ASUI Magazine, on-line budget proposed by senate for fall

Janet Birdsall

Staff

A bill providing for a new magazine promoting the ASUI was introduced to the senate Wednesday.

Applications for positions on the magazine are being accepted, even though the senate hasn't voted to approve the bill yet.

"We're already going ahead with hiring the people to produce this magazine," Senator Jay Feldman said. He expects the bill to pass with little opposition.

The magazine would put out its first issue the first week of fall semester, said Travis Quast, who has agreed to oversee its advertising. The second edition would come out in January for spring semester.

Three thousand copies will be published for each edition, Feldman said. The proposed budget has target income equal to expected expenses.

"Fiscal impact is zero," President Brian Kane said.

The magazine would showcase the ASUI, with sections about various ASUI boards, the senate, and elections. It would also have information about student clubs and a calendar of events for the semester.

"It's a good reference guide to everything ASUI is and does," Feldman said.

Feldman also brought up the issue of a possible on-line budget for next fall. It would allow students to voice their opinions on how student funds should be spent.

Each department within ASUI would be listed with its income and expenses, as well as how much it is subsidized by student funds. Students would be able to vote to increase, decrease or eliminate the funds, or leave them as they are.

"It would give a sense of how people want to spend their money," Feldman said. The senators could look at the results to see what their constituents want.

Bills for both the on-line budget and the magazine are now in committee.

In other business, Kane said he would be attending the Pullman City Council meeting to discuss a bike path between UI and Washington State University.

"We currently have $900,000 in federal funding for it and it's approximately a $1.2 million project," Kane said.

Women's Center donates thousands to Nez Perce

Karen Cloud

Staff

The University of Idaho Women's Center donated $7,000 to the Nez Perce Tribe April 17 to purchase Nez Perce artifacts now owned by the Ohio Historical Society.

At the April 17 Women's Center noon program, Reclaiming the Spading-Allen Collection, Diane Miles, head of interpretation for the National Park Service Spalding Park Site, explained how the Ohio Historical Society gained ownership of the artifacts.

Reverend Henry Spalding served as an early Christian missionary to the Nez Perce Tribe. Miles said Spalding bartered the clothing, tools and other items to a friend in Ohio, Dudley Allen. After Allen's death, his family donated the artifacts to Oberlin College. The Ohio

Historical Society obtained the collection in 1942.

The Ohio Historical Society has loaned most of the items to the National Park Service on a yearly basis. In December 1995, an agreement was reached to return the artifacts to the tribe for $608,100 according to a press release.

Ann McCormack, Nez Perce Tribe Arts Marketing Coordinator, said the artifacts are an important part of the tribe's cultural heritage. Many of the designs on the artifacts have spiritual meaning according to McCormack.

The Women's Center organized a fundraising drive to sponsor one of the women's artifacts, a saddle. Women's Center Director Betsy Thomas presented the donations from more than 50 people to Tom Hudson and Pam Palmer of the Heritage Quest Alliance.

The donation was matched by a grant from Redmond Products.

"This means that the $7000 raised by the Women's Center becomes $14,000 with the matching grant," Hudson said.

The Women's Center will continue to collect donations for the Spalding-Allen Collection until June 1. Fund drive organizers can be reached at 885-6616 for more information.

RHA helps those in need

Campus living groups have just wound up their annual pizza drive. The living groups held a two-week contest that ended Friday to see who could order the most pizza from Pizza Pipeline. For every pizza ordered Pizza Pipeline donated 25 cents to the United Way.

This year the living groups managed to raise $120.75 with Beta Theta Pi coming in first. Gault Hall came in second, and there was a tie for third between Snow Hall and Alpha Kappa Lambda. The Beta's receive a 10 pizza party for winning.

"We would like to thank Pizza Pipeline," Joe Swarner of the Residence Hall Association said.

The RHA is also gearing up for a canned food drive. The drive is being held to collect food for the Moscow Food Bank.

The Food Bank, at 618 E. First St., is running short on food and is in need of donations. A table will be set up to take donations in Wallace cafeteria from April 29 through May 17. Residence hall occupants can also use their punch cards to donate food.

Swarner said, "They can use their leftover punches for something more worthwhile than soda." Food can also be taken to the food bank for donation.

Corps continues with collector work while salmon head through

LEWISTON—Idaho fish experts are astonished by the problems at Lower Granite Dam on the Snake River, which could be killing migrating salmon rather than helping them.

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission and the state Water Resource Board on Friday toured the dam where a massive experiment scheduled for completion on April 1 is still under way—while a main pulse of salmon smolts are in the vicinity.

Not only are the region's political leaders united behind a test of spill but fish are heading to sea with an abundance of water pushing them along.

The delays on the surface collector project have led to the spilling of huge amounts of water over Lower Granite and lethal conditions for migrating salmon. Because of the spill, young chinook turning up at Little Goose Dam downstream are showing signs of gas bubble disease.

The collector is a $11.5 million, million-pound steel channel hung from the face of the dam to divert young fish from the turbines. It was approved 15 months ago to see if the dam could be retrofitted.

Ed board goes for in-state fee hikes

POST FALLS, Idaho—The state Board of Education has adopted student fee hikes of up to 10 percent at Idaho's universities and Lewis-Clark State College during the next school year, but raised the prospect of freezing fees next year.

Under proposals adopted unanimously by the board, fees for in-state, full-time undergraduates will increase from $810 to $884 per semester at the University of Idaho and from $739 to $813 per semester at Lewis-Clark, starting this fall.

In-state undergraduate fees will jump from $827 to $897 per semester at Boise State University and from $785 to $863 at Idaho State University.

Board member Thomas Dillon of Caldwell said resident student fees at Idaho's schools are less than in surrounding states and students are willing to pay the proposed increases.

Board member Curtis Eaton of Twin Falls questioned why for the first time in several years the schools are not following the board's guideline of raising fees by the consumer price index plus 2 percent.

Rayburn Barton, board executive director, replied the panel's policy is for the fee hikes to be less than 10 percent.

Interim UI President Thomas Bell said the proposed fee hike would maintain access and quality for students.

Judge refuses to disqualify himself from murder case

BOISE—A 4th District judge who read that John Maynard and Richard Dunn confessed to killing Travis McIntier has been asked to disqualify himself from the case.

Judge Thomas Neville refused. Maynard's attorney, John Adams, on Friday said the alleged confessions in a detective's affidavit would "taint" Neville's decisions about Maynard.

Maynard, 19, and Dunn, 26, told Ada County Detective Ken Smith they threw McIntier, 20, off a cliff at Mores Creek Bridge in November, according to an affidavit filed Wednesday.

A third murder suspect, 21-year-old Shawn Norris, "admitted that he was present and kicked Travis McIntier off the cliff," Smith said.

Dunn is charged with first-degree murder and burglary. Maynard and Norris each face a first-degree murder charge. All three pleaded innocent.

Adams said Neville's knowledge of comments from Dunn and Norris could affect the sentence he might give to Maynard, if the defendant is convicted.

Ada County Deputy Prosecutor Roger Bourne called Adams' request absurd.

Poll: Women favor Democrats, men cling to GOP

NEW YORK—The gender gap between women who tend to vote Democratic and men who tilt Republican is widening, according to a New York Times-CBS poll published Sunday.

When asked how they would vote if Congressional elections were held today, women supported Democrats by a 16-point margin, while men favored Republicans by a 10-point margin.

A pre-election poll in 1994 found that women supported Democrats by only a 3 percent margin, while men favored Republicans by a 7 percent margin.

Even among women who call themselves independents, 49 percent of those polled this year lean toward Democrats, the poll found. Just 31 percent of independent men would vote Democratic in a House race.

Women disapproved of House Speaker Newt Gingrich's job performance two-to-one, while men disapproved far more narrowly.

The survey of 1,257 adults was conducted March 31-April 2. It had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Homosexual sin, ordination come to forefront at national church conferences

DENVER—As delegates to a conference of the second-largest U.S. Protestant church enter the convention center, gay Christians hold doors open for them—symbolic acts for the policy they want the church to adopt toward homosexuality.

When they get up in the morning, the 1,000 or so delegates to the policy-making body of the church are invited to hear a more traditional perspective at a free breakfast offered by the conservative Good News movement.

Homosexuality once again is at the forefront of the agenda for the 8.5 million-member church's quadrennial meeting, just as the issue will dominate the July meeting of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Albuquerque—and just as it's dominated nearly every national gathering in the last generation of the Episcopal Church and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America.

Both sides in the debate over whether homosexuality is sinful and whether active homosexuals can be ordained already are prepared to fight into the year 2000 and beyond.

The United Church of Christ is the only major Protestant denomination to permit the ordination of homosexuals. Opinion polls show a majority of people in the pews oppose ordination of homosexuals.

Yeltsin teases Clinton about buying bread

MOSCOW, Russia—By Sunday morning Boris Yeltsin was treating Bill Clinton like an old friend and ribbing the American president about how he was spending his days in Moscow.

Clinton, who had popped into a Russian bakery the day before and picked up a loaf, burst into laughter. He seemed somewhat surprised that Yeltsin knew what he had done during a break in the eight-nation nuclear summit, the ITAR-TASS news agency reported.

On the popular Russian television program Kukli, or Puppets, a spoof of the weekend summit started with Clinton's plane being shot down by the Russian military as it approached Moscow on Friday.

The Clinton puppet, wearing an aviator cap and clutching his parachute, was met by puppets of Yeltsin and his rivals in the presidential campaign.

Clinton tells Yeltsin that Russia's nuclear power plants are in poor shape and complains that uranium and plutonium are being stolen.

The skit ends with Communist candidate Gennady Zyuganov presenting the American president with a present—a chunk of plutonium, which Yeltsin proceeds to eat.

Kashmiri rebels claim responsibility for blast in New Delhi

NEW DELHI—Separatist rebel groups claimed responsibility Sunday for a bomb that demolished a low-budget hotel in the Indian capital, killing at least 17 people, including eight foreign tourists.

The joint claim by two small separatist groups from Kashmir and the neighboring state of Punjab came in a written statement in Srinagar, the center of a six-year war for Kashmir's independence from India.

The blast came a week before voting begins for India's general election, which rebel groups have vowed to disrupt. Balloting will be held in Kashmir for the first time since the rebellion erupted in 1989.

More than 12,000 people have been killed in the rebellion in Kashmir, the only Muslim-populated state in mainly Hindu India.

It also was signed by the Khalistan Liberation Forum, one of the few groups left over from a decade-long rebellion by Sikhs seeking independence in Punjab.

Career Services holds workshops

UI Career Services is offering two workshops this week starting today at 2:30 p.m. with a workshop titled "Preparing for the Interview." On Thursday, the Career Services will be offering a workshop titled "The Off-Campus Job Search," which will be held at 3:30 p.m.

All workshops are free but pre-registration is requested. For more information, visit the Career Services Center or call 885-6121.

Boise group to offer workshop

Jennifer Eng
Staff

The Mountain States Group Inc. in Boise is offering a respite workshop for people who would like to volunteer to work with disabled children.

Respite care is described by MSG as "planned or emergency care provided to a child or teen with a disability to provide temporary relief to the family from their daily care giving responsibilities."

The workshop is called, "How do you spell relief?" and deals with training people to care for disabled children. After the workshop the names of the participants are put on a list for families in need of this service to utilize.

Marilyn Sword said this respite training workshop is geared to help families find temporary care for their children and fill a void because these care givers are so hard to find.

This training isn't expensive and participants won't have to drive very far to attend. In fact the seven-hour workshop is free and sessions will be held close-by.

This weekend a training session will be held in Coeur d'Alene. Throughout May workshops will be offered all over northern Idaho in Lewiston, Grangeville, Orofino and the Kellogg/Wallace area.

"Our intent was to make it available and open to anybody who is interested," Sword said.

Sword said they have held three of these sessions so far and received positive feedback from all of them. It's not just a lecture but provides important hands-on training and a 70 page manual to help in real life situations.

The workshop is for anybody wanting to help or gain experience with disabled children. Sword said no experience is necessary.

Even though the program is volunteer based, Sword said, "There is a reimbursement level up to $2.50 an hour. Often the family adds to that as well."

Sword said the reimbursement isn't much, but the experience gained is tremendous. This workshop gives people experience in a field they might not have been in before.

The workshop has a practical taste. Sword encourages young people going into special education, education or physical therapy to participate. Not only does the training session provide practical hands on knowledge, but can also be a resume booster.

Those people who would like to register for the workshop should call Jennifer Olson or Karen Durst at 885-3588.

Sight conservation group to raise money

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Members of the local Lions Sight Conservation Foundation will be collecting donations for their 27th Annual Lions White Cane Days. White Cane Days will be held May 3-4 in Moscow with money going to sight conservation and restoration.

Wayne McProud, president of the Moscow Lions Club said, "We're trying to help people improve their vision."

Money raised from White Cane Days will go to helping people who have limited to no vision restore and conserve some of their eyesight.

The Lions Sight Conservation Foundation said the money raised goes to the Lions Eye Bank, low vision clinics in Seattle, Spokane and Vancouver, Wash., the Lions Vision Library, cornea transplants, research and vision training.

Marjorie Stone of the Lions Sight Conservation Foundation said since the foundation began White Cane Days 27 years ago, they have raised over $5,000,000.

Since 1969, the Lions Eye Bank in Seattle has performed over 11,000 cornea transplants with 800 last year. In 1995, 88 percent of the money raised went directly to fund programs for people with low or no vision.

"We really have to say thank you to the community because they really support what we do," Stone said.

The Moscow Lions Club will have collection sites at Walmart and Rosauers. McProud said the local group is hoping to meet their goal of $2,500 for the fund. The foundations goal for this year is $300,000.

The Lions Sight Conservation Foundation offers other services such as recycling glasses, and helping people with eye exams. The Lions help people locally and internationally.

"We offer a whole range of activities to help improve sights locally and world wide," McProud said.

The foundation raises money every year to travel to third world nations to help with eye exams, glasses and other vision needs. The group also works closely with the University of Washington medical school with research and funding on sight conservation projects.

The foundation said even though 42,000 corneal transplants will be performed this year, 3,500 people will be waiting for transplants. Nearly 100 people at any given time in Washington and northern Idaho are waiting for a donor.

Still the group cites a lack of donors for the program. Even though they lack donors the foundation has reduced the waiting period for transplants from four to six months down to three to four weeks.

Anybody can become a donor for cornea transplants by indicating before their death the wish to do so. The Lions said people can indicate they wish to be a donor by telling family, signing a donor card or when people renew their drivers licenses they can make their wishes known on their new license.

If you wish to donate money on May 3-4, but will not be able to make it to one of the collection sites the Lions ask you to contact them at 1-800-847-5786.

Computer Services pulls plug on Internet abuses

Christopher Clancy
Staff

Widespread abuse of e-mail at University of Idaho labs has prompted Computer Services to pull the plug on violators after the department received several complaints from people receiving "undesirable" mail.

Computer Services disconnected the mail and post options on Netscape after receiving reports of anonymous hate mail and harassment originating in campus computer labs, Assistant Director of Computer Services Kari Dickinson said.

Another problem affecting Netscape Mail occurred when anonymous users sent mail using another person's address and name to pose as someone else, Dickinson said.

The problem in the past has been that users in the lab do not have to log in to use the computers. At present, anyone can sit down and use lab computers to access the Internet, Dickinson said.

"It's completely anonymous. We know which computer is sending the mail and when, but we don't have a person attached to it. There's no owner," Dickinson said.

While UNIX mail services such as Pine and Pegasus Mail that require users to identify themselves by logging in, won't be affected by the action, mail can no longer be sent anonymously through Personal Pages or any other Internet sites.

"It was really the only way that we could guarantee that it would stop," Dickinson said.

One unexpected side effect of the action is lab users inability to post to newsgroups via Netscape, making "links" to those groups unusable in the labs. Groups can still be viewed via Netscape, Dickinson said, but posting will now have to be done through UNIX accounts, using the "tin" or "nnr" commands.

Off-campus Netscape users will be unaffected by the changes since they are required to log in to "SLIP" or "PPP" accounts that can be used to trace e-mail.

Yet another problem cropping up in the labs is pornography. Because of the anonymous environment of the labs, some people are using UI computers to access Internet pornography. Several universities have reported a growing number of people accessing pornography on the web—UI is no exception, said Dickinson. "It is a real problem. A lot of labs aren't monitored," she said. "It's happening in some labs more than others."

"It gets complicated as to what is or what isn't pornography," since

Peres says there are too many would-be peacemakers

Associated Press

JERUSALEM—Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres criticized on Sunday the mushrooming number of would-be Middle East peacemakers and said only the United States was capable of working out a cease-fire in southern Lebanon.

"It cannot be done from many channels," Peres said as American, Russian and European diplomats crisscrossed the region pursuing their own proposals to end the fighting between Israel and Shiite Hezbollah extremists.

Clearly preferring American mediation over the others, Peres said, "If there will be more than one channel there will be total confusion."

The Israeli leader, the target of rising world criticism for the Israeli bombardment of southern Lebanon but supported unwaveringly by the Clinton administration—met twice with Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

Christopher then flew to Damascus for another meeting Monday with Syrian President Hafez Assad. Five photographs of the Syrian leader's previous sessions with Christopher and with the foreign ministers of France, Italy, Russia and Iran appeared on the front pages of all the government-controlled Arabic language newspapers.

A U.S. official grumbled, "Assad's meeting with everyone. He's dealing with us."

However, Christopher still has not determined what Hezbollah's terms are for a cease-fire. "We don't have a clear answer," said another U.S. official.

At a minimum, Hezbollah wants to force Israel to withdraw its troops from a security enclave in southern Lebanon and Peres is agreeable if the terms are right.

But, the official said, a pullout can be part only of an overall settlement between Israel and both Syria and Lebanon. Those talks were suspended last month and have not been resumed.

The two officials spoke to reporters traveling with Christopher on grounds they would not be identified.

Defending the assault on Hezbollah positions in southern Lebanon, Peres said, "It's a matter of self-defense." More than 100 Lebanese civilians have been killed in Israel's Operation Grapes of Wrath.

Christopher's mediation is aimed at a cease-fire and laying the groundwork for an agreement to replace and strengthen the accord he worked out in 1993 that was supposed to spare civilians from attack.

"Lots of ideas are being handed back and forth," said Nicholas Burns, the State Department spokesman.

At this point, Christopher is shuttling between Peres in Jerusalem and Assad in Damascus. He intends to meet also with Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri of Lebanon, possibly by going to Beirut.

Peres made it clear that while Russian and European diplomats were welcome in Israel, only the United States, in his view, had the authority to mediate a solution.

"We cannot have three agreements on the same subject," he said.

Storm drain system can pollute river

Associated Press
BOISE—After school and on weekends, Tyler Gallegos and four of his friends spray-paint messages on city sidewalks.

The authorities don't mind; they're providing the Centennial High School students with the neon-green paint.

Their handiwork is simple—the outline of a fish and the message, "Dump no waste. Drains to river."

A new federal study shows that the Boise River could use some help from citizens like Gallegos. Every year, five city storm pipes pollute the river with about five dump trucks full of sediment and enough nitrogen and phosphorus to fill 800 10-pound bags of lawn fertilizer.

Storm-water pollution isn't the river's biggest problem. But unlike more serious pollution from farms, industry and construction sites, it is a problem that citizens have the power to correct.

"Our river is really vulnerable," Gallegos said. "Someone's car could be parked right there, just dripping a little oil and antifreeze, and it's going to get right into our water."

The answer is as simple as disposing properly of oil, paint and other household chemicals. Washing the car somewhere that doesn't drain soap into a storm sewer. Keeping soil out of the street after planting the new garden.

But changing the habits of tens of thousands of people is far more difficult than cracking down on a dirty factory.

"It's a different beast we're fighting now," said Joe Wallace, regional storm-water coordinator in Seattle for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. "We used to think we were after this evil polluter. Now we're finding that polluter is us."

At stake in Boise is the health of a river that is still pristine by national standards, giving area residents the rare opportunity to raft, fly fish, even swim on a tree-lined waterway flowing smack through a city.

But Boise has more to lose than a nice walk in the park: The river is classified now as "water quality limited," a federal designation that, if not improved, could lead to stringent controls on industry and hurt the region's ability to attract new jobs.

Left alone, the problem would worsen. Ada County's population has increased by 28 percent since 1990. More people bring more roads, more parking lots and more suburban housing tracts, all of which send pollution into storm sewers.

Pressed by the federal findings issued under the Clean Water Act, a group of environmentalists, city officials, farmers and corporate leaders is seeking to cut pollutants that find their way into the river.

From Star to the Snake River, agricultural pollutants, like sediments and nutrients, are the major concerns. Storm-water runoff is a problem in the area between Star and Lucky Peak Dam, where the major concerns are sediments, oils and grease.

Sediments make river water murky and bury gravel that provides homes for insects needed by fish. Nitrogen and phosphorus are nutrients that can create floating mats of green algae on pools in the lower Boise River.

The Boise River is among hundreds across the country polluted by runoff. EPA reports that 38 states consider urban runoff a major cause of water pollution.

That's why the agency in 1992 ruled that all cities with a population over 100,000 submit a plan showing how they plan to control runoff from urban streets.

The Boise program, which must be in place by the end of 1997, will include construction of sand traps and other devices to filter out pollutants before they reach the river.

Just as important is the public education drive—including the warning messages on sidewalks near sewer grates. Many people don't realize what Gallegos' stencils are telling them: Storm sewers do not pass through water-treatment plants.

The storm grates on 8th Street downtown feed into a 4-foot concrete pipe that flows into the Boise River just west of the 9th Street Bridge. A look at the river bottom nearby shows that many people aren't careful about what they leave on city streets.

Twisted aluminum cans, cigarette butts, tattered plastic bags and a ponytail holder cover piles of sand swept out through the pipe.

"I wouldn't want to swim right there," said Joan Meitl, storm-water program coordinator for Boise's public works department.

All the pollutants measured from the five storm pipes represent only a fraction—about 4 percent—of the total urban area that drains into the Boise River. The Boise and Garden City areas are drained by a total of 25 storm pipes.

The end result is that water in the Boise River becomes dirtier the further it travels the 50 miles from Lucky Peak to the Snake River.

THE NEW VANDAL ID CARDS ARE HERE!

Who needs the new Vandal ID Card?
 All UI students who are returning for the fall 1996 term need to get the new Vandal ID Card.

When can I get my new Vandal ID Card?

Week	Last Name
April 8 - 12	A - D
April 15 - 19	E - I
April 22 - 26	J - M
April 29 - May 3	N - S
May 6 - 10	T - Z

Where can I get my new Vandal ID Card?

Get your new Vandal ID Card at the Vandal Card Office in Wallace Complex or at the SUB Vandal Card Office in the Student Union Building. Our office hours are 8:00am to 4:30pm.

What do I need to bring?

Bring your old Vandal ID Card with you to exchange for your new Vandal ID Card. You will be charged the regular lost card fee for your new card if you do not turn in your old card. If you do not have your old card for identification, please bring your driver's license or passport with you.

How can I help keep waiting lines short?

Please come to get your new Vandal ID Card according to the above schedule. Adherence to the schedule will help minimize the time it takes to produce your new card.

Legislature gutted program which investigated Idaho Falls drug treatment center

Associated Press

BOISE—An Idaho Falls drug treatment center left patients without food, hired patients to work as staff and may have had drugs stolen because they were not locked up, state Health and Welfare officials say. But the Ashton Memorial Chemical Dependency Unit complained to an Idaho lawmaker that the investigation amounted to harassment. That led to the Legislature gutting the program responsible for investigating the facility.

Records of the investigation were obtained by The Idaho Statesman through the state Open Records Law. They show Health and Welfare officials raised concerns about Ashton Memorial in 1994 and 1995.

Included was that the center failed to keep staff on duty around the clock in November and December 1994, when it was experiencing heavy employee turnover. An audit by Myers and Stauffer of Boise also found that 24-hour supervision was not provided at times during 1993, 1994 and 1995.

Fewer than 17 percent of the staff members met minimum training qualifications required by Health and Welfare, the audit found.

Some people undergoing treatment were hired to counsel other patients, the audit said, identifying one person who was billed for treatment at the same time he worked at Ashton Memorial.

In May and June of 1995, Health and Welfare investigators found Ashton Memorial had been storing medication and supplies in a storage cabinet previously used as a wardrobe at State Hospital South at Blackfoot. As a result, some patients may have stolen drugs and syringes before being discharged.

Investigators also said patients and staff members purchased groceries on their own because Ashton Memorial failed to provide adequate supplies.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, Ashton Memorial will receive $530,666 in taxpayers' money.

Ashton Memorial Board Chairman Gene Eyraud of Island Park Friday said the center had met state standards.

"We have a very high quality program. That any allegations would indicate otherwise are not correct."

Rep. Lynn Loosli, R-Ashton, who led the effort to cut the Health and Welfare program, said he had never before heard the agency's specific allegations against Ashton Memorial.

"I would have to know more about it before I changed my view, but those kinds of things cause me concerns, I'll say that," he said.

At the urging of Ashton Memorial, Loosli persuaded lawmakers to cut $241,000 from Health and Welfare's regional substance abuse coordinator program. So, the state will eliminate its seven regional substance abuse coordinators and replace them with a two-person staff based in Boise.

The coordinators monitored private treatment contractors who accept state patients. Those centers receive about $6.5 million in state and federal funds.

Ashton Memorial's license was downgraded to provisional status in February 1995 after the investigation. The license was restored to normal status in January. It expires in June, when the state could decide to renew it or take its business elsewhere.

Huge investigation uncovers no crimes at state agency

Associated Press
BOISE—Gov. Phil Batt has dodged a bullet.

There's no scandal brewing in the Department of Correction, or at least that's the conclusion reached after a huge, six-month investigation centered on former state prison guard John Pribble.

Pribble is serving up to 10 years in prison in Oregon after admitting that while working at Idaho prison facilities, he had sexual contact or sexual intercourse with four female prisoners.

It's a felony for a prison worker to have sex with an inmate.

Batt's problem was persistent rumors that the department did little about early reports of Pribble fondling or making sexual remarks about female prisoners, giving it what Batt calls "a cursory review."

There also were indications that important documents involving Pribble's crimes were deliberately destroyed.

Last August, the governor ordered an independent investigation.

No one has an estimate on the cost of the inquiry, but it must have been expensive. It took six months, involved five agents of the Special Investigations Unit of the Department of Law Enforcement, 240 preliminary interviews and 50 follow-up interrogations and visits to all nine correctional facilities operated by the state.

Despite all that, there's little indication of any scandal or cover-up within the department.

Even a separate review by the staff of Ada County Prosecutor Greg Bower concluded there was no evidence to support criminal charges against anybody and there was no sign that official state documents had been destroyed.

The charges admitted by Pribble covered several months ending in mid-1994 during the final months of the administration of Gov. Cecil Andrus. Batt, concerned about the image of his administration, has stressed several times over the past week that the problems didn't happen while he was governor.

He said Corrections Director James Spalding, who has been on the job since the start of 1994, took over a department "with the kind of climate that allowed this criminal behavior to occur."

Batt was saying the department apparently didn't take seriously enough complaints from female inmates and others about Pribble. The investigative report concluded that if those early complaints had been resolved, it's possible the later, more serious violations might not have occurred.

The state is paying dearly for Pribble's crimes. So far, it has paid out $765,000 to settle claims filed by female inmates, with one now out of prison receiving $210,000.

the definition of pornography is such a gray area, Dickinson said.

The University of Idaho Computer Use Policy states, "Conduct that creates a disturbance to other users is prohibited," including "printing or displaying materials that are considered unsuitable for public display," Dickinson said. "It's a tricky issue. Legally we can break the law no matter what we do. It isn't as black and white as it seems."

In the future, Dickinson said, Computer Services could decide to make all lab computers inaccessible without a password. For the time being at least, Dickinson said she hopes posting the "use policy" to the UI web page and in labs will help.

Defense says alterations require new trial

Associated Press
MOSCOW—The shirt JoAnn Grace Romero was wearing the night she was killed was critical to her boyfriend's life prison sentence.

But after the first murder trial for William Gale Hagedorn of Latah County ended in a hung jury, and before a second one produced a conviction, Romero's blood-stained, bullet-holed, stitched, ripped and cut shirt was tampered with by investigators and prosecutors, defense attorneys say.

"We can't speculate as to what they did," attorney Robert Tunnicliff told the Idaho Court of Appeals Friday. "(But) there were serious alterations."

Revelations a second bullet fired the night Romero died had lodged in the floor of the trailer Romero and Hagedorn shared led investigators back to her shirt.

Second District Judge John Bengtson found Hagedorn guilty of second-degree murder for the October 1993 shooting. He was sent to prison for life, with a minimum sentence of 30 years.

Expert witnesses testified at the second trial that four holes in the shirt were made by two bullets, clouding Hagedorn's contention the shooting was an accident.

His attorneys, who appealed the conviction, suggest the second bullet swung sympathy from Hagedorn and led to a conviction of second-degree murder instead of manslaughter.

They said the shirt, without their knowledge or approval, was sent to crime labs and a huge hole was cut from the back for analysis.

Attorney Michael Henegen told the appellate court Latah County Deputy Prosecutor Robin Eckmann hand-stitched pieces of the shirt together, ostensibly to return it to its natural state.

Deputy Attorney General Michael Henderson dismissed all of Hagedorn's contentions.

"The shirt had been altered from its original condition by the EMTs during their efforts to save JoAnn's life," Henderson wrote in support of his argument.

Hey you whiner, vote tomorrow

What makes a whiner?

I have written a few of the obligatory "please vote" opinions during my time at the Argonaut, my conclusion after having done that is, you don't give a damn how your money is being spent, you don't care what happens and you don't want to be involved.

Another semester has passed, seemingly in the blink of an eye and the ASUI is electing a new batch of senators—seven to be exact. More than half the senate is turning over. The ASUI elections are Wednesday and this time around do what you want, as a matter of fact I hope you don't vote, that way I will determine who governs ASUI.

A student government where a few students pull the strings would be perfect. A few friends and me will vote, here are some ideas OUR candidate will espouse;

A scholarship for everyone who votes, especially me.

Complete destruction of Parking Services, we will dance on the charred ashes that was the main office.

More activities during dead-week, that is when everyone has free time.

ASUI funds would be spent to send Senator Feldman to Hair Etc. for a two-bit shave and a haircut.

Computer labs would be used for games first and a Doom marathon would be held in perpetuity.

Entrance to university events would have a two drink minimum.

No Friday classes.

Duck blinds and salt licks in the arboretum.

No major requirements could be scheduled before noon.

University residences administrators would be required to actually stay in the slums they rent out.

The Kibbie Dome would be painted to look like a giant Budweiser can (if the Vandal card office can put the AT&T logo on Vandal Cards, Bud should be/have been allowed to paint the dome.)

Quite frankly, it is hard to take the voice of the student body seriously when less than 10 percent of the students vote. And elected ASUI officials know that.

It is pretty simple, if you don't vote, don't whine.

There are some real changes that can be made in the way student government operates.

Did you know:

There will no longer be a certified public nuisance on the senate (unless we elect a new one).

The student body will decide whether or not they wish to spend student fees to support Fugue.

There will be a faculty council representative elected who will help the faculty learn what students want and need from their professors.

But hey, what do you care?

If you ever complain without having made the effort to vote—you're a whiner and my whims will reign.

THE WAY TO STOP TABLOID TELEVISION

Tabloid TV goes way too far

I'm a good citizen, I try to catch up on current events, maybe get some insight into politics and other world problems. So I turn on what's supposed to be the local nightly news. Only it's the Ricki Oprah Geraldo show. Sure, the regular anchorpersons are there, and the set is the same as the Q-6 newsroom, but the dialogue is straight out of tabloid TV.

More bomb building materials found in the Unabomber's cabin. Hmm...where does he store all that stuff in a 10x12 cabin? I've lived in rooms that small before, (thank you university residences) and let me tell you, there's hardly room for the mice and cockroaches, much less the equipment it would take to blow up the nasty woman who lived down the hall from me. I think that there's an agent standing behind the shack shoving typewriters and diesel fuel through the window. I think the FBI is trying to look good on this one after their big FUBAR at Ruby Ridge.

Am I supposed to care about the dating life of Ted Kaczynski? Especially when we're talking about a woman he took out twice, a hundred or so years ago, and nothing naughty even happened. Whoop-de-doo.

The next night I get to hear about his haircut. The last time I heard about a haircut was President Clinton on Airforce One. I guess Ted-o is more important than we all realize. Especially since the beautician smuggled out some of his hair to tie flies with. Everyone in Montana fly fishes. You know what they say, "Monatana a River runs it." The hair dresser is going to tie a big fly and call it "The Bomber." I'd say only in Montana, but you know this goes far beyond the northwest's regional absurdities.

Am I supposed to care which bookstores Kaczynski frequented? If people told the local news what kind of subversive literature I browsed through at the mall I'd probably gain national fame too.

On Thursday night Ted was an environmentalist. One of those radical tree-hugging guys who blows up dams. "Yeah," some guy says, "I saw him standin' right there next to the sheriff at our last peace march through the forest." Oh whatever.

I'm not looking forward to what the "news" will have to say tonight. I don't want to know if the Unabomber has an innie or an outie. I don't want to know his bathroom habits. I don't want to know how he brushes his teeth or his favorite flavor of Jell-O.

Maybe I'm supposed to care about the boring little details of an accused terrorist. And maybe I'm supposed to care about two-headed Elvis alien babies. Maybe I'm supposed to care about men who love women who smack them around and cheat on them with other women trapped in men's bodies. But I don't.

All I want to know is who the usual suspects are, when they'll go on trial,

Are civil liberties a facade?

I would love nothing more than to express myself. It seems that in spite of the fact that I am a citizen of the United States, where freedom is supposed to be the foundation of our society, true freedom can only exist in one place...the mind.

We are all free to think what we want about anything we want. However, as soon as we open our mouth to express those thoughts, there is someone who will try and shut it. Therein lies my problem.

Every person on this planet is entitled to an opinion. Even if it is in direct opposition to my own. Most opinions are based on what we perceive to be true. But truth is in the mind of the believer.

We all believe in different things. Therefore, our individual truths must also be as varied. If we all thought alike, there would be no need for much of what we strive for in life. Something shiny, new and different. Something that might just teach us something we didn't know about this fucked up world we live in.

Of course, some people simply don't give a shit...And that's fine. But those are the people who will come out crying and bitching when they finally realize this "freedom" we all cling to is reduced to nothing more than a forgotten idea.

I guess what I'm really trying to say to you is this:

If you sit around on your fat ass and watch the world go by, you get what's handed to you. You could however stand up and tell those power hungry, self righteous, right-wing, Tipper Gore loving, Rush Limbaugh conservative butt plugs who want to tell you what they think is good for you, that you're not going for it.

In their eyes, a mind is truly a terrible thing. If they had it their way, the only choice you'll be left to decide for yourself is the color of your toilet paper. And even then you'll have to ask if it's OK to flush.

Now that I've put my column, life and any chance I had as being a credible journalist on the line, I'm just going to let this jarring rhetoric snowball.

If there's one thing this cynical asshole aspires to do, it's to encourage the rest of this god-forsaken society to stop being lulled to sleep by the comfortable waves of mediocrity. These waves most assuredly will continue to drag us back into that current of bullshit stereotypes and slanted statistics of the bureaucratic mainstream.

Those who aren't already mentally handicapped by the strongly suggestive advertisements, politicized media and truly provoking day-time talk shows, should take a step back and look at what the hell is going on.

Stop taking the scraps being fed to you by those self-appointed bastions of morality and think about what makes you happy. When considering this, factor out any form of outside stimuli, which paints it's own pretty picture.

Look within...would you be happy just floating along with the rest of the crap atop the river of generic virtue? If so, then sterilize yourself immediately and go ahead and put a bullet in

Letters to the Editor

Vote for DeCelle

It is time once again to be thinking of who to vote for in the upcoming ASUI Senate elections. The ASUI Senate is comprised of 13 students who represent all students on this campus.

The ASUI Senate helps oversee a student budget of our money that totals one million dollars. The people that we will elect this week must be willing to represent others with a genuine concern for students and be responsible for spending our money wisely.

Ken DeCelle may not have an answer to every issue that faces the ASUI today.

The one thing that Ken DeCelle does have is the personal drive and concern that it takes to effectively represent students. He has the perseverance and the motivation needed to give the job as your senator 110 percent.

Please vote for Ken DeCelle for the ASUI Senate. Give him the chance to prove to you that an ASUI Senator who gives 110 percent can make a difference for all of us.

—Christa Manis

visibility of Senators, showing them to be typical students who you feel you can talk to and trust.

She's also working on a campaign to eliminate some of the apathy on this campus. A lot of students don't get involved with their schools, and Robin's working on correcting this problem at UI. Please vote ROBIN COLEY for ASUI Senate.

—Lori A. Manzanares

Senate gives thanks

The senate shirts are in, and the ASUI Senators would like to thank the following colleges and departments for their generous donations which made this project possible:

The College of Education,
The College of Forestry,
The College of Engineering,
The College of Graduate Studies,
The College of Art and Architecture,
The College of Agriculture, Vandal Boosters,
UI Alumni
and the Student Union Main Office.

Vote for Coley

Elections are drawing near, and you will have some tough choices to make. I have known Robin Coley for a long time and I see her as a good role model for students. She is ambitious and determined, and when she sets her mind to something, it gets it done. I think that Robin would be a good choice for Senate because she's a real team player.

She works well with people and will work hard to represent the students of UI. Robin is intelligent and capable and I know that she will give Senate her all. She's the kind of person that you can go to when you have a problem, and she will always make time to listen to you. Robin wants to increase the and the results of the aforementioned. I don't want to know if he went to McDonald's first, or where the damn glove is. I can get that out of the forthcoming million-selling autobiography.

For now I'd like some news, the mostly correct weather, I'll even sit through sports. But no more petty details of the lives of petty people. The last thing TV needs is more tabloid journalism.

your head, just to be safe.

This may sound like just another angry drunk writer's vision of a negative utopia and maybe that's what it is. But this negative utopia is different because it has no preventative qualities considering it has already happened. Maybe the problem can be solved if everyone would look inside their head.

Introversion is feared by many because a mirror vision of themselves sends them running to a therapist; however, it is the source of individualism that is the source of originality, which when expressed effectively could very well make a difference in this seemingly hopeless society.

It may seem to the reader that I just about hate everybody (which is true), and that I loath America and see that we're all doomed. But my heart goes out to all of you other hopeless cynics out there who manage to tread through all of this garbage, and occasionally blast some know-it-all hypocrite like myself. I would love to hear from you.

Question

What do you think is the biggest issue(s) facing ASUI and how do you plan to address that/those issue(s)?

Ben Rush

ASUI Senate candidate

I believe student participation is a big problem. Less than 10 percent of students turn out to vote. I think student representation is the cause rather than student apathy. Many senators have not been doing their jobs of visiting their prospective living groups bi-monthly. If students are not informed and involved, the ASUI turns from a group of over 10,000 to a self-serving group of 13. I have been very active in the ASUI as vice-chair of the Union Board, and a member of the Student Media Board. As a senator, I will continue to be active fulfilling my duties, and encouraging the students I represent to join organizations and get involved in the ASUI.

The GEM of the Mountains yearbook is another big issue. I feel that it is very important as a historical archive, as well as an educational tool to get students involved working for a top-class publication. If I am elected to the senate, I will continue to fund and support the GEM.

With proposals for a new University Commons and Recreation Center in the works, it is very important to have student leaders that can interact with university officials to get facilities on campus that students want and need. If I am elected to the senate, I will work with the university to get those programs and facilities on campus.

I am a student who works hard to get things accomplished, and I will continue that hard work as I represent the students of the University of Idaho.

Brian Tenney

ASUI Senate candidate

Hello! My name is Brian Tenney, and I'm an accounting major. I am running for the senate because I would like to be a spokesperson for the students' interests. The UI Administration, state Board of Education, and the state Legislature are constantly making decisions that directly affect us as students, and it is critical that our needs and concerns be heard by these people.

For example, one issue which is currently making its rounds within the UI Administration is the tuition hike planned for next school year. Each year, for the past eight years, our tuition has consistently gone up. And now, the largest fee increase ever has been proposed. Starting next fall, in-state students can expect to pay $884 per semester (a $74 increase), while non-resident tuition will increase by $136.

While improvements, such as the computer labs, have been made during the last eight years, what concerns me most is this habit that seems to be developing—not only do our fees go up every year, but the amount by which they go up also seems to be increasing. Is there any end in sight? Is this annual fee-boosting really necessary? If so, why is it being raised? As your senator, I would ask these questions.

The first requirement of our student government as listed in the ASUI mission statement says: "(sec. 9010.000) The ASUI shall represent the interests of all enrolled students at the University of Idaho to the University of Idaho departments and administration, Board of Regents/State Board of Education, and the State Legislature." I think it is significant that this duty was listed first, because I also believe it is the most important. As your senator, I will work very hard to fulfill this duty.

If you have any questions, comments, or ideas, I would love to hear from you! My e-mail address is tenn9545@uidaho.edu GO VANDALS!

Curt Wozniak

ASUI Senate candidate

I feel that the most important issue facing the ASUI is the re-evaluation of its role as an elected, representative student government. Although this may seem very broad, many issues fall under this category, for example, the recent fee increase and the funding of Fugue, the UI literary journal. I think the funding of Fugue is an issue that should have been decided by your elected representatives in the ASUI. It is the role of the ASUI representatives to educate themselves and students on issues, debate and discuss them, get student feedback, and allow that feedback to play a vital part in a final decision, no matter how politically unsettling that decision may be. By avoiding the responsibility of decision-making in regard to Fugue, I think many in the ASUI fell short of these responsibilities.

The ASUI is not communicating well with students. Did any ASUI representative make you aware of the fee increase, the open forum to voice your opinion, or explain just exactly where the money is going? Lately when I talk to students, they often ask me, "What is the Fugue?" Is putting this issue an approximate 10 percent of the student body in the form of a referendum a wise way to make policy?

If elected it would be my intention to adhere to the above mentioned basic principles in representing UI students. I would apply these principles of open communication to other important issues such as instructor evaluations, future fee increases, planning for the new University Center, and safety and security on campus.

Jennifer Gish

ASUI Senate candidate

In running for the ASUI Senate I have contemplated why I want to become a senator. The issues I am working towards are things that you as students are concerned about as well. These issues include, but are not limited to:

- creating greater safety for all students living on campus.
- working with students and Moscow police to create a mutual respect and cooperative environment between the two.
- request and get the streets on campus funding and see them repaired to a satisfactory condition.
- working towards the increase of applications of high school students to the University of Idaho, through ASUI sponsored events—new events as well as continuing of old events.

Most importantly I am running for senate to become involved in ASUI affairs as well as to get you, the students, to participate in the student activities on campus. For these reasons I am asking for your support. Don't forget to vote on April 24.

Ken DeCelle

ASUI Senate candidate

As an ASUI Senator I would continue to increase efforts to pave Elm St. It, and many others streets on or around campus are in "bad repair. I would suggest and work hard to implement better parking as part of our "new vision" campus. What happened to the big tailgating issue of last semesters ASUI elections. Where has our representation gone? I don't think that just because no candidate has offered to take tailgating on this semester that the issue has gone away.

If elected I would try harder to get the things the students want through honest representation. A campus safety board has finally been established to determine what needs to be done around campus to make it safer for everyone. To implement the changes the board suggests quickly will take a strong ASUI Senate voice. I would make the students' voices heard clearly through the ASUI. As a united union of students we can accomplish much. Please vote for me, Ken DeCelle.

I will try harder to keep all UI students on top of the issues.

Robin Coley

ASUI Senate candidate

I'm not God. I'm not here to solve all the problems facing ASUI. But I am Robin Coley, and I'm here to help. As a senior majoring in Political Science and Criminal Justice, and in my third year, I've been around long enough to see the problems on this campus come and go, and unfortunately, I've seen a lot of them stay. Poor lighting, safety issues, parking problems and bike paths have been issues on campus since I was a freshman. While these are important, I don't see anything being done to solve them at this time.

The problems I'd like to address are student apathy and elected officer visibility. A lot of students just don't get involved with this school—hey, a lot of them don't even vote! I'm not attempting to work miracles and cure all the problems on campus, but I would like to work on increasing voting rates in future elections as well as increase attendance and involvement in university functions. I realize that everyone is busy, trust me, I understand, but these opportunities exist strictly for us, and we need to take advantage of them while we can.

To increase involvement and attendance, I would like to increase input from living groups, thus finding activities that interest more students. I've also noticed that our current officers are waiting to represent us, yet they are rarely confronted by us. I feel this is partly due to the fact that they are not very visible. It's important to get out and get to know the students. Represent them well. I want to be the kind of representative that students can actually relate to. The average, typical student who understands your problems and can help. Not just a leader, a helping hand.

Stormie Anderson

ASUI Senate candidate

The biggest problem facing the ASUI is the lack of student involvement. Many students do not realize that the ASUI distributes over a million dollars of the students money to groups and clubs for different activities. Each full time student pays a fee to the ASUI and then the students do not voice their opinion. When I give money to a group or organization I want to know where the money is going and be able to make suggestions as to where that money should be spent.

Presidential elections last semester had a voter turn-out of less than 15 percent of the students. Voting is one way for the students to say where they want the money to be best spent. A second way to say where the money should be spent is to voice opinions at the ASUI meetings. I would like to see more students questions where and why the ASUI is spending the students' money, and see what the ASUI is doing to benefit the students.

Warren VanDenTop

ASUI Senate candidate

My name is Warren VanDenTop, I am attending the University of Idaho to obtain my teaching certification. I believe the biggest issue facing ASUI this coming year is the image that students here have of their governing body. The question I hear most when I tell others I am running for ASUI is "Why waste your time, it doesn't do anything?" That only strengthens my desire to get involved. If elected I plan to make sure that every student knows the ASUI is there and has done or will do something for him or her.

Jaime Gries

ASUI Senate candidate

Hi, my name is Jaime Gries. I am running for ASUI Senator. Currently a sophomore at University of Idaho, I live in the Greek System and have also had experience living in the residence halls. Through these experiences and my past involvement in high school government. I believe I am a willing and able representative for the students at University of Idaho. I want to encourage student involvement in government through improved senator-living group relations. I want to cultivate campus safety, as well as alumni involvement. The latter is essential for improved funding and morale at our school. With better connections to alums, especially in the Boise area, we can hopefully make a greater impact on our state legislature. I look forward to and anticipate being able to serve my school and fellow students as ASUI senator.

Clark Fork Enrichment Programs Available

Two Clark Fork Enrichment Programs are available to the public for those interested in learning more about birds. Pam Gontz, assistant director for the Yellowstone Institute, will be teaching "For Beginning Bird Lovers Only" on Saturday and "Birds-Beyond the Basics" Sunday. Registration for each class is $15, with overnight accommodations available for a nominal fee. For more information, call (208) 266-1452.

ASUI OUTDOOR PROGRAM ACTIVITIES

The following activities are sponsored by the ASUI Outdoor Program. For more information, call 885-6810.

Open Kayak Pool Sessions

Those interested in learning to kayak can come to the UI pool from 7-9:30 p.m. Wednesday to test their skills. Bringing your own boat (rinsed out) is not required. Outdoor Program boats are on a first-come first-served basis for one hour of usage. For those that have never been in a boat, a 20 minute orientation is required. No other planned instruction is given during the sessions. Cost is $3, which can be paid at the pool.

North Idaho Whitewater Festival

Held annually in Riggins, Idaho, the Whitewater Festival brings outdoor enthusiasts from across the northwest to compete in a variety of events. Hosted by the Outdoor Program and Northwest River Supplies, the festival will also feature a BBQ social, awards ceremony, and prize raffels. Registration for the festival is Friday, and the festival begins Saturday and continues through Monday. For more information, call the Outdoor Program office at 885-6810.

Backpacking Trip

This trip will visit the Selway Bitterroot area, and is open to all ability levels. The trip departs from Moscow late Friday afternoon to give two full days of hiking. The trip is especially good for beginning hikers. Equipment is the responsibility of the hikers. Cost is $15.

Ask the Idaho Department of Fish and Game

Question: I will be applying for a big game controlled hunt this year. How many hunt choices do I get?

Answer: Applicants who are applying for big game controlled hunts are allowed a first and second choice per species. If you are applying for more than one species it is necessary to fill out a separate application form per species. All eligibles applicants' first choice hunt selection will be considered for the first choice round. If unsuccessful in the first choice, the second choice hunt selection will be entered in the second choice round. If all permits in a given hunt are filled in the first choice round, there will not be a second choice opportunity for that hunt.

Hunters interested in applying for a controlled big game hunt can apply from May 1 to 30.

Applications are accepted by telephone with a credit card or by mail with a check or money order.

For more information on the application process, call the nearest Fish and Game office.

Whitewater Festival to be a big 'splash'

Jeremy Chase

Outdoorsy Entertainment Editor

For those interested in kayaking, the spirit of competition and an overall good time should get their gear together for this weekend's North Idaho Whitewater Festival in Riggins, Idaho.

During this weekend, the festival will include three main events: down river kayak and raft race, a freestyle and/or rapid river race, and a slalom race.

The downriver race, held on Saturday at 9 a.m., will consist of kayakers and rafters winding and weaving their way down the four mile stretch of the Main Salmon River.

Later in the afternoon will be the kayak freestyle event. Reserved for those kayakers with a flair for "hot dogging," the freestyle event will be a chance for them to impress a panel of judges while they paddle and maneuver stretches of the river. In case conditions are subpar or inadequate, the freestyle event may be changed to a "wild water" event—similar to the downriver race.

The final event of the festival will be Sunday's slalom race on the Little Salmon. Participants will be able to challenge the waters around mile marker 188.

Jon Meier, assistant at the UI Outdoor Program, said the festival is important because it kicks off the kayaking season.

"It's the first kayaking and whitewater festival of the year, and starts off the whole kayaking and whitewater season," he said. "It's a large social event for kayakers throughout the northwest."

Meier said one aspect of the festival's popularity is its frugal nature. With sponsorship from several different kayak and whitewater companies, and magazines Canoe & Kayak and Paddle, the event's goal is not to make money. "This is one of the cheapest festivals in the northwest, and that's because we're not trying to make money off of it," he said.

For local sponsorship, the UI Outdoor Program with Northwest River Supplies are doing much of the legwork with getting the festival going. "Northwest River Supplies is a sponsor equipment-wise and some of their employees are helping with setup and registration," Meier said.

Mike Beiser, Outdoor Program Coordinator, said the history of the event has roots with UI and the area.

"The first year it was held on the St. Joe, and the second on Pottlatch Creek. Since then, it's migrated to the Riggins area," he said. "Our program was instrumental in getting the program started and UI student involvement was pivotal."

Beiser also said this year's festival is one of a select few whitewater competitions in the United States recognized by the National Organizations of Whitewater Rodeos. "It's a rendezvous of sorts that will have kayakers everywhere from Seattle to Bozeman to South Carolina," he said.

In terms of attendance, Beiser said this year's number of participants will probably exceed that of past years. "Last year we had 130 competitors," he said. "This year will probably be the largest crowd we ever have."

Besides the events and competition, a prize raffle, awards ceremony and BBQ are also scheduled in the festival agenda. All three of these are set for Sunday. Among the prizes to be given away are three kayaks and coffeemugs.

Registration for the event takes place this Friday at mile marker 188, south of Riggins on highway

95. Meier said registration costs $25, but is a good package deal. He said the cost covers all events, T-shirt and entry in Sunday's prize raffle.

For more information about the festival, call the UI Outdoor Program at 885-6810.

Black Bear initiative: pros and cons for a complex issue

Jerri Lake

The Black bear initiative in Idaho has people in several states pitted against each other. The initiative backers, Idaho Coalition United for Bears (ICUB), are trying to remove baiting, hunting with dogs and spring hunting from Idaho's bear regulations.

They believe this type of hunting is unethical behavior and violates the concept of fair chase. They want to get the initiative on the ballot and let the voters decide if these practices should continue.

ICUB is against any hunter using dogs to run an animal until it is too tired or forcing it up a tree to be shot at point blank range. The using of garbage and anything else for bait leaves the forest looking trashy.

"Hunting bears in the spring increases the chance of a sow being shot, causing the cubs to starve," said Marlyn Martin, representative for ICUB.

The other side of the coin is the Sportsmen's Heritage Defense

Fund. They believe the initiative is a move by a radical animal rights organization to get a foothold on controlling the management of bears.

This control would be further pushed to eliminate all bear hunting. They also believe if the initiative were to pass, these organizations would continue to push other initiatives to remove hunting of all animals with dogs.

They are also concerned because the initiative is financially backed by The Humane Society of the United States in Washington, D.C. They claim many leaders of the Humane Society in Washington, D.C., have been quoted in the paper as wanting to ban all sport hunting if they could.

SHDF also defends the use of dogs and bait for hunting bears. They contend it allows the hunter to be highly selective in the bears they harvest.

"When a hunter has a bear at point blank range, the shot can also be placed for a more humane kill," said Don Clower, representative of Sportsmen's Heritage Defense Fund.

Both organizations have lots of information to back up each others' claims and how each other is wrong. Both use some information furnished by the Idaho Fish and Game, but the interpretations come out differently. In some examples, they are both right.

Both organizations, and ethical hunters and sportsmen and sportswomen, want to get rid of unethical hunters or in their words "slobs." There are unethical factions of every sport. Every sport needs to get rid of the "rotten apples in the barrel." We need to report any game violator and help clean up our ranks.

The Idaho Fish and Game have established regulations that control the use of bait and hounds during season. Regulations also prohibit the shooting of a sow with cubs in either the spring or fall seasons.

"In 1991, a citizens' task force was organized to work on the five-year black bear management plan. This 26-member task force consisted of anti-hunters, non-hunters, hunters, bear hunters, outfitters and representatives from the timber and agriculture industries," Clower said.

The task force held public meetings across the state to get input from the public. This input helped structure the seasons and methods of take modifications to meet the public's concerns and the Fish and Game's bear management goals for the next five years.

Some modifications included requiring permits to use bait and hounds for bears. The five-year plan also included changing the length of seasons to match the bear populations. Dogs and bait can only be used in certain units and times of year.

The regulations only allow baiting to start on the first day of season, and all evidence of baiting must be totally removed within seven days after close of season. No bait site may be located within 200 yards of any free water, maintained trail or any road.

The sites cannot be located within one-half mile of any designated campground or picnic area, administrative site or dwelling.

Types of bait may not contain any parts of game animals, birds or fish.

All skin must be removed from any mammal parts or carcasses used. No bait may be contained within paper, plastic, glass metal, wood or other non-biodegradable materials.

The only exception is a single metal container with a maximum size of 55 gallons may be used if it is securely attached to the bait site.

No bait may be contained in any

Grizzly bear poaching incident leads to investigation

State and federal wildlife officials in Idaho and Washington have potential witnesses and a "person of interest" in their investigation of a grizzly poaching case in the Selkirk Mountains, but they would like more help from the public.

Idaho and Washington state wildlife agencies are cooperating with the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service to probe the poaching of a 2 1/2-year-old male grizzly. The illegal killing apparently took place last fall. The bear was killed in the Selkirk bear recovery area which takes in parts of north-eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service Special Agent Roger Parker said the bear was shot sometime between Oct. 27 and Nov. 1, 1995. Parker said the bear was known locally as the "Nordman bear" since it was live-trapped near Nordman, Idaho, Oct. 26.

The bear was fitted with a radio transmitter collar and released at Kaniksu Mountain near the Canadian border. A radio tracking flight on Oct. 27 located the grizzly near the release site. When intensive air and ground radio tracking on Nov. 1 failed to locate the bear, wildlife officers suspected poaching.

Washington Wildlife agent Ted Holden and Idaho Conservation Officer Don Carr worked together to determine that the grizzly was killed in the vicinity of Granite Pass in Washington and then taken for disposal across the border into Idaho. Special Agent Larry Keeney of the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service said there may have been violations of state law in both states in addition to violations of the federal Endangered Species Act and the Lacey Act which governs the interstate transport of unlawfully taken wildlife.

Brian Allen-Johnson, Ecosystem Conservation Officer with IDFG, said this is the second grizzly known to be shot in the Selkirk ecosystem in 1995. The first was a yearling female killed northwest of Bonners Ferry in May, 1995. Allen-Johnson said these losses are a serious threat to the Selkirk grizzly population.

Officer Carr is asking anyone with knowledge of the incident to contact him at (208) 448-2302, Agent Holden at (509) 447-4435 or Special Agent Parker at (509) 928-6050.

Upland game season on agenda

Fish and Game Commissioners will hear recommendations for upland game bird season opening dates when they meet in Lewiston.

The Commission will meet at the Lewiston Ramada Inn, beginning with an open house for public comment from 7:30-9 p.m. Regular Commission business will begin at 8:30 a.m. The Commission plans a tour of Lower Granite Dam with Idaho Water Resources Board members.

Season lengths and limits will be set for upland game birds when the Commission meets in Soda Springs in July. Tentative opening dates for this fall are September 1 for forest grouse, Sept. 21 for quail, partridge, sage grouse and sharp-tail grouse, Oct. 12 for pheasants in North Idaho, and Oct. 19 for pheasants in the rest of the state.

The Commissioners will also review reports from department administrators on budgets, salmon and steelhead recovery policy, a public opinion survey and anadromous fish research and management.

'Owls on the Palouse' provides interesting information

Tricia Francis
Staff

On April 17 Kevin Pullen and some of his feathered friends presented "Owls on the Palouse," courtesy of the Palouse Audubon Society. Pullen is the assistant curator of the Connor Museum at Washington State University and works with the Raptor Rehabilitation Center on campus.

There are 134 species of owls worldwide. In the Pacific Northwest about 18 species are found, and on the Palouse we have nine to 10 species commonly with up to 14 during some winters.

Owls are raptors; carnivorous predatory birds. In order to be successful hunters, they have a few adaptations that make them particularly successful at catching prey at night. They have particularly large eyes, so large in fact they are fixed in the birds head, and can't move. "A full grown Great Horned owl has eyes the same size as a full grown man," Pullen said. To compensate for their fixed eyes, the birds have an incredibly flexible neck. Contrary to popular belief, the owls can only turn their heads about 270 degrees, not an entire 360.

Owls also have an interesting skull structure. Their ear openings are offset. One is high on the skull and the other is lower. Humans with their ears even can only hear in a horizontal plane.

"Owls can hear in a horizontal plane but can also pinpoint vertically. They have a triangulation ability. It's a three dimensional coordinate system," Pullen said.

The visible "ears" on some of the owls, such as the great horned owl are not ears at all. They are ear tufts that have nothing to do with hearing.

The owl's characteristic faces are important to their hearing. Most owls have a disk pattern in their feathers around the eyes. "The facial disks act as disk antennae. Because the ears are located right behind the eyes, the facial disks funnel sound into the ears," Pullen said.

Most people who come upon owls at night are surprised by them because they are quiet and seem to come out of nowhere. Owls can fly very quietly because they have two special wing adaptations. On the first flight feather of each wing, owls have a comb-like structure. This breaks the wind, and quiets the sound.

Owls wings are also covered with a light fur that dampens sound. The ability to quietly stalk prey quietly is important to the owl's night hunting success.

The most common owl in our area is the Great Horned owl. They weigh about 3 pounds, and have a 4-foot wing span. Great Horned owls are also the least popular of our owls, at least to other birds.

"Nothing likes a Great Horned owl because they'll eat just about anything, even skunks," Pullen said.

The owls have a small "wing-loading." The size of their wings is large for their weight, which allows them to have a lot of lifting power to carry off the larger prey.

We also have short eared owls, barred owls, screech owls, barn owls and of course, spotted owls. This is the northern range of the barn owl. They do not have feathered feet like other owls, so they cannot take a very harsh winter, and can get frostbite.

The relationship between the barred owl and the spotted owl is noteworthy. The barred owl is an eastern species that has made its way across the country and is now on the west coast.

They have become more and more common over the past 10 years, and are starting to move south as well. Spotted and barred owls are closely related.

"When a barred owl and a spotted owl mix one of two things will happen. The barred owls will replace the spotted owls, or sometimes they will cross breed," Pullen said.

Big game rules available on-line

Yo, surfers. The 1996 Idaho big game hunting regulations are available on the IDFG Internet home page now while the rule booklet in traditional paper form is still in the printing and mailing process.

Hunters anxious to get their hands on the regulations before they are printed and shipped to vendors can find them at <http://www.state.id.us/fishgamemshg.htm>.

Paper booklets should be on the shelves shortly before May 1, when the application period for controlled elk, deer and antelope hunts begins.

Other recent additions to the IDFG home page include regional links, nonresident license applications, 1996 landowner preference rules, hunting unit map, Arrest Digest and turkey regulations. Internet users can find a wealth of information about fishing, hunting and current regulations on the IDFG home page.

excavated hole greater than 4 feet in diameter. All sites must be visibly marked at the nearest tree or on the bait container using the tag furnished by the Fish and Game.

These are only some of the requirements and restrictions on baiting, and not all units are open to baiting.

Dogs cannot be used during most of the general deer and elk seasons units. The time dogs can be used is during controlled permit hunting seasons.

There are many restrictions and regulations enforced by the Fish and Game to enhance their five-year plan. In conjunction with the task force, the fish and game wanted a male to female ratio of 2 to 1 for maintaining a healthy bear population.

Their current management plan reinforces their others in keeping that balance. The Idaho Fish and Game are on record as being against the initiative because if it passes, it will remove their ability to properly manage the bear population.

According to them, the initiative would circumvent the authority of the Idaho Fish and Game Commission and rob biologists of necessary bear management tools.

In areas with an improper balance or population of bears, the Fish and Game have restricted seasons, baiting and hounds.

In areas with healthy and sometime over abundant populations, the use of baiting and hounds and longer seasons has been a necessity.

The number of bears killed during the spring is about the same as in the fall. However, the highest number of female bears is killed during the fall hunts.

All bears harvested must be brought to the Fish and Game to be checked.

If a wet sow (one that has cubs) is brought in, the Fish and Game will know it.

Part of bear management is controlling the depredation of livestock and private property. Sportsmen, through license fees, pay out over $25,000 per year to cover the damage caused by bears.

After Colorado passed its bear initiative, its Legislature was asked to appropriate $100,000 from taxpayers to pay for the increased bear depredation problems.

Depending how you believe about the bear initiative, consider making your decisions based upon facts rather than emotion.

If you believe in it, sign it. Either way, if it gets on the ballot make sure you vote the way you believe. If you don't vote you have cast a vote for the other side.

Soccer fast becoming USA's other sport

Byron Jarnagin

Despite the still marginal popularity of soccer around the country, the sport has gained some American enthusiasm and support as professional teams have been making homes in cities across the United States.

The usual American attitude of football and baseball hungry fiends to the core seemed to be an inescapable description of the sport spectators choices of the professional sports they loved to watch. This idea probably still lives in the minds of fans, but now there is another option for a sport that has been the "football and baseball" of Europe and Latin American countries; soccer.

The movie Victory featuring Sylvester Stallone as an American war prisoner put the acceptance of soccer dilemma in perspective. The manliest of men running around an open field playing American style football, tackling and using his hands, with a bunch of chaps controlling the ball with their feet was a true representation of the past. However, when Stallone compromises his tackling and uses his hands as a goalkeeper the changing time seem to be at hand with soccer's popularity rising.

Still Americans could not totally accept the sport because of excuses like it is boring to watch or there is not enough scoring or any one can do that, but not everyone can play football. Little do people know that the skill it takes to successfully master the control of a round ball with your foot requires talent, and is not something you can pick up over night.

Once the United States formed a team and started to pursue not the World Series trophy, not the Super Bowl trophy, and not the Stanley Cup but the World Cup champion soccer trophy the support started to grow.

The sport has begun to grow in the eyes of fans young and old, and for those who still refused to recognize soccer they could still see the sport through the eyes of European and Latin American fans.

One glimpsed of a soccer crowd will liven your spirit. The singing, dancing, crazy crowds that are notorious for their presence at an entire soccer game surpasses the enthusiasm of Americans who leave a stadium early because their team begins to loose.

The success of the U.S. national soccer team in World Cup play has been remarkably respected by countries around the world who were probably not expecting much from a country that placed soccer at the bottom of the totem pole of professional sports. Support for the team has grown and continues to grow as more and more young athletes play soccer at a young age dreaming not of the NFL or professional baseball, but of a chance to become part of the U.S. National Soccer Team.

Weather holds for successful triathlon

Mike Stetson

Palouse Triathlon winner Matthew Clarke heads to victory Sunday.

Armstrong leads the way on the women's side, with just under 100 participants on hand

Mike Stetson
Staff

No snow, no wind and no distance proved enough Sunday to keep almost 100 people from competing in the 13th Annual Palouse Triathlon.

Despite near freezing temperatures at the 7 a.m. starting time and the remnants of Saturday's snowfall, 42 men, 13 women and 14 teams swam, road and ran from across the Palouse in the annual triathlon sponsored by the University of Idaho's Campus Recreation Department.

"This year went nice," race coordinator Terece Sheckler said. "These guys run in any weather."

This year's triathlon brought in athletes from all over the Palouse along with Utah and Wyoming Sheckler admits, noting that only seven people did not compete because of the weather.

For women's overall winner, Kristin Armstrong, 2:43:40, the weather may have scared her prior to the race but could not stop her from taking the victory, one minute and 32 seconds ahead of Lisa Brody in second.

Armstrong, a December graduate from Idaho, took the lead out of the pool, two minutes and 38 seconds ahead of the field and continued to lead throughout.

"It was quiet windy," Armstrong said. "I drove up last night and it was hailing and snowing in McCall, so I was kinda worried."

Armstrong, a December graduate from Idaho, took the lead out of the pool, two minutes and 38 seconds ahead of the field and continued to lead throughout.

"I was following the van the whole way," Armstrong said realizing that she was leading the race. Armstrong's quick start may have resulted from her job as an Aquatic Coordinator for the West Side YMCA in Boise.

In the women's overall standings Armstrong placed first, followed by Brody and Deborah Bell in third, 2:57:33.

In the men's race, Matthew Clarke came away with the victory finishing in 2:11:44, three and a half minutes ahead of Bob Stephens in second place.

Clarke started slowly, leaving the pool almost five minutes off the pace, but turned in the second fastest time of the day, for an individual competitor on the bike, 1:10:02, and the fastest run time for an individual competitor, 1:01:42, to capture the overall victory.

In the men's overall standings Clarke placed first, Stephens second, and Jeff Rigg third in 2:20:05.

In the team event, Tamara Regan's team took the mixed team category in 2:13:46. For the women's teams, Margo Mehl's team placed first in 2:35:43. In the men's teams category, Dave Barnes' team placed first, recording the fastest time of the event, 2:01:39.

The Palouse Triathlon consists of a one and a half km (.93 mile) swim in the memorial gym pool, a 40 km (24.84 mile) bike ride beginning at Memorial Gym, running out to the airport, and finishing at the Kibbie Dome parking lot, and a 10km (6.2 mile) run on the Old Pullman Highway, finishing in front of Memorial Gym.

Sheckler already has begun recruiting for next year's race and says "I would love to have a fraternity sponsor."

Only PAC-10 power USC could outdo the Idaho Vandal 4x100m relay team Saturday in Walnut Creek, Calif. Idaho finished second in the event, but still broke its school record set two weeks ago.

Tawanda Chiwira, Felix Kamangirira, Scott Whalen and Jaon St. Hill combined to run the race in 3:08.66, more than a second faster than their previous school of 3:09.69 set April 6. USC won the event with a 3:07.24 time. No Big Sky relay team has come within four seconds of Idaho's record this season.

Idaho's 4x100m relay team was stellar as well, outracing national power Arkansas to victory, finishing in 40.44 its best mark of the season.

Chiwira had a career day for the Vandals, along with helping the relay teams, the freshman was second in the (46.09).

In other men's action Paul Thompson and Whalen finished second and third in the 400m hurdles in 51.28 and 51.97. Thad Hathaway posted a season-best leap in the high jump, clearing 7-1 to finish second.

The Idaho women's track team got a big boost from sprinter Katherine Hough Saturday at the Bob Gibb Classic in Boise. The freshman finished fourth in the 100 meters in a time of 12.33 seconds and added a fifth-place finish in the 200m with a 25.32 time. Both marks were good enough to qualify Hough for a spot in the Big Sky Championships May 17-18 in Tempe, Ariz.

Idaho's Kerri Fife finished one back of Hough in the 200m running to a mark of 25.46 also good enough to get the junior to Tempe. Fife also finished fifth in the 400m (59.29).

Sophomore Tia Taruscio ran to a third-place effort in the 5,000 with an 18:25.26 time.

Senior Tara Gehrke came up with a season-best mark in the 400m hurdles.

The Libby, Montana native finished second behind Utah State's Jane Marshall in the event with a time of 1:03.55. Gehrke beat the 1:05.00 BSC qualifying mark to earn a trip to the postseason meet. Gehrke added to her impressive showing, finishing fourth in the 100m hurdles (15.45).

Geoff Judd cleared 6-feet 9-inches in the high jump to finish second behind Jake Jacoby who participated as an independent. Judd's effort was two inches better than the BSC qualifying mark.

Vandal netters end spring drills

Mark Vanderwall

—Staff

If you are the best out of a chosen group, you must move on to bigger and better things. This is exactly what the University of Idaho volleyball team is preparing to do after completing spring drills this past week.

Idaho leaves a plethora of conference titles, numerous memories and the Big Sky behind, as it prepares to enter its first season in the Big West, but one thing remains the same, a lengthy home court winning streak in the friendly confines of Memorial Gym where the Vandals hope to continue their dominance.

"We are joining a top-notch conference. If you are able to finish in the top three or four in that league, you are considered a national power," Idaho head Coach Tom Hilbert said.

Idaho returns all of last seasons roster, with the exception of Tzvetelina Yanchulova and Sarah Toomey. These two were part of the reason Idaho's dominance has lasted so long.

"We lose a lot of passing with those two, but during Spring drills we have gotten a lot better," Hilbert said.

Along with their passing, Idaho loses the Big Sky MVP in Yanchulova, and a great defensive specialist in Toomey. They add Alli Nieman, who will also lend her services to the Basketball team. Katie Kress, who hails from Walla Walla, Wash., comes to Idaho after being named the Big Nine MVP. Anna Reznicek is said to have the best chance to step in to make an immediate impact by Hilbert. Reznicek comes to Idaho from nearby Hermiston, Ore. Sally Powers rounds out the group, and has been labeled a "diamond in the rough" by the Vandal coaching staff.

Along with the new additions, Idaho has several old faces waiting in the wings for their chance to shine. Lynne Hyland, who has established herself as one of the best setters in the country, returns to key the Vandal offense, along with the hitting of Jessica Moore and Louisa Kawulok, who both stepped up to be offensive powers for the Vandals last season. Perhaps the greatest surprises come in Kyle Leonard, who is from Seattle, Wash. and redshirt Freshman Shalyne

Lynch, who hails from White Rock, British Columbia.

"Kyle and Shalyne have really improved in the off-season for us, they have both established themselves within this program, and I expect to see great things from them in the next year," Hilbert said

The move to the Big West will be both a challenge and a glimmer of excitement for the UI program in upcoming years, but you can bet the Vandals will be ready for whatever comes their way.

"I hope people realize that the Big West is a tougher conference and that we may not finish at the top of the conference as we have in the past. We will be competitive, and the fans will see some great volleyball, as we play both Long Beach State and Washington State at home this year," Hilbert said

Idaho looks to keep its dominance alive in its new conference, as they have made the NCAA tournament a staple for the program. The Vandals will remain a relatively young team, losing only Hyland and Kawulok to graduation after the season.

No surprises Jordan scoring champ again

Associated Press

Michael Jordan is the scoring champion again, but for the first time in three years, and Dennis Rodman won his fifth straight rebounding title Sunday.

Rodman joined Wilt Chamberlain as the only other player to capture the rebounding crown with three teams. Rodman also won the honor with Detroit and San Antonio.

He grabbed 11 rebounds for Chicago in just 24 minutes against the Bulls on Sunday, lowering the average from 14.94 to 14.88. David Robinson of San Antonio finished second with a 12.2 average.

Jordan won his eighth scoring title, scoring 26 points in just 24 minutes against Washington to lower his average from 30.43 to 30.37, still more than three points ahead of Hakeem Olajuwon's average of 26.9.

Jordan won the scoring title for seven straight seasons until retiring after the 1992-93 season.

"It was an individual goal," Jordan said. "I didn't want to put forth so that everyone would look at it in a critical way. I wanted to do it internally, individually to prove I could still play this game."

John Stockton of the Utah Jazz led the league in assists for the ninth straight season, although his average of 11.2 was his lowest since the 1986-87 season, his third in the league.

Evidence of the interest begins merely with soccer becoming popular with high school athletics around the country and then taking it one small step higher at the college level. College athletics has always been and continues to be known for its basketball and football powerhouses.

The influence of soccer amongst athletes at the college level is inspiring of what is yet still come. Top name schools like Notre Dame, who are known primarily for their football program, are now also recognized for their successful soccer program.

Taking the sport to the next level, better known as the level of professional sports, is the establishment of professional soccer programs in major cities.

These locations include New England, New York, Los Angeles, Washington, D.C., Dallas, Texas, Kansas City, Portland and San Jose to name just a few.

To be part of one of these teams is one heck of an accomplishment, and to be able to go farther and become a member of the national team is now a goal in the minds of many young dreamers. If you ask any soccer player, it's not easy and actually does take practice, and just like those who were born to handle pig skin there are those who were put on this earth to kick pig skin.

Americans are starting to come around but have not made a full 180 degree turn of accepance for the sport of soccer. This maybe because of the past time that we as Americans have enjoyed for many years, but even if there is not full support at the present time the involvement of the United States in another world wide professional sporting competition is drawing a lot of attention.

Professionals like Lallus, Balboa and Ramos have become just as inspiring as most popular football and baseball athletes, and in this respect the sport is reaching the American fans and young athletes of this country.

The United States has entered a new era and with it soccer is becoming more and more popular every day, and should be something to look forward to in the future of professional sports.

Soccer club places second over weekend

Damon Barkdull

Staff

Idaho's Soccer Club kicked off the sixth annual International Soccer Tournament on Friday and finished up Sunday with a second place finish at Guy Wicks Field.

"We didn't play as well as we could play but we played well," said UI Soccer Club coach Ron McFarland. "The team we really wanted to beat in this tournament was WSU (Washington State University) International because they had beat us earlier in the season. We had a much better team this time and we did manage to tie them."

Weather and field conditions slowed up the start of the tournament; however, action was anything but slow and uneventful when Idaho faced off against the WSU International team on Sunday.

"It was a great game," McFarland said.

"We were down 3-1 in that one and came down probably in the last five minutes to tie it."

Scoring goals for Idaho in that game was Mike Smiley with two goals, assisted by Dan Young and O.J. Royster and an unassisted goal by Clint Adams.

After a tie against WSU International and a 9-0 tournament victory over Eastern Oregon State College on Saturday, Idaho squared off against North Idaho College of Coeur d'Alene to see who would capture the first place finish.

Based on a points system, Idaho had to score three points against NIC to capture first place in the tournament and hold off the threatening WSU team.

Idaho jumped out to a quick 1-0 lead after an unassisted goal by Steve Williams in the first half of play. In the second half, NIC tied the game up and threatened a UI-first place finish.

With the game winding down, UI's Dan Young scored a goal assisted by Downen Raynor in the second half to give Idaho the 2-1 lead. The Vandals had several shots on goal but couldn't connect for the third point needed to win the tournament.

Ironically, McFarland, who led his Idaho team to one point within a tournament victory, actually played for the shorthanded NIC squad.

Capturing first place was WSU International, followed by Idaho at a close second place and NIC finished third.

"We thought we could beat North Idaho by enough points to win the tournament," McFarland said. "I think, playing in the second game today probably was the margin of difference. We played our hearts out against WSU. Then against NIC, we weren't 100 percent, we couldn't physically play 100 percent for this game. We played well enough to beat them but not well enough to beat them by that one extra goal."

The eight team tournament was sponsored by the International Program Office and representative John Flinnie, who is the tournament coordinator and helps the club team to afford tournament trophies for the top three places.

McFarland labeled the tournament a success, disregarding the terrible field condition at Guy Wicks Field.

"Of all the tournaments we had, this is the sixth, these are probably the foulest conditions we've ever seen," McFarland said. "A lot of people were playing in the worst conditions they've ever played soccer on. The field looks pretty bad but its actually in better shape than it looks."

Next weekend Idaho, with a 4-1-1 spring record, travels to Walla Walla, Wash, to face off against Walla Walla College and most likely Central Oregon College.

Fermin says goodbye to the Mariners as he returns home

Associated Press

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic—Seattle Mariners infielder Felix Fermin, frustrated by lack of playing time, said he's left the team and could soon sign with another club, possibly the New York Yankees.

Fermin, in the final year of a two-year contract, told a Dominican radio station that he had asked manager Lou Piniella to be released.

"My lawyer told me there is a possibility of quickly signing with another organization where I will have the opportunity to play," Fermin said.

"The Yankees need a veteran who can play various positions in the infield and can help Jeter," Fermin said, referring to rookie shortstop Derek Jeter.

Fermin, a one-time starter, can play either shortstop or second base. He was benched this season in favor of fellow Dominican Alex Rodriguez.

Fermin said he had returned to his home in Santiago, 95 miles north of the capital of Santo Domingo.

New owner wants new stadium

Associated Press
KIRKLAND, Wash.—In a perfect world, Paul Allen would like a new stadium for the Seattle Seahawks.

If that doesn't happen, he could be talked into taking a renovated Kingdome. And he may be willing to share some of the costs.

"The last thing Paul wants to say: It's my way or the highway," Allen representative Bob Whitsitt said Sunday. "He just wants to come in, try to be a part of it, work with everybody and see what we can do."

Whitsitt, president of Allen's NBA Portland Trail Blazers, spoke the day after it was announced that Allen had purchased a 14-month option to buy the Seahawks from owner Ken Behring.

Allen, co-founder of Microsoft and a billionaire, has until July 1997 to buy the team.

The Behrings said they couldn't make pro football work in the 20-year-old Kingdome as it now stands. A recent study said it would cost $197 million to fix up the Kingdome in order to make it financially viable for the Seahawks.

Whitsitt, who conducted a series of one-on-one interviews at the Seahawks' headquarters, emphasized Allen's decision to complete his purchase of the NFL team did not hinge on getting King County to build him a new stadium.

A task force has been studying the Kingdome.

"If you're asking me, a new stadium versus a $200 million renovated Kingdome, I'm sure the preference would be a new stadium," Whitsitt said. "I'm sure the preference would be to play outside on grass."

"But I also can't tell you we're on the job a day and we're ruling out things."

Whitsitt said he plans on sitting down with county officials this week.

"We need to learn as much as we can about these stadium issues to get involved," he said. "It would be easy to sit on the outside and say, 'Geez, here's what we'd love to have. Bingo.'"

In Portland, where Allen has owned the Trail Blazers since 1988, Allen came up with a plan that resulted in the building of the $262 million Rose Garden for his NBA club.

It only cost $34.5 million in taxpayers' money. Allen's Oregon Arena Corp. solicited $170 million in private financing.

"The Portland thing is unbelievable," Whitsitt said. "That whole experience down there. The city is pleased with what's going on down there."

Whitsitt was asked if Allen was prepared to get involved in the financing of a new stadium or the renovation of the Kingdome.

"We can't rule out anything," he said.

Then he quickly added, "There are many, many reasons why he (Allen) would prefer not to own the football team. It's a tough thing to make it go economically."

BECOME AWARE!

This week, students at the University of Idaho will wear a purple ribbon to show their support in the fight against the attitudes that advocate date and acquaintance rape.

One in four women will be attacked or sexually assaulted by the time she finishes college. Men are also victims of date and acquaintance rape, but rarely report it. Over 60% of rapes are committed by acquaintances. Nearly 57% of college females said they had been assaulted by a man they were dating.

Date and acquaintance rape is a problem we all face. It's time we break the silence and educate each other. It's time we learn to support the rape survivors and talk about it.

This week is National Sexual Assault Awareness Week. Students are learning to communicate clearly in relationships, respect each other and accept their partner's decisions.

You can make a difference. Date and acquaintance rape can be prevented when you become aware.
