Homecoming '95 hits the campus

Jennifer Eng
Staff

"The sky's not the limit." This year's theme for Homecoming is a reminder to students about the University of Idaho's move to Big West later this year.

"The theme is in honor of moving up in division from Big Sky to Big West.," said Amy Czarniecki the assistant Homecoming chair.

Chalk drawings started Homecoming off this year as students went out to the library on Monday to brighten the sidewalks near the UCC and library with their chalk artistry.

Pictures of Joe Vandal, balloons and renderings of the planet earth all with the theme "The Sky's Not the Limit" adorned the walkways until late Tuesday night.

The chalk wars are just one part of the Homecoming competition though. Living groups from every corner of campus are fighting for recognition as the Homecoming winners. Activities for this week included the chalk wars, songfest, a clothes drive, a banner competition, the bon fire, an all campus dance, Homecoming Parade, and the football game.

For the men in the chalk wars, Delta Sigma Phi fraternity took first place with Alpha Kappa Lambda in second, Sigma Nu in third and Phi Gamma Delta in fourth place. The placements in the chalk wars for the women were Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority in first place, Pi Beta Phi in second, Delta Delta Delta in third and Phi Sigma Upsilon in fourth place.

On Tuesday, Vandal Jingles livened up the Student Union ballroom. The women of Delta Gamma, in conjunction with the men of Delta Sigma Phi, sang about the Homecoming theme "The Sky's Not the Limit" and Homecoming '95 to the tune of the TV show Friends. Phi Delta Theta fraternity and the woman of Neely Hall took a different approach and used the same themes with Gregorian chants.

Peter Seemann a junior from Alpha Tau Omega fraternity said, "It's always fun to see how creative houses can get with songfest."

The winners of Vandal Jingles were Alpha Gamma Delta sorority with the men of Phi Gamma Delta in first place, the women of Kappa Kappa Gamma with Alpha Kappa Lambda fraternity in second place, Alpha Phi sorority with Farm House fraternity in third place and Delta Delta Delta sorority with Phi Kappa Tau fraternity in fourth place.

For the clothing drive living groups were given 100 points for donating 20 articles of clothing. Czarniecki said many of the living groups donated a lot more than the minimum

Theatre gets high definition network

Andrew White
Staff

New York based college broadcasting company Network Event Theater have provided the Student Union with some exciting film capabilities.

The Borah Theatre is now equipped with a high definition network that will span the nation and deliver high-quality entertainment, including major motion pictures, musical concerts, sporting events, high profile lectures and debates, comedy festivals and educational events.

Sheila Kloefkorn, NET regional marketing manager said, "Having the University of Idaho as part of the network is an exciting thing for us. UI is one of our flagships in the west."

Kloefkorn said, "NET was founded in early 1994 by Harlen Peltz who at the time worked for HBO as a new business executive. He had a vision of merging the hottest programming available with the hottest technology available and offering to college students at reasonable prices." NET consists of setting of a nationwide network of large screen theaters at college campuses across the country.

Devlin Donnelly, ASUI film board chair, said, "The sound quality is better than anything on the Palouse. We are trying to bring in a selection of films that will entertain and educate the students. Students will have the opportunity to see films they originally would not be able to see on a big screen," Donnelly said.

NET is mounting a full-scale, nationwide launch for the Fall 1995

Anti-abortion activist protests revocation of concealed weapons

PORTLAND, Ore.—An anti-abortion protester who supports fellow activists imprisoned for trying to kill abortion providers is suing Multnomah County over revocation of his concealed weapons permit.

Paul C. deParrie, editor of Life Advocate magazine, claims the revocation violates his constitutional rights to free speech, religion, association and due process.

"I think this whole thing is totally ridiculous," deParrie said Monday. "They just selected me out because of my political activities and decided I shouldn't have a weapons permit."

DeParrie's lawsuit asks for a federal injunction to prohibit the county from revoking his permit and for unspecified compensatory damages.

Multnomah County officials said they had not seen the lawsuit and could not comment on it.

DeParrie's concealed weapons permit, issued in October 1992, was revoked in December 1994.

Multnomah County District Judge William J. Keys upheld the revocation on April 6. DeParrie said his appeal of that ruling is pending in the Oregon Court of Appeals.

DeParrie said he was notified by letter that his permit was being revoked by the sheriff's office because he had been arrested for trespassing during three anti-abortion protests.

He said county officials later told him the protests and his association with anti-abortion groups "constitute a threat of violence."

Under Oregon law, a county sheriff may revoke a concealed weapons permit if there is reason to believe the permit holder is likely to endanger himself or others based on his mental or psychological state as shown by a pattern of behavior or association in incidents involving violence or threats of it.

DeParrie, who protested outside last month's sentencing of a woman convicted of wounding an abortion doctor in Kansas, maintained he has no history of violent behavior or threats. He said he has a gun because he has received numerous death threats.

Environmentalists say forest service actually lost money last year

BOISE—The U.S. Forest Service claims it made a profit on timber cut from federal forests last year, when it actually took a huge loss in Idaho and other states, the Alliance for the Wild Rockies charges.

Don Smith, alliance Idaho representative, on Tuesday also took exception to Republican Sen. Larry Craig's suggestion salvage logging sales should continue even if they operate in the red.

Smith cited a recent U.S. General Accounting Office report which found the Forest Service lost $1 billion in 1994, although it claimed it pulled in a $214 million profit. He added the accounting office survey found Idaho's national forests posted a $94 million deficit from 1992 through 1994.

"Money is being shifted from the pockets of taxpayers and being stuffed into the coffers of corporations, and that's not fiscal responsibility," he said.

Critics at a Saturday town meeting in Boise described salvage logging on federal land as "corporate welfare."

"I don't care if it's corporate welfare or not. We're talking forest management here," Craig replied.

"He's working on a certain premise that by logging the forest, we can improve the landscape," Smith said of Craig. "There's no scientific information to back that up."

"They've shifted the argument from an economic rationale to an environmental rationale," Smith said. "Initially, we were told we had to salvage log these areas to capture the commercial value of that timber which would otherwise rot. Now we learn we save money by not logging it." "Now, they're changing their rationale to the environment, saying logging improves the landscape."

Students protest treatment of black athletes

POCATELLO, Idaho—Students at Idaho State University are protesting the school's decision to kick two black athletes off the football team, claiming Idaho State is treating the athletes unfairly.

A third football player, defensive back Brion Bethel, told a student protest on campus Monday that he was dropped from the team Sunday, after pleading guilty to a misdemeanor criminal charge with the understanding that the plea would allow him to continue playing.

A school official disputes the charges. Athletic Director Kelly Wiltbank said Tuesday no final decision has been made on Bethel's future at Idaho State.

About 40 students and others took part in the protest. "Let them play, let them play," marchers chanted.

The protest, organized by the Black Student Coalition, came as a surprise to the faculty adviser, James Yizar.

"What is happening is that the students feel that they have not had a chance to be heard, or at least the athletes involved in the situation," Yizar said.

As a result, Wiltbank said he has been invited to a campus meeting Wednesday night to discuss race relations.

"I'll be there," he said.

Besides Wiltbank, representatives from the Bannock County prosecutor's office, police department, students and the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will meet to clear the air, Yizar said.

A total of five current and former football players were charged with having sex with 14 and 15-year-old girls, statutory rape. Later, Prosecutor Mark Hiedeman reduced the charges to misdemeanor battery because the alleged victims refused to testify in public.

Alabama business people to push congress to limit lawsuit

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Marshall County businesswoman Jean McCrady said her legal fees in a lawsuit were almost as much as the settlement. And that doesn't count the many hours that the lawsuit kept her away from her business.

"It's a universal problem we have with lawsuit abuse in this country. But no one has it worse than Alabama," Ms. Crady said at a news conference Tuesday.

Ms. McCrady is president of Mountain Lakes Resort, a recreational vehicle resort on Lake Guntersville, and was a delegate to the White House Conference on Small Business earlier this year. She is joining several other Alabama members of the National Federation of Independent Businesses who are going to Washington on Thursday to encourage Congress to try to reach a compromise on legislation to restrict lawsuits.

She and others have also added their voices to those calling for a special session of the Alabama Legislature to consider bills limiting lawsuits.

She complained that when lawsuits against businesses do go to trial, they are often heard by juries that have unemployed people on them. "A business owner is not tried by a jury of their peers," she said.

Congresswoman says budget reconciliation could reform mining

ELKO, Nev.—Deal-making among lawmakers on Capitol Hill as they work toward budget reconciliation could produce mining reform where legislation has not, according to Nevada Congresswoman Barbara Vucanovich.

"It's not perfect, but if we could get this passed, hopefully it will put an end to this" debate over changes in the 1872 Mining Law, the Republican told members of the Women's Mining Coalition gathered at her Elko office.

"This is a whole new way of getting mining reform done," she said. "I think it has a good chance because it will produce revenue."

The House voted Sept. 29 to reject a $12.1 million interior department funding bill in part because House-Senate negotiators voted to end a 1994 moratorium on patenting mining claims on public lands. Rival measures pending in Congress include a House proposal calling for a 3.5 percent royalty on the net proceeds of mining and one in the Senate seeking a 2.5 percent net smelter royalty, which eliminates the costs of extracting minerals.

Hotels evacuated as Roxanne takes aim

TULUM, Mexico—Shrimpers and oil workers fled to port as Hurricane Roxanne took aim at Mexico's Gulf coast Wednesday, a day after roughing up the resort island of Cozumel and the Yucatan's Caribbean coast.

Roxanne's winds shattered some hotel windows in Cancun and toppled palm trees all along Mexico's Caribbean coast. But there were no reports of casualties or more serious damage.

"We have no reports of any loss of life," said Gov. Mario Villanuevas of Quintan Roo state, suggesting there was no cause for alarm even though Cozumel's ferry, plane and phone links remained suspended for a second day.

He said he had reports of minor damage on Cozumel, home to 35,000 residents and a constantly shifting tourist population off the Yucatan's eastern coast.

The state news agency Notimex quoted ham radio reports as saying Cozumel workers were rushing to restore phone service and electricity and that tourists had emerged from hotels and shelters.

The island with its pristine waters, coral reefs and luxury hotels is a favorite year-round nautical spot for both U.S. and Mexican tourists.

Meanwhile, the Gulf coast braced.

A hurricane warning went up all along the southern Gulf of Mexico, an oil-rich area of lowlands that was heavily flooded last week by the passage of Hurricane Opal.

Campeche state Gov. Jorge Salomon said some 150 shelters were ready to receive 15,000 people, offshore shrimpers had headed to port and rail and highway traffic were being disrupted as buffeting winds and rains approached.

Military Parade but no clear sign of Kim Il's succession

SEOUL, South Korea—North Korea marked the 50th anniversary Tuesday of its ruling party's founding with a huge military parade and a march of 1 million people—but no clear sign of an impending power succession.

The reclusive communist country's de facto leader, Kim Jong Il, reviewed Tuesday's ceremonies, North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency said.

North Korean media said Kim Jong Il, accompanied by military, government and party leaders, reviewed Tuesday's parade at Kim Il Sung Square in the center of the capital, Pyongyang.

Japanese television showed a short video of Kim at the podium, his chin held high and his lips closed. NHK said he was identified as head of the military, with no new titles, and that he didn't say anything during the ceremony.

The only time Kim is known to have given a public speech was when he uttered a single sentence in 1991: "May glory be with our military."

Announcements

PSA for National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week

This week, Oct. 15-21, is National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week. The UI GAMMA chapter, which stands for Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol, would like to encourage everyone to make responsible and safe choices regarding alcohol.

Jewish Community of the Palouse holds Sukkot party

The Jewish Community of the Palouse is hosting a Sukkot party Oct. 15 at noon. All are invited. The Sukkah is Behind the Koinonia house on the WSU campus.

Enrichment Program teaches Quattro Pro

The UI Enrichment Program is holding a series of classes on Quattro Pro for Windows. Learn to copy, format cells, and enhance appearance with different fonts and line techniques. Classes will be held in the Administration Building, room 225, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, Oct. 19-31 from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. Preregistration is required and there is a $84 fee. For more information call 885-6486.

Tailgate party makes second appearance

Tailgate II will start at 1:30 Saturday at the UI track. The band Crush will be performing. Food services will be present and ZFUN 106 will have live coverage of Tailgate II.

Children's Saturday time travels to Oregon Trail

A Children's Saturday will be held from noon until 12:45 p.m. tomorrow at the Students Book Corporation, NE 700 Thatuna in Pullman. Guest presenter will be Wendell Baskins; entertaining children about the history of the Oregon Trail.

Mr. Baskins has traveled around the northwest taking children of all ages back to the days of the origination of the Oregon Trail to the present times.

Children will receive free popcorn and balloons after the program.

For more information contact Michael Pritkin at 332-2537 or (800) 937-4987.

Christianity for thinking persons

If you would like to know more about a Christian faith that both questions and accepts, leaving room for individual freedom while respecting the authority of scripture and tradition, you might want to attend a meeting at 6:30 p.m. Oct. 17 at the Campus Christian Center.

For more information call John Grabner at 883-8196 or St. Mark's Episcopal Church 882-2202.

Greeks advocate health issues, alcohol awareness

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Greeks will be out in full force next week promoting health issues and alcohol awareness. Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol, has been busy planning an array of activities for local Greek chapters to compete in.

On Monday, chapters will be presented posters and a message from GAMMA members to encourage Greeks to get involved. The week long competition allows Greeks to show their alcohol awareness spirit. There will be 10 points per event given to each chapter for simply participating and 25 points given per event to the winning chapter.

Tonya Swearingan, co-chair and Area 1 national representative for GAMMA said, "We're excited about National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week this year. We realize the campus has had a lot of programs recently, but this lets the chapters have fun. We made alcohol awareness an interactive and fun time instead of a boring lecture."

Swearingan emphasized GAMMA advocates alcohol awareness and wellness issues while still having fun. GAMMA isn't an organization against alcohol, but for safety and wellness.

The competition starts on Wednesday with a poster competition. Posters promoting alcohol awareness and GAMMA will be in place on participating chapters' houses by 5 p.m.

Wednesday for the GAMMA judges to look at and award 25 points to the best banner.

Also Wednesday, ideas for non-alcoholic exchanges will be due by 4 p.m. at Student Advisory Services; they will be judged that evening. The Exchange Presentation part of the competition will judge proposed ideas and award the chapter with the best exchange ideas the full 25 points.

At the Student Union on Thursday during the Health Fair, GAMMA will have a mocktails booth. Everybody is encouraged to come to the booth and try a free mocktail. For Greeks, there will be a sign-up sheet, the chapter with the most members signed in will receive 25 points and all participating chapters will receive 10 points.

The chapter in first place of GAMMA's National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week will receive $100 and the second place chapter will receive $50. Chris Wuthrich, Greek advisor, said the prize is cash and can be used for whatever the chapter deems worthy such as philanthropies or house retreats.

Aside from the competition there will be speakers at the Delta Sigma Phi house at 7 p.m. on Tuesday night. Representatives from Alcoholics Anonymous will be discussing their experiences with alcohol.

Swearingan said, "The speaker we're offering is a little different—it's a panel discussion. This offers a more positive outlook than the usual lecture type speakers. These are people who beat alcohol successfully."

Dedication and birthday party held in new building

Janet Birdsall

Two years ago a groundbreaking ceremony and a 100th birthday were celebrated together west of the Student Union. Tuesday the Halland Physics Laboratories were dedicated in conjunction with Leonard Halland's 102nd birthday.

Halland has donated over $3 million to the university and managed the physics laboratory for nearly 40 years. After graduating from the University of Idaho in 1919 with a bachelor's in mechanical engineering, he began working for UI in 1920. He earned his master's degree in 1928 and retired in 1960.

"He has suffered with us in hard times and cheered with us in good ones. His word has always been good," said Malcolm Renfrew, professor emeritus of chemistry.

Renfrew shared early memories of Halland, including his work on the tower clock. When electricity went out, the clock stopped and Halland climbed up the tower to restart it. "Some days he had to make that climb five times," Renfrew said.

Halland's friend and financial advisor, Britt Davis, spoke on Halland's behalf about the art of living. "After 102 years, you get to talk about the art of living," Davis said. Halland encouraged the audience to avoid materialism. "If you find that you can't live without a possession, hurry up and give it away."

The UI Vandaleers sang the alma mater, "And Here We Have Idaho," and "Happy Birthday" to Halland in surround-sound harmony. A reception and birthday party were held after the physics dedication.

The physics department will be holding classes in the new building next spring, said Henry Willmes, chair of the department.

Computer labs to run bigger, better, faster

Sean Tetpon
Staff

Computer Services at the University of Idaho is working to speed-up software access in computer labs. Three network servers will be replaced, and data transfer rates will increase 10 times.

Lab users know the network has been slow lately, but many do not know why.

Every time a user starts software on a lab computer, a server loads the software into the lab computer.

Computer Services will raise the number of servers managing software for the labs from five to six.

In addition to a new server sharing the workload, all six servers in the network will do their work faster. The result will be faster software access time for lab users.

Computer Services will upgrade the network by removing the slowest three servers, Birch, Cedar and Ginkgo, and replace them with faster servers. When the upgrade is complete, all six servers will utilize Pentium 100 processors.

Two of the network servers, Juniper and Iigiri, already use Pentium 100 processors. The sixth Pentium 100 server named Koa will go on line next week.

"We will have six servers all running at Pentium 100 speeds," said Kari Dickinson, assistant director of computing technologies at Computer Services. "The labs need speed from the server more than any other application we have running."

Dickinson said the addition of the fifth server, Iigiri, on Oct. 3 has distributed the system workload. She expects the network will increase efficiency once the original three servers are replaced.

UI computer labs are connected to the servers at a data transfer rate of 10 Megabits per second. A new switch called Cisco 5000, will increase the transfer rate to 100 Megabits per second. Lab users should notice the jump in speed when the Cisco 5000 is installed.

Each computer lab is dedicated to a particular server. If the server

New English class develops thought process

Michael McNulty
Staff

A university lecturer has designed a class which combines beginning philosophy and English courses is to be offered next semester.

The course, English 104, will be taught by English lecturer Romana Hillebrand who will use an ethics 101 textbook in her essay writing class.

"The class gives students a chance to refine not only their writing but also their thinking,"

Hillebrand said. "It will open another avenue of discussion."

The idea for the new twist on an old class came to Hillebrand after she took Ethics 101 last summer and realized how well the topics would work in her class.

Hillebrand hopes to draw students who have taken ethics 101 or plan to in the future. She believes ethics classes help shape students and form "strong well informed beliefs."

Slowing down and talking about thoughts and ideas is something

Hillebrand will focus on next semester.

"Usually classes are always rushed," Hillebrand said. "The discussion often gets shortened when there are lots of assignments due."

Students hoping to save money on books can sign up for both Ethics 101 and Hillebrand's English courses and use the same textbook for both classes.

Hillebrand, who will teach two sections next spring, said her class will give students two different perspectives of study in one lecture.

"The world today needs ethical people," Hillebrand said. "Ethics make people think about issues."

In the future, Hillebrand said she may adopt different subjects such as anthropology into her course, but for now she wants to help the school expand the students' thought process.

"The university is supposed to challenge beliefs," Hillebrand said.

For more information contact Romana Hillebrand at 885-2619 or stop by her office at 112 Brink Hall.

ICL suit halts Lochsa roadbuilding

Justin Oliver Ruen
Staff

The Idaho Conservation League filed suit last week against the U.S. Forest Service to halt roadbuilding near the Lochsa River, said ICL President Mark Solomon.

"The action was taken to prevent Plum Creek Timber from building a road across Forest Service land to access a portion of their checkerboard land on the headwaters of the Lochsa River," Solomon said.

The action was taken against the Forest Service for allowing the road to be built. The land in question is in a checkerboard pattern, alternating private and public lands, "This makes public land management almost impossible," Solomon explained.

The "checkerboards" are left over from an 1864 law, which said within five years of the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, which occurred in 1888, the land was to be sold at public auction.

"They failed to do that," Solomon said. "In doing so, they set the ground for a great crisis in ecosystem management in our National Forests."

"By owning such large tracts of land, the corporations are able to effectively prevent management of federal lands in accordance with national environmental laws," Solomon said. "When Plumb Creek Timber goes ahead and literally clearcuts a square mile at a time, they do that on their own land admittedly. But the common resources that run through their land, both wildlife and water then moves on to the federal ownership. Then the federal ownership finds that they can no longer meet state water quality standards, because their neighbor, Plumb Creek Timber has so devastated that private ground."

Plumb Creek Timber requested the Forest Service for the right to build a road across National Forest land to access a square mile of their land.

"When roads are built, they generally speaking contribute up to 90 percent of the sediment pollution that will enter into a watershed from a logging operation," Solomon said. Walton Creek, an important habitat for bull trout, steelhead and salmon is unable to meet state water quality standards, because of past Plumb Creek Timber roadbuilding, Solomon added.

"We did a proper analysis of that project and we're looking forward to proceeding with it," said Jerry Arseno, Forest and Eco-Coordinator for the Clearwater National Forest.

"We did the environmental analysis following the National Environmental Policy Act," Arseno said. "We found that the water quality both in the area of the construction as well as the cumulative effects to the downstream areas were within forest plan standards."

Roadbuilding commenced at the end of September, and the ICL filed suit Oct. 4, 1995, requesting an injunction to stop roadbuilding.

"The Forest Service's own documents in this action say that building this road will set the recovery of Walton Creek back at least five years. That is plainly a violation of state and federal water-quality laws," Solomon said.

UW settles claim over animal care

Associated Press

MEDICAL LAKE, Wash.—A University of Washington research station where primates died of exposure and thirst will pay $20,000 to settle a federal animal-care complaint.

"The university has the most blemished record" of three federally funded primate centers in the western United States, said Ron DeHaven of the Department of Agriculture.

"We feel the problems there are due to lack of employee training and lack of diligence and foresight by administrators," DeHaven said.

The university did not admit to wrongdoing in the settlement with the agency, which filed the complaint earlier this year. The school announced the payment Monday.

The center about 15 miles west of Spokane houses about 1,200 monkeys and 200 baboons. Most are used in health research, including several tests of anti-AIDS drugs and at least one AIDS vaccine.

Federal inspectors alleged more than 15 violations of animal-care regulations at the field station.

The center was cited for the deaths of five baboons in November 1994. The animals died of exposure to the cold when they were left in an outside play area after other animals were returned to the building.

The baboons that died apparently had been ostracized by other baboons in the group, said the center's acting director, William Morton. Those animals apparently kept the five from coming back inside.

Other alleged violations included negligent care of animals, improperly maintained cages and failure to protect primate food from spoiling, DeHaven said. Inspectors also cited staff for permitting a monkey to die of dehydration in June 1994.

Many of the problems cited occurred while administrators were changing directors at the field station, Morton said. The school hired a director with a veterinary background earlier this year, he said.

The center, used as a state mental hospital in the 1950s, is an "aging facility requiring constant maintenance," he said.

Half of the $20,000 payment will go to the Agriculture Department. The other half will pay for improvements to the center.

semester. NET is exclusively targeting 18-24 year-old college students.

"We provide all the equipment, programming, and promotional materials at no cost to the university, in return the university helps NET with the on-campus coordination of the events, selling the tickets and distributing the marketing materials," said Kloefkorn. The only cost sustained by students will be an occasional ticket price.

UI is one of 26 school that presently began partnership with NET. Other schools with the same setup are UCLA, UNC Charlotte, University of Houston, and University of Kansas.

The total cost of the equipment installed at the UI by NET is well over $100,000.

James Hoppa, director of University Center and Campus Facility Usage at the UNC Charlotte said, "It seemed like a good deal for the university—almost too good. Installing valuable equipment and providing cutting edge entertainment for out students on campus, with no financial burden to the university was an offer too good to resist."

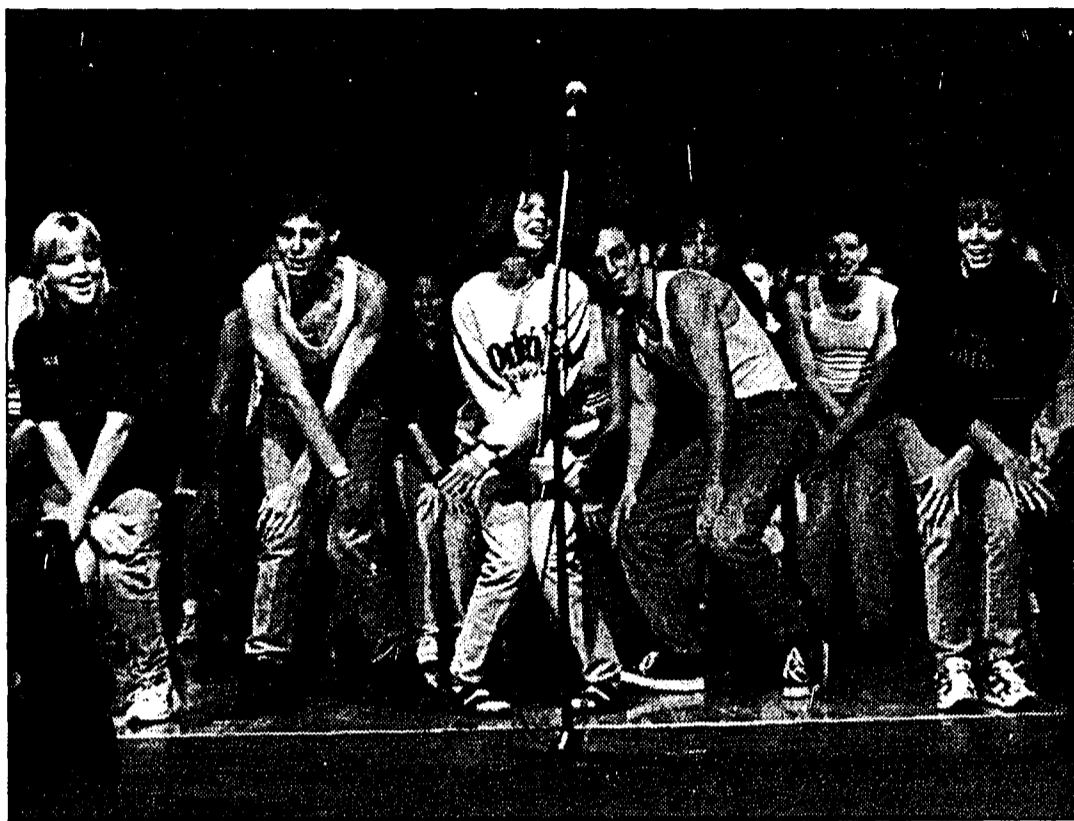

Kloefkorn said, "The students at UI are going to have access to programming that they are not going to be able to find elsewhere and certainly they are not going to find the wide range of programming at a reasonable cost."

Tuesday night a Princeton Law Review Seminar was held in the Borah Theater. Some of the nations top law school admissions officers were present live from New York City. Discussion ranged from admissions procedures to realistic starting salaries. On Oct. 24, a Hootie and the Blowfish event will be held, entailing concert and backstage footage from their European Tour last year that has never been seen before.

Don Runyon, assistant vice president of University Auxiliary Services at Old Dominion University said, "I have been extremely pleased with the cooperation and flexibility of NET and their staff in developing and implementing this program here at Old Dominion. Many students and faculty members have utilized this equipment for academic purposes and movie productions and have complimented us on the excellent resolution and high quality production equipment that has been installed and available for their use."

ment. Upper division classes will be held on the third floor, where there are four laboratories designed for flexibility.

"Those rooms are designed so changes can be made very quickly, very rapidly," Willmes said. The auditorium in the south wing of the first floor will be used for lower-level classes next semester. "We scheduled 36 hours of 100- and 200-level classes for this room in the spring," Willmes said.

The National Center for Advanced Transportation Technology is also housed on the first floor. Engineering Outreach and classrooms are located on the second floor, while mechanical engineering and physic share the third floor. The top floor is dedicated to agricultural engineering.

ASUI Senate breaks record

Shelby Dopp
Editor in Chief

The ASUI Senate meeting made history Wednesday night after lasting only 14 minutes, ASUI President Sean Wilson said. Wilson believed the previous record to be 17 minutes.

The meeting was called to order; roll call was taken; and the pledge of allegiance was said; the previous week's minutes were approved, and the only person to take the opportunity to speak during open forum was Stormie Anderson, public relations coordinator for ASUI government.

Anderson reminded the senators they need to have their pictures taken by one of the Argonaut photographers.

Anderson asked, "What budget should this come out of? The senate's or the president's?" The senate joked it would be a good idea to take it out of the president's budget.

Next on the agenda was the approval of appointments. There were six to be decided on, and the senate voted on them as a block. Krista Gragg was appointed to International Affairs; and Nancy Glasgow, Amy Henry, Brandon Eames, James Mill and Rhonda Anderson were all appointed to the president's staff for the Safety Task Force.

The Finance Committee reported that Senate Bill 29—which provides for the transfer of $200 from the Special Events Budget to the Programs Administrative Budget—was voted a 4-0-0 due pass. "It was a very enthusiastic due pass," Senator John Tesnohlidek said.

Senator Brian Kane moved to adopt Senate Bill 29 immediately. There was no discussion. The bill passed by unanimous consent, Kane said.

The meeting then moved on to senate communications. Tesnohlidek reminded everyone there would be an HIV Task Force meeting Thursday morning at 7:15 a.m. He also congratulated Senators Christa Manis, Jeremy Winter and Sue Pierce on their Homecoming Queen and King nominations.

Freshman Senator Theodore Paradise said, "I think we've got the living group representations squared away."

Senator Jim Dalton said, "It's good to see everybody's in a good mood." The meeting ended on a happy note.

Land Board looking for way to deal with auctions

Associated Press

BOISE—The Idaho Land Board is looking for a way to streamline the handling of more than 20 conflicts over state grazing leases, yet still protect the rights of those involved.

The board on Tuesday gave preliminary approval to requiring people or groups seeking state grazing leases in conflict with others to prove they are "qualified applicants" before being allowed to submit bids.

The Land Board must decide 22 conflicts for new leases, 19 of them involving environmental groups bidding against cattle operations. Jon Marvel, Hailey architect, contends land and water quality can be improved if the state allows the land to be used for something besides grazing cattle.

The board will decide, at a meeting next month, who is qualified to submit bids. So far, all of the Land Board's decisions have gone against environmentalists and in favor of ranchers.

Laws adopted by the last Legislature made it tougher for non-ranchers to bid for new leases as they come up.

Board members talked about a process where applicants would submit written statements on their qualifications, but have no opportunity for oral testimony.

State Controller J.D. Williams said people must be allowed their full legal rights to argue they are "qualified applicants" and thus entitled to enter bids.

Deputy Secretary of State Ben Ysursa had the same advice. He said once the board decided Marvel or any other applicant was qualified to submit a bid, the state would be hard-pressed to later reject that party's bid in an auction.

"Once a decision is made on a qualified applicant, you have to live or die with the results of the auction," Ysursa said. "It behooves the state to take a lot of time up front on who is a qualified applicant."

State, county offer $20,000 reward in Amtrak derailment

PHOENIX—Gov. Fife Symington and the Maricopa County Board of Supervisors offered $20,000 in rewards Tuesday for the apprehension of saboteurs responsible for derailing an Amtrak passenger train.

Symington also said he had read one of the anti-government messages found at the scene of the Monday morning derailment, which investigators believe was caused by saboteurs who tampered with the tracks and disabled an automatic warning system.

He would not disclose the contents of the messages, which were signed by "Sons of Gestapo," but said he was told several versions were found.

"I understand all of the notes were comparable in terms of content," he said.

Symington announced the $20,000 reward after visiting several survivors of the derailment at St. Joseph's Hospital and Medical Center. He said the state would put up $10,000, the maximum allowed by law, and Maricopa County would match it.

"I'm also asking the private community to join in this reward, to make donations, because we need to find these people as soon as possible," Symington said.

The county board voted unanimously to match the state's reward offer during a special meeting Tuesday.

Among the survivors Symington visited in their hospital rooms were Cheryl Jepson of Port Huenene, Calif., and her 3-month-old son, Lawrence. Both are recovering from minor injuries.

"This is not the way I wanted to see Phoenix," she told Symington.

The governor said the people he visited were in remarkably good spirits.

"They seemed to be doing well and were commenting about how quickly and competently the people of Arizona responded," he said.

Symington received a letter Tuesday from Oklahoma Gov. Frank Keating, who said he found it ironic that he visited Phoenix only two weeks ago to express Oklahoma's appreciation for Arizona's help following the Oklahoma City bombing.

"The people of Oklahoma understand your shock and outrage as few others could," Keating said. "We stand with Arizona as Arizona stood with us."

The April 19 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City claimed 169 lives and injured 600 others.

UI students serve with Moscow police

Jennifer Dobbs
Contributing Writer

When you're watching the UI Homecoming parade on Saturday, check out the UI students serving the Moscow police force as commissioned reserve officers.

Last spring, 16 cadets from Moscow, Latah County, and Lewiston began their seven-month training period, totaling 187 hours, to become reserve officers. On Oct. 5, they completed their training with a graduation ceremony where the cadets became commissioned reserve officers.

While the reserve officers are not paid to work, the reserve training is considered to be invaluable experience.

Tyson L. Berrett, 23, is a UI student and one of the reserve officers to be recently commissioned. "It is a good experience for anyone going into law enforcement," he said.

Berrett and the other reserve officers are required to fulfill 20 hours per month patrol time, which means riding with a full-time officer, and four hours of office time.

Many of the reserve officers are considering careers as professional police officers after graduation. Berrett himself is planning on a career in federal law enforcement, possibly with the Federal Bureau of Investigation or the United States Marshall Service.

Complete with a badge, uniform, handcuffs, and a gun, the reserve officers are ready to support the Moscow police department in the fight against crime.

Report ignores need to avoid duplication

Associated Press

MOSCOW—With Idaho trying to cut government spending, a higher education report ignores the need to avoid duplication of college education services and cost effectiveness, the University of Idaho's acting president says.

"In general, we feel the report is out of step with the culture of a state in the process of reducing state government programs," said Thomas Bell.

A report presented to the state Board of Education last month was prepared by consultant Aims McGinness from the National Center for Higher Education Management System.

It called for creation of "client driven" higher education in Idaho along with creation of a stand-alone college of engineering at Boise State University and expansion of engineering programs at Idaho State University.

The study also called for elimination of the "primary emphasis" designations that guide what specialties each institution will develop.

Responsiveness to students and employers, non-duplication of services and cost effectiveness should be the guiding fac-

Fox questioned on education goals

Associated Press

BOISE—State Schools Superintendent Anne Fox's opening public hearing on the future direction of education in Idaho drew questions on Tuesday from some about just how much past strategies need to be revised.

Several defended the federal Goals 2000 program, which Fox has wants Idaho out of, as well as the Schools 2000 and Beyond action plan set out by her predecessor Jerry Evans and a broad-based committee in 1992.

"All of these have been developed by people who knew what they were doing," said Rosemary Stastny, president of the Idaho Council of Teachers of Mathematics.

And Terri Dillion, the education director for the Idaho Theater for Youth, suggested scrapping all that work would be a waste of money when nothing specific has been found wrong in those past plans.

But Fox, who has been under some criticism in recent weeks for maneuvering to disband the three-year-old School Reform Committee, maintained the hearings that run through the end of the month are intended to obtain public comments that will enhance the strategies outlined in those plans.

"It's not not listening to the past but building on the past," she said.

No supporters of Fox's "return to basics" campaign platform spoke out during the initial 90 minutes of the afternoon session at a local motel, and the criticism from those who did was generally muted.

Earlier, however, former Board of Education member Roberta Fields, who was the chairman of the School Reform Committee, said flatly she intended to withdraw from the school improvement effort following what she suggested was a power play by Fox in getting the board to dissolve the panel.

"Some people's decisions were not made on the best information," Fields said. Fields said it was a mistake for the board to terminate the committee that distributed both state money targeted for education reform experiments and the federal money under the Goals 2000 program for local schools to lay out their objectives.

Fields claimed Fox tried to get control of the committee budget a month earlier to divert the money toward her initiatives on discipline, testing and other issues after lawmakers had rejected cash for some of them.

"It appeared to me like a back-door attempt to get her initiatives," Field said, and the committee deflected the attack.

But last month, the board of education stepped in, voting to terminate the committee after grilling Fields about its value. It will be replaced by a panel appointed by Gov. Phil Batt and Fox that will disburse the remaining money and then be disbanded.

Fox spokeswoman Rhonda Edmiston said the School Reform Committee was terminated because there were different views on the use of the cash at its disposal and because of concerns about duplication of effort and the impact of the governor's 2 percent budget reduction.

malfunctions, the entire lab goes down. Dickinson said the Cisco 5000 will allow Computer Services to route individual computers to separate servers, eliminating total lab failures. She anticipates the network routing to be implemented next spring.

The network servers are benefiting indirectly from the Cisco 5000. The Cisco 5000 installation is part of the Telecommunications Infrastructure Project, a campus-wide connectivity program. TIP will connect 75 campus buildings into one Local Area Network. The LAN will consist of 6,350 network connectivity wall plates throughout the campus. A computer can access the UI network through each wall plate.

Matthew Cain, senior systems network analyst for Computer Services, said once the Cisco 5000 is installed, the network servers will need to be matched to it. "That will increase the speed of the traffic in and out of the servers," he said.

Cain said the biggest problem with servers is the time delay. "We are trying to figure out the fastest way to get the information off the hard drives," he said.

As Computer Services continues re-configuring the network and its servers, Dickinson says "the worst is over. We are on our way to providing the type of service in our labs we really want to provide."

One-time tax initiative critics switch sides

Associated Press
 COEUR D'ALENE—The voter dissatisfaction anti-tax activist Ron Rankin predicted for Gov. Phil Batt's state property tax-relief plan is beginning to surface with unexpected support for Rankin's renewed initiative to cap property taxes at 1 percent of value.

One-time opponents of the One Percent Initiative are now contributing to Rankin's Kootenai County Property Owners Association and its effort to hire professionals to gather initiative signatures in southern and eastern Idaho.

"They have not seen the reform they were looking for," said Lori Barnes, who was a co-chairman of North Idahoans Against the One Percent when Rankin's proposal was solidly rejected by voters.

"I think it's just the level of frustration that's growing over property taxes," said Barnes, who contributed $100 to the anti-initiative campaign three years ago. Opponents claimed the cap would hamstring already struggling local governments and seriously erode financing for education.

Batt called his package the largest property tax relief proposal in state history. But while it was part of a longer-range plan for tax reduction, Batt has said now that it appears the state will have to wait at least until 1997 before embarking on the next phase.

Although Barnes declined to identify the one-time-critics-turned-Rankin-supporters, an unofficial property owners association report on its financial backers found Coeur d'Alene Realtor Jack Beebe contributed $250 this summer.

Beebe, who was out of town until late this week, was a co-chairman with Barnes of the North Idahoans Against the One Percent in 1992 and contributed $150 to the successful effort to defeat the initiative.

After his failed 1992 drive to win approval of the initiative, Rankin failed to even get the signatures needed to put a revised version on the 1994 ballot after both Batt and his opponent, Democrat Larry EchoHawk, made property tax relief a key element of the gubernatorial campaign.

Rankin jumped in as an independent, hoping to deny Batt the victory because the GOP-dominated Legislature had not delivered any property tax relief. But Rankin got less than 4 percent of the vote on his anti-property tax platform.

In response, however, Batt maintained that Rankin would be successful if the state failed to provide any relief, and Rankin's solution would cripple local governments. He pushed through a $40 million, state-financed permanent property tax cut along with $19 million for indigent health care that would have fallen on property

Defense bill defeat just a warm-up for abortion foes

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—The fax machines hummed in Republican lawmakers' offices with a message from the National Right to Life Committee: Defeat a $243 billion defense bill because of a single clause on abortion.

Although it seemed a long shot, since Republicans had a chance to support one of their top priorities—increasing Pentagon spending—House conservatives heeded the call and rejected the bill. By doing so, they sent a message: Their opposition to abortion would not be compromised.

"We hope this sends a signal to the leadership and to the 'cardinals' (the senior appropriations committee members) that these pro-life provisions are not dispensable," said Douglas Johnson, legislative director of the National Right to Life Committee.

The anti-abortion vote has implications beyond the defense bill:

- The House appropriations bill for the District of Columbia is expected to contain restrictions on abortion funding.

- The House version of a foreign aid spending bill includes a provision that would deny grants to organizations that seek to legalize abortion in third-world countries. The Senate version would preserve those grants.

- Senate moderates are opposing three House provisions in a health and human services spending bill that would prohibit federal funding of experimentation on live embryos, clarify that medical training programs that won't provide abortion training could still receive federal funds, and reaffirm that states need not spend their money for abortions under Medicaid.

- Both House and Senate Medicaid reform bills would restrict the use of Medicaid funds for abortion, but the National Right to Life Committee expects the Senate to drop the provision from its bill.

- The full House may soon take up the first free-standing bill to limit all abortions since the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe v. Wade decision.

Rep. Bill Young, R-Fla., chairman of the House Appropriations defense subcommittee and the loser in the defense bill battle, said the vote demonstrates the strength of the anti-abortion sentiment in the House, even when it clashes with leadership priorities.

"In most cases, people may not agree with everything in a bill but will still vote for it," said Young, who opposes abortion but supported the compromise in the defense bill reached by House and Senate negotiators. "In this case, they decided that their single issue was more important than the overall bill."

The faxes sent by the National Right to Life Committee outlined the battle over the defense bill: "If the (bill) is defeated, our conferees can go back to the Senate with the message that the House wants to end government promotion and subsidization of abortion in the military." The faxes portrayed the House as the bastion of abortion opposition against the more liberal Senate.

The National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League counts a slim majority of 218 House members as "solidly anti-choice" while in the Senate only 45 out of 100 are so ranked.

The abortion opponents joined Democrats in defeating the defense bill 267-151 late last month.

amount of clothes.

On Thursday 22 living groups dropped off their banners to be judged at the Kibbie Dome. Rules for the banner specified they had to be on 3'x5' pieces of cloth.

The banners were judged on their representation of the theme, creativity, originality, if it showed vandal spirit and the overall look of the piece.

Winners of the banner competition will be announced later. However at this time without the banner competition results, Kappa Kappa Gamma was first in points for the women with 850 points, Alpha Gamma Delta was in second with 700, and Delta Delta Delta was in third with 675 points.

For the men Alpha Kappa Lambda and Phi Gamma Delta were tied for first with 800 points, Delta Sigma Phi was in second with 750 and Farm House was in third with 650 points. The overall winner will be announced at the football game on Saturday.

Still to come for Homecoming week is the bonfire on the Library

Plaza tonight at 6 p.m. Homecoming royalty will be announced at that time. After the volleyball game an all campus dance will be held in the Student Union ballroom.

"I think Katie Jolley is doing a tremendous job. All the students should recognize Katie Jolley, Amy Czarniecki and the rest of Homecoming committee for their hard work," said ASUI Vice President Daman Darakjy.

While there are some questions about the move to Big West, UI campus is more excited than ever about the move and about Homecoming. Czarniecki said, "We are moving up and there is nothing that can stop vandal pride!"

tors in any refinement of higher education role-and-mission statements, Bell said.

He said the University of Idaho agrees with the idea that clients of education services should drive higher education programming.

"We believe, in large part, that those clients already do set the agenda," Bell said. He said the Moscow school has allocated resources to expand offerings in Boise, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho Falls, Twin Falls and elsewhere in the state.

But he said responsiveness must be balanced with the reality of the money available.

Bell said Idaho feels Boise State should serve unmet needs in southwestern Idaho by offering specialized degrees for major client groups "and allow UI to continue the strong programs in electrical, mechanical and civil engineering they now have in place in the Treasure Valley."

The Board of Education is expected to discuss the role-and-mission report at its Twin Falls meeting next week.

taxpayers had the state not paid the bill.

Rankin and his allies called the plan unacceptable and launched their latest initiative drive. And to assure the measure makes the 1996 ballot, Rankin has hired National Voter Outreach from Carson City, Nev., to gather signatures in southern and eastern Idaho, where his anti-tax organization is not as strong.

During August and September, his property owners association collected over $22,000 of the $37,000 Rankin said is needed for professional signature gatherers.

And among the latest contributors were Super 1 Foods owner Ron McIntire, a former school board member and staunch supporter of education, and Alton Tire owner Duane Alton of Spokane, Coeur d'Alene developer Dennis Swartout and Hern Iron Works owner John Hern. Each donated $1,000.

The largest contributor in that period was Silver Valley mining magnate Harry Magnuson, a faithful contributor to Democratic candidates who gave $2,500.

Idaho Commission on the Arts plans workshops

The Idaho Commission on the Arts is currently planning art education and grant writing workshops aimed to help artists in schools and communities throughout the state.

The deadline for such grants is March 1. A three hour workshop is planned to take place in Moscow Oct. 18 from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. in the Moscow City Hall Annex. The workshop is centered around helping artists apply for grants, which in turn would help to make the arts available to all people.

For more information, or to obtain a copy of the 1995-1997 Arts Education Directory, contact the Idaho Commission on the Arts at 1-800-ART-FUND or (208)-324-2119.

Award Winning Author to read at Bookpeople

John W. Campbell, who penned the award winning Virtual Girl, along with Amy Thompson, who has just published Color of Distance, will be reading and discussing their works at Bookpeople located at 514 South Main in Moscow.

The reading is scheduled to take place from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. today.

Bookpeople will also be hosting a signing Oct. 18 for lead Artist Sandy Deutchman, who's work appeared in the Northwest Poets and Artists Calendar.

Moscow Gallery West to host artist reception

Idaho born watercolor artist Kay Montgomery will be the focus of Moscow Gallery West's artist reception tonight from 4 to 8 p.m.

The gallery, located at 205 South Almon in Moscow, will feature Montgomery's works in watercolor as well as mixed media. Montgomery's subjects include her Scarecrow series, stones, petroglyphs, nudes, westerns and festive dances.

Selections of the artist work can also be seen hanging at First Security Bank in Moscow, the Couer d'Alene Resort Hotel and in the University of Idaho Student Union.

Virtuality raids Student Union

Jeffrey Albertson
Diversions Editor

Death, terror and destruction filled the Student Union Vandal Lounge Tuesday but the only casualties were bruised egos as students pitted themselves up against friends and machine in a computer animated virtual reality game.

The event, with the help of $3,000 from ASUI Productions, was free and open to all students and ran from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Kramer Entertainment, which supplied the four gaming stations, could have charged students up to $5 for three minutes of play.

Estimated cost of owning each game runs around $30,000 alone.

Of the two games, one putting player against player in a futuristic gun fight and the other pairing up teams of two to fight aliens who have taken over the earth, both had players strap on head gear to view the virtual landscape as well as a hand held control for firing weapons and for moving about the game field.

Once strapped in players maneuvered around the two story playing field attempting to blast each other or anything else in the way, the object being whoever gets blasted the most loses.

This was the second time in three years that the virtual game has made it to the University of Idaho campus.

"It has gone over really well," Kris Thomas, who serves on the committee for ASUI Speakers and Performing Arts, said, "as long as students continue to support it we'll bring it back."

Last year ASUI brought in a virtual reality ride which took up to 13 passengers on a computer simulated ride lasting five minutes.

Thomas estimated that some 240 students would get a chance to participate in the games before closing time.

Goremonger's Death Metal hits air

Matt Baldwin
Staff

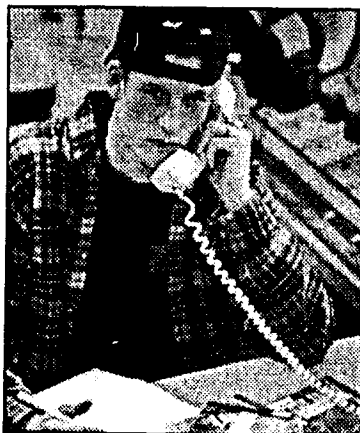

Clench your teeth together in pain then ecstasy. The Argonaut brings you KUOI in full negative contrast to the back drop of music that will make you chafe.

Spilling over from broadcasting to the world of the written word is DJ Brandon Gould, better known among the cultists and random followers of his show, Death Metal Radio—which is broadcast in the wee hours of Sunday morning—as the GOREMONGER.

"Death Metal Radio consists of intense brutal, puke spewing, gut wrenching, vomit death metal," the Goremonger whispered in his pale, broadcasting voice. Goremonger went on, "I play bands like Cannibal Corpse and Deicide, which are main stream anymore."

The Goremonger feels some of the Death metal bands may be somewhat mainstream now, "If you mention death metal to someone who doesn't listen to death metal but has heard of it the first thing that comes to mind is Cannibal Corpse."

"I also get into more of the underground bands. The stuff that you have to order their CDs or tapes from the band themselves who don't even have a record label," the Goremonger said.

Some of the underground bands which the Goremonger listens to are: Emperor, Marduke, 13 and others.

"I assume death metal started over in Europe. Half of my collection consists of death metal bands from Sweden, Poland, Germany, the U.K. and Australia," the Goremonger said.

Like Seattle is home to bands like Pearl Jam or Alice in Chains, death metal has a home in Tampa, Florida.

"They're (Cannibal Corpse) based in Tampa, Florida. Florida is the home of death metal in the United States. Deicide recorded their albums and stuff in Tampa. Cannibal Corpse is originally from Buffalo, NY, but then they relocated to Tampa. It seems like most mainstream death metal bands are from Florida," the Goremonger said.

The top bands that the Goremonger plays on the air are: Emperor, Deicide, GoreFest, Cannibal Corpse, Gore Guts and Carcass.

"The musical style (of death metal as opposed to heavy metal) is different a lot. Also the vocals; the vocals consist of demonic growling. It has a real evil feel to it. There are also different forms of death metal. There is black metal which is death metal, but the lyrical context is different. Like Deicide if you were really to sum them up you would consider them black metal because they promote Satanism. Cannibal Corpse would be of course be full on death metal. They talk about disembowelment, the raping of girls, mutilation, necrophilia and things like that," the Goremonger said, describing the genre of death metal.

The Goremonger has been listening to death metal for about six years. Before that he was listening to Megadeth, Metallica, Anthrax, and some of the older thrash bands.

"Death metal has actually been around since the early eighties. That is where it got its start. The heavy sound, like the death vocals, were around '85. Sepultra's first album was very death oriented," the Goremonger said. The Goremonger is originally from Alaska. He has lived in Washington for awhile and has spent some time in Florida. He has been living in Moscow for three years.

The Goremonger is one of the DJs that has been with KUOI for awhile.

"An older friend of mine had a show at KUOI. She kind of turned me on to the whole broadcasting thing. Ever since then I've pretty much been broadcasting. I would love to make broadcasting a career and go to school for it. The only problem is it's hard to find radio stations that play the music I do. I imagine I would have to re-locate to Florida where they have stations that will play death metal," the Goremonger said.

Facets of Islamic culture highlighted

Joa Harrison

Iranian cuisine, out of a variety of different dishes, was offered at last Sunday's 'Walk Through the Islamic World.'

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Passing through the doorway of the Student Union Ballroom last Sunday opened the eyes of around 300 guests as they sampled an intriguing culture that is often misunderstood.

People of all ages and backgrounds walked through a decorated entrance into a marketplace of exhibits including lavish jewelry, beautiful handmade Persian rugs, exquisite clothing laden with brilliant rhinestones, and extravagant tea sets, silver platters, and dishes from countries all over the world, such as India, Pakistan, Iran, Saudi Arabia, Turkistan and others.

Many displays provided samples of cuisine from various countries adding to the emporium-like atmosphere of the event. Specialty booths were popular as guests could have UI Graduate student Mirza Baig from Pakistan write their names in Urdu calligraphy, the national language of Pakistan.

ASUI Senator Zara Sheikh and graduate student Brinda Mahadevan had a constant stream of people waiting in line to be painted with Henna/Mendhi, which is often used for such celebrations as religious holidays or weddings. Many children were proudly displaying their intricately painted patterns as the reward for waiting.

Block printing was done by UI graduate student Ejaz Khan, portraying an art form that is well recognized in India. Moscow High School student Mahmood Sheikh displayed the biggest paying career of Muslims in America. Posting such names as Shaquille O'Neal, Kareem-Abduhl Jabar, and Muhammed Ali, Sheikh explained the contributions of several Muslims in American athletics.

Bill Kochman, an electrical engineer in Moscow, demonstrated his knowledge of the stars at a fascinating astronomy booth. Kochman explained the findings of early Islamic astronomers such as Ulugh Beg and the impact early Islamic studies have had on modern science.

A slide show was presented by UI graduate student Hossein Latifi demonstrating the beauty and symmetry of Persian rugs. Latifi explained that it takes an average of four years to complete a rug as he showed gorgeous rugs with eye catching patterns and colors. "The whole idea of a Persian rug is to portray the universality and harmony that a human being should practice," said Latifi. "The creativity has no end."

Following the slide presentation was a documentary film of the Mid-eastern pioneers of science exhibiting that in Islam religion and science come together as followers are encouraged to explore the sciences enabling them to come closer to their own universe. The film followed the legacy of Islamic concepts that has had effect on almost every sphere of science. Such concepts as air conditioning, the wheel, chemistry, algebra, the use of the decimal point, modern astronomy, writing, and the 60 minute hour all trace back to roots in Mideastern Islamic thought.

Professor Rafi Samizay, director of the School of Architecture at WSU, gave a slide presentation of Muslim architecture covering from Southern Spain to Northern India.

The event ended with a call for an Evening Prayer practiced in the "mosque" corner of the marketplace. Followers and observers could feel the sense of peace that the ritual radiated.

Joanne Trail, director of the International Friendship Association, was pleased with the turnout. Although she would have liked to see more American students there, the hard work over the past few months definitely paid off for an educational as well as entertaining event. "A Walk Through The Islamic World" was part of a continuing program of a Focus on Islamic Art and Culture sponsored by IFA, The Muslim Student Association, and The Muslim Community of the Palouse.

Watchdog role can be prohibitive

In the ingenious system of checks and balances, each branch of our government serves as a safeguard against the possibility that extreme actions might be taken by the other branches. However, our founding fathers, in creating this system, probably never dreamed of the power which an unforeseen fourth branch would wield.

As a virtual "fourth" branch of our democracy, the media has been transformed into a government watchdog of the 20th century, and none of the traditional branches of the government escape the scrutiny of the modern media. Unfortunately, the term "watchdog" carries with it certain connotations which have deeply informed the media's way of thinking about itself and how it goes about the business of informing the public of the actions of the government and the officials, both elected and appointed, who run it.

Before we discuss how the watchdog role has negatively influenced the media, we should note one thing: if we accept the argument that the media are a virtual "fourth" branch of the government, we must begin to question who is overseeing its actions, who is providing a balance against the power of the media.

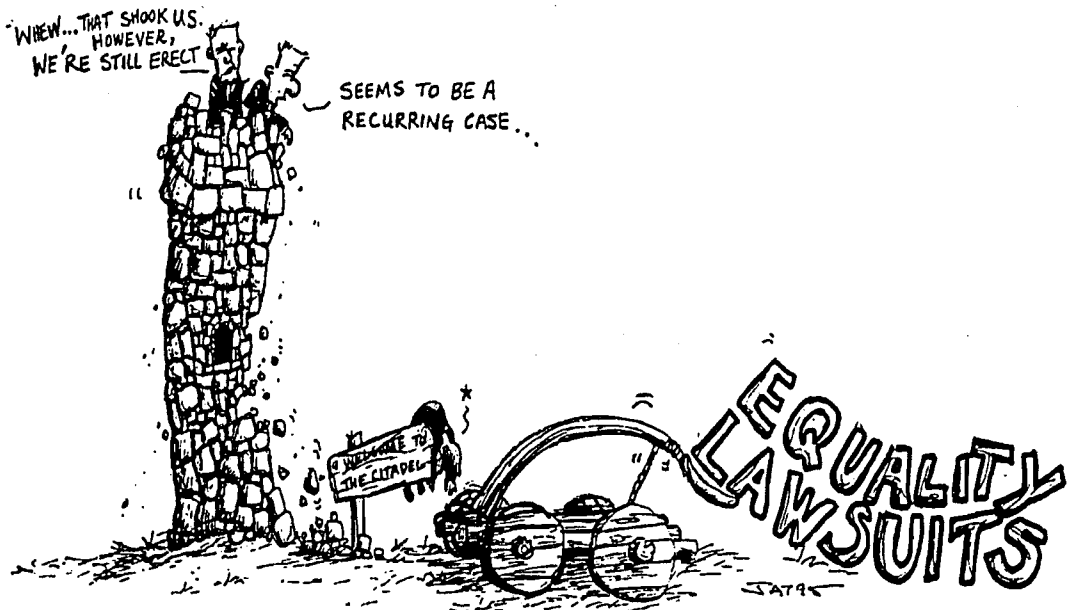

As watchdogs, the media have often portrayed the traditional branches of government as potential rivals rather than trying to work together with the government to produce a better informed public. Many reporters probably scoffed when they read the previous sentence. Work with the government? Why, that would most certainly produce bias, most of them are probably saying. Perhaps.

But it seems the media often sees itself as the adversary of government.—as if, in the absence of the media, the government would run amok and certainly violate central tenets of the U.S. Constitution in the process.

A better model to follow—a better schema for the media to adopt—might be that of conveyers of information rather than that of a watchdog. Think about it. What does "watchdog" imply? It implies the government is up to no good. The government and the people who run it must be potential thieves or ne'er-do-wells which are in need of constant surveillance. Are they really? Or will the three traditional and separate branches of government do an adequate job of checking one another?

The government does a lot of good each and every day. How long has it been since you suffered from a severe bout of food poisoning? If the Food and Drug Administration wasn't around, you might very well experience it on a much

Boring university atmosphere promotes alcohol abuse

All across the nation, college campuses are cracking down on alcohol abuse by underage drinkers. Former "party schools" are enacting "zero tolerance" measures. Even the University of Idaho has started to get tough with the Greeks and Residence Halls in the wake of several alcohol-related mishaps.

What the University officials don't seem to realize, however, is that what they are doing is analogous to putting a Band-Aid on when you're arm has been cut off. Without attacking the underlying causes that promote alcohol abuse, the problem will just grow worse.

Most "grown-ups" seem to think that availability of alcohol is the problem, and if they make alcohol more difficult to get a hold of for college students, the problem will stop. They couldn't be further from the truth. No matter how hard it is to get, college students who want to drink will find a way.

Speaking from my own personal experience and the experience of several friends, the factors that lead to alcohol abuse on this campus are caused indirectly by the university and the city of Moscow. The plain fact of the matter is that Moscow is a very boring town, and UI is a very boring university. There is absolutely nothing of interest for college students who are under 21 to do here except to drink, get high, or have sex.

People who are lucky enough to have a relationship with someone can perhaps have a good time without drinking. Those who are over 21 can go to places such as Mingles and hang out and play pool, or John's Alley and hear a band. But there is nothing for younger students to do on Saturday and Friday nights except to party.

Many college students come to college with no intention of drinking. And perhaps many well-adjusted students who socialize well and enjoy themselves in a positive, non-alcoholic atmosphere survive the college scene without drinking. But there is a large, unsung faction of students who do not socialize well, who spend lonely weekends far away from home and friends, in a university town which provides no sort of inexpensive entertainment for young people, and two hours away from the nearest town with anything to do. Boredom is a leading cause for curiosity and experimentation.

One would think that with two universities only eight miles away from each other and a combined student population of nearly 30,000, there would be some sort of interesting activities for young people to participate in. But, no. The most interesting thing to do in Moscow is go to the movies, and Moscow won't even get good movies like "Kids" or "Showgirls" that people actually WANT to see.

Campus alcohol abuse will continue as long as college students are bored out of their skulls and have nothing left to turn to for happiness and a good time. If the University REALLY wants to cut down on drinking here, they should make some sort of effort to provide alternative entertainment. Perhaps instead of blowing all of

Shannon Faulkner and Joan of Arc faced the same problem

What ever happened to Shannon Faulkner? You remember: the 20-year-old woman who after two years of battle in court was finally allowed this year the privilege of becoming the first female to attend the exclusive, all-male Citadel.

At the time, many speculations were made as to why Shannon Faulkner wanted to attend a college where she would be seen as an intruder and treated in a derogatory and hostile manner. But the simple reason lies in the fact graduation from The Citadel spells immediate success and prestige, and Shannon wished to belong to this elite group of people. She wanted to be taught in the "ideals of honor, integrity, loyalty and patriotism" touted by the school and which are proclaimed to radiate from the building walls.

Shannon's presence at The Citadel sent up clouds of discord and anger across the nation. To some, she became a heroine, a modern Joan of Arc, sent to redefine and perhaps destroy the gender boundaries. Yet to others she was an uppity, radical chick who dared to disturb the order of a century-old establishment.

The historical and extremely reputable Citadel is a Southern institution which has been female-free for 153 years. Many felt anyone having the audacity to even dream of breaking the sacredness of the North Carolinian school's tradition would be guilty of sacrilege.

Surprisingly enough, men were not the only ones who took this position. There were female supporters of the all-male policy as well, wearing a colored ribbon as a symbol of their opinion. In the meantime, Shannon endured harassing phone calls and death threats which did not, in any way, sway her from her goal.

Unfortunately, Shannon's struggle did not have a happy ending. Despite her courage and fierce determination to become and graduate as a Citadel cadet, her health forced her to drop out of the college after only a week in attendance.

As Shannon's decision to leave circulated across the campus grounds, the cadets allowed yells of victory to rip from their throats as they hoisted each other upon their shoulders and danced around The Citadel's quad. In fact, school officials were so anxious for Shannon to leave they even packed her bags.

A Citadel alumnus summed up the cadets' and school officials' sentiments with this quote, "Her quitting is best for The Citadel and for our country." Yes, the good ol' boys got their school back complete with the "No girls allowed" sign tacked to the door.

I have to say the events and outcome of this story don't surprise me. What occurred on The Citadel campus is mirrored everyday in our society.

This is not just a men vs. women thing; it is an effect of the state of our society. Modern society is fractured into many groups, each having their own private code. Anyone not familiar with this code is ridiculed, chased away. "You are different," is what is screamed, "and you don't belong to us."

Different can mean many various things. It can refer to race, gender, social status, and many times, to physical appearance. Any excuse can be used to shut people out. For example, the government is currently making plans to exclude immigrants, the poor, and the elderly.

The immigrants are told, "This is my country. It is best for my country if you left." To the poor, it is said, "Go fend for yourself; you are not my problem." And to the elderly, it is communicated that they have outlived their usefulness and quite frankly, it would be better if they died.

It seems as if, in these times, people continue to believe—in order to establish their own personal identities—the identities of others must be belittled.

Shannon Faulkner has my respect. She wasn't representing any group or ideal; she was just representing herself. Even after she failed, she never once lost her self respect. "When the VP came to get me," she said, "he told me I could leave out the back door to avoid reporters. I told him that I would walk out the way I came in, with my head held high."

Wherever you are Shannon, keep trucking, baby.

Disarming Idaho's conservation officers unsafe for everyone

Note: Fred Christensen is the president of Idaho Wildlife Federation. This column was earlier printed in the Coeur d'Alene Press on July 29, 1995. It is reprinted here with the permission of Fred Christensen.

Guest Commentary
Fred Christensen

In the news lately, our own Sen. Larry Craig has proposed disarming our conservation officers (Craig was talking about federal rangers working for the Forest Service, BLM and National Park Service, but a movement is up to disarm Idaho Department of Fish and Game officers as well).

According to a recent Idaho Conservation Officers Association newsletter, Dave McGonigal, who was stabbed by a fisherman on the Boise River while checking the angler's fishing license last year, has been assaulted again. This time no one was hurt.

The angler charged toward Dave after picking up his buck knife. McGonigal drew his sidearm and told the man to drop the knife. He did so, and McGonigal was able to diffuse a tense and dangerous situation. The man has been charged with assault in Boise County.

A 1980s University of Wyoming study found that 35 percent of Conservation Officers are assaulted with deadly weapons, twice the rate of any other peace officer.

In an article titled "This Dangerous Job," for Parade Magazine's Oct. 30, 1994 issue, Len Dickson of North American Wildlife Safeguard Inc. said COs are "six times more likely to be assaulted than other law-enforcement officers."

In another matter, enforcement officers in a small western Idaho town didn't know what to expect when they obtained a search warrant for the house of a reported Nazi party member. Inside, the remains of three bald eagles, one golden eagle and a hawk were found. Also found inside the man's house were numerous loaded weapons. Officers were glad they chose to search the house when the man wasn't home, as he had previously made death threats to officers.

A state trooper was shot recently in eastern Idaho by an escaped fugitive from Florida when he stopped a car the escapee was driving.

Law enforcement officers from Fish and Game and the Forest Service assisted in a building-to-building search and barricading escape routes to finally corner the fugitive. The escapee committed suicide before capture, but he had shot a police officer.

Fish and Game enforcement personnel who carry sidearms are all graduates of POST and are fully qualified peace officers. Hunters in the field are usually armed when checked for compliance with the law by COs. Under the various circumstances listed here, would anyone want to perform the duties of a conservation officer unarmed?

I thought that everyone wanted to be tough on crime. How can we disarm fully qualified peace officers and still be tough on crime, especially when we don't have enough officers in the field to do an adequate job of law enforcement as it is?

Could there be an underlying motive to all the rhetoric we hear about disarming COs? Could this just be some more Fish and Game bashing? Could this just be another way to render our Fish and Game Department ineffective in protecting and sustaining our wildlife?

The same goes for armed federal rangers. These dedicated individuals are not out harassing normal citizens. They are doing their job when they confront criminal suspects on public land.

This movement of Craig, Chenoweth and others is not meant to disarm our public servants as much as it's meant to neuter the enforcement of conservation laws.

Don't let it happen. These people need our support.

more frequent basis. The problem is that this tidbit of news isn't necessarily "newsworthy"—that is, it isn't worthy of being included in the nightly lineup or in tomorrow's edition because viewers will change the channel or readers will flip the page.

The point here is start thinking about just how much negative information is said about the government—at all levels each day. Start thinking about how this negative information influences the way people perceive the government. It shouldn't be any mystery why the public is starting to get sick and tired of politicians—there is hardly ever anything positive said about them. When was the last time you read an article which described the good work our representatives are doing in Washington? In the current mode of media thinking any such thing would seem like favoritism. The news would therefore be biased.

Much of this situation, media experts would argue, is the result of the media pandering to the public's tastes. The format which produces high Nielsen ratings is, of course, the format the media will continue to use when presenting information to the public. There isn't much to be done about this unless everyone were to start tuning in to the MacNeil/Lehrer News Hour and reading the Wall Street Journal. This would probably grab the attention of all the media executives who pander to the lowest common denominator. But this is fantasy. It'll never happen.

What there needs to be is a sea change in the way the media view itself. We live in a democracy, and what better tool exists than the media to inform voters in a fair (meaning in a not always negative) manner?

The media have within it the power to inform, the power to help the public become a better educated people educated about its government, educated about what the government is doing and educated enough to understand the information presented to it.

I'm not advocating that the media become the lapdog of the government. What I'm advocating is that the media begin to question its adversarial relationship with the government and begin to consider the public good instead of what sells.

our student-funded ASUI money on $10,000 tailgate parties, Sean Wilson and the ASUI Senate could use that money to get some concerts here. Or perhaps some sort of campus-wide dance, instead of the infrequent and fragmented GDI and Greek dances taking place now, which don't encourage students to mingle with one another outside of their resident communities at all.

Instead of just slapping students on the wrist and saying "Bad, no-no!" when it comes to alcohol abuse, the university should make an honest effort to attack the root causes of the problem. Just making more rules won't make any difference.

Pentagon appropriations, proposed at $7 billion more this year than the Defense Department has requested; the vaunted tax cut.

Waco (Texas) Tribune-Herald on mistrusting government:

If Congress members really want to find out why there is a growing third party movement, or why so few Americans trust government, or why the anti-government militias have blossomed around the nation, then they need to look no further than into the nearest mirror.

Until Congress cleans up its own act, public cynicism and anti-government sentiment will remain high.

Americans are not so blind or naive that they fail to notice how year after year powerful special-interest lobbies have more influence on Congress than do the wishes of average voters.

The public also does not fail to notice that Congress members take lavish all-expense paid junkets, free gifts, sumptuous meals, free tickets to the best entertainment events, hefty fees for quickie speeches, get-rich-quick book deals and more from those very same powerful special-interest lobbies that have more influence in Congress than do average American voters.

The House Republicans should pause long enough in their rush to reform government subsidies to the elderly and poor to pass the reforms needed to stop lobbyist-paid free gifts, trips and meals for Congress members and their families and staffs.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich set aside lobbying reform until some time next year. Fortunately, enough people from both parties squawked that Gingrich said he will allow the House to consider a measure to limit a portion of the free gifts and meals and perhaps even ban the free golf, tennis and ski trips paid for by special-interest lobbyists.

The Senate has approved a $100 annual ceiling on gifts from any one source, which will require a bit more creativity on the part of lobbyists.

A better idea is to just say no. If Congress members really want to rebuild the trust of the American public, they should make it a crime for any member of Congress to take anything of value during the time they are in the service of the American public. Period. No freebies. No special treatment.

To earn back the trust of the American people, Congress also should tackle campaign reform, which should include political action committee contributions and even contributions from out-of-state individuals.

The bottom line is that if Congress members want to be trusted, to prevent a third-party movement and to curb growing anti-government sentiment, then they must earn that trust by reforming themselves first.

The Parkersburg (W.Va.) News on lobbying reform:

When the Washington establishment speaks of "lobbying reform," often it is on behalf of ways to restrict the ability of Americans to make themselves heard in the halls of government.

The real action on lobbying reform ought to be inside the government itself: the ways in which the executive branch, and the Clinton administration especially, use taxpayer dollars to engage in partisan lobbying activity. The executive branch has, and should have, great latitude in broadly advocating its policies through public statements, speeches and interactions with Congress. But there always has been one bright line in this vast gray area: urging federal employees or private citizens to contact their members of Congress regarding specific pieces of legislation.

Such activity clearly is forbidden under federal ethics laws dating back at least to the turn of the century.

Yet the Clinton administration repeatedly has crossed the line in its efforts to obstruct the GOP-controlled Congress. The Veterans Administration, for example, puts special messages in pay envelopes at a New Hampshire facility, urging employees to speak out on behalf of the VA. The Commerce Department recently invited business leaders in for a briefing with Secretary Ron Brown.

Attached to the invitation was a detailed memo in opposition to a bill to reform the Commerce Department. The Environmental Protection Agency concocted a campaign against the Contract with America.

There are many, many examples of such wrongdoing—virtually all of it essentially lobbying activity intended to frustrate the wishes of the very taxpayers who pay the bureaucrats' salaries.

Congress should clarify the laws against executive branch lobbying and enact penalties for violations.

Washington officials, who assume Americans are their servants, need a timely reminder that it's the other way around.

A new 12-month federal budget

Akron (Ohio) Beacon Journal on student loans:

Republican Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania had it right when he said recently, "There is no higher priority in this country than education." Which makes the proposed changes in college student loan programs all the more puzzling.

Current proposals would cut back the federal direct lending program while bolstering the profitable, private loan industry; would charge colleges a fee for processing loans to students; would end the six-month grace period people now have after graduation before they must begin to repay their student loans; and would increase interest rates on loans to students. The goal is to cut $10.8 billion from the budget by 2002.

In their quest for budget savings, deficit hawks would put the squeeze on many people, particularly poorer students or adults who must rely on loans to further their education.

There are other areas ripe for deficit-reduction: agriculture, tobacco and corporate subsidies; year begins without a federal budget, but there'll be no government shutdown and no lapse in writing and mailing Social Security checks and meeting other federal obligations.

Instead, the president and Congress have agreed to a kind of blanket operating authority for federal agencies for six weeks, with each side redoubling its pressure on the other to agree to an eventual budget of its preferred scope and character.

This is a game of political chicken in which each participant seeks to force its will on the other with the threat, or bluff, that refusal to cooperate will entail a federal shutdown in which only the most essential federal function would continue. The gamble is the public will agree the other side caused the shutdown.

A limited halting of federal operations with its exceptional inconveniences, might well serve the national interest by focusing attention on the regulatory intrusion and automatic spending authority that is at issue.

Congressional Republicans want to curb it too much, the president says; he wants to retain too much of it, they insist.

The federal debt limit will be reached again two days after the current game of chicken is due to end.

Republican congressional leaders may be tempted to include the needed hike of the debt limit in their version of the budget package the president opposes. This isn't just a game but a profoundly serious contest between the White House that wants to retain relatively more government and the congress-sional majority that thinks most Americans want comparatively less.

The Times-Picayune, New Orleans, on children and foreign aid:

Unlike most budget cutting scenarios in the capital where the House is the heavy and the Senate is moderate, money for international children's programs may suffer more in the Senate.

The House foreign appropriations bill creates a $592 million Children and Disease Fund, which provides immunizations, basic education, vitamin A programs, and UNICEF.

The Senate foreign aid appropriations bill, by contrast, provides no special protection for these vital programs.

If the Senate version prevails in conference committee, cuts seem imminent. When Congress did not earmark child survival funding in 1994, foreign aid money for children was cut for the first time in a decade.

In the post-Cold War era, children worldwide are more at risk than ever. Political instability and war and the famine and disease they spawn take their toll on the youngest victims.

The United States, too, has an interest in seeing living conditions improve in the Third World if only to prevent an immigration crisis.

House leaders should hang tough in the conference committee and make sure that the final version of the bill reflects the wisdom they showed by protecting these programs.

Letters to the Editor

Thanks due to JoAnn Trail

I wish to personally and publicly express my profound appreciation and gratitude to Ms. JoAnn Trail, President of the UI International Friendship Association, for organizing the excellent "A Walk Through the Islamic World" program at the Student Union on the evening of Oct. 8. The program was part of the ongoing "Focus on Islamic Art and Culture" exhibit on the campus, which too is chiefly the result of Ms. Trail's efforts.

Obviously, it takes enormous commitment to put together such a program. While numerous individuals and groups on and off campus contributed (and their efforts are also to be applauded), Ms. Trail deserves all the credit for leading, planning, and organizing the evening program and the exhibit—including some external funding. There are many in this increasingly diverse community with Islamic roots, and I am sure they are most appreciative of Ms. Trail's service. Indeed, the community needs more programs of this type, so that there is greater awareness of other cultures and civilizations with which there is so much in common—for the sake of promoting international friendship, tolerance, and understanding.

Thanks, JoAnn!

WWII atomic bombing justified

In response to Gary Sudborough's recent letter to the editor, I wonder had the Japanese or Germans been the first to develop the atomic bomb if they would have any reservations about using it?

I have read a lot of history concerning World War II. I conclude that I am grateful we developed it first. We need to be careful that when we pass judgment on history we do it mindful of the context of the period.

In 1945, we were at war with the Japanese. In the spring of that year, we launched a devastating B-29 raid on Tokyo which killed a lot more people and damaged more property than the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima. Should we question the morality of that decision?

During the war, seven out of ten American POWs died under Japanese captivity. In 1937, Japanese soldiers captured the Chinese city of Nanking and proceeded to butcher 200,000 civilians. Would I be accurate if I said that war produces a different mindset than peace?

To give Mr. Sudborough the benefit of the doubt, perhaps Harry Truman did have knowledge that the Japanese were willing to surrender. So what? We wanted revenge for Pearl Harbor, and we got it. Who am I to judge a previous generation when I did not have to walk in their shoes?

Regarding the so-called American "atrocities" which Mr. Sudborough talks about, I will be the first to admit that the United States has not always pursued policies which were consistent with its founding principles. However, I am growing weary of the constant America bashing and of liberalism's ever growing penchant for self-flagellation. This explains why I am sympathetic to the conservative cause. It is time to live and learn and move on.

Eagles scream into Dome for homecoming

Dan Eckles

Sports Editor

Idaho football fans had better hope their Vandals are better bird hunters than big game stalkers.

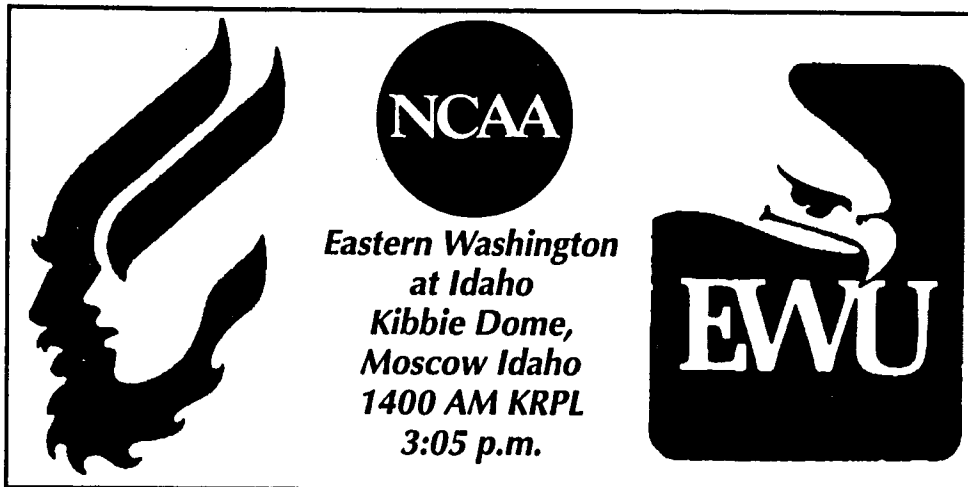

After dropping to 0-2 in Big Sky Conference play with losses to the Bengals of Idaho State and the Bobcats of Montana State, Idaho returns to the friendly confines of the Kibbie Dome Saturday for a homecoming matchup with the Eastern Washington Eagles.

The Vandals, which opened the season ranked 14th, were not in the Top 25 this week for the first time since October of 1991. All three Vandals losses have been by less than a touchdown and two of those losses came to Div. 1 PAC-10 foe Oregon State and 15th-ranked Idaho State. All three Vandal setbacks have been on the road.

"Our mood is just one of total frustration," Idaho Coach Chris Tormey said. "We're this close. We just need one more touchdown and we're 4-0, but that's not a lot of consolation. We just need to get a win this week."

The best news for the Vandals is they will be returning home where they haven't suited up in nearly a month. Idaho is riding a 10-game home winning streak, which includes their lone victory this season, a 66-3 trouncing of Division II Sonoma State.

"I think playing at home will help a lot. The crowd support we got in the Sonoma game was huge," Tormey said. "The guys are jacked about coming home and playing in front of our fans."

Idaho has perennially boasted one of the most prolific offenses in Div. 1-AA, but that has not been the case this fall. Tormey will hope to give his struggling offensive unit a boost by starting senior Eric Hisaw at quarterback against the Eagles. Hisaw, who led the Vandals on a fourth quarter scoring drive last week in Bozeman, will replace sophomore Brian Brennan, who played with stiffness in his back this week after a deep bruise suffered against the Bobcats. Hisaw has not started since the season opener at Oregon State.

"Hisaw came in, in the fourth quarter and gave us a spark. We're going to give him a chance and Brian's banged up," Tormey said.

Eastern Washington looks to be more potent on offense as well this week after putting up just seven points against ISU in Cheney last weekend. The Eagles started third-string quarterback Harry Leons against the Bengals after coach Mike Kramer suspended starter Brian Sherick and backup Scott Bond for violating team rules. Leons tied a school record by throwing five interceptions and completed just 13 of 29 passes for 87 yards.

Sherick is expected to start and Bond will be available for duty as well Saturday. In four games this season Sherick has completed 61-118 passes for 687 yards with five touchdowns and six interceptions.

His main target has been tight end Jesse Hardt. The senior has hauled in a team-high 21 catches for 189 yards. Junior wide receiver Jerrold Jackson is the deep threat for EWU. The Seattle native has 258 yards receiving on just 12 catches, three for scores.

The Eagles go with a two-tiered attack on the ground. Junior Joe Sewell and David Lewis both have five rushing touchdowns. Sewell has carried the ball 96 times this season for 550 yards. Lewis has 370 yards on 70 carries. Sewell is third in the Big Sky in rushing yards per game at 102.4 yards a game.

"They (EWU) have to feel if Montana State can get it done (160 yards rushing last week) then they can get it done," Tormey said. "I'm sure they'll come in and try to run it."

On the other side of the ball the Eastern Washington defense was more than stingy last week against ISU. The Eagle D gave up just 14 points to the Bengals despite the five interceptions by Leons. However, Kramer doesn't know if that defense will show up Saturday or the one that gave up 40 points and more than 600 yards of total offense to Weber State.

"We're like a yo-yo. Defensively I was happy with the way we rebounded from Weber State, but one week the offense does well and the defense doesn't play well and the next week it goes the other way," Kramer said.

Idaho, which has won three straight from the Eagles and eight of the last nine, has had success running the ball against the Eagles in recent years. In the last three wins Idaho has dominated the line of scrimmage, allowing rushers to ramble for an average of 234 yards a game.

That means Idaho running back Lavonni Kidd could have a big day. Kidd, who took over for starter Joel Thomas has went over 100 yards on the ground in both of his starts this season.

Along with a solid ground game, another key to success for the Vandals could be avoiding penalties.

Idaho was penalized 10 times for 79 yards last week and has been flagged at least nine times in all four of its games this fall.

"Last year's team had a lot of penalties, but this year we just haven't been able to make up for the setbacks," Tormey said. "We haven't put together big plays."

Expectations abound for Vandal tracksters

Michael Stetson

Staff

From all corners of the world, athletes have flocked to Moscow to be a part of one of the most respected track programs in the west, the defending Big Sky Champion Idaho Vandals. Not because of scholarships or fancy recruiting, but because this Vandal team possess incredible strength in talent, spirit and attitude.

No matter which athlete you might ask, they all say this team ranks second to none in the Big Sky. All these athletes realize the opportunity available to them and also the challenges before them, holding their own improvement and the team's as goals to be achieved, not avoided.

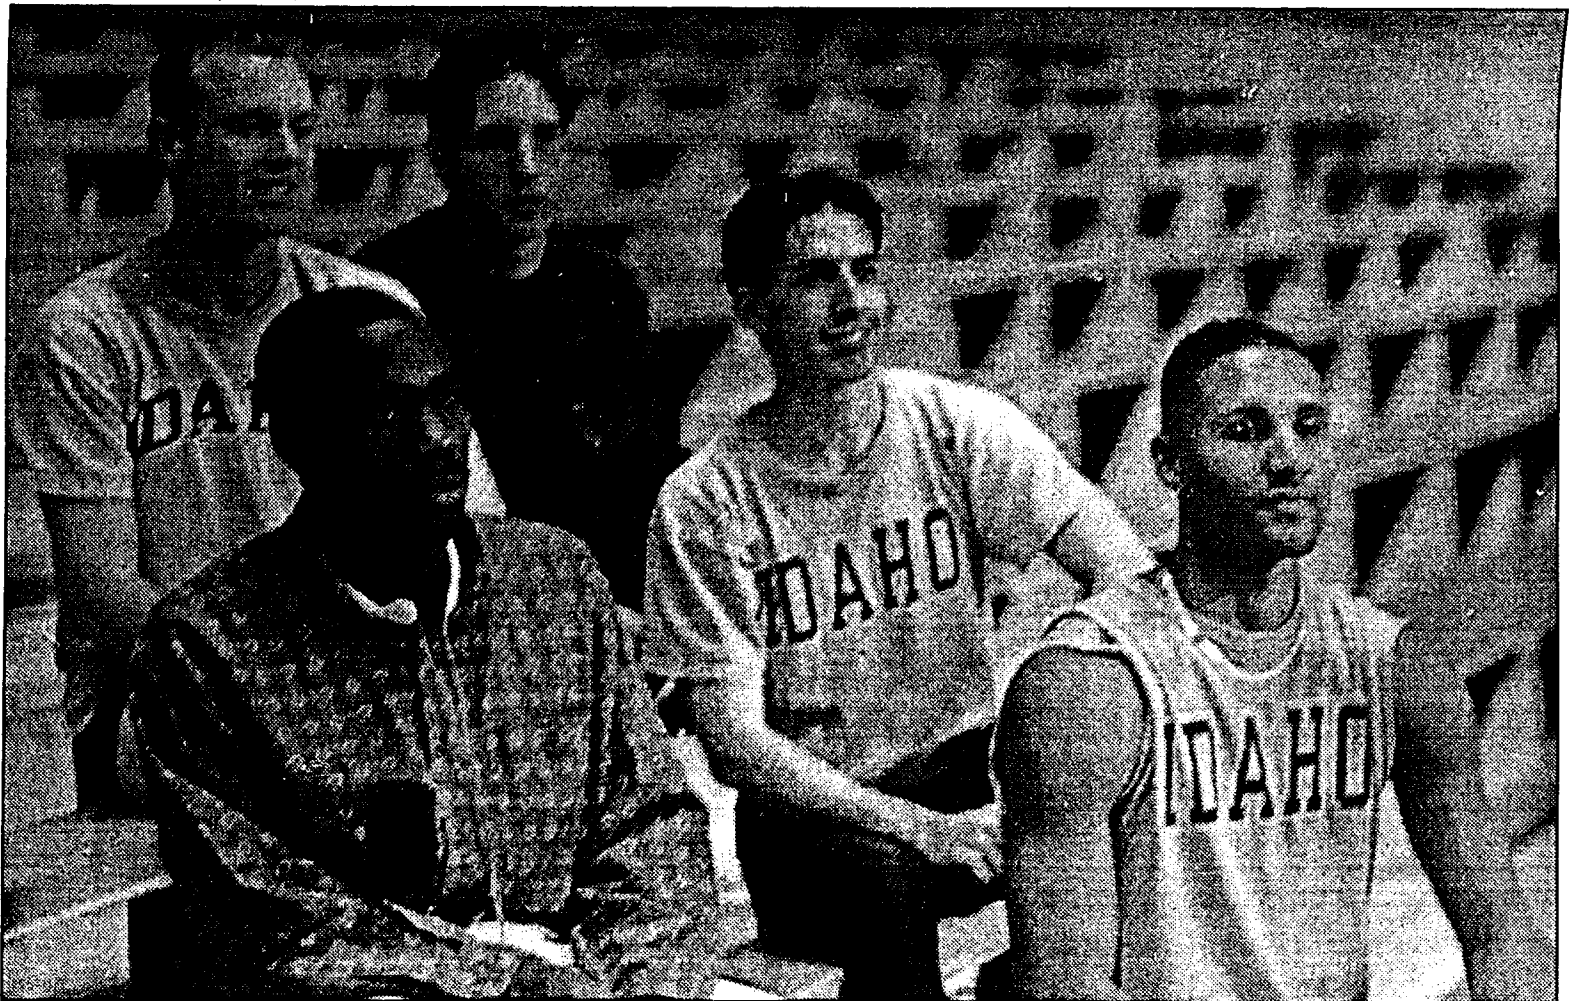

Senior psychology major Paul Thompson, 22, from Birmingham, England said "once we've got one championship, we're going to keep on winning everything that comes up."

Thompson, who competes in the 400 meter hurdles, competed for three years as a Vandal before seeing a championship in Moscow.

"My first year the organization was transforming, we were strong the year before."

The training methods and coaching improved thanks to many additions that were not paid assistants. Thompson remarks on the attitude and contributions of the assistants who gave so much time to the team, without getting paychecks or fancy titles. Thompson commends the efforts of Dr. Zheng who works with the jumpers and in the weight-room, Dave Smith, the cross country coach and Tim Taylor, who trains the throwing event athletes. All the athletes show an incredible respect from the contributions of these people.

Junior long jumper and sprinter Niels Kruller, 20, from Amsterdam,

Carey Powell

Members of the Idaho track team have come from all parts of the globe and many different backgrounds, but a desire to win is evident among them all.

Netherlands, also remembers the lean times. Kruller, a sports psychology major, talks about the first year he competed.

"I competed in five events at the (Big Sky) championships," Kruller said.

The Dutch native said his first year was a transition year.

"Last year we got a lot of good guys in, our mentality was better, that resulted in the Big Sky Championship."

For the new athletes, the rumors and reminiscences of the down times seem impossible. Felix Kamangirira, 20, a sophomore from Zimbabwe marketing major and sprinter says, "it's hard to believe the team wasn't doing well, the team's spirit is so good."

Kamangirira however, began his career at Idaho as a member of the Big Sky Championship team, missing the days of frustration.

New to the team this year, two athletes, Jeffery Price, 20, a junior transfer from Linfield College in Oregon and Curtis Kunkel, 18, a freshman walk-on also find the days Thompson and Kruller talk about almost impossible. Price, a political science major and hurdler recalls his high school coach telling him about Idaho saying, "Idaho is a treasure, if you ever get the chance to run there, run there."

Kunkel, a wildlife management major and 800m runner, says he came to Idaho because he knew the quality of the team, the coaching and he wanted to challenge himself and be the best. He came to Idaho because he "wanted good coaching to find out what he could do."

Midnight Madness kicks off hoop season

Damon Barkdull
Staff

Collegiate hoopsters around the nation will polish up on their basketball skills this Saturday at midnight.

Not because they love spending their Saturday nights sweating, but because Midnight Madness is the first legal date that NCAA basketball teams can officially practice.

Actually, Oct. 15 is the official practice date. But teams have organized this first legal practice into an event where students and other members of the community can come out and watch their favorite local college team play. Most teams around the country start at the stroke of midnight.

Here at the University of Idaho, things get underway at 11:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

Several events are scheduled including a dunk contest involving players from the UI basketball team, a dance team performance, a student raffle contest and a talk about the upcoming season with Idaho basketball coach Joe Cravens.

Students will have a chance to win several prizes. The grand prize package is a two night stay in Spokane including lodging and tickets to the Eastern Washington/Idaho matchup in Cheney.

Hungry college students will get the change to indulge themselves in 100 free pizzas which will be given away at the door.

Local businesses helped to sponsor this event, donating all of the prizes that are given away.

After all the hoopla is over, Idaho basketball players will show their stuff in an organized scrimmage. The scrimmage consists of two 20-minute halves with a continuous running clock.

According to Pete Isaacson, intern in the UI athletic marketing department and the head of organizing Midnight Madness, this event is something for both the students and players to enjoy.

"This event creates excitement for students and athletes. It gives the students their first chance to get a look at the athletes," Isaacson said. "It's made for everyone to have fun."

It is in fact, an event that is more for the fans.

"I think it's a lot better for the fans and fun for the kids," Cravens said. "For the players, it's kind of just rolling the ball out and letting them play. We've been working really hard in the preseason and it's kind of fun for them (UI players). It's an ending ceremony of the preseason."

The athletic department is hoping there is a big turnout for Midnight Madness, an event which has been going on for several years here at the UI.

"I think it's very enthusiastic," said Idaho Athletic Director Pete Liske. "It's even more fun when a big crowd comes out to watch."

Montana State takes Big Sky golf title in playoff

The miraculous comeback by the University of Idaho women's golf team fell just short as the UI women and Weber State lost out in a one hole playoff to Montana State for the Big Sky Conference championship on Tuesday in Bozeman.

The Vandal women were in seventh place, 14 strokes out of the lead after Sunday's first round and stood in third, still 14 strokes out of the lead. But, the Vandals shot a tournament low team total of 312 on Tuesday to force the playoff with Montana State and Weber State.

Freshman Elizabeth Carter of Boise Capital finished runner-up in the individual medalist race by shooting a three round total of 232. She shot a one over par 73 on Tuesday, 11 strokes better than her first round on Sunday. Fellow freshman Brenda Hall of Spokane East Valley finished tied for fourth overall with a three round total of 240. She shot a final round 77 on Tuesday.

"I'm so thrilled with the way they played today," said Vandal women's coach Don Rassmussen. "For this team to hang in there after being in seventh after the first day and shoot the score they did today to force a playoff was just amazing. Our freshmen just played tremendous golf. We've come a long way in just a year."

Last year the Vandal women finished last at the conference tournament and fourth in 1993.

The Vandal men held firm to their third place spot, finishing seven strokes behind Weber State and nine strokes behind tournament champion Boise State.

Senior J.T. Jones finished third in the medalist honors by shooting a three round total of 221 while freshman Neil Schnider of Clarkston finished fourth at 222. Those marked the best finishers for Idaho individual players in the conference championship since 1973 when Jeff Thomas and Kim Kirkland finished second and third. It was also the Vandals best team finish since 1986. There was no Big Sky Golf Championship from 1987 through 1992.

Last year the Idaho men finished last and did not have a player finish in the top 10.

younger athletes, the new Vandal track team looks for more. Thompson said the goals have gone up one level. He claims that the first year, they were in it for the team, but now the team wants to put individuals first and get several people to nationals.

Kruller said he wants to go undefeated in the Big Sky, that he wants to go to nationals and be an All-American.

"They're realistic goals, we're not far away," he said.

For the newer members of the team like Kamangirira, the goals range from setting a school record and making nationals to winning the Big Sky Indoor Championship as well as outdoor title. Price aims to contribute this year, seeing only two or three quality high hurdlers left in the Big Sky for him to challenge. Kunkel also hopes to be part of another Big Sky Championship as well as compete at a very high level individually.

With such a strong team, UI coach Mike Keller's focus must be turning on top with the move to the Big West looming ahead. But for Keller, the problem is solved as evidenced by the current team. Of Thompson, Kunkel, Price, Kruller, and Kamangirira, Keller did not actively recruit any of them with recruiting trips, visits, or fancy presentations. Instead all these athletes took an interest in Idaho or enrolled on their own based on the school's and Keller's reputation.

For Price, the decision was a three-day process. After losing interest in Linfield and wanting to challenge himself, Price called coach Keller on a Thursday and registered for classes and paid fees on Sunday.

For others, recruiting went much the same. Kamangirira wrote Keller a letter, who then bombarded the African runner with phone calls until he finally arrived on campus. For Kruller, it came down to letters and campus information, plus the reputation of Keller, Dan O'Brien, and the Idaho Track and Field Team.

With one Championship under their belts and new goals surfacing, the athletes of Idaho's track and field team focus on the coming challenges of this season and the Big West move. Kruller notes that the move will not make much difference because the team already competes at a variety of meets against top schools.

For Price, the Big West means family, as his grandparents in Utah and his sister in Texas will be able to finally see him compete. The competition in Price's opinion will be weaker in conference and he sees many more conference titles for the team in the future.

Kawulok leaves Wyoming for UI volleyball

Mark Vanderwall
Staff

Growing up in Ranchester, Wyo., one of Idaho's volleyballers found she was one of few small-town players on the team.

Louisa Kawulok grew up in the rural Wyoming town of 700 people while attending classes at a joint school made up of Ranchester and Dayton, Wyo. While attending Tongue River High, Kawulok was a four-year letter winner in both volleyball and basketball as well as earning All-State honors in both sports her junior and senior years to top off her high school career.

After racking up numbers in both sports Kawulok decided her passion for volleyball was burning much hotter than the thought of running endless times up and down the hardwood dribbling a basketball.

Kawulok entered the 1995 fall season looking to have the patented great junior season growth that has become a part of Vandal volleyball.

"We had high expectations for Louisa this season. She is working very hard and definitely fulfilling those expectations we had for her," UI assistant coach Melissa Stokes said.

Taking only one recruiting trip speaks highly of the Idaho program, as Kawulok received many letters to attend larger schools back east.

"I liked the atmosphere of the town as well as the make-up of the team, so I didn't even look at any other school," said Kawulok.

Her choice to attend Idaho has really payed off, as she was an integral part of last season's 31-3 club and is playing an even bigger role on this season's team, as shown by her ranking as the fifth best blocker in the Big Sky as well as being in the top 10 in hitting percentage.

"Louisa has worked very hard to change from being an outside hitter to becoming a middle blocker for us," said Stokes.

"She has become one of the best blockers we've had at the University of Idaho," added Stokes.

When Kawulok is not busting her tail on the friendly floors of Memorial Gym, she enjoys fly fishing and hiking along with many other outdoor activities that can be found around here and near her home.

"I only live about five miles from the mountains, so it is nice to take a short drive and get away for a while," said Kawulok.

She has become one of the best blockers we've had at the University of Idaho.

—Melissa Stokes
UI assistant coach

After graduation next spring, Kawulok expects to stay involved with volleyball. This business major would also like to return to her roots to find work as either an accountant or small business manager.

Before she leaves she would like to win the Big Sky Conference in Idaho's last season of involvement along with going as far as they can in the postseason NCAA tourney.

Next season will be a whole new experience for the Vandals as they make their Big West debut. Along with the move Kawulok will make a debut of her own as one of the senior leaders of the team.

"Next year Louisa will be looked up to be one of the leaders for this team and I think she will do an outstanding job," said Stokes.

Idaho junior middle blocker Louisa Kawulok goes up for a spike during practice earlier this week. Jared Smith

Winning streak alive as Griz, Bobcats invade Palouse

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

The quest will continue this weekend for the Idaho Vandals when they host Montana and Montana State in NCAA Big Sky volleyball action.

The Vandals, who have won 39 straight home matches, will continue their pursuit of Florida's national record of 58 straight home wins when they hit the hardwood and try to stay in first place atop the Big Sky Standings.

Idaho has lost two of its last three matches, all on the road, after a nine-match win streak. If the UI crew needs any inspiration 1,000 rowdy Memorial Gym fans ought to do the trick. The Vandals lead the Big Sky in attendance and are 20th in the nation with an average home crowd of 947.

"It's a huge advantage for us to be playing at home and a huge difference. We are much more relaxed at home and physically less tired so we are mentally sharper," Idaho coach Tom Hilbert said. "Playing on the road is something we have to learn to do, but I'm glad we're at home."

Montana (8-9, 2-3 BSC) will invade "The House of Death" first, making the trek to the Palouse today. This is not a typical Griz team of years past. Montana boasts only three seniors on its roster, but don't count the perennial Big Sky power out.

Montana seniors Sheri Vinion and Inga Swanson are fourth and fifth in kills per game in the league and both have started for the past three seasons. Vinion pounds 3.93 kills a game and leads the Sky in 3.26 digs a game. Swanson chips in 3.88 kills a game.

"They move Swanson and Vinion around a lot," Hilbert said. "Those two are the ones to watch."

In addition the Grizzlies' Dana Bennish leads the conference in blocking with a 1.86 per game average. UM also leads the league in team blocking, putting down 3.33 balls a game.

However, all the cylinders will need to be firing for Montana to pick up a win tonight as the Griz are 0-5 on the road.

Much like UM, Montana State (13-4, 2-3 BSC) brings a young squad to Moscow. The Bobcats have just two seniors on the team, but have not been pushovers through the first half of the season. MSU started the season 11-1, but has fallen off the pace a bit since league play began.

MSU has not had a winning season in 10 years, but that will change if the Bobcats continue to lead the league in hitting, .250 so far on the year. Middle blocker Bekki Kirsch is the top killer with 3.22 kills per game. The junior is hitting .301 on the year and chips in 1.45 blocks a game.

The Vandals hope history rewrites itself after taking the last 10 matches with the Bozeman school and sweeping the last eight.

Mariner fans top notch

If you were to say you were a Mariner fan, oh lets say last year, you might have got laughed at. You might have been dumped by your girlfriend or worse yet, if you were some sort of unstable individual the ridiculing may have led you to take a flying leap off the Kibbie Dome roof.

Wow, have times changed. Now, the Mariner enigma can be used as a pick-up line. "Hey, are you a Mariners fan? Me too, we have a lot in common." I remember the days when you'd ask a group of people who their favorite teams were and most responses were something like, "I'm a proud White Sox fan 'cause I like Frank Thomas" or "I've liked the Dodgers since birth". In the last few weeks, White Sox and Dodger fans are dropping faster than Idaho can lose a Big Sky conference game—that's fast!

Finally, Seattle fans have united.

For all of those people who have gone to Mariner, Seahawk or Sonic games, I'm sure they can relate. You're sitting in the KingDome or your favorite sports bar, trying to enjoy watching the closest professional team to your distinct area. Your team is down and you're hoping the local team comes through. Enter—the heckler. The heckler is that one guy who has no clue about any sport, yet persists to cheer against the team that is dear to your heart. With hopes he may die or just put a muzzle on, you're still trying to concentrate on the game. Finally, you threaten him or leave, resulting in a giant grin on the heckler's face and a death warrant type attitude building in that brain of yours.

It happens no more. The hecklers, at least most of them, have jumped on the Mariner bandwagon.

The city of Seattle can now be considered the West coast version of the city of brotherly love. Not taking anything away from Philadelphia, but Seattle is a joyous city. By the grace of God, I got tickets to the first game of the American League Championship Series between the Mariners and the Cleveland Indians and witnessed first hand, the magic of a winning season.

Wow, Mariner fans who physically resembled Charles Manson were high-fiving old ladies in M's sweatshirts. Students from Washington State were hugging University of Washington supporters. People were yelling and screaming outside of the KingDome, even two hours after the game was over. It was crazy. The only bad comment I have about the game was the outrageous price for a cup of beer—$4.25!

The fans were so incredibly loud. Not only did Seattle fans cheer together, but they booed together. When ABC sportscaster Brent Musberger was shown on the KingDome big screen, everyone, including me, booed. I think it was for the comments he made about how the KingDome crowd wasn't as loud as the fans in Cleveland or Minnesota.

Who knows, will the Seahawks and Sonics be forever forgotten? Again, the Seahawks are looking pathetic and the Sonics have choked two years in a row, so will the Mariners now reign in Seattle fans' minds as being the best overall sports team?

After the game, one sarcastic Seattle fan asked who the Seahawks were upon looking at some Seahawks clothing merchandise. One thing is for sure, the Mariners will stay in the Emerald City because Seattle has caught the fever.

Who could imagine, Cleveland and Seattle in the ALCS. Two of the most pathetic teams in both records and attendance from yesteryear are now at the top of the pack. I've got to respect the Cleveland fans too, they've had it almost as bad as Seattle. So now, instead of wishing the Cleveland fans to die, I'll just wish them ill.

Intramural volleyball, floor hockey rosters due next week

The second surge of UI intramural sports gets underway soon as volleyball and co-rec floor hockey rosters are due next week. Volleyball rosters are due Tuesday and play will begin Monday, Oct. 23. Co-rec floor hockey rosters must be turned in by Wednesday with play starting Oct. 24.

UI students interested in target shooting should take notice as the intramural department will hold its annual rifle target shoot Oct. 21. Students must be signed up by Oct. 20.

Kibbie Dome weight room hours corrected

The Kibbie-ASUI Activity Center expanded weight room hours last week. The hours listed for Friday were incorrect.

A full slate of weekly hours follows: Monday through Thursday 6-8 a.m., 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and 6-10 p.m., Friday 6 p.m. to 10 p.m., Saturday 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., Sunday 3-10 p.m.

5K, 10K races slated for Sunday

Runners 40 and over can participate in the Masters' Run, a 5 or 10 kilometer race to be held Sunday in Moscow.

The race, which begins and ends at Mountain View Park, is organized by the Palouse Road Runners. The course winds through farmland over hills and covers paved and gravel roads. Prizes will be available in each 5-year age division.

Registration for the annual event begins at 8:15 a.m. Sunday. For more information contact Wendy Shuttleworth 332-3359 during the evenings or 335-7728 during the day.

Renowned jazz bassist Brian Bromberg visits Mosow

Jeremy Chase
Staff

Brian Bromberg, world renowned jazz bass player, visited Moscow and the University of Idaho campus Monday as part of a traveling tour. Sponsored by Peavey Electronics, makers of musical instruments and equipment, Bromberg is currently in the Northwest conducting workshops and concerts.

At the Lionel Hampton School of Music recital hall Monday afternoon, Bromberg spoke to over 100 students about everything from bass playing techniques, hardware in electric basses, to choosing the right amplifier or effect processing unit for your bass.

Bromberg also talked about the Peavey Quad B-4, an electric bass designed and customized by himself. Among the differences of the B-4 over other electric basses are its graphite neck with an epoxy coating, 2 humbucking piezo pickups, and two inputs.

Rounding out the two hour workshop, Bromberg answered questions about bass playing and his concert to be performed at the administration building auditorium. Since he's without his band on the current tour, Bromberg said the concert would feature him playing with pre-recorded music. "I'm playing by myself with a CD player," he said. "I've never been in a concert when it's just me and a machine."

Bromberg's concert Monday evening featured contemporary jazz with many different types of basses. During the show he used a fretless, piccolo, and an upright that was made in the year 1720. Bromberg also talked about the workshops and how important they are. "When you go to school to learn about what you want to do, it's important to communicate with someone who does it for a living," he said. "It's all about sharing knowledge with people." Bromberg said including

Moscow on his tour was a must. "I come here for the jazz festival, and I love it here," he said. "Why wouldn't I come to Moscow?" As for the upcoming jazz festival, he said his return trip to the UI was coming soon. "Until they decide to get rid of me, I'll be a fixture at the jazz festival," he said.

Above all, Bromberg was pleased he was able to communicate with music students, or other people interested in bass playing or jazz. "I feel fortunate that people care what I have to say," he said. "This is something that I've wanted to do."

Los Angeles based Flys invade food court

Jeffery Albertson
Diversions Editor

The Flys contend that they support surf, snow and skate boarders everywhere, even in Idaho.

But, the only support the Los Angeles based four piece received at last Friday's performance in the food court was a smattering of hand claps accompanied by the smacking of lips as students munched almost unresponsive.

The performance was in conjunction with last week's official grand opening ceremony for the food court which now houses Taco Bell, Burger King, Sub Connection and TCBY.

Despite the lackluster student support the band seemed unaffected and even cheerily played on highlighting music from their debut album, 25¢, released independently on Raid America Records and distributed nationally by Caroline.

The Flys rambled off influences like The Beatles, The Zombies, Gwar and maybe even Nat King Cole, but came across sounding like a more authentic version of Stone Temple Pilots sounding like any other Northwest act on a bad night—which is not to say the Flys weren't authentic. The vocal stylings of Peter Perdichizzi, who crooned like a mixture of Frank Sinatra combined with modern day cock-rock, helped carry the bands stripped down almost acoustic performance.

As students pondered the question—"Would you like fries with that?"—bassist James Book casually mentioned that the University of Idaho Food court actually wasn't the strangest place the band has played.

"We've been touring for a while, playing at clubs at night and at colleges during the day for fun," Book said.

The bands rigorous two years of continually touring the states would have exhausted most bands but has served as an ongoing means for influence into the Flys' music.

"We kind of influence each other because we are on the road so much," Book said, adding that the touring has allowed the band to see a microcosm of the world they may not otherwise have experienced.

The Flys were in town last Friday on their way to a concert in Spokane, Wash.

rienced. That may have something to do with material the Flys choose to cover including such hot acts as The Bee Gees as well as an occasional Sinatra cover. 25¢ had the band working with producer Michael Blum, who's worked with Goo-Goo Dolls and Low Pop Suicide. Presently The Flys have plans for a new album to be available sometime in 1996.

LC's Brew Review: Ice beer and what you can do with it

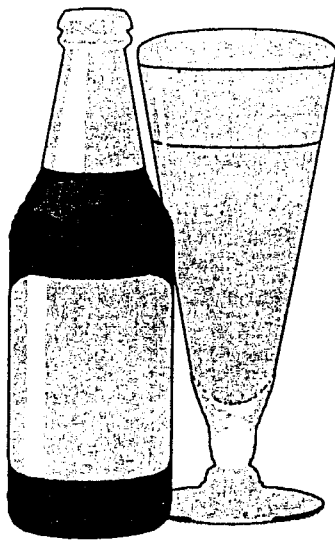

Erik Marone
Staff

You wouldn't believe the number of requests I've received from my Argonaut colleagues to review some of these newfangled "ice" beers. Since it would be impossible to distinguish any particular brand from another, I'll just let you know that Miller Ice, Bud Ice, Schmidt Ice, Henry's Ice Ale, Keystone Ice, Rainier Ice and every other incarnation of ice beer is pretty much going to taste the same. They are all your basic pilsner style beer, but processed in a very similar manner to that of the eisbocks of old Bavaria.

The process involved brewing a beer, in this case a pils, and cooling it to below freezing. The Germans used to do this with a nice hearty bock. Once the beer starts to freeze, the ice is removed and the remaining beer has a much higher alcohol content because alcohol has a much lower freezing point than water. Anyone who has ever stuck a can of beer in snow or the freezer has probably inadvertently or intentionally produced their own ice beer.

I believe the beer commercial goes "More of what you want, less of what you don't." This is very true if you want more of a buzz with less flavor. Come on, folks. Anyone who drinks ice beer certainly isn't doing it for the taste since most of the flavor is done away with when they pull the ice from the beer. The thing I hear most frequently in a feeble attempt to justify drinking ice beer is "Hey, man, this stuff gets you SO wasted, and you don't have to drink as much!" Thanks a bunch, guys and gals of the ice beer persuasion. It's that mentality that gives beer drinkers a bad name.

But if you're going to persist in your ways, then you might as well put that beer to some good use and grab a copy of "The Complete Book of Beer Drinking Games." This delightful tome will be a welcome addition to any library, just don't shelve it next to your "Simon and Schuster Pocket Guide to Beer" or "Beer Enthusiast's Guide."

Not only is the book filled with 50 fun and exciting drinking games, it has all kinds of neat beer trivia, amusing pictures and lists with titles like "Nine Foreign Terms for 'Hangover'" as well as tips on perfecting your power chug and road tripping.

Most importantly, you'll find the rules to drinking game standards like Fuzzy Duck, Cardinal Puff, Quarters, and Beer Hunter. There's plenty of new games to try on every page; you'll be all the rage at the next party when you start a round of Tending the Teat, Fizz Buzz or Indian Sweat. And every game is rated by its Boot Factor: likeliness that someone will experience upward nutritional mobility, or zook before the game is over. And when the party is over, there is a handy-dandy list of things to do, like stealing road signs, wearing six-pack cartons like party hats and passing out.

"War and Peace" it's not, but it can make drinking beer much more than just drinking beer. However, you probably won't want to attempt any of the games in this book with the kind of beer usually found in this column, as the Argonaut's own Dennis Sasse can attest.

"The Complete Book of Beer Drinking Games" is available at most fine book stores, probably in the humor and games section.

Celebration planned for Moscow Author Carol Ryrie Brink

Shannon Paterson
Staff

Carol Ryrie Brink was a renowned and award-winning author.

What's more, she was born and raised in Moscow.

"I was really dismayed when I moved here that people didn't know about her," said Mary Reed, of the Latah County Historical Society. "She's a wonderful role model...and she taught people what a community is. She was a very cheerful, happy woman."

Several events are planned between Oct.

14 and 21 in celebration of her 100th birthday anniversary. The celebration, titled Chain of Hands, includes music, educational programs, parties and the dedication of the Carol Ryrie Brink Park on Oct. 20.

Brink was orphaned at eight-years-old and lived with her grandmother at 310 S. Van Buren and 124 N. Polk. She also attended the University of Idaho for three years and was one of the original founders of Gamma Phi Beta's UI chapter, according to Kelley Kierland, Gamma Phi's public relations chairperson.

The entire effort is sponsored solely by volunteers from the LCHS, Moscow-Latah County Library System, Moscow School District, Moscow Arts Commission, Moscow Historic Preservation Commission, Appaloosa Museum, Palouse-Clearwater Environmental Institute and the Gamma Phi sorority.

The park, which is located on school district land at the corner of Mountain View and Joseph streets, will feature native plants and a teaching lab for local students to take advantage of.

"We'll be naming the park after her, which is a notable event," said Reed. "It's been a dream of mine for a long time to have something named after her."

"She only came back a few times, but she remembered Idaho so fondly," said Reed. "Her roots went very deep into Idaho and a lot of what she wrote has a special setting in this area."

Brink wrote a trilogy on Idaho titled Buffalo Coat, Strangers in the Forest and Snow in the River, for which she won an award from the American Pen Women. Three of her juvenile fiction books that are set in Moscow include All Over Town, Two Are Better Than One, and Louly. She was also awarded the Newbery Award for the children's classic Caddie Woodlawn.

Chairity Auction set for LC Center

Justin Cason
Staff

With the passing of summer, it now seems as if a lot of the best foods are out of season. Luckily, chairs are ripe for the picking.

Thanks to the efforts of the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts & History, dozens of local artists were called in from all over the region to create and design chairs.

On Oct. 14, at 7:30 p.m., these chairs will be auctioned off to the highest—or most chair-less—bidder. There will be a gallery preview at 7 p.m. so that audience members can orient themselves to the various works.

"There are 37 chairs in all, using every possible theme and every medium," said Leslie Esselburn, director of the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts & History.

The gallery contains chairs made from just about anything imaginable. Gingerbread, paper mache, beads and driftwood were only a few of the materials used, according to Esselburn. One chair even contains a small aquarium with a live goldfish inside.

The artists had two options as to how they wanted to design their chair. They could either create a chair from scratch or they could add to one given to them.

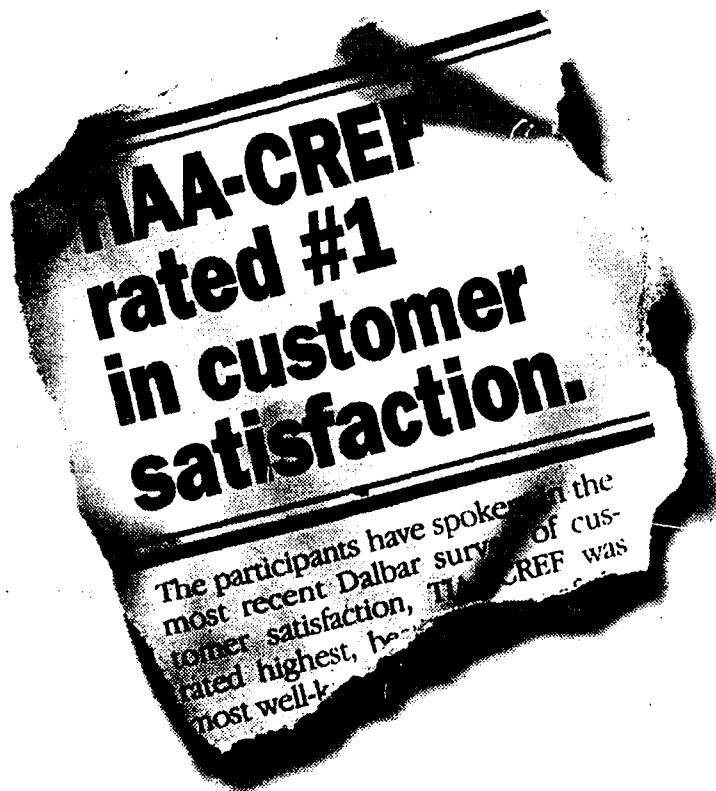

The whole idea of designing and auctioning off such an unlikely object was quite a challenge for Esselburn and the center.

"To my knowledge, this is the first time an event of this nature has taken place in the area," she said. The result of this experiment in art was a majority of chairs designed for children.

The 7 p.m. preview will also feature a People's Choice Award, in which bidders vote for their favorite work.

The Lewis-Clark Center for Arts & History is located at 415 Main in Lewiston. Admission is $3.

Proceeds from the auction support the center, which is also responsible for "Centerstage," a theater arts series, and the Dogwood Festival, a community arts project. For additional information, call (208) 799-2243.

Hu-Dehart speaks on diversity

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Multiculturalism still stands as a pervasive issue of discussion on campuses nationwide—even on a “majority campus” such as the University of Idaho.

Kicking off “Cultural Diversity: Meeting 21st Challenges in Higher Education” last Monday was Professor of History Evelyn Hu-Dehart from the University of Colorado at Boulder.

“I’m a good living, breathing example of what multiculturalism is,” said Hu-Dehart who speaks several foreign languages and has spoken to over 30 universities and organizations including the Smithsonian and the New York Asian Society.

By the time she was 12 she had been a refugee twice and learned the value of multiculturalism simply to survive. Survival skills that she believes have served her well.

Hu-Dehart takes every opportunity possible to speak for her cause. After writing two books and her appearance on the MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour, Hu-Dehart said she has received a lot of hate mail. But it hasn’t stopped her from working to prove that America is multicultural and always has been multicultural.

Hu-Dehart reminded the audience of our own diverse campus which contains foreign students from 89 different countries. “How do we prepare our people to head into a diverse world?” asks Hu-Dehart of a university that she says “exports as many people as potatoes.” Hu-Dehart says that institutionalizing multiculturalism is important as we head into the next millennium.

Hu-Dehart says the challenges that were overcome by the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s and such organizations around political equality were what helped “chip away” at a culture that had been nurtured for too long by whites. Three demands are clear in institutionalizing multiculturalism: a diversity of students in higher education, recruitment of minority faculty, and multicultural curricula.

“We’re not looking into the crystal ball to see that demographics are changing,” says Hu-Dehart. Demographics alone have brought a diversity of students to campuses nationwide. Hu-Dehart asserts that by the year 2020, one-third of the population will be non-white with a large growth rate occurring in the Latino and Asian population. “Today’s minority is tomorrow’s numerical majority,” says Hu-Dehart. Hu-Dehart especially emphasized the rapidly growing Asian-American population recognizing the diversity of Asian-Americans themselves.

Special programs and specific associations are necessary for these groups to reaffirm their identity and heritage. While critics believe that this creates a resegregation of the races, Hu-Dehart counters that voluntary association is very different than resegregation.

Retaining a diversity of students means recruiting minority faculty and multicultural curricula, says Hu-Dehart using faculty and curricula to accomplish each other creating equal opportunity for historically excluded minorities. Hu-Dehart says it is not the differences of groups that creates strain, but rather the ordering of values and denial of opportunity.

“Cultural diversity is not about celebrating differences,” say Hu-Dehart. “It is about the sharing of power.” She affirms that diverse peoples should not give up their differences, but instead should see what difference those differences can make.

Linda Morris, director of UI Multicultural Affairs, recently returned from a conference in Philadelphia and hopes to get faculty and students aware and examine efforts to integrate multiculturalism. The program was sponsored by the Office of Multicultural Affairs and the UI Office of Teaching Enhancement.

The Book of Virtues

In a world that is lacking in good old-fashioned decency, The Book of Virtues offers a refreshing reminder of such morals as self-discipline, loyalty, honesty, compassion, responsibility, and friendship.

William Bennett, former Secretary of Education under Reagan, compiles a medley of hundreds of works ranging from The Little Steam Engine that Could to pieces by Aristotle, Emerson, and Martin Luther King, Jr. as well as many others.

The Book of Virtues contains over 800 pages of moral building reminders that are essential for good character.

Although it's not by any means a new book on the best-seller list, The Book of Virtues is in a category of its own. Better than any self-help or inspirational book I've ever read, Bennett's anthology of great moral stories gave me a glimpse of myself. Every night I could pick up the book, arbitrarily turn to a page and somehow gain insight of my personal identity.

Bennett admittedly and intentionally excludes topics such as nuclear war, abortion, animal rights, etc. Instead the stories focus on those things that are more fundamental than race, sex, gender, and political or religious background.

No matter whether the reader is eight or 80, there's something to gain in this book. As a student I have found this book to better equip myself to reach a reasoned position on the tough issues that we are faced with everyday.

Bennett's commentary before each moral category alone is uplifting. After reading textbooks and news all day, this treasury is therapy for the human soul.

Bennett received his Bachelor's in philosophy from Williams College, his PhD in political philosophy from University of Texas, and a law degree from Harvard.

There is little doubt that this man has seen his day of corruption and cynicism yet merely through reading children's stories and classic literatures of the past and present he has maintained the simple virtues that can so easily be lost in a corporate society in which individuals too often try to be a victim.

THIS WEEKEND ON THE PALOUSE

Despite all of the activity occurring this week on campus for Homecoming weekend, why not spice up your agenda by checking out what bands are playing on the Palouse.

After the bonfire Friday or the big game Saturday, make a trip downtown to see Big Daddy at John's Alley, $3 cover. Or, if that doesn't work out, go to the Alley Saturday night to see Made of Wood, also a $3 cover.

At Cadillac Jack's this weekend, the U.S. Blues band will be in town to perform Thursday through Saturday. A blues and rock 'n roll band, U.S. Blues is just one of many different playing at the new "no country" atmosphere of Cadillac Jack's. As part of the change, there will be no cover charge.

Upstairs at the Moscow Social Club Friday, a 26-piece big band will take the stage to perform classic swing and dance numbers. The cover is $5.

Finally, moving across the street, Crush will be at the Capricorn Thursday through Saturday. Cover charge on any night is $2. Ladies get in free on Thursday.

Green Day

Insomniac

I have been a fan of this group ever since their first seven-inch record came out. I have found every album very enjoyable, even the major label record Dookie despite the fact that it is very overplayed on the radio.

Naturally, I was excited to receive a promo of the brand-new album titled Insomniac. I listened to this album three times in a row and was very disappointed.

I just could not bring myself to like this album even after multiple listens and it really makes me feel bad. There are 14 songs on the album and except for about four songs none of them really seem to have any flare to them.

It sounds like the boys from Berkeley Calif. are tired from touring and have not had time to write any of the brilliant catchy songs that they have done in the past. Another thing that bothered me about this album is that it is very overproduced, even more so than Dookie was. I feel that punk rock albums should not be this produced, it takes the edge away from them and makes them sound generic.

The album is not all bad, songs like "Bab's Uvula who?", "Panic Song", "Stuart and the Ave." and of course "Geek written songs that are fun to listen to but still fall short compared to earlier works.

I am still waiting for Bille Joe to write a song as good as "Disappearing Boy" and "2000 Light Years".

Oh well, I can always go listen to the old albums. It would probably be in your best interest to save your money or get something else, because you will not lose sleep over missing out on Insomniac.

Prichard displays 'Prospect Park' series

The University of Idaho's Prichard Art Gallery is about to show off one of the modern art world's best kept secrets.

From Oct. 13 through Nov. 18, the gallery will showcase an exhibition by Joseph DiGiorgio, an impressionist artist from Brooklyn. Dubbed The Prospect Park Series, the works all feature the park by that same name.

"This will be the first time that these works will be seen in public," said Wally Mason, director of University Galleries.

In fact, following upcoming gallery exhibitions at the University of Arizona Art Museum and Syracuse University's Everson Museum of Art, all 200 of the drawings will be for sale. The three-college tour ends in 1997.

The Prospect Park Series reveals the park environment during all four seasons. It took the artist a full year to complete the project.

The park itself was designed by the nationally-renowned landscape architect Frederic Law Olmsted, who, incidentally, is also responsible for the creation of the quad outside of the Administration Building. DiGiorgio, who was raised in Brooklyn, visited the park quite frequently while growing up.

Bringing DiGiorgio's work to UI turned out to be quite easy for the Prichard Art Gallery. Mason had already been working with the artist on the project for two years when he was hired by the university last year. Asking DiGiorgio to have his work displayed was only natural.

"It was really a matter of being at the right place at the right time," Mason said.

The series of works are evenly divided among the seasons, containing 50 of each. DiGiorgio created the oil pastel drawings from his studio site on Prospect Park.

While the artist generally works with the "untamed" landscape, this series is the first set of works in which DiGiorgio used a preconceived idea or subject.

The artist, who has been in the business for 45 years, will be appearing tonight at an opening night reception from 5-8 p.m. This will be DiGiorgio's first time at the university.

Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. from Monday through Friday, and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday. For information call 885-3586.
