Delta Sigs bike for dimes

Andrew White
Staff

Delta Sigma Phi will again hold the annual Bike to Boise this weekend. The event will begin on Thursday and end on Saturday. Delta Sigma Phi will donate the funds generated by the philanthropy to the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation.

Assistant Philanthropy Chair Andy Wilper said, "We've had great local support and the guys in the house have really come through." Bike to Boise will conclude at the Statehouse steps in Boise, Idaho.

Delta Sigma Phi plans to raise around $3,000 for the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation. Wilper said local businesses have been cooperative and a great help insuring the success of the Bike to Boise philanthropy.

At the conclusion of the philanthropy Delta Sigma Phi will present the check of the money raised to the March of Dimes at the Statehouse in Boise. Bikers will ride a two-seater tandem bicycle 300 miles. "Whitebird and Horseshoe Bend hills should be a challenge," Wilper said.

University of Washington freshman Sarah Galinato said, "It's really amazing they would take the time and effort to do something like that." Galinato was visiting UI last weekend and heard about the event.

In a letter to UI, Barbara Fawcett, state director of the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation said, "The Delta Sigs ride a tandem bike from Moscow to Boise. They have performed this feat in all kinds of weather and under horrible road conditions. The fraternity members trade-off, with a car of supporters following behind offering encouragement and raising money in the towns they travel through."

Once in Boise, the Delta Sigma Phi alumni will provide a banquet for the participants. "The March of Dimes mission is to prevent birth defects through education, research and advocacy. We currently have a parental education program that is offered free of charge to women in the rural areas and small towns of Idaho. The program will be available to the Moscow area by the fall of 1996," Fawcett said.

Anyone interested in supporting the March of Dimes and Delta Sigma Phi are encouraged to contact Chris Maloney or Andy Wilper at 885-3568.

Park Village inspected for damage

The Park Village Apartments are posted to warn residents of water contamination due to flooding earlier this semester.

New buildings possible to replace flooded apartments

Janet Birdsall
Staff

The future of the Park Village Apartment complex was uncertain as inspectors from the Federal Emergency Management Agency examined the units for damage this week.

"We're looking at the possibility of some new structures in the future," Roger Oetli, director of University Residences, said.

All first floor residents were relocated after February's floods brought about three feet of water into the buildings. Students were moved to Whitman Hall, South Hill apartments, and top floor Park Village units, Oetli said. Eleven residents moved off campus.

"It's been very disruptive academically,"

Oetli said. "We've been very impressed with student response."

Park Village, which was built in 1957, has 64 units. The first floor will remain closed through the rest of the semester, and probably the summer, Mike Sylvester, director of Facilities Management, said.

"The top floors are still OK, but of course they're sitting on some pretty poor structure," Sylvester said. The buildings are safe because they are made of block, he said.

Facilities Management took preliminary safety measures, helped with clean-up and submitted the damages, Sylvester said. Actual damages have been estimated at about $500,000.

"It was on a hit list for eventual demolition anyway," Sylvester said. "Now that the flood has damaged the whole first floor, it's a good time to evaluate (alternatives)."

Raymond Pankopf, assistant director of architecture and engineering, said fourth and fifth-year architecture students were working on developing concepts for new apartments that would replace Park Village Apartments last fall.

The students worked with an architect from Seattle, Wash., who came here once a week, Pankopf said. Since Park Village has flooded, the students' work may be expanded upon and used for new construction.

Some of the design concepts include podium-based housing, with parking on the lower level and two or three living levels above it. This type of housing is found in some urban areas, and the University of Washington uses it, Pankopf said. It eliminates large expanses of parking.

"They wouldn't look or appear anything like Park Village Apartments appear today," Pankopf said. However, they would provide one bedroom or studio apartments for students without children, as Park Village does, he said.

If new buildings are constructed, they will probably be in the same general area as Park Village.

They would probably not be on the same sight, since it has proven unsuitable for housing, Pankopf said. One possible sight is along Line Street between Paradise Creek and Sixth Street.

STD awareness month educates, asks people to love safely

April is national STD awareness month and the 1996 slogan is "In Your Heart, You Know It's Right."

The American Social Health Association is kicking off STD awareness month with the slogan which promotes condom use to help prevent the passing of STD's. ASHA President Peggy Clark said in a prepared statement, "We want people to understand that loving safely is a way for couples to show they care about each other."

ASHA said STD's infect at least 55 million Americans, one in four adults, and 12 million new cases are appearing every year.

"Despite the prevalence of these dangerous infections, there seems to be an alarming gap between public awareness of STD's and the reality of the epidemic," Clark said.

ASHA commissioned a 1995 Gallup Organization study on STD related topics. ASHA said this study revealed that 30 percent of respondents in six countries—France, Italy, Spain, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States—know someone who has had an STD.

One-third of the people polled though could not name an STD other than HIV/AIDS. More than

Autopsies confirm teens were homicide victims

TWIN FALLS, Idaho—Autopsies performed on two teen-agers found shot to death March 30 in a Twin Falls apartment "confirmed what we already knew," Twin Falls County Coroner Gene Turley said.

Walter Jesse James Ellison and Jafra Sumaya, both 19, were murdered. Each died of several small-caliber gunshot wounds, Twin Falls Police Lt. Dennis Chambers said Friday.

Chambers declined to say whether police have found the murder weapon, or whether detectives are closer to identifying a suspect.

"I won't get into that at this point," he said.

The bodies of Sumaya and Ellison were discovered in Sumaya's apartment. The apartment manager in the neighboring unit said he heard what sounded like a party in her apartment at about 5:30 a.m., and another neighbor said she heard gunshots.

Health officials urge testing at university, restaurant

BOISE—A Boise State University student has been preliminarily diagnosed with tuberculosis, prompting health officials to urge classmates, instructors and co-workers to get tested for the disease.

The Boise man is the third Idaho resident to be diagnosed with the rare lung disease this year and the first in Ada County.

The student is enrolled in the College of Technology, is in his 20s and worked as a cashier at an oriental restaurant until he became ill two weeks ago, according to the Central District Health Department.

There is very little risk to students attending classes, or to diners at the Mongolian Barbecue where he worked, said Ruby Hawkins, the department's family health services director.

Fewer than 75 people were closely exposed, including family members, classmates, instructors and co-workers, the department said.

Tuberculosis is not spread by food, but bacteria can be spread when a person with active tuberculosis sneezes, coughs or even sings.

An average of 21.4 cases were reported annually in Idaho for 1985-1994, and 4.3 cases per year in the four counties served by the Central District Health Department: Ada, Elmore, Boise and Valley.

Ricks turns down 2,000 prospective freshman students

REXBURG, Idaho—Ricks College had to send out more than 2,000 letters to would-be students, denying admission for next fall.

Ricks officials said 8,300 students applied to enter Ricks for the fall semester. The two-year college, operated by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, has an enrollment cap of 7,500, although actual enrollment is closer to 8,000.

Steve Davis, assistant admissions director, said of the 8,300 applications, 6,500 were complete and considered for admission as freshmen next fall. Eventually, he said, about 2,200 of the 6,500 applicants will be denied admission.

The last of the letters denying admission went out last week and college officials said they spent the next several days fielding calls and interviews from denied students and their parents.

About 3,500 students were accepted as freshman full-time, daytime students. Others were accepted by agreeing to attend Ricks during the summer.

Davis said the enrollment crunch means it pays to get applications in early.

While the college doesn't want to become an academic elite school, the grade point averages of students continue to grow. Davis said this year, the average grade point average of the 6,500 freshman applicants was 3.36 on a scale of 4.0.

For the last decade, Ricks officials have not specifically recruited new students, instead informing prospects of the tough standards the school has in place for admission, Davis said.

INEL donates its excess computers to Idaho schools

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho—By the end of the school year, more than 500 personal computers no longer needed at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory will be placed in Idaho schools.

The federal nuclear research center signed a five-year commitment in 1993 to make computers available at no cost to schools.

So far, 65 schools in 35 districts have received more than 380 computers. The state Department of Education sets the guidelines and determines eligibility of schools.

Administrators say it's a good use of taxpayer-funded equipment and enables school districts to obtain computers in an era when education budgets are limited.

The computers are intended to support instruction in mathematics, science and technology, and carries out the Department of Energy's goal of supporting math and science education.

Interested schools submit a brief grant proposal, explaining how they plan to use the computers. When a request is filled, it is up to the school to pick up the computers at INEL, or pay to have them shipped.

Freeman leader's daughter says he's being force-fed by feds

BOZEMAN, Mont.—LeRoy Schweitzer, jailed leader of the Freeman who are holed up on a farm outside Jordan, is being force-fed at a federal medical prison in Missouri, his daughter says.

She told the Chronicle she visited her father at the federal penitentiary in Springfield Wednesday and Thursday.

Schweitzer, 57, was one of the Freeman named in a 51-count federal indictment. He and the other Freeman are charged with threatening to kidnap and kill a federal judge, threatening violence against other public officials and issuing fake money.

She accused the FBI of lying about her father eating and drinking on his own.

Schweitzer reportedly began his hunger strike shortly after he and another Freeman were arrested March 25 outside their enclave west of Jordan, and officials said he was moved to Springfield for his own medical safety.

If Schweitzer is being force-fed, it is because federal officials can't allow his physical condition to deteriorate.

Brandi told the Chronicle she and one of her brothers flew to the federal prison but they were not allowed to meet with their father privately.

Nobel Laureate facing sex charges out on bail

FREDERICK, Md.—Dr. Daniel Carleton Gajdusek, the Nobel laureate accused of molesting a teenager, was released from the Frederick County Detention Center after posting $350,000 in secured bond, a corrections officer said.

Gajdusek, a National Institutes of Health scientist, left the facility Saturday at about 7 p.m., said the officer, who requested anonymity.

Gajdusek is charged with four counts of child abuse and two counts of violating a Maryland law prohibiting oral sex from 1987 and 1991 with a boy he brought back from Micronesia.

Gajdusek has denied any wrongdoing, claiming he brought the children to the United States to give them an education.

Authorities are reportedly investigating the dozens of young people he has brought into the country to live with him in the last two decades.

The FBI said its investigation of Gajdusek grew out of a probe of child pornography on the Internet. Agents would not say how the two were related.

The Washington Post reported that the probe began after agents learned that Gajdusek described the sexual habits of men and boys in the countries he visited in professional journals. The journals did not say whether he engaged in sex with them, the newspaper reported.

District Judge W. Milnor Roberts lowered Gajdusek's bond from $1 million to $350,000 Friday after the doctor's lawyer argued that his client was not likely to flee. Defense attorney Mark J. Hulkower said his 72-year-old client returned Thursday from Europe although he knew he the FBI was investigating him.

Angered by comic strip, armed muslims storm Arab Times newspaper

KUWAIT—Five Muslims, one armed with a pistol, stormed the Arab Times newspaper Saturday to protest the publication of a "Hagar the Horrible" comic strip they considered sacrilegious.

One pulled the gun on an editor, a Pakistani Muslim, and chased him around the building and into the industrial Shuwaik area. The editor was not hurt.

An interior Ministry statement said one of the attackers was captured by a worker at the English-language newspaper and the four others were arrested by police after a car chase.

The cartoon showed Hagar on a hill saying: "I pray and pray, but you never answer me." A voice from the clouds answers: "Sorry if you don't get through right away. Keep trying. These days everyone wants to talk to me."

Al-Mujtama magazine, which is published by a group of Sunni Muslims, denounced the Arab Times for publishing the cartoon.

The magazine said the cartoon was "mocking God and communication between humans and their God," and that non-Muslims working in the paper were poking fun at the country's laws and religion.

The newspaper ran an apology Thursday—11 days after publication. It said the "inclusion of the cartoon was inappropriate but unintentional and done without malice."

Rebellion leader says other revolt imminent

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil—The convicted bank robber and kidnaper who led a week-long prison rebellion and escape says another uprising is imminent if inmates aren't treated better.

Leonardo Pareja became a hero of sorts for his role in the uprising, credited with saving the lives of 27 hostages, including judges, journalists and civil servants. His picture appeared on the cover of the country's two largest news weeklies on Saturday.

He is not alone in fearing future problems: One of the hostages, a judicial official, warned Saturday of more revolt if no changes are made at the prison.

The prison unrest in Aparecida de Goiania, 580 miles northwest of Rio, began March 28 when inmates overpowered 27 officials and reporters during a tour of the facility. Designed to hold 450 inmates, it held more than 1,000.

The inmates escaped Wednesday night with guns, cellular phones, $100,000 and hostages as part of a deal that ended the standoff.

There was still confusion over exactly how many inmates escaped in the cars furnished by the government. Some may have fled, unnoticed, in the cars' trunks.

Roadblocks were still up Sunday in five states in the nationwide hunt for any remaining fugitives.

Craig joins group to support salmon recovery

Zachary Smith
Staff

U.S. Senator Larry Craig, R-Idaho, aligned with a bipartisan group from both the House and the Senate last week to urge President Clinton to support policies aimed at promoting the recovery of Idaho's salmon.

A letter to President Clinton, signed by Craig, Sen. Ron Wyden,

D-Ore., Rep. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, and Rep. Elizabeth Furse, D-Ore., expressed the group's desire to compare "the effectiveness of various passage alternatives."

"What we're after is a scientific comparison between barging the smolts and passing them over the spillways," Craig said.

The group wants the National Marine Fisheries Service to take advantage of this year's above-average water year and permit more salmon smolts to remain in the river.

The letter states, "In a wet year like 1996, we believe it is prudent and sensible to give more fish a chance to migrate in the river."

The group believes a more equitable balance between in-river migration and the more extensive practice of barging and trucking the smolts around the dams will allow for a more thorough evaluation of the effectiveness of recovery methods.

"The results will be measured in two or three years when adult salmon return," Craig said.

The requests the group outlines in the letter are the same as those included in Idaho Governor Phil Batt's Idaho policy on salmon recovery. Craig and most of the Idaho delegation support Batt's policy.

Craig said, "Governor Phil Batt's policy for fish recovery offers us the unique opportunity to develop regional unity behind a plan that works." Craig also accepted responsibility of helping to sell Batt's policy to the rest of the Northwest.

The NMFS has been very receptive to Batt's policy. "We were very pleased with the policy because the measures were similar to what we began last year," said Rob Jones, regional spokesperson for NMFS.

Technical management teams have been projecting runoff for this year so as to provide a better recovery strategy. Jones said that seven of the eight major dams on the Snake and Columbia rivers will have spillway facilities after this year to allow for more in-river migration.

Reserve police sponsors 3-on-3 hoops

Alissa Arndt
Staff

The Moscow Police Department Reserve Association is putting together the first annual Moscow/Pullman three-on-three basketball tournament with the help of the University of Idaho and Washington State University Interfraternity Councils and Panhellenic Councils. The tournament is being held to raise funds to supply the reserve officers with uniforms and equipment.

The Reserve Program is a non-profit extension of the Moscow Police Department. The program is allocated only a small amount of money from the city. The reserve officers are responsible for supplying the rest of the needed funds. It costs several hundred dollars to fully equip an officer.

The Reserve Program is a voluntary program and each officer volunteers 20 to 100 hours to the community. Reserve officers give an extra hand when other officers are busy or when there is a situation that requires a great deal of manpower. Reserve officers also supply security for high school and university events. All funds are raised to supply current and future Reserve Academy graduates with equipment necessary to perform their duties.

The tournament is May 4 from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. All entries must be in by April 29. Entry forms and rules can be picked up from the Moscow Police Department or the Campus Sub Station. The fee is $50 for four person teams. Each team is guaranteed three games and a T-shirt. Trophies and prizes are available for the winners of each bracket.

Volcano belches ash miles over Caribbean island

Associated Press

PLYMOUTH, Montserrat—A reawakened volcano sprayed tons of ash miles into the air on Saturday, preventing evacuated residents from retrieving belongings abandoned after an earlier eruption.

Authorities had evacuated about 5,000 residents from the southern third of the small Caribbean island on Wednesday, when an eruption sent ash more than 6,000 feet into the air and super-heated rock and ash began flowing from the crater of the Soufriere Hills volcano.

Saturday's eruption was bigger, creating a billowing gray cloud that rose nearly four miles high, said John Shepherd, a volcano expert sent by the British Geological Survey.

Scientists don't rule out the possibility of a catastrophic eruption, but say a more immediate concern is potentially lethal flows of hot rock and ash that can reach speeds of more than 100 mph.

To date, minor flows have occurred in uninhabited areas. One flow Wednesday came within 500 yards of a home in a farming area on the volcano's southeastern flank, which was evacuated the same day.

The latest eruption, which followed a series of smaller ash clouds, began around 2:50 p.m. and lasted up to 15 minutes. The cloud's top soon disappeared into rain clouds, carried upwards by heat waves from the volcano's crater.

As viewed from about three miles away, the top of the 3,000-foot volcano quickly vanished behind the cloud and wind-borne ash reduced visibility to several hundred yards. What was a sunny day became overcast.

Police Commissioner Frank Hooper ordered officers to temporarily stop issuing passes to residents of Plymouth, the capital, and nearby areas. The passes had allowed people to return to their homes to recover items left behind in Wednesday's hasty evacuation.

Before the new eruption, dozens of Plymouth's 3,000 residents had donned face masks and braved sometimes stinging ash fall to retrieve their belongings.

Most residents outside the evacuation area

A century ago, women worked for their rights

Associated Press
 POCATELLO, Idaho—Editorial comments in Idaho about women's suffrage nearly a century ago amuse Jo Ann Ruckman.

Writers in the Pocatello Tribune veered into an abrupt U-turn on the issue.

Before women were granted the right to vote in Idaho in 1896, the Tribune criticized and made fun of women suffragists, said Ruckman, an Idaho State University history professor who has done extensive research about the women's suffrage movement in Bannock County.

The movement was described in The Tribune as "the reform against nature."

But once women could vote, the paper lavished praise on them for being wise enough to vote correctly, she said.

The Boise Statesman editor also thought women's suffrage was a good idea.

Women's suffrage is often a cornerstone of the celebration of March as Women's History Month.

"But for an awful lot of women, the vote itself wasn't the point," Ruckman said. Voting was really a small part of the women's movement.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union was the major organization to support women's suffrage as a way to accomplish a long list of other social reforms.

"The vote was a way to hurry along other issues they wanted to see," Ruckman said. "They were really very progressive in the 1890s."

Some reforms in Idaho attributed to women's political power were giving women equal property rights, banning child labor, closing saloons on Sunday and prohibiting gambling.

Women's suffrage occurred in western states long before it did in eastern states partially because there were no political establishments to combat, Ruckman said.

Women in eastern states had a much harder time bucking the political establishment, she said.

"There wasn't really a political establishment in Idaho in the 1890s," she said.

A well-known Idaho suffragist was Abigail Scott Duniway, who traveled the Northwest lecturing about the right of women to vote. She moved to Idaho with her family in 1886 to ranch in the Pahsimeroi Valley in Custer County.

She and other women, including Blanche Whitman of Montpelier, eventually helped persuade lawmakers to pass a constitutional amendment allowing women to vote.

Duniway was quite a person, Ruckman said. "She had support of her family and found time to do all these other things."

Duniway published a journal, The New Northwest, to recruit suffragettes and had other businesses during her lifetime.

Duniway was known for her fiery speeches. In addressing the Idaho constitutional convention in 1889, she said, "The freedom-loving spirit of our western men is our proudest boast. Shall we, the women of this border land who have shared alike your trials and your triumphs, shall we not be permitted to go up to the national capital bearing aloft the banner of our freedom?"

Two years after women were voting in Idaho, three women were elected to the state House of Representatives, including Clara Campbell of Boise, Hattie Noble of Idaho City and Mary A. Wright of Rathdrum.

Although women in Idaho had certain rights before their peers nationwide, it was still many decades to come before women could serve on juries or be the executrix of an estate.

Unabomber suspect's trail leads from Montana to California

Associated Press

HELENA, Montana—Federal investigators have placed Unabomber suspect Theodore Kaczynski in Northern California on dates when bombs were mailed from the region, a law enforcement source said Monday.

The last four bombs from the Unabomber were mailed from Northern California, including two postmarked in Sacramento.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, cautioned that investigators were still going through records.

In Sacramento, Burger King manager Mike Singh said he had seen Kaczynski a few times in recent years at the restaurant, which is next to the downtown bus depot.

"He looked like one of those bums who come in in the morning and have a sandwich and cup of coffee and walk out," Singh said.

Frank Hensley, a desk clerk at the nearby Royal Hotel, told The Associated Press he saw Kaczynski in the neighborhood near the bus depot. He said Kaczynski stayed at the hotel two or three times over the past five years, usually in the late spring or summer.

"If it wasn't for all this, I'd be expecting to see him about now," Hensley said, referring to Kaczynski's arrest last week.

Ronald Henry, manager and part-owner of the Royal and several other hotels near the bus station, said FBI agents showed up at the hotels simultaneously on a Saturday morning last month and took registration cards for June 17, 1993, through June 24, 1993.

On June 22, 1993, a geneticist at the University of California at Sacramento was injured by a Unabomber bomb mailed from Sacramento. Another bomb mailed from Sacramento wounded a Yale University computer scientist on June 24, 1993.

A bomb mailed from San Francisco in 1994 killed a New Jersey advertising executive. And a fourth bomb postmarked in Oakland, California, exploded April 24, 1995, killing a timber industry lobbyist in Sacramento.

The source said FBI agents are checking hotels near bus depots in Oakland and San Francisco, where other devices and letters attributed to the Unabomber were mailed.

In Washington Monday, the lawyer who told the FBI of the Kaczynski family's suspicions said they never sought assurances that the government would waive the death penalty.

Kaczynski's mother wasn't told of the suspicions until about two weeks ago, said Tony Bisceglie, lawyer for Kaczynski's brother, David.

"She expressed her sincere belief that Ted could not be the Unabomber, but if it was, he must be stopped," Bisceglie told reporters.

David Kaczynski tipped authorities after noticing his brother's old writings were similar to the Unabomber's anti-technology manifestos, the lawyer said.

"There were similarities in ideology, phraseology and the spelling of certain words," Bisceglie said.

"I think that David is in shock. I think that David thinks that his brother was involved."

He said the family didn't know about the government's $1 million reward.

Investigators building a case against Kaczynski are searching the country for evidence that the reclusive former math professor left his tar-paper shack to mail or leave bombs in other states.

Agents searching the Montana cabin have found evidence directly linking him to one of the bombings, the Los Angeles Times reported, quoting sources who would not provide any specifics.

A federal official told The Associated Press investigators defused a live bomb that was found in the cabin, where they also found bomb-making chemicals and components, and notes on making bombs.

The Los Angeles newspaper said that device not only was completed, but had batteries attached. The newspaper's sources would not say if they had evidence Kaczynski was preparing to deliver the bomb.

Federal prosecutors from California, New Jersey, Montana, Connecticut, Illinois and Utah met in Washington Monday to discuss how to proceed with the case, including choosing a coordinator for the investigation.

Kaczynski, 53, was taken into custody at his cabin near Lincoln, Mont., on April 3 and is being held without bail in Helena. He has been charged in federal court with possession of bomb-making materials.

The charge is intended to keep Kaczynski in custody while investigators build a case against him for the bombings that killed three people and injured 23 in nine states over the past 18 years.

A typewriter found in the cabin appears to be the one the Unabomber used to type the manifesto and letters.

Agents found anti-technology writings in the cabin that could be early drafts of the Unabomber's 35,000-word manifesto, the San Francisco Chronicle reported Monday.

A source close to the case said the writings "echo in style and tone" the treatise published last year by The New York Times and The Washington Post.

The Chicago Tribune, also citing unidentified sources, reported Sunday that agents determined that Kaczynski was in the Chicago area when the first four Unabomber devices were planted or mailed from there in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Boise State, Idaho may have oldest books in the state

Associated Press

POCATELLO, Idaho—In the battle over who has the state's oldest book, Idaho State University may have fallen to third place behind Boise State and the University of Idaho.

Last December, in an Idaho State Journal interview, Gary Domitz, head of special collections at the Idaho State University Library, speculated it might be at the ISU Library.

The book, The Sermons of Maister John Calvin on the Booke of Job, was published in London in 1584. It contains 750 pages of the Protestant religious reformer's sermons and writings.

Tom Trusky, director of the Boise-based Idaho Center of the Book, read the article and had his doubts about the claim.

After some research, he came up with this conclusion: The oldest book in Idaho is at Boise State. And two other books, both older than the ISU book, are at the Idaho Library at Moscow.

The books are classified as "incunabula"—a librarian term for books published before 1500.

The oldest is a 1479 edition of the Historica Scholastica by Petrus Comestor, 12th Century religious historian. It is held by the Special Collections Department at the BSU Library.

During the Middle Ages, the book was considered the most important work of Biblical scholarship. It was required reading for scholars until the 18th Century, said Alan Virta, head of special collections at BSU.

The book was published during an important period of history. Christopher Columbus was 13 years away from making his first voyage to the New World.

The Italian artist Michaelangelo was a 4-year old child. Polish astronomer Copernicus was 6.

The book wound up at BSU after being purchased in 1955 by Ruth McBirney, head librarian at then-Boise Junior College.

"She went over on a personal trip to England and picked up a number of rare books for the library," Virta half of the people in the study said their health care providers spend no time discussing STD's with them.

"We counsel people to become well informed of the risks posed by STD's and to learn how to protect themselves and others from possible infection. Furthermore, we urge couples to share the responsibility of safer sex," Clark said.

ASHA said STD's have a disproportionate impact on women. Because of anatomical differences with men, women are more susceptible to becoming infected with an STD, less likely to experience symptoms than men and are more difficult to diagnose.

Viral STD's, which currently are not curable, have a lifelong impact on the physical and emotional health of the people they affect. ASHA said they estimate 40 million Americans have genital herpes and 40 million Americans have human papillomavirus, which cause genital warts. Currently there are 1 million people living with HIV/AIDS.

Bacterial STD's can be treated and cured, but often are left undetected. Chlamydia has become the most rapidly advancing STD, with 4 million new infections each year. This easy to treat STD goes undetected because 75 percent of cases among women and 25 percent of cases among men show no sympoms. Gonorrhea, also a symptomless infection in many cases, makes up 800,000 new infections annually.

If left untreated Chlamydia and gonorrhea can cause pelvic inflammatory disease, infertility and ectopic, or tubal, pregnancies. Some strains of HPV are associated with cervical cancer.

ASHA operates the National STD Hotline, (800) 227-8922; the National AIDS Hotline, (800) 342-2437; and the National Herpes Hotline, (919) 361-8488. For more information about STD's contact one of these sources, or see the health professionals at Student Health Services.

"We didn't have much at all representing the medieval period or the Renaissance. So she went over to visit some rare books shops, and this was one of the examples she came back with."

The book at one time was owned by Englishman William Blades, a bibliographic historian, who lived until 1890. His bookplate appears inside the front cover. Blades is best known for books he wrote on the early history of book publishing in England.

Nothing is known about other owners of the book prior to Blades. "I wish I knew more about where it has been. It's more than 500 years old, it must have been in the collection of some monastery or ancient university somewhere. It must have a fascinating history," Virta said.

Two other incunabula are found at UI. One is a 1492 edition of the biography of Pope Gregory I, printed in Venice, Italy. The second is a Latin version of the New Testament of The Bible printed in Nuremberg in 1497.

"Those are the earliest books that I know about in the state. There may be others in the hands of private collectors, but I've heard no such word from the sources I have contacted," Trusky said.

An estimated 1,200 people were in shelters in the north, Hooper said. Most of the others were staying with friends or family. Only about 250 people left the island.

It was the third evacuation since the volcano awakened in July after hundreds of years in dormancy.

Half of the 7-by-11-mile island's 12,000 people spent the Christmas and New Year's holidays in crowded government shelters or with relatives on the sparsely populated northern end.

They were allowed to return home in January.

There are also individual competitions for free-throw, three-point and hot shot at $2.50 per person. Trophies will be given to the winners of these competitions.

There are six different brackets for the tournament. These are the men's and women's youth bracket (10 to 13 years), teen bracket (14 to 18 years), college bracket and the not so old/old guys/gals bracket. All brackets beside the youth brackets have different levels of competitiveness. There are also coed brackets and family brackets.

The Reserve Program is still looking for sponsors to help with funds needed for T-shirts, trophies and other expenses incurred putting on the event.

"We're trying to get people to put their names in for sponsors," Corporal Carl Wommack, campus community police officer, said. A donation of $500 gets the sponsor's name on the T-shirts, the name of one of the major courts and their name will be used in all advertising. Courts can be bought and named for $200. President gets high marks in Arkansas poll

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—President Clinton got the highest marks ever among his fellow Arkansans since he took office in 1992 in a recent poll conducted for the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette.

In the poll last weekend, 49 percent of the Arkansans surveyed rated the job Clinton is doing as "excellent" or "good," 28 percent said his job performance is "fair," and 23 percent said his performance is "poor."

Those figures compare to the figures in the newspaper's previous poll, last May, which were 7 percent "excellent," 31 percent "good," 27 percent "fair," and 35 percent "poor."

In the first Democrat-Gazette poll, in May 1993, the figures were 8 percent "excellent," 31 percent "good," 29 percent "fair," 29 percent "poor" and 3 percent undecided.

Mason-Dixon Political/Media Research Inc. of Columbia, Md., conducted the most recent survey for the newspaper. Pollsters interviewed 835 registered voters who participate regularly in state elections. The poll has a margin of error of plus or minus 3.5 percent.

Democratic consultant Sheila Bronfman of the Southern Strategy Group at Little Rock said, "There is a sense that the president has taken the high road while the Republican Congress has been more partisan. He looks like a statesman when compared with the Republican congressmen. He also has been meeting with other heads of state and dealing with foreign policy issues. He just looks presidential these days."

The poll also showed Clinton's usual strength in southeast Arkansas and weakest support in northwest Arkansas. In a breakdown by race, 42 percent of whites rate his performance as "excellent" or "good," compared with 87 percent of blacks. Twenty-seven percent of whites rate his performance as "poor," compared with 2 percent of blacks.

In other areas, the survey showed 66 percent of Arkansans think balancing the budget should be given a higher priority than providing a federal tax cut for individuals. Twenty-five percent think the tax cut should be given a higher priority.

While 58 percent say they favor Republican efforts to shift more federal responsibilities to the states, only 42 percent support GOP proposals to slow Medicare growth. Forty-six percent oppose the Medicare reform efforts.

Thirty-six percent of Arkansas voters say they would like to see more Democrats elected to Congress in 1996, and 32 percent say they would like to see more Republicans elected.

Helping young offenders boils down to work, insight

Associated Press

PRESTON, Idaho—In the basement of the Franklin County Courthouse, a 14-year-old boy with a calculator and a pre-algebra textbook is slowly solving math problems.

Dayton grade school teacher Gregg DeFriez helps him work through the problems.

"You're going from F's to D's; that's progress," DeFriez said.

"It's just my tardies that's given me the F's," said Chris, not his real name. "I come here every Tuesday and Thursday and do my homework. It helps, I guess ... I never did my homework before this."

Chris is on probation for truancy and possession of drug paraphernalia. He works his community service off with his twice-weekly homework sessions and some labor.

Jesse Peterson, Juvenile Services coordinator, said Chris is one of 80 youths on probation in the county.

"These youth are no different than any others. With the same family environment, structure and peer group, they are just as capable of success," Peterson said.

Franklin County's juvenile justice system is less than a year old. The murder of New Plymouth Police Officer Wayne Felder by a 14-year-old in 1994 prompted the Legislature to make changes.

The Idaho Department of Juvenile Corrections was created from the Health and Welfare Department's Juvenile Justice Bureau.

It funneled state funds to counties to reinforce or create juvenile justice programs. Many counties like Franklin lacked one.

"Under the old system, as a judge I had limited options. I could commit a juvenile to Health and Welfare or I could sentence him to probation," said Franklin County Magistrate Lowell Castleton, who helped create the county's juvenile approach.

"You've got different levels: The runaway, truant, dropout, alcohol and tobacco possession, your classic status offenders. These things wouldn't be crimes if the offenders were adults. And then you've got juveniles who commit very adult crimes: violent crimes, drug possession, theft, so forth," Castleton said.

Most first-time offenders go through a diversion program usually with community service, restitution and counseling.

"They go through that and they're done. There's no record. Most don't chose to do it again," Peterson said.

Peterson also said that the program works with parents of troubled kids when it can and against them if it cannot, such as removing parental rights.

"No matter what they're doing, it's not tough enough," Preston Police Chief Scott Shaw said of the program. He has little patience for young offenders.

"The overwhelming number of kids I've met here have been in the system before, and they're awfully street-wise."

But Franklin County has few resources.

"We're as tight as we can get without people screaming that we're too tight," Peterson said. "We only have one bed, so a lockdown for three or four kids at a time is not possible."

So, the front line of juvenile justice in Franklin County comes down to Chris and his homework.

"Maybe it'll be enough for a little spark to get into a few of these kids and they can see that 'I can do this,'" DeFriez said. "Then the program is a success."

Mormons encouraged to boycott Sunday shopping

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY—A Mormon Church authority called on members to boycott Sunday shopping as a way to force communitywide obedience to the fourth commandment God gave to Moses—to keep the Sabbath holy.

"If we will not shop on Sunday, businesses which open on Sunday will have no financial reason to remain open on Sunday. It's really that simple," said Earl C. Tingey, a member of the church's Quorum of the Seventy.

Tingey's admonition came Saturday in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, where more than 10,000 faithful gathered for the 166th Annual General Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

His comments followed a general theme among conference speakers to obey church teachings and follow the counsel of their ecclesiastical leaders.

Speaking during an evening meeting of the church's all-male priesthood, church President Gordon B. Hinckley asked them to "be clean" in the way they talk, dress and live.

"This has become an age of sloppy dress and sloppy manners," the 85-year-old Hinckley said, directing his prepared remarks to teenagers. "I am not so concerned about what you wear as I am that it be clean."

Referring to the Proverb "as a man thinketh, so is he," Hinckley pleaded with youth to refrain from premarital sex.

"Be clean in mind, and then you will have greater control over your bodies," he said.

Hinckley also announced engineers are drafting plans for construction of large, new meeting hall in downtown Salt Lake City capable of holding more than 20,000 people.

He said the traditional meeting place of the faithful, the 7,000-seat Tabernacle on historic Temple Square, has become inadequate.

During the morning session of the conference, Tingey said the secular world sees no conflict in Sunday shopping.

"But we of the church have been counseled and taught by prophets to keep ourselves 'unspotted from the world.' We should not shop on Sunday," he said.

He acknowledged public services, such as fire and police, should operate on Sunday. But he said

Mormons should not patronize stores and cause others to work on the Sabbath.

"We as a community of saints should use our influence...to encourage other citizens to not shop on Sunday," Tingey said.

Boyd K. Packer, acting president of the church's Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, advised church members to avoid being "extreme or fanatical" in matters of health and nutrition.

Packer said church members often wonder if a particular drink or practice violates the Mormon health code, known as the "Word of Wisdom" and found in Mormon scripture.

By clearly prohibiting drinking liquor, coffee and tea and smoking, Packer said the code teaches the general principle of avoiding addictive substances.

"There are many harmful habit forming and addictive things one can drink or chew or inhale or inject which injure both body and spirit which are not mentioned" in the health code, Packer said.

He said the "Word of Wisdom" does not promise perfect health, but helps members keep the body in good condition and the mind "alert to delicate spiritual promptings."

In his remarks to the church's male priesthood, Hinckley called alcohol and illegal drugs "a scourge" that "enslaves and yields no good."

The two-day conference opened on the 166th anniversary of the church's founding on April 6, 1830, in Fayette, N.Y.

James E. Faust, second counselor to Hinckley in the church's governing First Presidency, said the "keys and authority" of God were given to the church's first president, Joseph Smith, and have been passed on to his successors.

Mormons revere the church's president as "prophet, seer and revelator." Hinckley was ordained the church's 15th president a year ago.

Faust said anyone else claiming to receive revelation from God for the church or following someone who does is misguided and risks expulsion.

Celebrate diversity, just do it quickly

On March 14, the Thursday just before break, a class took a field trip. This is not unusual; what is unusual is the treatment this class received from their host.

Most companies, institutions, galleries or whatever are thrilled to know a group of students are visiting for a field trip. They roll out the red carpet and often offer a guide. The Student Union is not one of the aforementioned groups that approves of field trips.

I will say the Student Union is quickly developing an elitist attitude where only "insiders" are welcomed. The Union is a gathering place for university visitors, but the Union's first responsibility ought to be to the students—the student body makes the Student Union. When the Student Union Building dropped the 'building' from its name and became the Student Union, it was reasoned that the building was only a structure, the STUDENTS make up the actual union. Has this been forgotten?

This semester kids have been removed from the Student Union for having skateboards—or so the kids claim—pizza deliver companies have been phoned by Union personnel and asked not to deliver here and now an ENTIRE CLASS has come to me telling me they were asked to leave.

Let me repeat that for emphasis: An entire class was asked to leave the Student Union.

Now let me defend the Student Union as much as I can. The Board of Regents was in town that day, the people running the Student Union were understandably under a great deal of pressure to make sure everything went well for the regents—after all the regents are essentially the final authority on how money is spent on education. Even though we the students are the reason any of them are here.

On the staircase between the first and second floors of the Student Union there is a mural, its caption says "Celebrate Diversity." There are faces of many nationalities and none seem to be festive. The biggest smile any of the faces shows is reminiscent of the smile worn by Mona Lisa. A small knowing smile—not really a festive one.

This is a group of students who will be teachers. There were nine including the instructor. Hardly enough to even notice—and I still think that if it had happened any other time, they wouldn't have been noticed.

The group was discussing whether or not this mural was a celebration of diversity. Then they were told to leave, not asked, told. The reason given was that they represented a fire hazard. Now unless one of these students was in danger of spontaneous combustion this idea does not hold water. A group of 20-something students would probably be the first out of the building in the case of fire.

Who knows, these students might have been able to help the regents if there were a fire. Hopefully the Student Union will become a little more user friendly.

Water everywhere, but it's all toxic

I drink a lot of water. The first column I ever wrote for this paper detailed that fact that I drink a lot of water as well as the fact that I couldn't stomach the sewage-smelling, brown tap water in Moscow. Unfortunately the tap water across the country is going to go the way of Moscow. It will become unpalatable, even toxic, if measures aren't taken to prevent it.

Everything we do impacts the environment. We know this because we are reminded of it every Earth Day and every time we recycle an aluminum can. But every day this global impact increases.

One of the biggest problems facing our nation's environment and water supply is called nonpoint-source pollution. This is the contamination of the water table, lakes and streams by toxins we produce every day.

The oil you see floating in puddles after it rains, the pesticides you use around your home and garden, even the litter lying in the ditch contributes to water contamination.

Even worse culprits: air pollutants from industry, stream damage done by logging, erosion due to road construction, emissions from automobiles and chemicals and sediment from agriculture.

Together these things contribute as much as 80 percent of all water contamination.

Every time it rains, every time the snow melts, every time you flush the toilet or drain the sink or wash the clothes these contaminants are introduced into our water supply.

But what can we do? We certainly can't quit driving, producing, logging, farming and living.

What we can do is learn to live conservatively. We can keep growing in the directions we have begun in recent years.

Science continues to produce safer pesticides and biological controls. Industry uses new and better methods of controlling their waste. Timber harvesting gets more sophisticated and ecologically sound each year.

But more needs to be done. All agricultural methods need to improve, all industry must be required to conform to environmental standards, all timber companies need to practice better logging methods.

But like any effort, it needs to begin at home.

Dispose of automotive and household wastes properly. Things like oil, chemicals and certain paints will not degrade in our lifetimes. Use all pesticides and herbicides in accordance with their labels and try to use natural and biological deterrents; certain plants like marigold and tansy are natural repellents, and insects such as ladybugs and mantids can consume hundreds of harmful pests each day.

Pick up the litter around you, and don't contribute to it. Curtail your automobile use. Walk or use a bicycle when you can. Get rides from friends.

Sexual revolution sweeps campus

MOSCOW, Idaho—Recent discoveries at the University of Idaho Biology Department have launched a campus-wide revival of free love, which scientists believe may sweep the globe by Wednesday.

Students, staff and faculty here have been fervently copulating in coital bliss since Monday morning when university scientists discovered a hybrid lentil that prevents the AIDS virus from infecting humans.

"Yes, Yes, Yes...Oh God, Yes," Botany Professor Nancy Scott said Monday expressing her joy for the groundbreaking discovery. "We've done it, Yes, Yes, YES."

Yeah right...Don't we wish. If we knew who had the cure for AIDS we would have bashed down their door by now and got down to business. I just needed a catchy headline and lead paragraph to see if I could actually get today's restless news consumers to read more than the first line.

Speaking of bashing the door down...In the wake of Good Friday and Easter Sunday, I would like to address the issue of religious canvassers who have recently been tromping around Moscow pounding on doors and handing out their tract.

Does this sound familiar? It's early Saturday morning when, suddenly, you hear a knock at the door.

All your friends are either hung over or sleeping. They know better than to attempt any contact with you before noon anyway. It can only be one thing...Jesus' cronies out to spread the word of God. You peek out the window, expecting to see two pimple-faced young men who look like Hewlett-Packard recruits.

Instead, you see a pudgy old man wearing a blue polyester suit, attended by a bony teenage girl with stringy hair and more freckles than a trout.

Could they be selling Girl Scout Cookies or raffle tickets? Maybe they are looking for their dog. Opening the door out of curiosity, you become flooded with propaganda and words of Armageddon, sin and the resurrection of Christ.

It was the girl who fooled you. What a rotten trick. You rack your brains for a way out, but it's too late. You suffer helplessly, wallowing in the misery these people have cajoled you into.

Suffer no longer. After years of similar experiences, I have compiled a list of handy ways to turn those horrible encounters into endless hours of entertainment.

1. Before you open the door, get into your underwear and rubber boots and pour some ammonia into a coffee cup. Then attempt to engage them in a serious debate, spreading the ammonia fumes by blowing into the cup as if you are cooling it. See how long you can hold them and try to remember not to drink from the cup.

2. Come to the door with a bloody knife and say, "Can you come back in an hour? We're not done with the virgin yet."

3. Ask them if they are from the health department about the hepatitis quarantine. Offer them a sip of your coffee.

4. Tell them the law forbids you that you talk to strangers until the assault case has come to trial. This is

Tribe needs help buying artifacts

As many of you know, the Nez Perce Tribe is undergoing an ambitious fundraising effort to raise over $600,000 to reclaim the Spalding-Allen Collection which is currently owned by the Ohio Historical Society.

You can help. The individual artifacts can be sponsored by organizations, businesses and individuals. The value of most artifacts is out of the financial reach of most individuals. However, COLLECTIVELY, WE MAY BE ABLE TO SPONSOR ONE OF THE WOMEN'S ARTIFACTS.

To see the artifacts, visit this website: <http://www.uidaho.edu/nezperce/>

The Women's Center is initiating a drive to sponsor ONE ARTIFACT. If you would like to be part of the collective sponsorship, send your check (made out to "SPALDING-ALLEN COLLECTION FUND") to the Women's Center by April 12.

We will announce the sum of your contributions at the April 17 noon program, "Reclaiming the Spalding-Allen Collection" presented by Ann McCormack, Nez Perce Tribe arts marketing coordinator, and Annie Miles, head of interpretation for the National Park Service Spalding Park Site.

- The women's artifacts include:
- Hide Dress with Dentalia Shells $25,000
 - Hide Dress $20,000
 - Saddle $6,000
 - Crupper (OUR GOAL) $3,000
 - Woven Hat (one of two) $2,700
 - Woven Hat $2,500

Our goal is to raise enough for the Woman's Crupper, although you can surprise us with your generosity. Please join us in this collective effort to return the collection to the Nez Perce Tribe and our region.

Thank you for your generosity and support.

more effective if you come to the door with a knife or club.

5. Fire an automatic rifle at the ceiling screaming "Praise Allah, Praise Allah."

6. Get their address and tell them you would like to stop by their house sometime to push your beliefs on them. If they ask you what your religion is, tell them you can't say because it might not be legal in this country.

7. Draw a chalk outline of a human body on your walkway and scatter religious pamphlets nearby.

8. When they knock, pick up the phone and call someone you haven't talked to for a while. Then open the door and make gestures as if you'll only be a minute. See how long they stay.

9. Insist that you graduated from high school with them. Recount various escapades you joined them in. Refuse to be dissuaded from this conviction. This is more effective if there is a dramatic difference in your ages.

10. Simply answer the door and in the most polite voice possible say "I'm sorry, but I don't give a damn about Jesus." My mother swears this technique will keep solicitors away for years.

Now that this issue has been addressed we can get back to what ever it was we were doing. Like thinking about lentils and sex.

Good customer service ethics are in short supply on campuses

Colleges and universities are big business and the University of Idaho is no different. As students, we are paying anywhere from $1,620 to $8,240 per year and that is just tuition and fees. This figure does not include housing, living or books. Unfortunately most institutions of higher learning often forget that we are the customers.

In every other industry, there is a rule of economics, a general premise of supply and demand and the idea of customer satisfaction. This last notion, I feel, is lost at the institution level. In what other service related industry could the customer be treated so badly and yet have a waiting list for those who want the abuse, aside from the military?

The position of the university causes great revenue for the town in which it occupies. Few examples come to mind which consistently generate moneys to house, feed and entertain 1,200 to 20,000 people per year. Yet the attitude of most administrations is that of privilege instead of gratitude. Where else can one beg to pay a bill and be greeted with a surly, "Next!" Except for perhaps the DMV.

Some of us have spent some time in the outside world, working retail or in the food industry and we will be the first to tell you that income is directly related to pleasantries and good service. It is beyond me how these institutions of higher learning have convinced us that they can treat us as they please and we still beg to come back for more. It sounds a bit masochistic to me.

Disgruntled Voices

In reality, what do we get for paying our bills on time, going to class and learning the rules of rhetoric and spending at least four years in the process? A piece of paper saying we can read. In America today, unfortunately, that piece of paper will get you a 15 cent pay difference from your GED counterpart. For that we sold our souls to the government in the form of loans and financial aid? So some of us come back again, with the dream of a better job with another piece of paper saying we can read, file and perhaps teach a thing or two.

What is most discouraging is that most professors forget who they are here for. I realize that they have deadlines, a publish or perish situation, but the students often become neglected in the process. On the flip side, professors who consistently put the students first are denied advancement because they don't have time to fulfill all of the bureaucratic red tape the institution has deemed important.

This is like promoting the snippy sales clerk over the truly customer oriented one; it flies in the face of logic. We have all been to places we vow never to return because of the treatment, yet we step on campus and expect to be treated badly, to be reminded of our lower social class because of lack of credentials and to religiously fork over the dough semester in and semester out.

I know most will say, "If you don't like it, get out. You are replaceable, you came to us." But the bottom line is I am paying your salary. A satisfied customer is the best advertisement, and the sooner the colleges and universities figure this out, then perhaps they will begin treating the students, their customers, with a little more respect and reverence. How they have survived this long with the current attitude is beyond me.

ies. Contaminants become concentrated in our vital organs. Areas where water is becoming less pure have higher rates of cancer and other diseases, sometimes as much as three times the normal rate. Not to mention what dirty water does to fish and wildlife.

Every living thing on Earth depends upon water for its survival. The methods that will save our precious natural resources aren't from radical extremist groups, nor are they from people whose only concern is immediacy and profit. The only ones who can make a difference are you and me and the only way we can make a difference is by starting at home, then moving on to clean up our communities, cities, states and nation. Slowly but surely we can improve the world around us. This isn't another half-baked tree hugging idealism. This is essential. Our lives are depending on it.

Letters to the Editor

Pas verite la

Brian Davidson has done his job well, if his job is to write an opinion provoking people to write letters to the editor. He has not done a good job, however, of searching for the truth before "shaming" the entire senate. His column, "Senate takes on media and loses" in the April 5 issue was clearly an opinion. Although, some of the facts Davidson presented in his column were correct, his opinion of what has taken place in the ASUI Senate has incensed me to present another side to the issues.

Perhaps if I had seen Davidson in the ASUI office or attending some senate meetings I would not be as upset. I believe Davidson's opinion is a product of second hand information. The actions of one senator cannot be attributed to the entire senate, and there is more to these issues before the senate than those Davidson has unfairly represented.

First, I always wince when people like Davidson (and Senator Jay Feldman) castigate the student body for being apathetic. It is negative reinforcement, like telling a child he or she is stupid, they may start to believe it. We as student leaders must encourage the student body to express their school spirit in ways they are comfortable and ensure there are many activities of which they can be a part.

Participation in extra-curricular activities is a wonderful part of our education. It is something students should do for themselves, not something they feel obligated to join.

Second, the correct score in the Feldman vs. GEM (not Senate vs. Student Media) debate is 0-1-0. There was an effort to vote down the bill the first night, the GEM referendum lost immediate consideration 5-4-3 (Yea-Nea-Abst.) because of the two-thirds rule.

Third, Fugue is not a part of Student Media. The referendum on the April 24 ballot will ask the student body if they want to add it to ASUI or not. Please read, Corinne Flowers' March 26 column, "Fugue funding issue clouded with hype and confusion," for an excellent summary of the issue.

Contrary to Davidson's opinion and Dennis Sasse's March 26 column, "Representation by ASUI senate spineless at best," the senate has not been expressing knee-jerk reactions, or developing laziness. I spent many hours researching the Fugue issue, talking to my living groups, colleges, other colleges in the state, friends and roommates, random people off the street, and meeting with Fugue editors and advisers. Expanding Fugue is necessary to make it nationally competitive, but I believe Fugue belongs in the English department. The department has chosen not to increase funds, but encouraged Fugue to seek the funds to expand their publication elsewhere. I do not think Student Media is the place to accomplish their goal, as Flowers and other Fugue staffers agree.

So why then did Fugue go to referendum? Each senator will have a different point of view, and just for the record Feldman supported Fugue. I voted for the bill because Fugue is an excellent publication. They deserve a chance to try to market their literary journal to the students in order to drum up the support needed to merit becoming a part of the ASUI. Otherwise, they would have lost in senate. Have no doubt we gave them a second chance, not a death sentence.

Lastly Davidson, you accused Feldman of having a "vendetta," when he is doing exactly what he said he would do if elected. You accuse the senate of avoiding responsibility and "expressing their knee-jerk opinions in a slam-bang fashion." I don't think anyone who attended the hours of debate in open forum would agree with you. You accused the students of being "the most apathetic and reactionary student body this side of the Pecos,"—a self-contradicting, incorrect and dangerous statement.

So Davidson, just exactly whose side are you on anyway?

—Jeff Daniels, ASUI Senator

ASK THE IDAHO DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND GAME
 Question: When will this year's big game rules be available?
 Answer: The 1996 Idaho big game rules booklet will be available at local vendors in late April. However, you will be able to access the electronic version on Fish and Game's Internet home page. New advances in technology have allowed the electronic publishing of the booklets in a format similar to the hard copy. The format, known as Portable Document Format requires a "reader" in addition to your Internet browser. Just like the other add-on helper applications, the reader software is provided free by Adobe Systems to download and use. Information and a direct link to Adobe's home page is provided at Fish and Game's site.
 These on-line rules booklets can be viewed, saved to your own files, or printed out all from the convenience of your home or office. You can find Fish and Game's home page at: <http://www.fishandgame.idaho.gov>

Paddle or die on the Salmon

Jeremy Chase
 Entertainment Editor

I am an outdoorsy entertainment editor.

One of my duties is to be active in the outdoors so I can at least add a little credibility to my title. At the beginning of the semester I told you, the faithful outdoors reader, about my first cross country skiing adventure.

Well, the time has come again to play virgin to another popular outdoor activity. This time however, it's rafting on the mighty Salmon River.

Thanks to some great friends at our local Northwest River Supply store, I was able to test the waters (no pun intended) wearing new equipment and riding a new raft. It was a NRS wannabe model's dream come true.

Accompanying me in this venture were about ten others. All of us hearty outdoors-folk who thrive on the thrill of the rapid, the danger of being "hung-up" and searching for perilous class four-plus waves.

The story began early in the morning with a drive to Riggins, Idaho in my trusty '87 Honda Accord. When we reached our launching point a couple miles beyond Riggins, I was quickly introduced to one of the finer features of rafting: gear/equipment/whatsits to wear during the trip.

When everything was said and worn, my official NRS rafting battle-suit consisted of everything from closest to the skin working out from thermal underwear, a Pink Floyd T-shirt, wet suit, dry suit, gloves, fancy rubber shoes, lifejacket, gloves and helmet. Let's just say I was a cross between a Mighty Morphin Power Ranger and a Navy Seal. I felt more like a bullfrog on steroids.

There were five of us in my raft: myself, Molly, Tina, Casey and our fearless Captain Andy. All of us, with the exception of Andy, were mere whitewater neophytes. Andy instructed us on safety maneuvers and basic rafting lore before we left. Then, once in the raft, the second fine feature of rafting was shown to me by our guide Andy: practical rafting jargon and terminology.

Learning and comprehending rafting jargon is interesting. Especially when there's only about five words in the entire vocabulary. But each word is different according to the volume and amount of stress/sheer panic in the voice. Andy, our beloved captain, was exceptionally fluent in these words (definitions provided as well):

Northwest River Supplies

Forward—Plain and simple. Everyone with oars/paddles in unison to propel the craft forward. I had no quarrel with this command.

Foorward!—Said louder and with more passion, is used if there's a potential for danger. Everyone paddles with more vim and vigor.

OH MY GOD, FOOORWARD!!!—I only heard this once, and it was when Andy was demonstrating his mastery of the rafting tongue. Definition: paddle like hell or die.

Other interesting commands were left, right, and back. These of course, could be said with varying inflection and/or loudness.

The ride itself was full of many interesting things. Between the rapids and paddling, the calm sections of the Salmon let me take in the natural beauty of the area. On either side of me, deer and bighorn sheep munched on vegetation, osprey hovered above the river searching for unsuspecting fish, and minus traffic on the highway, there was a nice quietness and solitude all around.

Then we got to the infamous rapid known as "Campground." Visions of pristine surroundings and calm waters faded quickly.

Fearlessly, Andy warned us of the approaching wave. Like lemmings, we all nodded our heads and muttered "okay." The waters began to swell and swell.

Riding in the boat suddenly became rocky. I found myself bouncing on the ever-threatening Salmon. It was then like a soothing voice, I remembered another command our trusty guide Andy gave us before we set out: "When we go through a wave, keep paddling. Don't just expect to glide through. Attack the wave."

A light bulb went on inside my head. So, just as I was rocked to and fro in the boat, I attacked my aqueous opponent with my yellow paddle—and discovered that there wasn't any water around the raft for me to attack.

I found myself looking down, yes down, at the river. We were elevated above the river after hitting a wave head on. The adrenaline rush was incredible.

But, what goes up must come down. BOOM! I closed my eyes and felt water entering the raft and splashing my face. I also noticed that Casey, forward paddler opposite my side, was in my lap.

We all recovered quickly and had a laugh. It was a great time. Spitting out a little blood due to a split lip, I smiled. We landed shortly after and removed our wet battle-suits. It was an experience that deserved another in the future. I encourage anyone to take the plunge as the weather gets warmer and waters get a little higher.

Just remember those paddling commands...Foorward!

Women's outdoor clinic offered by Idaho Fish and Game

Jerri Lake

Staff

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is sponsoring a special outdoor education course for women. This first clinic is offered in Lewiston and will cover a wide variety of subjects.

These include first aid, survival, shelter building, compass use, map reading, outdoor ethics and Idaho Fish and Game regulations.

Other subjects include shotgun, rifle, pistol, muzzleloader rifle and archery. All subjects covered will be lecture and hands-on field experience.

The clinic is designed for women who want to learn more about the outdoors and possibly get their hunting license. This clinic will be of great value to any woman wanting to learn outdoor skills whether she decides to hunt or not.

Pre-registration for the clinic is required. The registration is on a first come, first reserved basis for only 40 women, ages 18 years and up. A $10 fee will be charged for this clinic. The fee covers lunch and all materials used, such as ammunition and books. Friday, May 3, 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., will be classroom instruction covering the above subjects and more. Saturday, May 4, will be a field day starting at 8 a.m. What was learned in the classroom Friday evening will become hands-on training Saturday.

From 8 a.m. to 12 noon, participants will handle and shoot a .22 rifle, 20 gauge shotgun, .45 caliber muzzleloader rifle, pistol and archery equipment. Training will cover the safe operation and proper handling of firearms, archery, and related equipment.

Lunch furnished by the Fish and Game will be served from 12 noon to 1 p.m. After lunch, participants will be trained in field situations that might be encountered during an outdoor excursion. This information and training are useful for any person who enjoys being in the outdoors, whether it's mountains, desert, plains or your backyard.

Field first aid covers much more than the normal first aid you would encounter around the house. Experience from this clinic can help save your life and possibly others, even in town.

Survival training will cover many different aspects of survival. These include finding food, building fires, shelter building and other basic needs.

The compass class will cover types of compasses, how to read and use a compass, read maps and how to use the two together.

Other classes include outdoor ethics, land owner/sportsman relationships, Idaho Fish and Game regulations, other field experiences and opportunities, and safety tips.

The classes will be taught by volunteer people and instructors that have been in their fields for many years, the Idaho Fish and Game, Army National Guard and the U.S. Air Force. The expertise of all these people will be passed on to the 40 women in this clinic to help them enrich their lives and outdoor experiences.

Also on site will be several commercial vendor displays showing varieties of outdoor clothing and equipment and their use.

This article is one of the notices for the clinic. Other advertising will be out this week.

This first ever women's clinic is the prelude of more to come. Depending on how many show interest in this type of training and clinic, will depend upon how many and how often they will be offered in the future.

If you have an interest in this type of clinic, call soon to ensure your participation in this event.

For pre-registration or more information, call the Idaho Department of Fish and Game at 208-799-5010.

Rock climbing becoming more popular for outdoor enthusiasts

Tricia Francis
Staff

There's nothing like hanging from a rope 50 feet in the air, grateful that you know your knots.

Today, rock climbing is becoming more and more popular. Climbing walls are popular places for kids and adults alike to hang out. New gear can be costly, but some places have gear for rent. Here at the University of Idaho we have a wall, and there are instructional classes available for beginners.

Deanna Higginson is a student and newcomer to the sport. She has climbed at the local walls on campus and in Spokane. She's also gone on many trips to other climbing areas in other states. "The most limiting thing is time," Higginson said.

Locally there are a few different places to climb, with different types of rock. Moscow Mountain has basalt, and a popular place to climb is a large granite boulder called Granite Point. For a farther drive, there is a large climbing park in Spokane near the falls.

Just about anyone can learn to climb. Some physical strength is good, but skill can make all the difference. "I never thought climbing rocks was hard. Techniques are hard to learn and they take practice," Higginson said. Practice at indoor walls such as the one on campus can help with working out different problems.

Still, there is nothing like real rock. "I like climbing because it is not just sheer muscle, it requires mental ability as well as the body. You don't have to be particularly strong, it requires balance and focus," said Chip Hankley, a local climber.

While the challenges for many are personal; climbing can also be social. "The climbing community is pretty laid back, there's not a lot of aggression or competition," Hankley said.

Climbers enjoy taking trips, and many have found that the best way to do that is to form a group and head out to places such as Smith rock in Oregon. "You absolutely meet people and have fun," Higginson said.

Women are taking up the sport in increasing numbers. Many find it appealing because strength is not the most important aspect of climbing. Higginson, who enjoys challenging herself outdoors, finds the individual nature of the sport appealing. "For me, it's about personal challenges; building strength and endurance both mentally and physically," Higginson said.

Hankley, who has been climbing for a number of years, has noticed more women on the rocks. "A lot of women are really good because they don't get bulky, and know how to use their bodies better," Hankley said.

Climbing competitions are fun for a lot of climbers. During the winter, when outdoor climbing is not always possible, indoor climbing and competitions keep climbers in shape for the next season.

Although climbing can be a good time, it can also be dangerous. It is important for any beginner to get proper training, and to climb with an experienced person. "No rock is worth dying for; safety is always number one," Higginson said.

NBA pillages hoop youth

Damon Barkdull

Cradle robbing, kiddie snatching, Big Tournament trasher. Whatever you may call it, this is what the NBA dollar is doing to high school and college basketball.

Upon Georgia Tech guard Stephon Marbury's decision to go pro after his freshmen year, you can't help but be selfish about this recent trend of underclassmen heading to the NBA and the effect it will have on the quality of college basketball that is played on television.

Just think what might have been this year. Would Jerry Stackhouse and Rasheed Wallace have led their North Carolina Tarheels to a National Championship. Maryland quite possibly could have been a Final Four team.

Nope. Instead they're sweating out things in the NBA, granted, they are millions of dollars richer. But what about the memories?

Syracuse's John Wallace certainly created some memories for himself, leading his Orangemen to the NCAA Championship game against Kentucky. Had he left, he would've been drafted in the lower portion of the first round. By staying, he increased his stock and most definitely will be a lottery pick, not to mention the fact that he can brag about being on the second best team in college basketball.

Even so, the experiences must not be enough to keep the kiddies in college. If they had stayed you can only speculate as to what may happen. Advance their skills, improve their draft status and gain some experience - quite possibly.

Anymore, high school talent isn't safe. Last season, when a senior in high school by the name of Kevin Garnett was picked fifth in the first round by the Minnesota Timberwolves, college coaches started panicking.

You can bet that this trend will continue, especially since Garnett has showed he is a legitimate NBA player. So now poor high school students who have reputable basketball talent can flee for the big money in the NBA instead of trying to improve SAT scores and other academic areas.

Tracksters set records

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

If trying to do your best makes you a winner the Idaho men's 4x400 meter relay team must have tried really hard last weekend at the University of Washington Tri-Meet in Seattle.

Garth Chadband, Felix Kamangirira, Jason St. Hill and Tawanda Chiwira combined for a cat-quick 3:09.69 time to win the mile relay. The pace was more than four seconds faster than the second-place UW Husky team and good enough for a new UI school record. The team also took second in the 4x100m relay to UW with a time of 41.15 seconds.

Kamangirira and Chiwira emphasized their need for speed in the sprints as well. Kamangirira took home second in the 100m (10.69) and third in the 200m (21.37) while Chiwira matched the effort, taking second in the 200m (21.16) and third in the 100m (10.78). The 100m times were the best of the season for both UI sprinters and qualified both for the Big Sky Championships May 17-18 in Tempe, Ariz.

The Vandals outclassed the competition in the 400m hurdles, sweeping the top three places. Paul Thompson won the event for Idaho in a time of 51.13 seconds followed by Scott Whalen (51.77) and Fidelis Mutyambizi (54.16).

Senior Scott McCarty won the discus with a toss of 162-foot 5-inches. Other event winners included Chris Kwaramba in the triple jump and Thad Hathaway in the high jump. Kwaramba vaulted 50-foot 2 1/2 inches while Hathaway sprang 6-6 3/4.

Idaho's Frank Bruder stole the show in the steeplechase. Bruder was the top collegiate finisher, earning third place with a time of 8:41.22. The mark was good enough to qualify Bruder for the NCAA Track and Field Championships June 1-4 in Eugene, Ore, and also broke a school record. Bruder finished eighth in the national meet last year in the steeplechase.

Chadband put together a solid performance for Idaho in the 400m. The sophomore from Lange Park, Trinidad, finished second in 48.42 seconds. Other top efforts for the Idaho men included: Oscar Duncan, second in the javelin (214-foot 9-inches), Len Brittner, second in the triple jump (47-4 1/2) and Niels Kruller, second in the long jump (24-1).

On the women's side Tara Gehrke highlighted the parade. The senior picked up second place in the 400m hurdles, finishing the race in a time of 1:03.38 and qualifying for the Big Sky championships as well.

Laura Thompson and Jennifer Gill finished third and fourth for the Vandals in the javelin. Thompson threw the stick 127-11 while Gill's toss was 118-11.

Jackie Blackett snagged a third-place finish in the 100m hurdles for Idaho. Blackett ran to a time of 15.06 seconds.

Brigitta Sera and Sarah Dudley each took home fourth-place efforts.

Sera was fourth in the 1,500m (4:52.63) while Dudley was fourth in the triple jump (35-1).

New Zealander leads Vandal tennis team

Mike Stetson
Staff

For most people the typical college athlete spends a few hours each day on the football field or in the gym, goes to a class or two, if they feel motivated, and then spend most of their free time watching sports or socializing with teammates.

Of course, this opinion of student-athletes does not leave much room for someone like Danny Willman, a 21-year-old tennis star from Auckland, New Zealand, who leads the Vandal men's team through his hard work on the court and his team attitude off the court.

Willman, a sophomore majoring in sports science and psychology, currently holds the number 1 seed for the Vandal men's tennis team. As the top gun for the Vandals, Willman has recorded a record of 20-6, butting heads against the best from across the region and country.

Some of those best include Boise State's top dog, who won the Rolex Invitational Tournament last fall, and who defeated Willman in a close three set match on Friday. Or one of Willman's most memorable opponents, a top 500 player in the world from Oklahoma State, whom Willman disposed of in two sets at a tournament in Irvine, Calif.

While Willman gets to tangle with the opponent's number one player and has fared well, holding a winning record for himself, he continues to focus his efforts toward the team's goal of gaining respect and improving its ranking.

"We're serious, training really hard three to four hours a day, we even have a nutrition specialist to help us," Willman said about the team's drive to succeed.

Idaho's team goal of respect proved a major reason for Willman moving to Idaho to play tennis. After playing a year for San Jacinto, a junior college in Houston, Willman transferred to Moscow to begin working with Vandal coach Greg South.

"Coach South is the best coach I ever had, I never got any coaching before," Willman said.

While the appearance of South helped sway Willman's choice, other factors also helped lead Danny toward the Palouse. Offers to attend Florida State and Alabama tempted him, but a desire to live in a smaller, relaxed environment where he could study and play tennis without worries influenced Willman's final choice.

And like most athletes far from home, Willman's choice to live and learn in Moscow did not come without some hardships. Coming from New Zealand, Danny spends his breaks in the United States due to a lack of money to travel home frequently. In his two years of school, he has traveled home only once, during Christmas of this year, to see his family.

"You grow up a lot, the only downer part is the lack of family contact you have," Willman said about attending school in America.

However, going out on the road does not seem to be a surprise for the Willman family, who have seen all three children head out on their own. Danny's brother lives in Hawaii, where he played tennis for the University of Hawaii and ranked as high as number eight in the Western Athletic Conference. Danny's sister also has traveled the world as a diver and gymnast.

And if you see an athletic trend in the Willman family, you should. Danny's mother was a New Zealand champion swimmer, adding to the families athletic honor roll, and Danny himself spent nine years playing rugby along with tennis.

But it was at the age of 12 when Danny started on the road to Moscow as he began playing tennis, piling up a variety of honors before coming to Idaho. At 16 he won the singles and doubles national championship of New Zealand for his age bracket. He ranked as high as number eight in New Zealand as a singles player before heading for Houston where he picked up the number two ranking in junior college as a singles player and number one in doubles.

Currently, Willman looks to forward Idaho's tennis program through hard work and teamwork. Willman looks to the move to the Big West conference as a big step for Idaho, but feels the young Vandals have learned a lot this season and will continue to improve.

"We've got a solid team, we've had a great start and the potential to get better," Willman said.

As for Willman's own future, he hopes to continue on in tennis, playing the professional circuit for at least three years and hopefully qualify for the Grand Slam events like Wimbledon and the U.S. Open. After that, he may try graduate school and coaching.

For now, he will be the anchor of Idaho's rapidly climbing men's team. It's a role he does not feel uncomfortable with only because he feels his actions and efforts have placed him there, not his attitude.

"Anybody who gives 110 percent and tries hard can inspire people," Willman said.

Idaho will look to another giant killer performance from Willman and some extra inspiration when they head for the Big Sky Championships April 26-28. The Vandals will look to improve on their current ranking of third in the Big Sky in their farewell to the Big Sky. Last year, Idaho finished third in the championship tournament.

Danny Willman showcases a forehand in practice Monday.

Spring gridiron gets underway, as defense shines for Vandals

The potent and experienced Vandal Defense dominated the University of Idaho's first football scrimmage of the spring in the Kibbie Dome.

The Vandal defense held the Idaho offense to a trio of field goals and one short yardage touchdown in the hour and a half scrimmage.

"Obviously it was a defensive day," Idaho coach Chris Tormey said. "We're making some progress on offense. I thought Joel (Thomas) and Pierre (Erick) ran the ball well and when we got some protection we made some nice throws and catches."

The Vandal defense recorded six sacks and recovered two of the offense's five fumbles. Junior defensive end John LaJeunesse of Boise Centennial had a sack and a tipped pass.

Senior transfer Ryan Fien completed six of 12 passes for 66 yards while red-shirt freshman Darick Pope of Post Falls was six of 13 for 55 yards. Neither quarterback threw an interception. Junior running back Joel Thomas, playing full contact for the first time since last September after suffering a season ending foot injury, had 25 yards on nine carries while red-shirt freshman Pierre Erick had 33 yards on six carries.

Despite missing starting punter and kicking contender Justin Spiva, the kicking game was impressive. Troy Scott, who handled the kick-off duties for the Vandals last season, was a perfect three for three in field goals, hitting a pair from 40 yards and one from 29 yards. The punting duties were handled by Tom Gamelin, walk-on Greg DeBolt and junior college wide receiver Deon Price. The trio combined to average nearly 43 yards per kick in seven attempts.

"Our kicking game was really good and our punting wasn't really too bad without Justin in there," Tormey said.

"This is just the starting point, it's only our fourth day of practice. What's important is where we are at the end of spring ball."

The Vandals will scrimmage next Saturday at 10:00 a.m., conduct their third scrimmage on Saturday, April 20 at 11:00 a.m. at Lake City High School in Coeur d'Alene before finishing with the spring game on Friday, April 26 in the Kibbie Dome at 7:00 p.m.

The Vandals are playing with a revamped offense, as it lost eight starters from last seasons team.

Dan Zeamer has been moved from the defensive line over to the offensive side, to strengthen its line.

"Dan is playing very well, he is a great athlete and leader for this team, and he is making the transition very well for us," Tormey said.

Idaho's problems don't stop there, as a handful of Athletes are not participating in spring drills due to academic problems. Robert Scott, who made the transition from quarterback to wide receiver last season, will again see some snaps this spring. Scott has been out due to academics, but will return to practice this week.

"We want what's best for the athletes, and right now what's best for them is getting an education rather than athletics," Tormey said.

"It's a sign of our times. We have a problem in athletics today because of money," said Arizona State coach Bill Freider on ESPN-ET, in reaction to Marbury's decision to go pro after one year of college. "The pros are going to take players that help their teams, so if it means they take them out of high school or one year out of college, they're going to do it."

Yes, a sign of our times. The Learn Nothing for Big Money Era.

After outcry from college institutions, the NBA supposedly tried to set up a system to encourage college athletes to stay in school. It was, in all aspects, a brilliant plan (heavy sarcasm).

The NBA instituted a rookie salary cap, where rookie players, instead of making $8 million a year, could now only make around three million a year. I'll tell you what, I don't care what kind of million it is, a million bucks is a million bucks and most kids are certainly going to run for the money.

Something must be done, but probably won't. The NBA is going to take the best players it can get no matter what kind of image (cradle robbers) it may place on itself.

"It's time for the NCAA, the NABC and the NBA to sit down and look at formulating guidelines regarding players going to the pros early," Purdue coach Gene Keady said on ESPN-ET. "We all have to do a better job educating players...the NBA doesn't want kids to come in and fail."

Surely, Keady has a point. Though, the NBA is all about the owners winning and making a profit, and if that means bringing in a big name college freshmen, so be it.

Just for your information, five underclassmen have already declared going into the NBA draft:

Ronnie Henderson, G, Louisiana State, Stephon Marbury, G, Georgia Tech, Darnell Robinson, C, Arkansas, Samaki Walker, F/C, Louisville and Lorenzen Wright, F/C, Memphis.

And you can already pencil in Georgetown's Allen Iverson and Mississippi State's Dantae Jones as two undergrads who will add themselves to the NBA draft pick list, which must be declared by May 12.

No matter what happens, I will always watch March Madness - even if all the players in the Big Dance are seniors.

Although, the popularity of college hoops, which kicks the NBA atmosphere in the ass, may soon plummet, along with CBS's ratings.

UI Soccer Club splits

The University of Idaho Soccer Club opened the season with a mixture of emotions Sunday, garnering a lopsided win over the Moslem Club, before falling prey to Palouse rival Washington State International.

The Vandals lambasted the Moslem Club 8-0 in the season opener at Guy Wicks Field Sunday afternoon, before losing the scoring magic against WSU and suffering a 4-1 loss.

Against the Moslem Club Steve Williams opened scoring just three minutes into the action on an assist from Dan Young. Mehdi Naderi added a pair of goals in the first half, while Jeff Havermill and Alex Tinajero chipped in scores of their own. Williams had two assists in the half as well.

The UI onslaught continued in half two with scores by Rob Taylor and Havermill.

WSU International took advantage of exhaustion, injuries and an absence of key UI players to knock off the UI Club.

Idaho kicks back into action Sunday against Washington State's club team.

3-on-3 hoop tourney set

UI roots bring Aucker to Vandal football

Byron Jarnagin

Old meets new. Former University of Idaho football player Scott Aucker has transferred from the University of California at Berkeley football program to Idaho to handle the tight end coaching chores.

Aucker was the tight end/special teams coordinator for the Golden Bears before packing his bags for the small town of Moscow. Not a stranger to Idaho or the University of Idaho for that matter, Aucker is from Fruittland, Idaho, and played UI Football from 1981 to 1985 and graduated in the spring of 1986.

"It was really a chance to come back home, and it was a chance to get to work with a lot of great coaches and players, and a chance to work for Coach Tormey," Aucker said. "Being amongst friends and around a familiar place was just too good of an opportunity to pass up."

Aucker comes to Idaho with a large laundry list of previous coaching experiences. He started in 1988 at Washington State and stayed through 1989. From there he took a trip down south to sunny Florida and the University of Miami in 1990 to 1991, then to the University of California at Berkeley from 1992 to 1995. His experience, as far as coaching is concerned, is focused on the positions of tight end, receivers and the offensive line. With the Golden Bears, Aucker dabbed a little in special teams coaching as well.

Being away for a while, Aucker still believes the work ethic and determination amongst players has not changed much.

"A lot of it is still the same as when I was here, I think some of the facilities have gotten a little bit better, but as far as the program is concerned there is still a great enthusiasm amongst the players to work hard," Aucker said. "I believe they still have the desire to be the best just like the team I was a part of."

Coming from a school like Berkeley the most obvious difference to most students would be the size of the school as well as the athletic programs. Aucker said that there is not really a difference in athlete enthusiasm to win, but thinks it more refreshing that there is more of an excitement and passion towards the game of football here in Idaho.

"The size of the school and program really does not matter because it is up to the individual wanting to be a good football player that takes precedence," Aucker said. "It doesn't make that big of a difference if you're at Berkeley, Miami, or Idaho if someone wants to be good they are going to do the things they need to prepare themselves to be successful physically and mentally."

Having been a member of the UI Football Program for five years, Aucker is playing a kind of coach/mentor who has the opportunity to act as a knowledgeable guide along the way for his players and a straight up front coach. He said when Dennis Erickson came in and took over as coach some of the main points that stuck in his mind were to be accountable to your teammates, be responsible, to hold up your end of the bargain on the field as well as off the field, and especially to do what you have to do academically to compete so not to let your team down because they are counting on you. Besides ideas of his own, Aucker wants his coaching to have the same kind of impression on his athletes, believing these ideas are keys to success.

"Academics were important to me, and the purpose of coming to college is to get an education so it should be the top priority on an athlete's mind," Aucker said.

Coming to a program in which Aucker sees familiar faces from his past football experiences at UI has made his transition from Berkeley to Idaho easier.

"Some of the coaches I'm real familiar with and have known previously either having played ball with, coached with or competed against," Aucker said. "There is especially a tight bond between those coaches whom I have played with and spilt blood with, so there really has been an easy transition."

Being just a five-day-old tight end coach last Friday, Aucker's plans and expectations for his players have not quite come full circle. The obvious goal of coaches around the country, and of Aucker, is to win football games, but as far as spring football is concerned, preparation is the key to a rich and plentiful season.

"Right now we are trying to harness and develop the techniques in those who will be playing for us next year," Aucker said. "Another thing is finding out which jobs for positions are open and who is competing for those positions, giving the kids a chance to show us what they can do."

Aucker's experiences at Idaho have attached him sentimentally. He believes Idaho runs a first-rate athletic program, and wants to make the most of his second coming.

PAIN KILLER.

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets—money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pretax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on federal and, in most cases, state and local income taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax-deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

As the nation's largest retirement system, based on assets under management, we offer a wide range of allocation choices — from the TIAA Traditional Annuity, which guarantees principal and interest (backed by the company's claims-paying ability), to TIAA-CREF's diversified variable annuity accounts. And our expenses are very low,* which means more of your money goes toward improving your future financial health.

To find out more, call 1 800 842-2888. We'll send you a complete SRA information kit, plus a free slide calculator that shows you how much SRAs can lower your taxes.
