The cool water of the Snake River drew many people around the area to find refuge from the heat wave this weekend. Everyone chose their own form of enjoying the water, from this inflatable raft to jet skis and power boats.

Parking permits available next month

Hold on to those parking permits, new ones won't come out until the middle of August.

"They will definitely be on sale the week before school," said Pamela Alsterlund, manager of Parking and Information Services. "If we get them earlier, and get them audited, we will try for the week of August 12."

Old permits issued last year will be good through the end of August. Alsterlund said the prices for permits will not be going up.

Gold permits for faculty and staff only are $140, Red permits are $70, Blue permits are $30, silver permits (for residents) and green permits (for family housing) are $25.

"We're hoping to get the lot to the east of the Engineering Building on line," Alsterlund said. The addition of this gold permit lot is the only new parking change to last year's map.

The type of permit you'll need depends on how far you want to walk. "It depends on what your priorities are and where your classes are," Alsterlund said. The more expensive permits tend to be closer to buildings, while the less expensive permits are farther away. Free parking is available for those willing to walk from the far side of the Kibbie Dome.

Alsterlund also said that for some classes, you're not going to be any closer parking in a red lot than in a blue lot. The advantage of the more expensive stickers is that gold can park in gold, red and blue lots; red can park in red and blue; and blue can only park in blue.

Although you're only given one permit, Alsterlund said you can use it in any of your vehicles. "We sell the permit to a person, and they can put it in any car." Alsterlund said some people can start "unofficial carpools" this way.

Fines for parking illegally can range from $10 to $50, and can become even larger in some cases.

Parking Services will refund permits, but the amount will be less than the amount paid depending on when it is refunded. Alsterlund said permits are not refunded after March.

Parking permits can be purchased at the Information Center on State Highway 8, north of campus. For more information call the center at 885-6424.

Couple settles with landlord for $10,000

Associated Press

One of the Moscow-area's largest property managers has agreed to pay a $10,000 settlement to a Genesee couple who claimed the company violated federal fair housing laws.

Nancy Draznin and Ken Nagy said Palouse Properties discriminated against them when they went to rent a two-bedroom apartment last year.

Upon learning the couple had two children, an office worker said, "You have two children! We can't rent you the apartment."

When the couple protested, the company agreed to rent to them, but said they would have to leave at the end of their six-month lease. Palouse Properties president Don Mackin later reported his office manager said the company "would not be inclined" to renew the couple's contract when it expired last May.

The couple sent the remark as evidence in a complaint to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Nagy, a self-employed carpenter, said he hopes the settlement shows other renters they have a legal recourse if they feel wronged.

Mackin, a former legislator and husband of former University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zinser, admitted no guilt in the agreement signed last month with HUD.

Stocks fall as Wall Street frets about high-tech firms

Associated Press

NEW YORK—The stock market that couldn't be stopped ran into trouble again Monday, leading to speculation that Wall Street's stock-soaring 5 1/2-year-old bull market has reached a conclusion.

With the Dow Jones industrial average posting its fourth-biggest point drop ever and technology-heavy Nasdaq stocks having given up most of their gains for the year, some analysts said frankly that the bull market had ended.

The Dow Jones average, the market's most widely followed index, finished Monday down 161.05 points, or 2.9 percent, at 5,349.51. That represents its steepest slide since March 8 and its lowest close since late January.

While it was the Dow's fourth-worst point drop, it was not even close to being among the largest drops in percentage terms. That happened Oct. 19, 1987, when the Dow dropped 508.00 points to 1,738.74, a 22.6 percent decline.

Other market averages also saw significant erosion Monday, especially the Nasdaq composite index. The Nasdaq, home to companies like Microsoft and chip maker Intel, saw its main index lose 3.9 percent of its value, leaving it ahead less than 1 percent for the year.

The market's weakened position—the Dow is up just 4.5 percent for all of 1996—suggests to many on Wall Street that new records aren't likely for some time. The Dow is 7.4 percent off its May 22 record high and the Nasdaq index is down more than 15 percent from its June 5 record.

Concern about corporate profits triggered the recent slump, particularly earnings in the important technology sector. Profits drive stocks more than anything else, and word of weakness can quickly shake confidence.

Last Thursday, the Dow lost more than 83 points following an announcement late Wednesday by computer maker Hewlett-Packard that an order-growth slowdown would hurt sales and profits. That followed by a disappointing earnings report from chip maker Motorola.

Ironically, no stunning earnings were reported Monday and no major economic news was released to trigger the steep plunge.

For years the bull market has taken care of investors, moving generally and predictably upward, backed by the leadership of technology companies. It has also been snapping back powerfully after big declines.

Following last Thursday's drop, the market tried to rally but failed, ending almost 10 points lower on Friday. Going back another week to July 5, traders not taking a long holiday weekend saw the Dow lose almost 115 points over concerns about a too-strong economy and possible inflation.

The next trading day the Dow followed up by losing more than 37 points.

"Bear markets and bull markets are not created by the economy, they're created by human emotion," said A. Michael Lipper, president of Lipper Analytical Services Inc., a research firm. "We've just had such a remarkable run. This is a correction. OK. We're still up on the year."

Fulbright scholars start semester with a splash

Valaree Johnson

Celebrating its 50th year in fostering national cultural exchanges in academia around the world, several Fulbright Enrichment grants were awarded to schools to provide an in-depth look at the cultures unique to their area.

University of Idaho was among those awarded thanks to UI Fulbright Program Advisor Gleanne Wray and Bob Neunswander of International Programs Office.

After receiving the $2,000 grant awarded by the United States Information Agency and NAFSA, Wray and Neunswander had to plan a culturally enriching experience for those who were expected to study Fulbright's.

"We finally settled on exploring an Idaho river and examining its natural history," said Wray. Included in the group were 8 Fulbright students from all over the world. Wray then decided to extend the invitation to UI Fulbright faculty and WSU Fulbrights. Fourteen ended up braving the rapids on a two-day excursion on the Salmon River.

"The first day I was scared. The second day I had no fear," wrote Emperatriz Medina from Ecuador in her evaluation of the trip. "We returned to our daily life with a good flavor in our hearts and an unforgettable experience in our minds."

Fulbright scholars were well deserving of the trip after their acceptance through what many would call a tedious process. "It's very time consuming to even try and become a Fulbright scholar," said Wray slapping down the 20-page application that goes through a web of panels that scrutinize it for acceptance.

"I was looking forward for this moment as a reward after surviving my prelims which were another sort of different 'rapids'," said Kurt Manrique of Peru.

Still, that competitive process attracts thousands of applicants a year from and to around the world. Several UI professors have succeeded through Fulbrights and more are on their way. "Unfortunately the programs are being slashed," said Wray. "It's really sad to see such a program be cut like it is."

The Fulbright mission started in 1946 when the late Senator William J. Fulbright sponsored legislation that he believed could provide an alternative to armed conflict. Today hundreds of Fulbrights research and study as they engage in intercultural growing.

Li may complete research in prison

He will spend 65 years to life in prison, but double murderer Wenkai Li still may be able to complete work on his master's degree in metallurgical engineering from the University of Idaho.

Wenkai Li, 26, pleaded guilty to two counts of second-degree murder on June 27 in an agreement with prosecutors to avert a potential death sentence for the May 29, 1995 slayings.

Leggett said at Tuesday's sentencing that the brutality of the murders convinced her to impose the long prison term. Ning Li, 36, was stabbed 10 times and Ge, 35, was stabbed 28 times. Both victims had their spinal columns severed.

Froes accompanied Wenkai Li and his father, Chinese scholar Chenggong Li, in February 1995 to an international conference in Las Vegas, where Wenkai Li presented his thesis research on metallic materials for high-temperature applications.

It was the last time Wenkai Li saw his father.

"He presented the results of his work in a very competent fashion," Froes recalls. "It created a lot of interest from the audience."

Froes has known Chenggong Li since 1989 and helped his son obtain a position at the University of Idaho. He said Wenkai Li was well on his way toward a distinguished career in metallurgy when he killed the couple.

Froes said he and many of Wenkai Li's former classmates at the Institute for Materials and Advanced Processes believe his sentence is too harsh.

So does Wenkai Li. "He called me last evening, and was completely shocked by the severity of the sentence," Froes said Wednesday. "He said how much he regrets what happened, how sorry he is that he has hurt all of the relatives. He has a great deal of concern for what happened."

Home of president being spruced up

The state-owned home of new University of Idaho President Bob Hoover is being refurbished at the cost to taxpayers of about $35,000.

The 30-year-old home is getting a new coat of paint inside and out, new carpet, new drapes and new garage doors. Some old appliances will also be replaced.

The money will come from the school's regular maintenance budget.

Hoover and his wife, Jeanne, will move into the house in about three weeks.

Hoover said Thursday he also wanted to expand the capacity of the dining room, which currently seats 12 people. Enclosing a patio off the dining room and living room would allow them to entertain up to 36 people in one space, Hoover said.

In addition, a deck will be added for outside entertaining.

School architect Ray Pankopf said work on those additions will begin in September, and will cost an additional $35,000 to $40,000.

"If we are going to be here for some time, we hope 10 years or so, this gives us a chance to put our own stamp on (the house)," Hoover said Thursday.

The 4,500-square foot house was built in 1966 and has five bedrooms and two studies.

Smith bill targets child labor abuse abroad

WASHINGTON—New Jersey Rep. Chris Smith has heard enough horror stories about children toiling in unsafe workplaces abroad for up to 15 hours a day with just small change as their reward.

Smith, R-Robbinsville, wants the United States to step up efforts to halt the import of goods made under those conditions by children as young as 3 years old.

He scheduled a Washington news conference Monday with television personality Kathie Lee Gifford to discuss legislation he believes will achieve that end.

His measure would require the U.S. Secretary of Labor each year to identify foreign industries that use child workers. The secretary also would name countries that do not prohibit child labor, or fail to enforce their laws against it.

The import of products made in those identified countries and industries would be barred. The measure also would prohibit all U.S. assistance except humanitarian aid to such countries.

His bill also includes $10 million annually for five years to the International Labor Organization for its efforts to educate other countries about enforcing child labor laws.

Smith said he and other lawmakers of both parties have been concerned for several years about growing reports of abuse in the foreign manufacture of products from soccer balls to T-shirts.

However, national attention has accelerated in recent months with criticism targeted at celebrities who pitch the products.

The hearing that Smith's subcommittee conducted after the news conference was the second this year. Testimony at the first session included grueling accounts of the physical and sexual abuse that teenagers and pre-teens undergo in sweatshops.

Robert Hall, vice president of the 1.4 million-member National Retail Foundation, said the group supports Smith's efforts to provide funding for the ILO's efforts to eliminate child labor. But Hall said Smith's definition of child labor may not apply in many countries where children leave school earlier and enter the work force.

Last of four survivors emerges from cave

AUTRANS, France—The last of four surviving cave explorers was pulled from one of Europe's deepest grottos Sunday, tired and undernourished after being trapped for a week but otherwise unhurt.

Miklos Nyerges, 29, of Hungary, was supported by a series of ropes, too weak to climb out of the the Berger Cave on his own.

Two other spelunkers in Nyerges' group died a week ago during a flash-flooding in the cave, 375 miles southeast of Paris.

Bearded and thinner in his red jumpsuit, Nyerges waved weakly to rescue workers who applauded when he emerged. Like the three others rescued, he was flown to a hospital in the French Alps city of Grenoble.

It could take about two more days to retrieve the bodies, said rescue team leader Albert Oyhancabal.

'Juice' causes disillusionment

For a while there they had me going. Actually, they had me going for a long time on quite a few things. My first "great awakening" came the other night at one of my many jobs. Someone made an off-hand remark about the juice machine. "Gee, I wonder what's really in that thing," she said.

Now, you've all seen these machines before. They're normally seen at cafeterias with pink, orange or purple juice flowing in a plastic container on top, with a button on the bottom to press for the juice to come out.

In this machine, the "juice" in the top is just for show. On top of the machine is a little sign reading "Warning: contents for display only. Do not drink. Avoid contact with skin and eyes." Nice juice, huh?

All this time I thought that was the actual juice! I often would drink one juice, see the level go down and drink the other juice to even them out. Now I find that my efforts had nothing to do with the juice level.

"Didn't you notice that the levels never change?" my boss asked me. Well, I thought I had. I had been deceived. The juice-people's marketing ploy worked.

The real disillusionment came when we opened the front of the machine to find that the tubs of "juice" weren't even tubs! They were hollow! The thick colored liquid was kept in a ring that looked from the outside to be a tub, but was only about an inch thick!

I can't drink that juice anymore.

Then I began to think: If the juice is fake, then what else is fooling me?

Well, to begin, this whole thing about summer is misleading. Here I am, at the time when all the lemonade makers say is the greatest vacation time of the year, and I'm working three jobs. I should be swinging from a rope strung from a tree into a lake of cool water with the sun slowly setting behind me. I should be rocking on my back porch with a glass of lemonade, gossiping with the neighbors. Well, I don't have a rope swing, or a back porch, and that lemonade they advertise isn't even real. It's a mix.

And that quarter you thought you spent, it wasn't a quarter. It was a Susan B. Anthony dollar that looks and feels like a quarter. Machines don't know the difference. You just spent 75 cents more than you had to.

Or how about this: When you're working minimum wage and they take money out for taxes, you're really only making $3.90 an hour. That's about enough to buy you one extra value meal.

Do yourself a favor. Don't take things so seriously; don't take anything at face value. It may be hollow.

For the record, I would like to say that, although the stuff in the display is poisonous, the juice actually comes from a little plastic bag in a box under the machine. That way it's easier to replace. The juice is fine, I swear. Just don't drink it out of the top.

Let's talk about sex, baby

If there is one thing I have learned in four years of college, it is that there isn't a whole lot of black and white in this world. In fact, if you ask most college students to define what is moral and immoral, you should expect quite a spectrum of responses.

Now, I believe I am a person of some type of moral integrity but according to an old statute in Idaho law, most of the people I know are criminals.

Case in point. Amanda Smisek of Emmett, Idaho is currently under prosecution for violating a 75-year-old law that states fornication as illegal. The 17-year-old waits tables to help provide for her newborn son.

Gem County Prosecutor Douglas Varie says his tort is to make teenagers more aware of the consequences behind the immoral behavior of our youth today. OK, now I agree that teens are having sex way too young and that many of them aren't old enough to understand the circumstances of a sexual relationship. But who can actually believe that an old statute is going to stop them.

Horse's Mouth

Whoohoo!! Wake-up call! You cannot legislate morality. Repeat. You cannot legislate morality. The so-called devaluation of our youth does not come from lack of laws or the enforcement thereof. It comes from a lack of decent role models such as worthy politicians, nurturing parents, and caring peers.

Being a "good" person is not defined by your party affiliation or what religion you belong to. It is having the characteristics of the moral virtues that have existed for centuries. Love, hope, honesty, perseverance, courage, loyalty, etc.

Quite frankly, I am sick and tired of the people who should really stop and evaluate their own lifestyles to decide what is a "legally moral" way to live and behave. Go ahead, disagree with me and say that if we didn't have moral laws the whole morality of our nation would go to crap.

I would agree that our society is viewing a decline in morality that very few public service announcements could turn around. I want to get back to Amanda Smisek, the poor 17-year-old who probably has little time to spend with her son since she is busy fighting a 1921 Idaho statute. Maybe you're right. She's the one who made the mistake so she has to live with the circumstances, right? Well, that circumstance is a child. It should not be a trip to the cell.

Why should I care? I was the product of fornication, but I don't think that makes me a product of crime.

Family values useless without family

As the acrid stench of cigarette smoke drifted in through my open window, I could hear a number of obviously juvenile voices outside:

"What're we gonna do tonight?"

"We could get some Zima or something and get fucked up."

"Who're we gonna get to buy for us this time?"

"I dunno, I could try to buy."

"Hell, you don't look 21. You don't even look old enough to buy smokes."

I stepped onto my back porch to put some chicken on my barbecue. One of the kids called up to me, "Hey, do I look like I'm eighteen?" I looked at him and shook my head. "You might be fifteen" I replied. As I turned around to go back inside, the others chided him, "Boy, did he call that or what?"

I'm not going to start going off on underage carousing, it's something most red-blooded American kids do. However, the juveniles in question here appeared to be living in the apartment below mine, without any kind of adult supervision.

That's not exactly true. One time I watched them pick their mom up off the lawn and carry her to her car because she was too drunk to stand while their dad sat there nursing a

The Grand Poobah

beer as his 15-year-old son took a long drag on the Marb he had hanging from the corner of his mouth. Sometimes underage carousing just goes to far.

'Family values' has been a big political buzzword for the last decade. Every presidential candidate has had their own plan to make the family unit an important and influential element in our society once again. What they all seem to fail to address is how to make families themselves mean something.

I see a big difference between family values and family. Family values are the beliefs and morals that gives family a sense of purpose, the 'family ties' if you will. In order for there to be family values there must be a family. Two adults and some kids does not make a family.

Before family values can mean anything, the members of this collection of individuals connected only by genetics must recognize one another for having something more significant than the same last name. There must be a support system and level of respect that forms the framework on which family values can be built. Political candidates think they can strengthen family values but they have yet to address how to strengthen the family itself.

I count myself lucky to have been raised in a family that more resembled a traditional family unit than most. My dad worked while my mom raised me and my brothers. Mom went back to work after my youngest brother was old enough to do his own thing, but we always knew that our parents were there for us, whether we needed (or wanted) them.

Although it felt at times like I wasn't being given my own space, I can now appreciate that my parents were only concerned about me and wanted to make sure that I grew up to be a happy and healthy adult. I'd say they did a pretty dam good job, too. I wouldn't trade any of what I perceived as oppression for the 'freedom' the kids in the apartment below have.

I have as many answers as any politico has when it comes to family, but I do know that they seem to be putting the cart before the horse in this matter. I could write a book about people not having children before they're ready and I could easily turn this into a lecture reminiscent of the ones I had to sit through as a teenager but I have a feeling that the ones who need to be hearing it aren't the ones reading this now.

In this election year, we're going to be hearing a lot more about family values, you can count on that. Rather than focus on ambiguous, partisan family values, it would be nice to see people address the one thing there can be no disagreement over: the basic strength of the family itself.

Hall of Fame story appreciated, needs correction

As Vice President of Idaho's Hall of Fame Association, I wish to express my deep appreciation on behalf of the entire board for the wonderful article you printed in your issue dated 26 June 1996.

You are commended for your coverage, however, there is one minor misconception which I feel obligated to correct.

President Dee Klenck gave you the wrong impression regarding copies of the architectural drawings by K. K. Cutter and our fund raising efforts. About four years ago she located those plans which were in the hands of Mr. Glen Mason of the Cheney Cowles Museum in Spokane. He told her they had 36 pages of the original drawings, however they were on linen, which was used for such, 100 years ago.

She stated parchment copies of those sheets could be obtained for $1800 and it was that amount at the time which she could not raise from different contacts in Boise. Even so, Dee remarked to you, "I guess I approaches a bunch of cheapskate." She didn't contact any legislators so her remark doesn't refer to them, she was able subsequently to obtain the copies for $130 which are now in the Pocatello City Hall which is out temporary headquarters, until we raise $200,000 to modify those drawings to comply with the code specified by law, as well as a materials list.

It is the $200,000 that we are asking the legislators for rather than attempting to get them to grant us actual construction money as the building will cost far more than that.

The second annual banquet and induction ceremony will take place in Boise on 3 August 1996 in the Lookout Room at BSU. Tickets are limited but are now available from IHF Assn., P.O. Box 4169, Pocatello, ID 83205.

Rendezvous in the Park

Riders in the Sky play 'true' country music

Finally someone brings out my kind of country music. I'm sorry, but I've never been a big fan of the "new country" the stations around here seem to pour out incessantly. I guess Shania Twain, Travis Tritt and the rest have some talent, but they're not singing country. Give me a good twang and a song about the open range or forget it.

The Riders in the Sky brought both and a lot more to their performance Friday night in East City Park. The trio threw in jokes, yodeling, songs for the kids and even lessons on how to do the "Armadillo dance."

The group consists of Ranger Doug on guitar, Too Slim on bass and Woody Paul, the "King of the Cowboy Fiddlers," on violin. All three members joined in on the yodeling—though Ranger Doug impressed everyone with his "Swiss yodeling"—and Too Slim often misunderstood the others and started playing his face instead of his bass.

Riders in the Sky has been mixing their unique blend of humor and music for 18 years. Their most recent album, Always Drink Upstream from the Herd, was recognized with the prestigious Wrangler Award for "Outstanding Traditional Album." Their next album will be out in October and will be a tribute album to country legend Gene Autry.

They played a few songs from the Autry album during the concert and many other classics. I don't know about you, but "Tumbling Tumbleweeds" and the theme from "Rawhide" do a lot more for me than any boot-scootin', achy-breaky new-fangled country song around.

I must congratulate whomever came up with the staggered order of the concert. Riders in the Sky played a small set at the beginning, focusing mainly on songs for the kids who would have to go home early. Then after Texas Tea performed for an hour, the Riders came back on to play their more traditional set.

Texas Tea provided an interesting intermission between the two Riders in the Sky sets. They bill themselves as a western swing group, but that's just the start.

Texas Tea's songs contain elements of everything from jazz and blues to country and barber-shop harmonies. The blend produced by the group's violin, guitar, trumpet, drums and string bass was infectious and soon got my toes to tapping.

Overall, Friday night's performance was a great start for this year's Rendezvous in the Park. This annual music festival has been a wonderful gathering time for Moscow and continues to bring in top-notch acts.

Street Sounds, The Groove liven up East City Park

I really didn't expect much from The Groove. The opening band at Saturday night's Songs in the Night concert is pretty much a regional reggae band from Seattle. Sure, they've probably listened to Bob Marley and the rest and would give a valiant effort at recreating the sound, but, like other small bands I've heard, just wouldn't quite pull it off.

My theory was shot down when I arrived at East City Park and heard the sounds of the Caribbean met my ears. The Groove really has a handle on what reggae is about. The seven-member band has been together since 1991 and they have spent their time very well.

"The Groove" is a very good name for this band. The beat and rhythms pumped out of the speakers had a large group of concert-goers on their feet dancing at the side of the stage.

After The Groove left the stage, Street Sounds came on to continue the evening's entertainment. This a cappella quintet hails from San Francisco and their music ranges from African chants to gospel and rap. The harmonies produced by the three women and three men worked very well for everything they sang.

From singing in native African languages to singing about Rosa Parks and the civil rights movement, Street Sounds communicates its message of hope, tradition and life from their African-American perspective.

Street Sounds also performed Saturday afternoon during the Rendezvous for Kids activities.

The variety of experience and music that Rendezvous in the Park brings to us continued Saturday. The Groove and Street Sounds provided a knock-out performance that will be sure to bring them both back in years to come.

Rendezvous continues with Latin Expression and Hot & Spicy

If the second weekend of Rendezvous in the Park continues in the wake of the first, Latin Expression Night and the Hot and Spicy concert should be a terrific time of dancing, food and music.

Friday's concert brings the salsa sounds of Latin Expression and the tropical beat of Irene Farrera and her band, Alma Latina.

Latin Expression is a 12-piece orchestra based in the Northwest that includes horns, rhythm, percussion and vocals. Irene Farrera and Alma Latina play songs drawn from the South American tradition that Farrera grew up in.

Sunday's Hot and Spicy concert will combine the local flavor of folk singer Dan Maher with the cajun spice of Queen Ida and the Bon Temps Zydeco Band.

Queen Ida is a Grammy award winning artist that is sure to get everyone in the audience on their feet. Queen Ida leads her band on accordion. She describes zydeco music as "French Canadian folk music, with blues, country and western, Latin, Caribbean and rock all thrown together."

Food will again be available for concert-goers by a variety of local businesses. The Beanery, Mikey's Gyros, C&L Lockers, Espresso on the Run, Pepsi and Schwan's Ice Cream will all be serving up their specialties during the concerts.

I wasn't able to sample all of the vendors, but I must recommend the baked potatoes supplied by the local girl scout troop. Go ahead and spend a little extra to get as many toppings as you want.

The concerts start at 6 p.m. on Friday and Saturday and go until 10 p.m. each night. The bands have recordings and other paraphernalia available for purchase.

In case you miss any of them, most of the local music stores carry the recordings of Rendezvous artists.

Some days it's smarter not to ride but that can't stop me

This weekend provided a great opportunity to get a little sun. A little, that is, if you stayed inside most of the day.

I, on the other hand, got a lot of sun this weekend. Thirty-six mile bike rides on both Saturday and Sunday with the lovely 100-degree, totally clear skies tend to do that.

Saturday's ride was a repeat from a few weeks ago—the big loop over Moscow Mountain and back on Randall Flat Road—so I won't waste your time with it other than to say, man was it hot! In a way, though, the heat helped me on the ride. Having to stop more often—at just about every shady spot—made me conserve my energy for the end of the ride, something that didn't happen the last time.

Anyway, with the heat wave continuing on Sunday, I needed to find a way to cool off. Plus, I needed to do a ride for this column. So I thought I'd combine the two.

Bad idea.

I've never been to the sand dunes near Boyer Park on the Snake River. I'd heard a lot about the area from friends, and a dip in the river sounded perfect to quench the heat of the weekend.

The ride started out fine as we left Moscow. At 1:30 p.m. the temperature was only 94 degrees.

We took the highway over to Pullman and, lo and behold, discovered the bridge down into town is actually done. It's about time.

After climbing out of town, we turned onto Wawawai Road. I'm sorry, but that's just a few too many "w"s and "a"s for me. It shouldn't be legal to make a name that long

Ride of the Week

with only three letters.

Here, less than a third of the way to the river, I bonked. Maybe it was the heat; maybe it was the previous day's ride; maybe I pushed too hard to start off the day. Whatever the cause, I lost it.

Just follow the signs for Boyer Park and Lower Granite Dam and you can't go wrong, if you're up to the riding that is. Watch out for the hills though. There's one never-ending climb about halfway through the ride.

The rest of the ride was slow, and it hurt—especially when I ran out of water. Two bottles in that heat wasn't very good planning.

The only redeeming quality of the ride was the final downhill into the Snake River canyon. Four miles of over 30 miles per hour did a little bit to help our average speed.

Luckily, we'd decided to make the ride just one way, and the truck was waiting for us at the bottom of the hill. A short trip over the dam and down the river brought us to the sand dunes.

I don't mean to complain or anything, but something just wasn't right. This is a really popular spot from what I hear from people and judging by the number of people on the beach when we got there. But there's nothing there! "What kind of park is this? There aren't any trees," I said.

Oh well. The water was cold, and that's what we were there for.

People were taking advantage of the water in just about every way imaginable—from footballs and frisbees to jetskis and power boats. Some people (including myself) just soaked for a while.

LC's Brew Review: More Rogue Ales

As promised, we'll continue sampling more of Rogue's fine brews this week.

First is the Mexicali Rogue. This beer is a beautiful amber color with a yeasty aroma. The flavor is a real kicker, too. Smoked chipotle peppers give this beer a bite. Not the hoppy bitterness associated with beer, but the spicy tang associated with hispanic food. However, the peppers are not overpowering. In fact, this is a very smooth drinking beer and the peppers linger not unpleasantly in the back of the throat. Mexicali Rogue is a pleasant departure from what most people have come to expect in a beer. Very nice!

While we're trying the specialty beers, the Cran-n-Cherry Ale is on the other end of the spectrum as far as food goes. The Cran-n-Cherry has a deep caramel color, which is deceiving of the light character of the beer. The slight fruit aroma nicely compliments the flavor, which is an ideal balance of the cranberry tartness and cherry sweetness. This is by far one of the better fruit beers available in the area, much like it's sister brew, the Rogue-n-Berry Ale. The fruit flavors in the beer are not overpowering but gives this brew a refreshing, light and tasty character.

The Roughstock Ale is a hearty beer. A reddish-amber color and tangy bouquet make for a very presentable beer. It is a smooth, flavorful beer with bite, but not overly bitter. It is not an outstanding beer, but is a fine example of Oregon's brewing diversity.

Finally, the Hazelnut Brown Nectar, which Rogue dedicates to homebrewers everywhere. The first words out of my mouth upon sampling the Hazelnut Brown were "Wow! That is nutty!" Not wacky, but a strong hazelnut flavor and aroma really make this beer exciting. It has a nice Pepsi brown color and oh-so smooth character with no hint of bitterness and a clean finish. It would make an excellent dessert beer or substitute for after dinner coffee. Also, because of the strong character of the beer, I think this would taste best in the early fall. It's a little too much for a summer beer.

This has only been a brief overview of the wide variety of beers available from Rogue. It is unfortunate that many of their beers are not available locally. The brews they do market here can be found at the Moscow Wine Company and local supermarkets. If you travel to the central Oregon coast, I highly recommend visiting the Rogue Ales' Public House on Newport's historic bayfront. In addition to all of their brews, they offer a full menu of fine brewpub fare and lots of merchandise. If you drive across the bay, you can visit the House of Rogues, the brewery and tasting room, which is only a few blocks away from the aquarium.

Although I tend to frown on highly commercialized microbreweries, I wear my Rogue T-shirt with pride. Despite the huge variety of merchandise available, Rogue has not compromised their brewing practices and continues to offer a wide selection of excellent beers.

Keep the revolution alive and support regional microbreweries. Until next time, cheers!

Video Review: Two If By Sea

Starring: Sandra Bullock, Denis Leary, Yaphet Kotto, Wayne Robson, Stephen Dillane
 Directed by: Bill Bennett
 Category: Romantic Comedy
 Rating: R

Two If By Sea is the story of sometimes petty thief and occasional plasterer Frank (Denis Leary) and Roz (Sandra Bullock), two lovers evading the FBI after Frank steals a valuable painting at his dimwit cousin's request—they don't know just how valuable the painting really is. Frank is supposed to deliver the painting to a buyer at an abandoned fish factory on a posh New England island.

Frank thinks the painting is worth a couple hundred thousand dollars, but he later finds out that it is really worth $4 million—thanks to his obsession with television and news broadcasts. His cousin, Beano (Wayne Robson), also finds out how much the painting is and decides to track down Frank and sell the painting to a better buyer—making a profit for himself.

The mischief really begins when Frank steals the painting a few days in advance hoping to spend a romantic weekend with Roz, who is getting fed up with their unstable relationship and life of "crime," on the New England island. In the meantime, FBI agent O'Malley (Yaphet Kotto) searches for Frank, who cannot let go of his obsession with collaring famous art thief Phil the Shill, who reportedly died more than a decade ago.

The couple take shelter in a vacant beach house. They try to get along without killing each other. The next door neighbor, Evan (Stephen Dillane), stops by to check out the out-of-place couple and starts to cause more tension between them. Evan takes a liking to Roz and pursues her affections. Roz likes the attention he gives her and soaks it up. In the process, she looks at her own relationship of seven years and basically tells Frank that if he doesn't change his ways she'll leave him.

Two If By Sea is a cute romantic comedy, following the typical formula. The couple is unstable; someone else tempts one of the partners; that tempted partner makes an ultimatum to the other; things are said and done but everything works out happily ever after.

Bullock improves as an actress with each role she takes on. I'm just not sure about her obsessions with Italy. Not only does she want to go to Italy in this movie, but she also wanted to go to Italy in While You Were Sleeping. Perhaps the screenplay writers and/or directors are trying to bank off Bullock's While You Were Sleeping character.

Leary is funny as usual. He has cleaned up his dirty language a bit for this film, but it just doesn't seem the same without him cussing and chain-smoking cigarettes—his trademark actions.

My advice: Rent the movie when it is no longer a new release. It's funny but it would be even funnier if you waited until cheap night at the video store.

Lewiston Civic Theater presents Children's Workshop

Valaree Johnson

Staff
Presenting the stories that every American child should know were the children themselves at the Children's Studio held at the Lewiston Civic Theater last weekend.

almost philosophical point on making decisions in our lives, on doing what makes one happy and pursuing our dreams while providing comic relief in its script as well.

As Fagan's first directing experience she is very pleased at how the show turned out. "It's really been a great experience for me to work with these children," said the ever-energetic Fagan, herself perhaps an aspiring actress.

"It's really enjoyable to bring people into the story," said 17-year-old Tamara Stutzman, among many of the amazing mature actresses on stage.

Act II, retold and directed by Margaret Adams, is a combination of Little Red Riding Hood and The Three Little Pigs called Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf? In it the villain wolf becomes more like the victim wolf who basically ends of surrendering to the hilarious pigs that really ham up the show with one-liners and Little Red Riding Hood, a rebellious little girl with charm.

In Act III we have Alice in Wonderland retold and directed by Jacquelyn Haight. With all its splendor and color, you'd almost believe you were in the Broadway production. Alice in Wonderland comes with everything from the White Rabbit and the Mad Hatter to the Gryphon and the Queen all complete with around a couple dozen adorable flowers dancing onto the stage.

Hours of work certainly paid off for these children. The production is charming and even with the nervous pauses or witty ad-libs, you never see these kids sweat.

Show time is 7 p.m. this Friday and Saturday at the Lewiston Civic Theater. Ticket prices are $4 for adults, $3 for students and seniors and $2 for children under 12.
