President, senator accused of scheming

Janet Birdsall
Staff

A former senator has accused ASUI President Brian Kane and Senator Chris Houck of trying to give Houck the office of vice president.

The office will become vacant when John Tesnohlidek resigns this summer. He was accepted Tuesday for a student exchange to Utah State next year. Upon his resignation, Pro Tem Annie Averitt is supposed to take his position.

Regulations specify the vice president must live within 20 miles of campus, and Averitt plans to be working for a cruise line in Alaska this summer.

Sue Pierce, who has just finished her term as an ASUI senator, said Houck told her Wednesday Averitt wouldn't be able to take the job this summer because she would be living outside the 20-mile limit. Pierce said Houck was hoping to get the position.

"He was under the assumption that he'd be getting (the position)," said Pierce.

Houck said Wednesday he and Kane were looking at the rules and regulations, but he was just joking with Pierce about trying to get the position.

"It was a joking around comment. It kinda got blown out of proportion," Houck said. "Nothing's up at all. We were just screwing around."

But Thursday Houck said he was wrong and would take responsibility for his action. "Brian had nothing to do with it. I brought it to him. I was dead wrong in doing it."

But Pierce said Kane was just as involved in the whole fiasco. "He's using the ASUI government as his playpen. Chris is just somebody else he's using to further his agendas."

Kane said he has no problems with Averitt becoming vice president, and any comments otherwise were made in jest.

"I was joking. It was purely joking," Kane said.

Kane co-sponsored a bill last semester which allows the president to determine whether the vice president must hold office hours during the summer. The bill was signed in December by Sean Wilson, then ASUI president. Kane said he was unsure if he would require the vice president to keep office hours this summer.

"I'm still looking at that. This is kinda short notice," Kane said.

Environmental Team wins big

Students place first in design contest against national competition

Zachary Smith

The UI Environmental Team took this year's Waste-Management Education and Research Consortium Environmental Design Contest by storm, bringing home an overall first place finish and nearly $15,000 in prize money.

The sixth annual contest, held April 21-25 at New Mexico State University in Las Cruces, gives students a chance to put their skills to work at tackling real waste-management problems.

Twenty-nine teams from 21 universities across the nation competed in the five-day long contest, presenting papers and demonstrating working bench-scale models of their designs.

UI's winning team consisted of chemical engineering majors Christopher Doten, Jennifer Meehan, Abbie Parker and Aaron Newton. The team was accompanied by advisers Dr. Woody Admassu and Dr. Ron Crawford.

Of the three tasks WERC presented to the contestants, the UI team produced designs for two of them. Parker and Newton tackled Task I, the cleanup of storage tanks with radioactive hazardous waste. Doten and Meehan collaborated on Task III, the cleanup of waste ponds and vegetation contaminated with radionuclides and hazardous chemicals.

The team took first place overall and received the Rust Geotech trophy. In addition, they received 2nd place, $4,000, best oral presentation and $1,000 for Task I. For Task III, they won first place, $4,000, best bench-scale model, $1,000, best approach, $1,000 and a technical merit award worth $1,000.

All the trophies and around $45,000 in prize money were presented at an awards banquet on April 25 where the announcer kept the UI team on their toes.

"It was a lot of standing up and sitting down," said Meehan.

The results came as no surprise to adviser Admassu.

"I told them all along that they would win," Admassu said. "This shows that the UI really prepares their students for the real world," he added.

The team members were optimistic about their chances, but bringing home six trophies was a pleasant surprise.

"I expected that we would do well, but I didn't

Recycling Outreach Program to collect reusable items

Andrea Lucero
Staff

The end of the school year has finally arrived. It is time to clean out closets, bedrooms and apartments, and time to get rid of all the items you no longer need. But this year, instead of throwing your old cloths, irons, couches, lamps, etc. away, take advantage of the newly implemented Recycling Outreach Program.

The University of Idaho in conjunction with Washington State University has created the Recycling Outreach Program to benefit students and members of the community. Beginning May 15, bins to collect recyclable/re-usable household goods will be placed along side dumpsters at the residence halls and on old and new Greek Rows.

"The bins are different from other recycling bins in that they don't collect paper, tin, plastic, etc. Instead they are provided to collect discarded household items that can be repaired and given to someone who needs them," explained Tanya Atwood Hoover, volunteer service coordinator at UI.

Phone numbers will be printed in the bins so students can call to have the items picked up when the bins become full. The Recycling Outreach Program has a grant with the Sojourner Alliance (formerly the YWCA) and the items collected from the bins will go to the clients and thrift store of the Alliance along with the community Action Center and Alternatives to Violence.

"This way, items that students wouldn't know what to do with otherwise can really benefit the community," Hoover said.

Student representatives from the Recycling Outreach Program visited each of the living groups and talked about what Recycling Outreach does. Posters were also distributed to explain how the program works.

Recycling began with the residence halls collecting plastic, tin, paper and glass. Hoover, along with the WSU Service Learning Program, wrote a grant to the Fund for Improvement of Post Secondary Education in order to create the Recycling Outreach program.

"The program was an extension of what the residence halls had already started. Now students have three options. They can throw items in the trash, recycle them as plastic, tin and paper, or donate them to the Recycling Outreach Program," Hoover said.

The Recycling Outreach Program is currently offering internship and volunteer positions for anyone who is willing to help keep the program functional. For more information contact Tanya Atwood Hoover at 885-5756.

"I encourage everyone to put their recyclable/re-usable goods in the bin," Hoover said.

State Board of Education wants to train students

BOISE—The State Board of Education wants to put a greater emphasis on job-training classes, offering more courses statewide in fields like computer repair and truck driving.

At Boise State University, where more than 15,000 students study part-time in the College of Technology alone, the shift could mean dramatically expanding course offerings.

"People do need ongoing training," said Carole McWilliam, president of the State Board of Education. "It reflects the economy. Things are changing rapidly on our campuses. Our average student is changing—not all of them are just out of high school."

"And we know that many of our students who come in for technical training are there because there is a shortage of people who have those skills." But, given the state's financial straits—Boise State had to trim $1.5 million from its budget this year—Idaho's education leaders will have to find a way to fund these expanded programs.

One possibility: enrollment caps. Savings could be gained by limiting the number of students allowed to enroll in the state's colleges and universities.

State board and university officials stress that limiting enrollment isn't the only option under consideration. Other alternatives include redefining how much money is spent in various disciplines within a university or college.

The board will discuss what kinds of programs should be offered and how to fund them—at its May 16 meeting in Lewiston.

Teton, Fremont voters will vote on forest management

ST. ANTHONY, Idaho—Voters in two eastern Idaho counties will be given an opportunity to say how they think a federal forest should be managed.

Officials will allow voters in Teton and Fremont counties to express opinions on management of the Targhee National Forest. County commissioners in Madison and Clark counties say they might join in.

The measure will be non-binding and advisory only.

Voters will be able to express their choice of alternatives in revising the forest's management plan. They will have a chance to endorse the option approved by forest officials, an alternative or an option that is more resource friendly.

In developing its draft plan revision, forest officials are considering seven options, including no action. Alternative 6 offers the greatest protection for wildlife and other resources by recommending more wilderness, less access, reduced timber harvesting and less grazing.

Federal land managers say their preferred option is in the middle between the intense resource use option and the most protectionist alternative.

Crapo names new campaign manager

BOISE—U.S. Representative Michael Crapo has selected congressional legislative director Will Hollier to serve as his re-election campaign manager.

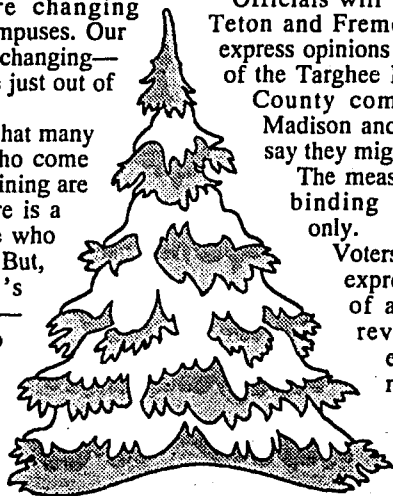

"He has spent a great deal of time in Idaho working with Idahoans on agriculture, national resources, health care and energy issues," said the representative for Idaho's 2nd District Congressional District.

"Will is meticulous in his study of issues, prodigious in his work output and has a tremendous work ethic," said Crapo.

Hollier first went to work for Crapo in 1993, taking responsibility for several issues. He was promoted to legislative director in 1995.

His campaign duties start on May 13. Hollier replaces Fred Wilson, who has been named Congressman Helen Chenoweth's new district director.

500-year-old mummy to be shown here despite objections in Peru

WASHINGTON—The frozen body of a girl sacrificed 500 years ago by the Incas of Peru will go on display in Washington May 21 despite objections from Peruvian scholars, the National Geographic Society said Wednesday.

Some Peruvian scholars have objected that transporting the body of the girl, who was about 13 when she died, might be risky and that it should be examined in Peru rather than abroad.

The society said air-conditioning experts at Carrier Corp. in Syracuse, N.Y., have designed two cases specially for the mummy to keep it frozen, one for air transport from Peru and another for its display in Washington. The display room will be kept at normal temperature for viewers.

The society said the Incas had a practice of taking children to a mountaintop at times of crisis and sacrificing them, probably to please their gods. Johan Reinhard, an American archaeologist, found the girl at 20,000 feet near the top of Mount Ampato in the Andes last October.

The archaeologists named her "Juanita," born probably in the late 15th or early 16th century—some time during 90 years that the Incas ruled Peru before the Spanish conquest of 1532-33, Ms. Moffet said.

Judge upholds table dancing ban

TACOMA—A Pierce County Superior Court judge has upheld a county law that keeps topless dancers out of reach of their customers.

The 2-year-old law requires the dancers to perform on stages that are at least 18 inches high and no less than 10 feet away from a customer. It's aimed at banning couch and table dancing.

The county will delay enforcement a month to give club owners time to build new stages and make other changes, Deputy Prosecutor Frank Krall said.

On Friday, Foxes attorney Gil Levy told Judge Thomas Sauriol that his decision would be challenged in the state Court of Appeals.

Sauriol's ruling isn't expected to have any impact in Tacoma, which has its own ordinance governing topless dancers. There are no topless dancing clubs in the city at this time.

Protesters call for legalization of marijuana

CAPE TOWN, South Africa—As a new constitution was approved in Parliament on Wednesday, protesters smoking marijuana and beating drums outside called for their "indigenous herb" to be legalized.

Dozens of demonstrators complained they had been ignored in the constitution-writing process. Some were from Green Earth Trading, which wants marijuana to be a cash crop because of its traditional role in some African societies.

"We call on the government to bring back our indigenous herb," a statement from the group said.

Despite a heavy police presence on hand for ceremonies marking ratification of the new constitution, no arrests were made.

Russian forces capture Chechen separatist stronghold

GROZNY, Russia—Russian troops captured the separatist stronghold of Goiskoye in southern Chechnya on Tuesday, and reportedly hit one of republic's largest towns with artillery and air attacks.

The commander of Russian army units in the break-away republic, Vladimir Shamanov, said some rebels in Goiskoye were "eliminated" and some left the village, which has been under Russian siege for weeks.

He said the rebels lost three armored personnel carriers, two artillery pieces and three anti-aircraft guns in the Russian attack, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported.

Goiskoye is located between Urus-Martan, 12 miles southwest of the capital of Grozny, and the village of Martan-Chu.

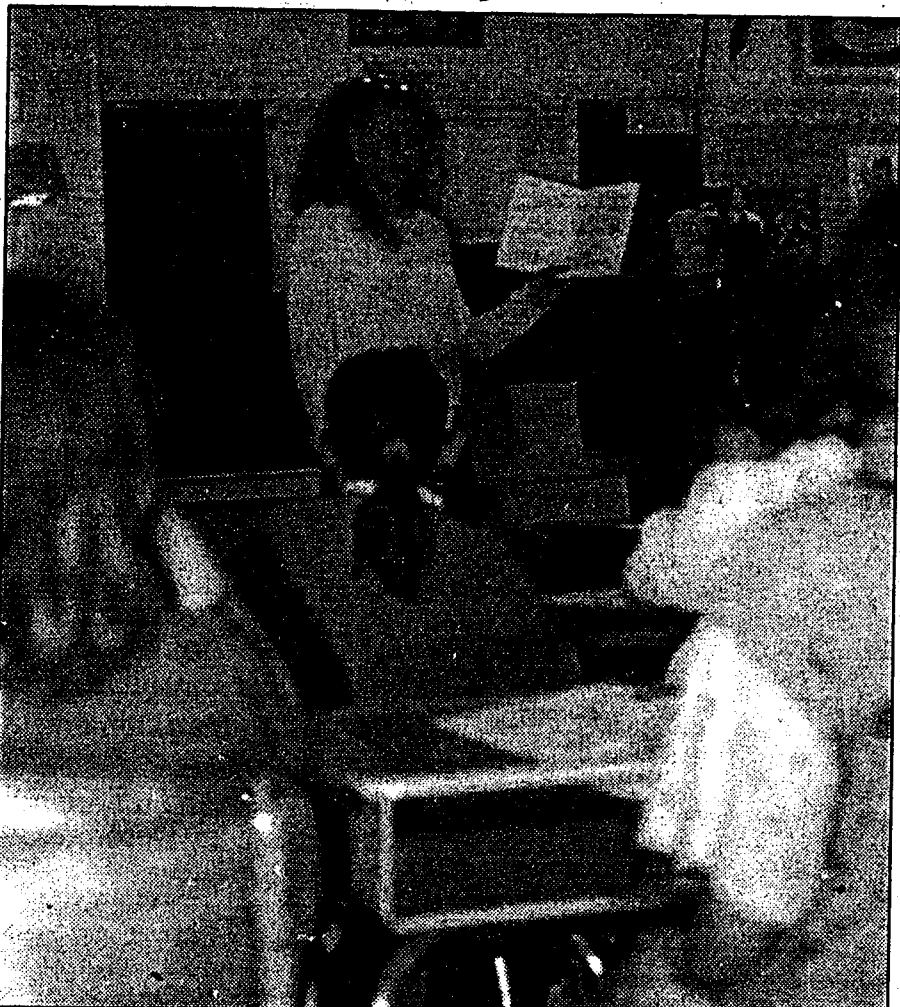

Both Urus-Martan and Martan-Chu came under Russian artillery barrages and helicopter strikes Tuesday, said Yusup Elmurzayev, the Chechnya's pro-Moscow administration.

Elmurzayev said two people were killed and eight seriously wounded in the attacks on Urus-Martan. In Martan-Chu, which has signed an agreement with the Russians pledging neutrality, three people were killed and about 10 were wounded by Grad and Uragan rockets, he said.

President Kane faces complaints of inaccessibility

Janet Birdsall
Staff

Some students have complained this week that ASUI President Brian Kane has not been keeping his office hours and has been inaccessible to students and others.

"Some of my office hours are at the same time as his," said Jennifer Moore, programs board chair. "There have been times I've looked for him, and he hasn't been anywhere in the building. Definitely not in his office."

"Countless times I went to talk to him and he wasn't there," said Senator Stormie Anderson, who was public relations chair for the senate this spring. "I'd leave messages in his box and he wouldn't respond to them."

But Kane denied the allegations.

"That's not true. I have made all my office hours." He said he is in the office more than the required 10 hours each week. "If I missed office hours it was because I was in a meeting or something."

He said he always responds to messages left for him.

Anderson said one time she came to the office and a businessman was waiting for Kane. He had an 8 a.m. appointment with Kane. Kane was not in the office so the man went out for breakfast and returned. Eventually he left and said he would come back or call later.

Activities Board Chair Mike Siren was in the office at the same time. He verified Anderson's account of the incident and said there were other times Kane had neglected his office hours.

Kane said he had contacted the person and worked everything out.

Kane called the complaints "finger pointing," and said, "I think it's petty. I work weekends, I work nights, and I carry a full load. I'm a student. I have 15-page papers due and tests to study for."

He said his accusers were being "unprofessional and irresponsible, and they should have come to him with their complaints first."

"Nobody's complained to me or voiced any concerns to me," Kane said. "I've never heard one word about missing office hours."

But Vice President John Tesnohlidek said he had heard Kane was missing office hours and talked to him about it. "I've talked to him about that a few times also, and he knows that students are concerned."

Kane said Tesnohlidek had asked him whether he was keeping his office hours, and Kane assured him that he was.

Tesnohlidek said Kane is in the office a lot. "He's there way more than he has to be," he said.

Student Union Director David Mucci said he hasn't experienced any problems reaching Kane.

"He's good about responding to e-mail or phone messages. He's doing the work. He may be taking care of business outside of hours," Mucci said.

But former Senator Sue Pierce said missing office hours is the same as stealing from students.

"We get paid a set wage for doing our office hours, and when Brian doesn't do his hours, he's getting paid for doing nothing. So it is stealing from the students," Pierce said.

Crafts fair, English high tea slated for Saturday

Janet Birdsall
Staff

An English tea party complete with scones and chamber music will be hosted this weekend by the Eastside Marketplace.

The menu will feature selections from Vera White, Palouse Palette editor. Tea sandwiches, cookies, cakes, scones and lemon curd will be served, said Donna Kendall, marketing director.

"The food for the tea is being prepared by Basically Bagels," Kendall said.

The tea begins at 1 p.m., and tickets are $8 for students, children and seniors and $10 for others. They can be purchased from marketplace merchants or at the door, but seating is limited to 100. Proceeds will benefit Latah Home Health Hospice.

Kendall said all of the marketplace's promotions focus on giving people a chance to be involved and help the community. The second annual event will be held in the Eastside Marketplace.

An arts and crafts fair is also scheduled for Saturday at the marketplace, as is the grand opening of Quilt Something, a new quilt shop.

Kendall said entrants for the arts and crafts fair were judged to determine which ones would get booths in the fair.

"We were very selective about who we let in," Kendall said. "We'll have real high-end crafts."

Hand painted Ukrainian eggs, dried floral arrangements, bird houses, hand-marbled paper, hand-painted cards and baskets, photography and jewelry will all be found at the fair, Kendall said. The fair will run from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Quilt Something's grand opening will include an exhibit of 10 original quilts highlighted in Water Color Log Cabin Quilts. Artists featured in the book will be signing books from 2 p.m. until 4 p.m.

"The quilts are just amazing. They're just beautiful," Kendall said.

The new store will also be holding drawings and awarding door prizes throughout the day.

Brothers win awards at College of Ag ceremonies

Andrew White

Aaron Ball and his brother Trent Ball have made an impact in the College of Agriculture. At the annual awards ceremony held by the College of Agriculture Trent Ball received the Capitol Press Outstanding Freshman Award and his brother, a senior, received the Outstanding Student in Agricultural Economics Award.

"It was pretty cool. It's actually something you couldn't dream up yourself. It's definitely something you can take home," Trent Ball said. Trent Ball is a food science major and Aaron is an agricultural business major. The Ball brothers are both from Rupert, Idaho, and have a family background in farming.

"It's a good way to finish off my years of school," said Aaron Ball who will be graduating next Saturday. UI has been a tremendous opportunity for the Ball brothers. "It's been really cool. I've loved it," Aaron Ball said.

Trent Ball was recently selected as a college ambassador for the College of Agriculture.

"Once again, it's another honor. It's a selective group, and it's a way for me to reach out to high school students and inform them about agriculture in general," Trent Ball said. "The College of Agriculture is loaded with excellent professors and faculty and personally it's the wave of the future."

Professor Joe Guenther was also honored at the awards ceremony as College of Agriculture teacher of the year. Guenther is an agricultural economist who earned his Ph.D. at Washington State University and has been a member of the faculty of UI since 1980.

Wenkai Li's attorney seeks change of venue

Associated Press

The attorney for accused double murderer Wenkai Li is seeking a change of venue and a jury from outside Latah County for the July trial of the former University of Idaho graduate student from China.

Wenkai Li, 25, is scheduled to stand trial on two counts of first-degree murder for the May 29, 1995, stabbing deaths of UI doctoral student Ning Li and his wife, Xia Ge.

Wenkai Li pleaded guilty last November to one count of first-degree murder and one count of second-degree murder. Prosecutors agreed not to seek the death penalty in exchange for the guilty pleas, and 2nd District Judge John Bengtson initially accepted the agreement.

But after hearing unexpected testimony from Wenkai Li at his sentencing hearing, a frustrated Bengtson rejected the plea agreement and stepped down from the case.

Second District Judge Ida Rudolph Leggett has taken over.

The request for a change of venue was among 10 pretrial motions filed this week by Moscow attorney Michael Henegen, acting as public defender for Wenkai Li.

Henegen blamed Latah County commissioners for negative pretrial publicity, particularly regarding recent accusations over alleged excessive billing hours. And in light of extensive media coverage of the case, it would be impossible to pick a jury of Latah County residents, he argued.

Henegen also asked that the Abandoned bikes to be removed after finals

Alissa Arndt
Staff

The University of Idaho's Parking and Information Services will begin removing abandoned bicycles from the UI campus May 20. The project will continue through June 7.

All students who are leaving the campus for the summer, or permanently, are asked to store their bikes in a secure holding area in the residence halls or at their residences.

After May 20 all bikes on campus that do not appear to have been used recently will be tagged with a brightly colored tag. These tags will inform owners that bikes have been identified as abandoned. Tagged bikes will be removed after three days. UI does not assume liability for bikes or locks damaged during the removal.

This three week project is being carried out to free up bike racks and clean up the campus. Pamela Alsterlund, Manager of Parking and Information Services, said, "We've had some bikes on campus that have been there for two or three years."

The bikes will immediately be turned over to the Moscow Police Department. The bikes will be booked into the police department by make, brand, serial number and description. Registered bikes can be picked up by their owners at the MPD.

Police Captain Dale Mickelson said unregistered bikes can be picked up by owners with proof of ownership. "We're willing to work with people," Mickelson said.

If people have lost proof of ownership bikes can usually be claimed with an adequate description. "We would prefer that they remove them in advance," Mickelson said.

Allergy season hits students

Symptoms could indicate more serious illnesses

Jennifer Eng

Staff

It's the sniffing, sneezing, coughing, sick season. University of Idaho students have headed to Student Health Services in swarms the past few weeks with complaints of the season.

Dr. Donald Chin, the director of SHS said, "We've had more sickness the last few weeks than usual."

Before you ignore your symptoms and pass them off as allergies or the common cold, look a little closer. Chin said SHS is seeing a lot of bronchitis, allergies and even some pneumonia and strep throat.

If a person's symptoms are a fever, shortness of breath and a persistent and nagging cough with yellow phlegm they may have bronchitis.

Chin said the danger of bronchitis is it can turn into pneumonia without the person knowing it.

Bronchitis is an inflammation of the mucus membranes of the bronchial tubes. Dr. Thurston of Gritman Medical Center said bronchitis is spread through throat and nasal droplets from an infected persons cough or sneeze.

"It usually comes on in the spring and fall," Thurston said. Living in close quarters such as a fraternity or a residence hall can spread the infection quickly.

In the past two weeks SHS has seen two or three cases of pneumonia per week.

If a person suspects they may have bronchitis Chin suggests they go to the doctor and have it checked out. In most cases bronchitis can be treated quickly and effectively with antibiotics.

Some students are coming up to SHS with symptoms of strep throat. However a visual exam will not determine whether or not the person has strep, only a throat culture can tell.

"We are seeing a lot of people coming in with allergy complaints," Chin said.

The difference between allergies and the common cold, Chin said, are itchy eyes and nasal passages. The most important rule of thumb is, if the eyes and nasal passages are itchy, it's probably allergies.

Allergies are easy to control with over-the-counter antihistamines. However, Chin said some of these drugs may sedate the person taking them.

Tesnohldek said he didn't realize Averitt was going to be in Alaska for the summer, but was surprised that Kane might require her to be here for office hours.

"I can't believe that he could expect her to be here on such short notice," he said. He was unsure when he would officially resign. He said it would depend on when he got his summer projects finished.

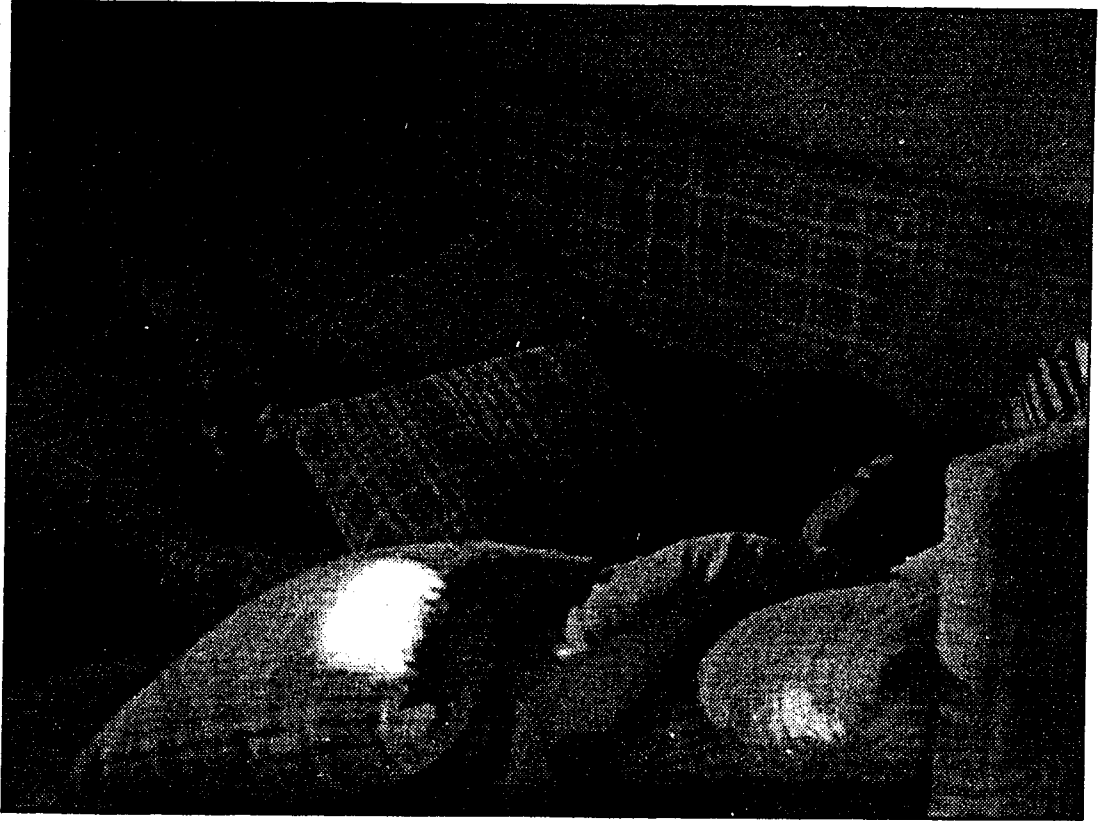

Pierce said there's very little to do in the senate over the summer.

"I was here last summer and there was nothing to do," she said.

Houck echoed her comment. "What does the vice president do over the summer? Not much, really," Houck said.

Averitt said she was not going to back out of her job in Alaska. "I would feel very bad having this prior commitment to this company. That's not something I take lightly."

UI student to study in Cambridge with Fulbright award

Christopher Clancy

Staff

While many graduate and undergraduate students are packing up and heading home for the summer, at least one a Fulbright Award winner, will be packing for a different kind of journey—an international one. Rashmi Yadav of Nampa is the graduate winner of this year's Fulbright Competition.

Yadav was chosen from 13 candidates in last year's competition and will be attending Cambridge in fall 1996 studying as part of a one year master's program in biological science.

After graduating last year, Yadav applied for the award, but said it was not something she had been planning to do for very long and that, while the process is very competitive, she encourages others to apply.

"If you give a 100 percent, with a little luck you can get it. It's really something that anyone can apply for. The key is having a strong proposal and personal statement," she said.

Fulbright Awards are intended for graduate students and faculty hoping to conduct post-graduate studies, lectureships or research abroad while "increasing mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge and skills," according to the Institute of International Education, and the William J. Fulbright Foreign Scholarships Board, co-sponsored by the Federal Government.

The official opening for this year's competitution was May 1. Winners of the prestigious award can receive round-trip travel abroad, housing, maintenance of tenure and insurance. The awards are available in separate competitions, one filled by graduate students and one for post graduate studies, usually filled by university faculty, Associate Director of International Programs Gleanne Wray said.

The grants are funded by the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange act of 1961 through an annual appropriation by Congress and are only available to U.S. citizens holding at least a bachelor's degree or its equivalent by May 1, 1996, Wray said.

The highly competitive awards are widely sought and require a working knowledge of the language in the country of study. The application process can be lengthy, Wray said. All applicants are screened in four separate stages, beginning at the university and then moving to national and international committees in turn.

Twenty-five UI professors have received the award, including one of Yadav's mentors, Honors Program Director, Professor Daniel Zirckner, who spent 10 months at Dares Salaam in Tanzania as part of the Fulbright Lectureships Program in 1989 and 1990.

"It's a multifaceted program. We are very pleased with Rashmi's success. It's a phenomenal accomplishment."

For more information on Fulbright applications contact Wray at the International Programs Office at 885-8984.

GOOD LUCK ON FINALS!

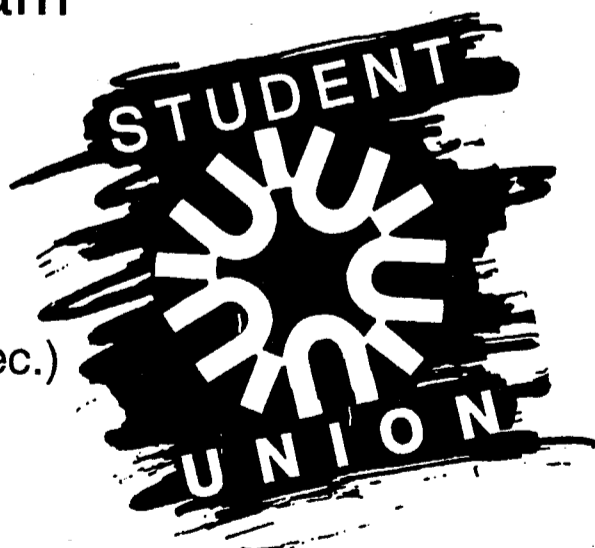

The staff at the Student Union would like to thank the following graduating seniors for their service and dedication to the students and to the Union. Congratulations, and best of luck in your future!

"I expected that we would do well, but I didn't expect to do this well," Meehan said.

Up against such large schools as the University of Michigan, Texas A&M and Montana Tech, the UI win is truly impressive. Where some schools had up to 17 students working on one task, the UI had only two.

"These students should be recognized and commended. It was their project and their hard work that won it," Admassu said.

The team members also attribute their success to the technicians that helped construct the designs.

"All we did was come up with the ideas and these guys really constructed the models," Doten said.

"The technicians might as well be magicians, we couldn't have done it without them," Newton said.

Females searching for bathrooms are frustrated

Shawn Vidmar
Staff

Finding a place to go isn't always so easy.

Women often have to walk past male bathrooms, go to a different floor or stand in long lines in order to relieve themselves between classes.

Newer buildings provide equal facilities but the older buildings are often severely lacking.

In the Janssen Engineering Building, women need a map to find the restrooms. The male bathrooms are well lit and accessible. Every floor has this same floor plan.

"It would make more sense if they at least alternated the big bathrooms between male and female per floor," Molly Hamann, an engineering student, said.

JEB, erected in 1949, compensated for their severe lack of women's facilities by converting the dean's personal bathroom into a public women's bathroom and adding one which is only accessible by way of the copier room. The latter isn't heated so in the winter it is quite chilly. Both of these facilities only have one toilet and one sink, juxtaposed with the men's room which has three stalls, three urinals and three sinks.

Jean Teasdale, director of administrative services in the College of Engineering, said a meeting was held with architects remodeling the building to accommodate more females, but this wouldn't affect the JEB for at least three years.

In Agricultural Science, also constructed in 1949, there are four men's rooms and four women's rooms.

Other buildings around campus are equally lacking. The Metallurgical-Mining Engineering Building, built in 1960, was also lacking in female representation. The Sixth Street side entrance floor housed one locking unisex bathroom. The second floor has one men's bathroom and females have to trek to the third floor, which has two stalls. There are often lines between classes because there are only three toilets in the whole building in which women can use.

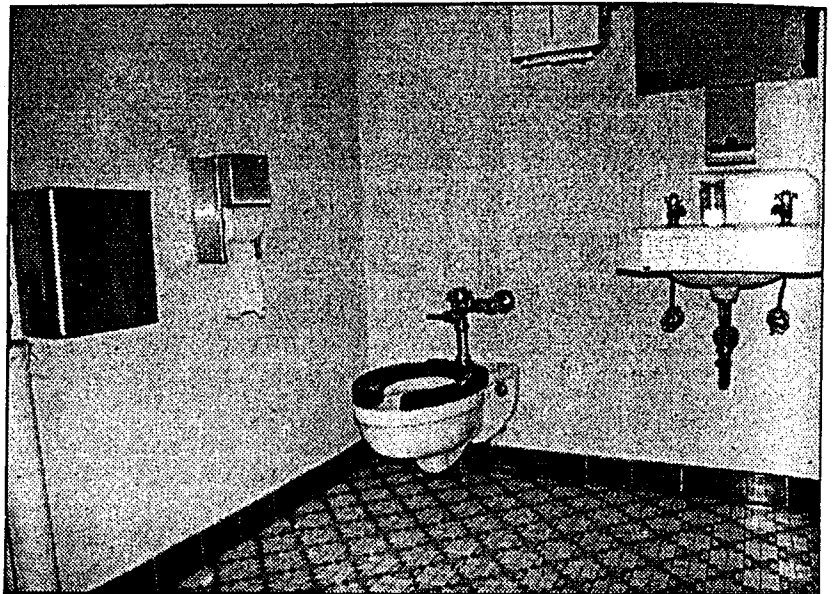

"It's frustrating to be waiting in line while watching men walk into the bathroom in twos and threes," Hamann said. Meanwhile, women will continue to search for the hidden nooks which house the out of the way bathrooms. The departments have been given money to remodel but apparently they aren't doing it.

It is costly to retrofit a building with plumbing and new bathroom facilities, but perhaps the situation should be rectified by alternating bathrooms between the sexes.

Batt warns business will be target if tax initiative passes

Associated Press

BOISE—Gov. Phil Batt has warned Boise civic leaders that business will likely become the target for replacement tax revenue if voters approved the One Percent Initiative capping property taxes.

Speaking to the Boise Metro Rotary Club on Tuesday, Batt repeated his contention that the initiative will merely shift an estimated $225 million in tax revenues, not reduce the overall burden by that amount.

And with 70 percent of the property taxes now being paid by businesses—making them the biggest beneficiary of the 1 percent property tax cap—the governor predicts there will be pressure to cover the lost property tax receipts with new taxes on business.

“I don’t think it is realistic to say we can absorb this change without raising other taxes,” Batt said. Among other problems, he pointed out that property tax is the only tax deductible against both state and federal income taxes, limiting its actual financial impact on individual property owners. Shifting to other taxes removes that government subsidy.

While he has declined to directly oppose the measure that will be on the November ballot, Batt has disputed anti-tax activist Ron Rankin’s claim that the lost property tax revenue can be accommodated with budget reductions.

The initiative limits property taxes to 1 percent of taxable value and prohibits their use for education. At the same time, it requires the state to make up the $150 million in property taxes that now pay for public education and prohibits local governments from reducing police, fire or emergency medical services in coping with the estimated $75 million revenue loss the cap would subject them to.

The state currently spends half of its $1.4 billion general tax budget on public school aid and another 20 percent on college and vocational education. That leaves only about 30 percent of the budget—about $400 million—to squeeze the $150 million for education and come up with some additional cash to supplement local government services affected by the initiative. Over half that $400

Death of lottery winner leaves wives squabbling over proceeds

Associated Press

TACOMA, Wash.—Elmer Sessions died two years after winning more than $2.5 million in the Arizona lottery. Five years later, his first and third wives are still squabbling over the proceeds.

Last week the Washington state Court of Appeals ruled that the law in Texas, where Sessions was first married, should determine how his assets are split.

The ruling Friday by a three-judge panel reversed a lower court ruling in favor of his third wife, Barbara, whose lawyer argued that Washington law should be applied.

Under Texas law, his first wife, Rosalie, from whom he apparently never obtained a divorce, could be entitled to one-fourth of his estate. Under Washington law Barbara might get the entire estate if she could prove that the first marriage was defunct.

The unanimous decision describes the case as follows:

Elmer and Rosalie Sessions were married in 1941 and their daughter, Bonnie Seizer, now her mother's guardian, was born a year later.

They lived in Houston until 1954, then began moving frequently because of Elmer's work in the oil business.

In 1954, Rosalie was hospitalized for mental health treatment in New York state. Elmer drove her and her daughter back to Houston to live with Rosalie's parents, returned to New York, then told the family about a year later he was leaving and never spoke with them again after 1957.

Seizer was quoted as saying Rosalie has been "out of touch with reality" since 1954.

Elmer married again in 1955, obtained a divorce from his second wife in 1982 and then married Barbara in 1984 while living in Washington State.

In September 1989, on an extended business trip to Tucson, Ariz., the couple bought a state lottery ticket that returned $2,576,908.30, with net payments of $97,922.53 annually for 20 years after deductions for income tax.

Elmer died 23 months later. Seizer filed suit on behalf of Rosalie in 1992. Her claim was dismissed but has now been reinstated by the appeals court.

In reconsidering the case, the appeals panel wrote, a key issue will be who bought the lottery ticket.

Barbara Sessions claims she did, but it was Elmer who signed it and listed Barbara as beneficiary when it was redeemed.

Clinton's big lead likely to shrink, history suggests

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—President Clinton's double-digit lead in the polls is impressive no matter how you look at it. But pollsters and political strategists say polls this far before an election can be deceptive and that Clinton's huge lead will almost certainly shrink.

"Don't pay any attention to polls," suggests Michael Dukakis, who as the 1988 Democratic presidential nominee briefly led George Bush by 17 points. "These things are nothing but a snapshot months in advance of the actual contest."

Clinton is leading presumptive GOP nominee Bob Dole by 15-21 points in most national polls. However, even some of Clinton's most ardent loyalists don't think that level is sustainable.

"The pendulum on our side is stretched all the way out here and you can hear the cable groaning and it's about to snap back and hit us in the face," White House press secretary Mike McCurry said earlier this week.

Four years ago this week, President Bush was leading in the polls with Dallas billionaire Ross Perot closing in fast. Perot moved ahead in some national polls in May 1992. Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, who hadn't even clinched the Democratic nomination yet, was stuck in third—where he would remain until July.

"Voters are completely unanchored this early in the election process," said GOP pollster Frank Luntz. "A bad event in Bosnia or another ethical scandal could evaporate that lead in a matter of days, because it is not a hard lead. Voters have a very short attention span, which is why you get these wide swings at this point in the election."

Frank Newport, editor-in-chief of the Gallup Poll, said that "people are making up their minds as they go," which is why polling figures change so much. "It's the rare election that what you see six months out stays absolutely the same to the election."

Even so, Newport considers Clinton's lead—21 points in a Gallup poll taken at the end of April—impressive. "Clinton not only enjoys a 21-point lead. He also enjoys 56 percent incumbent approval. Both these are strong indicators of incumbent strength."

Dukakis jumped in front of Bush in May 1988 and expanded that lead to 17 points after the Democratic National Convention in July 1988 but went on to lose in a landslide.

The former Massachusetts governor, now a political science professor at Northeastern University, pointed to last winter's GOP primaries as an example of how political fortunes can shift.

Polls showed Dole to be ahead in New Hampshire, for instance, then showed Steve Forbes to be ahead and finally the contest was won by Pat Buchanan.

"We're all spending much too much time looking at these numbers," Dukakis said in an interview. He said there are too many polls and they're taken too early. "One of the things that is happening is people are making their decisions much later."

In his own case, Dukakis said he was never lulled by the polls. "I never had the slightest doubt that it was going to be a very tough race. I thought we had a shot at winning, and I still do frankly, if we had done a better job in those last two or three months. But I never thought for a minute that I was 17 points ahead."

judge not be allowed to order the death penalty. He said Li had gained from the earlier plea agreement by avoiding the death penalty, but that prosecutors gained much more by having access to all defense information and theories of the case.

As a result, Henegen said, prosecutors can essentially use Li's cooperation in the plea agreement process against him to seek the death penalty.

In another motion Henegen moved to bar some prosecution evidence, including several pieces of testimony and DNA evidence of a speck of blood found on a knife allegedly purchased by Wenkai Li.

He also asked that the victims' relatives not be allowed to testify.

Since the defense is willing to concede Wenkai Li caused the victims' deaths, Henegen said, the relatives have no additional evidence pertinent to the case.

Ten candidates back out of May primary

Associated Press
BOISE—Ten would-be Idaho legislators withdrew from the May 28 primary contests.

In some cases, that has provided incumbent legislators with a "free ride."

Nampa Democrat Dale L. Wheeler opted to drop his challenge to veteran Sen. Atwell Parry, R-Melba, less than a week after he filed for the office. Parry faces no other Republican or Democratic opponent.

Likewise, Rep. Paul Kjellander, R-Boise, could win re-election by default after Chris Brewer of Boise opted to abandon his Republican primary challenge.

The rest of the candidacy withdrawals either ended a primary challenge or simply narrowed the field. In the Treasure Valley, they included:

Republican Todd Foxall of Boise withdrew his challenge to Rep.

Debbie Field, R-Boise. Her Democratic opponent is Ralph Sword of Boise.

Democrat Kathleen R. Waddell of Boise dropped out of the District 15 Senate contest. That means Democrat John F. Hart will face the winner of the primary contest between Sen. John Andreason, R-Boise, and Mark H. Stahl of Eagle.

Boise Democrat Robin Young, who ended a bid for the District 16 Senate seat. That leaves Keith Tackman as the Democratic nominee. He'll face Sen. Cecil Ingram, R-Boise, in November.

James E. Bruce of Boise dropped out of the Republican field of candidates seeking the District 19 Senate seat. But primary contests on both sides remain. On the Democratic side, Betsy Dunklin faces Kendra S. Kenyon while Judy Peavey-Derr and Gordon D. Trounson are battling for the Republican nomination.

million finances the state's share of Health and Welfare Department programs and another $75 million pays for adult and juvenile corrections departments. What is left is less than $130 million from programs such as the state police, the courts, parks, water resources, state land management and economic development.

Batt acknowledged the public distaste for property taxes despite the relatively low property tax burden in Idaho compared to other states, and he contended that the 3 percent cap on annual increases in property tax-financed government budgets included in his 1995 property tax reduction package has had an impact on checking skyrocketing tax bills.

But he also conceded that the package—including over $40 million in state-financed property tax reductions—was not sufficient for Rankin, who qualified his initiative for the November ballot almost three months early.

Dopp, Sasse bid adieu, 'til summer

Well, this is our last hoorah. Dopp as Argonaut editor in chief and Sasse as opinion editor. As they—don't ask who "they" are—say, "Out with the old, in with the new."

Corinne Flowers, aka Cori, will take over starting this summer. The summer Argonaut will be back starting May 30 on a once-a-week basis. Cori will be making lots of changes. Read her column in last Tuesday's paper for more information. She needs more writers 'n' stuff. So come on up to the third floor and fill out an application. We would love to have your expertise and quality writing.

The fact that two old timers like Dopp and Sasse are leaving will make change and consequently, improvement much easier. We are very set in our ways.

Students will have a new ASUI Senate, off-campus students, make sure you go to Senator Jennifer Gish with your problems. She is supposed to represent you next year, even though you don't matter or care. We're not sure who will be worse off: the off-campus students or Gish.

ASUI Senator Chris Houck will have a new cactus.

Almost every student at the University of Idaho will have the new Vandal Card bearing the AT&T deathstar logo. There's rumor going 'round that Tim "the Cardman" Taylor said if you don't like that logo then you can cover it up with a sticker or deface it some way or another. Why make us wait two years and then say we can deface the logo as we please? For the love of God, we don't understand. What we do understand is that it's a waste of money.

The new university president will take over in July.

Good luck, Bob Hoover.

We're sure another student will fall out of a window or off a building next year. It's inevitable. It's expected at UI. From now on, wear pads to campus parties. The Greek System and Residence Halls need to redesign their damn buildings so there are no second or third floor windows to fall out of. Don't go anywhere near windows while you're drunk, and don't stick your buttocks against a window. Not only will you look stupid, they're not smart ideas.

Taxes and Taco Bell. It's just too damn much. Face it, none of us cares if Taco Bell and Marriott end up paying another $2,200 in taxes. Frankly, it is hard as a student to sympathize with either the county or the university. They are fighting over a pittance.

Latah County, what does having the university do for you? Could we serve as your single largest source of capital? Duh! Moscow exists only because of UI.

Marriott, with your inflated prices and no taxes, you can't afford to kick a little cash into the county coffers?

Will we ever get anymore Coca-Cola machines on campus? Will Pepsi share the wealth a bit?

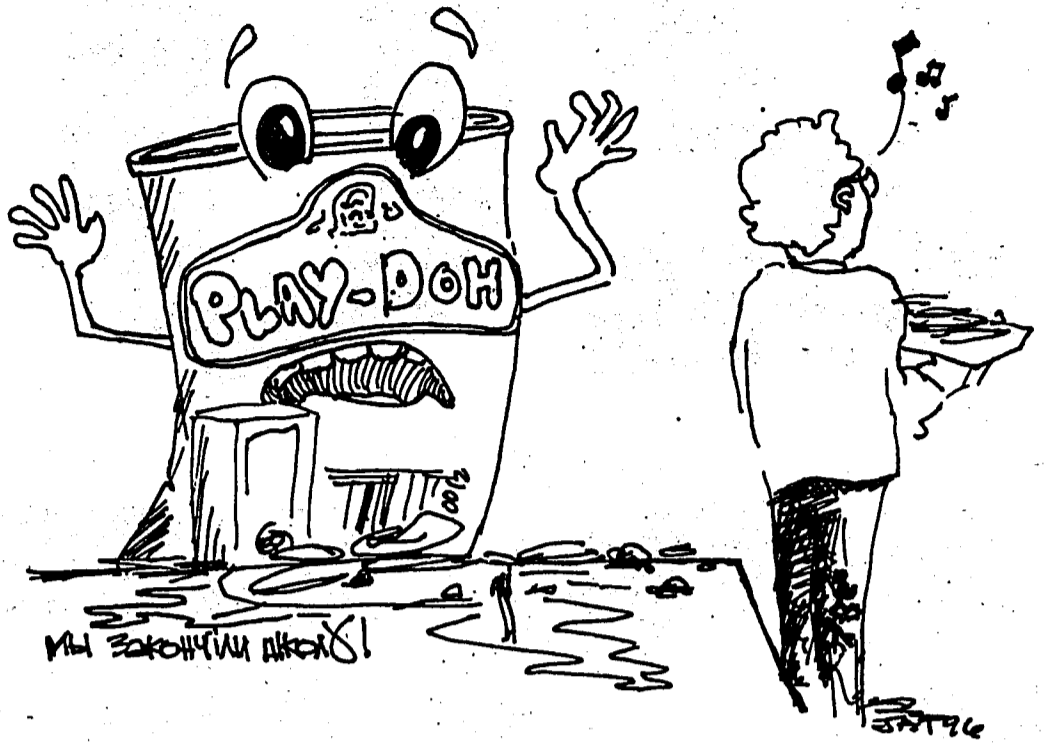

Will the insanity ever stop?!

A little taste of 'Going Postal'

Up until last Friday, whenever I read in the paper of a disgruntled postal employee barging into his or her place of work with various high- or low-caliber shooting devices—either in their hands or hidden clandestinely in their clothing—and using said weapons to put holes in random bits of postal machinery, packages, letters and/or employees, I wondered what kind of liquid drain opener they had been drinking.

Last Friday I got a tiny taste of what they may have been feeling.

Due to an acute case of poverty, I took an on-campus job at the end of February to pay the rent. As of this printing I still have to work there one more week, so I will not reveal the location of my place of work, but will say only 1) They employ many students on a part-time basis, and 2) They seem to have a pretty high turnover rate.

It's no great secret where I work that I am far from competent. My areas of expertise outside of this part-time job range from weekly opportunities at pontification to apprentice bricklaying. The place I work now basically hired me (and nearly every other part-timer there) because I was a semi-willing potential addition to their general slave pool. They didn't really give a fig if I could read—let alone if I had other, more pertinent job skills.

Where I work, new employees are encouraged to ask questions of their superiors if they are not sure of the proper procedures required to fulfill the goals of an unfamiliar task. If I were a non-thinking lump of moldy Play-Doh, this philosophy would work fine. But since I am—as are your average university students—capable of independent thought and have access to stored memories of experiences with similar jobs performed principally nonprofessionally in the past, I figured I could safely bypass the time-consuming question-and-answer period and demonstrate to my bosses that not only I can read but also that I am capable of thinking and reasoning on my own.

Boy was I wrong.

I bypassed the ask-questions-if-you-don't-know philosophy but fell victim to a wily and well-oiled trap: I didn't know that I didn't know. So I screwed up.

Not knowing that I had screwed up, however, I carelessly left evidence of my incompetence in a plainly visible area where other employees could see it.

Now, this is where the disgruntled postal clerk analogy starts to make a little sense.

An employee of another department wandered through my area and saw the blatant evidence of my incompetence. Rather than speaking directly to me about the problem, (see note on employees at this place being referred to as non-thinking lumps of moldy Play-Doh) this employee stared in adulterated disgust at the "mess" I had made, the remains of which lay not 3 yards from where I stood, most likely blissfully busy at

Mother's Day recalls young memories

That "day" is looming again. If we could get through it with the special little handmade cards and kisses it might be tolerable. But Mother's Day isn't so simple. Set aside as a day for remembering the central role mothers play in most family units—the intention sounds innocent enough. But, unless you selectively choose your memories, motherhood is a paradox.

It's a swollen heart watching a first school bus ride. It's the swollen tear drained eyes for failing to be the parent you think you should be. It's the pungent flowery mass of silky hair sliding against your cheek and up your nose during a spontaneous hug. It's oatmeal on the front of your dress discovered during a job interview. It's messy diapers, mountains of laundry, unfinished homework, blaring television, music and mouths.

It's watching your son, Bobby, skip in from school and race to gear up for his baseball game only to see him sit most of the time on the bench. It's unrestrained belly laughs and shaking, sobbing shoulders. Having one whole day—the calendar companies make sure we all know when it is—immortalized to relive this again for the sake of sentimentality is tough. I'd rather sit in the back 40 with a Corona watching the sun go down. I used to have this whole motherhood thing figured out, especially before I had my first child. I had it nailed because I watched and mentally recorded all of my mother's mistakes. I also never missed sending her a Mother's Day card or flowers.

Now I know I have nothing figured out and wished I could give her flowers everyday. I wished I had expended less energy gloating over her human frailties and more appreciating her face, her hands, her heart and her brown eyes.

As the years have rolled past and four children have found their way into my arms and my heart I've committed myself to many things. One promise I made when I was in fourth grade was that my children would always, always have sharp crayons. They do. And lots of paper. They do.

Now I also let them see me cry. And I say I'm sorry. And I let them be right...sometimes. As a mother, I have never been so painfully aware of my own frailties. I never realized how closely they resemble those I once pounced upon in my mother.

Now I watch my own face changing in the mirror. I see dish soap bubbles drip from hands that were once my mothers. I listen to a heart torn over the things my mother must have considered. Sometimes I want to tell the bus driver to stop. I need a drink of sanity in that oasis over there. But there is no driver. And motherhood is a one-way ride to the end. And you do the best you can with whatever tools you've got.

As I write, Emily—our family's newest addition, an 8-month-old bundle of curiosity—must repeatedly be dissuaded from eating the cat's food. She's instead decided to eat the Suzuki Violin Book 1 which belonged to her older sister, Anna. We never got to Book 2, so I guess it doesn't matter.

The remembrance of what it was once like to concentrate drifts past my mind like walking into the fringes of an elusive intoxicating scent. Now I work mostly when she sleeps, conforming my schedule around hers.

As she sleeps, I blaze away at my keyboard. I also slip away to watch her back rise and fall as she breathes. I smell her baby smell and notice her body is taking up more space in her bed than it did just yesterday. Everyday is Mother's Day for me and every other mother in the world.

Grow up and take it!

Letters to the Editor

The time to vote is now

Attention Republicans. This month you have the chance to make a difference in how your views are represented in Boise by your state Senator. Your current Senator does not deserve to have Republican after his name. He consistently votes with the Democrats on key issues such as education, taxes, budgets and the family.

However, I am running in the Republican primary to establish conservative, principled representation for you in the Idaho state Senate and the differences between my opponent and I are as clear as black and white.

I believe that limited government is the best government; I believe that parents and children have the right to decide how they will be educated, not the government; I believe the second amendment guarantees the right of all law-abiding citizens to own firearms; I believe that human life should be protected from conception onward; I believe the institution of marriage between a man and a woman is granted by God, and should be protected by man; I believe education is important to our society and should be reformed with meaningful, long term solutions; and, I believe that Idaho's citizen Legislature is just that, and should not be dominated by career politicians, so I support term limits.

My promise to you is that I will base every decision I make, every speech I give, and every vote I cast on the beliefs that you and I hold dear to our hearts.

If you agree with what I have said, and know that I will represent your views in the Idaho state Senate, please vote in the Republican primary on May 28 for Daniel Whiting in Senate District 5.

If you will be gone on May 28, you can vote right now at the Latah County Courthouse on Sixth Street. If you need to register, you can do it there too, just bring two pieces of ID and proof that you have lived in Moscow more than 30 days. If you have questions, their number is 882-8580.

If you have questions, comments, or would like to help establish principled representation by your Senator, please give me a call at 883-4837. I look forward to hearing from you.

Controversy; that's what it's all about. And boy, did I have to learn the hard way. Sometimes a journalist has to actually form an opinion on something. After years of having "just the facts" pounded into my overworked brain, I find it hard just to take a side! Now I'm discovering the flip-side of my job: the educated opinion.

I can't please all of the people all of the time. Take for example my article this spring regarding University Residences and Facilities Management. I admit, I was rather harsh, but what I told you was the absolute truth. I've been dealing with the noisy power plant and broken elevators for two years. It was time for someone to say something.

I didn't realize the ruckus such an opinion would cause. The Argonaut received letters from people, including the Residence Hall Association, telling me to lighten up. Seeing as my beef was not with the RHA but with the University Residences themselves, I have no problem saying they're right. I should lighten up.

Actually, I am a member of RHA. As co-historian of Neely Hall I've worked on hall events, including making a fool out of myself during GDI Week. I regret not being able to do more this semester, but I still wear my Neely Hall T-shirts with pride.

I won't miss the hall itself, but the people will be tough to leave. Chell and Poe, and Frog (my hero) will always have a place in my heart. They are welcome to bake cookies at my new place any time.

These friends of mine understood perfectly what I was saying in my article. Although they did their best to try to convince me to stay, it was just time for me to go. Two years is long enough. But they were there through broken elevators, smoking power plants and 5:30 a.m. fire drills with me. They knew it wasn't them I wanted to leave, it was the atmosphere.

Let me tell you a bit about my new place. I have a real kitchen and a huge refrigerator, so now I can cook my own food and keep it without going bad right away. No one will be cooking my meals for me, which means I know what's going into them. I have my own bathroom, which I only have to share with my roommate. At least I know she won't leave used tampons on the shower floor, which happens quite a bit in the res. hall. The TV is all mine, and I don't have to turn it down at 11 p.m. Not to mention my own parking place in a fully lit parking lot right next to my front door.

They've been working to improve things around there, but a healthy voice of opposition is needed to get people off their butts.

So, here at the end of this column, I will tell you that I am going to be that voice of opposition. I'll be taking over the position of opinion editor next fall, where I can do more damage to the paper. The section will look different and the letter policy will change, but you've still got a wide-open forum to stress your opinion.

And maybe people will be against you, too!

I just finished reading The Giver by Lois Lowry. I bought it during one of those book fairs at Lacey's school.

As it happens sometimes, I picked it up for something to look at while I was nursing Emily one night. I finished it before the sun rose.

In The Giver, an old man must transfer his "memories" to his young charge who will be taking over his responsibility as the keeper of his community's memories.

The Giver first initiates the boy with only the sweetest memories. He shows him what color really is since their community has sunken into a safe reality with only hues of gray. He lets the boy experience the rush of wind through his hair on a sled ride, since there are no hills, or snow or sleds in their contemporary community of "sameness."

But then the boy experiences memories of death and hatred and despair. And he realizes the unfairness of one man shouldering all of these memories so others are spared the discomfort.

A hand-made Mother's Day card sits on my computer monitor. Lacey made it for me yesterday. She pointed out that, well, it's not perfect because she put the confetti on too late. There's a bare spot, sorry.

God bless your bare spots Lacey. God bless all our bare spots. Let's share them daily.

messing up yet another project. This employee grunted in disgust as eyeballs bulged. My immediate supervisor was summoned and a whispered and heated discussion ensued—still not even 3 yards away from where my spying ears could intercept every word they said.

"Look at this mess he made," one said.

"Seems you have to hold these students by the hand at all times," said the other.

The whistleblower walked off smugly as the boss sternly lectured me on the error of my ways, then departed—only after concealing the evidence of my shame with a white cardboard box.

I understand their methodology was aimed at softening the blow on my ego as my incompetence was revealed. Had they come to their conclusions, however, in any other place instead of right in front of me—speaking about me as if I were not busily listening and having my ego flattened not 3 yards away—their tactics may have worked perfectly. My boss showed tact through the explanation of my errors. How that explanation came about is another story.

Apply this to any inexperienced worker: We are cognizant of our inexperience, yet wish to express initiative, individuality and foresight by reasoning through what we perceive as simple problems on our own, without badgering the bosses with a thousand questions—lest we appear spineless and unsure of even our most basic skills. We thus proceed through a task using what we know from similar past experiences, not knowing the precise expectations our supervisors have in relation to the task being performed.

When the boss realizes the task has not been performed in accordance with those expectations, he or she will tactfully teach the inexperienced worker in the exact nuances of the task, while rudely clicking tongues with coworkers over the newcomer's incompetence.

As we all know, the only things which spread faster than rumors in any place of work are stories of incompetence, so sooner or later (and often directly from the boss' mouth, as in my case) that employee will hear exaggerated stories in which they have top billing as Lead Moron, thus countering any softening effect the gentle teaching had on them earlier.

So to dispel these rumors, the employee will either denote him or herself as a spineless, mindless wimp incapable of independent thought by asking the boss every possible question about every unfamiliar task that rolls down the pike, or will try to prove to the boss—using the predetermined schemes that got them in trouble in the first place—they are not mindless lumps of moldy Play-Doh and either complete the job to the boss' satisfaction or screw up once again, thus perpetuating the cycle until competence is achieved through trial and error or something snaps and voices start saying "I'll come to work tomorrow. With the .45 I got at the gun show."

I am not trying to condone sloppy work or incompetence in any way. But as Forrest says, incompetence happens. Even in the most competent of individuals.

Bosses are beholden to issue precise instructions, be alert to avoid potential "catastrophe" and avoid the temptation to gossip with coworkers about brain farts committed by their lower minions.

Employees are beholden to follow preset schemes with the idea they may not be 100 percent correct and be ready to ask precise questions without fear of resembling a lump of moldy Play-Doh.

Both parties should have thick enough skins and bright enough brains to realize errors will happen and really don't amount to much in the broad scheme of things—especially since it was only a lousy handful of green onions.

Are team nicknames "politically correct?"

Dan Eckles

The most visible controversy in recent years involving sports in the print media has been the use of nicknames, which could be construed as "politically incorrect."

Speaking of politically incorrect, that's not the PC term anymore is it? I thought the PC term for PC was culturally unaware.

Anyway, these nicknames i.e. Washington Redskins, Cleveland Indians and Atlanta Braves have brought some outcry from the Native American population and other bored extremists across the United States, the argument being these names are demeaning and distasteful. Some newspapers, including The Oregonian, based in Portland, Ore., and The Star Tribune, based in Minneapolis, Minn., have implemented a policy which does not use these teams' names. Instead the city's name is used in all identifications. However, the bulk of newspapers have gone on business as usual.

"Most of the industry is using the nicknames," Rocky Mountain News (Denver) Sports Editor Kevin Huhn said. "There are exceptions like Portland and Minneapolis, but we haven't met with any backlash. We don't have many native Americans in our area and those issues tend to rear up in areas that do."

Some publications feel they have found a happy medium. The Seattle Times and The Salt Lake Tribune have a similar policy. Both papers refuse to use the aforementioned nicknames, and those like them, in headlines. Neither uses Redskins at all.

"Our stance is that Redskins is a derogatory depiction of Native Americans," Salt Lake Tribune Sports Editor Kurt Kragthorpe said. "The issue is not blown out of proportion. How can non-native Americans decide that something is not offensive to native Americans?"

Writing headlines for last fall's World Series between Atlanta and Cleveland must have been a night-

Fife excels for Vandal track

Damon Barkdull

Staff

Traditionally, the women's 400 meter race hasn't been the most prestigious event in the realm of Idaho outdoor track and field. However, junior Kerri Fife is quickly trying to change that fact.

The Yakima, Wash., native qualified for the Big Sky Conference Championships last weekend at the Nike Invitational in Minneapolis, Minn. Fife ran the 400m in 56.97 seconds, beating the BSC qualifying mark of 58.00 by more than a second to finish just behind Iowa's Ellen Grant. Fife's time in the 400m not only qualified her for the conference tournament but broke a career personal record.

For Fife, qualifying for the BSC Championships is an achievement gained through pre-race preparation.

"I try to get real psyched sometimes," Fife said. "It's intimidating to try to run hard for a whole lot of time. On days than I'm real tired from school it's hard to get excited about running on purpose to make yourself really tired. I usually try to get psyched and think about my goals and what I want to accomplish in the future and what I need to do now to do that. I try to run a really good race. I know that if I dog a race, I'll be disappointed afterwards."

Getting psyched and being mentally prepared is all a part of any kind of athletic competition. So too, is looking to others for a mental lift or some sort of inspiration.

"I've worked in the weight room with a lot of the throwers and that's helped my weightlifting a lot," Fife said. "We have some really good competitors on our team and watching them compete just makes me get excited and make me work a little harder to keep up with them with whatever they're doing."

It's already been proven that Fife is a great athlete. Similarly, Fife tries to maintain some consistency in the classroom as well.

This task is especially hard since both finals and the BSC Championships are quickly approaching.

"For me it can be really difficult sometimes," said Fife, a biology major. "I get tired and it makes it

Intramural season wraps up with success

Mike Stetson

Staff

With summer just a week away and finals filling the thoughts of everyone, Greg Morrison and the intramural staff might be one of the few groups on campus already looking forward to next year.

After a year which Morrison himself found to be outstanding in terms of both participation and sportsmanship, the intramural department is closing up for this year and shifting gears as they begin to prepare for the next school year's events.

"It been a good semester," Morrison said. "Again the numbers were up. People played in the rain, and the snow and the sleet."

This semester, teams competed in everything from bowling to softball, co-rec volleyball to frisbee golf. All in the quest of fun, an intramural champions T-shirt, and points for their living group in the living group competition.

"Sportsmanship was great," Morrison said. Morrison believes the participants have exceeded the sportsmanship rating as part of the game and have begun to "police themselves from getting to upset" during the games.

As for this year's intramural final standings, Delta Sigma Phi climbed to the top of the fraternity pile as the overall fraternity winner, while Pi Beta Phi took first for sororities. Snow Hall captured the men's residence hall title and Houston Hall rounded out the number ones as the women's residence hall champion.

The overall finals standing were, for fraternities, Delta Sigma Phi, 1488.5; Pi Kappa Alpha, 1438.5; Delta Chi, 1378.5; Beta Theta Pi, 1238.5; Delta Tau Delta, 1190.5; Sigma Alpha Epsilon, 1183.5; Alpha Kappa Lambda, 1160.5; Sigma Nu, 990; Phi Gamma Delta, 899.5; Alpha Tau Omega, 890; Sigma Chi, 698.5; Farmhouse, 677; Kappa Sigma, 600.5; Tau Kappa Epsilon, 375.5; Theta Chi, 372.5; Phi Kappa Tau, 299.5; Phi Delta Theta, 249.5; Lambda Chi Alpha, 180; Alpha Gamma Rho, 113.5; Sigma Phi Epsilon, 0.

For sororities, Pi Beta Phi, 1209.5; Gamma Phi Beta, 1074.5; Kappa Kappa Gamma, 744; Alpha Gamma Delta, 653; Delta Gamma, 524; Delta Delta Delta, 514; Alpha Phi, 194.

For the residence halls men, Snow, 282; Gault, 218; Upham, 203.5; Graham, 142; Chrisman, 100.5; Olesen, 64; McConnell, 50; Targhee, 50; Borah, 25; and women, Houston, 606; Forney, 468; Olesen, 261; Steel, 225; McCoy, 130; Carter, 115; Hays, 105; French, 80; Neely, 75; Campbell, 25.

are for these ultra-sensitive publications. Apparently, Indians declare war after Braves' ambush was thrown out when a liberal editor decided Atlanta beats Cleveland would be more thoughtful.

"I feel we have a constituency here based in part to the tradition of the Northwest. We have many Native Americans in our area and there's no need to use them as mascots. It's a policy we started five or six years ago," said Cathy Henkel, Seattle Times sports editor.

The Spokesman Review would seem to have the most practical reasoning behind using the nicknames. The Spokesman uses all team nicknames and in the past 14 years has never received a phone call or letter asking the names not be used.

"We haven't seen any reason not to use them and we've published in an area surrounded by Native Americans," Spokesman Review Sports Editor Jeff Jordan said. "Native Americans would admit they have a lot bigger problems than what mascots are. If there was a public outrage and reason to drop the nicknames we would answer to our readers."

The fact the Spokesman has never received a discouraging reply on the issue says a lot about the Nez Perce and other regional tribes. It's good to see someone recognize the depth of an issue and arguing over the political correctness of the term Redskins does not have much depth. I'd like to see some statistics of how many Native Americans have been hurt doing the "Tomahawk Chop" while watching a Braves game, in comparison to the number of individuals who suffer from the effects of alcoholism, physical abuse or poverty, real issues.

"Hopefully these will bring in the non-traditional sports mind," Morrison said.

Competitors will also see some changes in the first event of next year, flag football. New rules will allow players to dive to grab flags and also defensive players will be allowed to jump to deflect passes as long as they do not contact the quarterback. The offense will also gain an advantage as the defense will be forced to line up a yard away from the ball,

The

Rookie of the Year went to Chad Whitney and Matt Wolff proved to be the Outstanding Official of the Year. The Eric Montgomery Scholarship Award, presented in memory of a former Idaho student who died while a student and who played an active role in intramurals, went to Brian O'Neill. The recipient must have officiated for two years in at least three different sports, be an active intramural participant and maintain a 2.5 GPA.

Morrison believes the banquet is a necessary way to say thank you to the people who make it possible to have intramural sports.

"These people do it for the love of the sport, obviously not for the money," Morrison said.

With all the events and awards handed out, Morrison and his staff only have next year to look forward to now. On tap for next year the intramural department has three new events scheduled, billiards, a living group points giving quarterbacks some more time.

Also on tap for this summer, Morrison hopes to spend some time and money leveling the Guy Wicks playing fields.

Morrison continues to encourage people to bring in any new ideas or changes they would like to see for next year. He also reminds people of the on going T-shirt competition intramurals runs. Students, faculty and staff can win $50 and two T-shirts by designing a new intramural champions' T-shirt for next year. The school winner also will compete at a national level with more prize incentives available.

Last, Morrison wants to remind students of the first managers meeting of the fall, scheduled for Sept. 5, where captains will vote on a new executive board for intramurals and receive the new intramural handbooks.

Is the money really worth it?

Mark Vanderwall

With the latest scare in the sports world coming in the form of cancer rather than AIDS, one can't help but wonder if all the money these people make is worth the lifestyles they live.

Brett Butler was diagnosed earlier this week with a form of throat cancer, and will more than likely miss the remainder of the season due to chemotherapy. Butler, a veteran to Major League Baseball, could have contracted cancer in a couple of ways, but doctors have narrowed it down to two. His parents were heavy smokers while he was growing up and he chewed tobacco during his earlier years in the league. He is known as one of the best lead-off men to ever play the game.

Butler is also well known for the stance he took against replacement players during the strike year, but come to find out, Mike Busch will be taking his place on the roster for the Dodgers. Ironically, Busch was the replacement player Butler so heatedly disapproved of during the strike.

In other baseball related news, David Cone was also sidelined with a small aneurysm in his throwing arm. He had been having trouble with his circulation, but still managed to generate a 4-1 record to go along with his league leading 2.03 ERA. He is out indefinitely until they receive more tests.

In both cases, these players are or were at the top of the games best, and to see both go out for awhile will definitely hurt the game of baseball, but it also makes you ask yourself whether or not all the money is worth the risks you take both on and off the field?

In Butlers case, it may be something that is not even related to baseball, but for Cone, who is the highest paid pitcher in Major League history, the condition is directly related to the sport he so gracefully excelled in.

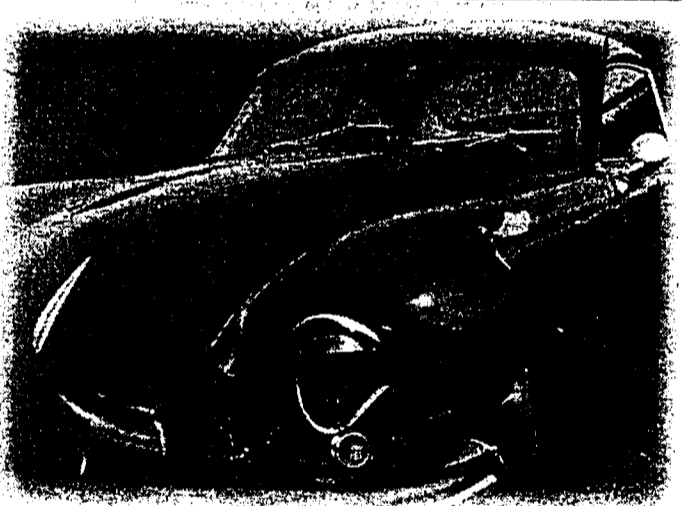

Everyone is always raising the question of why these players make so much money, and the answer lies directly in the question. The same people that ask the question, obviously don't take into consideration what these people give up everyday to be where they are at. One must also consider the revenue this caliber of player brings to the city they play in, as well as the team they are playing for. I'm sure both Cone and Butler would trade all the money in the world to not be going through the hardships they are encountering right now, but they also know it comes with the territory.

I guess for those of you who still think they are over paid, I'll I can say is to put yourself in their situation for a minute. They spend nine or 10 months out of the year living in motels, eating fast-food and sleeping in a different bed nearly every night. After they do get a home-stand for a few days, it may be a few home cooked meals, some time with the wife and kids and then it's back to business as usual. I understand they choose to live this lifestyle, but they also give millions of Americans a chance to get away from similar situations in their own lives with a good day at the ballpark with the family.

Sure the money's nice, but the price they pay for the lifestyle they live often outweighs the price they pay in the long run, both physically and emotionally.

Kamangirira sets goal to make olympics

Byron Jarnagin
Staff

Everyone has goals in one form or another, but beyond that is a dream made up of many goals and to achieve a dream requires the conquering of the individual goals along the way.

UI Track and Field team member Felix Kamangirira has held a dream to be part of the Olympic Team for his country of Zimbabwe, and after last weekend his dream became a reality. The sophomore has also provisionally qualified for the NCAA championship for the 400 meters for outdoor season this spring. Not a stranger to qualifying for the NCAA, Kamangirira was a part of the qualifiers for the NCAA Championship in the Fall, but fell a bit short.

"After having been there during the indoor season, I was not surprised to have run a qualifying time," Kamangirira said. "I want to go back and make a better impression than I did the first time because I didn't do that well indoors due to the fact that I had a lazy attitude about the whole thing."

Kamangirira is not taking any chances this time as he prepares to light up the competition this spring. His immediate goal is to make it past the first round into the finals in the 400 meters. To make things happen for himself, Kamangirira has tried to increase his strength increasing his chances of bring the race home in the last 50 meters.

"I wasn't very aggressive at the indoor meet because the guys who ran before me ran about the same time that I had run the previous week, and I felt that I could relax but I got boxed in on the turn and couldn't kick," Kamangirira said. "This time I'm not going to relax at all, and those who want to beat me are going to have to catch me first."

Being a sophomore, Kamangirira has a lot ahead of him in the next few years of running for the UI Track and Field Team. Right now he is happy with what he has been able to accomplish so far, and plans to use his first few years as stepping stones to make himself even more untouchable in the 400 meters.

"My whole goal at the beginning of this year was trying to make the Olympic Team for my country, and I have achieved that," Kamangirira said. "So far everything has been on track, and I hope that I can continue to stay healthy throughout the entire year without any nagging injuries."

Having not had to deal with major injuries that have hindered his training in any way is something which Kamangirira said has been a blessing for him this season. A big change in his training has been the introduction of weights to his program which were not apart of how he prepared for races before.

A runners form in start and finish can mean the difference between first and second place. Kamangirira has devoted more time to shaping his running technique to be more of an effective weapon, and hopes these new training techniques will help him successfully harness all of his abilities.

"Mainly for the 400 meters the running form of relaxation at the beginning of the race, running slow but relaxed but still at a nice tempo, and being able to shift gears is important," Kamangirira said. This is where all of your power comes in, and these things can take your speed a lot further than you normally run."

Kamangirira sees himself as an improved runner as opposed to when he came in as a freshman because he is running a lot more consistent than he was last year. He hopes his improvement will continue to grow and become more evident during his last years with the team.

"Last year was really my first year in the 400 meters, and I was basically learning how to run it, but now I have found my groove with a style for the 400 meters that I fell comfortable with," Kamangirira said. "Right now working on my strength is something I'm improving on."

He is satisfied so far, but he still has other dreams he wishes to fulfill with his running, and believes that if your not successful the first time you just have to keep on coming back and give it your best. For him the dream has just begun on a small scale with an ultimate goal to make it and succeed at the Olympics. He realizes he has to work hard to accomplish what he wants, and believes the chances he strives for will come eventually.

"I think it will all come gradually if I can just make it to these Olympics, being there experiencing the emotions," Kamangirira said.

For him set backs in the forms of losses or what ever are inspirations to strive even harder for what he has set out to do on a personal level.

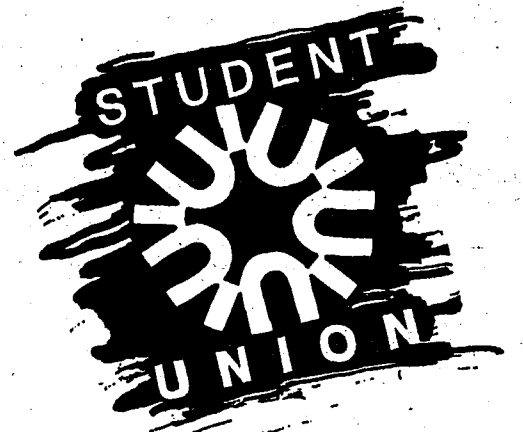

"It is all just a stepping stone, and if it does not come the first time you just have to use that emotion to push yourself even harder," Kamangirira said.

Zimbabwe native Felix Kamangirira has made himself a home for the UI track team.

Johnson misses another start for the Mariners

Associated Press
SEATTLE — As expected, Randy Johnson missed his scheduled start Monday night.

Johnson played catch for five minutes earlier in the day, and a Seattle Mariners spokesman reported he experienced no problems with a sore back that forced him to leave his last start early.

Johnson will be examined Tuesday by team physician Dr. Larry Pedegana to determine if the Seattle ace will be cleared to pitch again, spokesman Dave Aust said.

Seattle manager Lou Piniella said the earliest that Johnson would pitch would be this weekend.

The 1995 AL Cy Young Award winner pitched only two innings last Wednesday before leaving with an irritated nerve in his lower back. He had a no-decision in the 5-4 loss at Texas and hasn't pitched since.

Johnson, the four-time reigning major league strike-out champ, is 4-0 with a 4.08 ERA and 51 strikeouts, tied for best in the league with Roger Clemens of the Boston Red Sox.

really hard for me to concentrate. My attention span is pretty short sometimes. I just try to knuckle down and start studying to motivate myself. I try to eat a lot of sugar, it helps."

Whether eating sugar or drinking caffeine is the route to the good student promise land remains to be seen. However, it must work for Fife. Her GPA is a 3.75.

After the BSC Championship is through with and the final is taken, Fife, 21, plans on a laid back summer.

"I like the outdoors a lot," Fife said. "In the summer I go hiking and camping. In school I really don't have a lot of recreational stuff I do. I can only have so many things going on before I have stress overload, so I just try to take what I can handle and don't try to pack too much stuff in."

For now, Fife looks forward to a good showing at the BSC Championships and an even better finish by the end of her senior year. If her personality and work ethic is any indication of how she might achieve these goals, you can bank on a winner.

"As a senior, well, we'll be in the Big West Conference. I'd like to be as high up in there as I can. Maybe win it, the whole thing. That would be great. Just keep improving," Fife said.

Cal freshman Abdur-Rahim declares himself eligible for the NBA draft.

Associated Press
BERKELEY, Calif. Shareef Abdur-Rahim fumbled with the paper, fighting back tears. He struggled to get the words out, his whole body shaking as he read his statement.

Just hours earlier, he decided to leave California after his freshman season and declare his eligibility for the NBA draft. Now, surrounded by his mom and his coach, he was announcing his decision.

The 6-foot-10 teen-ager who is so smooth on the court was a bundle of nerves Tuesday.

"I'm not doing this for any selfish reasons. This is not for me," Abdur-Rahim said, tears now streaming down his cheeks. "If I was in this world by myself, I'd stay at the University of California. My mom has sacrificed for me all my life, and so has my father."

His mother, Aminah Abdur-Rahim, was crying. His coach, Todd Bozeman, whose late arrival delayed the news conference for 50 minutes, was dabbing his eyes with a tissue. Several teammates watched from the back of the room.

Abdur-Rahim, who led the Pac-10 with 21.1 points per game this season, said he agonized in recent days over his choice. As recently as Monday night, he was leaning toward staying at Cal for his sophomore year.

"If you had asked me last night," he said, "I probably would have said I was coming back."

He joins Stephon Marbury of Georgia Tech as freshmen eligible for the June 26 draft. Two high school players and 14 other underclassmen also have made themselves available in the draft.

When Abdur-Rahim was asked whether the move of so many underclassmen to the NBA would send a bad signal to even younger kids, Bozeman quickly interrupted to say the NCAA's policy of not allowing student-athletes to have jobs and earn money was causing them to go pro early.

Abdur-Rahim hit 52 percent of his shots and 38 percent of his 3-point attempts this season, and averaged 8.4 rebounds. He had more than 30 points four times while setting a Cal freshman scoring record.

But he was held to just nine points as the Bears lost in the first round of the NCAA tournament to Iowa State.

The native of Marietta, Ga., will need to build up his strength to play in the NBA, and he weighs just 225, and has spindly legs.

Abdur-Rahim said his decision came down to family obligations outweighing personal desires.

"It was a difficult decision for me, but in the end I decided that leaving school was the best decision for me and my family at this time," he said. "I am leaving school at this time for my interest in helping my family's financial need."

Abdur-Rahim became the third key Cal player to defect in recent weeks. Sophomore guard Jelani Gardner has announced he will transfer to Pepperdine, and sophomore forward Tremaine Fowlkes was released from his Cal scholarship.

Fowlkes, the Pac-10 freshman of the year in 1994-95, is leaning toward transferring to Fresno State.

Center Michael Stewart also asked to be released from his Cal scholarship, but that request was denied.

Hello, sweeties, it's that time again when you simply must clear a space in your busy social calendar for a cultural event. Your image depends on it.

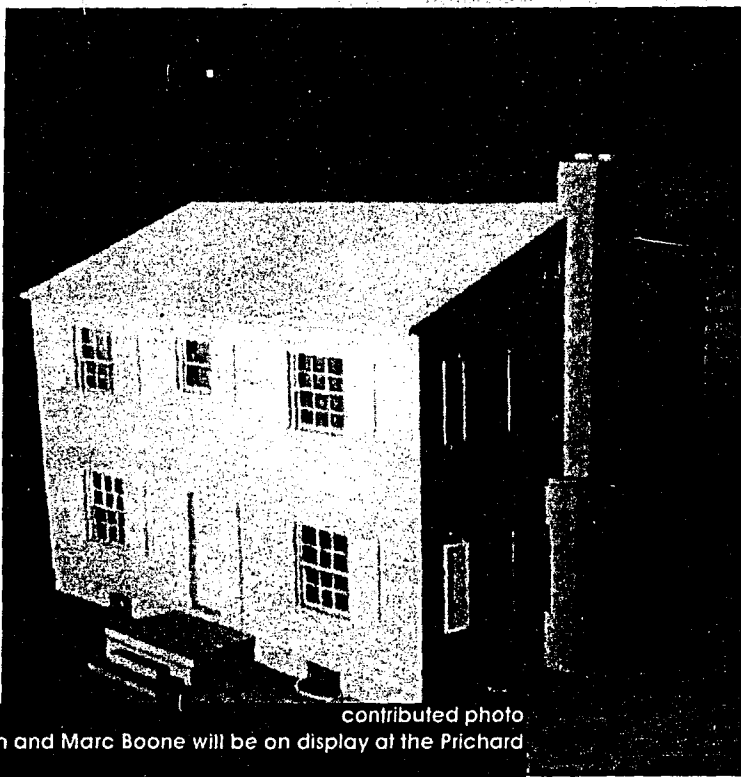

Celebrate the end of finals week with a brief stop at the art gallery before you belly up to the bar to drown your C minus sorrows. And why not, sweetie? It's all over now, unless of course you have summer school, in which case it's going to start all over again. So you might as well get out and get some culture before your professors drain you of all life and spark.

The Prichard Gallery is truly artsy. (Artists hate that word, don't use it in their presence, hon). It's big and white and spacious, and has those fab hardwood floors that squeaky-squeak when you walk across them. If you go there your friends will think you're the peak of chic.

Total strangers will see you through that big picture window and say "Hey, there goes a cultured cat." If you make a bit of an offering into the donation box, the gallery employees will nominate you for sainthood.

And of course there's the absolutely fabulous work by artists Robert Beckman and Marc Boone. The opening reception will be May 17 from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Go ahead, pencil it in, I'll wait. I'll be there mingling with all of the beautiful people and you really must also. But don't worry if you have absolutely nothing to wear, darling, you can sneak by in your grubby commoner clothes if needs be. Now pay attention, sweetie, the gallery hours are going to change for the summer season. Tuesday through Friday you can pop in from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. Or if you choose, Saturday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The fabulous Mr. Beckman's work reflects a few seconds of film, each frame captured in paint on a large canvas.

In the film, a house is destroyed by an atomic bomb at a nuclear test site. The paintings reflect each moment of the destruction, and are bathed in an eerie iodine color, which makes them dreamy and surreal.

Charming Mr. Boone works on a much smaller scale in his paintings. In sharp contrast to Beckman's work, his images are not objects, but forms and patterns. Tree-like shapes appear as well as images reminiscent of aerial landscape photography.

All truly marvelous stuff that you absolutely must see.

So borrow a gown if you must, and I have some faux pearls you can borrow, but just be there, darling—everyone who's anyone will be.

With the end of the semester just around the corner, it may be apparent to some of us that there is a class we're just not going to pass, no matter how we do on the final. Rather than skip it, why not have some fun with it? The Internet Funnybone offers the following suggestions:

- Bring a pillow. Fall asleep (or pretend to) until the last 15 minutes. Wake up, say "oh geez, better get cracking", and do some gibberish work. Turn it in a few minutes early.

- Talk the entire way through the exam. Read questions aloud, debate your answers with yourself out loud. If asked to stop, yell out, "I'm SOOO sure you can hear me thinking." Then start talking about what a jerk the instructor is.

- Bring cheerleaders.

- Walk in, get the exam, sit down. About five minutes into it, loudly say to the instructor, "I don't understand ANY of this. I've been to every lecture all semester long! What's the deal? And who the hell are you? Where's the regular guy?"

- On the answer sheet find a new, interesting way to refuse to answer every question. For example: I refuse to answer this question on the grounds that it conflicts with my religious beliefs. Be creative.

- Fifteen minutes into the exam, stand up, rip up all the papers into very small pieces, throw them into the air and yell out "Merry Christmas." If you're really daring, ask for another copy of the exam. Say you lost the first one. Repeat this process every 15 minutes.

- Come into the exam wearing slippers, a bathrobe, a towel on your head and nothing else.

- As soon as the instructor hands you the exam, eat it.

- Walk into the exam with an entourage. Claim you are going to be taping your next video during the exam. Try to get the instructor to let them stay, be persuasive. Tell the instructor to expect a percentage of the profits if they are allowed to stay.

- Every five minutes, stand up, collect all your things, move to another seat, continue with the exam.

- Do the entire exam as if it was multiple choice and true/false. If it is a multiple choice exam, spell out interesting things (DCCAB, BABE, etc.).

- Get the exam. Twenty minutes into it, throw your papers down violently, scream out "Screw this!" and walk out triumphantly.

Kits help culture seekers learn hands-on

Taking a trip to India? Want your classroom to learn more about China? Or do you simply want to become enlightened about the cultures of other countries?

Look no further than the International Friendship Office to check out one of the culture kits that are in construction as the International Friendship Association's Advisory Board seeks items to equip them.

"We are trying right now to round up any items we can to make these kits," said David Hisel, co-chair of the effort. "These kits will provide a unique opportunity for researchers or just about anyone to learn of another culture."

The culture kits will be offered to anyone who has an interest in gaining hands-on exposure to items that are symbolic of another country. Objects such as clothing, hats, stamps, photographs, maps, cassette tapes with music or language, pieces of art, material, coins, flags and anything else that represents a country are welcome as donations to the IFA.

If you have traveled or studied abroad and have a deep interest in promoting cultural exchange to young students, a perfect way to signify that is to donate an item with a description of it, where it comes from and how it is used.

Once these kits are coordinated they will be loaned out to schools and clubs around Moscow and the state to provide cultural awareness. In an IFA news release it's explained that these "culture rovers" will extend state-wide international education from UI's International Programs Office and provide exposure to the "cultural trappings" of other countries.

The donated items should be brought to the IPO office in Morrill Hall Room 223 as soon as possible since they hope to inaugurate the culture kits during the 4-H teen conference on campus in June. For further information, call the IFA office at 885-7841.

Making a statement without words

Sam Goff

Donald Bokor has few words yet many actions.

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Donald Bokor can make a statement without saying a word.

With his painted fingernails and tattooed hands it can be immediately assumed with a single glance that Bokor's ideologies aren't the "norm."

But his strikingly courageous attitude is one that he wishes had an infectious nature. "I have always thought for myself and acted on my conscience," Bokor said. "It frustrates me when people don't know themselves."

A common identity crisis from which we all suffer? Well, consider the uncommon path that Bokor takes to really learn who he is.

His home is a tent he pitches around different places in Moscow. The mountains are his friend, not land to be owned. He feels owning private property is an assault on the Earth. He considers himself a naturalist and humans to be products of nature. As a self-ascribed humanist and head of the Free Pot Party, Bokor's aim to promote what he feels is a human right of all people is the decriminalization of drug usage.

"Any time you have a system of oppression, you need someone to oppress," he said, referring to the way he feels government has painted drugs as immoral and dangerous.

Labeling himself as tolerant of everything except intolerance, Bokor's mentality has always had the focus of free agency and the right to act in any way you want as long as it doesn't harm anyone else.

"Everyone is capable of making enlightened decisions," Bokor said. "We don't need government telling us what we can and cannot do with our bodies." His philosophy, "educate, don't legislate," has the moral high ground in his own eyes and Bokor has felt the chains of incarceration to prove his belief.

Bokor explains in his own literature how he went to prison for growing marijuana in his front yard. He did this after finishing an undergraduate degree in animal science at UI "and instead of going to grad school I went to prison," Bokor said.

Since then he has finished a second bachelor's and a master's degree in business and had substantial progress towards his Ph.D. when his "pro-drug and pro-anarchy stance" was not supported and he was forced out of the program.

And now Bokor goes to great lengths to get his idea across by taking the lead with his Free Pot Party and creating "a nonviolent, non-economic, direct action, civil disobedience movement that will bring the drug war back to the front pages."

"I'm doing what I have to do to make my point," he said. "People would send their children to Vietnam to have their legs blown off or their guts torn apart, I should be able to be willing to die for my cause."

And before you get the wrong idea, Bokor is a pacifist. "What I really want is the virtues that are lacking of love and peace," he said. "We are all Gods in the sense that we are capable of creating a world we desire." The murderers and rapists of the world are not in Bokor's schema of a free world since they are taking away the rights of other people.

At times you can see Bokor use his "war paint" by which certain lines and colors painted on his face may symbolize his mood, creating a picture of a thousand words. And by staring at someone who makes a statement without saying a word, we are choosing to do so. Bokor certainly has a lot more on his mind than can possibly be asked. What does he see in his future?

"I would like to see a time where military, police and prisons are something you read about in history books," Bokor said. "But the reality of my future is probably prison."

Cowboy Junkies 'lay it down' at Seattle show

Erik Marone
Staff

Save the stadiums with capacities of 50,000 for the likes of the Rolling Stones or Pink Floyd.

The Cowboy Junkies were comfortably in their element in the intimate surroundings of Seattle's Moore Theater last Sunday night. For a little over two hours, the Junkies set the mood for the sold out audience of 1450, performing music from their latest album Lay it Down and favorites spanning their 11-year career.

The subtle Georgia folk singer Vic Chestnut opened the show without much ado. He seemed more anxious to yield the stage so he could hear the headliners rather than play the handful of quirky, amusing tunes he played to warm the audience up.

The band took the stage as the curtain raised, revealing the simple stage set of white curtains suspended from the ceiling cascading onto the floor, which contrasted nicely with the musicians, who were dressed in black jeans and T-shirts.

The audience's applause reached a level usually reserved for more flashy productions as singer Margo Timmons assumed her place at the front of the stage in a casual black dress and sweater, flanked by bass player Alan Anton and a simple table bearing a bouquet of flowers and her mug of tea.

They opened the performance with a few songs from Lay it Down then took a short break while Margo explained the next song, "Misguided Angel" from The Trinity Session, which was followed by the sequel "Angel Mine" from Lay it Down. For the rest of the show, Margo related anecdotes about each song, which drew the audience closer to the performance rather than break up the flow of music.

The Junkies are more connected to their music than putting on a sight and sound tour de force. The volume was at a comfortable level, allowing concertgoers to leave the theater without ringing ears and the lighting was subtle and tasteful. In fact, the only time the lighting seemed inappropriate was the few times they attempted to time light changes to the music. Those instances aside, the combinations of colors and filters exceeded the effect any laser display or fancy computerized light rigs could have possibly produced.

As for the band, no stage diving or other David Lee Roth-esque were needed. Anton's feet didn't shift perceptibly during the show and guitarist Michael Timmons remained hunched over his guitar on his folding chair. Drummer Peter Timmons opted for subtlety rather than wild flailing behind his scaled-down drum kit while the percussionist, harmonica and mandolin player Jeff Bird remained in the shadows at the left of the stage.

One nice touch that helped flesh out the sound was the addition of cellist Dave Henry, who tastefully supplied the deep resonance of the cello for much of the concert, creating a solid base for older tunes like "Murder, Tonight, in the Trailer Park" and their cover of Hank Williams' "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry."

While the rest of the band took a break toward the middle of the show, Margo and Michael performed acoustic renditions of a number of their older tunes, including "Sun Comes Up, It's Tuesday Morning" and "First Recollection," wonderful additions to an already diverse performance.

Although the Cowboy Junkies are internationally renowned with seven albums to their credit, they are extraordinarily down to earth. Margo even came into the lobby after the show to sign autographs and thank everyone personally for coming to the show. Even though she was accompanied by two large and sharply dressed body guards, she seemed right at home talking to individual concertgoers and shaking hands, something unheard of from most acts of their stature.

The Cowboy Junkies are very close to their music and the people who have helped make their music so popular, which results in a solid, honest performance. With music of the highest caliber and a stage show that accents the music and not the abilities of some lighting and pyrotechnic craftspeople, the Cowboy Junkies offer one of the finest live music events around today.

ACCORDING TO MATT: crash

Matt West
Cont. Writer

Dave Matthews Band has packaged yet another successful blend of strings, horns and drums in crash.

Like the second album, Under The Table And Dreaming, crash exhibits an impressive display of acoustic songs.

While Dave Matthew's vocals may be difficult to follow at times, the accompanying musicianship more than makes up for it. I particularly appreciate the use of alto, soprano, tenor and baritone saxophones. Violins from Boyd Tinsley are also a nice addition. The sound achieved with the addition of these instruments is fresh and uplifting.

And not to be neglected is Stephen Lessard on bass guitar. With such a wide range of instruments, Dave Matthews Band allows the listener to distinguish and enjoy each and every instrument. Unlike some bands, Dave Matthews Band doesn't drown out the unique sounds produced from their plethora of instruments with unnecessary compression and distortion.

A valid comparison might be DMB to Sting. While both voices are distinctive, I don't think the two voices are similar, but both artists make good use of extensive instrument collections. I can't think of a particular setting, but the atmosphere that is conducive to Sting's sound would also be favorable towards the DMB sound.

Currently, the first single off the album "Too Much" is circulating the air waves. "Too Much" is a good representation of the Dave Matthews Band sound, but in my honest opinion not the best track off crash, nor the best representation of the new album.

With 12 songs in all crash is a great buy. If you are a DMB enthusiast you should also want to check out their first album, Remember Two Things and their elusive EP Recently which not available in stores. Visit the Dave Matthews Band web site: <http://www.dmband.com>

Movie Review by Justin Cason: Last Dance

As any frequent moviegoer will inform you, nothing is quite so satisfying as watching a "feel good" movie. Few people, however, are aware of a second less familiar type of film—the "feel bad" movie. If ever there was an instance of the latter this year, Last Dance starring Sharon Stone, is it.

The "feel bad" category could in itself be divided into two classes. You either feel bad because the movie saddens you or because it's just such a lousy effort. What makes Last Dance so intriguing—at least from a reviewing standpoint—is the fact that it straddles both of these classifications. Aside from romantic tearjerkers such as Bed of Roses and Up Close and Personal, which deal with issues that pale in comparison to Last Dance's life vs. death struggle, this could be one of the more emotional, "have a good cry" pieces you'll see this season. However, the screenwriters don't try to truly develop these emotions until the very end of the film when it's almost too late.

The film opens with freshly-appointed Rick Hayes (played by Rob Morrow) getting his first case as an employee for the state's prisoner clemency board. This first job involves working on a stay of execution for Cindy Liggett (Stone), a woman who's spent the last 12 years in jail for a double murder she definitely did commit. The governor has given her 30 days to live before her death sentence is carried out. Hayes is supposed to just put in his time in the no-win case and stay out of trouble. The problem is, he actually believes in his job and eventually befriends Liggett.

Much of the insufferably slow pace of Last Dance is due to the brooding character Stone plays. While Hayes runs back and forth from various judges to Liggett's former defense attorney to a disrupted soiree at the governor's fund-raiser, we get to watch Stone complain about the prison television and get crabby with her fellow inmates.

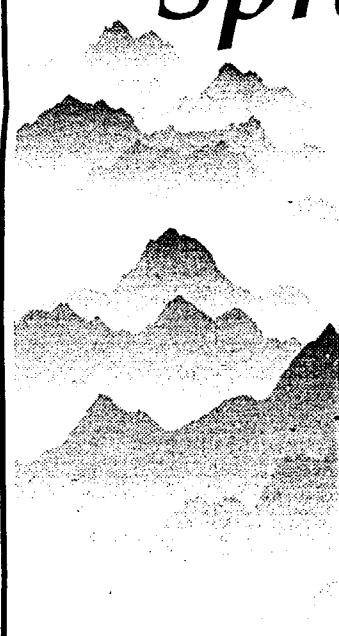

Morrow, best known for his role as Dr. Joel Fleischman on CBS's Northern Exposure, is actually above average as the guy who carefully balances compassion and a big heart with a rich upbringing and an entire J. Crew wardrobe. Randy Quaid, always a co-star but never the star, also works as Sam, the head of the clemency department.

It is Stone, whether good, bad or at timeboth, who makes the film, though. Full of a southern drawl but fortunately lacking in southern charm, she plays Liggett as best as the simplistic script will allow.

Without the last 20 minutes of the movie, Last Dance would fall by the wayside as one of the few real flops Touchstone Pictures has put out. Stone's final 48 hours take her and the audience on a moving jaunt from expected death to hope to finally actually wishing for death.

While Last Dance is no Dead Man Walking, it is another step toward critical acceptance for Stone. Considering some of her most recent acting attempts, she certainly needs it.
