Former Senator honored at building dedication

Janet Birdsall

Rain couldn't dampen the enthusiasm at the dedication of the James A. McClure Hall Friday afternoon. "I see people crowding under the tent there, probably hoping I'll quit soon. But I'll continue," said Robert Bartlett, dean of the College of Mines and Earth Resources as the rain began.

The audience laughed as more people squeezed under the two small tents.

The dedication began at 2:30 p.m., and security was tight at the event. Earlier in the day, a bomb threat had emptied two campus agriculture buildings.

Several local and national political figures were present at the dedication besides former U.S. Senator McClure. Moscow Mayor Paul Agidius, Representative Maynard Miller and Congressman Helen Chenoweth attended the ceremonies.

The new earth resources building is already being used for classes this semester. It also provides enough office space for the staff and graduate students. Previously, the department activities took place in seven different campus buildings.

"McClure Hall is a huge improvement in the university infrastructure," Bartlett said.

The project cost $11.8 million, with $8.8 million provided by a federal grant, $1 million was contributed by industry and individuals, and the remaining $2 million was appropriated by the Idaho legislature.

Speakers at the dedication praised the College of Mines and Earth Resources and Sen. McClure. "This university still provides some of the highest quality graduates to be found anywhere in the world," said Dennis Wheeler of the Coeur d'Alene Mines Corporation.

Roy Mosman, a member of the state Board of Education, spoke of getting to know McClure through their being co-chairs of the University of Idaho's Presidential Search Committee.

"He's an intelligent, perceptive man. More important, in my view, is he's a nice person. He's a nice guy," Mosman said.

UI Interim President Tom Bell read letters of congratulations to McClure from Senator Bob Dole and former President George Bush.

McClure graciously accepted the honors. "In some respects, it is not fitting that my name be on the building because many others have done so much more than I," he said. "I'm proud to be a part of it, and I'm proud to be here today."

McClure was presented with the Distinguished Idahoan Award later in the day by the UI Alumni Association. McClure is a UI alumnus, and was recognized for his service, contributions and national reputation.

Improvements move above ground at Library Plaza

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Even though the library is finished, dirt still flies on that end of campus.

Part of the improvements to the University of Idaho library included second phase landscaping which the university now has the opportunity to finish.

The Library Plaza extends from Renfrew Hall up to Memorial gym. In the renovations made to the library two levels of benches were installed along the pathway. Now plants are scheduled to go into the plaza area.

The initial work of this phase has been invested in the infrastructure of the plaza such as irrigation pipes. Pankopf said, "We've done a lot of work, but not visible work. This is the first phase that allows students and faculty to see the improvements."

Raymond Pankopf, the associate director of Architectural and Engineering Services said the two levels of seating are already working well as they accommodate a great deal of people on nice days.

Facilities management is donating the cost of labor for UI's ground and building exterior crews to plant trees, shrubs and ground cover over the next few weeks. The exterior crews are planting London plane, red maple and magnolia trees and will work on an annual planting bed in the large raised planter between Renfrew Hall and the library.

Facilities Management made this donation to help stretch the planting materials budget. Pankopf said money for landscaping came from carry over money left from phase one of the library improvements. Jerry Wallace, vice-president of Financial Affairs, contributed additional money from Financial Affairs.

Crews are working to remove some gravel areas east of the buildings and restoring them with turf.

Pankopf said this asphalt was always meant to be temporary, it was only there for construction purposes. Soon there should be less asphalt and more green.

Last year during some of the initial phase, work was concentrated on connecting the library entrance with the southeast entrance of Renfrew Hall. Concrete planter areas, retaining walls, walks, and lighting were part of the improvements.

Along with the plans for plants other raised planters, seat walls, more lighting, finished hard scape and additional trees and shrubs are planned.

Pankopf said, one of the most important aspects of the Library Plaza is the walkway it provides for people going to classes. The circulation pattern through the plaza criss-crosses and is not restricted to one path and it will continue to not have a formal circulation pattern.

Pankopf said the feeling of the plaza is to be an outdoor meeting area. "You can sit down and watch the world go by."

The only major obstruction for the completion of the plaza has been money. Pankopf said, "We have a good design; the first phase validates that. It has been very difficult to find the dollars to fund this progression."

A rendering of the project is on display at the library.

Boise State engineering program decision 'purely political'

Sean Tetpon
Staff

The Idaho state Board of Education has granted control of cooperative engineering programs in Boise from the University of Idaho to Boise State University. The board voted five to three in favor of BSU last Thursday.

Associate Dean for Academic Affairs of the UI College of Engineering, Weldon R. Tovey, said Thursday it was a "mistake" to turn control of the engineering programs over to BSU.

"We are on the verge of having an accredited program," he said. "When control of the program changes to another institution, the accreditation is automatically canceled."

Tovey said development of an independent engineering program at BSU will not affect UI initially, however, resources will be diverted from UI's engineering program after the BSU engineering program gets established, and becomes accredited.

"There are only a certain number of dollars and students in the state," he said. "You can't afford to have every program in every location."

Idaho state Board of Education member Thomas Dillon believes Idaho can afford two engineering programs. In an Oct. 10 proposal regarding responsibility of engineering education in Boise, sent to education board member Roy E. Mosman of Moscow, Dillon said, "The decision (to establish a Boise-based engineering program) was recommended by UI and BSU administrators, approved by the board, and funded by the legislature."

Tovey said the education board may be able to turn over the Boise engineering program budget from UI to BSU. "However, it is not quite that easy to switch faculty and students," he said.

Faculty hired for the UI engineering program in Boise are "suddenly out of a job," Tovey said. He added some education board members believe UI engineering faculty at BSU still have jobs, and the only significant change will see BSU sign their paychecks, instead of UI.

However, Tovey says faculty will resign over the fact BSU has a new, inexperienced engineering program. "When they were hired on, they joined a faculty of a well-established program with experience, a reputation, and research programs," he said. "Some of them do not want to be involved in a brand-new, start-up program."

In his proposal to relinquish UI control of the engineering program in Boise, Dillon states, "Our

Former President urges optimism about America's future

TWIN FALLS, Idaho—Former President Gerald Ford urged civic leaders in southern Idaho's Magic Valley on Thursday to remain optimistic about the America and its future.

"With all of our problems at home and abroad I have been asked, 'Are you going to give up on America?'" Ford said. "My answer emphatically is 'no.' We have had our share of problems and solved tougher ones."

In an inspirational address to some 900 people at the Chamber of Commerce's Ambassadors Success Breakfast, Ford said that despite past mistakes he gives no quarter to those who want to "sell America short."

"I'm fed up these days with some of our fellow citizens who enjoy bashing America," the 38th president said. "These pessimists are dead wrong and do not have faith in the history of our country."

Ford said history vindicates the record of the United States—victory in two world wars and the Cold War, surviving the Great Depression and overcoming the tragedy of seven recessions in modern times.

"So when you add up all pluses and minuses, the record of the U.S. in last 80 years is a good one," he said.

Today's fundamental problem, he said, is the economy and the critical need to reduce deficits and ultimately balance the federal budget.

And while the nation's health care system is the best in the world, Ford called for changes that will rein in red tape and skyrocketing costs.

Out-of-state schools a big draw for students

BOISE—Many Idaho students have their sights set on attending colleges outside Idaho.

But for most it's not because they think out-of-state schools are better. It's because they want to see what life is like out there.

Recruiters from out-of-state colleges like Loyola say Boise students seem particularly interested learning about college options, especially those in other states.

"We find students here are very knowledgeable and very motivated to go out of state," said Judy Becker, Loyola's associate director of undergraduate admissions. "They have much more of a national focus than students do in some areas."

Counselors say Boise students often have high hopes of getting out of town and away from their parents. But finances can cut into those dreams.

"A lot of kids investigate out-of-state schools and end up going, but a lot have a backup plan because of financial conditions," says Boise High School career counselor Sue Carberry. "It gets down to decisions about scholarships and aid and the program of study they want."

Utah man shot, killed

TWIN FALLS, Idaho—A Utah man was shot to death while trying to prevent a scuffle between neighbors at the El Milagro housing complex in south Twin Falls.

Gustavo Quezada, 25, was shot once in the chest with a small caliber handgun Friday night, said Twin Falls County Prosecutor Richard Bevan.

Oscar Jaco, 26, a resident alien from El Salvador, was arrested in Jackpot, Nev., on a warrant charging him with first-degree murder and attempted murder. Jesus Reyes-Jimenez, an illegal alien from Mexico, is charged in connection with aiding and abetting the homicide, Bevan said.

Quezada, apparently a resident alien of Utah, originally from Honduras, was visiting two brothers at apartment when Reyes-Jimenez was told to leave by some of the apartment's occupants, Bevan said.

Reyes-Jimenez returned with Jaco, who, armed with a handgun, confronted a group of people in the yard, Bevan said.

Witnesses told police Quezada started walking toward Jaco, his arms out-stretched in front of him, in an attempt to calm things down, Bevan said.

Witnesses heard a click, then gunfire as Quezada was shot in the chest, Bevan said.

Reyes-Jimenez and Jaco fled to Jackpot, where they telephoned someone in Twin Falls for money to leave the country, Bevan said. Twin Falls and Elko counties sheriff's departments, Twin Falls police and federal Border Patrol agents arrested the pair in Jackpot

Lead singer of Blind Melon dead at 28

NEW ORLEANS—Shannon Hoon, whose smooth, high-pitched vocals took the rock group Blind Melon to the top of the charts with its eclectic 1993 debut hit "No Rain," died Saturday. He was 28.

Hoon was found dead on his tour bus about 1:30 p.m. His sound manager apparently couldn't wake him and called police, said Sgt. Marlon DeFillo. He said there was no sign of trauma, and the cause of death remains unclassified pending an autopsy.

Hoon, born Richard Shannon Hoon in Lafayette, Ind., experienced both personal and profession turmoil as his band gained fame.

In October 1993, Hoon faced nudity and indecent exposure charges after he stripped and urinated onstage during a concert in Vancouver, British Columbia. He was also charged for attacking a security guard during the taping of the American Music Awards in February 1994.

When the group's self-titled debut album was released in September 1992, sales remained stagnant until MTV began airing the video for "No Rain" nine months later. The video, which featured a 10-year-old actress cavorting in a bee costume to Hoon's vocals, became the group's signature.

Soon after, the album was selling more than 100,000 per week and hit No. 3 on the Billboard album chart. They were nominated for Grammy awards in 1994 for best new artist and best rock performance, but did not win.

U.N. broke as it throws anniversary bash

UNITED NATIONS—Behind all the hoopla surrounding the United Nations' 50-year celebrations is an organization so broke that internal reforms and international peacekeeping alike are threatened.

President Clinton, Fidel Castro and Boris Yeltsin are among the world leaders arriving this weekend to pay tribute to the United Nations. Even the $1.4 million earmarked for the gathering, the largest ever of world leaders, is a strain on a budget exhausted months ago.

The organization is hamstrung from pursuing cost-cutting measures because it cannot afford severance pay for 135 civil servants willing to retire.

The United Nations is owed $3 billion. No nation is more in arrears than the United States, which has withheld payments of $1.3 billion in part to pressure the United Nations into reforms.

A management training program has also been delayed due to a lack of money.

To make ends meet, the United Nations has borrowed $100 million from its peacekeeping fund, which is already sharply depleted.

The United Nations owes some $900 million to 80 countries, many of them poor, for peacekeeping; some are saying they may not send troops to the next crisis point.

To help ease the crunch, the United Nations has instituted a hiring freeze, slashed its spending, cut overtime, limited training courses and travel and will soon begin paying staffers only once a month instead of twice.

U.N. staff members say calls for reform amid the budget crises are demoralizing, especially when demands on the United Nations are growing.

'The world thanks you; look this way!'

UNITED NATIONS—No fidgeting class of first-graders could have given a photographer a tougher job than the global leaders captured Sunday in a historic U.N. anniversary "class portrait."

The final product would make their mothers proud—a sea of smiles from a world of troubles. But it was hardly a trouble-free snapshot.

First, the half-dozen or so "no-shows" for the New York celebration—they included Germany's Helmut Kohl and Egypt's Hosni Mubarak—threw off the intricate composition plans of specialist photographer Paul Skipworth of Dallas.

"He had to rebalance the 190 that were left to get the perfect rectangular shape," official U.N. photographer John Isaac said.

Study of race-relations progress urged

WASHINGTON—President Clinton is being urged to appoint a commission to study race relations in the United States, but the White House said today he has not decided whether to do so.

"While our cities may not be burning, anger rages in the hearts of too many of our citizens," Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said Tuesday in proposing the commission.

"There is something wrong about attitudes and perceptions in our society today," said Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla.

The call for a commission came a day after an estimated 400,000 black men rallied in Washington in a show of unity and determination, and Clinton delivered a speech in Austin, Texas, pleading for an end to racism.

"It's an idea we are open to," White House press secretary Mike McCurry said today. "There are many ideas now surfacing in the aftermath of the Million Man March and the president is encouraged by that because these ideas can be a part of the dialogue that he thinks will help us more effectively address race relations."

Schumer, McCollum and four other House members sent Clinton a letter calling for a commission "to issue a report on the progress and failures that our nation has made on race since 1968." That was the year the Kerner Commission concluded that "our nation is moving toward two societies, one black, one white—separate and unequal."

Man accused of Safeway robbery pleads not guilty

Mike McNulty
Staff

Five officers stood guard Monday at the Latah County Courthouse as the alleged Safeway Robber pleaded not guilty during his arraignment and disclosed his supposed true identity under oath.

Unshaven and dressed in a bright orange jumpsuit, the suspect told the court his name is Michael Allen Wachholtz and confidently declared a not guilty plea to charges of robbery.

"What a show," Wachholtz said with a smile as he entered the courtroom. "Everybody is here to watch me come down in handcuffs."

At one point during the arraignment Judge John Bengtson asked Wachholtz if he was sleeping while his head was down.

Judge Bengtson said Wachholtz has priority for a trial because he is in custody and subsequently scheduled a jury trial for Jan. 16, 1996.

As a three-time felon, Bengtson said Wachholtz faces a possible life sentence plus 15 years with a maximum fine of $50,000.

During a preliminary hearing Friday, Magistrate William Hamlett set Wachholtz's bail at $50,000. On Monday, Latah County Prosecutor Bill Thompson asked to raise the bail to $100,000 to ensure the suspect shows up to trial. But Judge Bengtson thought the bail, in addition to a $125,000 warrant from California, was sufficient.

Police Thursday matched the suspects finger prints to Michael A. Wachholtz, 34, who is wanted for robbery in San Francisco and Spokane, Wash. and has a $10,000 drug warrant in Anchorage, Alaska.

The prints did not correspond with the two alias' given to investigators, Jeffrey Lambert or Mike Walkets. Wachholtz was holding an expired Alaska drivers license issued to Jeffrey Lambert when he was arrested Tuesday at the Super 8 hotel.

Thompson said the state of Alaska is not interested in extraditing Wachholtz for the offense but California will pursue the case after Idaho is finished with the matter.

"We just have to get the times lined up with California," Thompson said. "It will keep us from bouncing back and forth."

Bomb threat empties Agriculture buildings

Janet Birdsall
Staff

A bomb threat phoned into the University of Idaho telephone operator prompted the evacuation of the agriculture science and agriculture engineering buildings Friday morning.

A male voice said, "A bomb will go off in the Ag building in one hour." The call was received at about 9:15 a.m. The voice was described as deep, quick, and very muffled, with no accent, according to police reports.

After meeting with police, UI staff decided to evacuate both buildings. Given the short amount of time specified by the caller, they decided to evacuate the buildings by activating the fire alarm. Officers and building staff walked through the buildings to make sure everyone was out. Both buildings were closed until about 11:30 a.m.

The caller gave no reason or motivation for the bomb threat, and hung up before the operator could say anything. The call was made from an off-campus location according to the police report.

Van Ness enters Latah Sheriff's race

Justin Oliver Ruen

Staff

Norm Van Ness kicked off his campaign for Latah County Sheriff at a press conference held on the steps of the Latah County Courthouse Monday afternoon. Van Ness has been a Latah County resident for 20 years and has worked for the Sheriff's office in many capacities for 18 years. Van Ness will be running as a Democrat, and plans a bipartisan campaign.

"As far as what I want to do in the future, I have some basic plans.

I see some restructuring that needs to be done within the department which will include some administrative restructuring," said Van Ness.

Van Ness would like to lower the high turnover rate which has plagued current Sheriff Joe Overstreet. "I believe that we have to have happy officers. To make happy officers, which will keep them here, you're going to have to do quite a few things to draw them in and give them the desire to remain with this Sheriff's department...I don't think we'll ever stop the turnover, but I want to slow it down a bit," he said. Van Ness has not outlined any specific plans yet.

In addition, Van Ness also wants more open communication between the Sheriff's office and the other departments of county government, including the Latah County Commissioner's office.

"I've been here a long time, I've worked a long time with these people in different sections and I've always gotten along well with them," Van Ness said. We've always been able to come to decisions. I believe I can continue that and make it work in favor of the Sheriff's office."

Van Ness plans to communicate with the people of Latah County, gathering input regarding increased patrols and plans to implement such measures.

He also commented on budgetary concerns. "The fiscal restraints—you have to learn to live within them. You have to have a communication line set up with the County Commissioners to try to gain a little bit. I've always been able to talk with the Commissioners," and that is how things get accomplished, Van Ness said.

Child sex abuse case even had judge weeping

Associated Press

KENNEWICK, Wash.—A Plymouth man was sentenced to spend six months in jail and undergo treatment in a child sexual abuse case so emotional, the judge wiped away tears during sentencing.

Daniel James Keller, 49, pleaded guilty to two counts of first-degree child molestation involving two sisters, ages 8 and 11.

Court documents show he admitted sexually abusing at least five other pre-teen girls, often while baby-sitting, over a five-month period.

At the sentencing Friday in Benton County Superior Court, spectators were scanned with metal detectors because of reported death threats against Keller.

At one point, the father of one of Keller's victims bolted from his chair, cursed Keller and had to be restrained by guards.

The girls' family members wept, and even Judge Carolyn Brown paused twice to wipe her eyes.

Under a plea agreement, Keller's 8 1/2-year prison sentence was suspended, and he was ordered to attend a three-year outpatient treatment program for sex offenders and spend six months in jail.

The deal was negotiated at least in part to spare the girls the ordeal of testifying at trial, prosecutors said. A counselor also found Keller amenable to treatment.

"I fully understand the anguish of the victims in this case and their families, who are also victims," Brown said.

"But I cannot act from a strictly emotional base. I am not allowed to do so. I must stand between this man and vengeance. And I do."

Not that we mind the recognition, it's just that a lot of people expect nothing less than the best from us. Over 1.8 million individuals in higher education and research, to be exact. And frankly, so do we.

Accomplice provided gun used in slayings, prosecutors allege

Associated Press

LEWISTON—A man arrested as an accomplice in the slayings of a Clarkston, Wash., couple provided the gun, prosecutors allege.

The accusation was contained in court documents filed Friday in support of a charge against Kyle A. Richardson, who made an initial appearance in 2nd District Court.

Judge Carl Kerrick ordered Richardson held without bond in the Nez Perce County Jail pending a Nov. 1 preliminary hearing.

Richardson, 25, of Lewiston, was arrested Thursday. He is charged with conspiracy to commit first-degree murder in the slayings of Ronald and Luella Bingham. He was also held on an unrelated charge of methamphetamine possession.

Sheriff Ron Koeper has said Richardson's case will not affect the charges against Kenneth D. Arrasmith, who awaits a Nov. 6 trial on two counts of first-degree murder.

The Bingham—Luella, 42, and Ronald, 46—were gunned down in their ramshackle auto shop on Lewiston's east side on May 17.

Prosecutors allege Ronald Bingham was shot 23 times with a semiautomatic pistol, while his wife was shot six times in the back as she tried to run away.

Shortly after the shootings, Arrasmith surrendered to police in Clarkston, just across the Snake River from Lewiston.

Court documents allege that Richardson conspired with Arrasmith in the slayings and provided Arrasmith a Tec-9 semiautomatic handgun.

In addition, Richardson "attempted to purchase a magazine for a Tec-9 semiautomatic handgun for a friend and himself so he could take care of some people because one clip was not enough," the documents said.

Also, Richardson "offered one man $2,500 to commit murder on a couple of people," and tried to take part in surveillance of the Bingham's house before the slayings, the document said.

The documents did not provide further details. Prosecutors did not return a phone call seeking comment Friday.

Under state law, Richardson could face the death penalty if convicted on the murder conspiracy charge. Prosecutors have not said whether they will seek the death penalty.

Arrasmith, 44, does not admit to shooting the Bingham and has pleaded innocent. Prosecutors contend the Sunnyside, Wash., truck driver and former Asotin County, Wash., sheriff's deputy killed the Bingham because he believed his own 15-year-old Friday, Irma Tatman, 20-year Safeway employee took the stand to explain what happened during Tuesday's robbery and identified Wachholtz as the man she gave money to. She said she didn't take Wachholtz serious at first but decided to give him money after he gripped the handle of a silver pistol tucked in the waste of his pants.

"I thought he was kidding," Tatman testified. "He had to tell me three times to give him money."

Police believe he fled from the store with $109, a newspaper and a six-pack of Pepsi.

As Tatman gave her testimony, Wachholtz was told to be quiet for badgering the prosecutors and the witness.

Pictures of clothing worn by Wachholtz during the robbery were shown to Tatman and she identified them as being the clothes worn by the suspect Tuesday morning.

Police believe Wachholtz robbed a Payless Shoe store in Spokane before coming to Moscow last Monday and rooming up with Kimberly Krueger and her child at the Super 8.

Krueger was sentenced Friday for driving without privileges, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. She told the court Friday Wachholtz kept showing up at the hotels where she was staying and she didn't want to stay with him.

State prosecutors expect Krueger to testify against Wachholtz at the trial. She and her two-year-old daughter are believed to have left for California on Monday.

primary concern is that we do not jeopardize the existing engineering program in Boise, its students, faculty, or the business and other community interests it serves."

Dillon told Mosman in his proposal, "If the proposals listed in this recommendation are denied, we maintain the status quo, and will be rightfully perceived as coming down on the side of producer-oriented education, against local control and a consumer-oriented system."

Tovey is skeptical. "They contend

(a BSU-based engineering program) is driven by the interests of the university, rather than the interests of the local industry," he said. "They think BSU can provide a program that is more responsive to the local industry. I don't agree with that."

"I think it is very unfortunate decisions that have far-reaching implications for higher education in Idaho, are based on political reasons," Tovey said. "This is purely political, and has nothing to do with what is good for the education of people in Idaho."

Minor offenders provide major benefits

Associated Press
HAILEY, Idaho—Every week, Blaine County Magistrate Robert Elgee sentences somebody to community service for drunk driving, trespassing or disturbing the peace. "I love it," he said. "It's win, win. It keeps them out of the jail and lets them do something for the community."

The program stated about a year ago to reduce jail overcrowding. Now, about 50 people a month show up before 8 a.m. at the sheriff's office, money in hand and work clothes on, ready to do whatever is assigned by Deputy Brad Gelsky.

They may spend the day painting parking lines in front of the courthouse, picking up trash along highways and the bike path or pushing brooms, raking leaves or shoveling snow.

They also might wind up grooming pets at the Animal Shelter, posting signs at Magic Reservoir, recycling cardboard or aluminum or helping with community events such as the Basque Festival, Oktoberfest or Wagon Days.

"When it started, I was trying to round up work," Gelsky said. "Now I get phone calls constantly from people from nonprofit organizations."

The program focuses strictly on community functions, although Gelsky says he gets a lot of calls from people wanting personal work done.

Almost everybody in the program was sentenced to it but occasionally a jail inmate is given a chance to get out and do some work.

Rick Lacroix, was serving a year for drunken driving when Gelsky gave him a chance last month to clean up at the Oktoberfest. Lacroix went into a tent and out the back. He's still missing.

"He took advantage of it," Gelsky said. "It's a trust-type deal. If they're going to go, they're going to go."

Occasionally people show up drunk. They get a quick trip to the drunk tank.

"If they have a bad attitude when they show up, I tell them that if they don't want to be out here working, they can do their time in jail," he said.

Elgee said it's always a choice, but he's never had anyone opt for jail instead of community service.

daughter had been sexually abused by the couple.

The case has attracted national attention, and Arrasmith has won the support of many local residents.

Since his arrest, 17 women have come forward with stories of sex- and drug-abuse involving the Bingham, say Roy and Craig Mosman, Arrasmith's Moscow-based attorneys.

Arrasmith, in a telephone interview Thursday night from the county jail, said he knew Richardson but could not imagine what he could contribute to the prosecution's case.

"They're harassing someone who has nothing to do with this,"

Arrasmith said. "If they get anything they are going to use from him, it will be false and will only be because he's scared to death."

Richardson has been interviewed at least twice by sheriff's detective Wade Ralston, court records show, and he is on the prosecution's list of witnesses for Arrasmith's trial.

Clinton calls for worldwide crackdown on drug smugglers

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS—President Clinton urged world leaders Sunday to join a crackdown against international drug smugglers, announcing the United States will freeze assets of Colombia's biggest cocaine cartel and punish countries that tolerate money laundering.

"We must win this battle together," the president declared in a speech opening a three-day celebration of the 50th anniversary of the United Nations.

Clinton signed an executive order targeting the four leaders of Colombia's Cali cartel and 43 associates. The order also blacklists 33 businesses, including Colombia's biggest drugstore chain, holding companies, import-export firms, pharmaceutical companies, automobile dealerships and various stores.

The administration said they were front companies for the cartel.

The order freezes any assets they have in the United States, bars them from any business with Americans and cuts them off from the U.S. financial system. The Cali ring is believed behind 80 percent of the cocaine smuggled to the United States and 15 percent of the heroin. Officials said Clinton's order would have a major impact, although they declined to offer a precise estimate.

Clinton also put nations suspected of money laundering on notice that the United States may impose sanctions on them if they persist in helping criminals. He said criminal enterprises are moving "vast sums of ill-gotten gains through the international financial system with absolute impunity."

"We must not allow them to wash the blood off profits from the sale of drugs, from terror or organized crimes," the president said.

Officials said the warning was aimed at dozens of nations, such as Antigua, the Cayman Islands, Bahamas, Panama, Colombia, Venezuela, Thailand, Austria, Greece, Turkey and Cyprus, although some of those countries have indicated they will adopt international standards against money laundering.

U.S. sanctions could include a ban on electronic fund transfers and a prohibition on dollar clearing, eliminating a country's ability to operate through the U.S. financial system, officials said.

Clinton said that international crime, terrorism, drug trafficking and the spread of weapons of mass destruction have emerged as the major threats to world peace in the aftermath of the Cold War.

"No one is immune," he said, citing terrorist incidents ranging from the Oklahoma City and World Trade Center bombings to the nerve-gas attack in a Tokyo subway.

He called on all nations to adopt a no-sanctuary pledge putting criminals on notice that "you have nowhere to run and nowhere to hide."

The occasion brought together nearly 200 presidents, kings, prime ministers and others for the largest gathering of global leaders in history. Apart from their speechmaking, the leaders met among themselves.

Clinton's most closely watched meetings are with Russian President Boris Yeltsin on Monday and Chinese President Jiang Zemin on Tuesday.

Dampening expectations for Monday's talks, administration officials said they did not expect Clinton and Yeltsin to resolve questions about a Russian role in a Bosnian peacekeeping force, or to win over Moscow for the expansion of NATO.

In a diplomatic rebuke, a handful of nations at odds with the United States were pointedly excluded from Clinton's invitation list for a gala reception: Iran, Iraq, Cuba, Sudan, Libya, North Korea, and Somalia.

Clinton took a swipe at Cuba's Fidel Castro, saying every nation in the hemisphere has chosen democracy "except one."

Castro, in his remarks, said U.S. economic sanctions were as devastating to Cubans as "noiseless atom bombs."

All of the leaders' speeches were supposed to be limited to five minutes, but few observed the limit. Clinton spoke for 14 minutes. Despite Republican efforts to cut money for international organizations, Clinton vowed that the United States will pay its U.N. bill in full. Washington is the U.N.'s biggest contributor but owes $1.3 billion.

"I don't think the United States wants to be known as the biggest deadbeat in the U.N.," Clinton said during a meeting with South African President Nelson Mandela. "That's not the kind of reputation anybody should cultivate."

In his speech, Clinton urged other leaders to follow his lead in combatting drug smugglers and organized crime.

"Nothing we do will make us invulnerable," Clinton said, "but we all can become less vulnerable if we work together."

West One loan on Chenoweth signature only, no assured repayment

Associated Press
BOISE—A $40,000 cash infusion that had been misrepresented as a personal loan to her congressional campaign was actually a loan West One Bank made to Republican Helen Chenoweth on her signature only with no assured method of repayment, campaign disclosure documents show.

The amendment filed Friday to Chenoweth's campaign finance disclosure report, signed by Chenoweth treasurer Wayne Crow, confirmed that Chenoweth did not declare a guarantee, put up collateral or pledge future campaign contributions to secure the loan.

And on the statement required by the Federal Election Commission to accompany bank loan documents, Crow did not say on what basis the loan was made or what assurance there is that it will be repaid.

Her campaign owned nearly $100,000 to third parties on July 1 and had less than $20,000 in the bank, according to the mid-year report.

That loan statement was also not signed by an authorized representative of West One Bank as required by the commission.

The bank must declare that the loan was made at terms no more favorable than those given borrowers of comparable credit worthiness.

West One Bank officials did not respond to inquiries about their policy for making unsecured loans of $40,000.

Under Federal Election Commission regulations, bank loans to congressional campaigns can only be secured by means other than a guarantor, collateral or pledge of future contributions with approval of the commission.

Commission spokesman Ian Stirton has previously said that the Chenoweth campaign had no such approval.

And loans failing to comply with those restrictions are considered illegal corporate contributions under federal law, which limits legal contributions to $5,000 each in primary and general elections from specially created political action committees.

A spokeswoman said the commission had yet to receive the amendment. But based on the description of the one filed with the Idaho secretary of state, she said the Chenoweth campaign would be asked to provide the additional information required to determine the legality of the loan.

While attempting to straighten out the questionable bank loan, the campaign made no attempt to respond to the commission's request that it comply with requirements that the employer and occupation of individual contributors be listed. Her mid-1995 report failed to include that information for 42 of her 56 individual contributors. Among the unidentified were Duane Hagadone, Coeur d'Alene resort owner and newspaper publisher, and Gary Michael, chairman of Albertson's Inc.

Van Ness wouldn't comment on his differences with current Sheriff Joe Overstreet. "In all honesty, I don't want to say a lot about what Joe is doing right now, or anyone else, because I'm basically here to talk about my strengths," Van Ness said. "Every Sheriff that I've worked for was a different person, and I've liked each and every Sheriff I've worked for, including Joe Overstreet."

Van Ness will continue to support the Moscow Police Department, who normally covers the University of Idaho. "unless I hear otherwise when I start campaigning around the University."

The professionalism of the Sheriff's office in the handling of violent crimes, which affect UI students, will get better under Van Ness, said his campaign manager Craig Mosman.

Van Ness also commented about working for Overstreet before the election. "I had a long talk with Joe about what I was going to do, and I advised him that I will give 100 percent to this department, and that includes to Joe Overstreet as a Sheriff. I will not let down on that duty," he said.

"I've thought for many years about when would be the right time to make this announcement and take this step forward," Van Ness said. "I'm approaching my retirement years, and I'm looking at the idea that I have a lot to offer Latah County, and I think I can best offer it as the Sheriff."

But the girls' father urged Keller to impose the maximum sentence.

"This guy needs a maximum sentence. No ifs, ands or buts about it," he said. "He's taken my children, and I don't know how many others."

During the hearing, the 11-year-old girl tried to read a letter to the court, but broke down. The judge read the letter for her.

"What this man did to us deserves every little thing he gets," the child wrote. "I hope this man will never be free again so he can hurt any other kids like he hurt me."

The girls' father addressed the court, but during his statement he leaped toward Keller, who was sitting 10 feet away, and cursed him.

Defense attorney Jim Egan urged Brown to stick with the negotiated plea.

Egan said Keller and the community would be best served by the sex-offender treatment option.

Keller spoke only briefly to the judge.

"I'm just sorry," he said.

ASUI makes tough decision

I must say that last Wednesday's ASUI Senate meeting was one of the best I have been to. Not only did it last over 14 minutes, but there was intelligent discussion—some of it emotional—over a bill sponsored by Senator Christa Manis.

The bill suggested the senate provide for the transfer of $1,000 from to the Special Allocations Account to help the Residence Hall Association with financing a trip to the Intermountain Affiliate of College and University Residence Halls Conference. The bill failed the senate by a 7:5 vote after an hour of discussion between the senators and the Residence Hall Association.

At first, I disagreed with Manis' intentions. I thought, "Hey, a lot of ASUI budgets suffered cuts for the 1995-96 fiscal year, so why should we—the students of the University of Idaho—give these guys money, so they can go to some conference in Boulder, Colo.?" The thing is, however, these guys asking for money from ASUI are students too.

Throughout the debate, I kept changing my mind on whether I felt the senate should give the Residence Hall Association $1,000 to go to this IACURH conference. But what made me agree with Manis was when, during her senate communication time period and after the senate did not pass the bill, she read a part of the mission statement of the ASUI: the ASUI shall provide leadership opportunities for all students currently enrolled at the University of Idaho.

That's when I realized her intentions were good, and I thought the senate truly failed these students. And I also thought, "Why not give the $1,000 to these RHA students, since $7,500 was set aside for a tailgate party." I definitely think promoting leadership is much better than promoting the party life—even though I know the whole point of the tailgate party was to get more attendance at the football games.

But as for every story, there are two sides. I could understand where both sides were coming from.

Senator John Tesnohlidek voted against Senate Bill 27, because he had talked to his living groups and they suggested that he vote against it. He couldn't promise the senate would give them any ASUI funds if they asked for them, so they told him to vote "no." Tesnohlidek also said, "We can't start funding groups which are clearly prohibited from getting ASUI funds in our by laws." I definitely agree with Tesnohlidek on this point. If one group of people asks for money, then you know more will do the same.

The thing is: when you're dealing with something like this, you have to look at all of the angles and talk to the people you represent. I can see the senate did this for Senate Bill #F95-27. The senators were only voting the way their living groups—the students they represent—told them to vote.

Ch-Ch-Ch-Changes

Well Sandpoint, I hope you're happy with yourself.

Welcome to the world of over-zealous development. I knew you'd come around some day.

The interesting thing about the development of cities is that it works just opposite of that of children. As children grow they learn to walk and talk and use the potty, they become mature and educated, they care for their possessions and for their friends.

As cities grow, they become crippled, they forget how to talk and resort to yelling, they lose their history and integrity, they give away their most prized possessions and all but forget about their people and their diapers get very, very full.

Oh Sandpoint, once you were a cultured young adult, now you are squandering your charms and youthful beauty.

As if it wasn't enough to take acres of pristine rolling farmland and fields and turn them into hideous housing developments, now you have to take the Festival away as well.

People have cited the reason for the move as the need for growth. I cite it as the need for greed. The Festival belongs to the people of Sandpoint; it is a unique opportunity for the community to gather together once a year and share in good music and food. But over the years, it has grown out of control and out of the financial reach of most of the citizens of Sandpoint, turning it into an elitist social event which caters only to the wealthy.

I watch all of this happen in a town where I grew up, a town I've lived in for most of my life. I watch all of this happen as my back yard is being turned into a housing development.

Maybe some people would rather live in identical tract houses with no character and a back yard no bigger than my thumbnail; but not me.

Maybe they prefer to look out their windows and see the new construction across the street instead of wildlife and evergreens; I do not.

Maybe they'd rather breathe in exhaust fumes than clean mountain air; I would not.

And the great tragedy is that even if I get myself a piece of mountain property and build myself a nice little house, in seven years the city will expand its way right to my front doorstep—especially with boneheads like Bo Gritz encouraging the nation to move to Idaho. Thanks Bo, that's just what we need: more people trying to turn this into Aspen or New California.

We are just going to keep growing and growing until there is no such thing as wilderness, no such thing as forest or prairie. It'll be just one big metropolis stretching from Seattle to San Diego and Portland, Ore. to Portland, Maine.

And before I forget, let me also congratulate Sandpoint on its new Wal-Mart. Yeah, I'd much rather have a store full of useless crap than oh, say, a performing arts center or a new gallery or a park. I've been to Wal-Mart. They suck. You can't find anything you need anyway, and a friend of mine even swears that they sell used merchandise. But I can understand how K-Mart just wasn't good enough for you, how you couldn't make that grueling hour-long drive into Spokane or Coeur d'Alene, how you had to have one in your own back yard, if for nothing else than for convenience's sake.

One of the best hundred hospitals in the nation indeed

I hope Gritman Medical Center didn't get their coveted rating for their 'customer' service, because after what I saw happen there last week, I think it stinks.

During intermission at the "Elixir of Love" at the Hartung Theatre last Wednesday, I made a hurried trip to the hospital with a friend and fellow theatre-goer suffering from severe abdominal cramps. While waiting for another friend to get the car, he turned white as a sheet and began shaking like an October leaf as he leaned on his wife for support. When we tried to put him in the back seat of the car, he moaned with the pain and shook even more violently, since the simple act of bending over to sit down magnified the pain.

Not being doctors ourselves, we speculated a bit, hovering between food poisoning and appendicitis as the cause of his overwhelming pain. We raced to the hospital double time.

But what would we do when we

got there? Nobody in the car had money to spare for an emergency room visit, but it was obvious he needed some sort of help to ease the pain. So we asked the gentleman at the emergency room desk if our friend could see a doctor without it being classified as an emergency case. He flatly told us no, that emergencies were all they handled there. Then he answered his phone, talked calmly to someone, then sat and talked with another person who came into the hospital a few moments after us.

We sat down in the waiting room to discuss our options. No money for an emergency room visit. No suggestions or even basic human concern from the gentleman who 'helped' us at the desk. Perhaps he assumed he had yet another paranoid group of college students who were bringing in their friend whose only problem was that perhaps he had consumed a wee bit too much alcohol that night.

I don't know if that was what he was thinking, but I know he surely was not thinking as any hospital employee should think, especially at a hospital that boasts such a great national ranking. In short, I hope he wasn't a trained medical professional, because he certainly did not act like one.

We left the hospital and bundled our friend back into the car, where the heater comforted him a bit. We took him home, where, as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we gave him a priesthood blessing, asking our Father in Heaven to help and comfort him and his wife. Our friend seemed calmer after the blessing, and I found myself thinking how grateful I was that God does not keep office hours or flatly ignore those who call on Him for help.

I saw my friend the next day, as he dismantled the wooden forms around the concrete steps he had poured the week before. Aside from a tender spot where the cramps had begun the night before, he said he did not feel worse for the wear. He had recovered from his sorry condition, thanks to his faith, but no thanks at all to Gritman Medical Center. I begin to see why retired Pullman Memorial Hospital employee Margaret Hartley, quoted in an article in the Oct. 18 Daily News said "people inherently just don't trust Gritman."

You see, I wonder, is it normal for hospitals to ignore those in need of help? And since my friend recovered, should I worry? Should anyone?

Yes we should. Because Gritman Medical Center is looking to consolidate with PMH, and if my friend's experience with them is similar to those of other students, (which I hope it is not) their compassion for us might get even worse.

Rob Rosenman, president of the PMH governing board, claimed in the same article that consolidation will protect area health services from being "forced, by economics, to join larger systems coming out of Spokane or Seattle, and we will lose control."

Tell me, why is this bad? Wouldn't connections with major hospitals, some only 90 miles away in Spokane, increase the quality of health service offered in the Moscow-Pullman area?

The answer to this question is a resounding yes, and I offer the examples of my two hometown hospitals as evidence.

Six years ago, a national health care company came to Idaho Falls and bought both local hospitals. They were razed and replaced by an infinitely more modern facility that offered unheard of health services to the area: open-heart surgery and cancer patients would no longer have to endure the four-hour trip to Salt Lake City, Utah for top-rate medical treatment.

The best heart surgeon in the western United States opted to move to the new hospital. The local hospital board 'lost control,' but the trade-off in the form of superb health care was well worth the pittance of control.

I will not deny that hospitals must carefully watch economics in order to stay afloat and continue to offer their services to the community, but the core of their philosophy should be the Hippocratic Oath and the Golden Rule, not an economics flow chart.

The Northwest used to be a place where you could return to the land. A place where you could set down roots, buy 40 acres and a mule and carve out your own homestead. This used to be a place where men wore flannel shirts for a reason and any good woman could hold her own through a winter in a drafty cabin with home grown food, two babies to tend to and animals to feed. But no more. Now we have some of the most expensive real estate in the country, now we have Fortune 500 companies in our suburbs, now we have K-Mart and Wal-Mart and national restaurant franchises. Yes, what the world needs more of is fast food and "falling prices".

And if you think this doesn't affect you, Moscow, think again. You have a shiny new Wal-Mart sitting up on that hill—now it's only a matter of time.

So congratulations, Sandpoint, on your new status as a growing city. I hoped you stocked up on baby wipes during the last storewide sale.

Letters to the Editor

Dance can be a spiritual experience

Sometimes college can sap you dry of any type of spiritual source. So wrapped up in papers, books and social life, you forget to take time to explore the beauty of creation. Dance is a wonderful art form, that combined with music, is rich in a positive feeling of the celebration of life itself.

The University of Idaho Dance Theatre is putting on their fall semester dance performance at the Hartung Theatre this weekend, and I urge students to attend the concert, as it is surely a celebration of life. The dance students have been working hard, and I've watched the rehearsals take shape into a polished performance. I've witnessed the energy and life force that is interwoven within these pieces.

The performance, entitled "Dance Spectrum," is truly that, with a diverse range of jazz, modern, ballet, theatrical and folkloric dance. The pieces, choreographed and danced by visionary talents (in my humble opinion) of the UI dance students and instructors, deal with such various themes as religion, mythology, literature, romance and sometimes just plain fun. The music is tastefully chosen and compliments the strength and poise of the dancers. This is the event of the season, and I urge students to bring their friends and family to witness this celebration of life in all its true colors!

Some ASUI senators lack vision and purpose

Technically, we in the United States do not live in a true democracy. We live in a republic.

What's the difference? Well, if this were a true democracy, all people would vote on all matters of importance to the nation. However, in a republic, we elect representatives—leaders—to do our voting for us. This is where it all becomes problematic.

Are we voting for politicians because we think that at least most of their views are the way we would vote ourselves? Or are we voting for a person because we believe that once this person is elected to office, he or she will follow the will of the majority of the population?

Ronald Reagan once told reporters that just because he had received campaign donations from a group did not mean he was buying into their political philosophy; rather, he said, the group was buying into his political philosophy.

It seems to me this is the view most people have when voting for political candidates. We, as voters, come to know these politicians through the views they express through different media. We also know what ideas they stand for by which party they are selected out of. In fact, many voters simply follow a "party line" when voting. They don't care—or are not informed enough—to vote for individual candidates.

This is not to say these types of voters are stupid or apathetic. They're not. In a day and age when governments are entrusted with billions of dollars of taxpayer money, the national defense, the economy, etc., how can we possibly come to know how a particular politician stands on each of these complex issues? We cannot know, nor can the politicians, how they will vote on issues which arise in the future. Rather, we rely on knowing what their basic philosophies are. We buy into their philosophies; they are not buying into ours.

Politicians do, to a certain degree, purport to hold certain beliefs in order to get themselves elected. They probably even try to use these purported beliefs as a guide to how they should vote if they are elected.

Sometimes, however, politicians have acted against the wishes of the majority of the population. Why? Possibly because the politicians believe they are better informed about certain issues when the public is not.

Additionally, sometimes politicians have to do what is not politically popular because they have a vision of an ideal that the nation should try to live up to. The late Senator Frank Church is a good example of this.

And so it is not, it appears, with the ASUI Senate. These neophyte politicians had a chance last Wednesday to vote for a bill which would have helped a few University of Idaho students to become better educated. The senators had the chance to reclaim the image of a governmental body which cares about educational issues and not about tailgate parties. They blew a chance to become visionaries rather than pawns of a sometimes ignorant and selfish populace.

The senate voted down, 7-5, a bill sponsored by Christa Manis which would have appropriated $1,000 to help some student leaders finance a trip to a leadership conference in Boulder, Colo. this November. One senator said he voted against the bill because he voted the wishes of the living groups he represents. For those senators who voted for the bill, I applaud you.

One must, then, ask what possible educational value the tailgate parties had which were sponsored with $7,500 in student money courtesy of the ASUI senate. I guess they would claim they were just voting the wishes of their student living groups again rather than performing that role which is expected of them: informed leaders who have a vision of what is good for the people they represent.

One can always argue that the $7,500 was spent on a lot more students than the $1,000 would have been. True. But what did UI students learn when they went to the tailgate party—besides the fact that you can, after all, get away with drinking alcohol on campus? What the senate has just done is sent a message to students across the campus: we should be more concerned about throwing parties than learning about leadership.

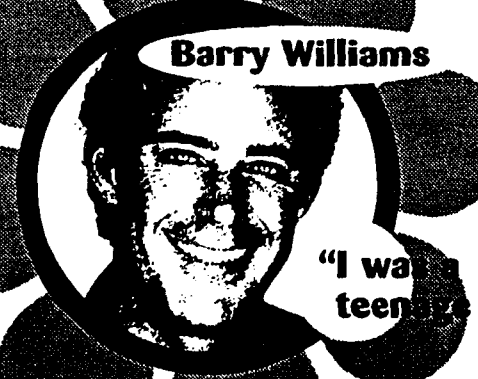

I hate to beat a dead horse, but one must again ask what the very purpose of this institution is. Is it to throw tailgate parties? If so, we are well on our way to accomplishing the dreams of our leaders.

If the purpose of this institution—and all other institutions of learning—is to teach the students who attend this school, to have them become prepared to assume the mantle of leadership of this nation, then we are, by allowing our student senate to act in such an irresponsible manner, neglecting that very ideal which drove us to attend the University in the first place.

Is this a visionary senate which cares about the education of its electorate or do we have a senate which only desires to be popular and to entertain their voters? This begs the question of whether our senators desire to keep us chained in ignorance or to set us free through education.

Live up to your roles, senators. You should be ashamed.

T H E A R G O N A U T

OUTDOOR TIP OF THE WEEK:

SOLO, a wilderness school in North Conway, N.H., recommends the following items for carrying in a bivy sack for survival:

- two large garbage bags for shelter or emergency rain gear, OR a 10' X 10' sheet of plastic
- 100 foot parachute cord
- emergency space blanket
- Jello with sugar (NOT NUTRASWEET)
- metal cup—so you can heat your Jello
- lighter or waterproof matches
- two plumbers candles
- knife
- whistle
- compass
- a flashlight small enough to fit in your mouth
- stocking cap
- spare socks that can double as mittens

This all fits in a fairly compact stuff sack and, SOLO says, only weighs 20 ounces. They also recommend that you always bring rain gear, even on a day hike. Your body loses heat very rapidly when you get wet.

PALOUSE TURKEY RUN

Campus Recreation is sponsoring its annual Palouse Turkey Run on Nov. 4 at 9 a.m. Pre-registration is $5 before Nov. 1, $7 day of the race.

The course is 5 miles and starts at West Palouse River Drive. You can register with Campus Recreation in Memorial Gym or call them for more information at 885-6381.

UI Ski Team gearing up for season

Erik Marone
Staff

You can feel it in the air. Any day now, the hills of the Palouse will be graced with snow, prompting people to tune up snowmobiles, break out the electric blankets, start thinking about studded tires and dust off their skis.

More than 40 members of the UI ski team have been preparing for the upcoming ski season since the first week of September on Targhee Field and in the Kibbie Dome by sprinting, endurance running, doing snow dances and playing lots of Ultimate Frisbee.

Mark Wedeking, the ski team director, says the team is ready for the white stuff to start flying so they can stop working out on the Dome's Astroturf and get back on the slopes. "We get out there and work out three times a week, but it's a lot more laid back," Wedeking said, "We just try to have fun, that's the main goal."

Behind the fun is some pretty serious competition. Next January and February, the team will travel to McCall, Mt. Hood, Mission Ridge and Willamette Pass to take on the other 18 other schools from Idaho, Oregon and Washington in the conference. "I'm hoping to have strong men's and women's teams this year," Wedeking predicts, "As long as everyone stays healthy, we'll do pretty well."

As soon as ski resorts open for the season, the team can start working out the kinks to get ready for the team's Christmas camp at Brundage Mountain in McCall, where time trials will determine which team members will make up the traveling competition squad to represent Idaho. "We'll select five or six men and five or six women who will compete in the meets for us. The rest of the team can come along and ski for fun," Wedeking says.

After the four competitions in January and February, qualifying team members will compete at the regional meet in McCall. Wedeking hopes to have a few people qualify for the national competition in Mt. Snow, Vt. this year. "We'd love to send some people back to nationals, but that's pretty expensive," Wedeking said, "We'll be happy just to have them qualify to go back."

Team members have to come up with their own lift tickets, lodging and transportation for the meets. What little funding the team gets from the ASUI is just enough to cover conference dues to allow the team to stay in competition. The team covers the rest of its expenses through fund raisers, the first of which is the UI Outdoor Swap, Tuesday, Nov. 7 in the Student Union Ballroom at 7 p.m.

The following night is the ski team's biggest and most popular fund raiser. At 7 p.m. in room 106 of the Ag Sci building, the team will feature Warren Miller's feature-length skiing film "Endless Winter." Tickets will be available in advance from ski team members or at the door for $5.

Although the team has been training all semester, anyone is welcome to join the team. "In fact, you can get a hold of us anytime right up until winter break, as long as you make it to Christmas camp in McCall for the time trials," Wedeking says. "Come skiing with us for fun and some good, serious competition and kick some butt!"

For more information about the ski team or advance tickets for the movie, contact Mark Wedeking at 882-3136.

Hunting dreams can come true

Hunters, like most people, dream of success. Our idea of success is getting a big deer or elk with large antlers. During my 39 years of hunting, I have received my share of big animals. I still dream of getting another "Big One," but I am also happy to get a smaller one, with or without antlers.

Some hunters are only happy if they get the big one, or bring home the meat. To them, the meat must have antlers. A mature hunter goes to the field to experience the outdoors, enjoy the changing seasons, and watch all types of animals and birds. I believe hunting is an excuse to get into the forest. Harvesting an animal is a bonus.

Saturday morning I was on my stand a half hour before dawn. The rain had moistened the ground, allowing me to move quietly through the forest to my stand. Because the animals would have the same advantage, I would have to listen carefully.

As the overcast sky was turning from black to a light gray birds started chirping. A few minutes later the squirrels and chipmunks began to chatter. The forest is always alive but sounds even more alive right at dawn.

Shortly after dawn several coyotes started howling about a hundred yards to the left and down hill from me. The amount and pitch of the howling sounded like a couple of adults and their pups. A coyote pup howls with a squeaky yip and there were plenty of squeaky yips. They left after five minutes of communicating with another bunch, howling at the other end of the canyon.

My son's stand was about 250 yards away from mine, on the other side of the coyotes. Clint told me later the sudden howling startled him out of a sound sleep.

I sat on my stand watching the squirrels run across the ground from tree to tree. A chipmunk scurried by my feet, stopped, and looked back at me. It seemed to wonder what I was doing there. Several crows flew low, maneuvering through the trees above me. Their squawking and cawing could be heard for several hundred yards as they flew away.

A foggy mist was rising from the meadow in the lower canyon. It drifted like smoke up through the trees and seemed to hover in the gullies and draws. As it came closer to me, it gave the woods an eerie look that a person might expect around Halloween.

About an hour and a half after dawn I heard a heavy sounding animal running toward me.

I did not expect a deer to come exploding out of the brush behind me. However, there she was, spooked and running. I threw my rifle to my shoulder, following her with my sights, and shot.

I got lucky and she rolled to a complete stop. The bullet did its job quickly and humanely.

As I stood up, I looked back to see what might have been chasing her. I got a glimpse of a coyote sneaking away.

I grabbed my day pack and went down to the doe. She was a full-grown Whitetail. She was heavy and loaded with fat.

Usually when a deer has as much fat as she had, it is an indication of a hard winter.

The area I hunt has a lot of deer. I do not mind shooting a doe, because they eat as much as a buck and there are more of them. This area allows either sex deer hunting to keep the buck to doe ratio in balance.

If everyone only shot bucks, there would be too many does and not enough bucks to breed them.

When my son arrived he told me he saw several cow elk crossing the meadow about 300 yards in front of his stand. We are not allowed to shoot cow elk in this unit.

Even though there was not a bull with them, it was a great experience for him to see them.

After field dressing the deer, we dragged it back to the truck. Dragging a 115-pound deer is not too bad for two people, and the fellowship between us was wonderful.

After loading it into the truck, we went back to camp to finish skinning the deer and preparing it for the trip home.

We spent the rest of the Saturday and daylight until noon on Sunday hunting. I was still trying to get an elk, and Clint wanted either a deer or elk.

Even though we came home with only one deer, the trip would have been a success for both of us without it.

We enjoyed the mountains changing colors. Many different trees and brush were turning to shades of yellow and red. Their leaves falling to become insulation from the approaching winters snow.

Watching and listening to the many different kinds of animals and birds can keep a person busy for hours.

Each year, I am amazed how many different kinds and colors of birds I see in the mountains and the variety of each of their songs.

We will be going back next weekend to enrich our lives with the ever changing outdoors. We may even get another bonus.

A-hunting we will go...

Vandals stop four-year skid, drop Griz

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

Big Sky football has always been known for its wide open offensive style of play with league clubs, often propagating points and yardage like rabbits do offspring. Teams always want the ball last and the only thing done in a little way is usually defense.

The Idaho Vandals and Montana Grizzlies made sure the historical references lived on as the two teams racked up nearly 100 points and more than 1,000 yards of offense in Idaho's 55-43 triumph Saturday in NCAA Big Sky Conference football action.

Surprisingly the team with the most yards didn't have the most points. The Vandals took advantage of the big play on offense in the first half and the big play on defense in the second half to offset a record-setting aerial assault by UM quarterback Dave Dickenson.

The UI crew crossed the goal line seven times in the first half to hold a 49-16 edge at the break and held on for dear life after the intermission as the Griz posted four second half scores of their own to keep the game in doubt until the final minutes. The win was the first for the Vandals over the Grizzlies since 1990.

Hisaw

"I told (UI Athletic Director) Pete Liske after the game this Big Sky football was going to kill me," Idaho first year coach Chris Tormey said. "I've never been in a situation where I've been up 33 at halftime and been as nervous as I was."

Despite the Vandals huge first half Montana fought back to keep the 14,912 fans who showed up in suspense. Trailing 55-43, the Griz forced Idaho to punt with just under five minutes left in the game. Idaho's freshman punter Justin Spiva fumbled the snap, giving the Griz the ball at the Vandal 29 yard line. Three incomplete passes and an illegal forward pass by Montana gave Idaho the ball back on downs and virtually eliminated any UM chance of a successful comeback.

Idaho's offensive explosion in the first half was the real key to victory. Eric Hisaw's one-yard run capped off a 12-play 66-yard drive on the game's opening possession to put the Vandals on top early. It looked like the Griz might get off easy as the Vandals lined up for a field goal on the Montana 16 yard line, but a last second formation shift caught the Grizzlies off guard and Hisaw scampered for three yards and a first down.

Montana countered with a 38-yard Andy Larson field goal on its first possession, but the Vandals answered again.

Montrell Williams returned the ensuing kickoff 62 yards for the Vandals to the UM 34 yard line and on the first play of the drive Hisaw connected with freshman wide receiver Robert Scott in the end zone for a 34-yard touchdown pass.

Dickenson took the Grizzlies 76 yards on six plays and hooked up with Raul Pacheco on a nine-yard scoring pass, making the score 14-10, but Montana would never be that close again.

Hisaw's mobility proved key again on the Vandals third drive as the senior signal caller scrambled for 21 yards on a third and 10 play from the Idaho 35. On the next play Hisaw found Scott streaking down the sideline for a 44-yard score.

Montana showed no ill effects of the Vandal offensive prowess on their next possession as Dickenson hit Matt Wells for 10 and 11 yards on the first two plays, but on the third play Idaho linebacker Robert Mulder sacked Dickenson, who coughed up the football. Dave Longoria picked up the pigskin and rumbled 50 yards into the endzone for another UI touchdown.

"I was supposed to be blitzing outside and I didn't do a very good job," Longoria said. "We practice the scoop and score everyday in practice. I thought I'd see if it works."

The Grizzlies forced Idaho to punt on their next possession, but Hisaw found Dwight McKinzie twice and Scott once more for touchdowns, before the halftime horn sounded.

"I think their offense is very good," UM coach Don Read said. "They have enough talent on paper to be the best in the league. We caught them on a day when they were extremely motivated."

Hisaw finished the day 15-of-23 for 310 yards and six touchdowns without an interception. The six throwing scores ties a school record, previously held by six other Idaho quarterbacks. Hisaw also had 50 rushing yards.

"I had a quiet confidence all week, Hisaw said. "I can't describe this feeling. It's the

Controversial Rodman should help Bulls

With Don King in court this month, Dennis Rodman has taken it upon himself to put his hair in the spotlight while his elder counterpart takes on the legal system.

Perhaps one of the most controversial players in the NBA, Rodman has been in the headlines again, only this time it's for something he's doing on the court rather than off of it.

In the biggest off-season trade of the year and possibly the decade, Dennis Rodman is trying his luck with a different team for the third time in four years. Despite being the NBA's leading rebounder for the last four years, Rodman can't seem to find a home due to personality differences. He has been changing his hair as much as he has been the last year, despite being one of the NBA's premier players.

Along with leading the NBA in rebounding the last four years, he was also an all-Defensive First Team member six of the last seven years, being a second team member in '93-'94. He was named the NBA Defensive Player of the Year in '89-'90 and '90-'91.

While attending Southeast Oklahoma State, Rodman had normal hair and was recruited more for his scoring than he was for his killer instinct attacking the glass. After joining the NBA, Rodman had many run-ins and personality conflicts with his coaches as well as fellow players and was even found once with a

'Patience is a virtue' for Idaho linebacker

Damon Barkdull

Staff

If the University of Idaho offered a lower-level class titled "Patience and the Will to Succeed 101", you can bet that Idaho linebacker/part-time runningback Dave Longoria would be a professor.

Why?

Take for instance the fact that Longoria, a native of Everson, Wash., didn't get looked at by any colleges when graduating from Nooksak High school. Actually, Longoria did get a couple junior college offers for his wrestling abilities, but football is where his heart was.

In four short years, Longoria worked his tail off to go from an undersized high school senior to accepting the role as the Vandals starting linebacker. Not only has Longoria moved into a starting linebacker spot, but the senior has showed enough promise at running-back to be used in goal-line situations. In Idaho's last three games against Big Sky opponents, Longoria has scored a touchdown in every game, including: a 1-yard run against Montana State, a 1-yard pass reception in a big win against the Eastern Washington Eagles and a fumble recovery which turned into a 50-yard touchdown against the University of Montana.

All around, Longoria had the best game of his life against the Grizzlies, recording six total tackles, the fumble recovery and an interception.

Longoria feels blessed to be a big part of the Vandal win against the his nemesis—the Griz.

"It feels good," Longoria said. "Since I've been here we haven't beaten those guys, so yeah, I'd have to say this was the biggest win for me personally."

Things were not always so easy for the modest 5-foot 9-inch 223-pound linebacker.

After leaving high school, Longoria had to make the important decision of where he'd walk-on and where he'd fit in.

"I wanted to play football. In order for me to do that and go to school I had to get on scholarship to afford it," Longoria said. "I wanted to go to the highest level I could play at without getting lost in the shuffle. I came to this program because it's a solid program and its relatively close to where I live—about seven and a half hours away."

Once making the decision to become a Vandal, Longoria had to find a way for coaches to notice him—and shed his virtually unknown status.

"I worked hard and made the most out of the opportunities I got," Longoria said. "I had a few chances when I was a walk-on. I had a good scrimmage that got me noticed. From there they asked me to play special teams. I took advantage of that and built on that and got player of the year on special teams."

Longoria spent little time proving himself on the field. The next real challenge was trying to afford school without getting the scholarship he wanted. This is where the patience thing really kicks in.

"After the spring of my freshmen year all the guys told me I had a really good spring and I'd probably be second string next year," Longoria said. "And then they didn't give me a very good scholarship offer. There's no way I could've afforded to come back. On the last day of school I was sitting there wondering what I was going to do and then they called and told me they'd give me a better offer."

For Longoria, these obstacles were more like stepping stones than stumbling blocks and this year he's finally worked his way into something he truly earned—a starting spot.

Although the senior industrial technology major splits his time between running back and linebacker, Longoria says that the position most suited to his character is linebacker.

"I'd chose defense," Longoria said. "I don't really know how to say this without sounding really cocky—honesty and arrogance is a fine line, but it's the feeling of physical dominance."

When the over-achiever was asked whether he talked any trash to opponents on the field, he quickly responded.

"Nothing that's going to get me flagged," Longoria said. "I have my little sayings like 'settle down cowboy' or something like that. I try and keep it limited and to a low profile."

Like the popular shirt scene across the United States, Football is Life for the Nooksak HS grad. Although Longoria is disappointed that this pigskin ride of adrenaline must come to an end, he does enjoy thinking of what he'll do after he graduates.

"I'd love to travel around—get me a Harley," Longoria said. "As long as I end up somewhere on the coast I'll be happy. I don't ever want to be locked into some place for 10 years. I want to be able to go wherever I want to, as long as it's not somewhere inland."

UI hockey club splits in Spokane

The UI hockey club came home with mixed results over the weekend, splitting a pair of contest with Gonzaga Saturday.

Idaho fell 5-3 in the opener at the Eagles Ice Arena, but came back in a big way with an 11-1 triumph in the rematch in the new Spokane Coliseum.

Tracy Trudell gave Idaho an early 1-0 edge in game one on an assist from Ken Harding. The Zags rallied back to take a 3-1 advantage. Scott Squires and Trudell each chipped in goals later in the game, but the Zags answered both with goals of their own to take the win.

In the nightcap Idaho jumped to a 4-0 lead in period one and never looked back. UI goalie Brad Link was solid in the nets for Idaho, helping propel the Vandals to victory.

The 11-1 win is the largest ever for Idaho over the Bulldogs.

The Vandals travel to Bellingham, Wash. next weekend to face defending Northwest American College Conference champion Western Washington.

biggest win I've ever been associated with."

Scott and McKinzie were the main recipients of Hisaw tosses. Scott hauled in six catches for 120 yards while McKinzie made five grabs for 111 yards.

Dickenson, who set UM records with 43 completions, 72 pass attempts and 558 passing yards, had five touchdown passes on the day. Montana receivers Mike Erhardt and Matt Wells ate up the Vandal secondary, combining for 21 catches and 363 yards.

"It's a tough loss, but not a backbreaker," Dickenson said. "Idaho beat us this week. So be it. We have to move on."

The Vandals now hit the road for three tough contests, two at nationally ranked opponents Northern Arizona, Nov. 4, and Northern Iowa, Nov. 11, before finishing up the regular season at home against Boise State Nov. 18.

GET INVOLVED!

loaded gun in his vehicle after he was reported missing by his team.

Born on May 13, 1961 as Dennis Keith Rodman, he has opted for catcher names such as the "Worm" or the "Human Tattoo." He was drafted 27th overall in the 1986 draft and became an instant success in the Detroit Pistons organization. After a few years in Detroit playing alongside the likes of Bill Laimbeer and Rick Mahorn, the Pistons became labeled as the "Bad Boys" of the NBA.

After making headlines for his run-ins off the court with the law and Madonna, Rodman hasn't changed his style to please any of his onlookers. He still plays the game as if it were hockey and still doesn't handle orders real well from anyone.

Choosing the likes of motorcycles as a mode of transportation rather than the conventional four-wheeled mode, Rodman gets attention wherever he goes.

Despite everyone taking offense to the lifestyle of Rodman, he is as normal as the next guy that has 40 tattoos and a motorcycle and plays in the NBA, in other words he is the only one to qualify for this abnormal category.

He may come across as a rule breaker and a guy that does what he damn well pleases; you're right he is, but that doesn't take away from his efforts on the court. He brings an attitude the Bulls have long desired, and needed for that matter, as well as bringing something to the court that the three-headed monster of Will Perdue, Luc Longley and Bill Wennington couldn't, the ability to actually play the game.

Having two All-Defensive players in Jordan and Rodman, the Bulls should reek havoc on opposing offenses. They also have the make-up for four potential all-stars in Jordan, Kukoc, Pippen, and Rodman as well, possibly getting back to their three-peat form of the past.

Rodman may finally get the recognition he deserves and at the same time give the Bulls the most dominant scorer and rebounder in the history of the NBA with Jordan and himself.

Whether you like the way he plays or whether you like the way he looks, you have to like the way he plays the game to win no matter what it takes. Despite his hair and off-court problems, Rodman may now have the chance to finally break into the upper mold of great NBA players both present and past.

Yanchulova dominated the match with 31 kills, 10 digs and a .356 hitting percentage. Her 31 kills was just three short of her school record set last year by against Oklahoma.

Louisa Kawulok, a junior outside hitter from Rancho, Wyo., was solid with 10 kills, a team-high 15 digs and a .692 hitting percentage.

Setter Lynne Hyland also tallied a game-high 57 of UI's 67 assists.

The Vandals held Broncos' star Cyndi Neece, who was third in the Big Sky in kills and digs, to 10 kills and three digs and a suppar .140 hitting percentage.

UI held BSU to a .189 team hitting percentage compared to the Vandals' .309.

BSU fell to 13-7 overall and 4-4 in the Big Sky.

The Broncos were coming off a home loss to cellar-dweller Eastern Washington last week. "It looks like they're on kind of a skid right now," Hilbert said.

Idaho v. ISU

Thanks to Moore, UI swept the Bengals 16-14, 15-6, 15-11 Saturday in Pocatello. The red-shirt freshman from Belgrade, Mont. was second on the team in kills and digs with 14 and nine respectively. She also led the team with a .700 hitting percentage.

"Jessica Moore was stellar," Hilbert said. "She has become so consistent and a go-to person. For as young as she is—for her in that role right now—it's just phenomenal to me."

Hilbert said the last freshmen to make an impact of this kind were Brittany Van Haverbeke in 1991 and Nancy Wicks in 1990.

"She (Moore) does everything—she plays defense, she hits and blocks well."

Again, Hyland led the Vandals with 53 assists and had eight digs. The Sofia, Bulgaria native

Yanchulova recorded a game-high 22 kills.

ISU's star outside hitters, seniors Tammy Coates and Kathy Goods, were held to 24 kills between them.

"The BSU win was good, but ISU is a team that can beat anyone on any given night," Hilbert said. "That first game against ISU was the best we've played all year and we only won 16-14."

Idaho has won six consecutive matches since losing to Weber State in Ogden Oct. 6. The Wildcats visit Memorial Gym Nov. 4.

Friday, the Vandals travel to Cheney to face Eastern Washington.
