Hoover chosen for UI presidency

University of Nevada, Reno vice president accepts position without hesitation

Shelby Dopp
Editor in Chief

The Idaho state Board of Education voted unanimously to make Dr. Robert A. Hoover the University of Idaho's next president yesterday.

Roy Mosman, board member, moved to approve Hoover, and Board Secretary Judy Meyer seconded the motion.

"There was no opposition from the board," Board Member Harold Davis said. "We were very united about our choice."

"Dr. Hoover accepted the position without hesitation," Curtis Eaton, board president, said.

"This is one of the happiest moments of my life," Hoover said. He said that both he and his wife Jeanne, who is a school teacher, are extremely pleased and looking forward to coming to Moscow and UI.

It looks as if UI feels the same way about Hoover. "The board made a very wise decision," Biology Department Chair Art Rourke said. "He'll hit the ground running." Rourke also acted as Hoover's escort when he was visiting the UI campus.

Others echoed Rourke's remarks. "We're just delighted," Leslee Fowler said. "We're looking forward to welcoming him." Fowler is the assistant to Interim President Thomas O. Bell.

"Bob Hoover will be an excellent president," said Bell, who believed all of the candidates were "outstanding."

Bell's term will end in June, and Hoover will take over the position starting in July. Bell said he and his wife Jody will go back into "retirement," so to speak. The couple will remain living in Moscow. "We will join the ranks of the volunteers for the University of Idaho," he said.

As for Hoover, he would like to get to know the university better over the coming weeks by listening and learning. He will be in the Moscow area for a short time today, but he said he has a lot of things to take care of before leaving University of Nevada, Reno. Hoover is the vice president for academic affairs and a professor of political science at UNR.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Anne Fox said she was wowed by Hoover's multimedia presentation. "He did a lot of homework," she said. She said she learned a lot from Hoover, and she believed it was impor-

Fugue rejected by senate, will seek student support

Janet Birdsall
Staff

Nearly 60 people attended Wednesday's ASUI Senate meeting, posting a record attendance for this year.

One carried a sign proclaiming, "We love Fugue." Many were supporters of the literary digest Fugue and were petitioning the senate for a position under the Student Media Board, which would entitle the digest to funds from student fees.

After about an hour of discussion, the Senate voted 7-2 to keep that bill in committee. One senator abstained.

Instead, the senate passed a bill to let the student body decide the fate of the digest by putting the issue on a referendum. Students will be able to vote on the issue April 10.

"I guarantee you that if the students say they want the Fugue in the ASUI, it'll be there," said President Brian Kane. He urged the senate to put the proposal on a referendum for student vote.

After the vote, Fugue editor Eric Isaacson said they will press on to get the funds needed to improve the digest.

"We're going to try to get the message out and hope the students support us. If that doesn't work, we'll try other avenues, but we're not giving up," Isaacson said.

The Spring '96 ballot will ask students, "Do you feel the Fugue (a literary digest) should be a part of the ASUI and funded through the student fees paid to ASUI?" If students vote for the digest, it will be under the direction of the Student Media Board as the Argonaut, the GEM and KUOI are now.

Student Media Board Chair Patrick Olsen opposed putting the digest under Student Media direction. He said they would be responsible to ASUI, the president and the media board chair.

"Budget autonomy won't happen," Olsen said.

In other business, ASUI Lobbyist Chris Houck said a welfare reform bill passed the Idaho Senate this week which would require all students enrolled in Idaho colleges and universities to show proof of health insurance.

The bill was to go before the House of Representatives yesterday.

"Everybody I talked to said it's going to pass. It looks like we're going to have to live with that," Houck said.

New computer lab opens on campus

Christopher Clancy
Staff

A new Macintosh lab located in Art and Architecture 103 should provide a another high-tech alternative to crowding in other labs such as the ones in Administration Building.

The new lab is the most powerful Macintosh lab on campus with 15 7500 Power Macs running at 100 MHz, seven 17-inch and eight 15-inch monitors and quad speed CD ROM drives. The new equipment is available with the same range of software and peripherals as the other labs, including a laser printer, Zip drives, a flatbed, color scanner, a slide scanner in addition to e-mail and Internet access.

The new lab was originally scheduled to open last summer, but because of problems with availability of the machines from Apple and continuing renovation of the rooms facilities, the lab wasn't able to open until March 4, Assistant Director of Computer Services Kari Dickinson said.

Part of the delay, caused by the shortage of machines allowed the university to consider purchasing faster, more powerful machines at a better price than the original, less powerful ones, Dickinson said.

"We asked users on campus, mostly faculty, if it would be worth it to wait and get the better machines and they agreed that would be the better way to go," Dickinson said.

Dickinson said she is pleased by the appearance of the lab, which is slightly smaller in comparison to most of the other labs on campus. "I was very impressed...It's very airy and open," she said.

Like all of the computer labs on campus, the new lab was funded by student computer user fees. "I would encourage students to visit the lab and see what we are doing with those fees," Dickinson said.

Since the March 4 opening Computer Services has issued flyers and tacked information to the doors of current Macintosh labs, though the new lab is still far from crowded.

The new lab will follow the same guidelines as other labs, and will be open to students and faculty about 50 percent of the time during the day and then all night. Currently labs such as those in Education 504 and the one in the Administration Building are used for art, education, communication and geography classes. The new lab will also host classes in the future but should give at least one more alternative to Macintosh users in search of free labs during class times, Dickinson said.

University of Idaho student loses legs

MOSCOW—A 19-year-old University of Idaho student stricken with bacterial meningitis has lost both her legs, and more than $12,000 has been raised to help a Weippe boy struggling to overcome the same disease.

Erin Nielson's legs were removed Tuesday, and she probably also will have to have some fingers amputated, said her father, Taylor Nielson.

The Nampa woman was flown to the University Hospital in Salt Lake City last Thursday. She had been at Sacred Heart Medical Center in Spokane, Wash., since shortly after contracting the illness Feb. 25.

Erin Nielson was moved because Spokane has no burn center to perform the skin grafting necessary for her treatment. Her father said he did not know how long his daughter would be hospitalized.

Her internal organs appear to be fine, but she has lost about 85 percent of the skin below her waist and has gone through some skin grafting, Taylor Nielson said.

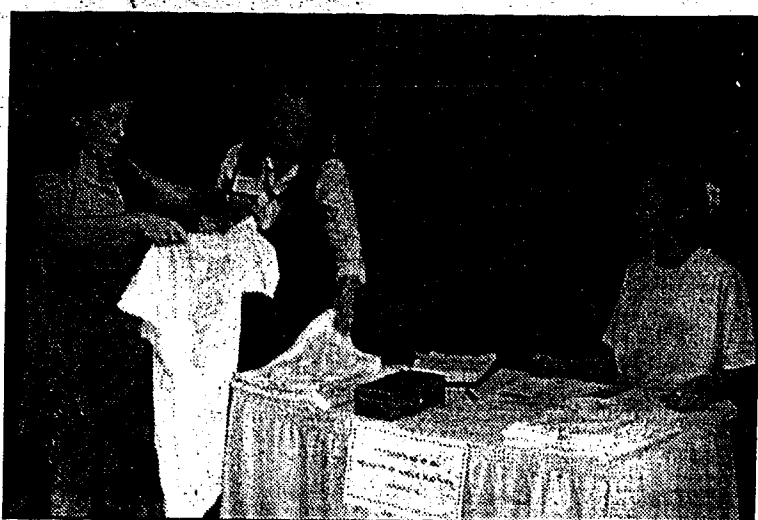

Meanwhile, money raised by friends of a 15-year-old Weippe boy with bacterial meningitis will go into the Aid Association for Lutherans fund at the local First Security Bank in Andy Moore's name.

Moore, who was diagnosed with the disease Feb. 23, went through additional surgery Monday to have more tissue removed from his legs, said Don Blain, pastor of the Wesleyan Church. His internal organs were checked and have survived the disease well, Blain said.

Anthropologists convene in Moscow, students look for real experience

Anthropology students at the University of Idaho and other universities are gaining valuable experience during the 49th Annual Northwestern Anthropological Conference, beginning yesterday and carrying on through Saturday at the University Inn.

Joseph Galanek (right) is a graduate student in anthropology at UI. Galanek presented a paper at the conference.

"It's a great experience to see another aspect of academia; like publishing and presenting papers," said Jamey Zehr, a junior in Anthropology at the UI. The conference, a memorial to UI professor Fank C. Leonhardy, is a collection of student and professional anthropologists from the northwest who have come to Moscow to present papers on various topics.

Paper topics cover a wide range of human pre-history and contemporary phenomena. The conference includes theses dealing with issues as distant as Neanderthal peoples, to the archaeology of the northwest, and the religious affiliation of the Grateful Dead's followers.

The conference is an opportunity for students to present papers to experts in the field.

"This was my first presentation. It was sort of scary, but I think it was a good experience," said Dirk Hunter, a senior in anthropology at Washington State University. Hunter's paper titled, "Tie-dyed Faith: The Religious Experience and the Grateful Dead," analyzed the elements of communal and ritual practices of the "Dead Heads" in terms of forming a religious ideological system.

"I originally wrote this paper because I took a class on psychology of religion. What I found in the class is that I saw the same things that I experienced with the Grateful Dead," Hunter said.

Other students have taken course papers to the next level.

After tearful reunion, girl gets imprisoned father's kidney

SAN FRANCISCO—The tears came in a rush as Renada Daniel-Patterson stood outside the hospital room where the father she had met only twice lay in bed, flanked by two prison guards.

David Patterson, a convicted burglar, was about to donate a lifesaving kidney to the daughter he deserted before she was born.

The surgery at the University of California at San Francisco Medical Center lasted three hours. The teenager and her father were in stable condition at midmorning Thursday, doctors said.

Doctors said it will take weeks and possibly months before it is known whether Renada's body accepts the kidney. Renada's chances improve because she is related to the donor, said Dr. Anthony Portale, a pediatric kidney specialist who is overseeing her recovery.

Renada was born with one kidney that failed when she was 5. She got a new kidney that year, but her body rejected it a year later. Her mother couldn't donate one of hers because she is diabetic, and no suitable matches were found.

Renada was on dialysis three times a week but had been getting sicker in recent months.

Assuming the transplant is successful, she wants to attend school with her friends instead of the in-home education she's been getting because she is confined to the house.

Dog saves woman's life, calls 911

NASHUA, N.H.—Judi Bayly says she owes her life to the faithful companion who dialed 911—her dog Lyric.

Bayly, who sleeps with an oxygen mask on because of a breathing disorder, said she could have died early Tuesday when the breathing machine plug fell out and the oxygen cut off.

But Lyric remembered her training. The dog heard the oxygen alarm sound and first tried to rouse her master.

Failing that, she knocked the receiver off a telephone, and bumped a speed-dial button on the phone three times to dial 911. Several buttons on the phone are programmed for the same number, so she doesn't have to be able to choose one.

The town's 911 system automatically gives dispatchers a caller's address. Rescuers arrived to find Bayly having a major asthma attack.

Bayly said 8-year-old Lyric, trained for her by an agency that trained seeing-eye and hearing-ear dogs, also summoned help a month or two ago when she stopped breathing.

Timetable of Dunblane school shooting

DUNBLANE, Scotland—The quiet, tight-knit Scottish community of Dunblane was shattered Wednesday when a gunman burst into the town's primary school and killed 16 children and a teacher.

At 9:30 a.m. 29 first-year children—aged five and six—gathered in the school gymnasium with their teacher ready to begin their class.

About then, the gunman walked into the school's main entrance armed with four handguns, crosses the entrance hall and dining area and makes for the gym.

Details of what happened next are vague, but soon afterward he opened fire.

Three minutes later, the massacre is over leaving 16 children and a teacher dead, one pupil fatally wounded and 13 others injured. The gunman ended the slaughter by killing himself.

The injured children were taken to a nearby hospital by helicopter and in a fleet of ambulances.

At 10:30 a.m. Stirling Royal Infirmary admitted 13 children and three adults. One pupil died at the hospital. Seven children underwent surgery, three pupils and one adult were transferred to a district hospital and two other children moved to a Glasgow children's hospital.

At 5 p.m. Police identify the gunman as Thomas Hamilton, 43.

No need for alarm over Pope's fever

VATICAN CITY—The Vatican said there was no need to worry over the health of Pope John Paul II, although a fever led the 75-year-old pontiff to cancel a general audience on Wednesday.

Navarro said John Paul developed a fever of about 100 degrees during the night. He said tests were conducted, but did not elaborate.

The Italian news agency AGI reported that the pope also skipped his early morning Mass, which he celebrates in his private chapel.

The pope's health has been a subject of particular attention since a Christmas Day illness when, before a worldwide television audience, he halted his holiday greetings in clear discomfort. The Vatican blamed it on influenza and food poisoning.

A wave of influenza is currently sweeping Rome.

Navarro said there was no plan to move the pope to a hospital and that John Paul's next public activities were still on: a beatification ceremony Sunday in St. Peter's Square and a pastoral visit to the Tuscan town of Siena on St. Joseph's Day, March 19.

During a week-long trip to Latin America in February, the pope appeared frail and tired at times, but bounced back and kept to his schedule. The Vatican denied news reports at the time that the pope had fallen ill.

John Paul, now in the 18th year of his papacy, has a full schedule of foreign travel ahead of him this year: trips to Tunisia in April, Slovenia in May, Germany in June and France in September.

Greeks campout for the homeless

Alpha Kappa Lambda and Delta Gamma experienced life on the streets for 24 hours in order to raise awareness about Moscow's homeless.

From March 8 at 8 p.m. to March 9 at 8 a.m. the AKLs and DGs teamed up for the second annual Campout For the Homeless in the old Jeff's Foods parking lot.

"Homelessness isn't an obvious problem in Moscow," explained Jeff Allen, AKL president. "People need to realize that Moscow does have a problem and there are people who need our help."

Donations of money, food and clothing were accepted by members of the campout in order to benefit the YWCA of the Palouse. The Moscow community donated generously.

"We have an entire formal closet filled with all kinds of food and clothes," Allen said. "A man also came by and donated a storage shed filled with things."

A majority of the members from both houses participated in the event. They worked in shifts and from 8 p.m. on everyone stayed at the site. Participants barbecued, threw the Frisbee, played cards and talked to keep themselves busy.

"Everyone made the campout fun. Some of the pizza places even delivered free pizzas to the campsite," said Allen.

AKL started the campout in 1995. The only change in 1996 was the involvement of the DGs.

"Being involved in an effort like this really gives you a good feeling," said Melissa Anderson, DG vice president. "Living outside was also a good experience, even though we could never come close to fully understanding what its like to be homeless."

Each of the houses said the most memorable part of their experience were the people who drove up with car loads of donations and friendly smiles.

"But it's not as much about the donations as it is about raising awareness," Allen said.

Recent research now shows genital warts is one of the leading causes of cervical cancer in women. Mary Sanchez-Lanier, professor of microbiology at Washington State University has done extensive research on the human papilloma virus which has led to her research of cervical cancer.

"Cervical cancer is one of the top two or three killers of women worldwide. It's the most frequent cancer of women in underdeveloped countries," Sanchez-Lanier said.

HPV is found in 70 to 100 percent of all cervical cancers, but Sanchez-Lanier said she believes over 90 percent of cervical cancer to be caused by HPV. Cancers not included in this 90 percent probably occur in older women.

HPV has more than 70 different types, Sanchez-Lanier said fortunately only a few of these infections are those that may become cancerous. Other variations of the infection cause warts.

All HPV types infect epithelial cells, or cells that cover body surfaces in layers. These infections can form on the skin, respiratory lining or in reproductive tracts.

HPV type one causes planter's warts on the feet, while HPV type two causes the common wart on the hand. Different types of HPV usually infects a specific epithelial site in the body rather than all sites.

Warts formed on the reproductive tract are caused by HPV 16, this sexually transmitted disease is commonly known as genital warts. Sanchez-Lanier said HPV type 16 can cause cancer of the cervix and penis.

Sanchez-Lanier said warts caused by HPV type 16 can stay small and disappear without treatment, but some can become as large as two or more inches and can be difficult and painful to remove.

HPV infections that may become malignant usually start as "flat warts." Even though the wart is not visible to the naked eye, the cells inside the wart change. Sanchez-Lanier said in the small number of flat warts that transform into malignant or cancerous growths, the cells proliferate without restriction.

An HPV infection begins when a virus enters a cell in the bottom layer of the epithelium, where the youngest cells are located. As the infected cell differentiates and matures, the viral infection matures along with it. New and infective progeny viruses are produced only by the fully mature cells.

One representative study found over 50 percent of the college women sampled were HPV positive, many of them for HPV 16 Sanchez-Lanier said.

But not all HPV 16 positive women will develop cervical cancer. "We don't know how to pick the ones that will," Sanchez-Lanier said.

Physicians have used the Pap smear test for over 40 years to find abnormal cells that can indicate the early stages of cervical cancer. The early stages is when the cancer is treatable.

Even though the pap test is not fail proof, it has helped decrease the incidence of cervical cancer. "However we're at a plateau now and may well need to find another way to diagnose the cases that the pap misses," Sanchez-Lanier said.

Sanchez-Lanier, who began working with HPV at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga., says one possibility to look for cervical cancer before it starts is to identify women with the HPV type 16 infection. Because many of the women infected with HPV 16 will not actually get cervical cancer, some people question how well this method would work.

Sanchez-Lanier said persistent HPV infections is the infection that causes cancer. Sanchez-Lanier said she wants to determine what makes an infection persistent rather than disappearing and coming back.

"It's probably not a viral determinant, but

Sheila Janssen Klages has donated a $10,000 pledge and a $2,500 gift to the Idaho College of Engineering in honor and memory of her father, Allen S. Janssen, dean of the college from 1946 to 1967.

The $10,000 shall be used in support of the college's new engineering physics building. In addition the $2,500 gift will be used to enhance the building sign on the Janssen Engineering Building.

"Donations of this size make a significant difference to the quality of engineering programs at UI," said Dean Jacobsen, dean of the College of Engineering.

The new building sign of the Janssen Building is to recognize and honor Allen Janssen. Dean Jacobsen was a student under Janssen while he was in college.

"All of the students in my small class knew he took a genuine interest in each of us and in our professional preparation. My personal attitude toward students was largely shaped by his example," said Jacobsen.

The Janssen family established the Allen S. Janssen Scholarship Endowment in 1973. The income generated by the endowment allows the college to award scholarships each year.

A total of five $740 scholarships are available for the current academic year.

Brandon McCalmont, freshman electrical engineering major said, "I think it's a good plan that helps minimize the surprise expenses that occur during the school year. I would greatly support more of these types of programs."

Health of Idaho's kids studied

Karen Cloud

How safe and healthy are Idaho's children? KIDS COUNT, a national effort to track the well-being of children, recently released its findings for Idaho.

On most measures of child well-being, youth in Latah County and the surrounding area fare well when compared to children in other parts of Idaho. Latah County had one of the lowest rates of teens who are not enrolled in school or in the labor force. Latah County also had one of the highest rates of use of prenatal care.

However, nearly 50,000 children in Idaho live in poverty. Over 28 percent of infants are born to mothers who received inadequate prenatal care. Also, from July 1, 1994 to June 30, 1995, the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare received 13,452 referrals for child abuse.

Several unhealthy trends were seen Among Idaho's teenagers. The percentage of births to unmarried Idaho teens has steadily increased from 6.7 percent in 1991 to 7.5 percent in 1994. Also, the rate of violent teen deaths increased in the same time period.

These findings, along with other facts regarding Idaho's children, are reported in the second annual comprehensive report on well-being of Idaho children—The 1995 Idaho KIDS COUNT Data Book: Profiles of Child Well-being.

CASA Program recruiting volunteers

Kimberley Vowell
Staff

The Second Judicial District CASA Program, Inc. is seeking volunteers to become a guardian to children in protection cases in Latah County. This organization recruits and trains volunteers in five counties in the 2nd judicial district, which encompasses Moscow and Lewiston.

"We consider ourselves an organization that is used to double check the system on children's behalf," Darlene McCullough, spokesperson for CASA said.

The program helps to relieve some of the pressure for other child advocacy organizations, such as the state welfare system, and to make sure that each child's "best interests" are served.

A guardian is appointed for the child in abuse and neglect cases and represents him at each stage of the proceedings. They are responsible for conducting a complete and independent investigation of the matter, preparing and filing reports to the Court, monitoring the case so to guarantee that the order of the Court is followed, and in general, to act as an advocate for the child throughout the case.

"We are open to anyone with many different backgrounds whether or not they have had previous experience with social services," Rita Callery, CASA director, said. Volunteers must be over 21, file a formal application, undergo a reference check, be able to pass a fingerprinting and background check, and proceed through an interview with the program staff.

Callery said, "Volunteers need to be open minded and be willing to learn about the system, and they need to be able to work within the system."

Many volunteers have come to be a part of the CASA Program from a desire to help children in the community. "It is helpful to have a social service or psychology background in that they have some experience understanding some of the issues we deal with, but it is not a requirement," Callery said.

Training for volunteers is scheduled for late April and last for two to three weeks. The sessions are usually in the evenings for the program is geared for volunteers who also have full-time employment. The training covers topics such as child protection policy and practices, child development, the court system, child advocacy, dynamics of child abuse and neglect, and report writing and information gathering.

Latah County has between 15 and 20 new child protection cases a year.

"We try to have enough volunteers so not to overload individuals," Callery said.

The CASA Program currently has able 50 volunteers. Individuals who would like to receive further information on becoming a CASA volunteer can contact Rita Callery or Darlene McCullough at (208) 746-3378.

Criminals victimize students

Allissa Arndt

Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men? Many students on campus have been victimized by the unlawful acts of others. Some students have found that even a locked car can be violated.

At 8 a.m. on the snowy morning of Feb. 23 Linda Puccio parked her car on the corner of Railroad and Sweet after finding her usual parking lot closed for the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival. Puccio returned from class two hours later to find the side of her car smashed in. What she didn't find was a note, witnesses or any clues as to who had done the damage.

Puccio called the police and her insurance company immediately. The police examined the scene and took a report but told Puccio there wasn't really anything they could do. Due to the negligent actions of another Puccio was left to take care of $1,500 worth of damage to her car.

Puccio said, "I'm real upset about it, that someone would do that and not be honest enough to leave a note."

Backpacks, which many students use to tote around more than just books, are often targets for thoughtless and unscrupulous people.

On March 12, Teri Jones fell victim to the selfish desires of another. Jones was in her geology lab in the Mines Building and the class stepped outside for a compass reading. When Jones returned to the class room approximately 45 minutes later her backpack was gone. Jones said that about half the class left their belongings in the room, unfortunately her bag was closest to the door.

Jones said "I cannot believe that this would happen, not only in Moscow, but on campus."

Jones called campus police to report the theft, they told her to call the downtown office. After filing a report Jones canceled her checking account. She also had to get a new student identification card and is in the process of replacing her driver's license.

Jones said, "I just have a really sour taste in my mouth about this school now...I just didn't even think that people like that were around here."

Paul Withers, the community affairs officer for the city, said to report theft, damage to property or a hit and run you should call the downtown police station at 882-5551 and request for an officer to come to the scene and make a report. If the perpetrator is still in the area you should call 911 or 9-911 on campus.

If you are the victim of a hit and run you should not move the vehicle. Evidence is easier to recover if the scene has not been disturbed. You should also check the area for the vehicle that hit you. Withers said there is often a chance that the culprit is also on the way to class and may park nearby. The chances of catching the guilty party are increased if there are witnesses or if the police can match the damage to the cars.

When reporting a theft you should give as detailed a description of everything as possible.

Withers said, "In making any kind of report just remembering any kind of details always helps in recovery." The better description you give to the police the better your chances of recovery. You should call and cancel your credit cards immediately, even before you call the police. You should also report any serial numbers on the items if there are any. Police can recover items by serial number if they are pawned.

I just have a really sour taste in my mouth about this school now...I just didn't even think that people like that were around here.

As a precaution, you should always record any serial numbers of items you own, or have valuables engraved with your driver's license number. If you own a bicycle you should have it licensed with the police department. Always report any thefts or damage to property.

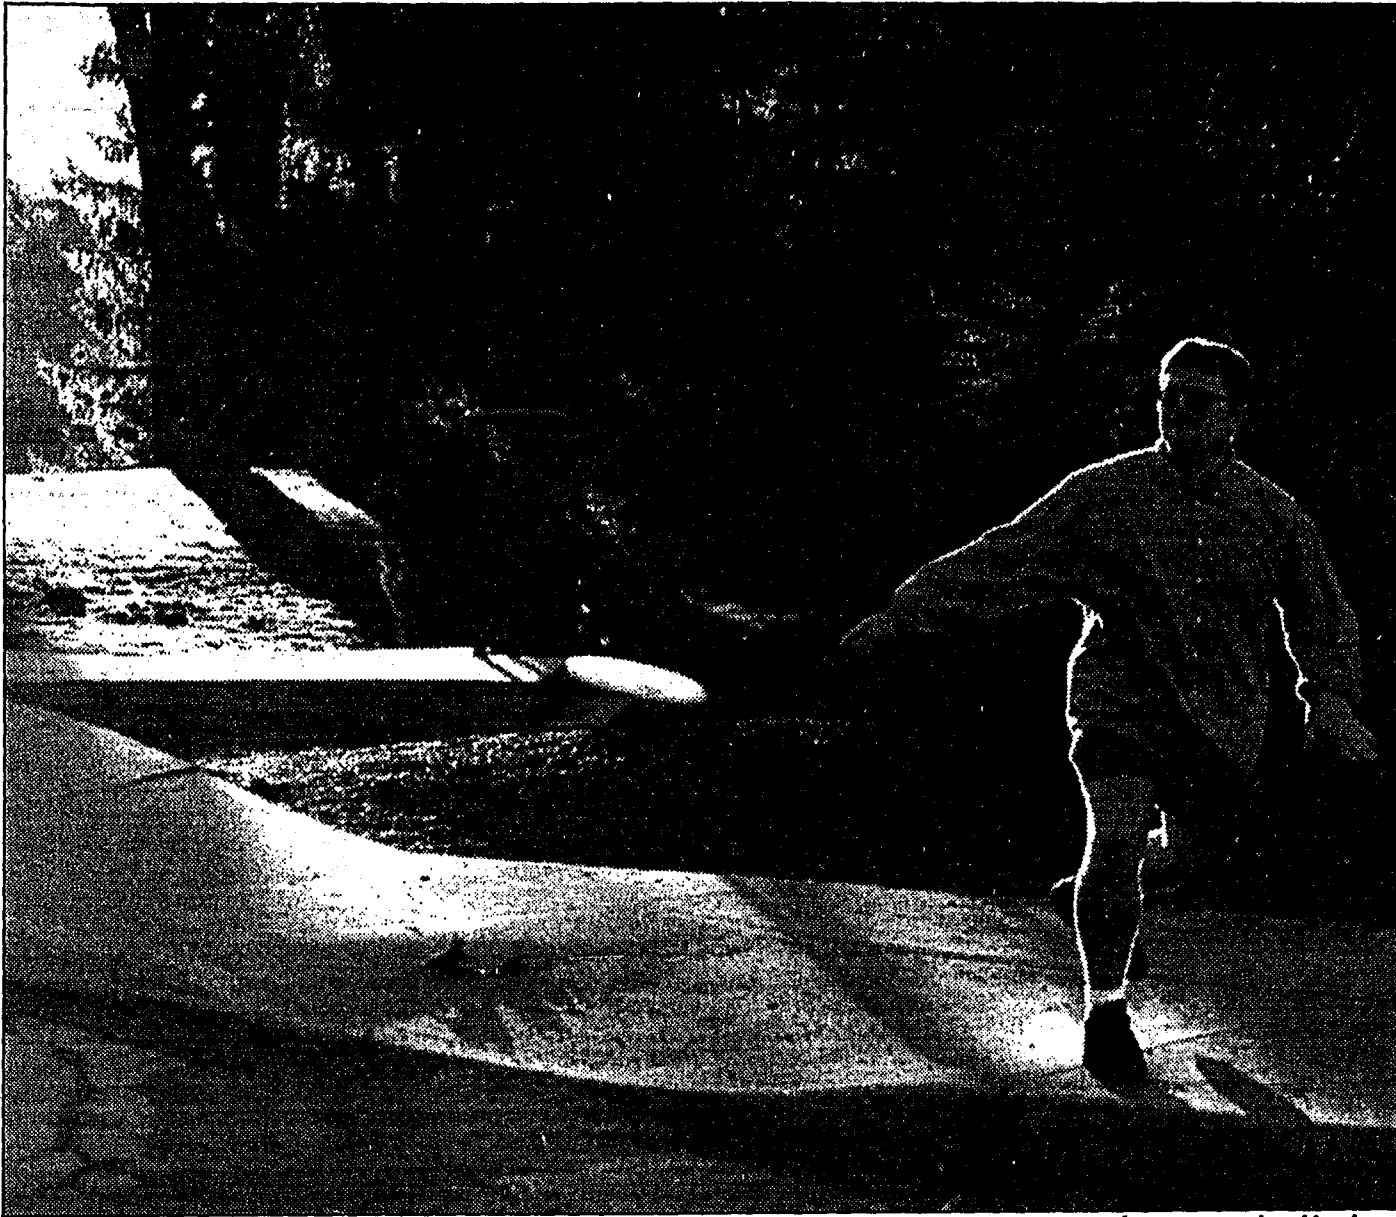

Withers said the police always end up with a number of bikes every year that they don't know who they belong to because they haven't been licensed and no one reports them stolen.

Parents claim girl hurt by lesbian teacher's 'coming out'

Associated Press

BOSTON—A former Brookline High School student is not motivated by hatred of homosexuals in her legal claim against a lesbian teacher who revealed her sexual orientation in class, her lawyer said.

Johanna Jenei's parents, Jeannine and Thomas Jenei, are seeking $359,571 from Brookline officials—including $300,000 for emotional distress—saying their daughter was forced to go to private school.

Johanna Jenei, who was a 14-year-old freshman when she took social studies teacher Polly Atwood's class in the fall of 1993, transferred to Lexington Christian Academy the following spring.

"Johanna is a young woman who believes in God and believes in Jesus Christ as her savior," Salem attorney Randal Fritz said Tuesday. "She loves all people."

But Atwood and other students in the class repeatedly harassed Johanna "on the basis of (her) religious faith, beliefs and her heterosexuality," Fritz wrote in a demand letter sent to Brookline officials Jan. 29.

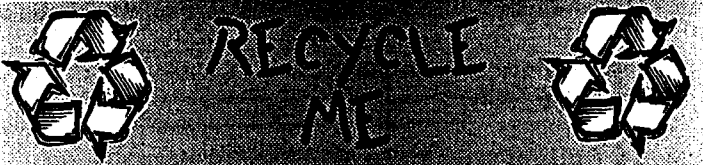

Atwood's revelation that she was a lesbian "was the overwhelming straw that broke the camel's back," said Fritz, a member of the Christian Legal Society and the Rutherford Institute, a conservative Christian legal association.

"She was just completely overwhelmed by people bringing their sexual ... and political agendas into the school," he said.

Others said it was the Jeneis and their lawyer who were motivated by a political agenda.

State Board of Ed president remarks on selection of Hoover

Our purpose is twofold: to express our appreciation to many who have been involved in the search process; second to announce the appointment of the person who has accepted our invitation to become president of this university. We have found that person.

The University of Idaho is a place of history and a place of promise. In its past are achievements of growth and stature. In its future are expectations of expansion, evolution and refinement. It is a physical place existing at the campus in Moscow as well as at sites of significance in northern, western, southern and eastern Idaho. It is more. This university traffics in the unobservable. Its stock in trade is knowledge—its development and transmission.

It is in this ether-world that the university weaves its fabric: the weft of kinetic energy and the warp of stability and tradition. It is in this interaction of the tendencies toward status quo and impulses toward unrestrained liberation, that this university daily toils to find balance. In teaching and research; in service and out-reach; in liberal arts and land grant services, this university seeks to offer opportunity to its students and other citizens of the state.

This place is fundamentally optimistic. Educators must basically believe that the next generation will build on the successes of the previous and help to carry us closer to realizing our potential—individually and collectively. That optimism, that faith in the human spirit, that tendency to look toward tomorrow and imagine how good it could be, brings our unique and disparate paths, which in this setting are often those less traveled by, to this common junction.

While our immediate task has been identification of one who satisfies a complex definition of leadership, our larger purpose has been to express our fundamental belief in the meaning, durability, and hopefulness of this institution and those whom it touches. Our optimism has been required. As we have mined the wealth of talent of the several candidates to discover the one who will best direct the strategic energies of this university, in all probability, into the next millennia.

tant UI have an academician.

"The future is very exciting for the University of Idaho," Fox said.

While visiting UI over the past week, Hoover said a lot of things impressed him, but most of all the friendliness of the people of the university and of the state—from Boise to Coeur d'Alene.

Hoover believes UI and Boise State University can cooperate in a variety of different ways. He said he is interested in collaboration with other institutions. During his multi-media presentation in open forums last week, he stressed how important it is for UI and Washington State University to further their cooperative relationship.

In last Friday's forum, Hoover said as president he would lead the development and articulation of a shared vision, organize the implementation of that vision, be an advocate for UI, and provide the energy to muster community support.

Hoover was selected over finalists A. Larry Branen, UI food and toxicology professor; J. Kirk Sullivan, vice president for governmental and environmental affairs at Boise Cascade Corp.; and Nicholas L. Henry, president of Georgia Southern University.

Straight Alliance at Brookline High who now is a sophomore at Smith College, said she thought the demands were a challenge to recently-enacted state protections for gay and lesbian students.

While it is inappropriate for teachers to get too personal with students, "It's OK for students to know that teachers have lives outside the classroom," said Lonberg-Lew, who said she did not know Johanna Jenei. "Certainly, heterosexual teachers have made it known that they are heterosexual" by mentioning wives and husbands, she said.

Mary Bonauto, an attorney with Gay and Lesbian Advocates and Defenders, said that if the tables were turned, the Jeneis' claims would seem absurd.

"If you put the shoe on the other foot, this would suggest that a teacher who acknowledged their homosexuality could be sued by the parents of a gay student," Bonauto said.

Parents cannot expect all public school teachers to mirror their particular values—nor would that be desirable in a school system dedicated to debate and critical thinking, she said.

"If parents, through these kinds of threatened lawsuits, attempt to control who the teachers are or every aspect of the curriculum, then public education is unworkable," Bonauto said.

"We're going to have Democratic parents suing because a teacher is Republican; we're going to have Jewish parents suing because they find out their child's teacher is a Muslim," she said.

The demand letter accuses Atwood, the social studies department chairman, the school's headmaster, Walsh, the town and the school committee of negligence. Such letters, if they do not lead to settlement, often are followed by a lawsuit.

Atwood announced her sexual orientation in a social studies class and said she had a wonderful relationship with her partner, Fritz said.

The Jeneis claim school officials refused their request to set up an independent study course for their daughter with another teacher and threatened to withhold credit if Johanna did not remain in Atwood's class.

"The school should do what its own policy books say it should—respect students' differences, including differences of faith," Fritz said.

School Superintendent James Walsh said school officials offered the Jeneis several alternatives.

"Because of Brookline's tradition of being responsive, the student was offered a number of options, including another teacher in the same course or another social studies course with the same credits.

"Obviously, the student's parents had a different perspective and a different agenda," he said in a statement.

Town and school officials did not return calls seeking comment Tuesday, and Atwood could not be reached at Brookline High.

The Jeneis, both public school teachers in Cambridge, did not return a message left at their new home in Reading.

Fritz, who also claims membership in the Christian Coalition and Focus on the Family, has been involved with similar legal actions in the past. He was among several Rutherford Institute-affiliated lawyers representing parents who sued over an AIDS education program at Chelmsford High School.

The Chelmsford case was dismissed by U.S. District Court Judge Robert Keeton, who found that "parents who send their children to public schools ... daily risk their children's exposure ... to ideas and values that the parents and the children find offensive."

The dismissal was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

something unique to the women who maintain the infections," Sanchez-Lanier said. Some possibilities include the women's immune function, genetic inheritance or environment.

Sanchez-Lanier said, "Once we understand disease's natural history we might be able to use that information to provide guidelines for treatment."

Sanchez-Lanier has expanded her research to include women who are both HPV and HIV. Women who have both infections tend to develop cancer more rapidly than those who are not HIV positive. Sanchez-Lanier is interested in determining how the progress of each infection is affected by interactions between the viruses.

Sanchez-Lanier said "Cervical cancer has been considered an STD for over 100 years." But, she also said, "It is wrong to say it is only an STD. We just don't yet understand all these other ways of transmission."

Although HPV is associated with cancer of the penis and is sexually transmitted, the incidence of cancer of the penis is much lower than that of cervical cancer. Sanchez-Lanier said this suggests the physiology and environment of the cervix may be a more hospitable site for HPV than the male reproductive tract.

To fund or not to fund?

In a less than bold and controversial move the Senate took a hands off approach regarding student funding of the literary digest Fugue. Not to say this was a bad approach by the Senate, they can't lose. They offered the Fugue a chance to make it on merit and placed the decision where it rightly belongs; with you the students. We could be funding Fugue, it's our choice.

Fugue has been searching for a patron. Earlier this semester ASUI gave Fugue $1,500 to improve the presentation of "The University of Idaho Literary Digest." Now the editorial staff of the Fugue is, as ASUI President Brian Kane said so succinctly, "Looking for a home."

The question is "who will pay?" Fugue wants money to put out a competitive digest, they asked the English department. They refused, they asked the Senate, the Senate backed off and left the choice to the students. Now the choice is yours.

Patrick Olsen, Student Media Board chair, and Lance Olsen, Fugue faculty adviser and professor of English, squared off at the senate meeting. Like two protective parents the two traded jabs in a bout reminiscent of the Hatfields and McCoys.

The next elections are coming up and the question you will be asked is, "Do you feel the Fugue (a literary digest) should be a part of the ASUI and funded through the student fees paid to ASUI?"

There will be a lot of debate, information, misinformation and rhetoric spewed by those on both sides of the issue. You need to wade through the data and come to a decision. Frankly, whether the Fugue changes format or not, its content will remain top notch.

About 10,000 students are eligible to vote, less than 2,000 actually do. A 20 percent turnout would be stellar compared to recent elections. Your vote will count. Most UI elections are decided by a few votes, remember to cast yours. University students are supposed to be the future leaders of America. It is a pathetic example we set when we can't even get 20 percent of the student body to the polls.

Perhaps the debate is good. Controversy could help boost our voter turnout.

Here is the recent history of the Fugue. At one time they were funded by ASUI fees, but felt the request of the senate to include more student material was unacceptable. They left ASUI because of this.

Fugue wanted student money to produce a quality product but was unwilling to live with the restrictions. Fugue wanted to have its cake and eat it too.

Who will Fugue publish? Who will pay? These choices are yours.

Teens told to take a hike if they drop out

I guess there is a huge scare that kids who drop out of high school are going to run you over. Or something along those lines. That seems to be the only reasonable explanation for the new law passed by our elected officials in Boise.

This law, which just needs to be signed by the governor, says that kids who drop out of high school should lose their driving privileges. Despite allowances for those students in hardship situations, or those actively seeking a general equivalency diploma (GED), these situations aren't specified, which could eventually get Boise in trouble.

Reasons for dropping out of high school vary for people in Idaho. Idaho is ranked high on the list of the most high school pregnancies

Eyes & Ears

per capita. Being pregnant seems like a good reason to drop out of school. I know if I were expecting, I would not like to attend school where peers are less than understanding and mostly judgmental.

Some students are expelled because of too many unexcused absences. (Does that make sense? Expel them because they are gone too much?)

Another reason for dropping out is to help the family out. Unfortunately, it is not uncommon for youngsters these days to need to contribute to the family income. James Wandler, a high school counselor in Sandpoint, is frustrated with business organizations which don't always support the students being in school.

In actuality, though, it is not the business' job to keep students in school. It is a parent's job to keep their child in school, not a business, and certainly not the state or federal government's job.

It is not hard to find a reason to qualify for "hardship situations." I am sure if someone cared enough to find one and keep their driver's license they would.

But think about the concept. Those students who don't find a reason and drop out of school lose their driver's license. This privilege, given to all American people who can pass a written and driving test, is not a reward for getting a high school diploma. If that were the case, the driving age should be set at 18 or 19, enough to allow teens to graduate before getting a piece of plastic that legally allows them to drive.

Think about the kind of people who drop out of school for no reason. Do you really think they would be opposed to driving without a license? As long as they drive safe and have all their car lights working, etc., they aren't going to get pulled over.

Or they won't get pulled over unless the legislature decides to throw another loop into their wacky bill and say that police can stop a vehicle if the driver looks too young to have graduated. Good grief. It is enough to make a person go insane!

School officials in Idaho are cautiously optimistic that the law may motivate some students to stay in school. Rep. Bill Sali, R-Meridian, said "It would be a hollow victory indeed to keep kids in school if they don't really want to be there. They're going to be there because of the power of government."

When a student drops out of school, the school district is to notify the Department of Motor Vehicles. People under the age of 18 must provide verification from their school district that they are in

Leave the UCC be, lest the aliens seek revenge

You know, there are days I truly feel sorry for the University Classroom Center.

No campus building is more maligned and despised. Detractors say the UCC is ugly, dark and cold in winter, a solar oven in summer and fall. They compare its architecture to structures that would have been built by Cro-Magnons if they'd had a couple million red cinder blocks lying around.

Indeed, its labyrinthine ramps and gangways slick with ice are often scrawled with crude and childish Neanderthal renderings which pass for art and political thought.

Personally, I think the UCC is a space alien relic. The honeycomb of hollow concrete boxes that decorates its eastern facade resembles the New Age art deco popularized by Star Trek—the '60s version. Room numbering seems to follow an alien logic borne from a planet

Pas d'ardouilles ici

whose inhabitants do not believe in Earth's backwater view that room numbers should increase only as one gains altitude, and not the reverse.

Other vestiges of alien design and technology are readily visible:

Distinct similarities exist between the light panel/podium assemblies in some classrooms and the espresso machine-like gadgets present in the Mos Eisley spaceport cantina in Star Wars. Teachers would look more at home while fiddling with the switches and knobs on the podiums if they wore red and black jumpsuits and shouted phrases like "What's goin' on up there, Captain? We canna take another hit like that or the Enterprise will be lost, forever lost!"

The aliens neglected to remove the knee-high miniature chalkboards underneath the human-accessible chalkboards on the side walls of the classrooms. One can easily imagine these squat chalkboards were intended for use by teachers who resemble either the pancake-like creature that killed Captain Kirk's brother and attacked Spock or the snake-like critter that wrestled with Luke Skywalker in the Death Star Garbage Chamber. (These descriptions are offered for illustrative effect only. Similarities to present faculty are wholly coincidental.)

Communications professor Don Coombg claims he once knew the purpose of those chalkboards for the vertically challenged, but blames advancing years for the loss of the information. Right. I'll bet he's one of the aliens. I'll bet he's been watching us the whole time.

But back to the UCC and the distinct possibility university officials bought it, lock, stock and Dolores, from a hippie who found it at an alien fire sale held somewhere in the Nevada desert.

Ever wandered through the central corridors that snake, roto-routerlike, through the bowels of the UCC?

Me neither, and ain't nobody gonna get me in there until I've erased every memory of "It" and "Alien" from my mind. Looks sorta spooky in there.

I get nervous every time I look at that one-way glass the aliens once used to show filmstrips when the UCC was part of their Earth Invasion Training School. Maybe they've still got miniature spies back there watching us, counting how many times per hour we pick our noses. Or doze in class.

The corridor also serves, or so I hear, as a torture chamber of sorts for misbehaving faculty and employees. Just the other day I heard a noise coming from that corridor; a noise I heard the night before on ER when the doctors had to drill through a patient's skull to get at the marble he'd shoved up his nose. Our brave professor went in search of the source of the—ah—skull-shattering sound and came back five minutes later none the worse for wear, except that her head, for lack of a better description, was more portable than usual.

But all weirdness aside, it would be even weirder to slice through the school or have a waiver from the requirement. Waivers would be provided by school officials after a hearing to determine whether the student has a personal hardship requiring a car for employment or medical care.

Before the legislature makes this a law, they need to specify what circumstances would be considered as "hardship situations," how they are going to enforce this petty law, and when dropouts would be allowed to obtain another license. But why would they want to be specific about any law?

My course in State and Local government taught me that to save their skins, lawmakers generally tend not to specify. Well, this is certainly saving their skin, because if it was specified, this bill would be not be worth a darn.

Coming up with ways to keep teens in school is a great idea. But do not take away privileges which do not relate to getting an education. Find other ways, more realistic ways, to keep kids motivated and in school. Getting an education should be choice, not a law.

UCC • FROM PAGE 9

UCC (with space-based lasers, no doubt) to make way for a slice of sky and an unobstructed view of the library clock tower to the proposed University Commons area germinating due east of our beloved and beleaguered UCC. Not only will the aliens be ticked about us altering their former property, but cutting up the building as proposed by the model in the library would make the building even uglier, if one can imagine that.

All in all, the UCC is our friend. Our friend. Friend. Friend.

Or so say the alien ESP messages I receive every time I see Don Coombs.

Help cure the destruction around our feet

For days upon days this problem of litter in every crevice of my known world has plagued my unresting soul. I've asked myself a hundred times why people choose to litter and destroy this place of natural wonders, but never have I found any justification for this immoral act. So it is now instead of asking "Why?" I take it upon myself to solve this question. All I ask is a small amount of each individual's time and heed you to listen to my words.

As I started my daily stroll around the earth, instead of looking at nature in all its splendor, reality crashed onto me showing me the true face of humanity and its destruction caused by litter. It's at that moment that I am disgusted with every human around, including myself, because I am letting it occur. My urge is to grab everyone around me and tell them about the destruction in my sacred realm, but I know the common man will only laugh. Laugh because he sees a man with alternative thoughts to his own, laugh due to his lack of awareness of the problem staring him in his face. So I go on doing what I can to help clean up whatever comes across my path, but it seems that whatever I do one day is replaced the next by someone who in his/her own mind has somehow justified there right to litter on earth.

So there is only one thing I ask of my fellow students, faculty and residents of Moscow; the next time you see a piece of litter no matter how minute, instead of looking at it, pick it up. Before you drop that empty bottle, think. Think my thoughts of how I and others are impacted by your split second decision to perform an idiotic act. Think about how you would feel if our streets were lined with trash. "Would it bother you?" If you get to this point and still decide to throw the bottle maybe you are not fit to live on MY great planet, perhaps you should be thrown away the way your bottle was so hastily discarded. For in my eyes you have no soul, worth and/or Spirit.

Walt Whitman said it like no other:
Now I am terrified at the Earth, it is that calm and patient,

It grows such sweet things out of corruptions,
It turns harmless and stainless on its axis,
with such endless succession of disease'd corpses,

It distills such exquisite winds out of such infused factor,

It renews with such unwitting looks its prodigal,

annual, sumptuous crops,

It gives such divine materials to men, and accepts such leavings from them at last.

To many these might be just words, but hopefully to more people these words represent the importance of the earth, and how one man can create strife for such an immense structure. Now there are so many problems that humans have caused for mother earth, litter is only one. To some it may mean nothing, but have no doubt the problem is real and for every man it is a reality that he faces every step of every day.

If anyone is interested in starting to eliminate this problem on campus please contact me through e-mail Symm9222@uidaho.edu.

Renaissance Fair booths available to non-profit groups

This is a letter to inform interested non-profit groups and organizations that it is time to consider whether they wish to operate a food booth at this year's Renaissance Fair. If so, a short letter should be written to obtain an application containing your group's name and address and who the contact person will be. ## Funding Fugue not a 'bad idea'

In your main opinion on March, "Funding Fugue bad idea," you write that funding Fugue, "...is a bad deal and stupid idea." It may be a bad deal, but it is no stupider than many ideas regularly published in your paper. Before looking to insults, maybe look for good reasons not to consider funding Fugue. We subsidize a yearbook, newspaper and radio station and many call these bad and stupid ideas. I do not think funding a student published literary digest is any stupider than the rest. Maybe its newfound student home would encourage students to participate in its publication in new and unforeseen ways. Remember, when told that the earth was not the center of the universe many people called it a "stupid idea."

Watch other people get 'beat'

We-hew! Spring break is here! Oh yeah. Midterms just ended, and we mistakenly thought that the stress was over. We are all tired of the weather, professors and grades; and when we get back from spring break it will still be here. Beat the blues and come watch our midterm. Dancers, Drummers and Dreamers V presents "We're beat!" on March 29 and 30 at 8 p.m. in the Hartung Theatre. This is a one of a kind performance with the collaboration of the UI Dance Theatre and the Lionel Hampton School of Music. This off-beat group of artists have been beating themselves into shape since the beginning of the semester. Let us entertain you. Please?

Tickets are available through the Hartung Box Office. $4 for UI students.

Food bank needs help

I am disabled so I know what times of no food mean.

Moscow/Latah County has a food bank. The Catholic Church has provided good facilities for them to use. But their shelves are very bare.

They split from the USDA because they were telling them who they could serve. This violates every principle of a food bank. Sadly, this did away with their source of milk, cheese and butter.

I really think groups on campus could organize a drive to supply food to the food bank. They, and a lot of hungry people need your help.

State law should allow for long term contracts

Mark Vanderwall

Life after Cravens may be a second life for former Vandal Coach Kermit Davis. If everything goes as planned, you and I should both know if Davis is headed back to the Palouse from his current home in Logan, Utah, where he is currently assisting another former Idaho coach in Larry Bustachy.

Davis, who coached Idaho during 88-89 and 89-90, compiled an overall record of 50-12 going 25-6 both seasons on his way to becoming the winningest coach in Idaho history.

Enough with the background. Davis comes to Idaho for the second time, after recruiting violations slowed his young career at Texas A&M, and sent him to Utah State. If you believe these violations weren't going on before Davis arrived, you probably picked Central Florida to win the NCAA Tournament. I am not saying in any way that Davis wasn't partially to blame, but to lose his job was a little steep.

He was offered the Eastern Washington top spot in 1995, but opted to stay at Utah State. After a disappointing loss to San Jose State this past weekend, Davis secretly showed up here on campus Tuesday, no wonder I couldn't reach him Monday night by phone.

It's now time to get serious about this topic. Universities in the state of Idaho have a law that they cannot offer new employees over a one-year contract, so Davis will have limited job security if he happens to take the job. This goes back to coach Cravens, who was only ever given one year contracts, even though he was no longer a new employee after his first season. This is where common sense comes in. Say for instance you're Kermit Davis for a day, do you look at this as a result of Cravens results, or a way for the University of Idaho to keep out of hot water and cover their backs if they happen to hire the wrong guy. Personally, I go with the second option for the simple reason this is the way things are done here at Idaho anymore.

Idaho Athletic Director Pete Liske was quoted in Thursday's edition of the Lewiston Morning Tribune as saying, "When you're competing with other states and other schools, it's always been a hindrance for us," referring to the Idaho contract law. This reiterates the belief that despite being a hindrance for UI, officials still only granted Craven's a series of one-year contracts and who's to say the next coach's situation won't be the same.

I think it's the easy way out for the university and a way for them to cover their butts if they happen to make a bad decision. Why not go out on a limb and get the best coach available, but this time sign him to a long term contract to get stability back in the basketball program, instead of making UI a stepping stone for incoming coaches. I think the best coach available right now is Kermit Davis, and I'm behind UI 100 percent to land him, but in this day and age job security in coaching is about as reliable as a car with no gas. Davis isn't a dumb man and he, like the rest of the world, wants to know where his next meal is coming from. Despite the law on employment, Idaho needs to sign Davis to a long-term contract.

Davis hiring around the corner

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

Apparently road signs in the Idaho basketball program point to Kermit Davis.

Idaho Athletic Director Pete Liske said Davis, an assistant at Utah State, and the university are ironing out the final logistics of a contract that would give the former Idaho coach the reigns to Vandal basketball.

"We are pretty close to getting to that final part where you can both agree and make it work," Liske said Thursday. "It looks pretty positive right now, but you never know. I learned that a long time ago in this business."

That final ironing point may be a state law that keeps Idaho universities from offering contracts longer than a year to new employees.

Davis was in Moscow Tuesday to discuss the job, which became available when Joe Cravens was fired Monday, with Liske and UI Interim President Tom Bell. Liske said he hopes an official announcement can be made within the next few days.

"We had a good, productive conversation," Liske said. "We feel really good and we think Kermit does too."

Davis, who was a finalist for the UI vacancy three years ago when Cravens got the nod, coached the Vandals in the 1988-89 and 1989-90 seasons when he posted back-to-back 25-6 records and two Big Sky titles. Davis moved on to coach at Texas A&M in the 1990-91 season, but was put on a two-year probation by the NCAA for recruiting violations.

Davis's baggage may have been too heavy in 1993, but the weight must have lightened since.

"We thoroughly explored it (the problems with the NCAA) and addressed it previously," Liske said. "He's done nothing but establish himself. I don't think there's any question anyone who goes through that one time, there's not a prize in the world, including a national championship, that's worth going through it again."

Ackerman steady through changes

Mark Vanderwall
Staff

Since her arrival on the University of Idaho campus, Jan Ackerman has brought a certain aura to the women's basketball program.

Coming out of Cody, Wyo., Ackerman averaged 18 points and nine rebounds during her campaign for Cody High. Coming to Idaho with high expectations, Ackerman soon became a role player for the Vandals, but adjusted to her new style and left it all on the floor every night.

Growing up in a town of around 10,000 people, Ackerman knew everyone and they all knew her. She was a three-time all conference selection in basketball and twice in volleyball. She grew up watching her favorite University of Wyoming star Fennis Dembo and still garners the remains of that affection on her uniform, sporting number 34 just as Dembo did in his stint for the Cowboys.

This advertising major, as well as Jill Morris are the only seniors who have been with the program for four years, making the transition from the Laurie Turner era to the current up-tempo style of Julie Holt.

"There's a lot more intensity with coach Holt, we played a more up-tempo style of basketball," Ackerman said.

Despite receiving limited playing time during her campaign at Idaho, Ackerman never gave up and cheered for who was ever on the floor during the game.

"We really had good team chemistry this year, and everyone got along. There was no backstabbing or talking behind each others backs, we were happy for who was on the floor and when it came your turn to play you went out and gave it your all," Ackerman said.

Smiling throughout the interview, Ackerman's happy-go-lucky attitude can't help but rub off on you. Despite a disappointing record, Ackerman still viewed the season as a success.

"We played so well at times, we don't really feel the season was ever finished. If any team would have played us in practice we would have killed them," Ackerman said.

Still smiling, Ackerman addressed what college athletics has meant to her. She said that without deciding to play, she wouldn't have been prepared for the next level.

"I know now that if I set a goal for myself I can achieve it. Because of basketball, I've done things that I never dreamed I could do," Ackerman said.

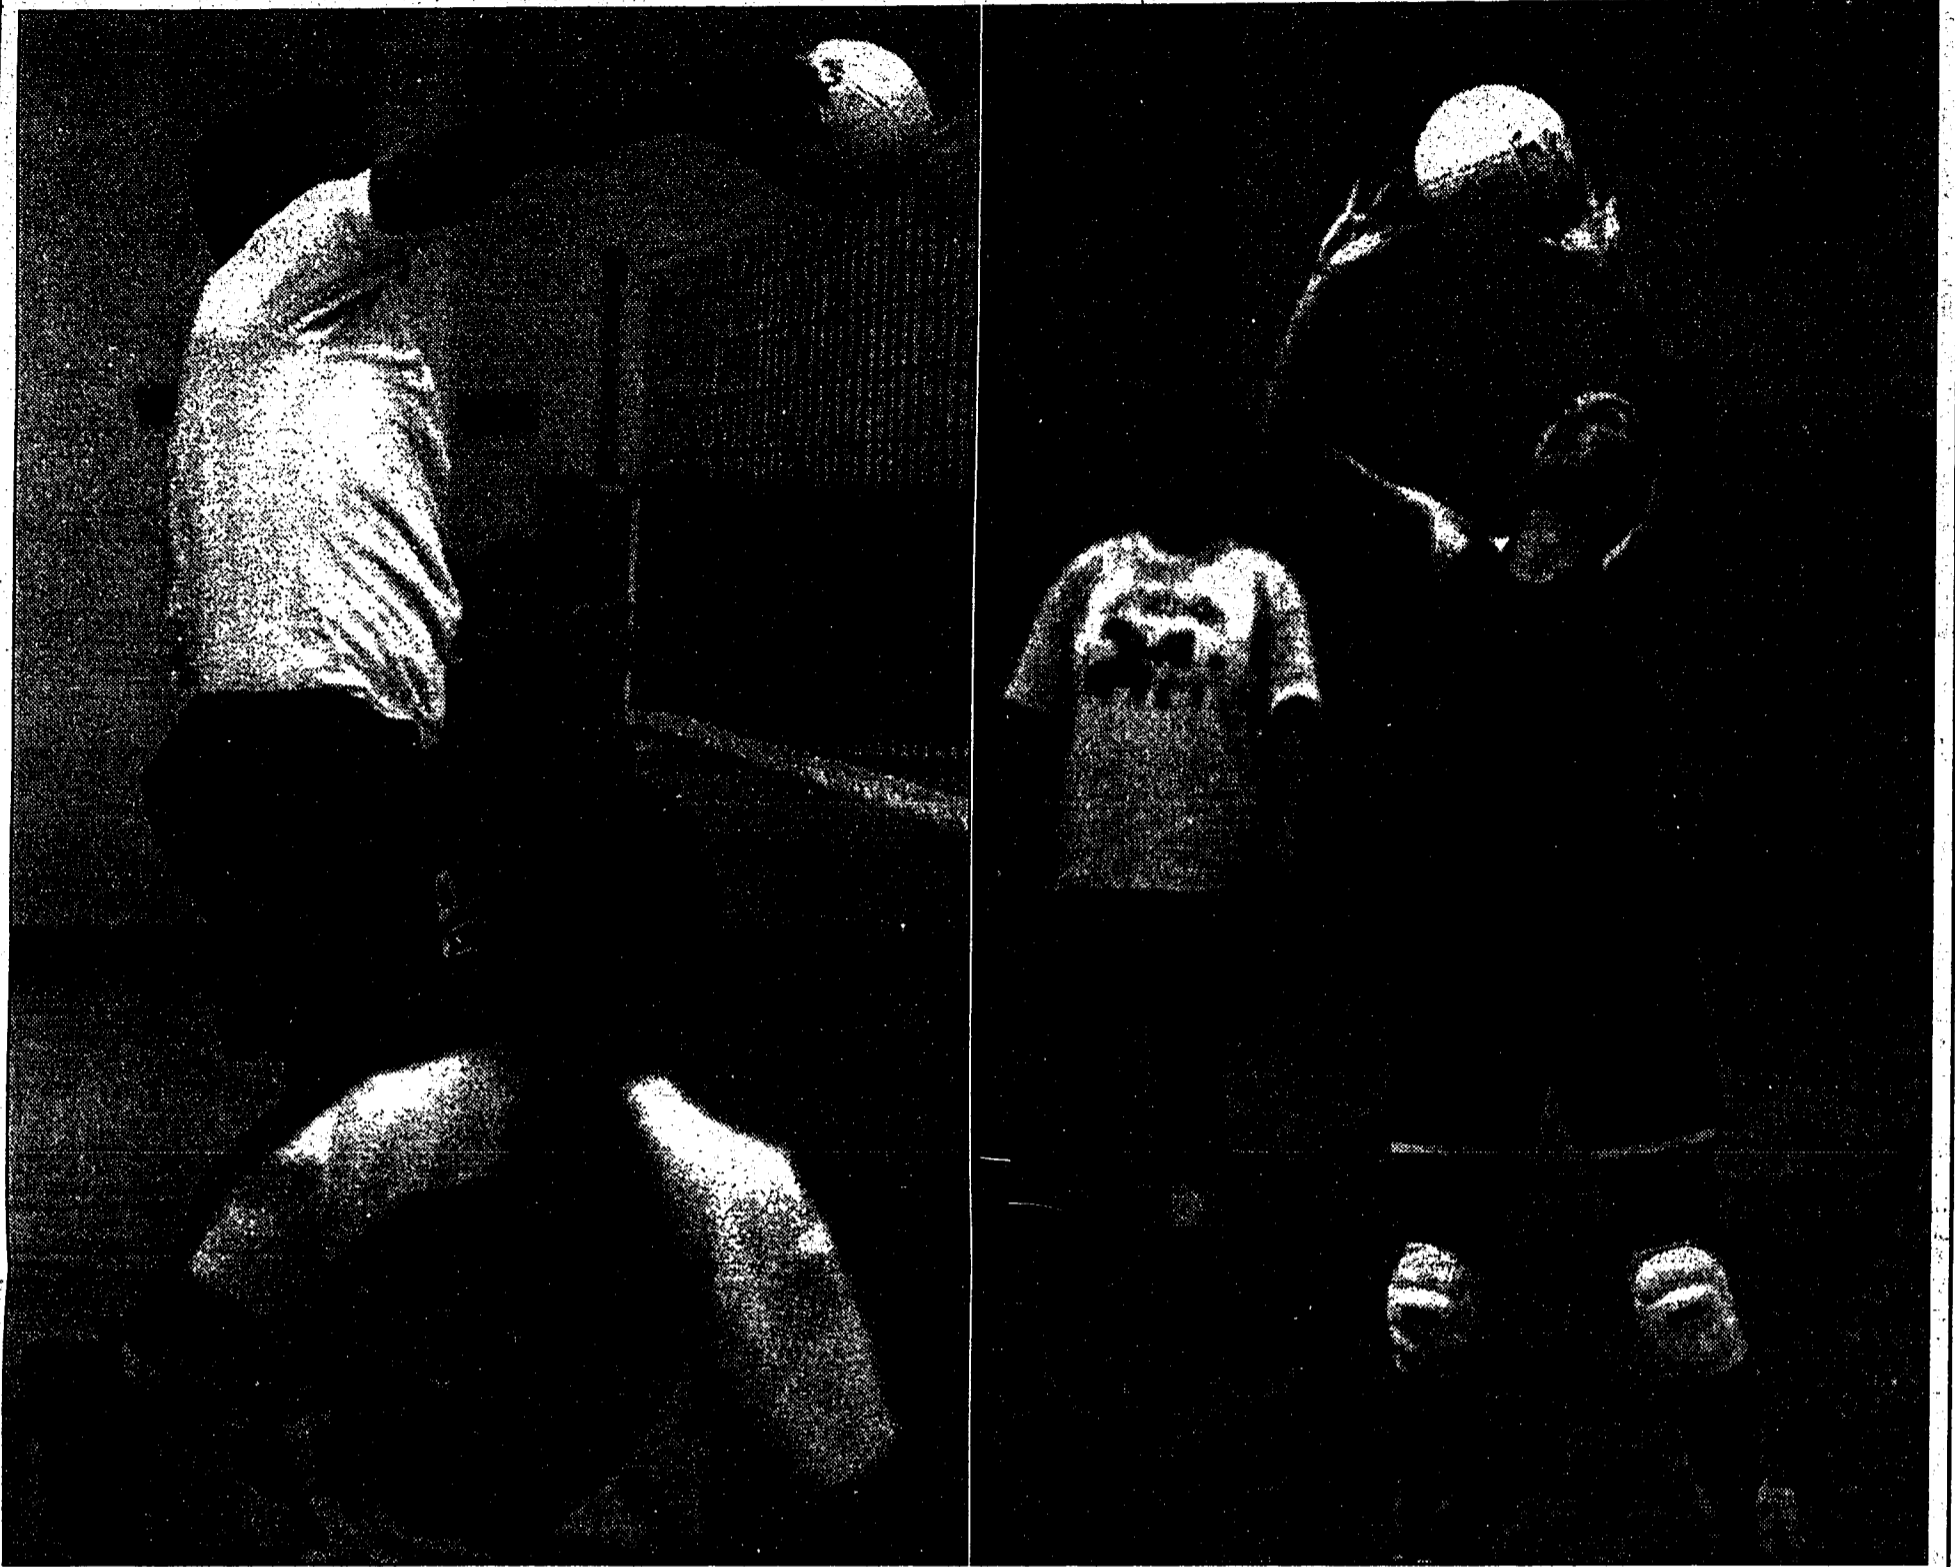

Graduating in May, Ackerman hopes to be married in six years, not five or seven, but exactly six years. She is carrying a 3.13 grade-point average and plans to try to work in either Denver or Boulder Colo.

When asked what she wants people to know about her that would surprise them, Ackerman started laughing and said, "That I actually played in High School."

Despite the fact she asked me to leave that out, it says that despite limited playing time, Ackerman has brought much more than her game to UI.

Baseball club hits away

Damon Barkdull
Staff

The bats are cracking, the sale of chewing tobacco is going up and a fresh scent of roasted peanuts and hotdogs is making its way through the spring air.

Ahhh yes, it is once again time for baseball. For the University of Idaho baseball club, things are already underway.

The club has 22 players out this year after an earlier spring tryout and is looking better than ever-player/coach Chris Houck said.

"This is almost a whole new team compared to what we had last year," Houck said. "It's going to be interesting is my prediction for the season. We have a quality group of guys this year. The Big Sky Championship is in Cheney this year and I wouldn't be surprised if we're in the top two."

Houck, 22, came to Idaho after playing baseball on scholarship for Eastern Utah. After having surgery on his shoulder and wanting to further his education, Houck ventured to Idaho and decided to join the club team. This is Houck's second season at Idaho.

Although Houck and other players feel they are every bit as competitive as some Division I college baseball programs, the UI club continues to be a non-scholarship program.

In fact, the club's funding comes partially from the ASUI, partly from their own pockets and from player earned money working at UI football game concession stands.

Besides funding problems, the UI club battles bad weather, muddy practice fields in Moscow and low attendance.

"Very little crowd support," Houck said. "Namely girlfriends show up. Baseball is not the most exciting game. Unless you really love the game or you're dating someone, they have to be there."

This weekend UI students and Moscow residents have the opportunity to come support the team when they entertain the Eastern Washington club on Saturday and Sunday.

During this spring break the Vandal club will make the Montana road swing and play the University of Montana Mar. 19-20 in Missoula and Montana State in Bozeman Mar. 21-22.

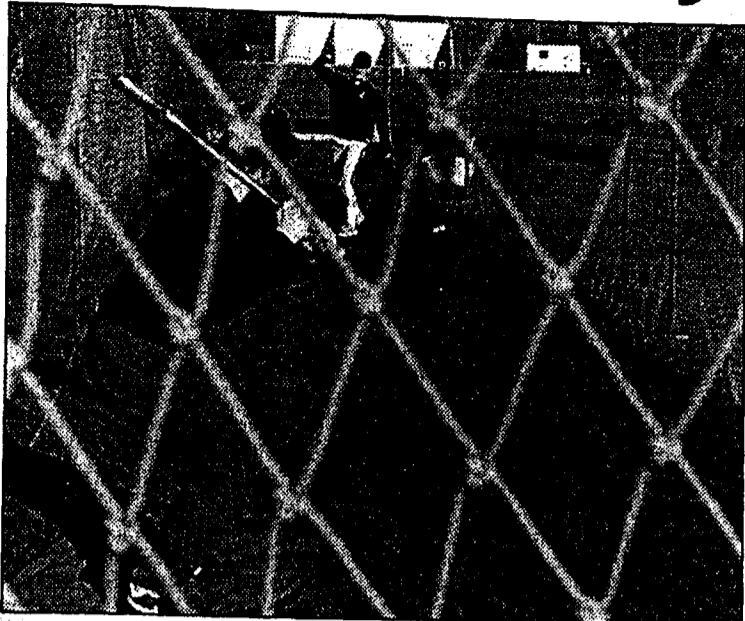

Other UI opponents include Boise State, Western Washington and Idaho State. Last season the team finished third in the BSC and looks to improve on that record this year.

Chances are, the team will be in good shape come conference tournament time, thanks to a commitment from several experienced players and college transfers, including athletes from several backgrounds.

"I wanted to play college baseball, but that didn't fall through," said freshman UI student Dave Klukdsal. Klukdsal, a native of Meridian, Id., wanted to keep playing the game he loved even without a scholarship. "The club was a way I could further my baseball for a little bit."

Usually the team practices on Guy Wicks field, but because of muddy conditions the team has been practicing at the on campus softball field. Houck welcomes anyone who wishes to come out and play. "We'll take a look at you," Houck said.

The team practices at 3:00 p.m. every week day.

Rodeo club excels in Walla Walla

Teah Jones
Contributing Writer

UI Rodeo Team members accumulated over $800 in winnings at the first college rodeo of the season in Walla Walla, Wash. last weekend. Three members captured first place in their respective events and one team member garnered a second place finish.

"I was very pleased with how the kids performed. It's early in the season, and they haven't all had a lot of opportunities for practice," UI coach Dave Breeding said.

Lack of practice time certainly didn't seem to affect UI team member Joelene Janicek who won almost $500 in the barrel racing event.

Janicek, a sophomore, beat out 41 other competitors to win first place in both the long and short go-rounds, thereby winning the average with a combined time of 30.45 seconds.

In addition to money, Janicek also gathered more than 100 points, which will substantially aid in her attempts to qualify for the College National Finals Rodeo (CNFR) in June in Bozeman, Mont.

The top two competitors in each event at the end of the season, as well as the top two teams in the region, have the opportunity to go to the CNFR to compete against the top competitors from other regions throughout the U.S.

The individual and team placings are determined by the points earned competing in rodeos held throughout the region.

The UI team is a member of the Northwest region and competes against teams from Lewis and Clark State College, Eastern Oregon State College and Washington State University.

Cinderellas will crash Big Dance

Mike Stetson

Each March it happens. Sixty-four of America's colleges hold their breath in anticipation of the moment, the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament.

Each year the selection committee meets in Kansas, spends a long tireless weekend evaluating schedules, looking at win-loss records, placing teams and ranking them. All for one glorious show that will last only 40 minutes for some. However, a fortunate few will see their dreams through to the magic moment simply known as The Final Four.

Somewhere between the 40-minute faders and the tournament's four finalists, there exist a few teams each year that rise above expectations and leave an indelible mark on the minds of the basketball fans, the Cinderella teams.

But who ranks as a Cinderella? It surely cannot be a simple underdog or an eight seed losing to a nine. The true tournament upset comes when one of the top four or five teams in a bracket falls on hard times. These teams are the chosen few, the ones the committee expects to survive to the Sweet 16. When they drop out so suddenly in a first-round match their unforeseen conqueror deserves notice.

Did you know, no number 1 seed in NCAA tournament play has ever lost a first-round game. However, some have tried. Take 1989 for instance. The number 1 seed dominance almost ended when an upstart Princeton Tigers club missed a last second shot against number 1 seed Georgetown, losing 50-49 to the Hoyas. Again in 1990 a top seed faced first round elimination. A tough and tested Michigan State team, champions of the Big Ten and another number 1 seed, needed an extra five-minute overtime to fend off pesky Murray State, 75-71.

However, typical top seeds uses their depth, skill and ability to win and dominate their first round games, like Arkansas, who in 1991 sent an outmatched Georgia State team home after a crushing 117-76 annihilation. Another example of typical dominance by top seeds came in 1995 when Kentucky rolled over Mt. St. Mary's of Maryland, 113-67. Both games show why number 1 seeds are expected to win, they play unknown teams.

So in the history of tournament play, no top seed has ever lost, but what about the two, three, four and five seeds. Simply looking at the 1990's you will find that 19 first round games matching a 2-5 seed against a 12-15 seed have ended in a Cinderella story. For you sports fanatics who need statistics this means 19.8 percent of the games will end in upsets, about three each year on average, when the 2-5 seeds are involved.

Okay, so you want to see some proof, well check this out:

• 1990-14 seed Northern Iowa 74, 3 seed Missouri 71. 12 seed Dayton

88, 5 seed Illinois 86. 12 seed Ball State 54, Oregon State 53.

• 1991-15 seed Richmond 73, 2 seed Syracuse 69. 14 seed Xavier 89, 3 seed Nebraska 84, 13 seed Penn State 74, 4 seed UCLA 69. 12 seed Eastern Michigan 76, 5 seed Mississippi State 56.

• 1992-14 seed Eastern Tennessee State 87, 3 seed Arizona 80. 13 seed Southwest Missouri State 87, 4 seed Oklahoma 83. 12 seed New Mexico State 81, 5 seed Depaul 73.

• 1993-15 seed Santa Clara 64, 2 seed Arizona 61. 13 seed Southern University 93, 4 seed Georgia Tech 78. 12 seed George Washington 82, 5 seed New Mexico 68.

• 1994-12 seed Tulsa 112, 5 seed UCLA 102. 12 seed Wisconsin Green Bay 61, 5 seed California 57.

• 1995-14 seed Old Dominion 89, 3 seed Villanova 81 (3OT). 14 seed Weber State 79, 3 seed Michigan State 72. 13 seed Manhattan 77, 4 seed Oklahoma 67. 12 seed Miami, Ohio 71, 5 seed Arizona 62.

In the past six years, two 2 seeds, five 3 seeds and four 4 seeds have fallen in first round games, creating Cinderella teams. Also, at least one 5 seed each year lost in the first round, a total of eight 5 seeds have lost in the 90s. Therefore, it seems appropriate to expect at least three upsets, including at least one five seed to fall again this year.

So in the end, who will bow out early this year and who will fit the glass slipper. With the history of 5 seeds, expect anyone or several of these teams, Penn State, Mississippi State, Iowa State and Memphis, to have a very bad weekend.

As for the other seeds, it has been three years since a 2 seed has been dumped, which means the tournament could be due for a 2 to go. Don't be surprised if North Carolina-Greensboro, South Carolina State, Northeast Louisiana or Mississippi Valley State ends up trying on a glass slipper. And the percentages say that each year three should fall so do not be surprised when the last Cinderella shows up at the ball.

Of course, with all these under-ranked teams popping up as winners, the credibility of the tournament selection committee must come into question. But the majority of these teams do not ever get a consideration from the committee. These teams get the automatic berths in the tourney their conference tournaments provide. Only the 12 seeds may be considered at large bids.

In a sense this means the selection committee ranks these Cinderella teams by their conference, not necessarily by their talents and skills. This is a major reason for upsets.

Some team's style and player potential have never been assessed by the committee, putting them in a situation where they face a higher ranked opponent who fit the underdog's style of play perfectly, boom, instant upset.

So when you are sitting on the couch, or in the bar, or placing a little side bet on the games and you see Cinderella at the big dance, do not be so surprised. Remember, the odds say there will be three, and the committee's lack of scrutiny can provide the right setting for big upsets.

his eyes on Bozeman is senior Erik Johnson. Johnson, a steer wrestler, threw his first steer in 5.8 seconds to come up with a fourth place finish in the long go-round.

Johnson split first place in the short go with LCSC's Scott Goodwin. Both cowboys threw their steer in 5.4 seconds. Johnson's combined time was fast enough to win him a second place finish in the average over about 25 other competitors.

Tim Lammers, a UI senior pre-vet major, also had an outstanding weekend, winning the bull riding event average with 131 points on two head. Lammers boasted one of the highest bull riding scores of the rodeo with 74 points on his second ride.

In keeping with the winning trend set by his fellow team members, Dennis Bortz, rodeo club president, captured second place in the saddle bronc riding average. Bortz earned a combined score of 129 points on two head.

The UI team's next rodeo will be Mar. 30-31 in Nampa.

"I'm really looking forward to a strong season," said Breeding, who said the club members have also been hard at work preparing for the UI/WSU Palouse Western Classic Rodeo, which will be held May 2-5 in Colfax, Wash.

"Our rodeo was in Asotin last year and Lewiston the year before, and we just couldn't get a lot of Moscow community support," Breeding said. "We hope that by moving it back to the Palouse, we'll be able to generate more interest and excitement."

Breeding said club members are currently selling rodeo program advertisements and will soon be selling the actual rodeo tickets.

For information about the UI rodeo or the club, call Dennis Bortz at 882-6150.

Student art exhibition on display at WSU

Corinne Flowers
Staff

An exhibition of the artwork of University of Idaho and Washington State University Master of Fine Arts students is currently on display at WSU's Fine Arts Center. The pieces are on can be viewed in Gallery III, located on the east side of the ground floor.

The gallery is small, and it's a bit tricky to find, but once you do it will be worth your effort.

Why, you my ask, should an exhibit in Pullman be of interest to you?

Well, it's spring break, so I know you have the time. And let's face it, you need to get out and get some culture. If you're in art or design classes you can point and laugh at your TA's work - or heap loads of praise upon it. Better yet, you can say things like, "The originality is good, but I'm taking a point off for your presentation."

Besides, it's only up for another day, and it's really some good stuff.

Take for example Jana Donoho-Strong's "Microcosm," a large scale work in watercolor and burn. The rich, vivid swirls and ribbons of color give this piece a great deal of depth and texture. The painting is intense and well-worked. Donoho-Strong says she "...seeks to draw attention to the properties and importance of nature." Her work captures fragments of the natural world and presents them in an original setting.

Pearla Moler's work has often addressed the colorful and abstract, as it continues to do in her monotype and colored pencil pieces "Untitled I" and "Untitled II". Moler's work is the result of "a search for a stable source within the self." This expression of self is evident in the variety of color and highly painterly and expressive patterns.

Chris Nelson, whose work addresses both fine and graphic art, combines these interests with assemblage and text. All of these elements come together to present her reflections on life in a deeply personal piece called "Sacred Hinge Pin."

Andrea Henkel's work deals with waste in the environment. Her "Artifact Quilt" is composed entirely of waste products. These unrelated pieces of trash are brought together through harmony of shape and color to create a unique and cohesive piece that is not only pleasant to view, but makes a statement about her philosophies.

Frank Hartlieb's work in saggar-fired clay and sand possesses a rich spectrum of earthy colors. The objects themselves are machine-like and resemble cogs, yet are also reminiscent of sun icons. Hartlieb said the show is a direct result of dialogue between UI and WSU graduate students. The real success of the show, he says, is that it is "...a positive step.

It is enriching for grad students and the art departments as well as the students." Hartlieb hopes for future exchanges with the WSU art department, with the next one being hosted by UI.

The Idaho Group Show will be on display until Saturday. The gallery is open until 5 p.m. tonight and from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. tomorrow. This is one you don't want to miss.

HOW THE NET WORKS

It's getting to be that time of year that those of us who have to share living quarters may be starting to experience feelings of resentment or absolute hatred for our roommates. Here are a few ways to get even with or confuse those pesky roommates without making yourself liable for a lawsuit of some kind:

Set your roommate's bed on fire. Apologize and explain that you've been watching too much Beavis & Butthead. Do it again. Tell him/her that you're not sorry because this time, they deserved it.

Every Thursday, pack up everything you own and tell your roommate you're going home. Come back in an hour and explain that no one was home. Unpack everything and go to sleep.
Lock the door while your roommate is out. When he/she comes back and tries to unlock it, yell, "Don't come in, I'm naked!" Keep this up for several hours.
When you finally let your roommate in, immediately take off all of your clothes, and ignore your roommate.

Collect hundreds of pens and pile them on one side of the room. Keep one pencil on the other side of the room. Laugh at the pencil.
Live in the hallway for a month. Afterwards, bring all of your stuff back into the room and tell your roommate, "Okay, your turn."
Make a sandwich. Don't eat it, leave it on the floor. Ignore the sandwich. Wait until your roommate gets rid of it, and then say, "Hey, where the hell is my sandwich!" Complain loudly that you are hungry.

Challenge your roommate to a duel. If he/she refuses, claim you have won by forfeit and therefore conquered his/her side of the room. Insist that he/she remove all of his/her stuff immediately.
Hang a basketball net on the wall. Challenge your refrigerator to basketball games, and play them in front of your roommate.
Do so for about a month. Confide in your roommate that you think the refrigerator has been taking steroids.

Students learn about the United Nations

Valaree Johnson
Staff

With the Borah Symposium coming up shortly after spring break, the International Programs Office has been putting on several services to act as primers for the event. The theme of this year's symposium, "UN Under Fire," will take a look at the current issues surrounding the United Nations and analyze and critique its place in the international realms.

"Very few people know what the United Nations actually encompasses," Sheila Schulte, International Student Advisor said. Several Lunch & Learn Seminars sponsored by the University Library, the Martin Institute, and the International Programs Office have demonstrated the boundaries of the UN. Everything from peace enforcement to food and agriculture to the International Monetary Fund have been discussed at these seminars. Three programs still remain.

All seminars are held at the University Library Conference Room on the fourth floor from 12:30 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. On April 1 Helen Koehler, UNICEF Coordinator, will talk about what UNICEF does with the money it raises. On April 8, Robert Sorenson of Battelle Northwest Laboratories will discuss the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Nuclear Power Treaty. And finally, UI International Student Theogene Mbabaliye will give a personal perspective of the ethnic conflict in Rwanda.

In addition to the seminars, IPO has put together a series of in-class programs that teach students about the UN and provide international students the opportunity to share the current issues within their country. "We wanted to focus on the academic aspect," Schulte said. "Instead of preaching to the converted, we wanted to reach the students who may not know anything about the UN."

IPO is grateful to the instructors who have welcomed a lecture from an international student, Schulte said. Not only is the program beneficial to the students to learn about the international perspective, but it gives international students the opportunity to share their culture and gain presentation skills.

"We are entering a really global community and it's important to know about the UN and other countries," Corrine Henke, UI student and intern at IPO, said. Henke said students have been really receptive to learning about other countries and the conflicts within them.

"It's really important to get international education into the classroom," Henke said. The bottom line of the UN, she said, is to promote peace and respect for humanity. By learning about the changing dynamics of other countries we can work toward that goal.

The Borah Symposium will be held April 15 and 16 and will kick off a string of events for International Week.

Good humor and acting shown in Blithe Spirit

Jeremy Chase
Entertainment Editor

Combining farcical humor, witty dialogue and a smashing set, the University of Idaho Theater Department opened its spring season at the Hartung last week with Noel Coward's play Blithe Spirit.

Telling the tale of an English man who accidentally summons an ex-wife back from the dead through a medium and how he deals with it afterwards, Blithe Spirit featured superb acting from its cast of seven UI students. The play was directed by UI theater arts instructor David Lee-Painter.

The story begins with Mr. Condomine inviting friends for dinner with a seance afterwards. The reason for dabbling in the occult? According to Condomine, it's to help him develop a new novel. So, by enlisting the help of a mysterious medium (played by Carolyn Hitt) Condomine and friends step into a strange new world, only to find themselves swept away by series of knocks, raps and other sounds emanating from the house.

As a result of the seance, the deceased Elvira Condomine (Charles' first wife) is summoned back from the dead. And funny enough, Charles is the only one able to see or hear her. From this point in the first act, Charles and Elvira's relationship becomes the focal point for the rest of the play. Elvira was played by Anne

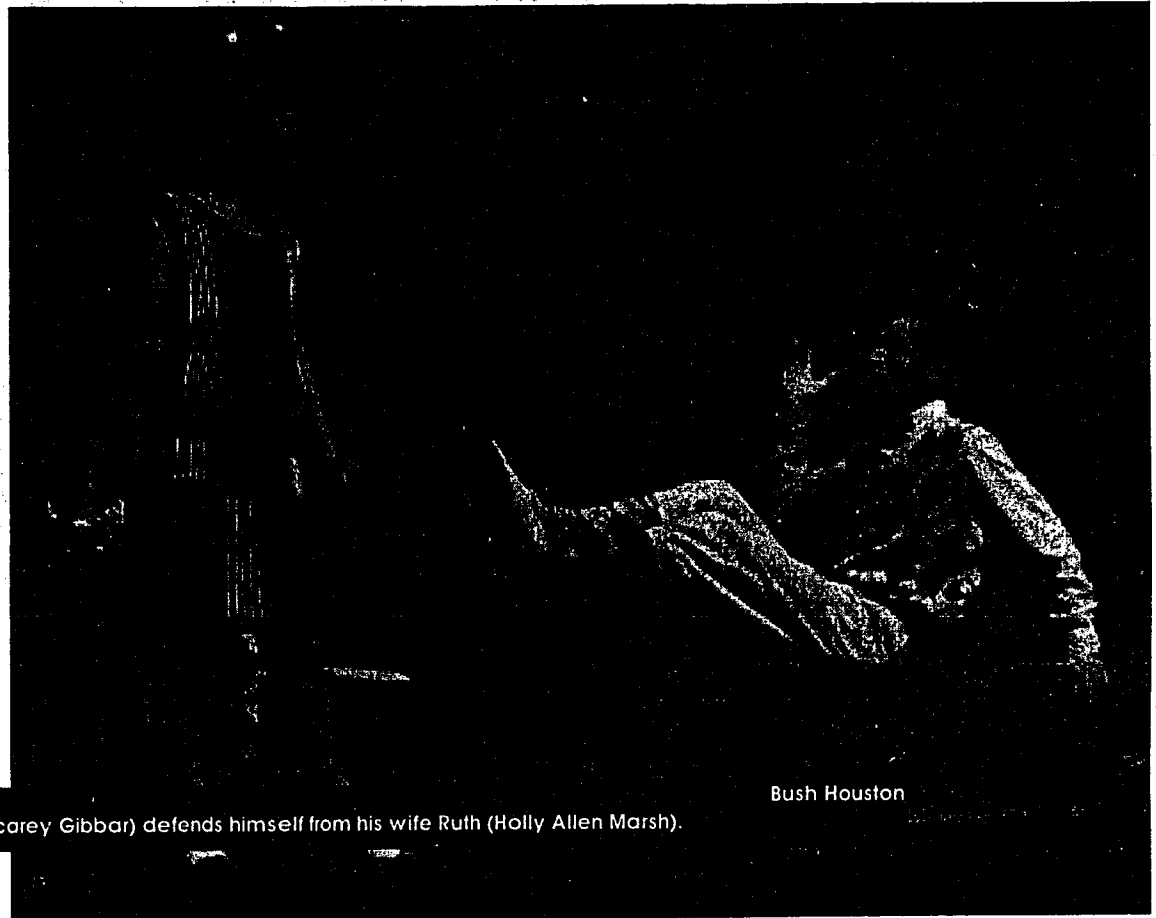

Jensen

Carey Gibbar, playing the role of Charles Condomine, kept the show moving at a wonderful pace with a keen sense of comic timing and physical humor. In addition, he also managed to nail every last syllable with a good English accent. Gibbar's portrayal exuded pomposity and arrogance, which fit his character very well.

Holly Allen Marsh, in the role of Condomine's second (living) wife Ruth, also did an outstanding performance of playing a woman caught between her husband and the ghostly apparition of his first wife who she can't see. In a moment of exasperation, she claims Charles and Elvira are having an affair of "astral bigamy" proportions.

One of best aspects of the play was the set. Lavishly decorated for the time (the 20s), the Condomine home featured everything from antique furniture to an old phonograph. Character costumes also fit the period well.

Overall, Blithe Spirit provided a good amount of laughs and was an enjoyable show to see. The next show at the Hartung will be Incident at Bichy by Arthur Miller May 6. In the meantime, a send-off show for the award winning Top Girls will be April 12. A complete listing of upcoming shows can be obtained from the UI Theater Department at 885-6465, or the Hartung box office at 885-7986.

Lewiston Civic Theatre to present new play tonight

If the recent proliferation of theatrical productions in Moscow and at the University of Idaho isn't enough to satisfy your thespian sweet tooth, the Lewiston Civic Theatre may be the cure for you.

The theatre is featuring You Can't Take It With You, the popular play written over 60 years ago by Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman. The play deals with the conflict between two families who come together when the son of one falls for the daughter of another.

"It's a classic comedy about a bunch of really crazy people and straight people," said Karin Herbert, executive director of the Lewiston Civic Theatre.

You Can't Take It With You is set in 1937, just a few years after it was written. It was mostly because of these comparatively conservative times that the play doesn't deal with any "sensitive issues," Herbert said.

"There's no foul language," she said. "It's family entertainment, but it's got a lot of innuendo so it won't be too boring."

The play is directed by Rodney Farrington, a relative newcomer to the director's chair. This play will be only the second he's directed, and the first full-length one at that.

Audience members can expect to find mostly community members in the all-amateur cast, with a few Lewis-Clark State College students mixed in. Still, Herbert maintains, this should prove to be an great production.

"There are a lot of amateurs (out there) that have great talent, and some of these (actors) have it," she said.

Opening night is Friday, March 15 at 8 p.m. Other evening performances will also take place March 16 and March 21-23, all with the same curtain time. Sunday matinees will be offered March 17 and 24 at 2 p.m.

Tickets for the show are now available and are $10 for adults and $8.50 for students and seniors.

You Can't Take It With You is the fifth in a six-play series put on by the theatre. The classic Oliver will be featured in May. For additional information, call (208) 746-3401.

Falsettoland to compete internationally

For the first time ever, Austria has invited America to compete at the International Amateur Theater Festival Focus this summer. And to bring the excitement even closer to home, it's the Lewiston Civic Theatre's production of Falsettoland which will represent the United States in Austria this June.

Falsettoland, with its witty and entertaining music and lyrics, is the third play of a trilogy written by William Sinn. "It's a riot," says Director Fred Scheibe of Lewiston. The production was first performed by the cast at the regional level in Colorado.

"At the beginning of the show the audience was on the floor laughing," Scheibe said. By the end of the show, tears of laughter became tears of sorrow as Falsettoland brought attention to the complexities of everyday life.

The storyline focuses on the alternative lifestyles of today dealing with the behavior of humans during a time of crisis and the tolerance and compassion necessary to make it through these everyday experiences.

"It's a very complicated plot, but so is everyday real life," says Betty Chandler who plays Cordelia, a lesbian caterer who really can't even cook worth a darn. Because of the complexity of the issues that Falsettoland deals with, Chandler recommends an adult audience.

The entire production follows the life of Marvin. In the first two acts, In 7' rousers and Marvin of the Falsettos, we see the struggle of Marvin's relationships between three women. The scene comes from the early 80's when Marvin learns to deal with "gay cancer" which is the unknown deadliness of AIDS. Cornelia's lover is a frustrated doctor attempting to unravel the mystery of the disease while her neighbors are the dysfunctional family-type that so many can relate with.

Chandler says the one-hour musical gives a comical outlook on the disparities of life today, giving the audience a tension-relieving perspective of the hardships of alternate lifestyles.

When the crew took the production to national competition in Texas, Ross Rowland, international committee chairman for the American Association of Community Theaters, selected the piece to compete in Austria due to the "visual beauty" and "clever choreography" of the show which would "keep the interest of the audience even if they didn't speak English."

"This really is a very prestigious festival to have the opportunity to attend," Scheibe said. "The show is very funny and also very moving."

The cast is enthusiastic to act as ambassadors of the United States in June. In the meantime, efforts are being made to raise airfare expenses for the cast.

Tickets for fund-raising performances of Falsettoland are available for $10. Performances will be held April 5th and 6th at the Lewiston High School Auditorium.

For tickets or further information, contact Beverly Chandler or Rod Farrington at The Talent Pool 743-4352, or the Lewiston Civic Theatre box office at 746-3401.

ACCORDING TO MATT: Roots by Sepultura

Matt West

Sepultura delivers powerful guitar blows, various percussion and trademark growls while trying to find their Roots.

I will get back to you on those growls.

Sepultura's sixth release, Roots attempts to promote the band's South American homeland, Brazil. This admirable theme for an album may not be as prominent throughout the record as the motherland would hope for. With the exception of tracks four, 11 and 12, "Ratamahatta," "Jasco" and "Itsari," respectfully, the album's tone is more alternative and industrial than their other works.

Primarily, standalone percussion segments and Brazilian tribal tongues distinguish the more "rooted" songs from the typical Sepultura bludgeoning experience. In particular, "Itsari" may be Sepultura's finest effort at returning to their roots. The song was recorded with the Brazilian warrior tribe, Xavante. Other notable efforts include the band's decision to bring in Brazilian percussionist Carlinhos Brown.

You never know, perhaps Sepultura's Roots may have been fueled by the Exotic Sounds of Martin Denny -AFRO-DESIA???

Okay, I told you we would get back to those growls. Lead singer Max Cavalera has a brutish voice. His lyrics, not terribly complex, are conveyed to the listener in a barbaric growl. While this style of singing can be characteristic of heavy metal or death metal bands, Sepultura has made it their trademark since the band formed in 1984. Unlike other heavy metal bands that may change their growl to a grumble for a different album, Sepultura refuses to tame their classic rough, tough and in your face vocals for a shot at selling another couple records.

A warning to classic Sepultura fans: Contributions to this album by other performers can explain the record's deviant alternative or industrial sound. Starting with Sepultura's new producer Ross Robinson, who is recognized for his recent overstated work with the band Korn. Also from Korn came Jonathan Davis. Other appearances that you might not expect include Faith No More's Mike Patton and House of Pain's DJ Lethal.

Sepultura is a very talented band... musically. Their complicated guitar riffs and extraordinary percussion have made them a formidable opponent in the eyes of other heavy metal bands. Like I said earlier, it is their growls and abrupt lyrics that have deterred me from owning every album. I dunno? *shrug*

After I waded past Sepultura's personal review of their album, Roots, I have been able to come to the conclusion that the album is redundant, monotonous, anger driven noise. It stank of depraved imaginations creating the most musically depraved songs my poor ears have been exposed to in a long time.

At the latter half of Sepultura's first track "Roots Bloody Roots," my inclination was to cease the CD player's spinning of this disc. If only they were gifted, everything would be fine! But, alas, to be completely honest with the ladies and gentlemen in the crowd, Sepultura lacks skill in many areas. It is a wonder that they are a successful band.

Let's give you, the poor reader and hopefully non-purchaser of Roots, the breakdown of this disc. To the metal fan Sepultura lives up to what you expect in this anticipated release which should be in stores soon. God save the Queen if they carry the horrid thing! But to the person who enjoys an actual architecture to their music will be disappointed, nothing on Roots can be termed music by me at any rate.

"Ratamahatta," the fourth increment of Hell on the album out of 15 levels (tracks), breaks pace with the other tracks—thank the Muses! The intriguing part about this track is that Brazilian percussionist Carlinhos Brown teamed up with Sepultura to give them a more South American sound. It's a merging of Brazilian instruments with lyrics sung in Portuguese.

Through their biography so handily sent by their company, Road Runner Records, I have been able to pinpoint a theme carried through a majority of the album: returning to our roots, embracing our roots and speaking about our roots.

Sepultura pick up different instruments, abusing them to create noise that is poignantly hurtful to the ear. It makes me ill.

After getting into the album I find that the entire thing becomes a standard guitar droning on and on accompanied by an annoying drum beat. Thud! Thud! Thud! This CD can be detrimental to future music listening. I warn the careful reader to not buy this album. It is a horrible display of a sad band's dying career. Roots is good for the metal listener out there, but for the tasteful listener it is nothing but filthy songs—not lyrically but in music.

Sepultura...I wonder when they'll break up and spare the world another release? Roots gives an acrimonious expose into what instruments should not play. Don't buy it. Don't embrace it. If you hear it, turn it off.

MOVIE REVIEW: Rumble in the Bronx

Justin Cason
Staff

Over the decades, movies have evolved from formulated stories with relatively mild violence to today's films which often cater to one specific type of audience and use and abuse bloodshed uncontrollably.

Evolution is not always a good thing.

Rumble in the Bronx, starring Jackie Chan in his American film debut, is cinematic proof of this. Rumble indulges the street brawling moviegoer—not always a bad quality—who desires neither a hypnotic plot nor top-notch acting in the films he watches.

You could call this movie the Showgirls of the martial arts circuit. You watch the film for one thing, and there's plenty of it. In this case, it's the 15 minute slugfests, the bulk of which Chan wins.

Rumble in the Bronx struggles through about 100 minutes of a lackluster plot which begins with karate expert Keung (Chan) arriving in New York City to fill in at a market for his honeymooning uncle.

Keung eventually gets on the outs with a local gang and ends up stealing the gang leader's girlfriend, Whitney, in the process.

The story goes downhill from there in an awful way. Whitney transforms almost overnight from insensitive biker-chick to caring young lady who takes her handicapped younger brother to the park for ice cream. Keung gets the gang members to go straight after giving them a brief lecture on how rotten they've been.

What makes the film humorous almost in an unbearable sort of way, is the dubbing in of English voices, especially in the characters of Keung and his uncle. Most Godzilla flicks did a better job of matching up the mouths and voices.

Although Chan's acting capacity as a whole is questionable, the fight scenes nearly make up for it. Keung utilizes just about every move in the book, then adds a few of his own.

Throwing pinball machines and skis into his battle repertoire, Liberace himself couldn't have accessorized better.

Also, Rumble in the Bronx boasts one of the finest hovercraft-run-amuck-in-New York chase scenes ever caught on film.

However, it seemed odd that Keung must stop the giant hovering vessel with a sword-laden Lamborghini when nearby police officers could have just shot the inflatable base of the craft with their guns.

The movie ends with Keung thoroughly pummeling a band of diamond smugglers, saving Whitney, then running over the smugglers' boss with the hovercraft which the police somehow neglected to repossess as evidence.

One thing notable about the film is the fact that Chan did his own stunts. In fact, at one point, the filming had to be delayed because the actor broke his ankle jumping from a pier onto the infamous hovercraft.

With the exception of the horrid voice dubbing, Rumble is reminiscent of early Steven Seagal or Jean-Claude Van Damme movies when they were first starting out in show business—no plot, a little sex, tons of action.

Whether Chan has the cinematic capability to procure a successful film career, however, is sketchy. His lightning-quick style is impressive, but Rumble in the Bronx will probably just take a seat by such classics as Remo Williams in the annals of once-popular movies.

Junkies deliver once again

Erik Marone

It's been nearly three years since Cowboy Junkies released their last studio album, and their latest effort, Lay it Down makes the wait well worth it, being one of their finer albums.

The album's 13 tracks quickly settle into a groove reminiscent of the Cowboy Junkies' earlier albums, with their signature rootsy, bluesy rock-n-roll sound. Stylistically, the album falls somewhere between The Caution Horses and Pale Sun Crescent Moon without losing the momentum their sound has been gaining. It replaced the edge of Pale Sun... with a quiet intensity that keeps the album exciting.

The combination of Margo Timmins' silky, sensuous voice with her brother Michael's song-writing is perfect once again. Margo's vocals have always been the truly distinctive feature of Cowboy Junkies' music. Her voice pulls you into the music that so wonderfully compliments her vocal style.

Even on the hard-to-find Whites Off Earth Now, she is able to take the edge off the raw production quality without losing the intensity of the music.

The production of Lay it Down is superb, allowing the simple instrumentation to intertwine with the vocals, allowing the subtleties of Alan Anton's bass lines to come through without drowning the rest of the mix.

Cowboy Junkies

Literally, Lay it Down extends the themes begun in their previous albums.

Intelligently arranged, the songs address many aspects of humanity, such as love, loss and sadness without becoming formulaic. Too many bands fall into a trap of writing songs that say basically the same thing because it's what they know. If the Cowboy Junkies know anything, they find a new way to approach it with every album and every song.

Lay it Down is a must-listen for anyone who enjoys quiet yet intense, well-written music and thoughtful lyrics. It is a must-own for all Cowboy Junkies fans.
