as we both get to play," Kidd said. "So, I don't have any problem with being a backup."

After an outstanding 1993 season,

Kidd took a year off to deal with some personal problems.

"At that time I was just recovering from a blown knee. I had a death in the family and some personal problems in the household. All those things hit me at once and I was pretty young at mind. I just didn't know how to deal with it," Kidd said. "I needed to take some time off and now I truly believe that was the best thing for me."

That didn't stop Kidd from playing football and after an impressive showing in spring drills, the unselfish senior is now back at the top. Not to say that Kidd hasn't always been a great athlete.

At Lingbergh High School, Kidd rushed for a school record 1,048 yards as a senior, including 9 touchdowns. He also set another school record with 225 yards in one game. Kidd also enjoyed track and field, where he finished third in the 100-meter dash at the Washington State Class AA Track and Field Meet.

Kidd then made his way to Idaho, even though he was highly recruited by several Division I schools.

"My junior year, I was recruited by a lot of big schools but I was really small. When my senior year came they kind of fell off. The only ones that stuck around were Washington State, San Diego State, Idaho and Eastern Washington," Kidd said.

Kidd ultimately knew that UI is where he belonged.

"I was really offensively motivated and San Diego State was looking at me on defense," Kidd said. "When I went to Eastern they were car salesman type of people—they talked to you as if they were reading from a script. They talked to you like there was no hope. Idaho really appealed to me."

As you know, the rest is history and the Kidd is now making a name for himself.

Kidd plans to use his public relations major to further a career in the media, possibly a sports information director position at a university somewhere.

Kidd's immediate plans include having the best season he's ever had for the Vandals, snatching up another Big Sky ring and taking care of his little boy.

"My little boy—he's just getting to the age where he can recognize me on the field. I like that. That keeps me going," Kidd said with a slight grin on his face.

Cossack defense, picking up 138 yards and a pair of touchdowns on 20 carries. Sophomore reserve runner Marcelle Williams got plenty of action as well, carrying the ball 17 times for 79 yards. Overall, the Idaho ground game totaled 280 yards Saturday.

Saturday's blowout did little to clear up the Vandals' pseudoquarterback controversy. Just as both Idaho signal callers Eric Hisaw and Brian Brennan failed to thrive against Oregon State, the both players dissected the Sonoma defense. Brennan, who got the starting nod Saturday, finished 7-12 for 143 yards and a trio of touchdowns. Hisaw, who started against the Beavers, was 6-10 for 79 yards and a pair of scores.

Although Sonoma State was far from famous for its aerial arsenal, a Vandal secondary that was much maligned last year was stellar Saturday, allowing the Cossacks to complete just seven passes for 61 yards.

"We aren't scheduling them (Idaho) anymore," SSU coach Frank Scalercio said. "This game wasn't exactly like we thought it would be ... We were anemic throwing the football in the game and you're not going to beat Idaho trying to run it."

In addition to the on-field noise made by the Vandals, something much in the way of cheers seemed to be coming from the stands. A longtime joke on the UI campus boasted that fans dressed up as empty seats before coming to the Kibbie Dome, but months of promotions paid off as 13,519 fans turned out Saturday for the gridiron mismatch. The crowd was the largest for a UI home opener since the inaugural Dome opener in 1975.

It's possible the attendance increase was due to improved lighting, a new scoreboard, a later kickoff (3:05 p.m. as opposed to 1:05), Dad's weekend or maybe the organized pregame gathering called tailgating at other schools.

The Vandals, who took a week off between OSU and SSU, get another bye this week before starting Big Sky Conference action at Idaho State Sept. 30.

mering out a career-high 23 kills in Idaho's 15-7, 15-4, 12-15, 15-8 triumph over Southeast Missouri State (7-7).

The Otahkians have been picked to win their Ohio Valley Conference, but that held little weight in Moscow where Idaho outhit, outdug, outserved and outblocked SEMSU. The Vandals hit .273, came up with 14 blocks and reeled off nine aces. The Otahkians by comparison hit .227, compiled 10 blocks and served four aces.

Yocom also led the Idaho squad with 14 digs in the match. Yanchulova contributed 19 kills to the Vandal offensive effort. UI setter Lynne Hyland dished out 61 assists and produced five of Idaho's aces.

Only under rare circumstances do you hear coaches complain after a win, but Hilbert was far from jubilant after his club's less-than-spectacular effort against Cal-State Northridge.

Idaho tried to give game two away against the Matadors, but rallied back and still managed to sweep the southern California school 15-9, 16-14, 15-6.

The Vandals hit a solid .296 for the match, but the were outblocked 6-4 and had only one more dig than the young Matadors (1-12), who do not suit up a senior and have just two juniors on the roster.

Yanchulova was the big gun for Idaho in their final tourney match, racking up 19 kills and 13 digs, both match-highs. Middle blockers Louisa Kawulok and Jessica Moore combined for 17 kills and only two errors in 28 attempts.

"We learned a lot about ourselves this weekend," Hilbert said. "We didn't go very hard tonight and that's not acceptable to me as a coach. you only play 30 matches a season. You can't take a vacation, but that's what we did tonight."

The Safeco/Branegan's Classic all-tournament team was selected at the conclusion of the two-day festivities.

Here's a look at the weekend's top performers: MVP Jemena Yocom, Idaho; Lina Yanchulova, Idaho; Lynne Hyland, Idaho; Sheera, Oral Roberts; Sibebe Theis, Oral Roberts; Ami Mitchell, Southeast Missouri State.

Idaho will get a final tuneup for Big Sky action tonight when it hosts the Gonzaga Bulldogs at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym. Idaho opens BSC play this weekend at home against Idaho State and Boise State.
