Hoover visits Art and Architecture

About 120 students and faculty flocked to devour barbecued beef and brownies while President Robert Hoover visited the College of Art and Architecture's open house Friday.

The visit gave the college the opportunity to strut its stuff for the university community and the new president. Hoover was shown the wonders of technology in the form of computer-generated furniture and a virtual reality helmet.

"I think it was a great opportunity to get President Hoover acquainted with the College of Art and Architecture. . . he was completely receptive," said Jodi Silvers of the Art Student Advisory Council.

"We were very impressed with President Hoover and his visit. He was inspirational to our college," said John Eckert, president of American Institute of Architectural Students. "We talked about an outreach program to better serve the community."

Nina Roscow, Student Advisory Council president for Landscape Architecture said, "[Hoover] is very interested in making the college a real practical necessity for the state. His main focus is to make all the departments something the state can't do without."

"It was a very successful student-organized event. We're celebrating 15 years of educational excellence. We were happy that President Hoover could celebrate with us," said Paul Windley, dean of the College of Art and Architecture.

Graduate students want out of ASUI

Bryant Kuechle

Staff

The Graduate Students Association has decided that they no longer want to be represented by the ASUI. The motion was flooded Monday at the GSA meeting with a 34-to-one vote in favor of the separation.

"We have never felt that we have been adequately represented by ASUI," Harikunar Nair, GSA president said. "One has to understand that the concerns of undergraduates and graduates are quite different. Anything like graduate fees we pay over student fees which everyone pays." Research conferences and teaching facilities are other concerns.

Nair said that the response has not been great. The break-up has been proposed in the past and apparently took on a very unpleasant tone. "[The discussions] were not very pleasant. They leaned to the money side rather than anything else," Nair said.

The GSA has spoken with President Hoover and must now petition the ASUI Senate in the form of a bill. The vote then has to pass by a three-fourths vote and then go to the ASUI president. If he vetoes the bill, it goes back to the Senate.

In order for a group to separate, they must first meet five criteria. They have to be a free-standing student government with members of no less than 250 members and they must have been on campus for 10 years.

They must be a registered group and keep an academic journal. Their funds from ASUI must be used for academic credit and they have to be denied funding from ASUI.

GSA has not been denied funding and has 800 to 1,000 members. "They don't meet at least three or four [criteria]," said Tonya Lysne, ASUI attorney general.

Lysne said that she does not know why they are upset.

"I don't know their problem, they haven't given me any specific detail to their complaint. They are a valid contributing part of ASUI. We want to keep ASUI as a whole," Lysne said.

Nair said that there is still much discussion to go on and he doesn't know when it will be resolved.

"It would be better if it can be done clearly and fast in the most pleasant terms. Students stand to gain from this. Once we have more funding for our programs, we can fund our TA's (teacher assistants) better. We can do more when we are separate than in this big mix, it would be better for all of us," Nair said.

This separation has been occurring recently at many universities.

Career Expo gives look at employment opportunities

UI, WSU work together to bring in more companies to Kibbie Dome

Michelle Kalbeitzer

Staff

Students looking for future employment opportunities should attend the Career Expo tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Over 85 employers will be stationed at the Kibbie Dome tomorrow to meet with students interested in working for their organization.

Both regional and national employers will be attending the Expo. Boeing, Idaho Dept. of Correction and Norwest Financial are just a few of the companies scheduled to have representatives here.

"The advantage for students is the large number of companies accessible in one location," said Dennis Kreutzer, career advisor at UI Career Services. "The advantage for the companies is their ability to talk to (many) potential employees at one time."

This event is not aimed solely at students majoring in business or engineering. Students from all fields will benefit from the opportunities provided at the Expo.

"There are lots and lots of opportunities for students completing a degree within a year," said Dan Blanco, director of Career Services.

However, Blanco stressed the Career Expo is not only for graduating seniors. Many of the employers offer internships and summer employment to undergraduates who may not be graduating soon, but would like the experience in their field.

Students should bring their professional resumes, photocopies of their transcript, and something to write on. Kreutzer urges students to do research on the company they are interested in before meeting with the employer. This information can be found at the library in Career Services or at the UI library.

This is the first Career Expo jointly sponsored by Washington State University and UI. In past years, both universities offered career fairs independent of one another.

Last year it became evident the fair had outgrown the UI Student Union Building. However, participation from UI was not large enough alone to fill the Kibbie Dome. This helped develop the incentive for the universities to work together to bring a larger number of employers to the area.

"The cooperation between the universities makes a lot of sense. This is an example of a project that can work to the benefit of both universities," Blanco said.

Some of the Dome entrances will be closed off. Students should enter the building from the southwest entrance.

Latah County Fair boasts record numbers

Jeff Olson
Staff

The Latah County Fair closed its doors Sunday after a week-end of record attendance and fair entries.

According to fair organizer Fran Maki, despite intermittent showers, inclement weather, and Thursday's thunderstorm, the Latah County Fairgrounds and Pavilion buildings welcomed over 60,000 visitors.

Other estimates suggested up to 75,000 people visited the 12 food booths and 75 different exhibits ranging from local quilters to reptiles and farm animals.

Parking was one of Maki's biggest concerns, even with the large Eastside Marketplace parking lot across the street. With cars parking on both sides of White Avenue and constant pedestrian traffic to and from the fairgrounds, traffic was slowed considerably.

Maki said the fair attracted a greater variety of entries, and in greater numbers than previous years. "This year, the fair had to expand into the Eastside Marketplace for the quilting exhibit," he said.

"We get great community support," Maki said of local business sponsorship of bands and awards for the best entries.

Maki leads the mostly-volunteer staff in organizing the event which has taken place for over 50 years.

University of Idaho graduate students Doug Amos and Josh Carpenter took the highest awards in the Agricultural Exhibits with their home-raised honey and home-brewed beer.

"It packs quite a punch," Carpenter said of one of his two bottled entries which took the blue ribbon, "the other is just really good."

Amos, a 39-year resident of Idaho, was also satisfied with his first entries which received the fair's highest award.

Residence halls plan grudge match

Andrea Lucero

"We don't want to leave it at a tie, we want to find out who's champion," said Jarett Fry, University of Idaho freshman, of the McConnell/Chrisman Hall GDI grudge match.

After McConnell and Chrisman tied for first place in the GDI Week events which began Sept. 1, the halls decided to keep up their spirit by breaking the tie.

The grudge match will consist of the re-enactment of a majority of the GDI week events. The match will be held Sept. 28. The location is yet to be announced.

"There will be tug-o-war and a volleyball match," explained Fry, "but only McConnell and Chrisman halls will participate."

GDI week events included a relay race, tug-o-war, hall courting, Win, Lose or Draw and a banana split social.

A rematch has never occurred during GDI week and neither has the spirit or participation that made GDI week 1996 a success.

"The turnout was much higher this year than in the past," said UI senior Allison McStroul.

More than 400 students participated in GDI week. Although the numbers aren't expected to be as high for the GDI rematch, those who do attend will be full of spirit.

"Everyone is going to do their best," explained Fry. "We want to win, it is important to us."

"GDI really promotes strong spirit," said Tracy Eber, coordinator of GDI week. "Everyone has given a lot of their time."

SArb on lookout for members

Andrew White
Staff

The Student Alumni Relations Board has launched its membership drive for the semester. Any students interested in becoming a part of SArb are encouraged to call the Alumni Office at 885-6154 for an application and further information about the organization.

"SArb teaches you leadership skills, gets you involved on campus, gives you a chance to meet alumni and it teaches you some of the history and traditions at the UI," said Amanda Fairchild, president.

Interested students will need to complete an application and brief interview to be formally inducted into the organization.

"It's been awesome! I've meet a lot of alumni," said Angela Wallace, secretary. "I've met James McClure and his wife. Hearing old stories, you get a good chance to really get to know alumni."

One of Wallace's duties as a SArb officer is to keep a record of members. "We're definitely looking for someone who is enthusiastic who wouldn't mind putting a little extra time into SArb. We're looking for someone that wants to meet new people, have fun, and be involved," Wallace said.

SArb has played an active role on campus since its founding in 1969. Throughout the years the organization has promoted campus activities and created a more positive experience for students.

SArb has played an integral part in New Student Traditions Night, Senior Send-off, Homecoming (bonfire, royalty, breakfast, and parade), Dad's Weekend, Family Weekend, Finals Kits, community service projects and the Silver and Gold Day celebrations.

"I saw it as a way to meet people. I had never been involved in anything before and this was my one way of getting involved," Fairchild said.

Membership in SArb provides students with opportunities for scholarships, professional contacts and leadership training.

SArb also encourages students to form ties with alumni and strengthen loyalty to the campus through activities and the introduction of the alumni chapter structure.

President Hoover and John Eckert, a fourth-year architecture student, look at a model of the UI campus built as a thesis project.

"We're not duplicated anywhere else in Idaho. We are Idaho's design and fine arts college," Windley said. "We have a statewide mission — to be the best college in design and fine arts in this region."

Beyond the public relations hype, students seem genuinely impressed with their college.

"They have a really good program here," said Brian Piippo, a third-year architecture student.

"It's a family of strangers, really. The level of acceptance is good. You may not appreciate [other students'] sense of style, but you can appreciate the work they went through," said June Whipple, another third-year architecture student.

The open house was sponsored by the college's Student Advisory Council.

Bankers: security systems adequate for electronic money

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Security measures currently in use with electronic money products are adequate to protect consumers from fraud, according to a report issued Thursday by the world's 10 largest central banks.

The two most widely used security measures are the computer microchip and encryption, or coding of information, the study said.

But the task force warned that innovation in security measures must keep up with advances in electronic money technology. "Even the most sophisticated tamper-resistant features may eventually be breached," the study said.

Electronic money refers either to the transfer of funds by computer, or to "smart cards," which are credit cards embedded with computer chips that can perform simple mathematical calculations.

In smart-card pilot programs in several countries, consumers can buy "stored value" cards to use like cash. The amount of each purchase is electronically deducted from the "stored value" card at the point of sale.

Such cards are expected to become more widely available later this year or next.

In the future, consumers will be able to transfer cash to smart cards from their home computers or at an automatic teller machine at a bank. Electronic money is also being tested to pay for purchases over the Internet.

The swift advancement of electronic money technology in the last few years has led consumer groups and regulators to question how secure it is from tampering.

Some worried, for example, that credit information could be too easily stolen and used to make fraudulent purchases, or that information about buying habits could be stored and then sold without the credit user's knowledge to marketing companies for advertising pitches.

On Sept. 10, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency issued a 10-page guidance to federally chartered banks, which it regulates, on the risk of smart cards and stored value cards. The Federal Reserve is also considering regulating the use of electronic money.

For the study released Thursday, a task force of computer and security experts sought to determine how safe electronic money is from tampering, either for economic gain or to get information. The task force interviewed major suppliers and developers of electronic money products around the world about security issues.

The study found that electronic money provides "far greater protection" from fraud than magnetic strips currently in use on ATM and credit cards. Proponents of electronic money generally contend it is safer than giving out a credit card number over the telephone, or giving the card itself to a merchant for payment.

The addition of microchips, for example, make smart cards much more difficult to counterfeit or alter than magnetic strip cards.

And cryptography scrambles the information travelling between computers, making copying or tampering difficult, the study found.

Not even rain could dampen the spirit of fathers and students last weekend. The annual "Dad's Weekend" proved to be a resounding success, said Tim Helmke, Alumni Association program advisor.

The weekend is designed to "bring fathers to campus to share the (college) experience with their students," Helmke said.

The Dad's Weekend tradition began in the 1940s and '50s, but lay dormant for years until experiencing a resurgence in the 1980s.

Fathers had a wide variety of activities to choose from on Friday and Saturday. Popular spectator events included a volleyball tournament and the Idaho-St. Mary's football game. Dads were invited to a pre-game barbecue and a post-game social at the University Inn to celebrate the UI victories.

To coordinate the events of the weekend, a committee is consulted regarding community events.

"We find the holes that are there and try to find the events that the dads have told us over the years they want to attend," Helmke said.

Dads primarily want to spend time with their students. The golf tournament is also a big draw. "Residence halls and the Greek fraternities and sororities do a lot with their dads too," Helmke said.

There were approximately 200 registered dads, with 230 participating in the events, said Jenny Moore of ASUI Productions.

"People were very happy when they came to pick up their packets at registration. People seemed pleased overall," Moore said.

Changes for future Dad's Weekends will include a Friday night dinner with a prominent guest speaker. "We have a couple of names that we're pursuing right now," Helmke said.

"Things went exceptionally well considering what the weather was like," Helmke said. "It was absolutely a downpour Saturday morning, but we still had 60-some dads out there golfing."

Archaeologists find ice cave

Associated Press

CAREY, Idaho — Archaeologists across southern Idaho say they have made the discovery of the decade after stumbling on a cave that once served as a freezer.

"Nobody has ever sunk a shovel in this one," said Suzann Henrikson, Shoshone-based archaeologist with the U.S. Bureau of Land Management.

"This is a once-in-a-lifetime experience for an archaeologist."

Scientists learned of the cave only two months ago, but Shoshone Indians and grizzly bears long knew of the place that held ice on the hottest summer days.

Generations of moccasin-clad feet smoothed a path across its jumbled stone floor, and evidence suggests migrating Indians used it as a meat locker. Most of the cave's ice is long gone, probably melted away after chunks of the ceiling fell away and stronger air currents started swirling inside. Vestiges of ice still linger in clefts and crevices.

Scientific tests have not been completed, but the cave's earliest human use may date back more than 4,000 years, Henrikson said.

Henrikson learned of the cave from a BLM colleague, Mike Saras, who grew up roaming the lava beds of south-central Idaho. He led her to the cave earlier this summer but would not go inside, an incident that sparked the name "Scaredy Cat Cave."

Henrikson wormed her way into the pitch-black cavern where temperatures hover around 35 degrees. She bumped her head in places where the ceiling dipped low and stumbled over chaotically strewn rocks underfoot. The untrained eye would have seen little more than a dank, dark and dirty cave, but Henrikson saw things that looked out of place.

Sharp pieces of elk antler, primitive ice picks, were scattered here and there. Between the stones lay a lush carpet of humus from decaying sagebrush stalks — primitive insulation. Further inspection yielded fragments of woven baskets and bison bones.

"It would have taken generations to have done all this," Henrikson said.

Fully aware of the cave's potential and unwilling to risk losing it to looters, Henrikson asked other archaeologists from across southern Idaho to take a look. They came, they saw, and they dug.

So far, they have found about 50 elk antler tines, along with a collection of broken pestles and stones used to chip meat from the ice, Henrikson said.

Some of the artifacts will wind up on display at Idaho State University in Pocatello, Henrikson said. She will write a detailed report of her findings and hopes to publish an account for the general public. The archaeologists were scheduled to abandon the cave on Monday, but the entrance was to be fitted with a $2,500 gate to keep interlopers out, said Paula Perletti, Shoshone-based cave specialist for the BLM.

OPINION

Should TV educate or should we just turn it off?

As a poor college student, I don't have the luxury of having a television in my room. My dear, sweet brother offered to change that, but in all honesty, I don't miss not having a TV. Well, I take some of that back. There are the few shows I do miss; you know, the essentials — "Monday Night Football," Braves baseball and "Seinfeld."

But too many of today's shows are degrading to women, men, families and even children and careers. Every aspect of life, including life itself, is being demeaned on a daily basis.

Just press the little button that says POWER, and click, instant bashing. Of course, it's just as easy to press the same button to turn the power off.

But what if, after a long day, we just want to sit back, put our feet up and enjoy a few hours of relaxation in front of the tube? It's not very relaxing to not hear anything positive about anything.

Freakin'

Dayna Derrick

Jill constantly puts Tim down, demeaning what he does on "Tool Time." Rosanne and Dan are continually at each other's throats on her sitcom. Those are just a few examples of the countless number of degrading shows that are aired nightly.

Children watch these shows, and grow up thinking those behaviors and attitudes are OK. It's OK to yell and verbally abuse our spouse and children. It's OK to degrade what others do. Is it just me or is there something wrong with this picture? It is NOT OK.

Well, if our ever family values-pushing president has his way, children will soon be watching, or having the option of watching, three hours of educational television a week. So now PBS won't be the only Barney-loving station.

However, who is to say what is classified as educational? Who is qualified to judge these morals portrayed in the educational programs? Those standards are different to different people.

And as much as I don't like most of what Clinton stands for (again, I could write a whole other article on that topic), I do think he's on the right track with this educational TV thing.

According to CNN, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) will determine what shows qualify as educational. Examples, say CNN, of possible qualified shows are "Second Noah" (ABC), "Beakman's World" (CBS) and "Where on Earth is Carmen San Diego?" (Fox).

The FCC requirement, however, does not apply to cable stations. Most homes in America today are equipped with cable TV. Also, the requirement for stations to start airing these programs does not take effect until September 1997. Why wait so long? A lot can happen in a year. It should take effect by the spring program lineup, not next fall's.

A 1990 law already requires stations to comply with children's TV rules in order to receive renewal for their licenses. Violation by any station, and the FCC could fine the station, or if a repeated pattern of violation continues, the station could lose its license. However, the FCC has rarely taken such an extreme action.

If a station violates the new ruling of educational television, more than a fine should be issued. The station should issue a formal apology, to be aired during a children's program, apologizing for not following the ruling and for contributing to the already degrading state of TV.

However, one more simple solution remains. Push the button. If you don't want you or your children to see these degrading shows that are plastered over the airwaves on a nightly basis, push the button. Don't blame the TV station, blame yourself. If you don't want to give yourself the guilt trip, push the button and turn the tube off.

Surprise! Men outnumber women on campus

For all of you men who came to the University of Idaho to cruise for women, I've got news for you: think again.

Some new information has rolled across the ol' opinion desk, giving life to yet another topic to discuss among yourselves.

Do the men outnumber the women, and does it really matter?

You may, or may not, be happy to know that yes, there are more men on campus than women. According to The Princeton Review: Student Access Guide to the Best 309 Colleges (1996 ed.), the men at UI outnumber women 59 to 41 percent. We are looking at the difference of hundreds of students.

Dennis Lincks with the Registrar's Office said this fall's numbers aren't out yet. Two weeks into the semester last fall the difference on campus of men to women was 56.4 percent to 43.6 percent.

There were about 1,273 more men on campus than women.

It seems to me that this ratio has changed since I started here just a few years ago. When I first began my college search in '93, I read that the percentage was closer to 52 women, 48 men. However, friends of mine inform me that anyone who's been out to the bars in Moscow knows the men have always outnumbered about 6-to-1.

Whether the ratio is 2-to-1 or 4-to-3, the truth is still the same: Getting a date in this damned town is tough!

Thus bringing us to our next question; does it really matter.

Nope!

"We don't figure it anymore," Lincks said in regard to the women/men numbers. When it comes to comparing them, some believe they are "sexist numbers."

I don't think the ratio in actual numbers really matters anyway. It must vary year to year or else they wouldn't pay attention to it in the first place. There may have been a time when such numbers would have been closely looked at to monitor the co-ed climate of a university. This just isn't needed today, where just as many women want to go to college as men. Those social walls that were once so obvious have broken down and now women are everywhere.

Except at UI (joke).

Maybe UI isn't attractive to women. Perhaps there aren't as many women in the state of Idaho. Who knows and who cares.

If you want to look at numbers, look at the number of women in the College of Engineering or in your science-related fields. Just take a look at them, or at their classes, and tell me what you find. What does it tell you?

I don't know, I'm asking!

Unsafe motorcyclists need to quit pissing everywhere

It really pisses me off when I see some punk-ass riding around at 75 mph in shorts and no shirt on the back of a CBR 600.

Speaking of no shirts, there's this guy in our hall who always walks around with his shirt off. We're gonna pool our money together and buy him some shirts from Goodwill, because he must not have any. Either that or he's really insecure with his manhood.

Anyway, where was I? Unsafe motorcyclists really chap my hide. You guys want to live the rest of your lives with half a face? I actually had a guy walk up to me right after I just got done with a ride. I had my helmet with me, of course, and he told me "you don't have to wear a helmet in Idaho." Like the only reason I would wear one was if the law said I had to. What? Is this pure lunacy to anyone else but me?

You know what else is lunacy? Ever since I moved into the dorms, shit has been falling apart. It all started with my smoke alarm that spontaneously fell from the ceiling the day I moved in. After that the plastic thing over the bank of lights on the desk broke when I was trying to put it back into place. Just today my suite-mate Steve had to fix the bathroom door with a few assorted screwdrivers and some duct tape. Jesus! It's the same kind of people that design these dorm rooms that ride around half-naked on their motorcycles.

You know what else I love? Well I'll tell you, but not just yet. At least 50 percent of all motorcycle accidents are alcohol related.

I Like Chicken

Brian Schwartz

Being drunk and riding your motorcycle just isn't cool, guys. Use some common sense before you ride, and if someone you know is going to ride drunk, take the keys. If that doesn't work, fracture their skull, and say, "Hey, that's what happens when you ride your motorcycle drunk, pal."

Speaking of drunkenness, it really sucks when people piss in the stairwells when they're drunk. My friend Sanch slipped and fell in some piss that some drunk jerk left on the stairs in Wallace. What's up with that? I mean, if you guys want to run around drunk, that's cool — just don't piss on my turf. I bet it was some guy that was riding around naked on his Magna that made a pit stop in my stairwell. You probably shouldn't try to piss while riding around drunk on your motorcycle either.

Alcohol isn't the only drug that's danger-el corners are just plain unsafe. And if you're drunk and have to go to the bathroom you're really screwed. Oh yeah, headphones are a bad idea too (unless you're listening to something REALLY cool).

Whenever I ride my motorcycle, I always wear a helmet and make sure I'm sober and not pissing anywhere but my toilet. I also leave my headphones at home. I think everyone else should do the same. On long motorcycle trips I wear leather gloves and a leather jacket, as well as heavy boots and long pants. In fact, I usually wear my gear anywhere I go on my motorcycle. Sometimes when I feel paranoid I wear all my gear when I'm just walking around. I mean, you never know when you're gonna trip and fall and hit your head. It would be nice if you had a helmet to absorb that shock.

ous to ride on. What about riders that are high? Pot, crack, smack, hash, heroin, whatever — unless you're going to ride around in circles in the parking lot in full plate armor, don't even think about riding around messed up.

And hey, I like to jam out to my hep tunes as much as the next guy, but you can forget about wearing your Walkman while riding.

It's hard enough to survive on the torn-up streets of Moscow without cutting off your sensory input. Speaking of torn-up streets: When will this construction end? Why did it start? Who is responsible for this? Someone tell me — it's driving me crazy. Especially on a motorcycle, huge road hazards and grav-

Support for questions to sheriff candidates

I am writing in response to a recent letter by a citizen. The citizen asked the candidates for Latah County Sheriff, Jeff Crouch and Kenneth Piel, to answer seven questions about themselves and provide records supporting their answers. What a good idea!

With the information provided by the candidates rumors and false allegations can be put to rest once and for all. Each Latah County citizen can choose the candidate he or she believes will do the best job.

I understand that Jeff Crouch has already supplied the information to the main library in Moscow and will supply the other county libraries soon. Thank you, Mr. Crouch.

I hope that Mr. Piel will contribute in a timely manner the records of his credentials in the same open way that Mr. Crouch did.

—Jane Hetsler

Voice your vote

This year marks the 25th anniversary of the passage of the 26th Amendment granting 18-year-olds the right to vote. Yet since its ratification, the percentage of younger voter turnout has been continually declining.

Our greatest duty as citizens in democracy is exercising our right to decide who determines our fate through the laws they pass. You cannot do this unless you are registered!

"But my vote doesn't matter," you say. YES IT DOES! And to attempt to reverse the awful trend of voter apathy, our campus is taking part in efforts to register every student that will be affected by those who run our government. That comes to the tune of over 10,000 students. That's over 10,000 potential votes to be cast.

The issues facing young voters today are among the most pressing in the agenda of the 21st century. Issues that affect us all.

When your senator comes to your living group with registration forms or if you see a registration site on campus, please take a moment to become registered. But don't just stop there, take the extra few minutes to vote on Election Day and make a difference.

Flowers not the only one to lose sleep

I chose to attend the University of Idaho to get an education that would put me ahead in life. So from this standpoint, I can understand the frustration Corinne Flowers expressed in her Sept. 10 editorial.

However, I also chose to become a member of a sorority that would make me a more well-rounded person through leadership opportunities and sisterhood. So, there are two sides to my opinion of her editorial.

Flowers was not the only person whose sleep was disturbed Sunday night. Several members of my sorority also mentioned the next morning that they had heard the racket. Luckily, I slept soundly. Maybe that's because I've lived on Greek Row for two years and my subconscious has learned to tune it out. Who knows?

But I do know that "every sorority on Elm Street" was not "screaming as loudly as they possibly could" that night. I know that my sisters did not participate. The fact is, Moscow is a college town, chock-full of young students with a lot of life in them. To expect a curfew-like silent period beginning at midnight during the week is simply unrealistic. Are dorms or apartment buildings, which often house hundreds of students, always silent at 12 a.m.?

The only advice I can offer to Flowers is if she stays in her current apartment, hopefully she too will learn to tune out the noise that I've come to expect on Greek Row. I have, because it's just a part of where I live, and I don't plan on leaving my home in the near future.

—Shannon Paterson
Kappa Kappa Gamma

Flowers' opinion doesn't deserve student money

You know, I'm a firm believer in the Bill of Rights and those great liberties it stands for. Indeed, the freedom of the press is a great thing, as anyone who likes to be informed and entertained by the media can tell you. However, I always feel the urge to reverse my stance on this wholesome, American ideal when I open the Argonaut and find myself reading another tearjerk, corn cob in the cavity article the great campus crusader for crap, Corinne Flowers. Sound a bit miffed, do I? You bet, so be it, and amen.

Honestly, how does the author of such rank drivel get the job of Editor in Chief of the Argonaut? I find it hard to believe it was to further the stellar reputation of such a fine publication. You might as well have hired Dan Quayle to be in charge of your spelling. Actually, it was probably a cunning move to get people like myself to respond. Well, it finally worked. After reading Tuesday's Opinion section in the Arg, I gave in to the dark side of the force and decided to vent a little.

Yes, Corinne, I'm not kidding. Your writing is about as dull as your life sounds. (God knows, that's all we ever hear about.) In your last article entitled, "Greeks too noisy for their own good," you enlighten us as follows: "...I have encountered a problem in the past few months that I cannot contribute to anything but the Greek system." That says it all. Don't you mean ATTRIBUTE? We all know you couldn't CONTRIBUTE anything to the Greeks. Incidentally, one wonders what you've ever contributed to the student newspaper, for that matter. As to your problem with the noise, all I can say is, "WHOA!" There's noise on Greek row???? What a profound revelation! And here I thought it was a college campus with all kinds of young people enjoying their youth. How silly of me. Hello, Corinne! Wake the hell up and smell what you're shoveling. Are you the kind of person who moves in next to an airport and then complains about the constant comings and goings of the aircraft? You must have been a mule in a former life, because you sure whine like one.

Yes, I know you think you're doing all kinds of good with this self-righteous crusade against those villainous, inhuman students who call themselves Greeks. I also have a strong intuition that you're going to continue writing these moronic articles with even more fervor and narrow minded zeal than before. I'm sure, I wouldn't have even bothered giving you the satisfaction of a response had I not felt the urge to remind you that we students fund the very newspaper that allows you to spill out your seemingly endless amounts of depressed, oppressed, poor-poor me excrement on a weekly basis. The least you could do is find something half way interesting to talk about. Yes, that means stop writing about you and your weekly crisis. Maybe you should take up knitting or something. Better yet, perhaps you should move to a public landfill. I hear they're pretty quiet, and you certainly don't seem to be a stranger to trash.

At any rate, it goes without saying that I'd rather watch a thousand drunk fraternity boys sing Conway Twitty songs and breakdance naked than see one more dollar of my tuition money fund your pathetic attempt at journalism.

Have a Nice Day.

—Craig Henley

New drinking game — with a point

David Camden-Britton
Staff

The next time you host a Booze Olympics, here is a sport guaranteed to please crowds as well as offer a challenge for all contestants. Spear the Beer is a grueling test of hand-eye coordination, timing and sobriety.

Contestants must be of legal age to drink in whatever state you play this in, and there should be a healthy supply of beer in cans, as well as a spear. For those who insist on playing this game with bottled beer, I would like to recommend the game of Catch the Spear in mid-flight, as this will provide more of a challenge.

To play the game, a spear of some sort is required. Something in the 6- to 8-foot range with a leaf blade is preferable. Leaf blades tend to do the most damage initially to a beer can, with a high probability of a slide-down, which is to be hoped for. My own spear is an 8 1/2-footer, with a jousting tip. Remember, size counts in this game, as it will change just how high you'll have to reach in order to intersect the parabolic arc of the can's flight path.

Enough math talk though, on with the rules. Rule One: If you nick a beer can, you are required, by Geneva Convention, to kill it mercifully. A quick stab should do the trick. Rule Two: Drink your kills. Bathing in the blood of your enemy is a time-honored tradition, and must be followed scrupulously. Rule Three: What the hell? You're looking for rules in a game played with a spear and a bunch of drunken fools lobbing beer cans at each other? You might just be dumb enough for Norse Stickball, but perhaps you were earnestly hoping to play this game on your own, and really want to know how to play.

The grim aftermath of a game of Spear the Beer.

Well, there aren't many rules to follow. Common sense (before booze is served) should guide you. Basically, someone is the can tosser, and the other person is the spear manipulator. They should stand as far apart as is comfortable for both people. Remember, you must lob the can in an arc high enough that someone doesn't have to dodge your cans too often. This is a friendly game after all, and not, as I mentioned, Norse Stickball.

A little background: This game was taught to me by her most excellent personage, the Ban-iarla Daedin. She and I belong to a silly group of people, who get their thrills by dressing in funny clothes, and pretending that we come from a far-off time and perhaps other lands.

For more information about this group, named the Society for Creative Anachronism, just check out their homepage at: <http://www.sca.org>. Ban-iarla Daedin stresses the importance of good form while playing this game. Should one miss the can too often, it is only courteous to allow others their turn.

And no need to go off in a huff, there are bound to be cans laying about that have yet to be killed. Merely consume one, and perhaps your mood will lighten a bit, and you'll be ready to try this time-honored game once more. Or, you'll be more likely to try Norse Stickball

Tupac Shakur dead at 25

Associated Press
NEW YORK — Tupac Shakur, remembered by many as a violent rapper who died in the gangsta culture he glorified, was mourned at his boyhood church Sunday as the victim of a society that destroys black youth.

"He had the genes, he had the ability, could we have provided the society that would have made him blossom," the Rev. Herbert Daughtry said at The House of the Lord Pentecostal Church in Brooklyn.

Two days after the 25-year-old Shakur died of gunshot wounds suffered in a drive-by shooting on a Las Vegas street, the pastor asked: "Who will weep for Tupac Shakur?"

"I will weep for Tupac," he replied. Though he left Brooklyn in his teens, Shakur still is listed as a member of the congregation he joined when he was 15, with his mother and sister.

Shakur — who had served time for assault, weapons violations and sex abuse — was hit by four bullets Sept. 7 as he rode in a car driven by the head of his label, Death Row Records chief Marion "Suge" Knight.

Knight, who suffered minor injuries, and an entourage of at least 10 cars, including bodyguards, have failed to provide any suspects.

Los Angeles police told Newsweek magazine on condition of anonymity that the shooting of three Crips gang members in Compton, Calif., last week was in retaliation for the Shakur shooting. Other sources told the magazine more retribution was likely.

"Whoever did it is seriously in some s— because this isn't something Suge is going to just drop," a friend of Knight's said in the Sept. 23 issue. "You will start seeing Negroes drop real soon."

Despite the controversy and success of Shakur, anonymous music industry sources told Newsweek they believe Knight was the target.

"The best way to get Suge is to mess with his money," said a source close to Death Row. "Tupac is his money."

In Brooklyn, Daughtry told about 150 people in the half-full church that Shakur's self-proclaimed ambition to be "a revolutionary" against injustice to blacks "was just as real as Martin's and Malcolm's," referring to Martin Luther King and Malcolm X.

"I know that there are those who say he went about it the wrong way," Daughtry added. "But it's not for me to judge."

The black activist preacher, who was Shakur's spiritual counselor for the past decade, referred to the rapper's mother, who was pregnant when she was jailed as a member of the militant Black Panther party.

Shakur, "a young man who lived a violent life," followed in his mother's footsteps by trying to rebel against a racist society, Daughtry said.

Violence will flourish, the minister warned, as long as black communities must struggle against high unemployment, poor housing and drugs.

Charles Barron, a former member of the Black Panthers and now Daughtry's assistant, described Shakur as a "very sensitive and a very shy young man."

"I knew Tupac as a 10-year-old, and he wrote some poetry to me then. He was very sincere, very secure," Barron said.

UI wins home tournament, prepares for WSU

For the 50th consecutive time the Vandal volleyball team gave the home crowd what they crave — wins. They swept the three-match home tournament in three games apiece.

"I thought overall we played very well. We had a few lapses where we allowed the other team to score a lot of points on us, but that was based on poor passing," said coach Tom Hilbert.

"So we got rattled a few times and that caused us to have some streaks where we didn't pass very well. Apart from that I thought we played pretty well. We got better on defense as the weekend went on, especially in the Eastern Washington match.

"We made very few mistakes and didn't let them get in the game because of it. And they were the best team in the tournament besides us."

Friday night Memorial Gym was packed in anticipation of the first home game of the season and the crowd got their money's worth. Although the match was executed in three games, the Huskies from Connecticut fought all the way. In fact, their scores of 15-11, 15-13, 15-11 were the closest the Vandals saw from an opposing team all weekend.

In the second game UConn had a 9-0 scoring bout that has yet to be seen by the Vandals. Much of this was not due to the exceptional play of UConn, but rather Idaho's defensive struggles.

Passing was still hesitant at times, especially on service returns. But the thing that really killed the Vandals were short, slop hits that would drop in the middle of their defense.

Hilbert finally made a defensive adjustment and went to what he refers to as "black defense" where a player steps into that area, but he admits he should have made the change sooner.

"I thought we could have done it earlier, but I felt like our team should be good enough to make those plays," Hilbert said. "Even when they are standing back they should be able to do it, and they weren't unfortunately, so we made that adjustment. We will get better at that but that is a weakness of ours."

Saturday afternoon's match with EWU saw Idaho in top form as they sent the Eagle feathers flying 15-4, 15-3, 15-5. Moore wrapped up each of the three games, the first with an ace, the second with a crank inside the 10-foot line and the third with a kill.

Communication and defense stepped up and UI got scrappy, playing everything they could. They also began covering more blocks and opening up for the back row.

DePaul's Blue Demons had the unfortunate job of taking on UI for the tournament championship Saturday evening. Needless to say, the Vandals prevailed 15-6, 15-3, 15-6.

Beth Craig was absent from the starting lineup the second and third games of the match. Hilbert was not satisfied with her defense and replaced her with Jemena Yocom who is not an offensive spark, but is defensively solid. Early in the third game Craig was reintroduced. She racked up nine kills and three digs in that game and a half, proving to Hilbert that she belongs out on the

Idaho starts slow but finishes strong in 52-17 win

The Vandal football team sustained a few blows before knocking out St. Mary's 52-17, in front of a home-opening crowd of 10,558 fans Saturday at the Kibbie Dome.

"They're a very scrappy team," said coach Chris Tormey. "Those kids play hard, they came in here and laid it on the line, and we did what we had to do."

After a sluggish Vandal start in which St. Mary's led 10-0, quarterback Ryan Fien and running back Joel Thomas ignited the Vandal offense for 52 unanswered points.

In fact, before Fien and company entered the game, the Gaels had already kicked a field goal and capitalized off of a Vandal fumble on the ensuing kickoff. The Vandals first score didn't even come until the second quarter.

In its opening drive, St. Mary's quarterback Sean Laird tossed the football to different receivers to convert two third-and-longs. The drive went 72 yards and ate up eight minutes of clock. Stopped on the 5-yard line, the Gaels' Tom AntonGiovanni kicked a 25-yard field goal for the game's opening score.

After the Vandal fumble, St. Mary's pulled a fast one on the home team. Laird threw back across field to what looked like a screen pass to wide receiver Ricky Ellis. Ellis then threw back to Laird, who ran 24 yards to the Vandal 4-yard line. Two plays later running back Ed Williams scampered three yards in for the score.

"I think we came out flat," said linebacker Jason Shelt. "We made some minor adjustments, started talking to each other and started playing like we should play."

With the offense on the field the Vandals were quick to answer. Running back Joel Thomas carried the ball five times for 45 yards. Fien was flawless connecting on 4 of 4 passes and marching the Vandals down to the 15-yard line at the end of the first quarter.

Fien started the second quarter by connecting with receiver Antonio Wilson for the touchdown. When the Gaels got the ball back, Laird found that there was nowhere to run and nowhere to hide from the hungry Vandal pass rush.

"We tried to stay away from the one-on-one in terms of blocking," said Gaels coach Mike Rasmussen. "We tried to stay away from the ones we knew weren't good matchups, and unfortunately we lost them."

Laird was sacked seven times for minus 46 yards with Vandal freshman linebacker Matt Jasik recording two of them. The Gaels had zero yards in total offense during the quarter.

"I think Idaho's front seven is really good," said Rasmussen. "They're a quick, athletic defensive front."

court.

Idaho's top hitters emerged to be the familiar crushing quartet of Jeri Hymas, Jessica Moore, Louisa Kawulok and Beth Craig. These four continue to dominate the net thanks to the hard work of Lynne Hyland, senior setter.

Hymas recorded 39 kills in her nine games played over the weekend. She leads the team in kills with 125, and is third on the team for digs with 66. Moore wailed on the ball this tournament with 31 kills. Hyland's swing set to the weak side was especially effective for Moore. She is second in kills on the team with 108.

Kawulok pounded 24 kills down the opposing team's throats, and chipped in 25 digs. The sophomore Craig continued to provide a solid performance this weekend as she put away 33 balls as well.

Blocking also looked strong throughout the tournament, with a total of 21. So far middle blocker Kawulok leads the team in blocking averaging 1.3 per game. She is closely followed by Moore at 1.167.

Hilbert is happy with the way each player is stepping up. "I'm real pleased with our balance. Hymas has really been a nice addition to this team from last year, but I don't want that to take away from the fact that Beth Craig and Louisa Kawulok are good, and Jessica Moore is unstoppable.

"And those guys are made better by Lynne. Lynne is the one to me that is the most impressive because she's so consistent and she makes everyone around her better. She takes charge out there and I think she's as good as anybody in the country right now."

If it applies to give credit as credit is due, Hyland has definitely earned it. She has 348 assists and 89 digs so far.

Kawulok and Moore made the All-Tournament team and Hyland was named Most Valuable Player.

Tonight is a huge game for the Vandals. They will be taking on arch rival and nationally-ranked Washington State in Memorial Gym at 7:30 p.m., so come early to ensure a seat. Hilbert thinks that his team is ready for the challenge, and that they have a better team than WSU.

"We love playing Washington State. I wish we could play them four or five times a year because they're very good, and it makes us better every time we play them. They're a very good team and we are a very good team, and I think in our gym we have a chance to beat them. Washington State and Long Beach are going to be the two best teams we play this year."

The Vandals also take on Gonzaga at home this Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

UI without I-A atmosphere

Damon Barkdull

College football, unlike the NFL, has always entertained football junkies with its energetic atmosphere and sellout crowds with a crazed student section.

At the Division I-A level this fact is particularly true.

However, if you're a University of Idaho supporter, student or alumni, don't let yourself get too excited. If you wandered on over to the St. Maries High School, I mean St. Mary's (Calif.)/Idaho Vandal football game, you may already know what I'm talking about.

• Dad's Weekend Flop

Don't get me wrong. The first quarter of Saturday's game had me sitting on the edge of my seat: Gaels 10, Vandals 0.

Though I knew what everyone else in the Kibbie Dome knew. Idaho would eventually figure out which of the 10 Gaels had a scholarship and concentrate on stopping them. This would eventually end in a blowout, as it did.

It was Dad's Weekend and everyone left with a happy feeling, right? I mean, Idaho did win and it must have made many fathers happy that their son/daughter was going to a I-A school that won by such a big margin — "Yippee, the Vandals are good," they must have been saying. Wrong.

Many fathers left by halftime wondering why the Vandals would play such a weak opponent. Don't get me wrong, it was fun spending time with my dad. However, I have tremendous pride in where I go to school and I and many others would've liked to have seen a competitive game.

Many fathers pay for their child to go to school here, thus, this is where UI gets a large part of its funding. So, when our dad travels to Moscow to see their son/daughter and watch a football game, they want to see a real football game.

Not Sonoma State. Not St. Mary's. • Gaels, Mustangs and Eagles ohh my

The Dad's Weekend nightmare continues for UI students and supporters.

Of the 11 games the Vandals play this season, only five of them are at home. Two of those games are Big West Conference games against Nevada and New Mexico State. Fine.

The other three Vandal home games include St. Mary's (already played), the big attendance draw Cal Poly SLO Mustangs and seasonal Big Sky powerhouse, the Eastern Washington Eagles. Ridiculous.

It really doesn't make sense does it?

Our Vandals travel to Wyoming and San Diego State, look pretty good in their I-A debut, then come home and play a list of losers to excite the Idaho faithful.

What really doesn't make sense is why Idaho would schedule lackluster home games when they're trying to increase the attendance. On Saturday, you saw the reaction. Just 10,558 fans turned out for UI's home debut as a Division I-A school. Can you feel the Vandal excitement? Obviously no one else can.

The trick to raising attendance in the Kibbie Dome isn't spending thousands on a band and a bad-ass tailgate party, nor is it expansion (we can't even fill the seats we already have). A key to selling tickets and bringing in more students is scheduling quality home opponents.

At Boise State, they can handle playing a few weak opponents because they're situated in a urban based area where they'll get fans no matter what. UI sits in a small farming town, where bringing in quality teams is a must if you want to raise the attendance.

It really would be cool, traveling to Laramie and San Diego to watch the Vandals play some quality opponents. But in all reality, most people can't afford to travel.

• Bring in the giant can opener, the Dome isn't doing it for us

BLOWOUT • FROM PAGE 12

With their running game also shut down, all the Gaels could do was throw, in which place the Vandal pressure remained a threatening menace to Laird.

"If you get hit a couple times like he was," said Idaho defensive coordinator Nick Holt, "you're not going to be as effective."

As dominant as their defense was, the Vandal offense moved the ball at will in racking up 199 yards of total offense in the quarter. Fien was almost perfect completing 13 of 15 passes for 186 yards and another touchdown to Joel Thomas. Thomas kept punishing would be tacklers with his aggressive running which resulted in a 4-yard touchdown.

"He's a little bit sore right now, but I bet a couple of those St. Mary's players are a little sore too," said Tormey.

Place-kicker Troy Scott ended the scoring for the Vandals in the half with a 46-yard field goal. Up 24-10, the Vandals were far from letting up. Fien was quick to put points on the board hitting tight end Andy Gilroy for a 5-yard touchdown, but it was Thomas's 37-yard scramble for a touchdown with 5:10 remaining, sealing the game.

"I cut it back," said Thomas. "I think they were out of line defensively so I bounced it and I don't think anyone touched me."

Thomas would finish the game with 16 rushes for a 119 yards and two touchdowns. His yardage were key to the Vandals who have lost their last five games in which they had less than 100 yards rushing.

"He's just a tough, reliable good football player," said Tormey.

Fien was just as reliable completing 25 of 32 passes for 354 yards, four touchdowns, and no interceptions. Impressively Fien connected with eight different receivers in the game.

"If he can do a good job of throwing around the field," said Gilroy. "It's going to be hard to stop us."

With less than a minute remaining in the fourth quarter the Gaels finally found their way back to the end zone. Unfortunately the game was long over.

The Vandals will now take the luxury of a bye

My ESPN highlight clip goes like this.

The Vandals are at home, yet there is no top to keep rain, sun and snow off our bodies. Moscow is in prime form. The Palouse weather has brought us one of its unusual weather patterns. Rain, hail and high winds. This is what homefield advantage is about.

Friesz Stadium conveys its usual capacity crowd of 25,000 people — not to mention, everyone within the confines are wearing black and gold, screaming at the top of their lungs. The Boise State players are not used to Idaho's grassy turf. Vandals win 14-12 in overtime.

And then I wake up in a cold sweat. It is a Saturday morning and I know I have to cover yet another football game in the Kibbie Dome. We're playing North Idaho College of Coeur d'Alene (coincidentally, they don't have a football program).

Even though they're not a Div. I-A opponent, the UI athletic department promises us that NIC has a quality football program.

The comfortable 65-degree temperature keeps even the cocaine addicts reaching for their Vivarin. The 2,000 students who show up for the game make a bleak attempt at raising their voices — the Idaho cheerleaders have come in with pizza.

This is UI and it is the TRUTH.

On Saturday, the Vandals received more yawns than cheers. Not only because UI played St. Mary's but because the Kibbie Dome doesn't convey a college football atmosphere. The dull, dry air atmosphere found in the Dome resembles that of a library rather than a Div. I-A venue.

The simple TRUTH is, we need to peel the top off the Dome. Sure, it's nice being warm and dry — but warm and dry isn't football, it's Tuesday night in your living room. Most of us here are Idahoans, so don't even begin to think we'd be scared to see a game in the rain and snow.

So as a message to the UI athletic department: Budget for an outdoor stadium before crowd support becomes next to nil.

Schaus interviewed for AD vacancy

Nate Petersen

Staff

The hunt for a new athletic director has wound down to four candidates and Jim Schaus, current senior associate athletic director for the University of Cincinnati is one of the few.

"My goal is to be a visual athletic director at a quality academic institution and an athletic program is a big part of it being successful as with its constituents across the state," said Schaus. "I want a good place for my family to raise my children. To me the University of Idaho meets all this criteria."

Schaus has had a long standing and respected career in sports administration. After graduating from Purdue University in 1983 with a B.A. in journalism and public relations, Schaus has worked several diverse jobs.

Through 1983-1986 he served as the director of marketing for the Washington Redskins. During that time he coordinated all marketing, promotion, preseason ticket sales, advertising and community relations for the National Football League team. Schaus established all-time sales record for corporate sponsorships and publication sales.

Collegiately Schaus was the athletics radio-TV and marketing assistant for West Virginia University. From there he became the University of Oregon's assistant athletic director. As executive producer of the Oregon Sports Network, Schaus increased revenues by 400 percent and distribution outlets by 25 percent in his first year. He established all-time athletic department record for corporate sponsorships. As the associate athletic director for Northern Illinois University Schaus guided the most profitable fund-raising year in athletic department's history.

"I want to develop programs and help take University of Idaho to that next level through increasing revenue," said Schaus. "I want to make the University of Idaho the best it can be which is very critical since its moving to Division I. I think its a great move to the Big West and a great opportunity for the university."

Schaus stresses the importance for the athletic department to move quickly and make the right decisions in its early transition to Division I and the Big West.

"I think that there is a timetable to be successful and you have to move quickly," he said. "I would develop a five-year timeline. By deciding where we want to be in five years, how we are going to get there and acting on it."

Even though UI competes at Division I they do not meet the same criteria as Division I schools. Football games, for example, need an average attendance of 17,000.

Schaus addresses the issue, "First of all, we have to set a master plan with an architect to come in and give you options and make decisions. Hypothetically speaking you could take a wall out, add seating, and put in skyboxes to help pay for it."

There are several facilities Schaus would wish to upgrade and new facilities he would like to build for the benefit of the athletes and students at the university.

"A basketball arena should be in the future of the university along with a student-life center," said Schaus.

After a long and distinguished career that has taken him all across the country, Schaus is looking for a concrete position.

"I am very excited," he said. "I have made some moves in my career quickly so that I can settle down and make a long-term commitment."

UI rugby program opens season with win

Byron Jarnagin

Staff

After a preseason match against rugers from Washington State University, the University of Idaho Rugby club's fall season is now in full swing.

Sunday afternoon they captured their first win, in the season opener, beating a men's club team from Spokane, the Spokane Razorbacks.

UI came out strong Sunday scoring first, but their attempt at a tri, equivalent to a touchdown, but only worth five points, was called back. This gave the Razorbacks a chance to put the first points on the board with a tri and a conversion worth a total of seven points.

UI came back to tie the game with seven points of their own, but a penalty kick awarded to the UI rugers put them up 10-7.

The Razorbacks were not through as they fought back chalking seven more, scoring a tri and a conversion giving them a lead of 4 points over UI.

UI dug in on defense and stepped things up late in the match on offense determined not to give the Razorbacks any more running room. UI put five more points on the board putting the last tri of the game down.

The UI rugby men went on to claim victory by a final score of 15-14. At the conclusion of the match the stat sheet showed UI putting two tris down, scoring one conversion for two points, and three more points from a penalty kick. Spokane recorded two tris and two conversions.

"We have a lot of new players who are not the most experienced rugby players, but they play with a tremendous amount of heart," said team member Lee Mulliss. "I'm really impressed with the guy's attitudes."

"The team has a lot of talent in our back positions, but a small-sized team like ours really relies on team unity," said team member Eli Ercolino. "Our team has a lot of determination."

All of those rugby fans who missed Sunday's game, there is still plenty of rugby to come this fall and next semester in the spring. The season this semester is relatively short beginning early in September and lasting through October, but it is a great opportunity for those not experienced with the game and its rules to find out what this sport is all about.

Students who may be interested in joining the fifteen men on the rugby field in the future need only to show up to practices. The spring rugby season lasts a bit longer starting in March and running through the end of May. The fall season is a warm up for the Canadian League play that officially starts in March.

This weekend fans will have another chance to get out and watch some rugby. UI will be hosting a tournament bringing in seven teams from places all over the world including Europe and Australia.

There will also be a rugby auction held to raise some traveling money for the UI rugers on Sunday. Autographed rugby paraphernalia and lots of other items will be auctioned off. The money raised will go towards the UI Spring Break Rugby Tournament to be held in British Columbia.

For more information about schedules, where to sign up, or details about the upcoming tournament contact Brandon Sterling at 882-8799 or 885-4036.
