Rain delays Paint the Palouse projects

Lisa Lannigan
Staff

Armed with paint brushes, members of University of Idaho residence halls gathered Sunday to Paint the Palouse, one day later than expected.

The event scheduled for Saturday had to be postponed until Sunday due to rain.

"This has been a residence hall event for seven years," said Molly Widdicombe. This year Widdicombe is overseeing a group of freshmen from the residence halls who are coordinating the event themselves.

"It's a way to give something back to the community," Widdicombe said.

Paint the Palouse offers a chance for college students to do community service, and for some local residents to have their houses painted. Last year over 100 students volunteered for the event.

Residents this year painted two private houses of elderly, low income people, as well as the YWCA thrift store and the Alliance House group home.

"That's twice as many as we've ever done," Widdicombe said.

Not just anyone can have their house painted for free. Those who are financially, physically or mentally unable to paint their own houses can apply through the Community Action Agency.

Along with Widdicombe, several resident assistants helped coordinate the freshmen in getting the project together. Jen Mudge, Gwen Hansen and Dave McKee all helped with supplying paint, gathering donations and putting out the publicity.

Those who came out to paint received a free t-shirt and food. Area businesses donated prizes for drawings throughout the day. Widdicombe said about 39 gallons of paint had been donated for the event.

For the past couple years, Paint the Palouse has helped residents start up GDI week. "It helps raise hall spirit by getting people to do things together," Widdicombe said.

Along with the painting, GDI week began Sunday with opening ceremonies and air bands in the Student Union Ballroom. Residents will celebrate all week with events including a keg run, water volleyball and hall feud.

Even with the rain delay, many residents were still willing to go out and paint. Libby Hill was one of those ready to brave the weather.

"I thought it would be a good way to repay the community for putting up with the college students," Hill said.

Circle K teams with United Way for fun run

Andrew White
Staff

University of Idaho service group Circle K has teamed up with United Way this fall. Circle K is a relatively new group to campus dedicated to helping students and the community.

Circle K is affiliated with the Kiwanis organization. Kiwanis clubs across the country and around the world are organizations of business executives and leaders dedicated to helping their respective communities.

"It gives a positive aspect for students who are trying to do something for their community rather than those students who are just partying or drinking all the time," said Zahrah Sheikh. "Circle K helps in various ways, whether it be with United Way or the Kiwanis pancake feed."

This semester, members of Circle K hope to raise awareness and funds for the United Way by holding a fun run competition. "As many students, faculty, and staff who wish to participate need to appear at the clock tower at the Administration Building at 11:45 a.m. on Halloween Day in full Halloween costume," said Tanya Atwood Hoover, adviser of Circle K.

"The students will have to go to 10 different spots on campus and get a voucher card punched 10 times before the clock strikes 12:30 p.m., the first person back will be the winner," she said.

The first prize for the first person back from the fun run will receive a $100 gift certificate from the bookstore. The second prize will be a $50 gift certificate to the Outdoor Rental Center. A prize for the best costume will also be awarded.

Circle K is looking for any interested members who are students of UI. Dr. George Simmons, vice provost of Academic Affairs said, "The local Kiwanis clubs will sponsor Circle K student leaders and others to attend regional and national meetings where members can meet with student leaders from around the Northwest and across the country to get a feeling for what is happening on other campuses."

Simmons added, "Circle K can provide training for leadership, training to be able to be a leader and affect leadership among the students. You certainly gain fellowship among your own students. It's nice to have a forum and meet with other students from across the entire campus."

Circle K is an organization that gives valuable leadership training skills to students at the University. "Through the Kiwanis organization students will find community leaders," said Simmons.

President of Circle K, Jim Russo said, "We're working with United Way right now and we hope to get as many students as possible interested."

Any prospective Circle K members need to call 885-8187, or the ASUI Senate offices.

Women, minorities gaining status, equality in U.S. military

Janet Birdsall

Women and minorities are making strides in the armed forces, said panelists at a symposium in Borah Theater Tuesday.

Discrimination against minorities seems to be lessening, said Capt. James MacArthur, a U.S. Marines Guard Officer from the Naval Submarine Base in Bangor, Wash. "The Marine Corps is making progress. We are moving in the right direction," said MacArthur an African-American.

On the other hand, the military is legally allowed to discriminate, said Capt. Beth Huber, an Army officer at the University of Idaho. Women are not allowed in combat positions. Homosexuals risk losing their jobs if they are discovered, she said. Most discrimination occurs on an individual basis, rather than as a general occurrence in the whole organization, MacArthur said. The other panelists agreed on this point.

"I highly believe that I was not sent to the Gulf War because I was a female, not based on my merit," Huber said. The decision was made by an individual who later recog-

Boise State president sees big Canyon County presence

BOISE—Charles Ruch, president of Boise State University, says he ran into a woman at the last commencement who took all her classes off-campus.

"The first time she set foot on campus was when she received her diploma," he said.

That's the university he sees in the future—one which will use television, computers and humans to put higher educational opportunities in every community in southwestern Idaho, without the need for students to come to Boise.

"My sense is that by the turn of the century you will see a registration pattern where you may take a course on this campus, two courses in Nampa and a fourth course by television. Or in the next semester, you may come into the campus for two and take two by computer."

"I think that's the direction higher education is going—a multiple delivery system," he said.

Ruch was interviewed Thursday for the weekend "Viewpoint" program on KTVB.

He said much of Boise State's emphasis will be in Canyon County. The last Legislature approved $5 million to upgrade and expand existing facilities and to plan and buy land for a branch campus.

"In the next few years, by the next century, we think it could be easily 2,000 students and even more," Ruch said.

Boise State is looking at Nampa and Caldwell locations, and Ruch says the school hopes to decide where it will put the branch campus this semester.

"Its curriculum would be very consumer-driven in terms of the needs of that part of the valley," he said. Boise State is looking for a location that's central to where the population is growing and near existing or planned highways.

The school already has widespread facilities in the valley, Ruch said. It offers classes at six different locations around Boise.

Students always will have to come to a central location for such things as labs, libraries and residential dormitories because it would be very expensive to duplicate them elsewhere, he said.

"We're working very hard to develop a network where we can deliver throughout our service area."

Committee begins hunt for UI president

MOSCOW—Amid feelings of uncertainty about the University of Idaho's future role in education, its presidential search committee penciled in qualities they look for in a new leader.

"When I was first asked to serve on this committee, the question came to mind whether we are looking for a leader, a caretaker or a funeral director for UI," Financial Vice President Jerry Wallace said Monday.

The committee discussed search details, including a timeline and guidelines to find a successor for Elisabeth Zinser, who left this year for Kentucky.

They confirmed the school needs a communicator and a fundraiser, preferably with an educational background. But the panel began its process after a consultant for the state Board of Education last week recommended that Boise State University should have its own engineering school instead of cooperating in UI's Boise program.

Such a shift could severely alter operations at the Moscow school.

"There has been a time when the obligation to the internal constituencies was a great deal more than to the external," said board member Roy Mosman of Moscow, co-chairman the search along with former U.S. Sen. James McClure. "But most of us are convinced now that it's at least 50-50, and the external demands may actually be more."

"I would kind of like to lay the cards on the table with these candidates and let them know what we are going through right now," said Kurt Olsson, dean of academic affairs. "We are at a crossroads. We could maybe give them some prompts as to what the crossroads might be and then ask them 'How would you respond to this?'"

The committee's debate also touched on how much academic experience candidates should have.

"Personally, I don't feel comfortable with the comparisons we hear very often nowadays between corporations and universities," said library professor Mary Bolin, who reminded the panel a university is a place of learning.

The deadline for nominations for the job is Oct. 13. The search committee will meet again Nov. 27.

AMA campaigns to get people to sign health-care documents

CHICAGO—After a car accident in 1990, David Bojanowski was left in what doctors called a persistent vegetative state. His mother, Nicci, called it an "awful nightmare."

The 27-year-old man had failed to plan for his death, leaving his mother with a yearlong battle to do what she thought was best: take her son off life support and finally allow him to die.

The American Medical Association started a campaign Sunday aimed at sparing others some of her anguish. It urged Americans to sign "advance directives," a kind of combination living will and health-care power of attorney.

"By not having one you are literally saying, 'I want somebody else to do it,'" Bojanowski said. "If you want control over your own life, then you must take control over your own death."

Because her son was over 21, Bojanowski could not make health-care decisions for him. Maryland law requires either an advance directive of a health-care power of attorney. Bojanowski's son, an independent construction contractor who was engaged to be married two weeks later, had neither.

It took a year from the time of the accident for Bojanowski to persuade a court to allow her son to die.

"People create a will to take care of their finances and material possessions. Doesn't it make sense to do the same thing for their health care?" asked Dr. P. John Seward, chairman of the AMA's board of trustees.

Research group moves to Colorado Springs

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.—An anti-gay research group, whose work has been cited by many groups including the Idaho Citizens Alliance, has relocated to Colorado from Washington, D.C.

The five-member Family Research Institute, headed by psychologist Paul Cameron, produces writings against homosexuality that have been widely used in campaigns against homosexuality like the one waged in Idaho last year over an anti-gay rights initiative. It has moved to the Colorado Springs area.

Cameron, whose work has been denounced by various civil rights groups, has said his scientific research concludes homosexuality is an "addiction" that has caused an "octopus of infection stretching across the world." His writings imply a connection between homosexuality and child molestation and mass murder.

"A wise society tries to be very clear that this is wrong, condemns it, punishes those that it catches engaging in it and goes out of its way not to promote it," Cameron said.

Peres: Israel to start West Bank troop withdrawal this month

JERUSALEM—After 28 years of occupation, Israel will start withdrawing troops and shutting down the offices of its military government in the West Bank this month, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Sunday.

The impending transfer of power set off protests by Jewish settlers who claimed they were being abandoned.

Peres, speaking to The Associated Press by telephone from New York City, said the troop withdrawal from the West Bank would probably begin "in several weeks."

Peres said the goal was to have troops out of West Bank towns and villages by the end of the year. The exception is Hebron, where Israeli troops will remain to protect Jewish settlers.

Shlomo Dror, a spokesman for the military government, said the first four offices would be closed next week, and the others would be closed within six months.

Palestinian sources said the Israelis and Palestinians argued until the last minute before signing the timetable for Israel's West Bank withdrawal. In the end, the Israelis agreed to begin the pullout 10 days after the signing, instead of six months.

The army is expected to withdraw first from the city of Jenin in the northern West Bank, followed by Nablus, Tulkarem and Qalqilya, then Ramallah and Bethlehem and finally Hebron.

The Israel-PLO agreement faces stiff opposition from Jewish settlers. About 200 of them burned tires and blocked traffic Sunday morning on the bypass road around Jericho and at an army checkpoint before the Allenby Bridge to Jordan. Eighteen protesters were detained.

Oman agrees to trade ties with Israel

MUSCAT, Oman—Oman Sunday it has agreed to set up official trade relations with Israel, becoming the first Gulf Arab state to open formal ties with the Jewish state.

The official Oman News Agency said the decision followed a meeting at the United Nations in New York between Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and his Omani counterpart, Yousef Bin Alawi Abdullah.

"The two ministers have agreed to open trade representation offices for mutual technical and trade cooperation" between the two countries, the agency said.

Oman and the five other oil-rich countries of the Saudi-led Gulf Cooperation Council lifted their economic boycott of Israel last year in response to the U.S.-sponsored Middle East peace process.

Announcements

Students produce 'Here and Now'

The television program formerly known as "Mostly Moscow" will premiere on Oct. 4, as the University of Idaho communication student-produced "Here and Now."

Airing four times during the semester, "Here and Now" will highlight issues and stories from around the Palouse. This magazine format program will be aired live on Channel 18 at 7:30 p.m. The other air dates are Oct. 18, Nov. 15, and Dec. 13.

Internship search and networking strategies

Internship search and networking strategies will be taught Oct. 5, by the Cooperative Education, in room 106 of the Education Building. This workshop is for students who already have a file established and are actively looking for internships for the spring and summer semester. For information contact Cooperative Education at 885-5822.

Royalty Affair: Homecoming Royalty to be announced

Come and cheer on your favorite royalty candidate at the "Royal Affair" Oct. 5, from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the silver and gold room in the Student Union. All nominees will be introduced and this year's 16 finalists for the 1995 University of Idaho

Homecoming King and Queen will be announced.

What are the Protestants protesting about?

That will be the topic of a discussion Wednesday night in the Student Union Galena Silver Room. Doug Jones will be speaking and answer questions at the talk sponsored by Student Evangelical Fellowship. The talk will begin at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday. Anyone is invited to attend and participate in the discussion.

Career Services holds workshops

The University of Idaho Career Services Center is offering a number of workshops this week; the first on titled "Job Interview," a video showing Oct. 3, at 6 p.m. On Oct. 4, at 2:30 p.m. another called "The Job Search" and on Oct. 5, at 3:30 p.m. a workshop called "Work Options for International Students." All workshops are free, but pre-registration is required. For more information call the Career Services Center at 885-6121.

Palouse Habitat for Humanity to meet

Palouse Habitat for Humanity will hold an informational meeting especially for UI students at 7 p.m. on Oct. 4, at the Campus

Christian Center. Speaker will be Jordan Knkkeberg, president of Palouse Habitat for Humanity.

The purpose of the meeting is to explain what Habitat does and to offer students the opportunity to help construct homes for low-income families.

Barry M. Goldwater scholarship

Present sophomores and juniors in the upper quarter of their class, with a minimum GPA of 3.0, and planning a career in mathematics or natural science are eligible to compete for the Barry M. Goldwater scholarship. Students seeking this scholarship should contact Dr. Stephen Flores at the Honors Center, Psychology Building, Room 102—885-6147—by no later than Oct. 13, for more information.

This scholarship pays up to $7,000 per year for the final one or two years of a winner's undergraduate career. Deadline for completed campus applications are Nov. 17.

Correction

In the Sept. 26 Argonaut in the "Greeks play hard for philanthropies" story, it was reported that Alpha Gamma Delta took second place and Delta Delta Delta took first place in the Powder Puff Football tournament.

The Tri-Delts were the second place winners and the AGD's were in first place. The Argonaut apologizes for this mistake.

Argonaut Interview

Presidential candidates appear at CityVote forum

Photos by Carey Powell

Three presidential candidates debated in a public forum at the University of Idaho last Friday. Lyndon H. LaRouche Jr., John Hagelin of the Natural Law Party, and Republican Tom Shellenberg appeared by invitation from Moscow Mayor Paul Agidius and the "CityVote" project.

CityVote is a national presidential primary organized by the United States Conference of Mayors, and is designed to spotlight urban issues with presidential hopefuls.

Moscow is one of at least 16 cities participating in CityVote.

A CityVote presidential preference straw poll will be included on the Nov. 7 general election ballot for city offices.

In separate interviews prior to the debate, presidential candidates LaRouche, Hagelin and Shellenberg talked with the Argonaut.

Argonaut: Proposed budget cuts in education affect student loans and Pell grants. What are your views on federal aid for education?

LaRouche: It is absolutely wrong to make any cuts in this area. There are certain areas, like Medicare, Medicaid, and educational grants, which we adopted as a nation. We should find out what the real source of the problem is, and get off this budget-cutting mania. I'm opposed to it absolutely.

Hagelin: Congress must not

Lyndon H. LaRouche Jr.

John Hagelin

decrease federal aid for education. We must invest maximally in our most vital national resource, which is our human resource. The Natural Law Party has been called the education party. We basically believe education is the solution to all our national problems.

Shellenberg: Education is a state and local issue, it is not an appropriate issue for the federal government. I would virtually eliminate the Department of Education. All that would remain is Pell grants, frozen at their current level, and a modified student loan program that would stop direct loans.

Argonaut: Medicare and Medicaid. What is your position concerning reforms of these programs?

LaRouche: Anything which is morally and socially essential as a service to the welfare of the nation, you can't cut. It is not necessary. There are other things we can do to build up the tax revenue base, and that is the way to approach the problem.

Hagelin: I have worked in Washington D.C. with 80 members of Congress, introducing language into the health care debate. We got that language into the Mitchell bill and the Gephardt bill. It would be law right now, but health care got bogged-down in politics. If you can cut the nation's health bill in half, not by taking away a single service within Medicare, Medicaid or private sector, but by adding preventive services, then you are saving the nation 500 billion dollars per year in the area of health alone.

Shellenberg: I'm disgusted by the direction we are going. Washington doesn't even know what the problem is. The health care crisis is not that 19 percent of the people are uninsured, or that people are not getting quality care. That's not the problem. Health care is consuming more of our economy every year. That is the problem.

Argonaut: Many Americans feel congressional tax reforms benefit the wealthy. What types of tax reforms would you propose?

LaRouche: I wouldn't. I think where people are creating productive jobs, and investing in technology to provide those jobs, those people have the right to some kind of tax benefit consideration. The kind of capital gains tax being proposed now is financial speculation. This is one step away from pure organized-crime gambling.

Hagelin: We support a 12 percent flat tax, with a substantial allowance, approximately $35,000 for a family of four, where you wouldn't be paying taxes at all. That may sound implausible. Other candidates are fighting a no-sum game. They are talking about revenue-neutral tax reforms that don't change the amount of money the government spends.

Shellenberg: I like a progressive income tax. I believe it is the fairest. The best thing we could do is to quit changing tax laws every year. If we just left it alone, it would get simpler.

Argonaut: A balanced budget. Do we need it?

LaRouche: People are having a budget-balancing orgy in Congress as an election campaign stunt. People saying you can balance the budget by cutting, that is not the solution. You have to balance the budget by getting the nation back to work again, so we can earn enough money to pay enough taxes, without increasing tax rates.

Hagelin: I'm not convinced we need a balanced budget amendment, but we need a budget that is balanced on average from year to year. The only problem is, you can't balance the budget and lower taxes without cutting essential services, unless you have fundamentally new knowledge and new pro-

Recreation center strongly supported by students

Christopher Clancy
Staff

A recent survey sponsored by the Campus Recreation department revealed that students "strongly" support the concept of a new comprehensive recreation center. Now that concept will take the next step, in a series of focus planning groups, allowing students to discuss the specifics of such a center.

Dr. Cal Lathen of the Campus Recreation department said the forums represent an effort to "try to come up with every potential activity" for the forums. "We want to get students to show an interest in particular areas...right down to the brand names on the equipment," said Lathen.

New track space, bike trails, ice skating rink, an expanded aquatic center and inline skating areas are only a few of the facilities proposed, said Lathen. Ultimately the finished product will be composed of the types of activities that students have supported most in the forums.

Information from the forums will be used to create drawings and a mock-up of the new center providing a point from which architects and consultants can start the process of cost assessment, including a final location for the center, said Lathen.

"Assuming that the money can be appropriated, the next step in the process will be a student referendum sometime in November 1996," said Lathen. "Construction could begin as soon as 1999."

The next meeting of the groups is set for Oct. 3 at 4 p.m. in the Physical Education Building, Room 200. Students are invited to attend.

Some Democrats question INEL junket

Associated Press
LEWISTON, Idaho (AP) — Some Democratic legislators question whether the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory's primary contractor should pay food, lodging and some transportation costs of lawmakers touring the installation.

Scott Hallman, Lockheed Martin Idaho Technologies governmental relations manager, said it offered to pay for the flights of southwestern and northern Idaho legislators to Idaho Falls and room and board for all.

"INEL is considered to be a cleanup facility and waste dump in the rest of the state," he said, "when it is a national resource to develop premier technologies for the nation."

In a Sept. 13 memo to senators, Senate President Pro Tem Jerry Twigg, R-Blackfoot, said he scheduled caucus meetings Oct. 22-24 at Idaho Falls in consultation with House Speaker Mike Simpson, R-Blackfoot, and Senate Democratic Leader Bruce Sweeney, D-Lewiston.

"Since spent nuclear fuel, environmental remediation and research at the INEL have been at the forefront of the news recently, this tour should be of benefit to all of us," he wrote.

Twigg said Gov. Phil Batt has been invited to talk and the lawmakers will go over other issues. Hallman said the company approached Twigg and Simpson about a tour.

"Our first target audience is the Legislature," he said Friday. "We would be happy with 85 percent or more."

Sweeney said Senate Democrats did not plan to caucus in Idaho Falls, but some object to Lockheed financing the junket.

He said he personally does not have a problem and likens it to the North Idaho Chamber of Commerce tour except the chamber excursion is financed by a group of businesses instead of one.

House Democratic Leader Jim Stoichert, D-Sandpoint, said he does not believe it is appropriate for a corporation to give legislators gifts above $50 under their code of ethics.

"It starts a trend I don't think is healthy," he said. "If Lockheed can do this, what can stop Boise Cascade from doing this for timber interests? It can go on, on, on and on."

House Appropriations Committee Chairwoman Kathleen Gurnsey, R-Boise, said Lockheed's involvement probably "plays well" in Blackfoot, where Simpson and Twigg live.

"But you have to question now the public perceives it in the rest of the state," she said. Gurnsey said it is tough to decide whether Lockheed's backing is appropriate.

"When your boss tells you to be there, you be there," she said.

Local Sigma Chi member wins national fraternity scholarship

Daniel Christiansen, a member of the University of Idaho chapter of Sigma Chi won an individual scholarship award from national Sigma Chi in August. Christiansen was one of six undergraduates of Sigma Chi, nationally, to win the prestigious Kenneth Kendal King Scholarship.

Christiansen was formally awarded this scholarship at the Sigma Chi's 48th Annual Leadership Training Workshop. The workshop was held August 10-13 at the University of North Dakota in Grand Fork.

After receiving the scholarship award Christiansen stated he felt, "Extremely honored because only six Sigma Chi's out of the whole nation are chosen." This is the first year they have awarded the scholarship.

Christiansen, a junior here at UI, said this is the first year the scholarship has been awarded. The six undergraduate men must be active in their chapter of Sigma Chi, and demonstrate strong leadership ability, high scholastic performance and financial need.

To be chosen as a King Leader by the Kenneth Kendal King Foundation, Christiansen had to participate in an application process that members of every chapter of Sigma Chi across the United States with a junior standing in school is eligible to apply for. Christiansen has a cumulative 4.0 GPA along with holding several leadership roles in his chapter. Christiansen was the vice president of his pledge class and is currently the Sigma Chi's scholarship chairman.

The scholarship program, named after the late Kenneth King, has a cash value of $4,000 per award recipient.

Christiansen said, "It's an amazing amount of money for a scholarship."

The late King was a member of Sigma Chi fraternity at Northwestern University. King graduated in the class of 1922. Co-sponsoring this scholarship award with the Kenneth King Foundation of Colorado is the Sigma Chi Foundation.

This Kenneth King Foundation was developed to challenge and benefit the undergraduate active members of the Sigma Chi Fraternity.

The Sigma Chi Foundation is a separate educational and charitable corporation. Last year the Sigma Chi Foundation awarded more than $900,000 in educational grants and awards.

Sigma Chi was founded in 1855 at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, and today has 228 undergraduate chapters in North America and more than 100 alumni chapters worldwide.

nized that he had hurt her career. "He realized that he had done something wrong," she said.

Sometimes fighting an individual case of discrimination can cost more than it's worth, Huber said.

"It's like falling on swords. The human body can only handle so many holes. You have to pick and choose the battles you want to fight," she said. What may seem like discrimination to one person may not seem discriminatory to another.

"I have noticed there are areas I have run into that other people would see as discriminatory, but I didn't notice it," she said. Different backgrounds cause different responses. When joining the Army, she didn't think of it as imposing in a man's world.

"The matter of gender honestly never crossed my mind. I was raised to be independent, to be a self-starter," Huber said. Her attitude was echoed by Gy. Sgt. Marianne Campbell.

"I ain't better than them, but I'm just as good. I can do what's expected of me," Campbell said. She commented that women in the military, particularly in combat positions, goes against traditional American culture. "It's beat into the American male; you take care of the women," she said.

All three panelists agreed that while discrimination still occurs, it is becoming less frequent. It won't cause them to give up.

"I'm gonna stay in, because I like what I'm doing," MacArthur said.

grams that would allow you to do that. The Natural Law Party is the only party that can balance the budget, cut taxes markedly, and not cut essential services, through scientifically validated and cost effective solutions.

Shellenberg: It is critical we balance the budget. The Social Security Administration's own prediction: In the year 2020, if there are no changes made to Social Security, the tax on taxable wages will have to be a minimum of 30 percent, just to pay Social Security and Medicare. I think you will revolt. If we don't straighten it out now, we'll never be able to deal with it then.

Argonaut: What reforms should be made in the American health-care system?

LaRouche: Get a mandate, if Congress agrees, that there must be adequate health care for everyone. We as a nation have a responsibility to ensure everyone has adequate health care. Let's find out how to do it; but first let's agree we are going to do that.

Hagelin: In health, the solution is obvious. Scientific research, extensive published research, has shown you can cut health costs in half through simple preventive measures: prevention-oriented health education. Prevention-oriented natural medicines which strengthen the immune system, prevent disease, and promote health, save money in the best possible way: keeping people healthy.

Shellenberg: Guess who interferes with the health-care industry? The federal government. One of their interferences is with Medicare or Medicaid. To save money, they won't pay the bill. They only pay the amount they think is fair. On average it is about 80 cents on the dollar. The hospital needs the same amount of revenue. They can't take 80 cents from one patient, and one dollar from another. They need two bucks. Guess who they make it up with? They charge extra to the people who aren't on Medicare and Medicaid. We have to look at procedures currently provided, and take some of them away. With the money we save on what is no longer covered, we start paying the whole bill on what we do cover.

Argonaut: Is there anything you would like our readers to know?

LaRouche: First of all, we are in the middle of the biggest financial crises in the 20th century. We need a government with the support of the people, which is going to take emergency actions to bring that crises under control. Second, in the criminal justice system, we have what is the equivalent to a political death squad. In the Weaver case, it does kill. In other cases, it simply tries to destroy people with malicious investigation, false prosecution, even false conviction. If we do not act to eliminate that kind of corruption inside our civil service bureaucracy, as the Weaver case exemplifies, then we don't have any representative government, because the leaders we elect may get killed, framed, or shipped off to prison.

Hagelin: I want them all to be aware of what "CityVote" is. People need to know that Moscow can really be the mouse that roared. If Moscow sends a loud signal to Washington D.C., particularly for a third-party candidate, sending a vote that decades of Republican and Democratic policies have taken the country in the wrong direction, it would be national news. All we need is exposure. If solutions exist right now, why wait four years for the implementation of those programs?

Shellenberg was not asked this question due to time constraints.

Greek values not what they seem

There has been a lot of talk lately about values; however, there has been very little definition of what exactly these values are. The mystery deepened when, as reported by this paper on Sept. 26, "Utah State University's fraternities and sororities, in an effort to return to Greek values, adopted a zero-tolerance policy on alcohol and drugs."

In this general lust for these cherished values of the past, I think it is important to define these values to clear up some of the confusion people may be experiencing about this proposed return to Greek values. I thought it would be helpful to explain what, exactly, might be meant by "Greek values."

The greatest virtue in Greece may have been that of "sophrosyne"—which means moderation. A man was a lush if he drank undiluted wine, so wine was watered down to contain approximately the same alcoholic strength as beer. In contrast to the new Utah policy, it would be reasonable to expect that men would drink, take pleasure in this drink, and come to know their limits.

The new Utah policy is also calling for more adult supervision. In classical Greek society, each male student would be supervised in acquiring the virtue of moderation. A mentor (a male adult) would appropriately take them out and help them to acquire and enjoy drink. This mentor probably would have been supervising the boy from the age of 10 or so when he may have adopted him into the family to be instructed in athletics, philosophy, and the enjoyment of his sexuality.

All of this reference to men is to point out that Greece, in comparison to today, was a sexist state. If we returned to "Greek values," today's sororities might be allowed to do the same, but women would not be allowed to study with men. A return to Greek values would mean upper-class women would be welcome to learn about domestic duties, child rearing, or possibly something as esoteric as interior design, but that would be the extent of it. All other women could at best be trained to be a harp girl or an intellectual harlot.

Then there is the question of adulthood. Most of us at the University of Idaho want to consider ourselves as adults. Well, if these old values are re-instituted, we will have to wait until 35 to do so. And remember, it was a father's right to murder his son without punishment prior to that age, so you would definitely want to get the car back home on time.

So is there a point? Today's world is incredibly complex, and an appeal to a time when things appeared to be simpler will not solve today's problems. The answers can be assisted by understanding history and applying its lessons, but we must not assume that yesterday's morality or regulations are today's panacea. We must look for solutions which are flexible enough to respond to the vast diversity of the needs of all people and not for rigid conclusions which respond only to the ethnocentricity of the few.

EVERYONE WANTS A PEACE

Abortion argument a waste of time

Every day at approximately 4:07 a.m. the daily paper slides noisily under my cubicle door and bangs into my elfin refrigerator. For some unknown cosmic reason noises are amplified tenfold at that particular time of day.

And while I don't particularly care for the audible velocity of the morning's news, there is something twice as loud within the folds of newsprint I enjoy even less.

Almost without fail every issue of the paper since 1974 has featured five letters to the editor in which devoted readers argue the finer and more technical points of abortion. It's always two for choice and three for life or three for choice and two for life.

The great variety and wisdom of several individuals particularly astound me; they usually read something like "You are killing babies and you are evil blah blah!" "It's not a baby; it's a tissue blob yak yak yak!" And my personal favorite "From a purely medical standpoint at the time of conception the nameless tissue blob is a zygote after which point it further develops and when it numbers exactly 1,203 cells it then becomes an embryo which then develops a primitive heart and brain stem yadda yadda..."

I have a refreshing bit of news for both sides of this archaic abortion debate which I will shout so that I can be heard above the din: IT WILL NEVER BE

Corinne Flowers

RESOLVED! NOT EVER! NEVER NEVER NEVER! So stop your silly arguing right now! It will always be 49 percent one way and 51 percent the other.

You can't convince anyone else that your views are the right ones, and they can't convince you.

The problem is that each side has some truths in its beliefs, and each side also has several falsehoods.

Nobody likes abortion, no one is "pro-abortion" or "anti-life," as pro-lifers would have you believe. No one truly wants to disrupt the perfect and beautiful thing that is creation.

Nobody is "anti-choice," as pro-choicers like to label opponents of abortion. To be so would spit on everything our people have fought for. It would be cursing the revolutionaries, the emancipators, the suffragers, the civil-righters and the liberators.

But whether we want it to be or not, and whether we see it as right or wrong, abortion is an option and it will always be an option.

Women have been terminating their own pregnancies since the dawn of humankind and they will continue to do so until its extinction. Ban all medical procedures, ban the morning-after pill, ban wire coat hangers if you like, because you can't ban birth control pills, medicinal herbs and every other non-invasive technique women have devised over the centuries, all of which have proven to be effective at causing abortion.

On that same note, accuse proliferators of controlling your body, organize all the marches you like and protest to your heart's content, because half of the people in the nation see abortion as morally and ethically wrong, and they always will.

A woman's right to choose will never go away and neither will the opponents of that right.

So instead of butting our collective heads against the reproductive wall, perhaps we could spend some of our time working towards solutions to problems that start after birth.

Babies are dying every day from being shaken and beaten.

Thousands of children go to bed hungry every night right here in America. Little boys and girls are stolen from their homes and schools and raped and mutilated. These things happen every day in our own cities.

Twelve-year-old kids are crack addicts and drug dealers. Sixteen-year-old girls are pregnant and homeless. Thousands of exceedingly bright high school graduates can't afford to go to college.

Telephones and toilet plungers? Wake me in the morning

It's only a month and a half into school and I'm already tired of things.

A few nights ago, I received a call from a rather enthusiastic telemarketer who, even before learning my name, launched into a 10-minute spiel over some Fabulous and Once-In-A-Lifetime-Discount Card I was lucky enough to receive an offer for. For a measly $39.95—Why don't they just ask for $40? It's not as if adding an extra nickel onto the price is going to turn off any suc-, uh, customers, will it? I could receive discounts on goods and services totaling more than $1,000!

This is an incredible deal, I thought. The telemarketer mentioned I could get discounts at a resort on Lake Coeur d'Alene, some various automotive services, massages and free manicures for the lady interests in my life.

Fine, I felt like saying. Does your offer include a free weekend, a car that has my name on the title and lady interests I can add to my life? I feared, and I believe I feared correctly, the answer would be no. So I asked the telemarketer if the Fabulous Discount Card included the free hot air balloon rides. After he said no, I said, "Well then, what good is it?" and put the phone back on the hook.

This is just the icing on my telecommunications cake. A few weeks earlier I was being constantly badgered by customer representatives from AT&T who were thanking the Matt Wilford Family for switching over to their service. Matt, a roommate who is gifted with the ability to never be home when these perky callers call, didn't seem all that excited when I told him there were people just dying to explain his new long-distance calling options to him (sometimes twice a day), and I can't say I blame him.

I'm also constantly taking phone messages for another roommate, who as a member of the ROTC unit, is always receiving calls from drill-sergeant sounding men. It's to the point I don't know whether or not to salute when I answer the phone, but I have caught on when to say "sir" and "yes, sergeant".

So I'm tired of the phone. In trying to avoid the country music stations which have somehow infested the radio waves on the Palouse, I tune in to NPR. For just a few seconds, mind you. They're in the middle of one of their endless pledge drives right now, and frankly I'd rather listen to Billy Ray Cyrus screech about something or other than a bunch of weirdoes on the radio making fools of themselves as they grovel for money.

They're always on the air with some heart-wrenching story of a little 5-year-old girl who is forced to listen to NPR so often she can hum the introductory music for the news program "All Things Considered". Where I come from, this is second to only the absence of any Fisher-Price toys in the home when it comes to the severity of child abuse accusations.

Also, I've listened to KUOI enough to know enough to turn the radio off before the Gay and Lesbian News comes on.

So, I'm tired of the radio. Every time I go to a computer lab lately, especially in the library, I feel like a vulture waiting for the cowboy struggling through the desert below to give his final kicks and mosey off to that Big Corral in the sky.

If you've never waited for 15 minutes for a computer to become available, you'll never know the stinging disappointment of seeing someone stand up only to march smugly to the printer and then back to their station.

The only thing worse than that is finding a computer that is free, only to find out that the Server Gnomes have left their tell-tale boot tracks all through its silicon forest. After resetting the thing five times, and becoming so bored waiting for something—anything—to happen on the screen you're tempted to leaf through the English-Navajo dictionary on the shelf behind the Computer Service Person smugly playing solitaire on his machine, (which for some strange reason never seems to break down) you're either ready to compute or the new Ice Age has begun.

So I'm tired of computer labs. I hope the toilet's not plugged up again today. For starters, our plunger doesn't work all that well. It turns itself inside out, and who wants to touch it to set it right? Hm. That weekend on Lake Coeur d'Alene doesn't sound all that bad anymore.

Letters to the Editor

Annoying cyclists a minority

I don't know what to think of Nors Davidson's Sept. 26 letter whose main point seems to be that "campus needs to be safe for us to drive our cars." A statement this absurd must be tongue in cheek, but some of Nors' false assumptions are widely held.

He seems to suggest that motorizing has some special rights to the road and should not be bothered by bicyclists. Two problems with this: autos do not own the roads; everyone pays for them. We all pay through property taxes and other hidden costs. Second, bicycling is not some frivolous pastime for kids and overgrown kids. Many of the people one sees on bicycles are using them for serious purposes—like going to work or class, shopping or visiting friends.

If you think parking is difficult now, try banning bikes from campus. Students and taxpayers of Idaho are subsidizing driving to campus, so prohibiting bikes from campus is a ludicrous notion. Nors should get in his truck at 5:00 p.m. on a school day and try to get from the library to Main Street and imagine what it would be like if all the bicyclists passing him were in cars, too.

Moscow and UI encourage bicycling. There simply is not enough space for everyone to drive everywhere.

Nors and I would agree that stronger enforcement of traffic laws as they pertain to bicycles is needed. There is no excuse for terrorizing pedestrians and frightening motorists.

I know lawless bicyclists are an annoyance, but they are a minority. Cyclists who respect the rules are barely noticed because they go with the flow. Remember this when you see bikes on campus; they are not competing with you for a parking place.

These things happen every day in our own communities.

Thirty-year-old professional women still make less than their male counterparts. Men in the prime of their lives are being faced with a dwindling job market and increased unemployment. A large number of these same men go home and beat their wives. These things happen every day in our own neighborhoods.

We shut our grandparents away in nursing homes that we never visit and then go on to pretend we don't know about the abuse and indignities they suffer there. We are so afraid of death that we allow people we love to exist for years by artificial means of life support and even go so far as to pass laws making it a crime to let someone die with dignity. These things happen every day in our own families.

There really is plenty to worry about right here at home without expending such a tremendous amount of effort and energy into a completely unresolvable issue.

So instead of wasting what precious little time we have fighting a war that can't be won, maybe some of us could get together and work on answers to problems that just might have solutions.

Instead of screaming and yelling at each other about something as divine and irreproachable as the gift of free will and choice, maybe some of us could get together and quietly, calmly and forcefully fight the larger, much more frightening demons that live among us every day: abuse, neglect, addiction, poverty, famine, discrimination, ignorance and fear.

A lesson from the Americas

The war in the former Yugoslavia has done much to remind us that the age of tribalism has not yet fully passed into history.

Here in the United States, we've made a lot of progress (whether or not we acknowledge it) toward the ideal of inclusion and racial harmony relative to that found in other countries of the world.

In 1992, Robert L. Berner wrote in World Literature Today, "Our achievement of a synthesis of the discordant elements of our consciousness...depends on our recognition of the interrelationship of the Indian and European (and African) elements that has created America and the American consciousness."

Although the focus of Berner's article had more to do with the combining of ethnically diverse literary themes here in the United States, his lesson taps into a larger, more important concern for the human race: the acceptance and synthesis of extra-cultural values and ideas. It often happens whether or not we want to admit it or whether or not we like it.

What's the lesson for the Bosnian-Serbs, the Bosnian-Croats and the Bosnians themselves? They must start to look for what they share in common rather than accentuating the differences they've been fighting over since medieval times.

This is where the United States should take a more active role by utilizing the knowledge of its unique history, its ability to synthesize "the discordant elements" which have inhabited our society to help the opposing sides in the Bosnian conflict come to an agreement which will help to preserve the peace in Europe.

In the past few years, the United States has largely ignored the conflict and left it to the Europeans to solve the problem. This tactic didn't work, and it was obvious that it wouldn't. In the vacuum created by the demise of the Soviet empire, the United States has failed to step in to assume the role of world leader.

The recent attempts to bully the Bosnian-Serbs both to the bargaining table and into withdrawing heavy artillery from the exclusion zone surrounding Sarajevo by bombing ammunition dumps has had the effect it was intended to do. However, this is where only part of the United States' strength lies.

Our strength also lies in setting the example for the rest of the world to follow. Our culture is more widely known and more widely accepted (mostly, unfortunately, through the ubiquity of television) than any other culture in history.

Now is the time to share our lessons of diversity and inclusion (even though we still, quite obviously, need to learn much more ourselves) and to help the Bosnians learn to look for what they can share together instead using their differences to drive them apart.

Welcome: Students, Faculty, Staff and friends of the University of Idaho.

After many months of dickering, cajoling, hammering, consoling, painting, negotiating, pleading, compromising, plastering, re-wiring, drilling, venting and plumbing, Grand Opening Day is here, and the university community can be proud of its achievement. Please join us for the celebration October 4, 5 & 6 and let us show-off our many innovations.

The effort of a lot of hard working, dedicated professionals in many areas has created a newer, brighter, user-friendly Student Union equipped and revitalized to better serve its most important customers — the students.

The mission of the Student Union has always been to provide a living and learning environment for students beyond the classroom. Now we can fulfill that goal even better within a contemporary, secure and ADA accessible environment for entertainment, education and employment.

Whatever it takes to make life better for students outside the classroom and inside the Student Union, and meet the changing needs of the University of Idaho campus...we're doing it.

Bikers work on local trails

Erik Marone

Seven members of the Moscow Area Mountain Bike Association took advantage of the nice weather this Sunday and spent a few hours cleaning up trails on Moscow Mountain. When the work was done, it was time to play so they went for a 25-mile ride for the afternoon.

The cleanup was one of several activities the two-year old bike club has held. In addition to Moscow Mountain cleanups, they have cleaned trails in McCroskey Park and near the North-South Ski Bowl. Jim LaFortune of MAMBA says it's all part of the club's attempt to educate people about responsible riding and to have respect for the mountain that offers so many riding opportunities.

"It's not an exclusive thing, to make it better for bikes," said LaFortune, "We want everyone to be able to enjoy the trails."

MAMBA is actively trying to educate people about trail maintenance and respecting landowner's wishes. Past irresponsibility has resulted in the closure of a number of trails on the mountain, much of which is privately owned. "We're trying to work proactively with landowners to prevent more trail closures," said LaFortune.

Earlier this year, in cooperation with Bennett Lumber, MAMBA succeeded in getting a trail on the west side of the Moscow Mountain reopened. For their efforts, MAMBA was given a $500 grant from Rock Shox in conjunction with the International Mountain Bike Association. "I was really pleased and surprised that we got it," LaFortune said. Rock Shox and IMBA award two grants every month to bicycle clubs throughout the United States to help with educational and maintenance programs. MAMBA used their grant money to purchase hand tools to help with trail cleanups. They also bought a number of informational and warning signs that the club posted along popular trails on the mountain to increase bike awareness and encourage cooperation with other trail users such as hikers and horse riders.

Although the weather will soon bring this year's mountain biking season to a close, MAMBA will have a table at the University of Idaho ski swap meet this fall with maps of trails on Moscow Mountain and information about the club. This spring, they plan to have a pizza party and show a feature-length mountain biking movie to help recruit new members and kick off next year's biking season. ### OUTDOOR TIP OF THE WEEK

Certain areas in Idaho require barbless hooks for fishing. This is a hook without barbs or one that has been modified to close the barb. The hook itself is defined as a "bent wire device, for the catching of fish, to which one, two or three points may be attached to a single shank." A barb is the sharp projection extending back off the point(s) of the hook. Treble hooks can be used as a barbless hook provided the barbs are crimped or filed down. Treble hooks have three points attached to one shank. There are various rules and restrictions which require the use of barbless hooks only: Catch-and-release waters, sturgeon and most Steelhead fishing, just to name a few. It is important to read the rules booklet thoroughly or to contact a regional Fish and Game officer to clarify any concerns or questions.

UI OUTDOOR PROGRAM CLASSES

The UI Outdoor Program continues to offer classes in a variety of activities.

Sign-up for all classes with the Outdoor Program in the basement of the Student Union. Fees are due upon sign-up.

Intro. to Rockclimbing is being offered

Oct. 10 at 6 p.m. The cost is $15 and participants are asked to meet at the Climbing Wall in Memorial Gym. This class will cover the basics of belaying, knots and terminology. Intermediate Rockclimbing is being offered Oct. 13-15. There is a pre-trip meeting Oct. 12 at 7:30 p.m. Participants must be comfortable with all technical aspects of top rope climbing and rappelling. The cost is $35 which covers transportation and instruction. Equipment is the responsibility of the participant. Intro. to Mountaineering/Konagee Glacier

Canada is being offered Oct. 13-15.

There is one class session on Oct. 4 at 7:30 p.m. and a pre-trip meeting Oct. 11 at 5 p.m. Participants must have basic rockclimbing skills and previous backpacking experience. The cost is $35 which covers transportation and instruction. Gear is the responsibility of the participants.

Clothing adds safety to hunting

Jerri Lake
Staff

For many years hunters have debated various reasons for wearing blaze orange clothing or accessories. Some believe game will see them and be spooked away. Others believe without the orange, they could be shot by another hunter by mistake. Both reasons are valid, depending on the game and hunting conditions.

Camouflage clothing and accessories come in many different styles and colors. Each style, such as tree bark for forest settings, tan splotches for fall grass, or white with black and brown hash marks for winter are good concealing your body. Predators like coyotes, foxes, mountain lions and other species like turkeys, have some color vision. Camouflage clothing and face camo for this type of game will help.

If you are hunting deer or elk, it will not make a difference. They do not have color vision and can only see in shades of gray.

Of all the firearms related hunting accidents in Idaho over the last three years, none of the victims were wearing any orange clothing. Washington state requires any hunter during the general season for deer, elk, bear, cougar, bobcat, raccoon, fox, coyote, rabbit, upland birds or forest grouse to wear a minimum of 400 square inches of fluorescent hunter orange clothing. This must be exterior clothing above the waist and visible from all sides. If you are hunting with a muzzleloader or bow in those seasons, and they do not overlap with a general rifle season, orange clothing is not required.

Idaho currently does not require the use of orange clothing. Idaho recommends at least 144 square inches of orange be worn for safety reasons. A baseball cap or knit hat is about 144 square inches.

When hunting for deer or elk, movement and scent are things the animals will detect you by. I have been on stands when animals walked in behind me. I was wearing blaze orange and my scent was blowing toward them. They could not figure out where I was because I did not move while they were looking in my direction. They can detect minor movements such as moving a finger or your head.

For deer or elk, almost any clothing is OK. Try to start out the day with clean, unsweaty clothes. When you fix breakfast, remember to not smell like bacon and eggs or any other meal you fix. Animals will pick up any unnatural scent for the area. There are several varieties of scent you can buy to help mask yours, but an animal will still detect your sweat through them.

While you are walking through an area, move slowly. Avoid shuffling your feet or kicking rocks. Do not step on branches that can make noise when they break. These movements will alert an animal. If you are just clomping along, you will not be able to hear an animal sneaking away from you. Take a few steps, stop and listen. This is the way an unspooked animal walks through an area. If you have to walk through an area with dry leaves, take a couple of steps, then move your foot through the leaves as if you were a deer pushing its nose through them looking for a mushroom.

Sneezing or coughing does not seem to bother animal much. Animals cough and sneeze too. Try not to talk. Use slow hand motions to your friends if they are looking at you. The main thing to remember is to be quiet. Deer and elk have keen eyesight, hearing and smell. However, they still cannot tell what color of clothes you are wearing.

Remember, while you are in the field, you will assume many different positions depending if you are bending over, reaching for something or crawling under something. While you are in these positions, you may take on the general shape of a deer or elk to another hunter. If other hunters are not careful to make sure of his or her target, it might be you. A small amount of hunter orange, such as a base ball cap, may be enough to save your life.

Enjoying the fall colors of trees, the smell of pines, and the beauty of nature is great. However, if you are going to be in an area open to hunting, wear some hunter orange, even if you are only armed with a camera. Wear clothing to match the season and game you are after. If the game is deer or elk, please wear hunter orange. Have a fun and enjoyable hunting trip.

Huff'n Puff'n Fun Run

The 12th Annual Huff'n Puff'n Fun Run is getting closer. Oct. 7 is race day with a starting time of 10 a.m. but registration begins at 9 a.m. There will be a 5km and 10km run and walk. If you wait and register the day of the race the cost is $14 but if you pre-register before Sept. 29, the cost is only $12. A t-shirt is included with registration. If you don't want the t-shirt, the cost to participate is $4. The race will start and finish at Eggan Youth Center at 1515 East D St. in Moscow. You can register at Moscow Parks and Recreation, 883-7085, or Campus Recreation, 885-6381.

Brown Bag Adventure Slide Show

Jim States, M. D., is presenting "The Climb... Lessons Learned From Our Neighbors In a Developing Country," on Oct. 6 at 12:10 p.m. in the CUB Gridiron Room. Dr. States is from Spokane and will be showing slides of his 1992 Makalu expedition. Bring a lunch and enjoy slides and stories from an expert mountaineer.

Mountaineering Medicine Clinic

Jim States, M. D., is teaching a Mountaineering Medicine Clinic at Washington State University on Oct. 6 following the Brown Bag Adventure Slide Show at 12:10 p.m. in the Washington State University CUB Gridiron Room.

Admission is free and Dr. States will be giving practical suggestions for the prevention of cold injury, high altitude illness and exhaustion. He has been on some of the world's highest peaks, including Everest, and is an expert in the field of cold weather medicine.

Nonresident Elk Tags

For those of you who missed the deadline for purchasing a nonresident elk tag, there is some good news. The tags were sold out as of April, but because of returns there are some still available. If you would like to purchase one of these tags, stop by any regional Fish and Game office or call 1-800-55HUNTS. As of Sept. 15 there were still over 3,000 nonresident deer tags still available also.

Outdoor Photography Contest

The ASWSU Outdoor Recreation Center and the Compton Union Gallery at Washington State University are sponsoring an outdoor photography contest and display to be held in the Compton Union Gallery, Oct. 9 through 28. The contest is open to all amateur photographers. Each photographer can enter up to four photographs, black and white or color. There are four categories for the entrants: Outdoor Recreation Action—high-lighting active sports in the outdoors, and Wildlife, Landscape, and Still Life—small scale views of the natural world. All entries must be matted or mounted in frames and ready for hanging with either a wire hanger or sawtooth-type hanger on the back of all framed pictures. Entries are due at the ASWSU Outdoor Recreation Center, B-22 in the CUB by noon on Oct. 4. Prizes will be awarded in each category plus a "Best-of-Show". For more information, call the ASWSU Outdoor Recreation Center at 335-2651.

Fall Outdoor Recreation Classes

The University of Idaho Enrichment Program is offering several outdoor recreation classes this fall. Pre registration is required. Fly Casting Basics is a course designed to teach you the basics of fly fishing. Bart Quesnell will teach you the "roll cast," "three-quarter cast," and how to select the right fly. No experience is necessary. The class meets Oct. 7, 9 a.m. to noon. Meet at Hordemenn Pond. The fee is $12. Fly Tying for Fall Trout and Steelhead is being offered Mondays and Thursdays, Oct. 9 thru 26, 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in the Janssen Engineering Building room 126. Students must know basic fly tying technique and provide their own materials. Hunting Fall Mushrooms is being offered Oct. 21, 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Hunt mushrooms and find out what the difference is between sac and club fungi and which mushrooms are poisonous. For more information on any of these classes, call the Enrichment Program at 885-6486.

Vandals lose in-state battle to ISU

"Idaho's got a great front seven so it makes more sense to me to throw it than run it," said Idaho State coach Brian McNeely, who's Bengals tied their best start since the 1981 season when they rolled to a Division I-AA national championship. "I think that we caught them by surprise with our receivers. Maybe they underestimated our receiving corps a little bit because we have some excellent receivers."

The Bengals offense rolled to a tremendous first quarter start, completing five of six passes, ending in an 18-yard Wetta to Justin Young touchdown pass.

Idaho quickly struck back, mounting a 13-play 79-yard drive resulting in a two yard touchdown by Vandal running back Joel Thomas. UI's Thomas could be viewed as the lone bright spot for the Vandals, as he returned from a knee injury and racked up 115 yards on 28 carries.

After a defensive stalemate, ISU bounced back to take the lead on a 31-yard James Ferrell field goal, capping a 11-play 53-yard drive by the Vandals. After another inefficient display of offense by the Vandals, ISU's Wetta once again went to work on Idaho's soft secondary coverage, hitting Young on a 26-yard touchdown pass and building a 17-7 lead on Idaho near the beginning of the second quarter.

Idaho finally got things going. The Vandals switched things up, both running the ball and passing effectively, which eventually led to

University of Idaho coach Chris Tormey's Big Sky Conference debut didn't go quite the way he wanted as he watched his Vandals fall 26-21 to Idaho State in Pocatello on Saturday.

Simply put, the Holt Arena crowd of 11,127 must have had a sigh of relief after viewing the poor execution by the Vandals. ISU pounded the Vandals with a steady passing attack and a swarming defense, which in turn left Idaho quarterback Brian Brennan scrambling for his life and launching bullets to invisible receivers.

Brennan can't be the lone scapegoat in Idaho's opening Big Sky loss.

Idaho's veteran offensive line submitted five sacks to an ISU defense which consistently pressured Brennan, giving him literally no time to throw and no one to throw to. When Brennan did get a pass off, he went to receivers like Dwight McKinzie, who finished the game with six catches and two dropped balls. Idaho's starting quarterback finished the day 16 of 36, with two touchdown tosses and 198 yards passing.

"They didn't do anything that we weren't expecting," Brennan said. On paper, it's blocked. But then we can't block, catch, throw or run. We were flat and didn't do anything."

On the defensive side of the ball, Idaho's secondary was toasted by ISU quarterback Robb Wetta, who outdid his UI counterpart going 20 of 33 with 284 yards passing and three touchdowns. The Vandals did get some pressure on the quarterback, recording five sacks between two players—defensive end Barry Mitchell had 2 sacks and defensive tackle Tim Wilson led the defense with three sacks for a loss of 24 yards.

a 13-play 67-yard drive and a Brennan to Robert Scott touchdown pass. A humbled Idaho went into halftime, down 17-14.

Things looked good defensively for Idaho early in the third quarter, stopping ISU on its first series. But, as ISU showed us on Saturday, if at first you don't succeed, try, try again. And that's exactly what they did, moving the ball 63 yards in 7 plays and once again—a Wetta touchdown pass.

Again, ISU's special team left the Vandals deep in their own territory, leaving Brennan no comfort zone. The Bengals penetrating defense then sacked Brennan in the end-zone, giving ISU a safety and a 26-14 lead early in the fourth quarter.

Fortunately for Idaho at the time, Wetta's hot hand was cooling off and Vandal Jason O' Neil grabbed a Wetta pass and initiated a potential UI comeback.

Idaho attempted to bounce back and did gain some momentum after Robert Scott out jumped an ISU defender and grabbed a Brennan 60 yard touchdown pass.

Too much Bengal defense and too little Idaho offense kept Idaho from building on the score, as ISU finally overcame an Idaho team that had given it so much trouble in the past.

Tormey knows that his team didn't expect ISU to even contend.

"We haven't lost to (ISU) in seven years and I don't think we respected them," Tormey said. "If you don't respect your opponent, if you don't have the anxiety that he's gonna kick your butt, then he probably will. We learned a tough lesson."

The Vandals travel to Bozeman, Mon. this Saturday to face the Montana State Bobcats.

Cougars win Palouse bragging rights

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

The Idaho Vandals have something in common with national volleyball powers UCLA, USC, Arizona and Arizona State.

The Washington State Cougars, who swept the aforementioned foursome over the last two weeks, added the UI spikers to their list of walking wounded with a 15-9, 15-10, 15-10 victory in Saturday night's Border Battle matchup in Pullman.

A superior net and service game propelled the Wazzu crew to victory. The Cougars came up with eight aces in the match compared to one for the Vandals. Idaho also shot itself in the foot with eight service errors, a problem that has haunted the Vandals all season. The problems were worsened when the ninth-ranked Cougars (13-0) outblocked the Vandals 11-6 and posted 52 kills to Idaho's 40.

"It wasn't so much them. It was that we passed poorly," Idaho coach Tom Hilbert said. "That slowed us down so we couldn't get into any tempo. We looked intimidated tonight."

Poor passing certainly plagued Idaho in the first game as Washington State bolted to a 9-1 edge. The Vandals played even through the rest of the game, but the big lead was too much to overcome. The Cougs reeled off five of their aces in the opening set and used five kills by sophomore middle blocker Jenny Herndon to pick up the win.

"We we're so pumped up before the match, that when they started scoring we just got passive and played intimidated," Idaho outside hitter Lina Yanchulova said.

Idaho (14-3) looked to get back into the match in the second game, playing the Cougs to a 6-6 tie, but Washington State scored the game's next seven points en-route to victory.

Game three was much the same as the Vandals stayed close early, trailing just 6-8, but again watched WSU make the momentum-swinging move with four unanswered points.

"We wanted to side out and score points. This is not indicative of the way we play teams in our own conference," Hilbert said. "This is the best Washington State I've seen... If you give them an inch, they will throw it back at you in a hurry."

The match's two all-American candidates lived up to their billing. Washington State's Sarah Silvernail, who came into the match leading the PAC-10 in hitting percentage at .394, was solid, posting a team-high 14 kills against four errors in 30 swings. Yanchulova was the only thing keeping the Idaho offense afloat as the Bulgarian native totaled 17 kills and only three hitting errors in 43 swings.

"I wasn't real worried about Yanchulova having a big night," Cougar coach Cindy Fredrick said. "You'll be hard pressed to stop her. You just have to let her play and shut everybody else down."

WSU did use the help of Idaho fans to set a new Bohler Gym attendance record. Washington State, which ranked ninth in the nation in average attendance, watched 3,356 fans pour through the gates for Saturday's clash, breaking the old record of 3,267 set last year against the University of Washington.

"As much as everybody was building this up, it was a good win," Fredrick said. "It's always competitive and it creates a lot of interest in volleyball." Friday

The weekend wasn't a total loss for the Vandals as Idaho extended its home winning streak to 39 matches with a 15-11, 15-8, 15-1 triumph over Eastern Washington in Big Sky Conference play Friday night.

Yanchulova accounted for a match-high 21 kills while true freshman Beth Craig chipped in 16 and hit .483 on the night.

The match marked the fourth occasion this fall that the Vandals have gone over the 1,000 mark for attendance as 1,129 fans filed into Memorial Gym for the meeting. Idaho is currently 17th in the nation in home attendance averaging 947 fans per contest. Hawaii is the national leader with a home average of 4,498.

Hyland setting new precedent for Vandals

Mark Vanderwall
Staff

Coming to the University of Idaho may have been one of the weirdest things that has happened to Vandal setter Lynne Hyland.

After graduating from John Oliver High School in Vancouver, British Columbia, Hyland's future seemed uncertain, as she had really never heard of recruiting trips per se. Hyland's mother was in touch with Idaho head coach Tom Hilbert, and as they say in the movies, "The rest is history."

After seeing limited playing time her freshman year behind former Vandal standout Dee Porter, Hyland stepped in rather nicely as a sophomore, finishing with the third highest assist per game average in NCAA history at 14.52.

Filling those shoes again this season has been quite an accomplishment after the losses of Olympic Festival qualifiers Brittany Van Haverbeke and Mindy Rice, but Hyland is once again in the top three in the nation in assists.

After already accumulating as many losses as last season, Hyland may be feeling a little frustrated.

"We are very young, so it's not really fair to compare this years team to last years, but this season has been a little frustrating," said Hyland.

Citing Dee Porter as a mentor, Hyland went a little closer to home to discover her idol.

Growing up all her life close to this person, Hyland has seen what this person is really about, and in a way wants to patent herself after her.

"My mother handles any situation, and I just hope I have her patience. She was here last weekend and told me, If I had a plan for my daughter when she was born it would be exactly how you've lived your life until now, and I said I only wanted to be like you mom," said Hyland.

After dedicating her life up until now to volleyball, Hyland owns a lot to the sport where she has found

Turning 20 this September, Hyland is still young for being a junior, but after saying that the University of Idaho wasn't much harder than high school, age hasn't really been a factor.

"School for me hasn't been much of an adjustment, but volleyball on the other hand has been quite a turnaround. The pace of the game is so much faster than it is in high school, that it takes a little

Doogie: Vandal volleyball's secret weapon

Andrew Longetig
Staff

Someone named 'Doogie' has helped the University of Idaho volleyball squad to 39 straight victories in Memorial Gym.

In the same ancient arena two years ago, an elderly lady approaches Doogie and says, "Pardon me son, are you the public address announcer?"

Doogie says with a polite smile, "Yes ma'am, I am."

The lady replies, "I wish you'd stick that microphone right up your ass."

'Tis the life of a public address announcer. 'Tis the life of UI senior Mike Nelson, known as 'Doogie' by his Kappa Sigma fraternity brothers for his smarts and facial resemblance to the main character on the passé TV series "Doogie Howser, M.D."

Nelson, a Hayden Lake, Idaho native, is the PA announcer for Vandal volleyball games. His booming, boisterous and professional voice has echoed throughout the 66-year-old rafters of Memorial Gym since 1992.

Nelson has sported his black and gold striped necktie to 39 UI home contests. Thanks to the necktie, the Vandals currently boast the sixth longest home court win streak in the nation.

"My job is to make sure that people understand what's going on," Nelson says. "I tell who's doing what and when they're doing it. There's not really anything hard about the job. You just sit there, drink water and say a name."

Nelson's announcing style is sometimes controversial, as noted above, but he says the UI Athletic Department generally gives him liberty to act as he pleases.

"The Big Sky sets a lot of rules that I've constantly broken," the 21-year-old says. "They reprimanded me a couple of times for creating what they called 'adverse home court advantage.'"

"I guess they don't understand that when people come to a game, they want to have a good time. We have an unbelievable atmosphere and I see no reason why someone should be monotone."

Initially, Nelson wasn't the least bit interested in public address announcing. A visual communication major, he began his PA announcing hobby during his sophomore year in high school.

Before the start of a junior varsity volleyball game, the permanent PA announcer failed to show up.

The Coeur d'Alene High School athletic director, for whom Nelson assisted, said, "Mike, could you do this? I've got to run to my office."

Nelson says, "I took the mike, did the starting lineups and I've never stopped since then."

He says that the first-time was frightening, but making the transition to UI for the first time was even more difficult.

"You're in a whole different environment. You don't know what people expect." His announcing style, he says, contrasted sharply from the unbiased PA announcer before him. "It scared the hell out of people."

Nelson says his technique, however, doesn't generate excitement among the fans. "The volleyball team and the teams I announce for make the games exciting."

The Vandals really have been exciting, too. After winning their third consecutive Big Sky title, they advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament last December to face Hawaii. In fact, the volleyball team appreciated getting used to," said Hyland.

Returning home to Canada every summer has become routine for Hyland, who loves the scenery and atmosphere of her native homeland. Majoring in Elementary Education, Hyland could end up back in Canada or the United States, she has no preference, as long as she is involved with children and volleyball.

"I would like to be married and teaching in five years, but I really want to be secure in my job before I have any children," said Hyland.

With the junior setter leading the Vandal offensive attack for the next two seasons, hopes are high among Vandal outside hitters, as they know the ball will be successfully delivered where they expect it to be. Hyland is quietly making her mark in the Big Sky and NCAA record books, but her total dominance can't be judged until after next season. Along with her game, Hyland's grades are top notch as well, and has made Moscow her new home.

"I have zero regrets about coming here, it's a job that I enjoy. It makes me feel good to have someone on campus recognize who I am and tell me that I played a good game last night, that is what I love about the sport," said Hyland.

Nelson's support so much that they purchased a plane ticket for him to see the match in Honolulu.

Nelson has no formal training in PA announcing. He says he observes the PA announcer when he attends games or sees them on TV. "I just try to incorporate a little bit from everybody I listen to."

One announcer who influences Nelson is Ray Clay, PA announcer for the Chicago Bulls. Nelson says he has contacted Clay by phone, electronic mail and letters. "I asked him how he gets the crowd involved," he says.

Since Nelson's arrival, the crowd has been more involved. During his freshman year he says Memorial Gym averaged about 400 fans per game. Last season attendance averaged exactly 999 per match.

"I think the fans expect an exciting atmosphere or they wouldn't come night after night after night," Nelson says.

He says the most difficult aspect of the job is "appeasing everyone. It's hard when you go in front of 1,200 people saying and doing and intoning just the way somebody wants to hear it."

His most embarrassing moment, though, happened when he was announcing a Coeur d'Alene-Kellogg boys basketball game.

"Kellogg had a guy named Kevin Rygina. I was talking with my friends and they said, 'Dude, that looks like vagina.' And I said 'vagina' over the PA in front of 1,800 people.

"I wanted to get under the table," Nelson says. "It was horrible."

In spite of the Freudian slip, the Portland Trailblazers basketball team offered him an unpaid internship two years ago to announce summer league games, but he declined. Nelson doesn't expect to enter the field professionally, though.

After graduating in May, he will work at a full-time management position as recreation director at the Coeur d'Alene Resort. Nevertheless, he still would like to return to work for his soon-to-be alma mater someday.

"I love the university. My alarm clock plays the fight song for God's sakes. I'd love it if they asked me to come back and do some games. But, I'm not going to dwell on it."

He said he wouldn't mind teaching at the university or working in the athletic department. Nelson has volunteered at the UI Sports Information Department for four years.

In his last year as PA announcer for UI, Nelson would like to make amends with the Big Sky Conference.

"I would like to be nicer to the opposing teams, but it's just not here," he says patting his chest. "I would love to appease the Big Sky and I'd love to appease everyone else but it just probably won't happen."

Nelson doesn't want to be a magnet for attention on the Palouse, either. Yet, it's hard to avoid in a community of this size. "People don't recognize me, they recognize my voice."

'Doogie' wouldn't have it any other way.

UI Soccer Club triumphs in Spokane

The Fairchild Air Force Base soccer team was no match for the visiting Idaho Soccer Club Sunday afternoon in Spokane as the UI crew handed the military squad a 7-1 loss in Pacific Northwest Soccer League action.

Dowen Raynor, James Hall and Mike Smiley all scored in the first half to give Idaho a 3-0 edge at the intermission. Hall and Smiley each tacked on another goal in the second half as did the Vandals' Aaron Arvidson and J.B. Blessinger.

The UI club returns to action at home Saturday against Gonzaga at 3 p.m. on Guy Wicks Field.
