Student insurance not needed to visit university doctors

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Students who need medical attention don't need health insurance from the university to visit Student Health Services.

SHS said they noticed students have a misunderstanding about the purpose of SHS. Students seem to think they can only visit SHS if they have insurance through the University of Idaho. This isn't true.

On students' bills, which they receive before the start of every semester, health insurance is automatically included with the bill. Only by crossing out the option for insurance and initialing a space provided for declining this insurance does a student not receive this insurance.

Insurance purchased by students is provided through Newsome and Kimberling Insurance. In a prepared statement for students Dr. Donald Chin, director of SHS said, "Student health services are available to every fee-paying student. The Regents have authorized a student health and accident insurance program which supplements the services offered by the health center."

Students, their spouses and their children can use SHS even without insurance through the university. The insurance just reduces the cost of medical care.

Students who purchase insurance are reimbursed 80 percent of what they paid for treatment by a physician or surgeon, hospital confinement, X-rays and diagnostic imaging, operating room, emergency room, prescription medicines and other medical services.

Students on the plan increase protection from the university for accidents, illnesses and pregnancy. Each student is allowed to use SHS with or without insurance.

Every student, whether they know it or not, is automatically insured for accidents which occur in the process of getting to the university up to 10 days before the first day of the semester and up to five days after the last day of final examinations and all the time in between.

At any time during the first or second semester, a student may purchase insurance at the full semester premium rate.

The optional insurance plan does not include dental treatment, eye care, preventative care, birth control options, non-prescription medicines, routine newborn and well baby care, pre-existing conditions, including pregnancy, injuries from intercollegiate sports and injuries or illnesses covered by another party such as the government and worker's compensation.

Optional student insurance does cover injuries sustained while participating in an ASUI club sport or in the intramural program.

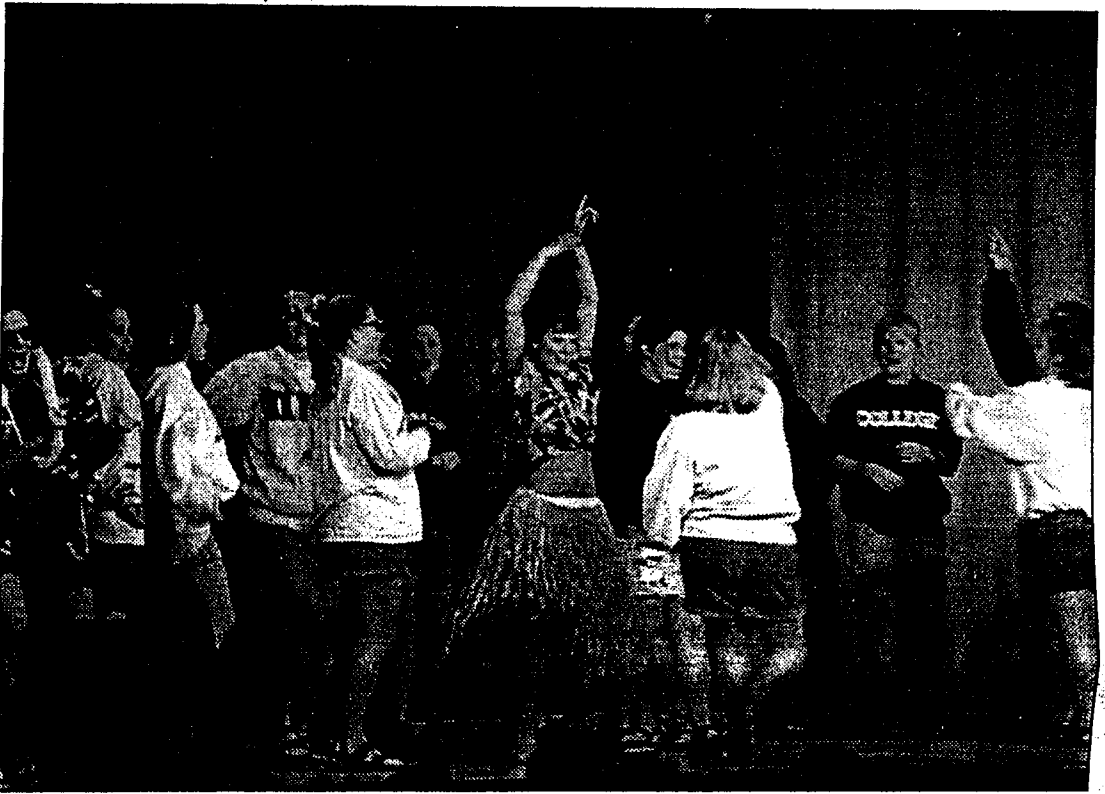

In the event of injury or illness students should pay for the services and are then required to file a claim themselves to Newsome & Kimberling Insurance, even if the visit was made to SHS. With this insurance Newsome & Kimberling said students are allowed to choose a doctor outside the university.

If a student is away from the university they should see a doctor, keep all of the invoices and file the claim accordingly with a claim form from SHS or Newsome & Kimberling.

To receive insurance benefits, students must notify the insurance company of illness within 30 days of the accident or illness. Bills for treatment need to be submitted within 90 days of receiving treatment.

The optional health insurance policy costs $357 for the only student, spouse's and dependents are more, per year. Unless a student makes it known they don't want the insurance when paying their bill, students only have 30 days after the start of the semester to receive a refund.

Moscow observes Earth Day

Andrew White
Staff

In conjunction with Earth Day, University of Idaho students will provide an opportunity for residents of the Palouse to safely dispose of their household waste items on April 27. Last year the event served over 800 community residents and this year event organizers expect the numbers to double.

The Earth Day tradition will take place in the Tidyman's Parking lot east of Moscow, from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. The target of this year's Earth Day recycling event is to gather waste items, such as old paint cans, motor oil, stripping solution, which are hard for people to safely recycle. There will be several specified recycling bins for the waste to be deposited. All the community residents will need to do is bring their waste to the Tidyman's parking lot, and student volunteers will deposit the hazardous materials and waste accordingly.

"It would be a great way for students to get involved and show their support for the environment," ASUI Senator Brandon Jessup said.

Any interested students are encouraged to participate. The first shift will run from 7:30 a.m. to noon. The second shift will run from 11:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Students may register for either or both shifts at the Information Desk of the Student Union or in the ASUI Senate Offices.

Sophomore Emily Macdonald said, "I think it's neat to see students participating in community activities, especially in the environment because it's a critical issue for any educated person."

"Anything that benefits protection of the Earth is fantastic and it's neat UI students recognize this need," Macdonald said.

The UI Circle-K Club is helping to organize the event. Currently Circle-K, a college service organization affiliated with the National Kiwanis Organization, is holding a membership drive and any interested students are encouraged to contact Tanya Atwood Hoover at 885-5756.

Senior Maja Jatrovska said, "I think we should have events like that more often that helps promote good environmental practices. It sounds like a great idea."

ASUI elections slated for April 24

Janet Birdsall
Staff

The spring elections, which were set for April 10, have been delayed two weeks, ASUI President Brian Kane told the senate Wednesday.

"Elections, in accordance with ASUI regulations, are moved to April 24," Kane said. "You have to have a three-week window between the candidates' meeting and the elections."

The candidates' meeting was held Wednesday evening. Fourteen candidates are vying for the seven open senator positions, and one candidate is running for the position of Faculty Council representative.

Kathleen Jolley is running for the Faculty Council representative seat now held by Katie Eglund. The senatorial candidates are: Robin Coley, Ken DeCelle, Curt Wozniak, Jennifer Gish, Rebecca Coyle, Krista Brady, Kelley Kierland, Warren VanDenTop, Brian Tenney, Jaime Gries, Ron Woodman, Benjamin Rush, David Spangler, Stormie Anderson, and Jeff Daniels.

The positions are being vacated by senators John Hoyne, Sasha Nash, Sue Pierce, Zahrah Sheikh, Sean King, and Jim Dalton. Jeff Daniel's position is also open. He is the only senator seeking re-election.

In other business, Christopher Houck was appointed and approved to take the senate seat vacated by Damon Darakjy earlier this spring. Houck has served as Student Issues Board chair, and was appointed as ASUI lobbyist.

We're Not Your Mother playing this weekend

Friday and Saturday at 10 p.m. the UI Theater Arts Department will be presenting We're Not Your Mother at the Collette Theater.

This collection of short performance art pieces is written, produced, and performed by UI students. Also featured with the show is Intergalactic Battle, a short puppet play by Carey Gibbar, Nathan Chafin and Matt McBride.

In a statement from the department Chafin describes the piece as "a video voyage into the 27th century, full of lasers and futuristic hijinks. It's Good vs. Evil in a classic conundrum of cosmic proportions." Both plays are free of charge.

Graduate overcomes obstacles for academy

BOISE—Mandy Wilson of Boise would not take no for an answer, even from the U.S. Air Force Academy.

Not when her dream since fifth grade has been to attend the military school in Colorado.

When her Scholastic Assessment Test scores were just 10 points below academy standards, she took the test a second time. A third, a fourth, a fifth time she repeated the SATs, raising her score 230 points.

And when the academy declined to admit her in 1995, she attended a Malibu, Calif., preparatory school for four months to bone up on calculus, chemistry and English. To stay in shape, she got a personal trainer at Gold's Gym.

Wilson's perseverance paid off on March 19, when the Defense Department appointed her. Only 15 percent of applicants are accepted.

On June 27, the 19-year-old will begin basic training. She is committing to four years in the academy and at least six years more as an officer.

Wilson's interest in aviation took off in January 1986, when the space shuttle Challenger exploded.

Bank robbery 'Well planned and executed'

SPOKANE—Were the bomb-planting men who robbed a Spokane Valley bank ideological extremists, or just sophisticated criminals hoping to throw law enforcement off their trail?

The FBI agent in charge of the investigation said Tuesday she intends to find out - before they strike again.

The men who carried out the "well-planned and executed operation" stole a van in Ellensburg, drove 175 miles northeast to Spokane to plant and detonate two bombs and rob a bank, then made a clean getaway, she said.

Evidence included typewritten letters left at both the Spokane Valley office of The Spokesman-Review and a U.S. Bank branch where explosive devices were detonated within minutes of each other Monday afternoon.

"Flee you usurer from the face of our land and all that would not the Master should bring," the notes say.

Usurers are money lenders who charge exorbitant rates of interest. In the Old Testament, usury violates God's law.

The notes conclude, "The end of Babylon is come. Praise Yahweh." "Yahweh" is an English rendering of the Hebrew name for God. The term has also been used by some members of the Christian Identity movement, which has ties to white supremacist organizations.

Drag Queen sex advice columnist cleared as GOP delegate

SEATTLE—Dan Savage, a drag queen, talk show host and author of the sex advice column "Savage Love," has been cleared to attend the Republican Party's King County convention as a delegate.

Savage, 31, who said in an interview in 1995, "I can't stand conservatives, those idiots," was the only voter to register as a Republican in his precinct during caucuses March 5, automatically making him a delegate to the GOP county convention.

He wrote in his column in The Stranger, an alternative weekly, that he hoped to either steer the Republicans to the left or push them so far to the right that they will be rejected by mainstream voters.

On Friday, 43rd Legislative District Republican chairman Daniel Mead Smith said Savage was registered to vote in another district and completed the wrong form, making him ineligible to attend.

This week, however, Smith and county GOP chairman Reed Davis said it turned out that Savage completed the right forms after all and thus is a legitimate delegate. He signed as a supporter of Pat Buchanan for president.

Savage, who stands 6-foot-1 when dressed as a man and 7-5 in the spike heels, one-foot hairpiece and hat he wears in drag, initially indicated he might dress as a woman at the convention.

Now he says he'll probably dress as a man unless GOP leaders try again to keep him out.

Minister eats brains to calm cow fears

LUXEMBOURG—While EU farm ministers picked each others' brains to find a solution to the mad cow crisis, Portugal's minister ate some.

Fernando Gomes da Silva munched his way through a plate of calf brains to show beef is safe.

"They were delicious, pan-fried like we had them in the old days," he said Wednesday on third day of marathon European Union farm talks.

The meeting was seeking ways to eradicate mad cow disease and calm public anxiety that the brain-wasting ailment could be transmitted to humans.

In front of Portuguese television crews, Gomes da Silva enjoyed the calf-brain lunch at a Luxembourg restaurant Monday, just ahead of the EU meeting.

"I wanted to show that in regions where there is no disease it's perfectly safe to eat brains," Gomes da Silva told The Associated Press.

Back home however, the minister said he no longer dared indulge his taste for brains, considered a delicacy in some European nations.

"In Lisbon, I don't think brains should be eaten," he said, because a few mad cow cases have been detected there.

Study: Testosterone shots highly effective as male contraception

LONDON—Weekly injections of testosterone reduce the sperm count of almost all men to below the threshold needed for conception, according to a study published Tuesday by the World Health Organization.

The 2 1/2-year study of 399 couples in nine countries found that the injections were an effective contraceptive for 98.6 percent, according to the report in Fertility and Sterility, the journal of the American Society for Reproductive Medicine.

Testosterone was already known to inhibit the production of pituitary signals which normally instruct the testes to produce sperm.

The men, aged 21 to 45, were all normal, healthy, fertile and in stable relationships. They received weekly testosterone shots in the buttocks.

There were only four pregnancies among the study couples during the test period.

Another result of the study was discovering the sperm threshold necessary for contraception, according to Fred Wu, a senior lecturer in endocrinology at Manchester University who supervised the monitoring of 72 British couples.

Earlier research had shown that testosterone injections would virtually eliminate sperm production in 60 percent of men tested.

The problem was in inhibiting contraception among men whose sperm level was lowered, but not wiped out, by testosterone injections.

Woman's throat punctured in exorcism

PAWTUCKET, R.I.—A man accused of jamming crucifixes down his mother-in-law's throat in an exorcism told police he has performed the ritual before with success.

Garcia, charged Monday with assaulting his 47-year-old mother-in-law with a dangerous weapon, claimed to have removed "the devil" from his daughter when she was six, improving her obedience.

While his wife, father-in-law, brother-in-law and three young family members knelt and prayed, Garcia attempted to exorcise a "demon" from the woman as she lay on a bed in Garcia's home Sunday night, police said.

The woman's esophagus was injured when Garcia jammed two 8-inch, steel crucifixes down her throat. She was in critical condition Tuesday at Rhode Island Hospital.

In statements to police, Garcia acknowledged he was performing an exorcism and put the crucifixes in the woman's mouth, but said he never meant to hurt her, according to Haberle.

Garcia told police the woman resisted when he placed the crucifixes into her mouth. Her screams caused the rest of the family to stop praying and lose faith, according to Garcia's statement to police.

After a court appearance Monday, Garcia, who has not prior criminal record, was ordered held for psychiatric observation at the state prison's intake center in Cranston.

Participants must be familiar with the Internet: This will not be an introductory course. Preregistration is required. For more information contact the Career Services at 885-6121.

Fraternities, sororities celebrate Greek Week

Andrea Lucero
Staff

Greek Week opens the hearts and arms of University of Idaho students to each other and to needy members of the Moscow community.

This year, Greek Week not only offers Greeks an opportunity to work and form stronger relationships with one another it also centers many of its activities around helping Moscow's needy.

"It's good to know something helpful is coming out of activities that are so easy to undertake," Rebecca Coyle, Gamma Phi Beta's Greek Week representative, said.

Greek Week is an annual event where members of sororities and fraternities compete in different activities during the week. Points are earned for participation in each activity and at the end of the week points are totaled up and the winner is announced.

On April 4, Greeks participated in a clothing drive to collect clothing for the YWCA which was held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Participants were instructed to wear their donated clothing to the collection bins located in the Student Union Building. Participants received one point per piece of clothing.

"Because the clothes are going to a worthwhile cause there is more incentive for participation," Coyle said.

Tomorrow, beginning at 8 a.m. groups of two people from each fraternity and sorority will go to Moscow Junior High to re-paint 50 billboards that surround the baseball field. Points will be given for participation.

"It's going to be a lot of work for the participants, but it will be worth it," Coyle said.

Also, on Monday there will be a Greek Week food drive. Members from each of the houses will take up a collection of canned foods.

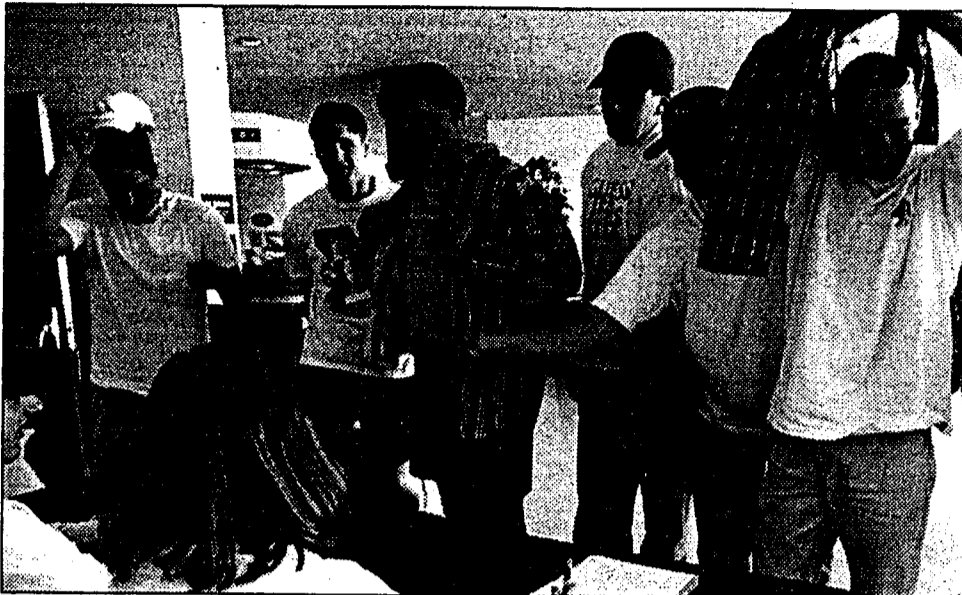

They will then construct sculptures out of the cans of food. At approximately 4 p.m. UI faculty members will judge the sculptures and points will be awarded accordingly.

"The cans of food will also be donated to charity," Coyle explained.

Another Greek Week activity was Songfest, which was held on Wednesday. For this event members from each house performed a song and skit. They were judged on organization, choreography, singing ability, attire and spirit.

"Songfest was great. It was lots of fun to see how creative each house could be," Coyle said.

For the fraternities FarmHouse placed first, Alpha Kappa Lambda second and Theta Chi third. For sororities Alpha Gamma Delta placed first and Delta Delta Delta and Delta Gamma tied for second.

Today is Greek Pride Day; Greeks will wear their letters throughout the day. On Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. is an ice cream social at Sigma Chi; houses receive points based on how many of their members attend the social. The final day of Greek Week, Wednesday at 6 p.m. is the Greek awards banquet; the winner of Greek Week will be announced.

Despite setbacks Galileo spacecraft finally reaches Jupiter

Tammy Mills

Staff

Donn Kirk, a research scientist who worked with NASA on the Jupiter probe, came to speak to university students and staff Tuesday in the Janssen Engineering Building.

Kirk's colloquium was titled "In Situ Measurements of Jupiter's Atmospheric Structure made by the Galileo Entry Probe."

The Galileo spacecraft, consisting of an orbiter and a probe, had a late start—a seven year late start to be exact. The original launch date was set for 1982, but the Challenger tragedy and money problems delayed takeoff until Oct. 18, 1989 Kirk said.

After much anticipation the probe reached the big ball of gas we call Jupiter, Dec. 7, 1995.

Jupiter has a radius of about 44,000 miles, the probes entry velocity is 134,000 miles an hour. Kirk said with that velocity you could travel from Moscow, Idaho, to New York City in about 70 seconds.

Kirk said as a result of the probe traveling so fast it couldn't have survived the heating in the atmosphere, had it entered at that velocity.

As Kirk said, "Jupiter rotates, and if the probe would enter with that rotation then its relative velocity to the planet would be greatly reduced."

With Jupiter's mass and rotation being three times as fast as Earth's, entering with the planetary rotation cut the entry speed from 134,000 mph down to 106,000 mph, Kirk said.

On Dec. 7, 1995 the probe entered Jupiter's atmosphere. But the first time the researchers at NASA were able to view the data was Dec. 10. Only two minutes of data was available that first day.

Kirk said this delay was caused because of previous failure in the deployment of a large antennae that was to give feedback to earth instantaneously. Instead, the data had to be sent very slowly with a smaller antennae aboard the orbiter. The probe entered the atmosphere and started sending data up to the orbiter hovering above, which then

New Vandal Cards available

Christopher Clancy
Staff

Starting next week, students will be able to make long distance calls and then bill them to their Vandal Cards. The UI Vandal Card Office plans to start issuing the new cards next week as part of a two-step effort to cut calling card costs for students and replace old and damaged cards.

Adding to the already multi-purpose card, the Vandal calling card program will allow students to make calls to individually billed AT&T accounts and will give reduced student rates that will surpass those of regular AT&T calling cards, Vandal Card Office spokesman Tim Taylor said.

The Vandal Card can currently be used to pay for a number of services on campus as well as provide identification and discounts at businesses both off and on campus.

Students will be required to trade in their old cards for the new version, although the switch will be free of charge. All cards will continue to work through this semester and faculty and staff won't need to trade in cards until this summer, but all cards will be replaced by fall, Taylor said.

"Advertisements in the Argonaut and flyers around campus will give details when students will be able to trade in their old cards," Taylor said. "Cards will probably be available on an alphabetic basis" similar to that used at registration.

New cards will be issued to students without the requirement of having a regular GTE account and will also make keeping track of long distance charges easier for students in living groups or dorms, while giving a competitive alternative to other long distance options, Taylor said.

While long distance rates on the cards will be better than those offered under other calling plans, prices will still remain higher than direct-dialed cards. The cards may also be used for making international calls at a reduced rate, and will require no annual surcharge, Taylor said.

The cards are being issued with an 800 number printed on the back along with an authorization code, unique to each person. Students will be able to access accounts via the number followed by the code and a four digit PIN number.

Along with providing the calling service, the Vandal Card Office hopes to remove a number of bad cards from circulation that may have become worn off, cracked or otherwise damaged through use.

"All of the laminated cards will be replaced with a new all-plastic card made of a more durable material," Taylor said.

All-plastic "PVC" cards that were intended to replace the laminated cards were distributed this fall but are being phased-out in favor of a PVC, polyester composite material that will resist cracking.

"Some of those (laminated) cards are four years old now and in pretty bad shape. If a card (made from PVC) develops a crack it can break right in two," Taylor said.

A more efficient process for producing the cards using video imaging should make the trade in process go more smoothly, Taylor said. The system takes a digital image using a video camera and then transfers the image to a computer where it can be stored and retrieved quickly, making the process of replacing cards faster.

"Between 700 and 900 students lose their cards each semester. Initially we bought the video imaging system to make the calling card service available," but it also cuts costs and decreases turn-around time for the students who need replacement cards, he said.

For more information concerning the calling plan or how to replace cards contact the Vandal Card Office at 885-7522 or AT&T at 1-800-445-6063.

New women's studies class offered this fall

Karen Cloud
Staff

Few other areas of study suffer from more misconceptions or stereotypes than women's studies.

"We don't plan rallies or burn our bras," Martha Einerson, women's studies adviser, said. "Women's studies is broader than most people realize."

Since 1994, women's studies has been a recognized minor at the University of Idaho. The program uses critical thinking to explore how gender relates to issues like class, cultural background, or sexual identity. This fall, the first introductory women's studies class, "Women, Society and Culture," will be taught pending funding.

"A lot of what we've been doing for the last two years is to create a foundation ... to recruit people into the minor and to let people know there is a women's studies program at UI," Einerson said.

"One of the strong points of this minor is its interdisciplinary nature," Stephan Flores, women's studies adviser, said. The Women's Studies program includes 21 credits of upper division classes. These classes are drawn from a variety of areas including history, English, family and consumer sciences, philosophy, psychology, sociology and anthropology. The women's studies program also includes a directed study in order to combine the perspectives gained in the other classes.

The women's studies minor will be awarded to two students this spring.

smaller antennae aboard the orbiter. The probe entered the atmosphere and started sending data up to the orbiter hovering above, which then sent data slowly back to earth.

Kirk said people ask him if there is room temperature on Jupiter. He said, "It does occur twice but it's not very hospitable."

If you were cruising the Internet the other day the headline, "Galileo crew discovers life on Jupiter!" may have grabbed your attention. It was an April Fool's joke but people believed it and actually called in. "It just shows how gullible some people can be," Kirk said.

"I feel that some of my connections down in Boise will help me as a senator for the ASUI, and help the ASUI," Houck said.

"I think it's pretty appropriate that Senator Houck is appointed to the senate on a full moon," joked Senator Jeff Daniels.

Senator John Hoynes requested suggestions and questions about parking and streets be given to him by April 12.

Fire on the Mountain: Idaho author Stan Tate

Contributed photo
Stan Tate will be signing his new book, Jumping Skyward, at Waldenbooks tomorrow afternoon.

Shawn Vidmar
Staff

Resident author and Episcopalian and Presbyterian minister Stan Tate's curriculum and personal history are varied.

He received a bachelor's degree in philosophy from the University of Idaho in 1955, a master's degree in pastoral care at the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1958 and a doctorate degree in Biomedical Ethics at the Graduate Theological Union in 1988. In the interim he jumped out of planes.

Stan Tate recently published a book, Jumping Skyward, on his smoke jumping experience in the Idaho wilderness. He also teaches one class at UI; professional ethics for counselors, and maintains his spiritual calling.

Tate has received many awards and accolades including the Idaho Jaycees award of Outstanding Young Idahoan, the highest possible. He has also been in four Whos Whos including the first ever Whos Who in Religion and the latest one entitled Whos Who in the West, in 1996. He has also received the Gem State Award in 1995 awarded by the Northwest Christian Writer's Conference.

Tate is certainly an asset to the UI faculty and the Moscow community, but he does not see it this way.

In a press release, Jumping Skyward, by Cabinet Crest Books, is described as, "a story of tough men parachuting into Idaho's bioscathedral."

The message becomes clear through the story of the hero, Ken Shuler, and his interaction with "the goodness of God's Creation (which) shines in delightful detail from the Selway-Bitterroots to the Seven Devil Mountains towering above Hell's Canyon."

His book, displayed in the Administration Building, remains part of a display for parents' weekend with the theme of "What can you do with a philosophy degree?"

Tate often cites UI as the foundation on the man he is today. He began smoke jumping while attending UI and continued off and on for the next 14 years.

Tate said, "I love the spiritual highs I'd get out there in the Idaho wilderness, where no matter how many problems you have the spirituality of the woods embrace you and you have a feeling you can handle anything."

It is in the wilderness that Tate discovered peace and rebirth. In the forest "you are your real self, there are no games and no pretenses" Tate said.

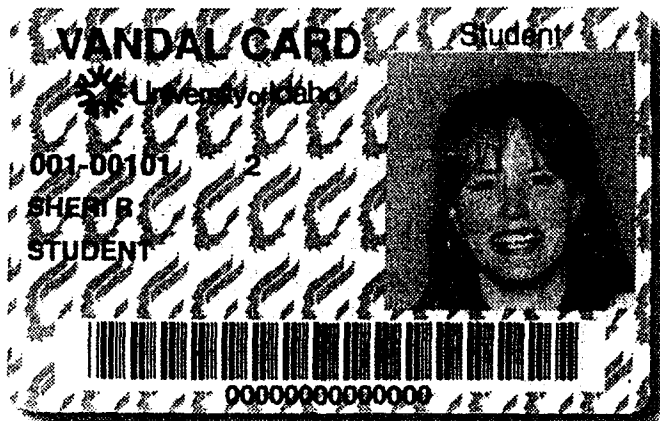

He also used smoke jumping to recharge his batteries during the summers while taking sabbatical from his position as a pastor in Montana. He draws parallels with the life of Christ and a forest fire, more importantly with his good friend Ken Shuler, "Hawk" in his book.

In a memorial to sky jumpers, Tate read from his book only to realize later that the forest which had been charred three years earlier was teaming with life and it had been 30 years to the date of the death of his beloved friend.

Tate is a bioethicist, which is a person who deals with counseling people on life and death ethical questions. He also works as a spiritual director at Latah health services. He believes his book will help people experience "rebirth through nature" and give those who cannot get out a "source of imagination" so they may experience nature in the city.

Tate will be signing his book at Waldenbooks in the Palouse Empire Mall from 1p.m. to 3 p.m. on April 6, and the UI Book Store from 1p.m. and 3p.m. on April 8.

The New Vandal ID Cards are Here!

Who needs the new Vandal ID Card?

All UI students who are returning for the fall 1996 term need to get the new Vandal ID Card.

When can I get my new Vandal ID Card?

Week	Last Name
April 8 - 12	A - D
April 15 - 19	E - I

Distinguished professor brings message of non-violence to UI

Allssa Arndt
Staff

Dr. Arya Bhushan Bhardwaj, dean of peace and non-violence studies at the Libera Universita Popolare in Borgosesia, Italy, brought the Gandhian message of non-violent conflict resolution to the University of Idaho. Bhardwaj spoke on "Spiritual Non-Violence vs. Power Politics" in front of a small gathering of students and faculty at the Campus Christian Center yesterday afternoon.

Bhardwaj comes from a family that has long been socially active in India. Bhardwaj's family struggled for India's independence from the British Raj. During this struggle Bhardwaj's grand uncle was imprisoned for 23 years by the Raj and his father was imprisoned for eight years.

Bhardwaj became socially active at the age of 15 and worked as a rural health volunteer. Bhardwaj received his master's degree in sociology and became the associate director of Rajghat School of Non-violence started by the Gandhi Peace Foundation in 1970, the first of its kind in the country. In 1975 Bhardwaj was imprisoned for nine months for opposing the emergency rule.

Bhardwaj founded Gandhi-In-Action, an international group of non-violent activists, that is active in 23 countries promoting the Gandhian concept of social change through non-violence. Gandhi-In-Action operates only on voluntary contributions.

Bhardwaj spends 10 weeks of the year teaching in Italy but his home and family are in New Delhi, India. Bhardwaj has given courses at various universities in the United States, Canada and Europe. Bhardwaj has also written two books on spiritual non-violence.

Professor Nick Gier introduced Bharadwaj who began his talk with a short history of non-violence that has been taught in thousands of hymns throughout the history of Eastern religions.

"We can't attain peace in isolation," Bharadwaj said.

He stressed a holistic peace that involves first, attaining peace within; second, attaining peace with others and third, attaining peace with nature. Bharadwaj said that peace through non-violence should be the goal of one's life as well as the goal of society as a whole.

Bhardwaj said, "If we want the social situation to change we must change our outlook."

He pointed out that the goal of modern society is success. Children are taught from the first day of school that they must compete. All individuals are forced to strive for success, but at what cost, asked Bhardwaj.

Success at the cost of others seems to be the answer,

"Competition breeds exploitation. When I compete I exploit my competitors weaknesses," Bharadwaj said.

He said competition creates conflicts and conflicts breed violence. Bhardwaj said compassion should be taught instead of competition.

"Compassion is an inherited gift," Bharadwaj said.

Bhardwaj said we each have the same flame of compassion but the attitude of competition and success creates a turbulent atmosphere in which it difficult for the flame of compassion to burn bright. If we nourished compassion instead of smothering it there would no longer be a need for violence. We must strive to understand the situations of others.

Bhardwaj also reminded the group the most important part of a democracy is the people. This has largely been forgotten by democratic governments and politics now work to undermine the power of the people in the quest to increase personal power.

Bhardwaj said, "You people just see the dancing of the puppets, you do not see the strings."

Gandhi strove to convince governments to work for the use of soul force, compassion, instead of brute force, violence. Bhardwaj said it is to our loss that world governments have not chosen this path.

Bhardwaj also discussed how the idea of private property has increased competition and widened the gap between the "haves" and the "have nots." Instead of competing with each other we should try to complement each other. He said we should work on realizing the worth of everyone and making sure that human dignity is nourished and not degraded. Bhardwaj said change must occur simultaneously on the personal and social level for any progress to be made.

ASUI makes smart move

They must have heard me ranting and raving! Or else they also realized it wasn't enough time.

I'm talking about the ASUI elections. The date for the elections has been changed—which is a good thing. The Argonaut, KUOI FM and the candidates now have enough time to get the word out to students.

Before the date was changed, the elections were scheduled to take place on April 10. This would have been a problem.

The candidates would have had only three whole working days to campaign and tell students where they stand on certain issues. The Argonaut would have had two issues to print election material, which probably wouldn't have been enough time to properly inform students on the candidates and the issues at hand. KUOI also would have had a day or two to get the word out.

Three days isn't enough time to inform students on political issues. But now we have two whole weeks to get the word out. Whew! That takes a little bit of the pressure off everybody.

The elections have been changed to April 24. ASUI President Brian Kane told the senate the date would be moved at Wednesday's meeting. Smart move.

I think the real issue here is that this is about the third or fourth time election days have been changed over the past few semesters. Why? It's ridiculous. There should be a date set, get the word out and let people know when the elections are going to be. Don't tell us a date and then change it all of the sudden.

Most of us know that elections are held once in the fall and once in the spring. The ASUI just needs to do a better job of setting a date and then keeping it. Don't tease us.

I don't know about KUOI, but I haven't even seen the Student Issues Board chair come up to the Argonaut to talk about election coverage—before the date was changed. I've seen an advertisement in the paper concerning deadlines for senate and faculty council candidate applications, but that was it.

Now, the Argonaut will usually run what we want on election coverage—that's the beauty of the freedom of the press. Newspapers aren't a mouthpiece for Public Relations. But I also feel that it is a newspaper's job to inform its readership on upcoming issues.

It's kind of hard, however, when the person you need to be cohorting with isn't visible. I don't even know what the SIB chair looks like. I think it would be nice to discuss things with the person in charge of elections. Maybe his or her boss—Chief of Staff Megan Russell—could lay down the law and tell them to get on the ball.

It's the job of both the Argonaut and the ASUI to inform students. We need to work together to get the word out. Know what I'm saying?

—Shelby Dopp

Argonaut Letters & Guest Columns Policy

The Argonaut welcomes reader letters and guest columns. Letters must be one page or less typed, double spaced, be signed and include the phone number and address of each writer. Letters may also be submitted by e-mail to argonaut@uidaho.edu or by fax to (208) 885-2222. The Argonaut reserves the right to refuse or edit letters. Only one letter per month will be accepted from a single author. Guest columns must go through the same editing and approval process as our staff columns.

Senate takes on media and loses

After round two of the Senate vs. Student Media battle, the score stands at 0-2-0.

But don't hold your breath. That incessant background hum we hear is the senate gearing up to fire off even greater salvos.

The first battle lost and won concerns Fugue, UI's literary magazine of which enough column inches have been written in this paper to last the general public well into the next century.

The second battle has not yet been lost nor won; both sides are drawing up battle plans and drumming up reserves for a fierce firefight due to erupt the second both sides land their paratroop forces back in Moscow at the start of the fall '96 semester.

Objective: the GEM of the Mountains yearbook. Following in the staggering footsteps of senators before him who have successfully sealed the doom of Fugue by letting the most apathetic and reactionary student body this side of the Pecos decide whether or not to dole out their student funds to the publication, ASUI Senator Jay Feldman sponsored, then rescinded a bill that would have put the fiscal fate of the yearbook before the student body in elections set for April 24.

Pas d'ardouilles ici

Feldman, it seems, has some uncertain vendetta against our beleaguered yearbook. He used the withdrawal of student funds from the yearbook as a primary political plank in his successful bid for the senate, much as early Republican candidates for the presidency called for the abolition of various government departments to drum up excitement among the unenlightened few and get a little more free press time. But Feldman backed down from his stance after being castigated for his views on the now infamous candidate forum aired on KUOI.

Once again it appears Feldman is more or less shooting blanks. Under strong and justifiable opposition from yearbook editors and staffers, Feldman's bill has been withdrawn. GEM staffers argued successfully they did not have adequate time to prepare and present their side of the debate to the student body, seeing as the item was to be put to campus-wide vote on April 24. The withdrawal of the bill gives the yearbook a reprieve to put together their case, but the battle lines seem clearly drawn for the first senate session this fall.

The irony behind both student media battles is chilling. Opponents of both Fugue and the yearbook seem hell-bent in the opinion that students are tired of seeing their money go to subsidize programs they deem of little value, or as valueless, to the majority of students. Truth be known, Fugue distributes fewer than 300 copies each time it is published, and the yearbook, though posting a record year in sales, still has yet to sell 1,000 copies. But opponents who use these statistics and this logic fail to realize how slippery a slope tain good grades, but each of the students in the Administration Auditorium that evening is someone who dedicates his or her life to doing and being something worthwhile.

These are the people you see taking on leadership roles in ASUI, Residence Hall Association, Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council and other university clubs. They are the people who literally spend hours each week planning and implementing programs and activities around campus that you participate in. Those things don't just happen by themselves.

These people work on committees, such as the safety task force and the student recreation center, to make this university a great place for the future. In addition, the students recognized last week hold jobs, volunteer and paid, within the community to make them well-rounded people.

These people don't necessarily have time to attend wild parties, go out dancing six nights a week, or prank other halls or houses, but that doesn't mean they don't have a social life. These students are constantly interacting with other people—through work, committees and class.

What a judgmental statement it is to imply that because someone is busy that they are living a life they'll regret later on. I think the tables have been switched.

Those who pursue academic and leadership achievement aren't just working for the present time. We are building up experiences, skills, values and opportunities for the future. We are planning ahead, realizing that life in the real world is not just about how much beer you can drink, how many parties you can go to nor how many men or women you can date.

It is about adventure—trying new things and accumulating experience. It is about opportunity—setting goals and attaining them. It is about being a well-rounded person. And it is about being dedicated to your peers, your community and your family.

Before you tell someone that they are missing out on the good life, take a look at where you are going. Where will you be in five, 10 or 20 years? Will you be living in a drunken stupor or will you be in a professional field, raising a family and living life to the fullest?

Plan today to make tomorrow all you would like it to be.

We have holidays for many reasons, why do we celebrate Easter?

We have a lot of holidays in this country. At least once a month, some special day comes around that we're supposed to observe.

Some holidays are important—Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday—some are trivial—Halloween—some are based on religious observances—Thanksgiving—and others are just a bad excuse to stay home from work—Labor Day.

Whatever the occasion, there's always someone who wants to celebrate it with a special day.

Independence Day is a real holiday. The revolution wasn't something our fore-fathers wanted to do; it was something they had to do. They couldn't stand around and let the British government abuse the power they had over their citizens. This Fourth of July, why don't you take a look at the document that this day commemorates; read the Declaration of Independence.

Columbus Day falls pretty low on the usefulness scale though. It's supposed to commemorate the "discovery" of the Americas. Two problems: there were already people here and the "New World" had been "discovered" by the vikings 500 years earlier.

Only second after Independence Day is Veteran's Day. The men and women who have fought and died for our country deserve all the respect we can give. Without their selfless service, the United States would not be the land o' plenty it is today.

Christmas is a great time for family to gather together. Many people forget, or don't want to remember, what Christmas really means.

Anyway, to me Christmas is only important because it comes before Easter. Jesus couldn't have died if he hadn't been born.

So why am I writing about this now? It's time for another holiday this weekend.

Today is the day Christians call Good Friday. It commemorates the day Jesus died on a cross almost 2,000 years ago. Jesus was in Jerusalem to celebrate the Jewish Passover when He was arrested, beaten and executed all in less than a day. He is the Passover lamb because He is the sacrifice given by God to pay for our sin. He is the true sacrifice, fore-shadowed by the tradition of sacrificing lambs, because He lived without sinning.

Easter celebrates the fact that Jesus rose from the dead on the third day after He died.

Jesus came to Earth in human form for the sole purpose of dying for us. Jesus said He is the son of God. He also said, "I am the way, and the truth and the life; no one comes to the Father, but through Me." Knowing Jesus is the only way we can know God.

These are pretty bold statements for me to make. I wasn't there, how do I know if He rose. Two things give me the assurance I need. The first is the eye-witness accounts given to us in the Bible.

The second assurance I have is the faith God has given me. By that faith, I know what is written in the Bible really happened.

That may be hard for you to accept, but look at your own life. How many things do you believe in "by faith?"

Faith in God works the same way. We can't see Him here on Earth, but we have evidences. We have creation itself, we have His written Word in the Bible, we have faith within ourselves. We don't know Him perfectly, but we can believe what has been shown to us and trust in Him to show us the rest.

Don't trust me on this. Find out for yourself; get a Bible and read it.

they're standing on. They're in danger of seeing the subsidized programs they enjoy on campus come under attack for the very same reasons:

The Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival, for instance, has sucked hundreds of thousands of student fee dollars into an artistic black hole. The majority of those who benefit from the festival are not UI students.

The UI Prichard Gallery on Main Street has got to be costing the university a pretty penny, and I've yet to see crowds lining the streets for a peek inside.

UI athletics have witnessed abysmal attendance, making many question whether the move into the more "glamorous" Big West Conference is feasible.

Those who would be quick with the ax would be well to heed the old adage "Be careful what you wish for; you may get it." Would the Prichard subsidy survive a student body vote? Would any of our pet programs, whether in Student Media, performance arts or practically anything else be able to come out of a campus-wide vote unscathed? Probably not. It is doubtful even if the ASUI Senate would survive a fund or no fund vote if the question was brought before the entire campus community, though a vote of that magnitude might get voting percentages up to record-breaking levels, say 35 percent.

Our elected representatives should be intelligent enough to realize that even in politics, fair is fair. Manhandling a sneak attack on the yearbook only two weeks before the question would come to a vote is not the hallmark of a well-heeled and intelligent representative body, but rather a tell-tale sign of politicians who think (and unfortunately think correctly) that by simply expressing their knee-jerk opinions in slam-bang fashion to an apathetic voting public they can get their wishes fulfilled before anyone really has the time to think the problem out completely.

ASUI Senate—and Senator Feldman—shame on you.

UI Golfers on par

With names like Nancy Lopez, Annika Sorrenstam and Patty Sheehan heading the list of the PGA's best, Idaho will put Jenni Tesch, Dawna Hogaboam and Elizabeth Carter up as their counterparts anyway.

These three along with the likes of Darcy Ritz, Marci Bernhardt and Kelli Vosberg make up the core of the Idaho women's golf team. This group placed second at its own invitational early in March, that was held at Bryden Canyon Golf Course in Lewiston.

Hogaboam led the team through the first round, shooting a sizzling 79 and pushing Idaho out to a 10-stroke lead after the first round. Although the rest of the team shot consistent rounds, Hogaboam ballooned to a 95 on the second day, thus Idaho fell to a second place finish.

"We have four or five kids that are capable of finishing in the 70's, but our big problem has been consistency," Women's Coach Don Rasmussen said.

Idaho again had a good showing in Hawaii, placing 14th out of 19, but more importantly beating three of its conference foes. Idaho beat the likes of Idaho State, Montana State and Boise State.

Tesch shot a torrid 76 while in Hawaii, this after taking a two-stroke out-of-bounds. Rasmussen praised the play of Tesch, along with the overall come-back effort. Idaho started out the tourney shooting 350, before charting a 331 and 324 to finish strong.

"We have a lot of girls that can play really well locally, but when they get on an airplane they lose their swing. We need to learn to deal with adversity on the road and we will be a much better team," Rasmussen said.

Idaho will finish out their season at San Francisco April 20-23, before taking the leap into the Big West. Idaho will host next seasons conferece tourney, which could be a definite advantage during their rookie campaign.

"We are leaving a conference that has really come a long way in women's golf, but we are joining a well known conference in the process," Rasmussen said.

Tennis teams get respect

Mike Stetson

Staff

When winning becomes secondary, a coach must have a good solid focus for his team in order to keep them motivated and moving forward. For the Vandal men's tennis team, the focus this season has not been on team victories but building a respected program and accomplishing small goals.

"We've put Idaho on the map in tennis," UI tennis coach Greg South said.

Looking to continue accomplishing their goals, South and the Vandal men headed to Irvine, Calif., last week with no greater goal than to earn respect. While they could not manage a team win at the four-day tournament, they did capture respect from every school with whom they clashed.

"I think this tournament was exactly what we needed as a team," South said.

The Vandal men took the court March 28-31, to face some of the nation's best tennis teams in a 17-team tournament hosted by UC-Irvine. Idaho opened the weekend with a tough match against Virginia Tech, ranked 34th in the nation. While the Vandals did not have the talent to upset the Hokies, Idaho did make the event interesting, pushing Tech for six hours before falling.

"Last year they had us off the court in an hour and a half," South said.

South adds that Virginia Tech coach Larsen Bowker was very impressed with Idaho's effort and improvement saying, "you have a bunch of hitters on the team learning how to be players, you're doing a great job."

The rest of Idaho's weekend only got tougher as the Vandals locked up against more of the nation's best, dropping all their team competitions but earning the respect of all the colleges they faced.

"I hear we're a scrappy team a lot this year," South said. "We were there, we lost matches but we got to go. Idaho was not an easy match for anyone."

The shinning moment of the weekend came for South and the Vandals when Oklahoma State's coach requested an unscheduled match against Idaho on Saturday. The Vandals accepted the challenge and played to a tough 5-2 loss, highlighted by victories by Danny Willman, 6-3 6-4, over OSU's number one player who is ranked 200 in the world, and a three-set victory by Jorge Aldrate.

South and the men's tennis team may not be winning all their matches, but wins and losses do not seem to bother the team as they focus on refining their game. South admits the current focus of the team is to perfect some goals on the practice court then move those accomplishments into a match.

"You have to downplay expectations," South said. "All you can expect is to go out and give it your all, win or lose."

That attitude has gained South and the Vandal tennis teams a lot of respect nationally as Idaho has managed to secure matches next year against first time opponent Washington and 15th-ranked, New Mexico.

The Vandals look to improve on what has turned into a banner year for them this weekend when Idaho faces off against Boise State, Utah State and Arkansas-Little Rock in the Boise Dual in Boise, Idaho.

"Being able to play these teams, it's a very exciting time," South said about the upcoming weekend tournament.

South hopes to challenge BSU, but admits that his team will need to have a perfect day against the Broncos, who have great depth as a senior dominated team, if the Vandals are to win.

This weekend's tournament will pit South against his good friend Greg Patton, BSU tennis coach. Patton took the helm of BSU's tennis program for the same reason that Idaho brought in South, to rebuild the program. That fact, along with the phenomenal booster support Idaho gets when playing matches at Boise has South excited about this weekend's tournament.

"It's like a home match for us, we have more boosters on their indoor court than they have," South said.

Whether Idaho comes away from this weekend's tournament victorious or not, South will be pleased as he tries to put this season's accomplishments and schedule in perspective.

"We're winning more than we're losing and this year, if we were playing last year's schedule, we'd be almost undefeated right now."

This weekend's Boise tournament is the last tune-up for Idaho's men before the Big Sky Championships held April 26-28. Idaho's women will attend one more tournament in Seattle next weekend, April 12-14, prior to their Big Sky Championship, April 19-21. The men finished last year's season in third, their best finish in ten years. The women's last top three finish came following the 1990 season.

UI ruggers only mix it up on the field

Jennifer Eng

Staff

Rugby: It's one of the fiercest sports played on a field yet it is still a gentlemen's sport.

"It's the greatest sport ever invented," Mark Dobrilovic, Rugby player, said.

Rugby is a game with a sub-culture and a set of rules all its own. The game is often mistaken for football, but those who make the mistake have never seen the game played.

The ball looks the same, the fields are both green (usually) but the similarities stop there. The game is about possession, Dobrilovic said, not yardage.

Rugby is played in 40 minute halves with no substitutions, if players are badly injured a team may replace up to two and it only has a minute to get them off the field. After two players are taken out more can also be taken out of the game, but they may not be replaced.

"This game is about endurance," Dobrilovic said. "It's not like football with 30 second plays and time outs."

The coach sits in the stands with the spectators and the captain runs the show on the field.

Surprisingly, Rugby, which is played without helmets or pads, has less injuries than football. Bryce England, another rugby player, said the reason for this is the conduct on the field.

"You're not going out to hurt one another, that's not the object of the game," England said. "Rugby is a controlled tackling game. You're not trying to knock somebody's head off."

Dobrilovic said because Rugby players don't wear pads they don't have a false sense of security and thus they don't try to charge into other players with the intent to hurt somebody.

Rugby, which is extremely popular in Canada and England, is still in the introductory phase in America. On other university campuses, England said, Rugby is becoming very popular. On the UI campus though, there is not as much interest.

"We're always looking for more players," England said. One of the biggest reasons for the need for more players is a lack of interest along with those who are interested graduating.

Currently UI's team plays in a Canadian league against teams who have played Rugby since high school. This makes the competition tougher, but the enthusiasm for the game stronger.

The team right now is composed of eight experienced players and 11 or 12 new team members. England and Dobrilovic said anybody regardless of experience is welcome to come out and play.

Dobrilovic said it is common for rugby players to practice "whoring on" where the players go to a different town over spring break and play with the local team there.

The sub-culture of Rugby is much different than any other sport. It's typical after a game for the two teams to "drink up" together. The game, no matter how fierce it is on the field, is a social one on the sidelines. Rugby games take on a sort of party atmosphere.

Dobrilovic said, "All hostilities are left on the pitch. It's a very social game, there are no fights after the game."

England said in a lot of places in the United States, "The game revolved out of the party," where in a lot of European cities, "The party revolved around the game."

The reason for the teams to be so social in light of such a fierce game is because of the code of conduct of the game on and off the pitch.

"It's a hooligans game played by gentlemen," Coach Pete King said.

King said this Rugby team is a great bunch of dedicated players that will travel eight hours just to play. All of the travel and playing expenses incurred are paid by the team with only a little financial help from the university.

So far this season the Rugby team is 0-1 with its first loss against Kalispell, Mont. in a foot and a half of snow. England said the weather has put a damper on playing lately.

The next game for the rugby team will be played April 6 at Guy Wick's Field at 1 p.m. The last rugby game for the team will be on May 4 here at UI's Guy Wick's field.

Vandals excel in class and in community

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

The University of Idaho Athletic Department will recognize the academic and community service achievements of its student-athletes on National Student-Athlete Day Saturday.

The day is set aside to honor high school and collegiate athletes who excel both in the classroom and in their communities. It also honors the parents, advisers, faculty and administrators who support the student-athletes. Vandal student-athletes will recognize certain members of the UI faculty and staff with the Vandal Helping Hand Award. Winners are nominated by student-athletes.

"The goal is to recognize individuals on campus that support us," UI Director of Academic Services Laurie Turner said. "We have a lot of faculty people that have been very helpful. We really do appreciate the fact that they have gone out of their way, maybe miss a lunch hour, to help a student-athlete."

Of the 250 Vandal student-athletes 48 percent posted a 3.0 GPA or better last semester. The fall semester GPA for all UI athletes was 2.965. Eighteen student-athletes earned perfect 4.0's.

UI athletes have also been active in the community, by working in the VANDAL PRIDE Life Skills Program. Vandal student-athletes participated in a variety of programs last fall, including Paint the Palouse, the United Way Drive, Halloween Costume Judging for Opportunities Unlimited as well as visiting local elementary schools.

Whalen's competition in classroom

Damon Barkdull
Staff

At some point in one's four, five, or seven year college career, one may ask oneself this question: Did I learn anything? This is especially true for student athletes who find more time to party and compete than actually keeping their head in a book.

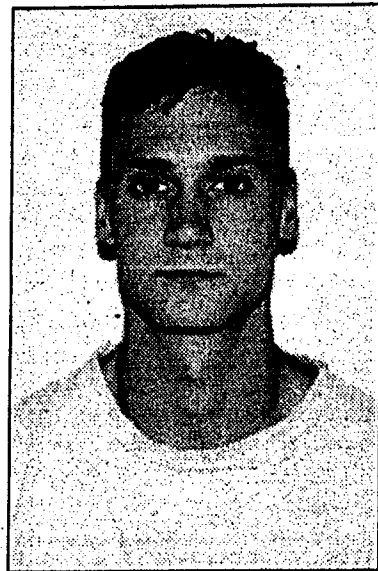

Not so for senior track athlete Scott Whalen.

Whalen, 23, believes that the main reason he's here is not to see how long he can keg stand or break the Guinness World Record for spending time on a track, he's here to get the grades.

"Obviously, you have to do both, get the grades and do sports. That's why you're here," Whalen said. "Basically it cuts out stuff that other non-athletes get to do on weekends and other fun stuff that you don't have time for."

The Bothell, Wash., native currently holds a 3.48 cumulative GPA in a major that is very rarely called easy—mechanical engineering.

Along with keeping the average up, Whalen runs the 400 Hurdles and is on the 400 Relay team and expects to qualify for the Big Sky Conference Championship sometime soon.

As for bucking the dumb jock image, Whalen would like to see better press for the academically excellent student-athletes.

"I don't know if any stuff is even publicized about our grades," Whalen said. "It would be nice if something was said."

Being a student and athlete both is something Whalen tried to perfect early in life, and is continuing to do so in his final year of eligibility at Idaho.

"Some athletes get a bad rap because they don't do that well with academics and graduation rates," Whalen said.

"It (school) needs to be more important, except for a select few. But for most, when you're done with your sport, you're done, and you had better had learned something along the way."

Although Whalen has found his time spent on the Idaho track team to be a great experience, he is ready to move on with his life.

"I'm glad to be done, there's other things that I want to do," Whalen said. "Plus, I've got an absolutely horrendous shin problem and I can only practice a couple times a week and I can't even practice the hurdles. I'm just glad to be done, it's kind of a mess."

Whalen plans on furthering his education at Idaho by going to graduate school after he receives his bachelor's degree this year.

Capping off a great college career here at UI, Whalen says that the hardest part of being a student athlete is not the time you spend on your studies, but the exhaustion an athlete suffers when practice is finished.

"You just want to go to bed and die after practice," Whalen said. "I guess that's the biggest difference between student workers and student athletes, is how tired you are all the time."

So what might Whalen say to a college freshmen athlete who's having trouble making it to class and is generally learning nothing?

"School is the most important thing. That's why you're here first and foremost," Whalen said. "You just can't get behind on your work."

This weekend, Whalen will get a chance to go home for only the second time in his college career when the UI outdoor track and field team travels to the University of Washington.

With friends and family surrounding Whalen, they'll be relieved to hear that their college student is graduating on time.

UI Intramural Game of the week

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

Editors note: The following is the second in a series of weekly intramural features. This game was chosen randomly as will all featured games in the coming weeks.

It Don't Matter would have been more appropriately named Cinderella this week.

However, it wasn't because they came out of nowhere to make a run at the big ball, but because the clock struck 12 before they danced. The crystal ball had better things in store for Midnight Basketball in a 51-48 triumph over It Don't Matter in Intramural Co-rec basketball Wednesday night.

April Beaver's bucket with 48 seconds to go in the extra session gave Midnight Basketball a 50-46 edge and would prove to be the gamewinner. Aubree Holt connected on one of two free throws for It Don't Matter with 20 seconds left to narrow the margin to 50-48. (In co-rec basketball women's baskets and free throws are worth twice as much as men's scores, four and two points respectively.)

Holt had a chance to win the game for It Don't Matter. After Kevin Neuendorf pushed the score to 51-48 for Midnight Basketball, Holt was fouled with four seconds left. The freshman guard missed both free throws, but teammate Carmen Stanfield grabbed the rebound. Stanfield's jumper bounced off iron at the buzzer to preserve the victory for Midnight Basketball.

It Don't Matter climaxed a second half run when Ben Reeder buried a 15-foot jumper at the buzzer to knot the score at 42-42. Midnight Basketball held a 37-20 advantage with 7:04 remaining in regulation before It Don't Matter got back in the game with a 14-2 run.

Midnight Basketball broke an early second half scoring drought by both teams when Matt Beglinger drilled a short jumper in the key to start a 13-4 spurt by the late night shooters.

It Don't Matter held an early 10-4 lead with 9:38 to go in the first half, but the well went dry for the apathetic club as they didn't score over the next seven minutes.

Beaver had 12 points to lead Midnight Basketball while Neuendorf and Beglinger each chipped in 11. Greg Herzog led It Don't Matter with 16 points.

Gehrke sets high goals

Byron Jarnagin
Staff

Nearing the end of her running career, senior Tara Gehrke has high expectations to finish as one of the top five 400m hurdlers in the Big Sky conference at the conclusion of her last outdoor season.

Gehrke came to the University of Idaho from the small town of Libby, Mont. where she has been running track since the sixth grade. Taking advantage of her given talent in track she ran successfully through junior high and high school, concentrating only on track and field, basketball was her only other avenue.

"I really liked track better than basketball because it was easier, I really didn't have to work at it as much as I had to with basketball," Gehrke said. "My junior year I went to nationals in Spokane and the next year I was recruited by Idaho and a few other places.

"I chose Idaho because the team was really nice and everyone was so friendly, and the fact that this school was only four hours away kind of made the choice for me," Gehrke said. "Idaho had good coaching, good hurdlers and I was excited to take on the 400 meter hurdles which were a bit longer than the 300m I ran in high school."

Beginning her freshman year she experienced going from a state champion to someone not even placing, despite having run faster than ever before. It gave Gehrke the desire to work a lot harder and to be ready to prove herself the next time. Starting out she wanted to establish herself in the UI program, and was not looking at being a champion her first trip out.

"A lot of my times didn't go down for a couple years, but were pretty consistent," Gehrke said. "In the end my improvement in times and places are due to improving a main element, my start."

As a freshman Gehrke felt like she had something to prove, going all out putting herself through a rigorous test. After her first total season, indoor and outdoor, she got all of the classic aches and pains, including shin splints and sore ankles.

One of the biggest changes from her freshman and sophomore years was not to run herself completely into the ground by the end of a season, but to systematically take advantage of the two separate seasons in a sort of practice performance manner.

"I enjoy outdoor season the most, and by the end of my first year I was not necessarily burnt out but I realized I needed to do something different," Gehrke said. "The college season is a lot longer than a high school season and so I prepare myself, using the indoor season as a builder for the outdoor season in the spring as opposed to when I was a freshman I just went all out."

Gehrke feels that her success now compared with before lies with the different training techniques she was not aware of before. She said that as a senior she has been involved in more drill work, which she says has really changed with the coaching changes.

"For hurdlers, technique is essential, and for me a large difference from being a straight-legged hurdler to a bent-legged hurdler helped improve my times," Gehrke said.

Gehrke is currently running the 100m and 400m hurdles and has been participating in the 4x400m relay. She is gearing up for her last outdoor season and plans to make the most of it. Her eligibility will not run out until after next fall's indoor season, but for Gehrke the outdoor season is her forte.

"This is going to be my last chance, and I really want to go out with a bang so I have set a few goals for myself," Gehrke said. "My number one goal is to finish in the top five in the 400m hurdles and hopefully I would like to run around 60 seconds, which would be an improvement on my current time of 62 seconds."

Knowing the end is just around the corner, Gehrke has a feeling of relief because she has come and paid her dues, but feels confident that she is leaving the UI program with something more than she came in with.

"This is one of the reasons that I wanted to come here because I knew that this program would make me a better athlete as well as a better person," Gehrke said. "I guess I have a mixture of feelings about the whole idea that this is my last indoor season."

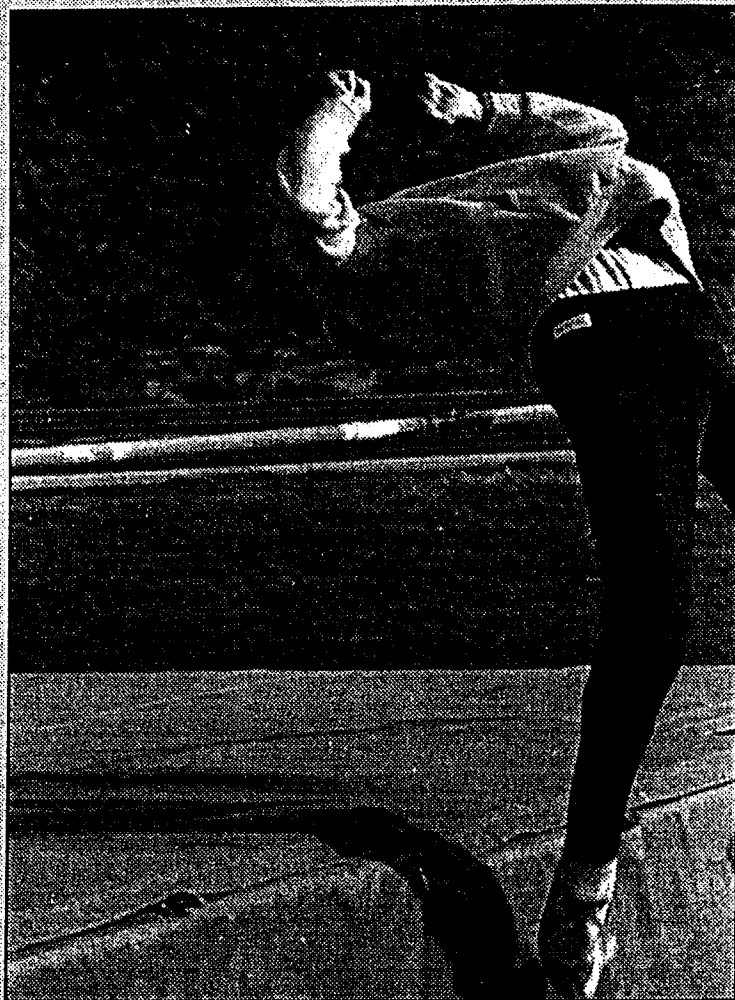

While part of the UI Track and Field team, Gehrke has seen the change in coaching staff and for most athletes a new coach means a change in program because different coaches have different avenues of reaching a final goal.

"Sometimes a new coach can be strange, but I guess it really didn't affect me too much," Gehrke said.

Her whole plan behind coming to UI was not just to run, but to actually get an education. Gehrke is an elementary education major who will be graduating in May 1997. She said she would like to coach high school sports if the opportunity arises farther along in her future. Gehrke hopes that younger athletes coming into the program will stick it out because she says she knows how tough things can be at first when you don't get instant gratification.

"Keep your head up if you don't see something at first especially if you're a scholarship student that feels they are in some kind of lull," Gehrke said.

What Americans take for granted is peace

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Like most students graduating this semester, one of Theo Mbabaliye's big concerns is finding a job and stabilizing his future. But what really eats at the soul of his heart is Mbabaliye's fear for his homeland in Rwanda.

"Sometimes I am asked how a nation so small could be so violent," Mbabaliye said of his largely agricultural nation. And in a country where he says roughly 90 percent of the population is illiterate, education is not something Mbabaliye takes for granted. "The uneducated are easy to manipulate," he said. "And instead of fighting through ideas, our government fights through arms."

Mbabaliye's own education runs deep. After his primary and secondary schooling in Rwanda he spent three years in Kenya studying agriculture. Following some work experience, three years of studying in the United Kingdom led him to the United States where he has been for the last two and half years.

Mbabaliye married his love, Immaculee in November 1993. In January 1994, two months later, he moved to Idaho to work on a masters degree and in March of that year, Mbabaliye's worst nightmare came alive.

War broke out in Rwanda. Unknowing of the survival of his family, Mbabaliye spent five months hearing nothing from his wife or relatives. "In circumstances like that, five months of sleepless nights is a very long time," Mbabaliye said.

Rwanda's slide from heaven to hell is a perfect example of the theory of dependence. "First there is a struggle for political control and power which eventually includes economics," Mbabaliye said. "Many call the problem 'ethnic conflicts,' but what is it that you are really fighting for?" he asked. The answer is power and money.

Genocide is a sickening word to hear. For Mbabaliye, fearing his life led him to believe in change. "Being in the U.S. has taught me that restoring tradition is not always good," he said. The diversity of the people and the competitive style have made Mbabaliye flexible to change.

Mbabaliye enjoys the company of others and feels that Idaho has Theo Mbabaliye, a native of Rwanda, will be speaking about ethnic conflict April 18.

Valaree Johnson

been receptive of him. He was excited to have his wife join him last November when she was finally able to escape. Together they are trying to make a peaceful life even though the worry for their relatives' lives can never be put away. "When you face adversity you become strong," he said. "Everyday life issues slowly make you change. All I can do is make the best I can."

On April 18 at 12:30 p.m. Mbabaliye will speak about "UNHCR: Ethnic Conflict in Rwanda" as part of a series about the United Nations. For more information call 885-8984.

Foo Fighters to play Pullman

Justin Cason
Staff

The campus of Washington State University will be home to one of the biggest concerts in the area this semester as popular newcomers to the rock world the Foo Fighters will be coming to town.

Tickets for the April 26 concert are already on sale, and are $12.50 for WSU and University of Idaho students and $15 to the general public. The show is scheduled to begin at 8 p.m.

The Foo Fighters were shoved into the national spotlight this past year with the release of their self-titled debut album, and, following the abundant radio and MTV play of their first two singles, have quickly developed into one of the year's best new alternative groups in America.

The Foo Fighters feature former Nirvana drummer Dave Grohl on guitar and lead vocals, Nate Mendel on bass, Pat Smear also on guitar, and former Sunny Day Real Estate member William Goldsmith on drums.

Jawbreaker and Ween will be opening for the Foo Fighters at the show, which will be held in the Compton Union Ballroom.

Grohl, no stranger to being awarded for his musical accomplishments while with Nirvana, led the Foo Fighters to a Grammy nomination for "Best Alternative Music Performance" this year, as well as garnering numerous honors in the Rolling Stone and Spin magazine polls.

The group spent part of the winter touring in Australia, New Zealand and other countries, and are now starting the final stretch of an American tour which canvasses everywhere from Fort Lauderdale, Fla. to Boise.

For additional information on the April 26 concert in Pullman, call the Associated Students of Washington State University at (509) 335-3503.

Vietnam remembered through Women's Center program

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Whenever the topic of the Vietnam War surfaces, an uncomfortable discussion includes a wide range of feelings from confusion to pain. It has been over 20 years since the war started, yet the effects of it still abound. Christine Frei spoke of some of these effects at the Women's Center last Tuesday.

Frei, originally from Cottonwood, Idaho lost her father, Major Raymond L. Tacke, in the war when she was 11.

It took Frei a long time to come to the reality of her father's death. Even though she knew it was the last time she would see her father as they parted from the base, it took years for her to bring closure to her loss.

"The loss of my father permeates my life, I will never be completely healed," Frei said.

But some of the pain was lifted when Frei began her quest. "The haunting that had gone on for me was gone. I felt I finally had finality," she said. When Frei decided to finish her degree, one class in particular drew an interest. An Lewis Clark State College course "Vietnam Revolution in Full Circle" taught by Marilyn Levine inspired her to pursue the questions she had about her father and the war.

Even though the class wasn't about the war, Frei stayed hoping to unravel some of the unanswered questions of the people of Vietnam. "I decided the best way to understand what really happened was to understand the culture that lies beneath the war," Frei said.

A term paper was due at the end of the semester and Frei began her topic with Ho Chi Minh. But with the encouragement of her professor and some self-motivation she decided to read through and transcribe over 80 letters from her father to the family that she had never read before. "If there was a fire in the house, the first thing I would have grabbed was those letters. But I could never have brought myself to read them," Frei said.

Using information from the Air Force through the Freedom of Information Act and audio tapes her father had sent while in Vietnam, Frei rekindled the relationship she felt was never really lost and came to know her father as an adult.

"It was quite a project emotionally," she said. "My relationship never ended with death and I felt I came closer to him from the research."

Her paper "My Father Revealed: A Memoir of Vietnam," interjects her own voice with her father's letters and tapes. She feels that talking about the experience has helped her come to grip but the pain will never go away.

Frei has never visited the Vietnam Memorial. Her father's name was among the 112 that were added to the Wall in 1986. "I have tremendous respect for the veterans and their families," Frei said. "I still have a lot of mixed feelings about the war, but I finally feel peace at last."

Goodbye to Moscow's Bedheads not a bitter one

Erik Marone
Staff

Nearly three years ago, four "music buddies" combined several different musical pursuits and formed The Bedheads. In a little less than two months, they will part ways to pursue even more opportunities.

Drummer Bill Schwarz is leaving for grad school, and with plans for bass player Michael Morscheck to move east with vocalist and keyboard player Rick Cavalieri after graduation, it presented a situation that couldn't include all five members of the band.

"It's not like we're leaving on bad terms," Morscheck explained. "Some of us have to move and it didn't work out for all of us to move back east. Rather than give up music completely, we're going to try different arrangements."

As the band prepares for their remaining few shows, they have a chance to reflect on the music that kept them together for the past few years.

"It's gone from more premeditated, structured songs; now it's more open," guitarist Doug Cameron said of their music. "Now it's more open, we're able to improvise and let the music take unexpected twists and turns. Before, we used to plan the unexpected twists and turns," he joked.

Three years together has given The Bedheads a new perspective on music and performing. With so many different experiences, it was hard for the band members to fully explain the best thing about the little things that have made up the last three years.

For Morscheck, it was "Playing original music and having people understand it and get into it and seeing other people enjoy what we're doing. It's amazing to think that can happen, and when it does, it's really cool."

"You've got to have a thick skin about some things, but it all centers around the importance that you truly, truly love the music, that's what will carry you through the tough times," Cavalieri added.

What if The Bedheads were able to stay together? Probably work a new album, Cavalieri said. "I like the direction that we're going, I think the music we're writing is a lot of fun."

However, the arrival of May will see the end of the current direction the band is taking. With at least two spin-off projects in the works though, The Bedhead influence will be in force as Schwarz brings his experiences to grad school. Morscheck and Cavalieri will continue their musical careers in the east with other local musicians while Cameron and newly acquired backup percussionist Casey Miller have plans to form a new band in Moscow.

The Bedheads: Doug Cameron, Bill Schwarz, Mike Morscheck and Rick Cavalieri play at Kiwifest '95.

Jared Smith

The band is encouraged by the recent upswing in the local music scene. They know it's not easy and encourage aspiring musicians to get focused if they want to be successful.

"It requires that you know what you want to do, to love what you're doing," Morscheck said. "If you have the passion for it and desire, you can do it."

"Cover music is where the money's at. If you want to play original music, plan to be poor," Cavalieri jokes.

With four scheduled shows left for The Bedheads, they are pulling out all the stops for their remaining performances. Part-time saxophone player for the band Vanessa Hasbrook is expected to join them for most of the shows. Their shows are at John's Alley April 6, Lambda Chi April 12, John's Alley (with Circle of Knots) April 26 and Moscow's HempFest April 27. The Bedheads' CD Therapy may be purchased for only $5 at the shows as well.

"Come check us out this Saturday, it's our last headlining gig at John's Alley," Morscheck encouraged. "And the show on the 26th with Circle of Knots will have something special at the end, a kind of collaborative effort."

As the end draws near, The Bedheads would like to thank everyone who has helped make their three years such a fun time. "We owe a lot to our friends and families, all the people who supported us," Morscheck said. "Thanks to everybody, especially all the other musicians in town."

Los Angeles band Idaho to play at John's Alley tonight

Justin Cason
Staff

John's Alley will house something a little different than the usual weekend norms of the Moscow music clubs this Friday. The band Idaho, which hails from Los Angeles, will be performing in their namesake state at 9 p.m. at the 114 E. 6th St. tavern.

Idaho is comprised of vocalist/guitarist Jeff Martin, a staple on the deeply persona/cathartic lyricist scene since 1992. Dan Seta on guitar, Terry Borden on bass and Mark Lewis on drums fill out the rest of the newly-formed band.

Idaho's exact style is difficult to define. After spending much of his career as labeled as a dark, brooding lyricist, Martin is now trying to shed that image. The band's latest effort, entitled Three Sheets to the Wind, is a hodgepodge of up-tempo rock and roll that combines quite naturally with the slower, personal songs.

"It's kind of like Grateful Dead," Eric Matusek, manager of John's Alley, said of the album and the group. "Except, of course, it's more modern."

Three Sheets to the Wind is the first album where all four of the members have worked together on a piece. Formerly, just Martin or a combination of the members have collaborated. It is also the third full-length album.

Three Sheets to the Wind has already received positive reviews from alternative music critics. According to the Alternative Press, "It's clear that Idaho are more indebted to David Sylvian, John Coltrane or Brian Eno than Ian Curtis."

Interestingly enough, Idaho's trip to the Gem State will be a rough one. According to their press agency, the trio will be making the trip to the Palouse by car. All in all, it will be a 20 hour drive to and from the friendly confines of John's Alley.

Idaho will only be in town for a short time, so catch them this weekend if you can.

Easter Production to be performed in Pullman

Janice Newlon, Cheryl Mitchell and Steve Stone are featured in The Glorious Redemption. The play will be performed at the Living Faith Fellowship tonight at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday at 10:30 a.m.

ACCORDING TO MATT: Hoolybob's new EP: Anonymous

Matt West
Contributing Writer

Hoolybob, or whoever they are, has released a musically inclined and lyrically deficient EP entitled Anonymous.

Umm, formerly known as Crush, Gordon's Heater, Johnny Bravo, EZ Loader (my favorite), Zip Thud and the Swollen Young Colons, Hoolybob's tactical marketing plan of frequent name changes has kept their following coming back to their shows. "Wow, look there's a new band at the Cap, lets go!" (Later that evening) "Ugh, it's just Hoolybob, we're outta here!"

Hoolybob is often seen performing cover songs at the Capricorn in Moscow.

Well, back to the album at hand. The first track, "Sea of Green," for lack of a better place to start, actually has a pretty catchy beat until the lyrics come in, uh, oh, ooh, yeah, OH NO! If "Todd: Head Cheesy Guy," one of the band members, does the lyrics for this track, well, than he's got an accurate nickname. There isn't a lot of substance to the lyrics in Anonymous.

Other slower songs like "Whirlwind" and "Grace and Stride" have more meaningful lyrics, but lack in the musicianship that the faster tracks offer. Hoolybob is made up of good musicians. I like their music—good guitars both acoustic and electric and groovy bass lines, but unfortunately it comes off unoriginal. Perhaps that is why Hoolybob sticks to covers.

In a nutshell, Hoolybob uses too many "dumb filler words," (one of my terms) when they don't know what to say. These include the already mentioned "uh, oh, ooh, yeah!, duey and do," and well, many variations of "uh, oh, ooh, yeah!" Also, some of the lyric echoes are not as effective as Hoolybob may think.

I struggled to think of bands that I could compare/contrast to Hoolybob while reviewing the album, but I only drew blanks. I suppose that makes Hoolybob look more original than I alluded to earlier.

In my humble opinion I think Hoolybob performs some excellent cover songs and if you have the chance I recommend you give them a listen at The Capricorn. As for their new release Anonymous, please wait until one of your friends gets a copy of the album before you start making labels for a blank tape.

Hope these guys don't quit their day jobs uh, oh, ooh, yeah!

Matt Baldwin
Contributing Writer

Moscow has always been a blossoming field of culture. With their first release Hoolybob emerges into a rich pasture of frill and nothing more with their album Anonymous. The album sticks with a bland guitar through a majority of their songs. Granted that some of the songs on the album are better than average none of the material off of Anonymous is stand-out material in my ears.

Their first song, "Sea of Green," begins almost as if it were going to become a Sonic Youth song, but then disappoints when Hoolybob gets further into the song. I gagged on this track.

"He Said," the second track off of the album has an interesting guitar rhythm to it. This unfortunately, does not make a band—at least in most instances. The vocals on the track are lacking in resonance that snares the ear with interest; nor do the lyrics have an appetite that can only be called melancholy monotony.

I'll just skip the third track, "Whirlwind" with this to say about it: too lounge, too generic and too basic. Basic can be good though, but in this case it does not serve the album.

O.K., the fourth track has potent lyrics. It has an acoustic groove sound to it that the previous tracks did not have. You can tell, though, that the vocals have been turned up—a possible bit of bad mixing. That does not detract from the album. The background music is great. It is mellow. It is crisp. It is enjoyable. The name of this track is "Grace and Stride."

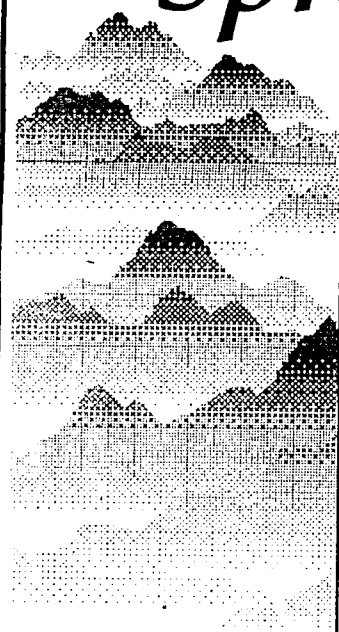

Lets summarize this album by calling it almost generic, but not quite generic enough to warrant the name generic. If you muddled through that last sentence then good—you get the feeling of what this album is like.

I don't want to say that getting through the album was an arduous experience. It was more an experience of audio and music deprivation.
