Computer network gets new server

Sean Tetpon

Staff

University of Idaho's computer network is getting a new server. Harrier will nest with raven, crow, buzzard and goshawk this week.

The $35,000 server has two processors, and can handle more workload than the single-processor servers now in use. The result; faster response time when reading news, using e-mail, or running Unix-based software.

"It is like adding two systems to the nest," said Greg Brown, senior network system analyst at Computer Services. "Each processor on the new system is faster than any of our systems we currently have."

Harrier is undergoing a one-month test period. "We put the system up, let people use it, and will debug any problems users are having," said Brown. "Once we see the new system is functional, we will take crow out."

The crow server will be assigned networking tasks, and will no longer be available for users.

The addition of harrier and dedication of crow will mean a lighter

UI graduates satisfied with education overall

Mike McNulty

Survey results released last week revealed graduates were generally happy with their education at the University of Idaho but were dissatisfied with the student government and school publications.

The annual survey, headed by UI, shows 95 percent of 1994-95 graduating seniors were satisfied with their undergraduate experience.

The survey was given out to more than 1,400 applicants for baccalaureate degrees and 973 students responded.

Seniors who graduated in August and December of 1994 and May of 1995 were asked to evaluate their years at the UI, including the quality of education from their departments, the university in general, field experience and campus services and facilities.

Students were most satisfied with the research opportunities or internships within their fields, campus grounds, buildings, recreation and intramural sports.

Categories receiving high marks were athletics, the performing arts, Student Health Services, tutoring and remedial assistance and computer access and support services.

Despite the high overall satisfaction rate, 36 percent of graduates reported they were unhappy with student publications.

Student Media Board Chair, Patrick Olsen, said little can be done to change student attitudes about campus media.

"One thing critics might not take into consideration is they are students," said Olsen. "University communications have improved a lot, people just may not be aware of it."

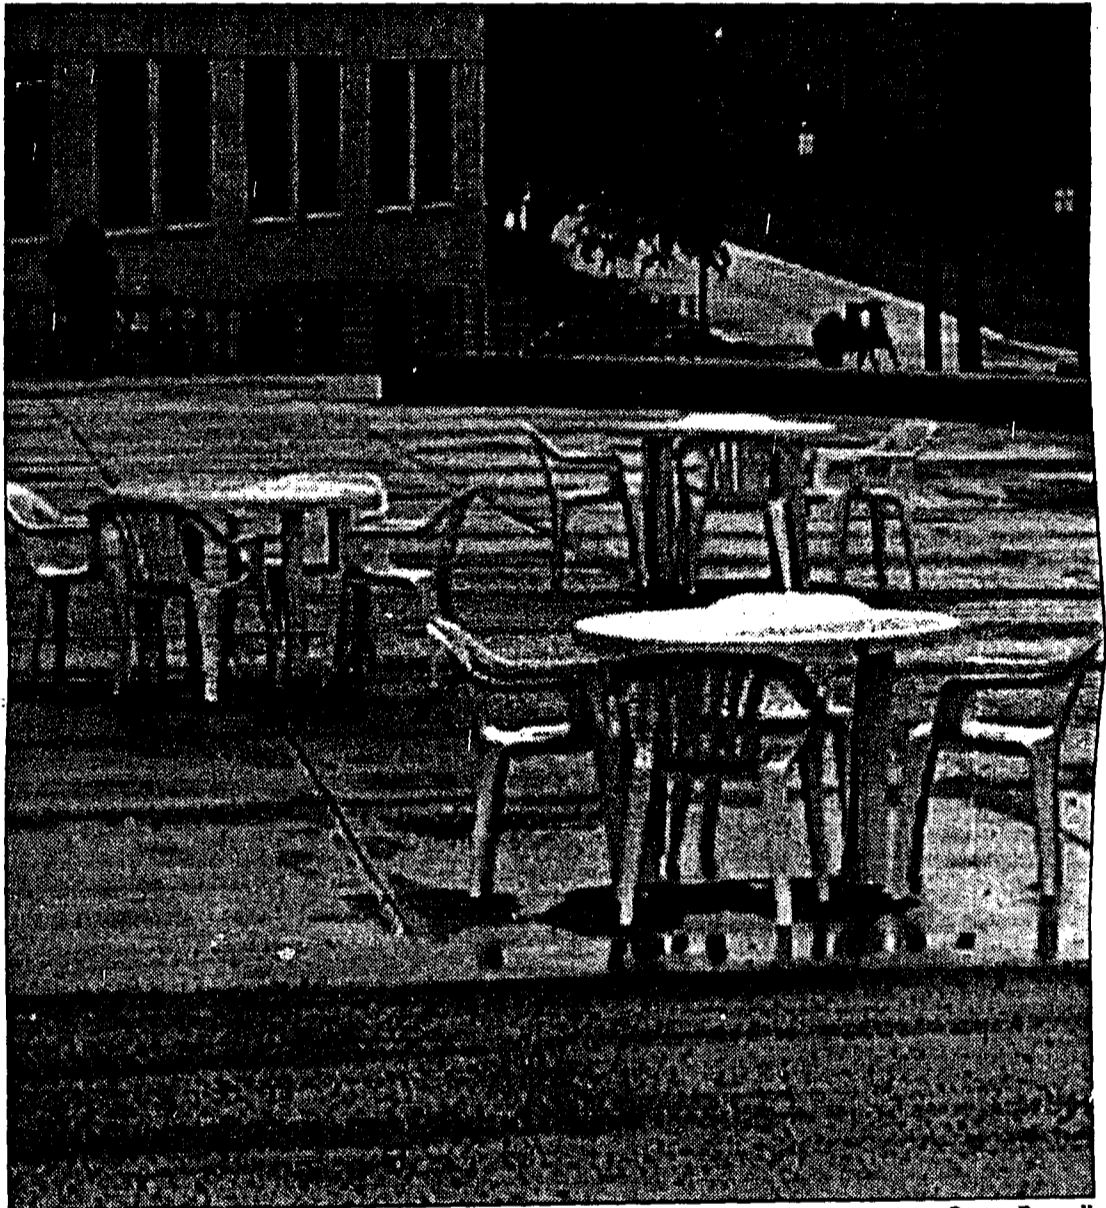

Superficial opinion articles are a major complaint from the student body said Olsen.

"Some students are looking for more substantial editorial comments," said Olsen. "Something dealing with issues."

UI School of Communication Assistant Professor Dr. Martha Einerson said the student operated publication prides itself on being

Americans know little about STDs

Andrea Lucero

Staff

America's young people know more than adults about some aspects of sexually transmitted diseases, but both groups demonstrate little knowledge about STD's according to a Gallup Organization study commissioned by the American Social Health Association.

The younger generation are more likely than adults to know that STD's are widely prevalent, that some STD's other than HIV/AIDS are incurable and that some STD's have no symptoms. However, fewer young people than adults were able to name an STD other than HIV/AIDS.

"I learned about a few STD's in school," said Emmajean Taylor, a 20 year old senior at the University of Idaho. "AIDS is a well discussed topic, but I rarely hear about many other diseases in such detail."

In the ASHA study 12 percent of young people and 4 percent of adults said STDs other than HIV/AIDS infects one in five people, approximately the number most experts believe is the prevalence of STD's in the United States. More adults than young people—57 percent as compared with 45 percent—dramatically underestimated STD prevalence, responding that only one in 100 people, or less, are infected with STDs.

The ASHA study also explored sources of STD information. Asked how much time health care providers spend discussing STDs with them, 54 percent of adults and 35 percent of young adults said "no time at all."

"I've never had any doctor or nurse say anything to me about STDs, except to protect myself from them," said Bart E. Eisenbarth a 22 year old senior at UI. "They always had pamphlets on STDs if you wanted information, they just didn't talk to you personally."

The survey also found that the younger generation is more likely to have first learned about STDs in school. 67 percent of young adults and 36 percent of adults said they learned about STDs in school.

"The first time I received any real information about STDs was in my 10th grade health class," said Taylor. "We learned about various types and their effects on the body."

Conducted by the Gallup organization in spring 1995, the study surveyed 1,000 adults and 500 young adults.

For the study, researchers used a standardized questionnaire administered in telephone interviews. The survey design has a sampling error of plus or minus 3 percent.

Founded in 1914, ASHA is a nonprofit organization dedicated to stopping STDs. Among its programs is the National STD Hotline, 800-227-8922.

Batt supports Boise State electrical program

OROFINO, Idaho—Gov. Phil Batt said he supports allowing Boise State University to operate its own electrical engineering program.

"I do think Boise needs to run their own department because it is the natural affinity with the high-tech companies in the Treasure Valley," he said Monday. "It has to have its own central direction."

The University of Idaho and Boise State have operated cooperative programs in civil, electrical and mechanical engineering in the Boise area for eight years.

But a consultant hired by the state Board of Education has recommended a transition to an independent BSU engineering school and a financial investment to strengthen the UI's continuing role in engineering education.

Batt stopped short of endorsing the consultant's call for a full-blown BSU engineering school, saying he wants to read the full report.

As a gubernatorial candidate last year, Batt said he did not care which school's name is on the door of the Boise engineering program because students' needs students should come first.

He noted a survey at Boise-based Micron Technology showed 2,000 of the electronics workers wanted additional engineering education.

"That's a lot of folks," Batt said. "They have to have a strong offering there for the Treasure Valley population of students."

The Board of Education earlier turned down Micron's offer of $6 million to Idaho education if Boise State had its own engineering school.

More than 500 students are enrolled in the cooperative engineering programs in Boise. Fifty-eight of 104 students who have declared majors through the UI's programs are majoring in electrical engineering and 32 others are majoring in mechanical engineering this fall, school officials say.

Idaho House Appropriations Committee Chairman Kathleen Gurnsey of Boise said creation of an independent Boise State engineering college is "a matter of dollars and s-e-n-s-e," and she has tried to heed the Education Board's decisions on engineering education.

"I feel their job is to set policy and I think it is wrong for the Legislature to come along and second-guess them," Gurnsey said. "I guess if you have enough consultants, you'll get what you want."

Fox to 'choose new blood' to oversee reform

POCATELLO, Idaho—The state Board of Education has voted to disband the Goals 2000 school reform committee so state schools Superintendent Anne Fox can appoint new members more in line with her philosophy.

Fox, who argued against Goals 2000 reforms during last year's campaign, urged the board on Friday to help her take charge of the federal money she once pledged to turn away.

"It would allow us to choose new blood and new people closer to the philosophy and direction of the board and accomplish some of the things we want to accomplish," she told fellow board members.

On Dec. 1, the 32 unpaid volunteers now on the Goals 2000 committee will be replaced by appointees of Fox and Gov. Phil Batt. That transition could mean a significant shift in how $448,714 from the federal government and $1 million in requested reform money from the state will be spent. Friday's debate began when committee leader Roberta Fields of New Meadows, a former Board of Education member, drew fire from Dr. Thomas Dillon of Caldwell. He criticized committee spending and chastised Fields for being unclear in her attempts to answer his questions.

"I don't mean to put you on the spot, but I didn't understand a single thing you just said," Dillon said at one point.

Roy Mosman of Moscow later took issue with what he felt was shoddy treatment of Fields.

"For a while there I felt pretty sorry for her. I felt she was under attack," Mosman said.

But Dillon said he was just looking at the Goals 2000 program critically.

"This is everything that the public resents in government. It is a self-perpetuating $6 million project," he said. "There are too many personalities, too many philosophical differences. I think the state Board of Education should go on the record disbanding this committee."

After more debate and several failed motions, Rayburn Barton, the board's executive director, stepped in to clarify the "practical reality."

"The different people on that committee have different points of view than our elected superintendent of public education, and things are at a loggerhead and being dumped into your laps," Barton told board members. "It's just simply a reflection of changed political circumstances and somehow you've got to come down to an agreement."

Finally, the board voted to disband the committee Dec. 1. The only member not voting for the motion was Carole McWilliam of Pocatello, who abstained.

After the meeting, Fields said the only philosophical problems were the ones Fox had with the committee.

"We just wanted to complete the work, but now the jury is still out on whether or not these projects were successful," she said. "She (Fox) didn't want anything to do with Goals 2000. Now she wants complete control."

Senate OKs cuts in environment, homeless, housing, veterans

WASHINGTON—Over Democratic objections, the Senate passed a $62 billion spending bill Wednesday that would slash money for environmental protection, housing programs and veterans' benefits.

Democrats, who said in advance that they lacked the votes to make substantial changes in the bill, urged President Clinton to veto it. The House previously approved equal or deeper spending cuts, so those differences must still be resolved.

The Senate approved the legislation 55-45 after Republicans rebuffed Democratic attempts to restore funds for environmental cleanup of toxic dumps, help for the homeless, health programs for veterans and a cherished Clinton national service program.

The legislation is the first of three broad domestic spending bills being considered by the Senate this week.

The Senate bill would cut the Environmental Protection Agency's budget by one-fourth to $5.6 billion, including a $430 million slash in its Superfund program for toxic waste cleanup. Clinton had sought an increase to $7.3 billion.

It also would cut housing programs by $5 billion, one-fifth of current spending, eliminate Clinton's Americorps national service initiative and reduce veterans' programs by $395 million.

Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska was the lone Democrat to join the Republicans in passing the bill.

The reduction in the EPA budget—though less severe than that approved by the House—still "places the American public at serious risk," said EPA Administrator Carol Browner. She said air and water pollution control efforts would be curtailed and work at hundreds of Superfund toxic waste sites would stop.

Republicans defended the spending reductions as part of a broader campaign to reduce the federal deficit.

Federal low-income housing programs were particularly hard hit.

Overall spending on housing would be cut by $5 billion to $20.4 billion. That would be 20 percent below current spending, and 16 percent less than Clinton had requested. Public housing construction funds would be reduced by $1.6 billion and senators approved new restrictions on housing programs that critics said may lead to rent increases for poor tenants.

An attempt to restore $360 million to help the homeless was rejected 52-48, despite pleas that the 32 percent cut in the homeless assistance program would hurt "those that are most in need." The House has made even deeper cuts of $440 million in the fund for the homeless.

The bill would cut veterans' programs by $395 million from current spending levels, for a new total of $37.3 billion, nearly half of which is fixed spending that Congress cannot change: The administration had proposed an $875 million increase. The senators voted to eliminate money to build two new veterans hospitals as well as most renovation funds for hospitals.

'Playboy' gets green light from Irish censors

DUNDALK, Ireland—Government censors have decided that Playboy magazine won't harm Irish eyes, overturning a long-standing ban that had sent its fans hopping over to Northern Ireland.

In this town just a few miles (kms) from the border the news got some commercial pulses thumping. Gerry and Margaret Molloy are looking forward to selling Playboy in their Dundalk shop, even though some neighbors disapprove.

The Molloys already stock domestic and Swedish magazines offering cheesecake snapshots—publications so far ignored by the censors—and have been accused by other shop owners of attracting "the wrong sort" of customer.

"They say I'm an eegit (idiot) but I'm here to make money. There's a clear demand for the stuff and it's harmless," Mr. Molloy said, noting that other shops had sold Playboy under the counter for years.

Molloy said he wasn't worried about getting foul looks from the local parish priest. "The way sex scandals and controversies have been hitting the church, I think he'll be buying Playboy too!"

Up the road Deirdre McManus polished the brass doorknobs on St. Patrick's Cathedral and shrugged off her country's shifting moral climate.

"They'll be selling it in the street soon I suppose," she said. But her husband of 31 years would not buy the magazine, she said: "He's even more strict than me"

World Court won't consider banning nuclear testing

THE HAGUE, Netherlands—The World Court refused today to consider banning French nuclear testing in the South Pacific despite New Zealand's claims that the blasts risk radioactive catastrophe.

France's decision to end its 3-year-old moratorium on nuclear tests has set off worldwide protests by governments and anti-nuclear activists who contend the tests could spur an arms race and pollute the ocean.

In its ruling, the U.N. court refused to reopen a 1973 case in which New Zealand sought to ban French nuclear testing in the atmosphere.

The court dropped that case in 1974 when France announced it would switch to underground testing. The court said today that the case could not be reopened because atmospheric testing was not the issue now.

It also refused to order the provisional ban on testing sought by New Zealand, which claims the case against France should be revived because the current testing could pollute the ocean with radioactivity.

France resumed nuclear testing Sept. 5 under Mururoa Atoll in French Polynesia.

Local cadet receives coveted Bronze Cross award

Janet Birdsall
Staff

A cadet in the University of Idaho's Chrisman Battalion has received the coveted Legion of Valor Bronze Cross for Achievement.

Eric Fleming was one of two cadets west of the Mississippi to receive this award, said Captain Beth Huber, the battalion's public affairs officer. The Bronze Cross is awarded on the basis of performance and potential in three areas: military leadership, academic leadership, and community and family involvement.

"I was surprised to receive it, due to the level of the award," Fleming said.

"Only one out of 1000 cadets are selected. Eric was one out of four nationwide to receive this honor," Huber said.

LTC Lloyd Scott, commander of Cadet Eric Fleming, winner of the Legion of Valor Bronze Cross for Achievement, with Dr. James Hattois, president of LCSC.

the ROTC detachment, filed a nomination with a narrative of Fleming's accomplishments with the awards committee earlier this year. The nominations were reviewed by the committee, and Fleming was formally notified of his award last month.

Fleming served in the Army's 35th Signal Battalion Airborne from 1988 to 1992. He received the Army Commendation Medal for outstanding service in Operation Desert Storm.

He was also commended and decorated for his combat service in Operation Just Cause in Panama, and he is a master parachutist, according to Scott's narrative. He is also involved with the ROTC cadets at Lewis-Clark State College.

"I am the company commander of ROTC cadets at LCSC, where I have administrative duties including assistant instruction and recruiting," Fleming said.

In addition to his military service, Fleming has maintained an outstanding scholastic record. He has been on the President's List for three semesters at LCSC, where he is a senior with a cumulative GPA of 3.91. He served as an Associated Student Body representative, and as president of the Electronics Club.

Fleming also founded the Clearwater Computer Service to support his family. He and his wife Michella have one child, Eric Fleming Jr., who is three.

"He is a truly outstanding student and future leader. His varied experiences and aptitude for learning make him an extremely well-rounded cadet—one to whom other cadets look for guidance and leadership," Scott said.

Nursing may require more education

Associated Press

REXBURG, Idaho—If a recommendation from the Idaho Nursing Association becomes law, registered nurses will have to have twice as much education.

At its weekend convention, association members voted to propose that registered nurses must have four-year bachelor's degrees and licensed practical nurses need two-year associate degrees.

Under current regulations, a student can become a registered nurse after two years at a junior college or can continue on and get a bachelor's degree. A licensed practical nurse can get a technical degree after 11 months of schooling.

The new standards, if passed, might mean lower salaries for Idaho's nurses. After two years, nursing students could become licensed practical nurses with average starting wages $10 per hour. After two years under current standards, students can certify as registered nurses and make approximately $15 per hour.

If that happens, it would take RNs four years to make what they now earn after two years, said Ricks College nursing professor Susan Garbett.

The proposal's opponents say it could cause a nursing shortage.

"If nurses want a two-year RN degree, they'll have to go out of state," Garbett said. "This will cause a shortage of nurses in Idaho, since none of the surrounding states use the proposed regulations."

North Dakota is the only state currently requiring registered nurses to earn four-year degrees.

"North Dakota's nurse vacancy rate is 14 percent, while Idaho's is only 2.4 percent," Garbett said.

Besides causing a possible shortage, opponents say the new proposal could wipe out the nursing programs at Ricks, College of Southern Idaho and North Idaho College. Ricks College accepts about 60 nursing students annually and turns down 400 to 500.

All registered nurse candidates must pass the same board examination. "If they can pass the board and ensure good patient care, that should be the entry level," Garbett said.

Some nursing association members say a four-year degree is necessary to get respect for other health care workers.

"We want to have a professional standing with colleagues," said Grace Jacobson, assistant nursing professor at Idaho State University. "RN's work with physicians, pharmacists, dietitians, all of whom have at least four years of schooling. Nurses must have more education if they want their opinions to be taken seriously."

Last session, the Legislature passed a law stating that if the Board of Nursing makes any changes in the educational requirements, it must be approved by the state Board of Education before the changes go into effect.

Deary teacher to study, record local farming history

Justin Oliver Ruen
Staff

Anyone driving around Latah County generally notices the number of collapsing farm buildings. These relics from a time dominated by family farmers have an interesting history of their own. Warren Case, a Deary, Idaho teacher and photographer, has taken on the task of recording that history.

Case is the project coordinator for a grant awarded to the Latah County Historical Society by the Idaho Humanities Council. The grant will fund a project to photograph and document the histories of farmers and farm buildings along Texas Ridge, which lies four miles south of Deary, Idaho.

"The project is to find eight or 10 buildings and to photograph and research the histories of each," Case said. "The problems are that the buildings are in the last stages of falling apart, and many of the people who know their histories are already dead."

Many of the people who currently own the buildings know little or nothing about their history or that of the farmers that owned them.

"Basically several generations have lived upon the land and they aren't farming it anymore. The land is changing quickly, with non-agricultural interests becoming predominant," said Case.

"There's also a shrinking population of farmers. We're down to 2 or 3 percent that's actually on the farm, and that number is shrinking every year. American farming is at a crossroads with what some people believe to be a crisis," said Case.

Weaver family friend says Marshal fired first

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Choking back tears, a friend of white separatist Randy Weaver testified Tuesday that deputy U.S. marshals fired first in the shootout that killed Weaver's 14-year-old son and a deputy marshal, and that the officers identified themselves too late.

"We were just walking along the trail...making a perfect target of ourselves," Kevin Harris told a Senate hearing of the exchange of gunfire on Aug. 21, 1992, that killed Deputy U.S. Marshal William Degan and Weaver's son, Sam, at Ruby Ridge, Idaho.

The deputy marshals were scouting Weaver's mountainside homestead in anticipation of a military-style operation to arrest him on gun charges and failure to appear for trial. Weaver's wife, Vicki, was shot and killed the next day by an FBI sniper, who also wounded Harris.

Also at Tuesday's hearing, Thomas Miller, an FBI agent who reviewed that shooting for the agency, came under criticism from senators because he said the FBI sharpshooter was justified in firing at Mrs. Weaver.

Subcommittee Chairman Arlen Specter, R-Pa., asked Miller, "Are you aware of the conclusion" by a Justice Department task force that it was "inappropriate when (FBI sniper Lon) Horiuchi fired the shot that killed Vicki Weaver?"

Miller, then as now an assistant special agent in charge of the FBI's Louisville, Ky., office, said he had heard about the task force's finding but hadn't seen it. Miller's review found both of Horiuchi's shots justified.

Another witness, former Justice Department attorney Jeffrey Howard, testified he recalled learning the morning of Aug. 22 that Sam Weaver had been shot. He said he heard that from one of the top FBI officials now under suspension in a criminal investigation of Ruby Ridge.

But federal law enforcement officials have said they didn't know about the shooting for another day and a half, until they bulldozed the building where the Weavers had placed the teen-ager's body. Howard, who is now the attorney general of New Hampshire, said that during subsequent FBI and Justice Department investigations he was never asked when he learned Sam Weaver had been shot.

Harris, now 28, stayed with the Weavers at various times over a 10-year period and was treated as an adopted son. He and Weaver were acquitted of charges of murdering Degan.

Several members of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on terrorism, technology and government information questioned Harris skeptically as the panel's hearings on Ruby Ridge continued for an additional day after three weeks of testimony. FBI Director Louis Freeh is expected to testify when the hearings resume in two weeks.

Harris conceded that he probably killed Degan, but he insisted that the deputy marshals' previous testimony to the subcommittee was false.

"I want to say this as clearly as I possibly can, so that there is absolutely no mistake about it in anyone's mind: What Mr. Roderick and Mr. Cooper say is false," Harris told the senators.

Deputy Marshals Arthur Roderick and Larry Cooper, who were involved in the shootout, testified Sept. 15 that Roderick shot the Weavers' family dog after it looked toward him when the marshals and the Weavers unexpectedly crossed paths. After that, they said, Degan yelled, "Stop, U.S. marshals," and Harris turned, fired from the hip and shot Degan.

"If I had wanted to shoot someone, I had the perfect opportunity when I saw the (deputy marshal) with the dog—he wasn't even looking at me," Harris testified. "But I didn't shoot him because I didn't have any intention of shooting anyone."

Specter told reporters that the subcommittee may call Cooper to testify again because of the conflicting statements.

Harris said the shootout began when the deputy marshals shot the dog and then started shooting at him and Sam Weaver. He said deputies didn't identify themselves until "pretty much after" the shootout had ended. Harris said he fired his gun into the brush because shots were being fired at him.

Harris insisted he was in plain view of the deputy marshals when he went up to the body of Sam Weaver after he had been hit in the shootout.

"I put my rifle down on the ground and lifted up my hands...and said... 'I just wanna check on Sam.' I walked down to where his body was, in plain view of the men," Harris said. There, Harris turned the boy's body over.

Timber industry wants official jailed for stand on harvests

Associated Press
WASHINGTON—Timber industry lawyers are asking a judge to throw an assistant U.S. agriculture secretary in jail if he continues to refuse to allow logging in some old-growth forests in the Pacific Northwest.

"The Clinton administration is refusing to obey the law," said Chris West, vice president of the Northwest Forestry Association in Portland, Ore.

"Our goal isn't to put anybody in jail. All we want is for these timber sales to be released."

The case involves parts of national forests in Oregon and Washington, some of them centuries old, that were sold for harvest but never turned over to the bidding logging companies.

The Forest Service held up the timber sales after environmental concerns were raised with the listing of the northern spotted owl as a threatened species in 1990.

Two weeks ago, a federal judge in Eugene, Ore., ruled much of the logging should go forward under legislation President Clinton signed in July at the urging of Western Republicans and over the objections of conservationists.

That legislation waives laws protecting fish and wildlife so logging can be expedited in Northwest forests with spotted owls, and in forests nationwide where dead and dying trees pose a fire threat.

Clinton signed the legislation, but with a pledge to allow the logging only within the confines of existing laws.

The administration has not formally responded to U.S. District Judge Michael Hogan's ruling that the timber be released. Environmental lawyers say the ruling gave no deadline for releasing the timber sales.

A Justice Department lawyer, Ellen Athas, told the timber industry in a letter earlier this month the government was taking steps to release the timber for logging.

But last week, the industry's Northwest Forest Resource Council asked the judge to find Clinton administration officials in contempt and fine them $50,000 a day for a week, with the fines doubling each day after that until the logging begins.

"Judge Hogan issued an order compelling them to award and release the sales two weeks ago. They have done nothing," West said.

"This administration doesn't want trees to be cut. Despite all their promises about implementing the president's plan and getting the cut out, they are doing everything they can to restrict logs from going to mills."

The group singled out James Lyons, assistant secretary in charge of the Forest Service, and Tom Tuchmann, who oversees Clinton's Northwest forest policy from the Office of Forestry and Economic Development in Portland.

"NFRFC recognizes that imprisonment is an extreme sanction," the industry group said in court papers filed in Eugene last week.

But the administration's refusal "is an extreme example of the executive branch of government refusing to comply with the valid and serious requirements imposed by the other two branches of government," the papers said.

Neither Lyons nor Tuchmann were immediately available for comment on Tuesday.

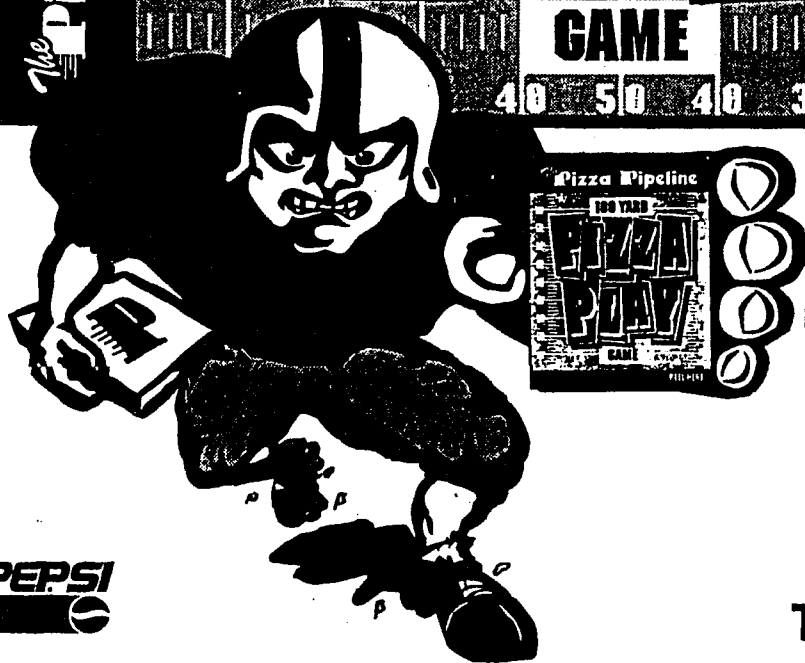

Lyons long has been a target of criticism from the timber industry. Last week, several Western Republicans succeeded in amending a spending bill before Congress to delete money for his job.

The forests at issue have been in limbo under a variety of court orders over the past five years. At one point, U.S. District Judge William Dwyer of Seattle issued an injunction banning the logging, finding the Bush administration deliberately was breaking a series of environmental laws.

Kevin Kirchner, an attorney for the Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund, said the timber industry's new request for jail time is "outrageous and irresponsible."

"Even when Bush administration officials admitted in court that they had 'deliberately' disobeyed an act of Congress, and then were continuing to disobey a subsequent court order, the environmental community never asked the court to put anyone in jail," Kirchner said.

Senators prepare for floor fight on resumed Navy dumping

Associated Press

BOISE—Idaho's two U.S. senators vowed Tuesday to fight language in a military spending bill headed for the Senate floor that would allow the Navy to resume shipments of nuclear waste to Idaho.

Republicans Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne both said they opposed the provision in a Department of Defense appropriation measure that cleared a House-Senate conference committee last Friday.

And a spokesman for Craig said the senior senator was standing by his earlier pledge to filibuster if necessary to stop the bill in the Senate, where it could come to a vote at the end of the week.

"He's willing to do what it takes and fight with Senator Kempthorne on the floor," Bryan Wilkes said. However, "We're hopeful that a settlement can be reached between the governor and the government, and we're urging the government to accept what the governor is proposing."

But a spokeswoman for Gov. Phil Batt said Tuesday that the governor was increasingly frustrated with the pace of negotiations with the Navy and U.S. Department of Energy over resumption of radioactive waste shipments to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

Conference committee approval of language urged on Congress by Navy brass raising the specter of national security added to that frustration, Amy Kleiner said.

"Obviously, we don't want to see Idaho forced to take the waste through congressional action" she said. "This is the kind of outcome that we've been trying to avoid by working to secure a deal."

Kleiner said Batt continued to urge Assistant Energy Secretary Thomas Grumbly to finalize an agreement. Talks have been continuing since the Energy Department submitted a counterproposal on Sept. 12 to what Batt called his final best offer.

The counterproposal called for substantially more than the 968 new shipments—97 tons of waste—that Batt indicated he would accept in return for a court-enforced guarantee that all high-level and most low-level waste would be removed from Idaho by 2036.

Among the additional shipments proposed by the Energy Department was waste from commercial nuclear plants, which Batt has vowed the state would never voluntarily accept. And the government sought to seriously weaken the governor's proposal for enforcing the deadline for removal of waste—a $100,000-a-day fine, adjusted for inflation, beginning on Jan. 1, 2036 and accumulating until all the waste is removed.

The INEL already has 261 tons of high-level waste and millions of cubic feet of low-level waste. A federal court order, which the government has appealed, and the state's refusal to accept it continues to keep additional waste out for now.

But U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge is expected to rule soon on the state's challenge to the government's claim that more waste can be safely dumped at the INEL. And a three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is considering the Navy's petition to immediately begin dumping waste despite Lodge's earlier ban.

The nuclear Navy claims it needs to immediately dump 12 shipments of spent reactor fuel to the INEL, followed shortly by another 12 to keep the refueling of the nuclear aircraft carrier USS Nimitz and defueling and inactivation of a nuclear cruiser and five nuclear submarines on schedule.

Its bid to sidestep the courts and Batt through Congress faces an uncertain fate in the Senate, where the Defense appropriations bill's inclusion of funding for the B-2 bomber already is controversial.

Kempthorne spokesman Brian Whitlock said the waste provision could make a close vote even closer.

"We'll certainly have a good healthy debate and make our point and hopefully sway some other people to believe the way we do," Whitlock said.

In the meantime, Kempthorne and Craig both want to see a negotiated agreement between Batt and federal officials.

"We're optimistic and hopeful," Wilkes said. "We think that there will be a settlement reached so it won't really matter."

To prepare for an agreement, Craig announced on Monday that he has introduced legislation calling for construction of a Nevada storage and disposal facility for all nuclear waste generated in the United States.

The bill authorizes construction of a facility on the Nevada Test Site near Yucca Mountain to store spent Navy fuel from INEL and other defense facilities, and spent fuel currently stored at commercial nuclear power plants nationwide.

"The future of the American farm is that we will have land owners who don't live on the farm, and you will have farmers who are simply tenants and in that case it is possible that the people who own the land won't be interested in good land-use practices because all they want is a good return on their investment," he added.

"Agricultural history should be preserved just like any part of history," Case explained. "Even agriculture today will not be what it is after the turn of the century. To learn from the past, you must first have a record of it," Case added.

The research will be displayed in an exhibit which will tour Latah County in 1996, with its permanent home at the Latah Historical Society, where it will be available to scholars, students and the public at large.

independent of professional influences, but should "seriously consider" a closer tie to the journalism program—including the faculty.

"These folks are good and they've been doing their jobs for a long time," Einerson said. "They could offer a lot of sage advice and guidelines."

The survey also showed 35 percent of graduates were discontent with the student government.

ASUI Senator Jeremy Winters said, the high turnover of officials in the government makes it hard for student leaders to stay focused.

"When students are in and out of positions it doesn't give them time to learn the ropes," said Winters. "It seems this year's senate is heading in the same direction as it has in the past—down a long road with no map."

Winters added the dissatisfaction also stems from a general lack of communication between the student body and their representatives. He said students don't always state their needs.

"Students often feel they have no say in what is going on around campus," said Winters. "When a representative does show up, people just listen and do not actually voice their concern."

Other findings show the age of graduating seniors ranged from 20 to 58, with an average of 23. Of the graduates, 53 percent were male and 89 percent were Caucasian Americans.

Graduates reported spending 18-20 hours a week with homework, 14 of those hours spent studying alone, with four to five hours spent in groups.

During their final two years of study, graduates credit load ranged from six to 21 with an average of 15.

Student loans were used as the biggest source of financial support by 39 percent of seniors, up from 34 percent in 1994 and 29 percent in 1993. Parents or guardians were reported as the primary source of money by 36 percent of students, up from 32 percent in 1994 and 34 percent in 1993.

After graduation, 59 percent planned on working in their major fields, 17 percent were going for their graduate degree and 5 percent wanted to stay in school to receive a credential or professional certificate.

"The killing shot...went right through him, from the back, and pierced his heart," said Harris.

He denied what he called the deputy marshals' claim that he and the Weavers ambushed the marshal. Roderick and Cooper, while not describing the incident as an ambush, testified that Harris fired the first shot that followed shooting the dog.

The deputy marshals said they believed Randy Weaver accidentally shot and killed his own son. Weaver has said he never fired his gun at anyone.

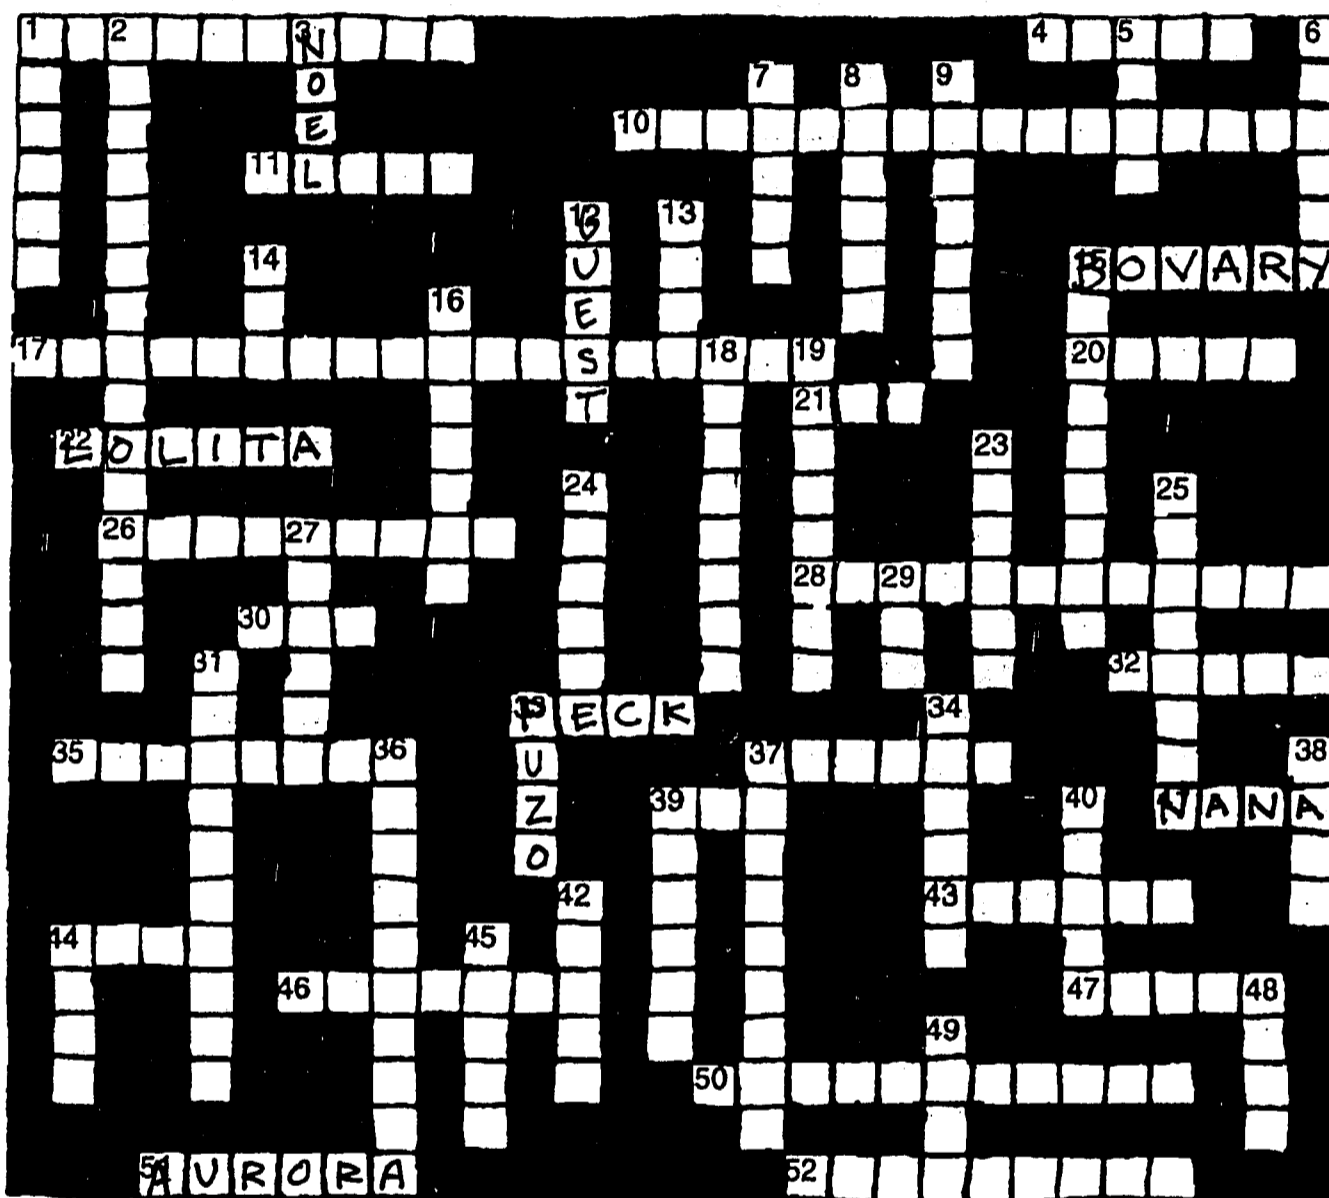

Sen. Herbert Kohl of Wisconsin, the subcommittee's senior Democrat, said he believed Sam Weaver was shot by a deputy marshal, not his father.

"Clearly you were victims, but you were not heroes," Kohl said. "You were up there with a fugitive."

The government concluded that the shot that killed Sam Weaver came from a 9-millimeter weapon, and both Cooper and Randy Weaver were carrying such a firearm.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., challenged Harris' statement that he and Weaver did not discuss the possibility of federal agents coming to arrest Weaver. "This is the one thing to me that makes your story not credible," she told him.

Taxes, timing, politics work against Mariners in Olympia

OLYMPIA, Wash.—To understand why the Legislature is not at all likely to hold a special session to help the Seattle Mariners get a new ballpark, first understand the politics of taxes, timing and the 1996 election.

Forget for the moment what it is lawmakers could or would do for the Mariners if they actually met, wrapped as they are in the flag of less spending and lower taxes.

Would they sacrifice principle for expediency? And if so, would they dare do what King County voters refused to do, finance a new stadium?

"I don't think so," veteran Rep. Ruth Fisher, D-Iacoma, said Tuesday. "Give me a break. King County voters said no, no, no."

But never mind all that. In order to do something, the Legislature first must get here, and people around here think that won't happen until January, the start of the regular session.

The reason? It all has to do with taxes, timing and the 1996 elections.

First the taxes. Majority House Republicans say any special session must include votes to override or modify Gov. Mike Lowry's vetoes this year of $265 million in tax cuts for business and property owners. But neither Lowry nor Majority Senate Democrats want to take such a vote, and timing has everything to do with that.

Senate Democrats, if not Lowry, are increasingly comfortable that a tax cut of some sort can be granted next year—an election year. Senate Majority Leader Marcus Gaspard said as much last week after state economists noted a budget surplus of nearly $700 million combined with growing and stable revenues.

But if Democrats agree to a round of tax cuts in a special session this year, they leave themselves little room for a cut next year, a year when half the Senate and all of the House are up for election. And they know that Republicans would push hard for even more tax cuts, leaving the Democrats looking like the spoilers only months before voters go to the polls.

"I do believe the Democrats don't want to use up a tax-cutting opportunity this year when they can use it next year," agreed Sen. Emilio Cantu, R-Bellevue, one of the lawmakers pressing for a special session to cut taxes and help the Mariners.

Lowry called the stadium proposal an important quality-of-life issue, but also has said he will not call a special session without a guarantee that tax cuts will be off the table.

Cantu and other Republicans say that in good conscience, they cannot agree to a special session without fighting for tax cuts, so it's a stalemate.

Privately, many legislators who don't live in pennant-hungry King County say they don't see how such a stalemate can be broken.

But Cantu and his King County colleagues also say they're holding out hope that enough pressure can be brought to force Democrats into a special session, tax-cut votes and all.

The governor, meanwhile, promises to convene a meeting of state, local and Mariners officials to discuss ways to build a stadium and keep the winning baseball team in Seattle.

But don't bet on one of those ways being a special session to help the Mariners.

workload on the network. However, the new server will not cure slow software performance students are experiencing in campus labs.

"Different problem," said Brown. "The Unix side of Computer Services has been fairly stable. The Novell side has had its share of problems in the last few weeks. That is a separate problem."

Novell and Unix servers are separate systems. Novell servers load software on the computers in the labs. Unix servers access and deliver e-mail, and run specific applications within its own operating system. The UI network connects both Novell and Unix servers, defining the system students use in the computer labs.

The most popular server is raven. "It is the fastest machine," Brown said.

Harrier will receive a 128 megabyte memory upgrade, topping out at 192 megabytes.

"Our goal in academic computing is to provide current technology for students, faculty and staff," said Brown. "Harrier is close to state-of-the-art for a workstation."

The new server arrived late at UI, and in less than state-of-the-art condition. Hewlett-Packard shipped the server approximately three months after UI placed the order. The server arrived without memory and was missing a hard disk.

"It was supposed to be shipped ready to go, plug and play," said Brown. "We had them ship memory to us, and we put it in. When we tried to boot the system, we discovered it did not have a hard disk."

A Hewlett-Packard service technician brought a hard drive to campus and installed it.

A Hewlett-Packard spokesperson said Tuesday the server UI ordered had been on backlog. As for the incomplete condition in which it was shipped, "HP is still investigating what happened."

What happened to the flat tax?

The struggle by the GOP to balance the budget has brought with it some interesting revelations—namely that their strategy is fatally flawed by their quest to drastically cut taxes.

It's quite obvious that the budget does need to become balanced sometime in the near future—the question then becomes one of how long: the Republicans say seven years, President Clinton says 10.

But the Republicans are pushing too far, too fast. Their plan is to slash spending (which needs to be done) while cutting $245 billion in taxes at the same time.

What becomes obvious here is the hearkening back to the "good ol' days" of supply-side economics during the early days of the Reagan administration. The difference in the Reagan years was that the prevailing theory said the tax cuts would pay for themselves by generating renewed growth in the economy thereby creating more tax revenue. It didn't happen. The federal budget deficit soared enormously, and the economy slid into recession in 1982.

Supply-siders will tell you the reason all this happened was because government spending wasn't cut in the first years of Reagan's presidency. The then Democrat-controlled Congress passed bills increasing military spending as Reagan wanted but fought him on any reduction in social spending.

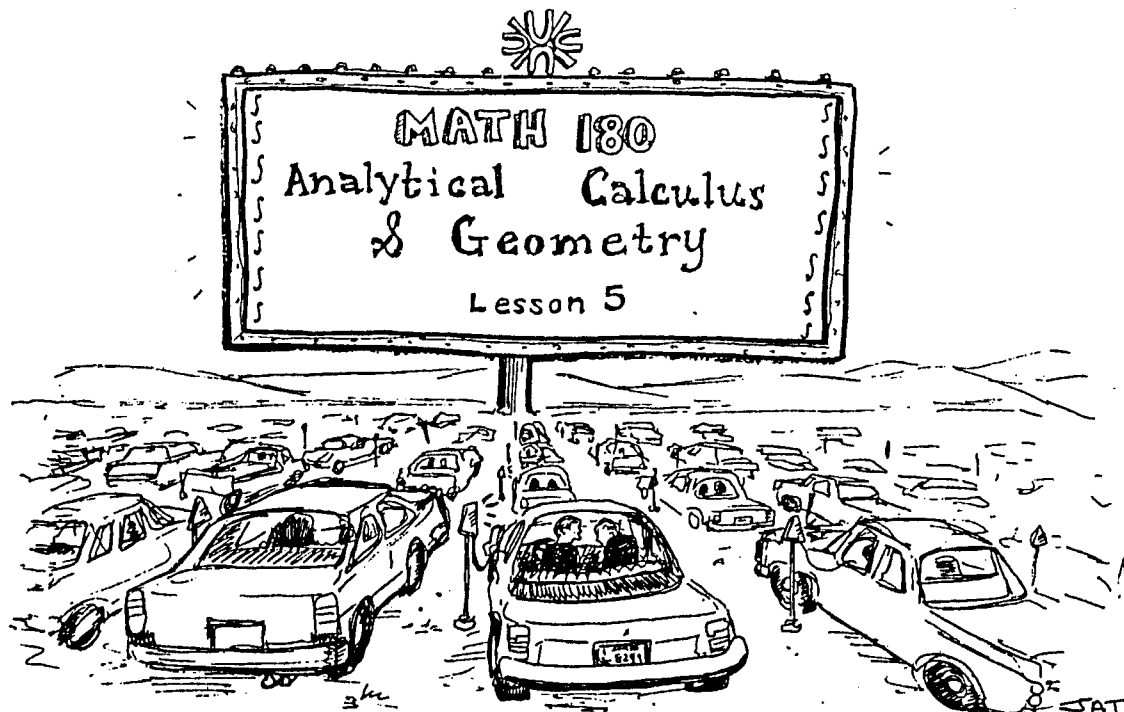

Whatever the reasons for the failed attempts of the trailblazing forefathers of supply-side theory, let's acknowledge one simple fact; the United States, as a whole, enjoys a tax burden which is far lighter than that of other industrialized nations—many of which have leaned toward socializing medicine and other major industries—despite all of the complaining we tend to do about taxes. Why do we need to set ourselves up for another repeat of the Reagan fiasco?

Here's a better answer. Let's simplify the tax code. Let's throw the whole damned book out the window, and along with it a majority of the IRS, and ask our representatives, "What the hell happened to the promises of a flat tax? Did you mis-file them in one of your drawers?"

The Mobil Corporation says it spends millions of dollars every year just to prepare its tax returns because the United States is saddled with the world's most complicated tax code. Mobil supports a flat tax because any rise in taxes as a result would be offset in the savings they would realize by not having to pay an army of accountants and lawyers. Why should the average American family or business have to pay a professional to prepare their tax returns? It's ludicrous.

Simplify the tax code. Provide a deduction of $14,000 for everyone, this way, those living under the poverty level are saved some money, and everything earned above that is taxed at X percent. Simple. Money-saving. Cuts bureaucracy. Who could ask for anything more? Not the Republicans.

—Russ Wright

IF CARS RULED THE U OF I CAMPUS:
THE RETURN OF DRIVE-INS.

Greyhounds would make good tacos

There has been a flurry of controversy lately about the alleged mistreatment of race dogs at the Coeur d'Alene Greyhound Park at Post Falls. Reports of dogs being electrocuted after they have outlived their usefulness abound as well as a former trainer's admission that she once poured bleach and salt down a dog's throat so it would lose weight for a race.

Animal Rights groups such as PETA and the Humane Society are having a field day with these recent disclosures. A group in Post Falls has started a petition to close down the dog track; the petition has nearly ten signatures on it. Animal Rights groups have appealed to Governor Phil Batt to shut the place down; he is supposedly considering an investigation.

My question is this: why all the fuss? They're Greyhounds.

Greyhounds are ugly dogs. They're not cute or even remotely fluffy. So why not electrocute them if they aren't running fast enough? No harm done, when you think about it. From the look of those Greyhounds, they probably bite people anyway. So, shock away, I say!

The only thing that bothers me about this whole deal is the owners of the Greyhound Park are probably just dumping the electrocuted Greyhounds into the garbage or into the river. That is a shame, considering the vast profits that could be made with the dogs' carcasses. Just think of all the perfectly good meat that must be going to waste. Something should be done to maximize profits.

The solution? Simple! Set up a couple of taco stands at the Park. The tacos would be made up of—surprise!—dog meat! Yum, yum! No one would ever know the difference, I swear. It tastes just like chicken.

Heck, I suppose they could even diversify and set up all sort of international cuisine booths featuring the remains of former race dogs. Let's see, I can think of a few I wouldn't mind sinking my teeth into: Dog Fried Rice, Sweet and Sour Dog, Dog and Bean Burrito, Spaghetti with Dogballs, and of course, the American Favorite, "The BLD (bacon, lettuce, and dog) Sandwich." Be dry my salivating mouth!

What I'm interested in knowing is exactly what these anti-Greyhound Park folks think of all the cute little puppies and kitties that are killed every single day in this country because there are more animals loose out there than animal shelters can handle.

Pounds and shelters are continuously executing animals that they can no longer feed.

So, as always, I have a novel solution for this problem as well. Dog tracks should be forced by law to only use dogs from local pounds. It would make the races much more entertaining to see a bunch of half-crazed mutts running about helter-skelter on the track than those anorexic, well-trained Greyhounds. And just think of the profits race track owners would make. There would be practically no overhead—they could get their dogs for free.

People would really get into dog racing if they could actually tell the difference between the dogs. A race between a dachshund and a Cocker Spaniel would be loads more interesting than a race between ten greyhounds.

And of course, when these dog pound racers had outlived their usefulness, they could be electrocuted and made into dog tacos. Yum, yum!

There is more to Hispanic culture than meets the taste buds

For you, if you are not Hispanic, it probably means very little beyond enchiladas and margaritas.

But, in a step to attribute and give importance to the Hispanic history of our nation, the United States Congress has commemorated Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 as National Hispanic month.

As do many Hispanics, I have a special love and pride for the culture in which my ancestors lived and passed down and which has nurtured and defined who I am. Therefore, it is with extreme pleasure and satisfaction that I see the Hispanic Heritage being shared and celebrated as well as the contributions and hard work of the Hispanic people in the United States being acknowledged.

It all began when the first Spanish Conquistadors and explorers set foot on the shores of the New World. Over 450 years have passed since the Spanish language and customs have imprinted themselves upon the history of the United States. At the very moment those men left their footprints in the sand, the Hispanic legacy has taken hold and performed an important role in shaping and molding our nation.

Like any large immigrant group, Hispanics have influenced much of everyday America. The tacos and chili we indulge in, the music we dance and listen to, and even some of the sports we play, have in some way been spiced by the Hispanic culture. A lot of contemporary literature is written by Hispanic authors such as Gabriel Garcia portray and illustrate the life and emotions common to the Hispanic people. Hispanic arts and crafts have become popular in modern American culture as well, decorating many homes and businesses.

The language of the Hispanic race, Spanish, has also made itself known. In many cities of the United States—such as Miami and Los Angeles—Spanish is so widely spoken that one almost feels as if he or she has left the country. Billboards, magazines, newspapers, and even street signs are written in Spanish in many of these large cities.

Familiarity with the Spanish language has in fact become vital to many businesses as the Hispanic population expands and the economic benefits of targeting the ethnic group increases.

Yet, like many immigrant minority groups, Hispanics have had to overcome many obstacles in the United States.

Prejudices and stereotypes have plagued the Hispanic population and many times made our acceptance in mainstream culture tentative at best. Recently, there was a child-custody case in Amarillo, Tex. where a judge reproached a Hispanic mother for speaking Spanish to her 5-year-old daughter. In the judge's opinion, the fact that the young girl spoke Spanish relegated her to a life of certain ignorance and would ensure that she would become no more than a housemaid.

On the flip-side, many Hispanic parents, concerned that their children might suffer the same prejudices, denied them their Hispanic heritage and did not allow Spanish to be spoken in the home. Hispanics have also had to deal with other unjust stereotypes: they have been accused of being drug dealers, thieves, alcoholics and lazy, unmotivated workers.

The truth is Hispanic people are primarily God- and family-oriented. We are generally a hardworking people ready to make any sacrifice for the good of the family or advancement of our children. Hispanics achieve and measure their success by their willingness to confront every problem and overcome it and are able to endure many hardships other people cannot.

Above all, we are a happy race constantly looking for any excuse to throw a fiesta. We love to dance, wear bright colors and fill the air with salsa music and Afro-Cuban beats. Our energy is contagious, and many non-Hispanics find that they are easily caught up into our kaleidoscope world. We have adopted the United States as our home and are grateful for the opportunities which are not present in our own countries. Hispanics are not here to change anything; we are here to contribute to the patchwork quilt of this great land.

Forget for the moment what it is lawmakers could or would do for the Mariners if they actually met, wrapped as they are in the flag of less spending and lower taxes.

Would they sacrifice principle for expediency? And if so, would they dare do what King County voters refused to do, finance a new stadium?

"I don't think so," veteran Rep. Ruth Fisher, D-Tacoma, said Tuesday. "Give me a break. King County voters said no, no, no."

But never mind all that. In order to do something, the Legislature first must get here, and people around here think that won't happen until January, the start of the regular session.

The reason? It all has to do with taxes, timing and the 1996 elections.

First the taxes. Majority House Republicans say any special session must include votes to override or modify Gov. Mike Lowry's vetoes this year of $265 million in tax cuts for business and property owners. But neither Lowry nor Majority Senate Democrats want to take such a vote, and timing has everything to do with that.

Senate Democrats, if not Lowry, are increasingly comfortable that a tax cut of some sort can be granted next year—an election year. Senate Majority Leader Marcus Gaspard said as much last week after state economists noted a budget surplus of nearly $700 million combined with growing and stable revenues.

But if Democrats agree to a round of tax cuts in a special session this year, they leave themselves little room for a cut next year, a year when half the Senate and all of the House are up for election. And they know that Republicans would push hard for even more tax cuts, leaving the Democrats looking like the spoilers only months before voters go to the polls.

"I do believe the Democrats don't want to use up a tax-cutting opportunity this year when they can use it next year," agreed Sen. Emilio Cantu, R-Bellevue, one of the lawmakers pressing for a special session to cut taxes and help the Mariners.

Lowry called the stadium proposal an important quality-of-life issue, but also has said he will not call a special session without a guarantee that tax cuts will be off the table.

Cantu and other Republicans say that in good conscience, they cannot agree to a special session without fighting for tax cuts, so it's a stalemate.

Privately, many legislators who don't live in pennant-hungry King County say they don't see how such a stalemate can be broken.

But Cantu and his King County colleagues also say they're holding out hope that enough pressure can be brought to force Democrats into a special session, tax-cut votes and all.

The governor, meanwhile, promises to convene a meeting of state, local and Mariners officials to discuss ways to build a stadium and keep the winning baseball team in Seattle.

But don't bet on one of those ways being a special session to help the Mariners.

workload on the network. However, the new server will not cure slow software performance students are experiencing in campus labs.

"Different problem," said Brown. "The Unix side of Computer Services has been fairly stable. The Novell side has had its share of problems in the last few weeks. That is a separate problem."

Novell and Unix servers are separate systems. Novell servers load software on the computers in the labs. Unix servers access and deliver e-mail, and run specific applications within its own operating system. The UI network connects both Novell and Unix servers, defining the system students use in the computer labs.

The most popular server is raven. "It is the fastest machine," Brown said.

Harrier will receive a 128 megabyte memory upgrade, topping out at 192 megabytes.

"Our goal in academic computing is to provide current technology for students, faculty and staff," said Brown. "Harrier is close to state-of-the art for a workstation."

The new server arrived late at UI, and in less than state-of-the-art condition. Hewlett-Packard shipped the server approximately three months after UI placed the order. The server arrived without memory and was missing a hard disk.

"It was supposed to be shipped ready to go, plug and play," said Brown. "We had them ship memory to us, and we put it in. When we tried to boot the system, we discovered it did not have a hard disk."

A Hewlett-Packard service technician brought a hard drive to campus and installed it.

A Hewlett-Packard spokesperson said Tuesday the server UI ordered had been on backlog. As for the incomplete condition in which it was shipped, "HP is still investigating what happened."

What happened to the flat tax?

The struggle by the GOP to balance the budget has brought with it some interesting revelations—namely that their strategy is fatally flawed by their quest to drastically cut taxes.

It's quite obvious that the budget does need to become balanced sometime in the near future—the question then becomes one of how long: the Republicans say seven years, President Clinton says 10.

But the Republicans are pushing too far, too fast. Their plan is to slash spending (which needs to be done) while cutting $245 billion in taxes at the same time.

What becomes obvious here is the hearkening back to the "good ol' days" of supply-side economics during the early days of the Reagan administration. The difference in the Reagan years was that the prevailing theory said the tax cuts would pay for themselves by generating renewed growth in the economy thereby creating more tax revenue. It didn't happen. The federal budget deficit soared enormously, and the economy slid into recession in 1982.

Supply-siders will tell you the reason all this happened was because government spending wasn't cut in the first years of Reagan's presidency. The then Democrat-controlled Congress passed bills increasing military spending as Reagan wanted but fought him on any reduction in social spending.

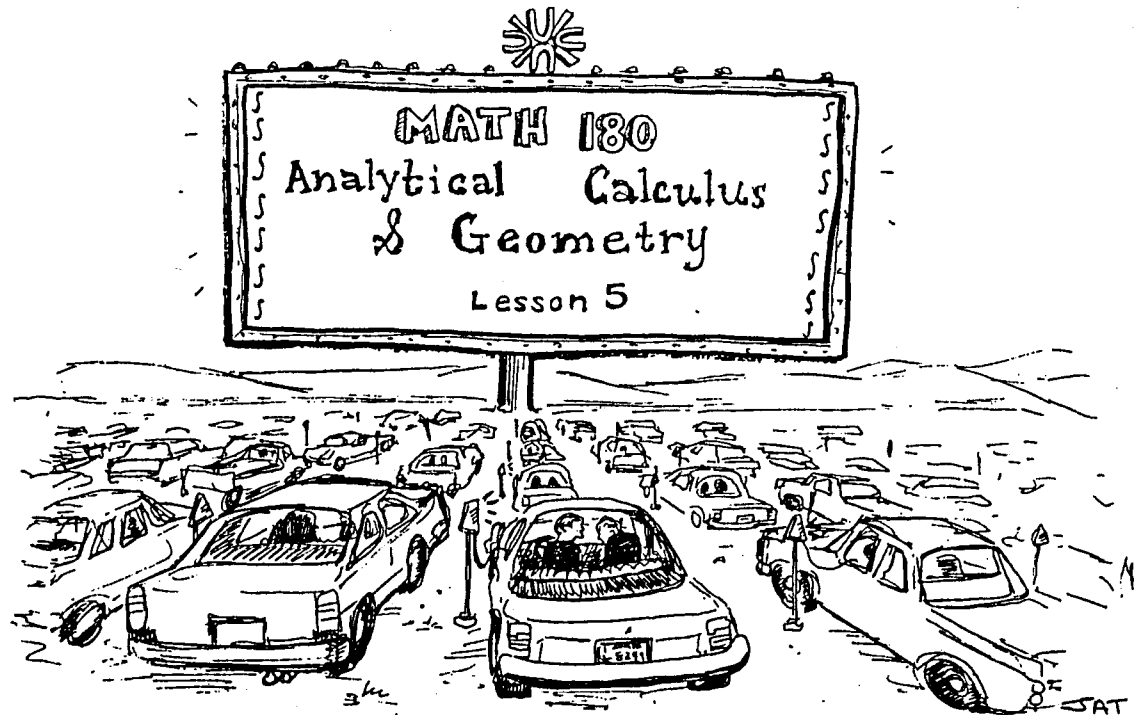

Whatever the reasons for the failed attempts of the trailblazing forefathers of supply-side theory, let's acknowledge one simple fact; the United States, as a whole, enjoys a tax burden which is far lighter than that of other industrialized nations—many of which have leaned toward socializing medicine and other major industries—despite all of the complaining we tend to do about taxes. Why do we need to set ourselves up for another repeat of the Reagan fiasco?

Here's a better answer. Let's simplify the tax code. Let's throw the whole damned book out the window, and along with it a majority of the IRS, and ask our representatives, "What the hell happened to the promises of a flat tax? Did you mis-file them in one of your drawers?"

The Mobil Corporation says it spends millions of dollars every year just to prepare its tax returns because the United States is saddled with the world's most complicated tax code. Mobil supports a flat tax because any rise in taxes as a result would be offset in the savings they would realize by not having to pay an army of accountants and lawyers. Why should the average American family or business have to pay a professional to prepare their tax returns? It's ludicrous.

Simplify the tax code. Provide a deduction of $14,000 for everyone, this way, those living under the poverty level are saved some money, and everything earned above that is taxed at X percent. Simple. Money-saving. Cuts bureaucracy. Who could ask for anything more? Not the Republicans.

IF CARS RULED THE U OF I CAMPUS:
THE RETURN OF DRIVE-INS.

Greyhounds would make good tacos

There has been a flurry of controversy lately about the alleged mistreatment of race dogs at the Coeur d'Alene Greyhound Park at Post Falls. Reports of dogs being electrocuted after they have outlived their usefulness abound as well as a former trainer's admission that she once poured bleach and salt down a dog's throat so it would lose weight for a race.

Animal Rights groups such as PETA and the Humane Society are having a field day with these recent disclosures. A group in Post Falls has started a petition to close down the dog track; the petition has nearly ten signatures on it. Animal Rights groups have appealed to Governor Phil Batt to shut the place down; he is supposedly considering an investigation.

My question is this: why all the fuss? They're Greyhounds.

Greyhounds are ugly dogs. They're not cute or even remotely fluffy. So why not electrocute them if they aren't running fast enough? No harm done, when you think about it. From the look of those Greyhounds, they probably bite people anyway. So, shock away, I say!

The only thing that bothers me about this whole deal is the owners of the Greyhound Park are probably just dumping the electrocuted Greyhounds into the garbage or into the river. That is a shame, considering the vast profits that could be made with the dogs' carcasses. Just think of all the perfectly good meat that must be going to waste. Something should be done to maximize profits.

The solution? Simple! Set up a couple of taco stands at the Park. The tacos would be made up of—surprise!—dog meat! Yum, yum! No one would ever know the difference, I swear. It tastes just like chicken.

Heck, I suppose they could even diversify and set up all sort of international cuisine booths featuring the remains of former race dogs. Let's see, I can think of a few I wouldn't mind sinking my teeth into: Dog Fried Rice, Sweet and Sour Dog, Dog and Bean Burrito, Spaghetti with Dogballs, and of course, the American Favorite, "The BLD (bacon, lettuce, and dog) Sandwich." Be dry my salivating mouth!

What I'm interested in knowing is exactly what these anti-Greyhound Park folks think of all the cute little puppies and kitties that are killed every single day in this country because there are more animals loose out there than animal shelters can handle. Pounds and shelters are continuously executing animals that they can no longer feed.

So, as always, I have a novel solution for this problem as well. Dog tracks should be forced by law to only use dogs from local pounds. It would make the races much more entertaining to see a bunch of half-crazed mutts running about helter-skelter on the track than those anorexic, well-trained Greyhounds. And just think of the profits race track owners would make. There would be practically no overhead—they could get their dogs for free.

People would really get into dog racing if they could actually tell the difference between the dogs. A race between a dachshund and a Cocker Spaniel would be loads more interesting than a race between ten greyhounds.

And of course, when these dog pound racers had outlived their usefulness, they could be electrocuted and made into dog tacos. Yum, yum!

There is more to Hispanic culture than meets the taste buds

When you are not Hispanic, it probably means very little beyond enchiladas and margaritas.

But, in a step to attribute and give importance to the Hispanic history of our nation, the United States Congress has commemorated Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 as National Hispanic month.

As do many Hispanics, I have a special love and pride for the culture in which my ancestors lived and passed down and which has nurtured and defined who I am. Therefore, it is with extreme pleasure and satisfaction that I see the Hispanic Heritage being shared and celebrated as well as the contributions and hard work of the Hispanic people in the United States being acknowledged.

It all began when the first Spanish Conquistadors and explorers set foot on the shores of the New World. Over 450 years have passed since the Spanish language and customs have imprinted themselves upon the history of the United States. At the very moment those men left their footprints in the sand, the Hispanic legacy has taken hold and performed an important role in shaping and molding our nation.

Like any large immigrant group, Hispanics have influenced much of everyday America. The tacos and chili we indulge in, the music we dance and listen to, and even some of the sports we play, have in some way been spiced by the Hispanic culture. A lot of contemporary literature is written by Hispanic authors such as Gabriel Garcia

Murquez, who portray and illustrate the life and emotions common to the Hispanic people. Hispanic arts and crafts have become popular in modern American culture as well, decorating many homes and businesses.

The language of the Hispanic race, Spanish, has also made itself known. In many cities of the United States—such as Miami and Los Angeles—Spanish is so widely spoken that one almost feels as if he or she has left the country. Billboards, magazines, newspapers, and even street signs are written in Spanish in many of these large cities. Familiarity with the Spanish language has in fact become vital to many businesses as the Hispanic population expands and the economic benefits of targeting the ethnic group increases.

Yet, like many immigrant minority groups, Hispanics have had to overcome many obstacles in the United States.

Prejudices and stereotypes have plagued the Hispanic population and many times made our acceptance in mainstream culture tentative at best. Recently, there was a child-custody case in Amarillo, Tex. where a judge reproached a Hispanic mother for speaking Spanish to her 5-year-old daughter. In the judge's opinion, the fact that the young girl spoke Spanish relegated her to a life of certain ignorance and would ensure that she would become no more than a housemaid.

On the flip-side, many Hispanic parents, concerned that their children might suffer the same prejudices, denied them their Hispanic heritage and did not allow Spanish to be spoken in the home. Hispanics have also had to deal with other unjust stereotypes: they have been accused of being drug dealers, thieves, alcoholics and lazy, unmotivated workers.

The truth is Hispanic people are primarily God- and family-oriented. We are generally a hardworking people ready to make any sacrifice for the good of the family or advancement of our children. Hispanics achieve and measure their success by their willingness to confront every problem and overcome it and are able to endure many hardships other people cannot.

Above all, we are a happy race constantly looking for any excuse to throw a fiesta. We love to dance, wear bright colors and fill the air with salsa music and Afro-Cuban beats. Our energy is contagious, and many non-Hispanics find that they are easily caught up into our kaleidoscope world. We have adopted the United States as our home and are grateful for the opportunities which are not present in our own countries. Hispanics are not here to change anything; we are here to contribute to the patchwork quilt of this great land.

Maybe unreliable green convertible sports cars aren't so bad after all

This column was supposed to be about some cynical, reactionary point of view that I have. Because, after all, that is what opinion columns are about.

Unfortunately, I have to get at least a little bit fired up about something before I can write disparaging things about it. And after a weekend of more homework than I care to think about, stories to write, working, sleeping and eating—all ranked in order of importance and allotted time—I just couldn't get fired up about anything. And the worst part is that I was out of town for the weekend and should have been out having fun with my friends, but instead I lugged all those textbooks with me and spent most of my days with my nose to the page.

There was a time in my life when I had to fill every empty moment. This was necessary in order to keep my sanity. If I had too much time, I would do too much thinking and eventually sink into a deep, morbid depression. I haven't been that clinical for several years now, but the pattern of overachieving still lingers. I try to cram my classes into a few days, my work into the other few, and homework into what is left over.

This leaves approximately one hour a day to eat, sleep, and go to the bathroom. This leaves approximately zero time for me. I know I'm not alone here; I know most of you are doing the same thing. I could be a woman's magazine and say, "Buy yourself a nice box of chocolates or some flowers," but who am I kidding? I know the only thing that works for me is the sanctity of a 120-degree bathtub. Unfortunately I only have a shower, so my only form of true relaxation is inaccessible.

So on I trudge, piling ever more responsibilities onto myself, somehow finding a way to wade through all of the muck, even when it means turning my work in much too late.

So we come to the point where I'm on my way back to Moscow, and it's Monday, and my column was due on Saturday, and I still have no idea what I'm going to write about. I'm speeding along the highway as fast as my little car will go (about 67 mph) and I'm really stressed because I figure my editor is going to yell at me or fire me or something and suddenly it hits me. Epiphany or clarity or vision or whatever you want to call it.

I looked out across the freshly cut fields, and it struck me just how beautiful they were. This is remarkable because mountains and rivers and amber waves of grain have certainly never been my thing. But there it was, and even though it was covered with a gray-blue smoky haze, it was really pretty.

Even the newly blackened hills took on an appearance of modern art as they were contrasted with the dark green trees behind them. I thought how extraordinary it was that if you look at something you don't particularly like, you can still find something beautiful.

I thought "Heck, the worst thing they can do to me is fire me, right? And how bad would that be? Wow, I might have some extra time on the weekends." Not that I wanted to get fired, of course, but you just get to a certain point where you can't maintain the stress level anymore.

I noticed how the freshly plowed field resembled Zen rock gardens. How there was something poignant and singular about a lone tractor out in the field turning up the earth.

It occurred to me that the more time saving devices we create, the less time we have. The more efficient and computerized things get, the less human they become. The harder we try to understand ourselves and everyone else, the farther away we get.

I realized how precarious and precious life is. How everything that exists is little more than energy patterns, made up of mostly nothing and held together by the sheer will of the universe.

And then how you can take something so important and necessary for life—water for example—and it can become a poison with the addition or subtraction of a few electrons or protons.

And it occurred to me why we are here. I mean, I figured out the reason we exist. It is because we are the only creatures on the planet who can appreciate beauty, who can see the world not only for what it is, but for what it has the potential to be. We can see beyond ourselves and within ourselves. We can fathom the future and the substance of truth. That is our purpose, and that is the role which we must play lest we die unfulfilled and unhappy people.

I thought how great it was that I had my little green car. How even though it seems to be on its last wheels, it's a convertible, and it's the best color in the world, and that it's just wonderful.

I thought about how often I let school overwhelm me, and how I could be happy just driving the little green car down the road, not going anywhere in particular, just going.

I guess what I really got was some perspective. And I guess what I'm trying to say is when this happens to you, hang on to that moment as if your life depended on it, because in a very real way it does. Remember it when things get too big.

True peace is such a rare and beautiful thing, and the fact that it happens so rarely and that it is so very brief simply makes it all that much more precious and lovely.

Letters to the Editor

Maybe a little common sense?

In the Sept. 26 issue of the Argonaut, I read an amusing letter by Nors Davidson, basically complaining that bicycles and other methods of transportation other than vehicles on campus are a hazard.

I would have to disagree with you on the argument that campus is not the place for bikes, Nors. You didn't stop with just the bicyclists either, going on to include skateboarders, rollerbladers, and even pedestrians. If campus is not the place for these alternative forms of exercise and transportation, then where IS the place?

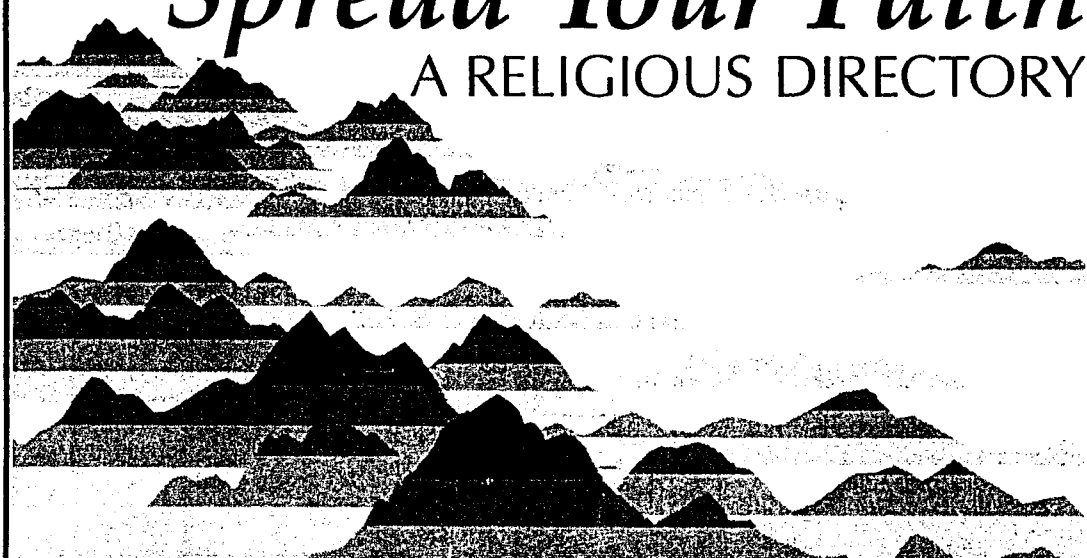

Yes, campus should be a safe place for all forms of transportation, even those just cruising around with stereos blasting the tunes. And maybe the bicyclist in the incident you mentioned was guilty of going too fast, but that is no reason to keep them all off campus. Maybe campus would be a safer place without automobiles. No, that wouldn't be fair either.

My point is that everyone has access to campus with all forms of transportation. I see no problem with that as long as they all use proper judgement and some caution. I either walk, bike, or drive around campus on a daily basis, but I also watch out for other people. And watch out for one of my friends who rides his unicycle around on campus occasionally. Anyways, this campus of ours was designed for all forms of transportation and should be used that way along with a little common sense.

Turnout of 300 marks Africa Night

Tora Triolo

Guests sample a wide variety of dishes while being entertained by speakers and performers in Student Union Ballroom at last Friday's Africa Night. Despite low ticket sales early on, over 300 people showed up to partake in an evening of African traditions, foods, and clothing.

The custom and tradition inherent in African life was shared with a patchwork of people at a successful Africa Night presented last Saturday night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Over 300 people of all ages and various nationalities gathered to experience the active convention that is not easily eradicated from the African way of life.

The night began with satisfying the stomach as everyone stood in line to obtain a heaping plate of food displaying a mosaic of different tastes from several countries of Africa. The different dishes such as Matoke—Plantain, potatoes, and peanut butter—from Uganda and Chicken Masala from East African Coast surrendered many responses from inquisitive palates ranging from "very, very good" to a few questioning raises of the eyebrows. "Is this seat taken?" was the most popular phrase of the evening as clans searched for a place to sit at one of the many tables each decorated with African ornaments by Kenya with her husband Doug, UI Professor, on Sabbatical. Later in the evening, Danielle recited a poem she and her brother Joe wrote while in Kenya, titled 'Twas the Night Before Christmas in Kenya, presenting a comical idea of what Christmas in Kenya is like with the red dirt and mosquitoes.

The night's entertainment began with African drumming by Yemi Ogunrinola, a UI Post-Doctorate student from Nigeria with Chris Lapaglia on the Congos. Ogunrinola's original band consisted of 18 members while in the mid-west. "A drummer is just like a poet," said Yemi. The drummer plays to speak from the soul in joy or to chastise if necessary.

African rhythms set the ambiance of the night. The drumming featured a "talking drum" which is actually used in villages in Africa to communicate. "It's what I call a toll-free telephone," said Yemi before demonstrating the unique instrument.

MC's Simba Tirima, president of the African Student Association and Abayomi Adejokun shares stories and thoughts between events in the program. "What I really want to highlight is that sharing and giving culture is the way in which humans grow," said Adejokun.

Debuting their unrivaled jazzy technique was the Sherekea Band led by Sam Mathews on the drums with Randy Bearden on sax, Brandon Polk on trumpet, Dave "Skooter" Calhoun on guitar, Jeremy Birdsall on bass, and Vladimir Morakhovsky on piano. Sherekea, which means "celebration" in Swahili, tenderly played the African National Anthem "God Bless Africa" while preceding the Flag Parade; featuring the flags of Africa proudly waved by their bearers.

Sherekea continued entertaining as they joined the drummers in Kale, meaning OK in Ruganda giving an intensely turbulent performance just listening.

UI graduate student, Maria Laiser, performed a traditional Masai dance with tribal chants and music recorded in her own village while wearing the customary beaded Masai dress.

A pop dance presented by the Kwasa group from Washington State University got the crowd whistling as they performed their modern dance complete with pelvic thrust.

Modeling of African wear followed representing the many styles of Africa from casual to ceremonial wear. Bright colors and unique patterns represented the diversity that is sewn within the fabric of the African life.

African drumming continued as they played the Umba. "Anyone who can walk can dance to the Umba," said Ogunrinola as the crowd jumped up to spill the energy that African drumming builds. People of every age danced all over the ballroom, including the stage.

Koi and Simba Tirima followed with a striking singing performance of a Swahili Ballad. Tirima was pleased with the turnout and hopes the event helped to represent what African culture is all about. "Don't hesitate to ask us questions," said Tirima. "It's giving and sharing that makes life wonderful."

The event was sponsored by IFA and ASUI Productions with help from many students and community members including Pullman.

Tora Triolo

Traditional Dance was one of many cultural experiences enjoyed by those at Africa Night last Friday.

Jewish Community celebrates festivities at Koinonia House

Today the Jewish Community of the Palouse will hold Sabbath services at the Koinonia House on the WSU campus. Following the service, there will be a discussion with Rene Goldman of the University of British Columbia on the Jewish Resistance in France during World War II.

On Oct. 3, 7 pm, the Jewish Community of the Palouse will hold Yom Kippur services at the Unitarian Church, 420 East second in Moscow. All students are welcome to either event.

Tickets available for LCSC's production of The Marriage of Figaro

Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro will be performed by the Lewiston High School Auditorium Sept. 30 at 8 p.m.

The production is fully staged and costumed and will be performed in Italian with English subtitles projected above the stage.

Tickets for the performance, sponsored by the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts and History, cost $15 per person and are available through the center at 415 Main, Lewiston or by calling 799-2243.

Campin' out

Jared Smith
Chris LeDoux fans camp outside the Student Union last Friday night in order to be first in line for tickets to the Oct. 27 concert at UI's Kibbie-ASUI Activities Center. Perfect Stranger will also perform, with tickets costing $22 for the general public and $20 for UI students.

Islamic culture to be highlighted during month of October

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Islam is a world culture embedded in the hearts and religious lifestyle of its followers.

Islamic culture need not remain a mystery to us however, as The Muslim Students' Association, The Muslim Community of the Palouse, and the International Friendship Association present a month long series focusing on Islamic Art and Culture.

"We want people to see for themselves and dispel the stereotypes that exist about Islam," says Anjum Sadiq, chair of IWA and coordinator for some of the events. Sadiq explains that Islam is one of the fastest growing religions of today covering every corner of the world.

Muslim students have anticipated sharing their culture for some time. When Joanne Trail, head of the International Friendship Association, attended a Muslim Workshop in Dearborn, Mich. last spring she decided to make that sharing possible.

"It is a good opportunity for students to satisfy their curiosity in a non-threatening environment," says Trail of the events scheduled.

The focus begins with a special exhibit on display in the Student Union lounge beginning Oct. 1 and continuing through Oct. 20. The exhibit features clothing, calligraphy, art objects, and weaving on loan for only the second time ever from the Arab Cultural and Community Educational and Social Services Center in Dearborn, Mich., including dresses worth hundreds of dollars and other items from the community.

Trail made an appeal for and received her first grant from the US Information Agency through a Cooperative Grants program of the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs which will provide partial funding for the project.

On Oct. 8, "A Walk Through The Islamic World" will be presented in the Student Union Ballroom. The interactive event will feature arts and crafts, presentations of Persian carpets and Islamic architecture, and many other activities including various foods for a nominal fee. The event is free of charge and begins at 4 p.m. A moment of prayer will be held towards the end of the event.

Sadiq expects the affair to not only educate the guests but give them a sense of what the foundations of Islam are in an interactive way. "Our purpose is not to highlight the differences of Islam, but what we have in common," asserts Sadiq. The event intends to provide an opportunity to gain an understanding and appreciation for a culture which Trail notes, "has made important and original contributions to mathematics, astronomy, literature, medicine, chemistry, art, and architecture."

Sadiq hopes the event will portray the "encompassing affect" which is inherent in Islamic culture. For example, Sadiq explains the Haj. If finance and time allow, nearly 3 million followers make the pilgrimage to Mecca and gather at the Ka'bah, a worship sight creating an awesome display of just how deep the belief is embedded within its peoples. Other events will also portray this depth of belief.

On Oct. 10 anyone is welcome to take a visit to the beautiful and intriguing Mosque in Pullman, Wash.. Those interested in exploring the mystic heritage of Islam can meet in the Student Union parking lot at 4 p.m. and will return by 5:30 p.m.. Women should bring large scarves to cover the hair.

Two dramatic films will be presented at 7 p.m. in the Borah Theater. On Oct. 15, The Message starring Anthony Quinn will tell the story about the advent of Islam and early beginning of the Prophet. On Oct. 16, The Lion of The Desert with Irine Papas and Anthony Quinn will be presented.

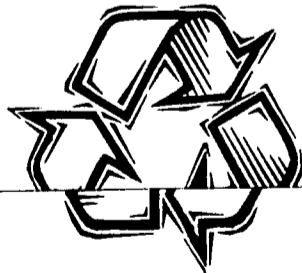

Ali Baker, president of the Muslim Students Association, Hossein Latifi of Iran, Tariq Khraishi of Palestine, Abdel Latif of Morocco, as well as community members Peri and Bill Kochman and Imannan and Ismat Sheikh are eager to share the rich customs and mystic ideas of Islam that are not always easily classified.

Undefeated Idaho State up next for UI

Vandals open up Big Sky Conference action in Pocatello Saturday, potent offenses expected to steal show

Damon Barkdull
Staff

After beating the heck out of the Sonoma State Cossacks and taking a week off, the University of Idaho pigskin team will try to shed some rust when they travel to Holt Arena in Pocatello to face the upstart Idaho State Bengals on Saturday.

Idaho coach Chris Tormey is well aware of the kind of foe the Vandals will play this weekend.

"They've been outstanding their first three games," Tormey said. "They'll definitely be gunned up for this game. This is the best team they've had in the past six or seven years."

Are we talking about the same team? Last year the Vandals clobbered ISU 70-21 in the Kibbie Dome. Sure, but it is also the same team that beat Montana and Boise State.

Holt Arena has never been more hostile. Consider the fact that the Bengals are riding a five-game winning streak extended from last year. ISU has also won four games in a row in Holt Arena and the Bengals are 3-0 this season, thumping on Cal Poly San Luis Obispo, California State Northridge and Southern Idaho.

Vandal fans can expect an offensive showdown considering that the two teams have combined to score 447 points in the last six meetings, an average of roughly 75 combined points per game. Actually, an offensive showdown may be held in check if both defenses live up to their top ten ratings.

Tormey will be looking to put a crack in ISU's defense, using the switch-a-roo quarterback system that successfully worked against Sonoma State. Idaho quarterbacks Brian Brennan and Eric Hisaw have nearly the same statistics on the year though Tormey plans on starting Brennan and giving Hisaw some playing time as well.

"Brian's (Brennan) having a really good practice. Eric's (Hisaw) getting better too," Tormey said. "I think going out against Sonoma and having some success has given them confidence."

If the passing game doesn't work out, Tormey can be thankful that UI runningback Joel Thomas is back from knee surgery. Thomas sat out last week and witnessed a stellar performance by his back-ups Lavoni Kidd and Marcelle Williams, who combined for 214 yards on 37 carries.

"Joel looks better everyday - he'll start," Tormey said. "Lavoni and Marcelle had great games against Sonoma. It's nice to know we have three backs we can count on."

Thomas's ISU counterpart, Alfredo Anderson, is an All-Big Sky Conference selection at running back and has rushed for 444 yards in ISU's first three games this season. As well as being a dangerous tailback, Anderson leads his Bengal teammates in receiving, with 10 catches for 121 yards.

"He's their guy. He's a threat anytime he gets his hands on the ball," Tormey said. "He can go all the way. He reminds me of Napoleon Kauffman, same number. He's the Napoleon Kauffman of the Big Sky."

Certainly Idaho's defense will have their hands full. Hopefully not full of air.

"We're in pretty good shape on defense," Tormey said of his Vandal defense, which is ranked fifth in the nation in total defense

"I like 8.5 points per game (referring to the average points scored this year against Idaho's defense). I think if we keep doing that we'll have the chance to win a lot of games. That's the bottom line, keep 'em out of the endzone."

Comparable to Idaho, the Bengals defense is ranked 11 in the nation in total defense and is coming off a defensive romp last weekend in a 48-14 win over Southern Utah. Against SUU, the Bengals turned two interceptions into touchdowns, blocked two punts and recorded five sacks.

So, it has yet to be seen how Idaho compares to talent at the Big Sky level. The first game of the season was played against Oregon State, a Pacific-10 Conference Division I-A school. After a bye week the Vandals faced Division II Sonoma State.

If history is any indication, the Vandals will win.

Idaho has won seven straight games in the series, including three consecutive victories in Holt Arena.

New marketing director sees big future for Vandal athletics

Michael Stetson
Staff

September in Moscow brought the renewal of several familiar traditions to Vandal sports as the football team steam-rolled Sonoma State and the volleyball team turned opponents into road kill at Memorial Gym, "The House of Death."

While the game on the field remains the same, a new attitude in Vandal sports, driven by the move to the Big West, emerged this fall. That shift in attitude brought a new Director of Marketing and Promotions for UI athletics to Moscow, Mike Hogan, 26.

Hogan, a former marketing director for Weber State's athletic department, serves as the focal point of the changing Vandal attitude off the field and the new drive to involve students, alumni, and community in Idaho athletics.

Bringing in a professional advertising agency to promote Vandal sports across the northwest, served as one of Hogan's initial acts, a first for the University of Idaho. Hogan says the change helps because the agency knows when to advertise, how to advertise, and through whom.

Hogan followed this action with a campaign to shift campus attitudes in stronger support of Vandal Athletics. Hogan and the athletic department now encourage athletes to be public, to get involved in campus activities and to interact with living groups.

"The students didn't know the student athletes," Hogan said, referring to a study done last year on student opinions toward athletics.

Hogan points to the standards set by Vandal volleyball coach Tom Hilbert in getting the campus involved.

"The volleyball team did an extraordinary job getting students and the community involved in events. Tom took it on himself. Other sports are trying to do that now, we're continuing that through the rest of the sports."

The increased public attitude of the athletes acts as only one facet for Hogan, who sees a need to get fans excited about athletics.

"We need to make games more events. Games should be social events, there should be entertainment before and during the game and at every time-out. We're in the entertainment business."

Creating an event led the athletic department to several new gimmicks to attract a crowd and keep them entertained. Giving away 15 pizzas to the most spirited section at games, half-time contests for free golf passes and dinners, cheerleaders throwing footballs and candy into the crowd, all serve as gimmicks to get students involved and excited.

Hogan certainly doesn't turn away help, as students realized when ASUI put on a $10,000 tailgate party for the home opener against Sonoma. The Student Alumni Relations Board (SARB) has helped student attendance each game by giving away a tuition waiver to some lucky student.

Hogan sees no problem with any of these actions. He sees the tuition waiver being an even bigger draw later in the season, as students become more aware of their chances to win.

"It's stuff I'd call goofy, but people like that stuff. I'm looking forward to basketball games, there's more stuff we can do on the court during time-outs."

Hogan looks at these gimmicks in terms of how they help the university on the road to the Big West, but the Big West means more to athletics than just a new conference. Hogan notes some of the benefits, such as

Border Battle set for Saturday in Pullman

Andrew Longeteig

Staff

It's a tale of two volleyball squads.

Realistically, one of them, Eastern Washington, isn't a powerhouse. The other, however, is ninth-ranked Washington State.

The two Washington schools are the Vandals' opponents this weekend. Tonight, Idaho faces EWU in Memorial Gym at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, UI will play undefeated (12-0) border rival WSU at 7 p.m. at Bohler Gym in Pullman. Last year, Idaho defeated the Cougars in four games in front of a record Memorial Gym crowd.

Idaho (13-2) is riding an eight-game winning streak after Tuesday's one hour 15-3, 15-8, 15-4 victory over the Gonzaga Bulldogs. Five-foot-11 sophomore outside hitter Jemena Yocum recorded a game-high 15 kills in the victory and junior setter Lynne Hyland had 31 assists.

The Vandals will try to extend their home court winning streak to 39 games—sixth-longest in NCAA history. Florida holds the record with 58 spanning from 1990-93.

Idaho v. EWU

The Eagles (3-10) were swept at home last weekend by Boise State in four games and Idaho State in five. EWU is led by 6-foot senior Kellie Glaus, who averages a team-high 2.9 kills per game. Also, 6-1 freshman Kim Exner from Vernon, B.C. stepped it up last weekend against ISU and BSU. Exner had 32 kills and a team-high nine blocks over last weekend.

EWU, though, will have to encounter the likes of Idaho's Tzvetelina Yanchulova. The senior from Sofia, Bulgaria is fourth in the nation in kills per game (5.98) and first in the Big Sky. She also leads the team with 163 digs.

Hyland, third in the country in assists per game in 1994, is averaging 14 per game.

"They (EWU) will make you work for anything you're going to get," Vandals coach Tom Hilbert said. "We have to play fairly mistake-free and we've got to try to control the tempo of the game. I think we play a little faster than they do."

UI's freshman tandem of Beth Craig and Jessica Moore have lent a helping hand in the Vandals' success. Craig is a highly-touted 6-1 recruit from Milpitas, Calif. who averages 3.5 kills per game and is fifth on the team in blocks. Moore, who redshirted last year, is fifth on the team in kills and second in blocks. The six-foot middle blocker hails from Belgrade, Mont.

Idaho v. WSU

Just like EWU must contain Yanchulova, Idaho must contain the Cougars' Sarah Silvernail. The junior outside hitter is 17th in the country in hitting percentage with a .399 mark.

Hyland

Yanchulova

"There's no question she's the most dynamic athlete we'll face," Hilbert said.

WSU is also third in the country in team kills, averaging 17.36 per game.

Last September, 1,550 fans saw 24th-ranked UI trounce 20th-ranked WSU.

"I've been pounding this into my team's head that this Eastern match is actually more important than the Washington State match," Hilbert said. "We need to win all of our Big Sky games at home for sure."

Cavaliers start summer action early, invite 18 free-agents, rookies to mini-camp

CLEVELAND (AP)—The Cleveland Cavaliers said Wednesday 18 players have been invited to a five-day rookie/free agent camp starting Friday at Gund Arena, including draft picks Bobby Sura and Donny Marshall.

The team's preseason camp, which will include returning veterans, will open Oct. 6 in Dayton. The Cavaliers will look to fill two huge holes, following the announcements Wednesday of the trade of point guard Mark Price to the Washington Bullets and center

Brad Daugherty's inability to play for the first half of the season due to ongoing back pain and stiffness.

Sura is Cleveland's first-round draft choice, is a 6-foot-5 guard from Florida State. Marshall, the second-round choice, is a 6-7 forward from Connecticut. As of Wednesday, neither had been signed to a contract.

Players with NBA experience invited are Isaac Austin, a 6-10 center who played with two seasons with Utah; Joe Courtney, a 6-9 forward who has two NBA seasons with Chicago, Golden State, Phoenix and Milwaukee; Tellis Frank, a 6-10 forward who has played five seasons with Golden State, Miami and Minnesota; Greg Grant, a 5-7 guard who has played five seasons with Phoenix, New York, Charlotte, Philadelphia; and Chris Whitney, a 6-foot guard who has played two seasons with San Antonio.

Rookie free agents expected are John Amaechi, 6-10 center/forward, Penn State; Herb Baker, 6-8 forward, Texas Southern;

Travis Banks, 6-6 forward, Wake Forest; Bruce Bowen, 6-7 forward, Cal State Fullerton, and Bryan Collins, 6-10 center, Southwest Louisiana.

Also Kent Culuko, 6-4 guard, James Madison; David Dean, 7-foot center, Mississippi; Emmett Hall, 6-7 forward, South Carolina; Keith Johnson, 6-3 guard, New Mexico State; Tom Kleinschmidt, 6-5 guard/forward, DePaul, and Scott Paddock, 6-10 center/forward, Notre Dame.

Baseball gurus rejoice, October is here

The 1995 baseball regular season has just about come to the end of its road.

We die-hards have made it through replacement players, two spring trainings, a shortened season and countless complaints, from owners about losing money because fewer fans are in the seats, and half-arsed fans whining, the game has lost its luster after the strike.

I have a little advice for all the complainers. Take a suggestion from the Eagles and GET OVER IT. Sit back in the recliner or lay out on the couch, grab the remote control, your favorite beverage and catch a case of pennant fever.

If you're one of those people who think baseball is a boring game because it moves too slow, "Frankly I don't give a damn." Accept this, you are just one of those people who doesn't understand a game interwoven with strategy and you have a simple mind. You probably don't even like the board game Risk.

Dan Eckles

But anyway, despite all the flaws involved with the offseason labor strife, the final weekend of action is here. Two division races are still undecided and both the American and National League wild card berths are up in the air. For the next month baseball really means something. I can go to class—or skip class for that matter—come home and watch playoff action.

Major League Baseball's ad campaign brags "Baseball Fever, Catch It." Oh I've caught it and will probably be sick through the end of the World Series. I wonder if Student Health would write my teachers a note? "Mr. Eckles is excused from classes and all related work through the end of the World Series. He has a severe case of baseball fever."

I am a baseball freak—OK, I flat love all sports—but that was like the cruelest thing the baseball gods could have done when they played virtually a whole season last summer and then nixed the postseason with the strike. Somebody was toying with me. It was worse than being on a huge caffeine fix, offering me a Mountain Dew and then drinking the last one, right in front of me. Add to the fact I had to work during Joe Carter's last inning heroics two years ago when the Blue Jays beat the Phillies and it's easy to understand why I'm kind of stoked for the month of October.

The proverbial frosting is on the cake, considering my team, the Los Angeles Dodgers, is right in the thick of the hunt and barring a three-day skid should win the N.L. West or the N.L. wild card. I will apologize to Dodgers' closer Todd Worrell right now. In a column last April I referred to the hard-throwing righthander as Todd "Saves aren't the only thing I blow" Worrell. The former Cardinal has become the first pitcher in team history to save 30 games. He has a stellar earned run average and made the N.L. all-star team in July. Hey, I love this guy. Nice work Todd.

With three of baseball's brightest young stars in Mike Piazza, Eric Karros and Raul Mondesi holding down the fort I have to like the shot of Tommy leading the boys to another ring. If he can do it with guys like John Shelby, Franklin Stubbs, Jeff Hamilton and Mickey Hatcher in 1988, then the triple threat listed above can certainly make it happen in 1995. Besides, LA won it all in 1981 and 1988. The seven-year plan means it's going to happen again this fall.

I'll go out on a limb now and make my bold predictions on how Baseball '95 will unfold.

Los Angeles will win the N.L. West. Did anybody out there actually think I'd go with the Rockies on this one? The Rockies have to finish up against San Francisco and the Giants seem to have a knack for playing the spoilers' role when they are out of the race. Colorado, however will hold off the Astros and capture the wild card.

The Seattle Mariners will be A.L. West champions. Who would have thunked it in April. Seattle management threatened to get rid of everyone from Ken Griffey Jr. to Randy Johnson, but M's fans can thank Mr. Nintendo for dishing out the bucks to put a winner on the field. Pinstripe fans can rejoice for the first time since 1981 as the Yankees cap a great second half of the season by snagging the A.L. wild card.

I like the Indians, but a gut feeling says choke so the Red Sox will represent the A.L. in the series. I won't make a N.L. champion prediction, because it's just not fair that the Braves and Reds will have such spectacular seasons cut short by those ever-tough Dodgers.

football games at Wyoming and San Diego State, along with Alabama-Birmingham, Toledo and other Big West schools. The volleyball team will face increased challenges.

"The Big West is the strongest in the nation for volleyball, with numerous national championships," Hogan said. "It will also give us a foothold in Northern California for recruiting some of the most talented athletes in the nation."

Hogan sees the campus as a huge focus, but also relies on the community and the northwest for support to drive Idaho in the Big West. The Vandals give back to the community through the Jr. Joe Club, a club for area youth to meet, play, and learn from Vandal stars about a variety of sports.

"We need to get more involved with kids. The Jr. Joe Club grew from 40 kids last year to 80 this year and we hope to double it again next year. We just had a mini camp on Sunday. Tuesday we sent four football players and three volleyball players to Lena Whitmore Elementary school."

Also, the public image of the Vandals this semester remains clean, as some other schools suffer.

"In the papers you see BSU players arrested, but we have no incidents. Our image is good, our athletes are doing well and being positive, we are getting the feeling people are happy," Hogan said.

Hogan backs that statement with grades saying, "our GPA is phenomenal, with 7 out of 10 with a 3.0 or higher and our athletic program has a 2.8 GPA overall. We have a higher rate of graduation than any other school in the region."

All of this effort, attitude and excitement focuses on a few very narrow goals. Hogan sees increasing attendance, selling out at all venues and increased corporate sponsorship as the main goals for the near future, with being competitive in the Big West a more long term vision.

As for Vandal athletics' role in the state and the region, Hogan sees the issue as Vandal pride.

"Athletes are the universities window to the world, we get a lot of media attention. When we're on TV or the radio, we're still the University of Idaho, that brings a lot of benefit to our campus. We provide entertainment for the people of the state and the Northwest."

Hogan also addressed the biggest burning issue since the debate over the Big West move surface, when will Idaho play Washington State in football. Hogan deferred to athletic director Pete Liske.

"We want it and they want it, but nothing has been set. I think it would be very good for both institutions," Liske said.

Until that day arrives, Hogan and the athletic department will continue to focus their efforts of making Vandal games an event, so "Get Into The Game."

Mitchell gets defensive with UI opponents

Idaho defensive end Barry Mitchell has excelled on the gridiron after playing only five years of competitive football. contributed photo

Mark Vanderwall
Staff

While living his teen-age years, the words Heineken and Autobahn probably meant more to Idaho's Barry Mitchell than the word football.

Mitchell, who's father was stationed in Mannheim, Germany through his sophomore year of high school, didn't play organized football until his senior season at Gateway High in Aurora, Colorado. After leading the state of Colorado in sacks with 19, Mitchell had the likes of Colorado State and Air Force looking at his talents before making the decision to attend Idaho.

After arriving in Moscow, Mitchell red-shirted his freshman season to enhance his talents. He received limited playing time as a red-shirt freshman before jumping into the starting line-up during his sophomore season last year. He was second to fellow defensive end Ryan Phillips on the team with eight and a half sacks and is filling the shoes of past Vandal Jeff Robinson rather nicely.

Mitchell, who is listed at 6'3" and a mere 229 pounds, may not fill the classic size of a defensive end, but his speed, power and work ethic are not factored into those figures.

"Size has no preference in the game of football, it's your ability to play the position that really counts. Speed and power make up for any lack of size you may have at your position," said Mitchell.

Playing in only his fifth year of competitive football, Mitchell is just coming into his own as far as his feel for the game goes and his work ethic off of the field is just as good as he was named to the Academic All-American team.

"A lot of people have played since they were little and probably got burnt out, where as I am just getting started at this game," said Mitchell.

Mitchell is really looking forward to playing in the Big West

I'd rather have 30,000 fans from the opposing team booing me, than to have 4,000 or 5,000 people sitting in their seats just to be there.

Conference come next season and views it as a big opportunity for the program as well as for himself.

"It allows players that didn't go to a Division I program for whatever reason, the opportunity to play at that level. In a way in it's almost a reward for the current and past players for all the time we put in and it's something to be proud of," said Mitchell.

Mitchell has found an increased level of play in front of any crowd, but the larger crowds have pushed that level up to the point of en fuego.

"I'd rather have 30,000 fans from the opposing team booing me, than to have 4,000 or 5,000 people sitting in their seats just to be there," said Mitchell.

The defense is becoming a family of sorts and Mitchell feels the defense is really starting to gel together. With the majority of the starters coming back for this season and the reserves being very experienced as well, the defense is quickly becoming the cornerstone of the Vandals.

"We've spent a lot of time together and it's really nice to be comfortable with the people around you," said Mitchell.

Plans for the future include getting a Political Science major, as well as finishing up his time with the ROTC here at Idaho.

"I'd like to stay in the Marines and work my way up the ladder, but if that doesn't work out, I'd like to get into the U.S. Marshall Program," Mitchell said.

With the opening of Big Sky play this weekend, Mitchell sees Idaho State as a key in the Big Sky race and adds they are not a team to be overlooked.

"They did something that we couldn't do in beating both Montana and Boise State last season," said Mitchell.

Number 89 will have his chin strap tight and his mouth piece in come game time and being prepared is just the way this man approaches life.

"I was able to come to school on scholarship and after school the ROTC program will hopefully secure me a job, so I have always had my life in order about the next big step I am going to take," Mitchell said.

Quarterback Dale Linafelter (with ball) leads the Crisp Beanies to another victory Thursday afternoon at Guy Wicks Field.

Strong second half earns Green extension

NEW YORK (AP)—Dallas Green, who took over the New York Mets in the midst of one of their worst seasons and managed them back to respectability on and off the field, signed a one-year contract extension Wednesday.

There was speculation Green, 61, was too old and old-fashioned to develop the Mets' prospects. But general manager Joe McIlvaine is confident Green can manage the Mets back to their success of the mid- to late-1980s.

"His handling of the kids was important in making this decision to keep him," said McIlvaine, who also announced the retention of the team's six coaches. "He lends stability and continuity.

A lot of these kids know him. If we brought in a different manager, that would delay what we as a team are trying to accomplish."

ND at OSU highlights weekend

Associated Press

In 1968, when Lou Holtz was an assistant coach at Ohio State, he sat in the press box at Ohio Stadium and watched the Buckeyes beat arch-rival Michigan 50-14.

"After our last touchdown, we scored on a 2-point conversion," Holtz recalled. "After the game, they asked coach (Woody) Hayes why he went for two and he said, 'Because they wouldn't let me go for three.'"

Holtz will return to that press box Saturday when No. 15 Notre Dame (3-1) visits No. 7 Ohio State (3-0). The Fighting Irish coach is still recovering from spinal surgery but as he did last week against Texas he will call plays from his seat above the field.

The game has special significance for Holtz because he's an Ohio native who played at Kent State and was on Hayes' staff when the Buckeyes won the 1968 national championship.

However, the main reason for the big buildup is that the teams haven't played in 59 years. Notre Dame won their only two meetings, in 1935 and 1936. In their 1935 "Game of the Century" at Columbus, the Irish trailed 13-0 in the fourth quarter before rallying to win on a last-minute touchdown pass by Bill Shakespeare.

No current Notre Dame player has such a memorable name (receiver Cikai Champion comes close), and Saturday's contest won't be such a memorable game.

Although the Irish have won three straight since losing their opener to Northwestern, they haven't played a team as talented and versatile as Ohio State.

Quarterback Bobby Hoying, tailback Eddie George and receiver Terry Glenn give the Buckeyes one of the best offensive trios in the country, and the defense is led by All-Big 10 ends Matt Finkes and Mike Vrabel.

Androgyny, merriment grace Mosow Social Club

Jeffrey Albertson
Diversions Editor

Nothing screams attitude more than a six-foot blonde bombshell with a penis.

Last Friday the Moscow Social Club was transformed into a ballroom filled with energy, attitude and androgyny while witnessing the return of Moscow's original Drag and Fetish show.

The event, the third of its kind this year, was masterminded and planned by Cathy Sprague whose original plan was to throw herself a birthday party. That event which was to be a small occasion saw 300 people attend. With that success Sprague now plans to host four shows a year.

Friday's turnout may not have been as large as shows in the past but what the evening lacked in attendance it certainly made up for in attitude.

Candy Lábra, also known in his alter ego as Tim Waterman, served as Master of Ceremonies hurling insults at the crowd throughout the evening—insults that were much applauded and approved of by the crowd.

Waterman, who appeared in a blue robe with long curly blonde locks soon shed his outer attire to the cat calls of the crowd revealing his costume of the night, gold lamé spandex with matching combat boots. Style apparently appears to be everything at a drag and fetish show.

Many of the participants who did go drag spent hours, even days, preparing their costumes—then spent hours readying makeup and hair to prepare for the show.

University of Idaho student Will Hendrick, complete with skin tight lycra pants and matching feather boa, said dressing in drag is not much different than acting in a play.

"It's like Shakespeare, who used male actors to portray women," Hendrick said.

The charade that queens put on once in costume goes hand in hand with Hendrick's statements, the opportunity seems to allow them to be something else for a night. The transformation of costume goes along with attitude, very blunt and in your face with no holds barred for sincerity. Not even ominous bulges can stop them—nothing a little duct tape and a g-string can't fix.

Hendrick also performed a dance and lip-sync to "The Most Beautiful Girl In the World," originally performed by the artist formerly known as Prince. Several other queens also performed including Jerry Schutz who danced around the crowd distributing condoms to nearly everyone in attendance.

Sprague also took the time to point out some of the myths about drag queens, one of which is that drag and homosexuality go hand in hand. Sprague dispelled the myth which turns out to be more tongue and cheek than anything.

"Most of the men here tonight in dresses are heterosexual," Sprague said adding that for a woman to appear masculine is perfectly all right. But to the general public, when a man puts on a dress it becomes a revolutionary act.

With major motion pictures like Priscilla Queen of the Desert and Too Wong Foo, Thanks For Everything, Julie Newmar as well as singing sensation Ru Paul creeping into mainstream audiences, Sprague said the public perception of drag queens is heightening.

"Priscilla was a positive film. In the past, Hollywood's depiction of drag queens has been that of victims or as psychotic killers," Sprague said.

Sprague also mentioned distributing condoms and talking about safe sex was done not because the gay community hasn't already heard it but because the heterosexual community hasn't.

The show kicked off at 10 p.m. with the performances and was followed by an evening of music and dancing.

Next up, Sprague plans an Oct. 27 fundraiser for the Inland Northwest Gay Peoples Alliance. That event will also be a drag and fetish show and is scheduled to take place at the Moscow Social Club.

Ballet star dazzles Beasley

Shannon Paterson
Staff

Russian ballet star Galina Mezentseva dazzled the Beasley Coliseum Wednesday night with her performances of contemporary dance and excerpts from "Swan Lake".

"The Russians have kept classical ballet alive," said Joann Muneta, executive director of Festival Dance and Performing Arts. "It is always exciting to have them come and share it with us."

Mezentseva performed classics such as "The Dying Swan" and the White Swan Adagio from "Swan Lake" with the St. Petersburg Ballet. She also danced to excerpts of "Don Quixote" and four contemporary ballet routines, "which makes it a rich program for all of us," said Muneta.

"It's an excellent introduction to what ballet is all about.

Generally, Russian ballet is very breathtaking," she said.

Mezentseva was invited to enter the prestigious Vaganova Ballet Academy when she was nine years old and graduated with the highest honors. From there she entered the Kirov Ballet and quickly became the Principal Ballerina.

She has won several awards such as The People's Artist of Russia, Honored Artist of Russia, Best Ballerina of St. Petersburg and the National State Prize.

She left Russia in 1990 to establish a relationship in Great Britain with the Scottish Ballet, but she continues to give international performances throughout Europe, Asia and the United States. She also dances for the Emperor of Japan and British Royal Family.

Mezentseva will also perform for elementary school students from Troy, Moscow, Kendrick, Potlatch and Pullman.

"It's great to get some contact outside of just the performance," said Muneta. "It has more depth to it...more meaning."

The FDPA is also sponsoring two October performances, including the touring production of "Will Roger's Follies" and

"Ballet Folclorico do Brazil". "Will Roger's Follies", the life story of Will Rogers, has won a Tony award and more awards for Best Musical than any other this decade. This performance is slated for Oct. 11, in the Beasley Coliseum.

"Ballet Folclorico do Brasil" is a "super-dynamic afro-Brazilian dance and music show" according to Muneta. It also includes some martial arts technique. Also planned for the Beasley Coliseum, it is planned for Oct. 27.

Dambuilders Ruby Red

It is a foolish feeling a person gets when a band jumps out, tearing into your arterial vein with such vigor as to make you gasp not in pain, but in pleasure. The Dambuilders are a pack of wolves on the hunt for stardom. With their Ruby Red album Dambuilders come through with a style that seems very familiar to the listener.

Dambuilders are almost punk. Yet, their vocals give away a seductive style that a good voice can deliver. It is as if someone sent these guys UPS to the Good Music Company. Their first song "Smooth Control" is quick and to the point. It gives the listener a mild taste of unique drum use. Dambuilders are a four piece: David Derby, bass and vocals; Kevin March, drums, percussion and vocals; Eric Masunaga, guitar and vocals; Joan Wasser, violin, vocals and piano.

The song "Rocket to the Moon" features a soliloquy instead of sung lyrics. Yet, during some of the song the rest of the band is singing. The music flings against the inner ear and just sits their hibernating, waiting for the listener to wake up and smell the fresh coffee of the Dambuilders. Dambuilders' lyrics are catchy. "Velocidad" goes as such, "you take the hit when you watch the deal close / are the candles lit when the cadillac rolls? / you take the taste just to see if it's bad / lock the door en velocidad / you play to lose."

A lot of the Dambuilders' music sounds like Sybil Vane. At times they also sound like Sonic Youth. Like Sonic Youth, Dambuilders share a common interest of doing different things with their music. What helps this band stand out is the fact that the entire band does vocals. Dambuilders also use a violin on some of their tracks, distinguishing them from other bands who are just the four piece standard rock group. Dambuilders are not a normal rock group.

The Dambuilders' Ruby Red album can be found at most music stores. Many of their songs will take you out of a low and fast-forward you into a high with the crackling of a guitar. If you like new music that makes you gasp with laughter, then go and check out the Dambuilders.

—Matt Baldwin

I found this album to be a bit shorter than it should have been, but despite the fact, do yourself a favor and take a trip on Air Miami. The album is called "Me Me Me" and can be found on 4 A.D. records. Enjoy your flight!

Air Miami Me, Me, Me

Imagine yourself walking down the path in the world of candyland. Everything is as sweet as can be and you are having the best time of your life.

Listening to the new Air Miami album put me into that world.

This three piece band featuring Mark Robinson and Briget Cross formerly of the band Unrest, and newcomer Gabriel Stout bring you 13 pop-rock songs that are so catchy you will automatically get at least one stuck in your head and sing it around campus all day.

Listening to this album I found that Robinson and Cross are trying to get away from the sound that Unrest was so famous for and are instead exploring new styles.

The album starts off with the track "I hate milk" which is one of the harder songs on the album that is accompanied by some very strange lyrics. The next track "World Cup Fever" sounds like something that would be played at a disco club if it was longer, reason being that the dancy drum and guitar rhythms are backed up by a synthesizer.

Getting past these two tracks, the album continues with pretty pop ballads such as the song "Seabird" in which Robinson and Cross harmonize together as well as Simon and Garfunkel ever could.

Some of the softer tracks reminded me of what the band Versus have produced on their albums lately. For you early Unrest fans the song "You Sweet Little Heartbreaker" is a fast paced punk rock song to get your blood moving.

As the album continues into more drifty pop rock tunes, it finally finishes with a beautiful acoustical guitar number to put you right to sleep.

LC's Brew Review: European brews

Erik Marone
 Staff

A good beer is a joy unto itself. A good beer with an interesting story behind it is even more fun, especially when you know the story. Today, we'll be sampling four European brews with stories to tell as well as offering fine brewing examples.

The family that owned the British Theakston brewery lost financial control of the operation in the last decade. Despite these financial problems the tiny brewery still produces a number of agreeable brews. The most widely known of these being its Old Peculiar ale. This truly is a peculiar beer, of dark color, medium body and a unique soft character. 'Cottony' is the best adjective I can think of to describe the way this beer slides down the throat. There is no heavy aftertaste, but the physical sensation of the beer hangs around for a while, an 'after-swallow' if you will. It has a fruity aroma, but no distinct flavors to accompany it.

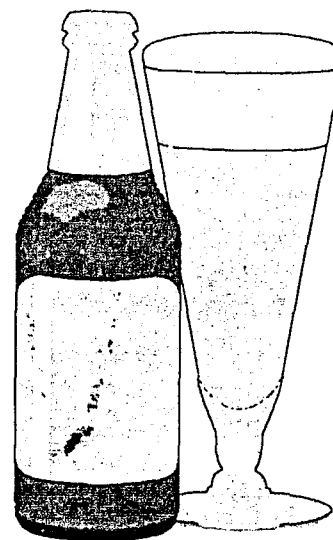

Scotland's Traquair House Ale is a beer with quite a history. The beer is named for the manor house/castle in which it was originally brewed over two centuries ago. Bonnie Prince Charles took refuge in the house in 1745. The brewery shut down at some point after this until 1965 when the lord of the manor put it back into operation and began selling it commercially. Upon his death in 1990, his daughter took over the brewery operations and expanded the brewhouse, which uses uncoated wooden fermentation casks, which give the Traquair brew an oaky, earthy character which nicely compliments the dark malts used in the brew, giving it a nutty flavor. The beer has a pleasant tang to it and dry aftertaste that lingers mostly in the back of the throat.

Belgium is well known for its world-class ales, and the Liefmans Goudenband is no exception. This ale is matured for nine months then centrifuged, primed, re-yeasted then bottled and aged for another three months. The beer matures for a year before leaving the brewery and will continue to develop in the bottle for months, maybe years if stored at cellar temperatures. The beer is a dark brown ale, but particularly dry for such a beer. It has a wine-like tartness, almost a fruitiness that teases the palate. It has a clean, almost earthy aroma that is not at all hoppy. This was a very unique and pleasant beer to drink, certainly one to look forward to.

One of the more interesting stories is that of Switzerland's Samischlaus Bier. Literally translated, it means "Santa Claus Beer." It is brewed once a year at Zurich's Hurlimann brewery on Dec. 6, the day the Swiss celebrate Saint Nicholas. It is then matured for 11 months before it is bottled and released on the following Dec. 6. Although this is a relatively new label, it is quickly gaining recognition world-wide. It has a deep reddish-brown color and malty character that is almost brandy-like, partly due to the alcohol content of this beer, which is the highest—nearly 14 percent—alcohol content per volume of any regularly produced beer in the world. This is a very enjoyable brew, and I offer Terry at the Wine Company of Moscow my heartiest thanks for letting me sample this beer from his private reserves.

The first three beers are available locally at the Wine Company, but if you want the Samischlaus, you'll have to look out of state, as Idaho's alcohol import laws are all but archaic. Any of these beers will provide you with a tasty example of Europe's diversity in brewing. Until next week, may the beer lighten your heart and enlighten your soul. Cheers!

Cat Stevens releases first album in 18 years

LONDON (AP)—Here comes my baby? Walk the other way, implores Yusuf Islam, formerly Cat Stevens, and heed my voice praising Mohammed and reproaching Salman Rushdie. The English singer-songwriting star of the 1970s, signing copies recently of his first album in 18 years, said his devotion to Islam meant the love songs he once crooned were impure. "The songs that are simply love songs, I wouldn't recommend people listen to", he said. "In the context of Islam, love should be connected to marriage." That counted out hits that have become standards like "Here Comes My Baby" and "The First Cut is the Deepest." He described as "still halal"—or kosher—songs such as "Peace Train," "On the Road" and "Morning Has Broken." "On those songs the words are unknowingly reaching for something higher than this world," he said, while signing records for hundreds of fans jammed into the record department of a central London store. Fans longing for the lilting Stevens melodies of yore will be disappointed. The new album—two disks selling for the price of one at 13.99 pounds (dfls 22.30)—is 80 percent talk. Stevens' career as a pop singer ended in 1977, when he embraced the Muslim faith. His beliefs, which bar mixing voices with instruments, severely limited what he could do, and there were more temporal considerations. "It was not necessarily the music or the singing, but everything else that was corrupt: the drugs, sex, conceit, the unhealthy competition," Islam said, wearing an Iranian-style collarless shirt, a full beard and a large white skullcap. He was drawn to God when a sudden wave washed him ashore while he was swimming off Malibu in 1976. Shortly afterwards, his brother David returned from Jerusalem with an English translation of the Koran, the Muslim holy book. A year later he converted and changed his name. In 1979 Islam married; in 1981, he formally renounced his career as a pop singer. But he acknowledges now "something was missing. I came back into the studio." In his new album, Islam has taken on the tradition of the "qussa," the wandering storyteller who recounts the life of the prophet Mohammed. Three years in the making, the album, out on the singer's own Mountain of Light label, is called "The Life of the Last Prophet." Islam said it was partly prompted by the controversy surrounding novelist Salman Rushdie's book, The Satanic Verses. The novel, regarded by many Muslims as apostasy, prompted a 1989 death sentence from the late Ayatollah Khomeini of Iran, which still keeps the writer in hiding. "This issue has been represented as one of 'Freedom of Speech vs. Censorship and Death-threats,' whereas in truth it is one of 'Decency vs. Obscenity,'" Islam said.

There are three musical numbers. One of them is a song featuring Stevens' voice, "Talaa al-Badru Alayna," or "The White Moon has Arisen Over Us," an ancient hymn. The most enjoyable thing about returning to the studio, he said, was the advanced technology. "I used to hate the hiss," he said. "With digitalization, you can duplicate as much as you want and there's no hiss." Islam said he would not seek an outright ban on his earlier love songs. "The records are still spinning, if you want to listen to them." Plenty did, judging from the long lines.

Rembrandts fail to wow audience

Matt Baldwin
Staff

The Rembrandts with special guests Blessid Union of Souls played at Beasley Coliseum in Pullman on Friday, September 22.

A majority of the crowd at the show were high school students and children with their parents all among a smattering of college students. As opposed to Beasley Coliseum's Candlebox show last year The Rembrandts' concert lacked in everything.

Let's not compare it with last year's show though. The Rembrandts show did not make the audience go "wow" in their with stage presence. The stories the musicians told also bored the crowd. Yet, when The Rembrandts tried to get the audience to clap they obliged with a droll round of applause.

The first band to play in the evening was Blessid Union of Souls. Their stage presence was a let down. Blessid Union of Souls did show enthusiasm on stage, however.

Some of the off-hand jokes and inside jokes the band told amused the audience. When Blessid Union of Souls left the stage the show was pretty much over. After Blessid Union of Souls left the stage The Rembrandts came on. Their show featured their 1990 hit "That's Just The Way It Is Baby." During the song, The Rembrandts were able to get a minority of the audience to join in with the singing.

A large majority of The Rembrandts' songs sound the same.

Without a stage presence The Rembrandts failed to give a good show. There was no originality in their crowd interaction.

To describe the music in full would be easy plain ol' rock and roll. There was nothing special about the music which the Rembrandts played at the show. Through the entire show the crowd sat placid in their seats. Excitement was a key factor which was lacking during the length of the show.

Around 800 tickets were sold for the show out of a possible 1,100 tickets.

The Rembrandts and Blessid Union of Souls have CDs out. If you went to the concert and somehow enjoyed it then go out and buy their discs.

Kingpins to perform at first annual Harvest Fest

Jeremy Chase
Staff

Eat, drink, and be merry at the Moscow Arts Commissions' first annual Harvest Fest, to be held Saturday 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. at the Latah County Fairgrounds.

Among the events available to those interested are live music, a barbeque chicken dinner, micro-breweries from Treaty Grounds, and dancing.

Mary Blyth, director of the Moscow Arts Commission, said the purpose of Harvest Fest is to fill a void in community activities. "It's a welcome back from summer and a great time for the community," she said. "There seems to be a lack of things going on now, and being that we're an agricultural community, it fits."

To begin Harvest Fest at the fairgrounds, Blyth said regional folk musician Dan Maher will take the stage at 5 p.m.. Just back from a European tour and recording a new album, Blyth said Maher will be playing both new material along with his well-known standards.

At the same time, Blyth also said a barbeque chicken dinner will be served. For a $6 charge for adults and a $3 charge for children under 12, the menu includes chicken, potato salad, baked beans, and fresh rolls. Afterwards, Blyth said The Beanery will be providing homemade desserts. To wash down the meal, a variety of beverages will be available, including beer, wine, cider, and Treaty Grounds micro-brews.

Besides covering dinner, the $6 charge also covers the next portion of the evening, which is dancing. From 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., an all ages dance will be held to round out Harvest Fest.

Providing the music for the dance will be The Kingpins, a rock n' roll and blues band. Blyth said the group plays tunes ranging from the 50s to contemporary music. "They're Moscow's greatest rock n' roll and blues band around," she said. "It's not just old music, and they're a very professional, tight band."

Blyth said the chance to dance at Harvest Fest is a good opportunity for people of all ages to have a good time. "There aren't a lot of places you can go and dance in Moscow," she said. "It will just be good and fun all around." Those that just want to attend the dance and dessert will only have to pay a $2 charge.

Though the idea for Harvest Fest came from a brainstorming session, Blyth hopes it won't be a one time only celebration for the community. "We're hoping that this is the first of many," she said. "We can see it growing into an annual event."

Even though directed at the community, Blyth said that University of Idaho student body shouldn't feel ignored. "We want to include college students," she said. "It's going to be a party."

Any questions about the upcoming Harvest Fest can call Mary Blyth at the Moscow Arts Commission, 883-7036.

Jeremy Chase
Staff

Moscow Vision 2020 photo entries are on display at The Beanery until Oct. 5. The photos capture an image of how Moscow residents want to see their community grow in the future.

More than 200 people voted on their favorite first, second, and third place photo and caption entries, and the winners were selected by public vote at the Farmer's Market Sept. 9.

Susan Palmer, a coordinator for Moscow Vision 2020, said that the purpose behind the group is to give people in the community a say when it comes to planning and developing. "It's common for cities to hire professionals for planning and developing," she said. "Moscow Vision 2020 endorses a community based planning approach."

In its second year, Palmer said the group has successfully worked to identify important goals and values for the community, and has taken active participation in recent Moscow projects.

Taking this idea further, Palmer said that the group decided to start contests and give out prizes for citizens of Moscow to express their feelings about future city planning. "It started as an essay and photo contest," she said. "We invited public participation and let them be creative."

As the contest evolved, Palmer said the current form is the photo competition. "This was a way to have fun and let people be as creative as they wanted to be," she said. "The visual preferences they have for Moscow and the communities outside of Moscow are their focus."

The winning entry in this year's competition was "Sense of Place," by Suvia Judd. Her images showed landscapes surrounding Moscow and included a poem. Her first place prize was free Internet time given by First Step Research. Other winners in the contest received gifts donated by local businesses or individuals.

Palmer said this year's photos seemed to have some common threads among them. "There seems to be two themes: images of open space or images of the community," she said. Palmer said Judd's "Sense of Place," was focused more on the idea of open space.

For those that can't make it to The Beanery to see the winning photos, another option is to use your computer and browse the web. Palmer said using the web to display the photos is for people to view them in another form. "It's limited to those who are technologically savvy, but it's great to see a whole bunch of people's visions from your home," she said. "It's pretty handy."

Palmer said that bringing the photos on-line was due to the help of First Step Research. "They were willing to make the link available to the public," she said.

The web address for the photos is <http://www.moscow.com/Photos/>, and any web-browser (Netscape, Mosaic, etc.) should be able to access the link and load the images.

Hackers

"Hackers" is a beguiling movie for both the computer user and the non-computer user. It features computer graphics, high-tech gear and a look that seems to fit in with the MTV nation.

The movie begins by showing us an arrest of a computer hacker who is only 11 years old. He was arrested for writing a computer virus that crashed 1,507 computers on the Internet. After the trial the movie jumps to present day in New York city.

"Hackers" is a movie about a group of computer hackers based out of New York city. A person by the name of The Plague works for a major corporation and has planted a virus with company computers and is asking for $25 million to deactivate it. One of the young hackers accidentally finds a file which can ruin The Plague's plans. The Plague finds out about the break-in and decides to pin the entire virus on the computer hackers who broke in.

There are plenty of computer graphics in the movie depicting cyberspace in a glamorous way. "Hackers" takes the viewer on a tour of the world of the hacker; skewed of course by Hollywood. many of the techniques used within the movie do not work. Yet, the ideas those techniques suggest do work.

The movie features the computer hackers traversing the labyrinth of New York city on roller blades and skateboards.

Although the acting in the movie is not superb it also isn't as bad as it could have been.

Many of the scenes in the movie feature a mixture between video, computer graphics, live footage and a hyped up computer terminal. One such scene is near the beginning of the movie when one hacker broke into a television station and was trying to air a show.

"Hackers" is a "Hollywoodized" version of the computer underground. The entertainment value of the film for the non-computer user is top-notch. It is a movie that can be enjoyed by all audiences.

Before the movie ever hit the theatres, United Artists, the makers of the film, promoted the film across the Internet's World Wide Web. Real computer hackers on the Internet vandalized the company's homepage.

14th annual Banned Book Week celebrates freedom of speech

Justin Cason
Staff

Freedom of speech and public vigilance were alive and well at Moscow's Friendship Square last Saturday.

Five Moscow citizens read from books that have either been banned or challenged in schools and libraries nationwide. The event was held in conjunction with the 14th annual Banned Books Week, Sept. 23-30.

Randy Frisch, president of the Moscow Chamber of Commerce and Daily News publisher, began by reading from Where the Red Fern Grows.

Jack Hill, superintendent of the Moscow School District, also took part in the reading. Hill selected several poems from Shel Silverstein's Where the Sidewalk Ends, a book banned from certain schools because it promotes "disgusting ideas" and "lacks respect for authority."

"We need to have the freedom to think and learn in this country," Hill said. "You don't have to read the book. However, you ought to have that choice."

State Senator Gary Schroeder continued with J.D. Salinger's The Catcher in the Rye, one of the most controversial novels of the last three decades. Sen. Schroeder read a section that deals with lead character Holden Caulfield's love for his sister and indifference towards traditional college life.

Moscow School Board member Karen Falke read from Little House on the Prairie, a novel banned or challenged because of its allegedly questionable portrayal of Native Americans.

Moscow City Council member Linda Pall, the fifth and final, read first from Slugs, then from Nadine Gordimer's July's People.

"July's People is extremely powerful. It shows vividly the black/white tensions in South Africa," stated Pall. "It also shows how stereotypes imprison us."

Pall's reasons for taking part in the event are strikingly similar to Hill's, as well as to the rest of the readers' motives.

"I'm a well-known supporter of the First Amendment," she said. "I also think that it's important for kids to read widely and have exposure to many ideas. Then they can talk to their parents and teachers and begin to assess for themselves."

Although not all the challenged books were read aloud, many other somewhat controversial works were on display. Alice in Wonderland was in trouble because it put humans and animals on the same intellectual level.

Huckleberry Finn was deemed "trash suitable for slums," while The Bible was actually burned by the German papacy in 1624. Even Where's Waldo was ostracized for a picture of a half-naked lady.

The event was organized by freelance writer Bill London and University of Idaho librarian Barbara Greever.

"We organized this reading to express our opinions and to choose what we want to read," Greever said. "Freedoms require continuing vigilance to keep them vital."

London, who represents the American Society of Journalists and Authors, summed up the purpose of the event.

Students' work on display at LCSC

Justin Cason

All summer long, young students from the Moscow and Lewiston area drew, sculpted, photographed and papercasted their way to a better understanding of art. Starting Oct. 5, all their hard work will pay off.

The Lewis-Clark Center for Arts and History will be featuring selected works of the students' art in a gallery exhibit starting Oct. 5 and running through Oct. 14.

Students from four years old to teenagers participated in the summer-long classes, experimenting with everything from beadwork to paper mache to candlemaking.

"The classes gave these students a chance to learn fine arts concepts," said Leslie Esselburn, director of the Center of Arts and History.

Esselburn also stressed the importance of the classes in their ability to pick up where art in the public schools leaves off.

"Art classes in the schools are not ongoing instruction," she stated. "At the end of our session, the kids leave with a finished product."

Instructing the more than 150 students throughout the summer were nine professional artists from the Lewiston and Moscow region. Linda Schroeder Golding, an art teacher for 20 years, headed the program, which was appropriately named "Summer Arts."

The classes also provided an opportunity to excel for some students who may be weaker in reading or mathematics areas, but have an abundance of artistic talent.

"Our program is wonderful for those who learn things visually," Esselburn said. "Some students pick up art at the drop of a hat. It's a really exciting environment."

The gallery exhibit will be held at the Center for Arts and History in Lewiston. An opening night reception will be held Oct. 5 from 5:30-7:30 p.m. and costs $1.

"Art After School," a program which features such classes as drawing, mixed media, clay and pottery, is currently being offered by the Center for Arts and History. Adults may also attend these sessions.

For additional information about the gallery exhibit, call the Center at 799-2243.

Drive-ins provide nostalgia trip

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)—The bright orange sun pierced a hazy sky as it started setting over the Sunrise Drive-in. Down the dusty asphalt driveway, flanked by a strip shopping center and a mortuary, a car zipped through the trees lining the narrow roadway.

The driver, Fred Gabriel, was a few minutes late when he parked in front of a battered chain-link fence.

"I've got to open up," he said in a gravelly voice.

After unlocking the gate, he jumped into his sedan and sped off to open the snack bar and thread the featured film, Pocahontas.

It was two bucks a car on this recent night at Sunrise. At half past 7, the first cars started streaming into the aging 12-acre drive-in, searching for a working speaker and a prime parking spot to view the 75-foot tall, by 150-foot wide screen.

"My cashier's life. I've got to collect from these people," Gabriel said. He grabbed a cash box and hopped into his car, again.

"It's a once-man operation. I do everything," he said. "I just plug along. I'm not trying to be a survivor or a hero. I just run the business and entertain people."

But after more than three decades, Gabriel can indeed be called a survivor as the proprietor of the Sunrise Drive-in, one of the last three outdoor movie venues in the Sacramento region.

At the height of their popularity in 1958, 4,063 drive-ins dotted the national landscape, but by 1994 the number had plunged to 859, according to the National Association of Theater Owners, a North Hollywood-based trade group. In the Sacramento area, about a dozen drive-ins wooed moviegoers with everything from gladiator flicks to Academy Award winners.

"We can hold over 1,150 cars. We used to pack them in," Gabriel said.

"We used to open 365 days a year," he said. "Now we're down to weekends during the winter. The declining crowds is the only change."

More and more, drive-ins are catering to families, offering special prices and bargain nights. Most of today's customers are families—a big difference from years past when 60 to 70 percent of the visitors were teen-agers and parties were the rule.

The Sunrise, for example, charges $2 a person and $4 for a family.

"We get larger families that visit the drive-ins. It's more of a family custom for a lot of people," said Mike Plymnesser, executive vice president of San Francisco-based Century Theatres Inc., one of the largest drive-in theater operators in the country with 20 locations and more than 100 screens.

"We have a real love for drive-ins. If it wasn't profitable, we wouldn't be in it. It's still a good business for us," Plymnesser said.

For the most part, drive-ins have remained relatively unchanged with the only innovations being the removal of speakers and transmitting the sound to auto FM stereos.

"I don't think anybody expects them to go away," said Jim Kozak, a spokesman for the National Association of Theatre Owners. "The popularity of the drive-in really hasn't decreased. Most drive-ins were doing very well when they closed."

The drive-in wave came after World War II when owners built outdoor theaters far outside the cities where land was cheap. But as growth moved toward the suburbs, land values soared and turned the drive-in property into development gold mines in the go-go years of the 1980s.

"You were in the country in those days. There were cow pastures," said Gabriel.

Today, the cows are gone, replaced by shopping centers and subdivisions.

Despite the smaller crowds, Gabriel said business pays the bills and wages of the 10 part-time employees—down from the 20 to 30 during the heyday. With a lease for another two decades, he expects to keep the aging drive-in open.

Bob and Kathleen Hewes of Sacramento snacked on tortilla chips and munched on sandwiches while sitting on their lawn chairs at the Sunrise. They spread blankets for their baby and two daughters.

"It's a blast. You can barbecue. It's fun—just like the olden days," Hewes said. "There's a certain kind of nostalgia. I used to go every week."

Judy Dabai, who has worked part-time at the Sunrise since 1983, has seen all kinds of things at the drive-in.

"It's an interesting place to be," she said.

One of the most unusual sights, she said, came a few years ago when a man filled the bed of his pickup with water, created a spa on wheels complete with inflatable swim rings and rubber duckies.

With fewer drive-ins around, movie buffs are traveling from as far as the Bay Area to catch the experience at the Sunrise.

Earlier this summer, a former Sacramento man who now lives in Alaska made a special trip to the Sunrise to introduce his wife and children to the drive-in experience.

"A lot of them reminisce," Dabai said. "It's like going back to a high school reunion. This was like their hangout."
