UI responds to request for evaluations

Janet Birdsall
Staff

An attorney for the Regents of the University of Idaho and Interim Provost George Simmons filed a brief yesterday explaining why they believe the university should not be required to release teacher evaluations to ASUI Advertising.

Attorney John R. Stenger argued that the university is exempt from disclosing the information, citing Idaho Code 9-340(36), which states, "... All other personnel information relating to a public employee or applicant, including ... correspondence and performance evaluations, shall not be disclosed to the public without the employee's or applicant's written consent."

Stenger also cited Idaho Code 9-340(15), which provides an exemption to public disclosure of "... information obtained as part of an inquiry into a person's fitness to be granted or retain a license, certificate, permit, privilege, commission or position, private association peer review committee records authorized in Title 54, Idaho Code."

The brief was filed in response to 2nd District Judge John Bengtson's Sept. 18 order that the university release the evaluation information to ASUI Advertising Manager Travis Quast or "show cause" why they should not be required to do so. The deadline for the written response was yesterday.

Quast originally requested copies of the evaluation summaries from Simmons in a letter dated July 25. Simmons responded in writing Aug. 11, advising Quast to contact the Faculty Council chair or secretary.

Following the initial correspondence, both ASUI Advertising and the university consulted attorneys. Quast filed suit for release of the records on Sept. 18.

Quast had no comment on the brief. He had not received a copy of the brief yesterday afternoon. Plaintiff attorney Charles Brown was unavailable for comment.

A hearing has been set for Wednesday at 3 p.m.

Businesses upset about construction

Andrea Lucero
Staff

Some of Moscow's businessmen say reconstruction after the planned demolition of the University of Idaho's Park Village Apartments would create unfair competition between the university and local businesses.

Community Realtors and landlords currently have an excess of available housing and believe construction of new living units by UI is unnecessary and unfair.

"We are currently experiencing a 3 to 5 percent vacancy factor. In past years the vacancy factor has been zero," said Shelley Bennett, real estate broker of Bennett and Associates. "Also, the student population has dropped five percent and administration expects enrollment to continue to decrease."

"The university shouldn't build for several years, especially with the drop in enrollment," said Richard E. Tavis, a Moscow landlord.

As a result of university housing being untaxable due to subsidies, rent for university housing is about 20 percent less, Tavis said.

"More university housing would make competition unfair," Tavis said. "I've had two to three people sign up to rent from me and then cancel because they got in university apartments. The university is supported by my tax dollars and I am paying them to compete against me."

Bennett said private housing businesses help the economy.

"The private sector wants taxable housing. It adds to the economic stability of the community," explained Bennett. "If the balance swings too much in one direction, things become too competitive."

David Camden-Britton

Housing still available, although UI plans to construct more.

Roger Oettli, director of UI residences, explained the university's intent in replacing Park Village would not be to hurt the private sector, but to make affordable housing accessible to married student couples.

"One bedroom apartments are somewhat in short supply. Park Village focuses on demand for one bedroom housing for married couples who don't want to be around children in the family housing," Oettli said. "Our focus is on a particular niche in the student population."

One Percent Initiative threatens university

Jeff Olson
Staff

The University of Idaho could see up to a 33 percent cut in funding if the One Percent Initiative passes in the general election Nov. 5.

UI professors Neil Meyer and Stephen Cooke were asked by the Idaho State Department of Education and the UI Faculty Council to provide the university community and state agencies with an estimate of the impact the One Percent Initiative would have.

Cooke and Meyer's research was commissioned as an objective study to determine the financial repercussions for the university should the initiative pass in November.

Cooke and Meyer performed an in-depth analysis of the state's economic and budget data from the past fiscal year and incorporated those figures into the guidelines of the One Percent Initiative.

They found that over $75 million would be cut from local government and $228 million would be shifted from property tax revenue to the general fund.

Cooke and Meyer determined that in order to maintain current funding levels of vital programs, the legislature would be forced to raise taxes and cut funding in non-critical areas such as Parks and Recreation, senior services, and higher education.

According to Cooke's September summation of his findings, UI would see more than $30 million in lost funding from all departments and services, with the greatest single cut falling on general instruction.

Steve Ahrens, president of the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, an organization of over 400 Idaho companies and businesses, criticized the initiative in a July article in Boise's Idaho Statesman.

Ahrens argues that Idaho attracts business due to its stable economic structure and that such a dramatic change in the tax and economic structure of the state could overturn Idaho's "three-legged stool" tax system. Ahrens contends the property tax provides guaranteed funds for the state government which are not affected by fluctuations in industry, consumption and income.

Interim Provost George Simmons says the 33 percent estimate is a "worst-case scenario." The full $30 million would be lost only if the initiative passes in November and the Idaho State Legislature is unwilling or unable to raise sales and income taxes.

Apparently, the only other option available to the legislature is to divert funding from other sectors of the state budget. The re-allocation of funds would eliminate or reduce current services provided for by property, sales and income taxes.

Simmons said Tuesday he does not anticipate a 33 percent cut in state financial support for UI if Proposition One passes. But, he said, even at one-third of the worst case, or a 10 percent cut, many valuable programs and faculty positions would be threatened, jeopardizing UI's ability to serve the long-term interests of the students.

Simmons compared the possibility of the 10 percent cut to the recent 2.5 percent budget cut the university was dealt by the state government.

"Given our current structure, even a 10 percent cut would be equivalent to closing the university

When the end of this semester comes, once again, students will be expected to set a portion of class time aside so they can fill out teacher evaluations. The results become available for student review in the Administration Building, Room 104. They are also used in part for the determination of a professor's tenure and promotion.

ASUI Advertising Manager Travis Quast is suing the university for the right to access these evaluations. The Argonaut interviewed students to find out if they believe the results of the evaluations should be published.

"No, I don't think that the results should be published because they are meant to be a somewhat private evaluation."

—Mica Amar, freshman in plant science

"The evaluations should be published so students have an idea of what the teacher is like. I would read the results so I would know what kind of professor I would be learning from."

—Jason Kohlmeier, junior in criminology

"The results should be published because instructors need more incentive to teach. Some professors are just concerned with their research."

—Fumi Arakawa, senior in anthropology

"No, I don't think that the evaluations should be published because I feel that they should remain more confidential."

—Sara Baugh, sophomore in elementary education

Haarsager: Ethics in journalism not an oxymoron

Bryant J. Kuechle
Staff

In 1925 Leon Nelson Flint wrote "The Conscience of Newspaper." In it he said that newspapers display animosity and insist people suffer.

"The real interest of the press is money grubbing," he wrote.

Such historical comments do not exactly help in trying to create a honest and positive image for the media.

However, efforts are being made to dispose of the stereotypes, as shown by Sandra Haarsager's "Ethics and Journalism" presentation Tuesday afternoon in the Student Union Building.

Haarsager is a professor of communications at the University of Idaho, as well as a seasoned journalist.

Added seating was required for her discussion, because as Dean of Graduate Studies Roger Wallers said, "There might be more people coming because they can't believe today's topic."

"Most reporters act to a code of ethics as they perceive it," Haarsager said. "In every city there are hard working reporters that try to make sense of the events around them and us."

There are still ethical issues that reporters and editors are sometimes guilty of violating. Strategic silence is one that occurred during the great depression. Newspapers ignored the country's economic hardships as if they were not there.

"They turned a blind eye," Haarsager said. "[They] did not want to name it for fear that it would be there forever."

Journalism has also been accused of being a "gotcha!" game, meaning that the losers are named early and the "context is turned into a contest."

Another issue that often makes the profession look unethical is the way human tragedy is often handled. Frequently, it appears that an invasion of privacy to suffering or grieving people is occurring.

Most reporters act to a code of ethics as they perceive it. In every city there are hard working reporters that try to make sense of the events around them and us.”

—Sandra Haarsager

Haarsager suggests that if it is handled correctly, media coverage can help the community in the grieving process.

To avoid these stumbling blocks, it has been suggested that reporters have an ethical license similar to medical doctor's Hypocratic Oath. Instead, organizations such as the Society of Professional Journalists have created codes of conduct to serve the same purpose.

The presentation was the third in an eight-part series sponsored by the College of Graduate Studies called "Ethics in our Daily and Professional Lives."

The presentations are at 12:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays in the SUB Silver Room.

Silent disease works permanent damage

Student Health Center offers free testing, treatment

Erin Schultz
Staff

Chlamydia? Contrary to some beliefs, it's not a flower, said Gloria Workman, nurse practitioner for the University of Idaho Student Health Center.

It is, however, a common sexually transmitted infection, which if left undetected, can lead to serious and expensive health problems.

With antibiotics, chlamydia can be easily cured. The problem is that at least 75 percent of infected women show no signs or symptoms while inward damage occurs.

The most serious consequence of chlamydia is infertility. It also has the potential to cause chronic pelvic pain and ectopic pregnancy.

People 20 to 24 years old show the highest number of chlamydia cases. While it is known as a sexually transmitted disease, babies can acquire it coming through the birth canal.

Why all the concern over chlamydia? In 1990 alone, an estimated four million new cases was reported within the United States. The health damage can be serious if people don't take the initiative to get tested. But since chlamydia is curable, this kind of severe damage should easily be prevented.

Chlamydia grows in certain kinds of cells which are found in the cervix, urethra and eyelid, Workman said.

Both men and women are susceptible to this infection and outward symptoms are rare. If exposed to chlamydia, Workman recommends that both partners get treatment, even if no symptoms show up.

In 1988 the Center for Disease Control and Family Planning began a program in the Pacific Northwest which provided testing and treatment for chlamydia. The Student Health Center is also a part of this program which offers free testing and, if the results are positive, free treatment.

"A lot of good is done with this project, and the University of Idaho is fortunate to be a part," Workman said. It is estimated that every dollar spent in screening and treatment saves $12 in the costs of future complications.

Workman encourages students to be knowledgeable about possible infections, especially since having one STD means possible exposure to many others.

Enrollment down 5 percent

Justin Oliver Ruen
Staff

Enrollment numbers at the University of Idaho dropped 5.1 percent this fall, said Registrar Reta Pikowsky.

This fall, a total of 11,133 students were enrolled, compared with 11,727 in the 1995 fall semester. The most alarming drop occurred in non-resident student registration, which fell 8.1 percent over the past year.

While enrollments appear to be down at many colleges around the country, Pikowsky is reluctant to use the word "trend."

Most of the other registrars Pikowsky has contacted "are experiencing or thought they were going to experience a slight decrease in enrollment. I heard from very few that were expecting increases in enrollment."

UI Interim Provost George Simmons said that the drop was not unexpected.

"We've been tracking the admissions and applications throughout the entire spring semester and summer, and we saw that the applications were down, particularly from out of state," Simmons said.

Over the past few years, growth at UI has increased at low rates or remained stagnant. Numbers of students graduating from Idaho high schools are staying level as well, which means other sources of potential students must be tapped for the university to grow.

Simmons attributes the out-of-state enrollment decline to increasing fees for those students, which have risen over 90 percent since 1992.

The out-of-state fee hikes were a recognition that fees were too low in comparison to the cost of education.

"Those fees are not too low now, and I don't see any incentive to raise them further, except for the normal increases you would see in all fees," Simmons said.

While he would like to see more students, Simmons said that increases in enrollment could be supported by the existing infrastructure and that overall efficiency would be increased.

Simmons said that despite the fact that the university is still a good deal for out-of-state students, UI will have to promote the quality of its education more to increase enrollment in that sector. Non-resident students add to the "breadth and excitement" of a UI education by bringing in new perspectives, Simmons said.

"We're also going to have to identify some new resources to help those students who can't afford [the higher fees] to come here."

Senate passes health bill, urges students to vote

Andrew White
Staff

This week the ASUI Senate authorized $1,000 to be transferred from the General Reserve fund to the Student Health Center. All senators were in favor of the authorization.

"I think it's wonderful! I think it's a wonderful opportunity to help out those who might not be able to financially purchase some of those drugs they might need," said Vice President Annie Averitt. Averitt was the sponsor of the bill.

During Brian Kane's Presidential Communications, he urged the Senate to continue their efforts in registering students to vote. The regular deadline for students to register to vote is today. After that, voters can only register at the polls Nov. 5.

"It's been going pretty good, we've all been visiting our living groups and getting the word out to them and having them fill out the voter registration form. We've turned in quite a few. So far so there have been a lot of students who have registered to vote and we're hoping to get a lot more," said Senator Brian Tenney.

Senator Ben Rush has also been pleased with the drive to get students registered to vote. "It's been going really well. It gives students a great chance to get out there and express their opinions," Rush said.

Senators encouraged students to register early, rather than wait to register at the polls.

"(The polls) normally have long lines and it's kind of a hassle," Tenney said.

The Argonaut received $700 from the General Reserve for computer equipment upgrades. Also, a creation of an election insert page will be provided in the Argonaut.

The Senate approved the appointments of David White to the graduate council, James Sims to the University Judicial Council, Angela Rauch to the Safety Committee, and Jim Dalton as the ASUI Parliamentarian.

This weekend, some members of the Senate will be traveling to Pocatello for the Idaho State Summit. Every year this event provides an opportunity for leaders from each higher educational institution to come together.

GLBA, Retro sponsor 'Blue Jeans Day'

Michelle Kalbeitzer
Staff

National Coming Out Day, happening today, gives people the opportunity to end the secrecy surrounding their sexual orientation.

The University of Idaho Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Association is celebrating the event with Blue Jeans Day.

"On Blue Jeans Day we ask that everyone supporting human rights, including gay civil rights, wear blue jeans," said John Streiff, a spokesperson for the GLBA.

He said choosing such a common article of clothing was not meant to dupe individuals into supporting them. Instead, it symbolizes the similarity everyone has, because most everyone owns blue jeans.

"We are stressing what we have in common, not our differences," Streiff said.

In honor of the day, the GLBA has an information table set up in front of the library from 10 a.m. to noon. Anyone seen wearing blue jeans will receive a 10 percent discount coupon for jeans at the Retro, a Moscow business which is co-sponsoring this event.

Warren VanDenTop said, "The whole point of National Coming Out Day is to maybe remind people that there are gay people out there."

The day also presents an opportunity for those living in secrecy to inform the people around them of their homosexuality.

National Coming Out Day always takes place on Oct. 11 in commemoration of Harvey Milk's death. He was the first elected official to be openly gay, which presumably cost him his life.

Anyone wanting more information on the GLBA should call 885-2691 or visit their homepage at http://www.uidaho.edu/student_organizations/glbsa.

Feast to be held Saturday

The Campus Christian Center will hold its second annual October Feast tomorrow at the Moscow Presbyterian Church.

The feast will consist of an all-you-can-eat spaghetti dinner, with music and square dancing to follow the meal. Child care will be provided after dinner for those who wish to take part in the dancing.

Bruce Wollenberg, director of the Campus Christian Center, expects between 100 and 150 people to attend. He said a majority of those at the dinner last year were members of the local Christian churches, rather than university students.

Music will be provided by Clarence Johnson, an accordion player. Wollenberg said Johnson played last year and "was a big hit with the crowd."

"People really had a good time with the square dancing last year. I'm sure it'll go over big again this year," he said.

This event will be the biggest fund raiser for the Campus Christian Center, Wollenberg said.

MANHATTAN, Kan. (U-WIRE) — One agricultural economics class requires more than notebooks and pencils.

Students need cash and a willingness to trade in the futures market to take Commodity Futures/Options Trading Seminar.

Each student invests $100, $200 or $300 and becomes a speculator. They form a trading committee with Buchanan and Company, a local brokerage firm.

This fall, the 20 students participating in the class pooled together $3,000 to invest. The remaining balance of the fund after deductions, such as broker's commission, is redistributed to students at the end of semester.

Every class period, a new trade is recommended by a group of two to four students. It is a formal, written trade report with an oral presentation. The class then makes amendments and votes. A majority vote is required to make a trade. Each $100 share a student has is equal to one vote. In Monday's class, the students approved a contract to sell corn.

The students also monitor active trades. Also on Monday, they discussed offsetting a previous soybean sell. They voted on whether to buy back now or wait for the price to decrease more for a greater profit. They decided to wait and buy in the future.

Students also write evaluations of peer trade recommendations and act as mediators in class discussions.

They can trade all commodities, from wheat to silver.

This semester, wheat, corn, cattle and soybeans have been traded, said Ted Schroeder, professor of agricultural economics, who teaches the two credit-hour class.

"It's the only class I've ever taken to get actual experience. We put our own money in and our decisions affect our own financial standing," said Joe Parcell, a graduate student in agricultural economics, who has taken the class three times.

UW gets $2 million grant for Internet project

SEATTLE (AP) — The University of Washington has received a $2 million, three-year grant from the National Library of Medicine to figure out ways to use the Internet in health care.

The project's goal is "to evaluate a broader approach to telemedicine than has been done in the past," said its chief investigator, Sherrilynn Fuller, associate professor of medical education. "In the past, we used two-way audiovisual communication as the primary focus of telemedicine."

The project will make UW Health Science Center resources available to clinics, doctor's offices and patients' homes. It also will address issues raised by new communication technologies, such as protecting patient confidentiality and preventing unauthorized access.

"We will be delivering an integrated view of information, including decision-support tools for the clinicians in clinics around the region" — Washington, Alaska, Montana, Idaho and, beginning next year, Wyoming, Fuller said.

Universities in Washington, Alaska, Montana and Idaho — WAMI — have been linked for years in an arrangement under which UW serves as the regional medical school for students attending schools in their states.

The Internet will be used to link and provide "the same resources and access to specialists that clinicians would have if they were here on campus, and vice versa," she said.

Fuller said the Internet grant was made possible by cooperation from UW staff in a variety of disciplines, including the medicine, computer sciences, public health and others.

"That collaborative environment is not that common at universities around the country," she said.

Oettli explained that most of the housing provided by the private sector is two to three bedroom units which meet needs of single student groups, but not of married couples without children.

As to the private sector's concern about low rent in UI apartments, Oettli said, "The mission of this institution is to provide students with access to the university. Affordability is the key to access. Also, we are not planning to add new apartments to the campus, only to replace Park Village."

Oettli said the university is hoping to replace Park Village within the next two years.

"Park Village has been around since 1957. It is one of our oldest structures. Also, it would cost more to bring it up to snuff than to construct new units," Oettli said.

Some locals also say UI needs to make a stronger effort to communicate with and listen to public opinions about building plans.

"We all need to stay in touch with what is happening. During the recession of the 1980s, when there was a crisis, everyone helped each other. We need to continue to do this so we don't end up with a problem," Bennett said.

Oettli explained the university has held several open forums for community to discuss long-range plans for campus development. He feels the university has gone out of their way to share the master plans of the campus with the community.

"We also supply university students with an ASUI listing of off-campus apartments, and landlords are encouraged to list their vacancies," Oettli said. "We really are attempting to work with the private sector."

Bennett expressed her dissatisfaction. "Although I am aware of the long-range plans of the university, the private sector is concerned with what is on the table now," she said.

Chemists at Rice University share Nobel Prize for chemistry

HOUSTON (AP) — Molecular manipulation led to "buckyballs" and this year's Nobel Prize for chemistry.

It was more than 10 years ago that three scientists, including Rice University professors Richard Smalley and Robert Curl, discovered the molecule clusters.

On Wednesday, Smalley and Curl not only were both nursing colds but also celebrating the Nobel Prize with a toast of champagne.

"It's what every kid who's had a chemistry set dreams of," said Curl, who received just such a kit as a Christmas gift when he was 9. "There's no doubt about it, it's marvelous."

Smalley, 53, and Curl, 63, shared the prize with fellow discoverer Harold Kroto, a professor at the University of Sussex in Britain.

The tiny soccer ball-shaped molecules cannot be seen without special microscopes. Kroto and Smalley dubbed them buckminsterfullerenes because they resemble architect R. Buckminster Fuller's geodesic domes.

But they more commonly are known as buckyballs.

A Rice official notified Smalley in Connecticut where he was to give a lecture later Wednesday. Curl learned of the prize from a reporter.

Curl joined dozens of staff and students at a news conference Wednesday at Rice. Smalley joined him via a video-audio link.

"The Nobel Prize has panache to it that is beyond all other prizes," Smalley said.

The buckyballs, which consist of 60 atoms of carbon, have no practical applications at this time. However, scientists believe they could become the basis for new lightweight superstrong materials that could be used in computer semiconductors, drugs or solar cells.

"C-60 itself, as well as some of the larger fullerenes, are still more expensive than gold, and we have yet to find any application that is worth so much that it would be economically worthwhile to pay the price of gold," Smalley said.

Smalley is the director of Rice's Center for Nanoscale Science and Technology, where researchers work with the molecules.

The center sprang from the buckyball discovery in 1985. It will be housed in a new $12.1 million building, scheduled for completion next summer.

Malcolm Gillis, Rice's president, was beaming as he toasted the first scientists whose research at the Houston school led to a Nobel Prize.

"This means very much for the university because it is above all emblematic of the aspirations of this university, ever since it was founded," Gillis said. "This tells the rest of the world ... just how far ahead we are in this particular field, and we mean to maintain that lead."

In an offshoot of buckyballs, Smalley is working with "buckytubes," which resemble cylinders of chicken wire. Their diameters are so tiny that stacking one million of them would measure only 1/25th of an inch.

for two months. The UI would have to reassess and eliminate programs to continue serving the students' interests," Simmons said.

With the possibility of such dramatic cuts to UI, Simmons is concerned for the viability of higher education in Idaho.

"The University of Idaho is stronger than it was 15 or 20 years ago, and the future looks bright for even further improvement. I hope we are not taken off our task of building a first-class institution," he said.

Change your mentality about recycling

Repeat after me: Aluminum cans are not garbage.

In the late 1980s, we as a society tried to take a sharp turn away from the "me" mentality and turn towards a more global "us" attitude. Somewhere between then and now we lost the momentum of that sentiment, a momentum that could have given rise to a new era of social reform. But the pendulum quickly swung back and now recycling is no longer the thing to do.

For a while it was impossible to throw away a recyclable material without feeling a twinge of guilt. People would hold on to soda cans and glass bottles for days to find a recycling bin. Schools started up programs in their cafeterias and student volunteers crawled out of the woodwork. Everyone felt so bad about ruining the planet that they rushed to fix the problem.

But somehow the movement became too much for us. People began to suggest that we had to recycle everything, or else we couldn't buy it. Now we not only had to tote around our soda cans, but we had to recycle our plastic sandwich baggies, juice boxes, brown paper bags, plastic forks and add our crusts to our homemade compost heap. The strain was too much for us.

So, in a furious backlash, we refused to recycle anything. Once again, it was OK to throw everything away; in fact, it was an assertion of our independence and individuality. No one was going to force us to walk a mile to recycle, even to save this stupid planet.

Excuses developed that we all learned to use and abuse: it's just one can, I can't make a difference, there's no recycling bin nearby, no one else does it, recycling doesn't help anyway.

The time for excuses has to end. There is no denying it any longer, we have to recycle this planet because we won't get another one.

So, from a tired recycler, here are a few ways you can save your part of the planet without killing yourself:

- Stop thinking of aluminum cans as garbage. They aren't. They are prized pieces of material that can be used again and again. They absolutely don't go in the garbage can, they go in the recycling bin right next to it. Change your mentality.

- Reuse those plastic containers. Next time you get to the bottom of a tub of butter, wash out the container and add it to your Tupperware collection. Use your plastic container to carry your lunch in instead of having to use a brown paper bag (which you'd just have to feel guilty about not recycling, anyway).

- When you make a mistake at the copy machine, don't instantly crumple the bad copy into a ball and take a shot at the garbage can. Gently place the piece of paper into the box usually located right next to the copier marked for paper recycling. It's just as easy as throwing it away, but you'll feel better.

- Buy recycled material. Make sure it says "made out of recycled material" and not just "recyclable material." Spend a few extra cents and support those industries that reuse recycled materials to make new products.

- If you're feeling really ambitious, find out where your local recycling center is and take a visit. Just look at all the different bins there are! You really can recycle just about everything, and you will be filled with a new desire to sort all of your garbage.

Before you go back to hiding in your non-recycler shell, just remember how many people there are out there trying to make recycling easier for you. They are doing all the work, and all you have to do is participate. If you are too lazy to do even that, then we truly will waste away our planet.

Vote Walt Minnick, 'Republican,' for the Senate

Who, I wonder, is Walt Minnick? You see, I'm not sure. But as metaphor is often used in literature to clarify the intended thought for the astute reader, applying such methods to this question may yield some palatable results.

The best metaphor, I think, is to compare him to the coroner in Jefferson County, Idaho. In private life, he — Mr. Bruce Karin — is the head of his own business, much like Minnick. He has a desire to serve the public through directly elected office, though I believe Karin's wishes to serve the public are, shall we say, more down to earth than are Minnick's.

Now for those of you unfamiliar with the politics of Jefferson County, let me paint a metaphor in segue: My brother and I were building a block chimney in the basement of a home under construction just outside of Rigby, the county seat. The day had seen thunderhead after thunderhead roll off the desert and deliver their cannonades on the general populace before petering out on the eastern foothills.

Pas d'andouilles ici

A flash of lightning from a particularly dark cloud was immediately followed by a clap of thunder one felt as well as heard. "There," said my brother, nodding in the direction of that brilliant flash of light, "went the last Democrat in Jefferson County."

But Bruce Karin is a Democrat. A

Democrat elected to office in one of the most conservative counties in Idaho, which makes it one of the most conservative counties in the nation — signs screaming "Get us out of the UN" lined up along the side of U.S. 20 are a good witness of said conservatism.

How did he do it? He ran as a Republican.

Which brings us back to Walt Minnick — Democratic challenger to Republican incumbent Larry Craig, and the promised wrap-up of the Minnick-Karin metaphor: Both men seem to run their elections on a party flip-flop platform.

Karin knew — through receiving negative response after negative response to the question (even posed to friends), "Would you vote for a Democrat as county coroner?" — that a politician — even for a politically sensitive office such as coroner — would be doomed to defeat in Jefferson County by merely committing the sin of attaching a (D) to his name.

Minnick seems to know through polls and previous election results that though Craig is not a perfect man nor a perfect politician his chances of reelection in Idaho are pretty good, so challenging him in the Republican primaries would have been hopeless. So Minnick chose to run as a Democrat, though he seems to be merely a Republican at heart.

His recent visit to our campus brought no real answers to the problems of government, only nifty sound bites tailored for easy reporting. He won raves and cheers for producing generic affirmations of loyalties to hiking the minimum wage, restoring education funding, "empowering" employees (whatever in the world that means), and the all-time favorite, cleaning up the environment — all without offering any concrete suggestions to counteract the negative effects of his outwardly positive goals: what to do for companies who can't afford minimum-wage hikes, how to cut the deficit without cutting pet entitlements, how to change the structure of companies to give their employees a fairer shake and what alternate carpet to sweep all that nuclear waste under once he padlocked the gates. Minnick, like all

Can Latah County sheriff candidates just get along?

If you're keeping a close eye on politics hereabouts, you've gotta say this year's "main event" is the struggle for the job of Latah County sheriff.

Sure there are a bunch of other important offices to be filled. But those campaigns are like warm oatmeal compared to the double jalapeño Tex-Mex special that the Kenny Piel and Jeff Crouch campaigns are serving up. It's getting so hot that pretty soon somebody may just have to get out of the proverbial kitchen. I hope it's not the voters. I hope the citizens of Latah County don't get so fed up with the charge-counter-charge routine that they run out of interest way before the balloting starts. It could easily happen, but it doesn't have to.

Opinion Gap

Tim Lohrmann

There are a whole slew of reasons why things in the Sheriff's Dept. are messy. With all due respect, the current sheriff has had his problems. Crouch and Piel agree on the main one. They both told me it was Mr. Overstreet's lack of a "spirit of cooperation" that led to many of his downfalls. Whatever the reasons, it's definitely time to move on under new leadership. There is a huge vacuum in county law enforcement that Mr. Piel or Mr. Crouch must fill. The need now is to get the issues out from behind the mud so that folks can make a coherent choice — one they'll support after the votes are counted and bumper stickers fade.

And you know something? I've got a little off-the-record secret I'm gonna reveal. It has nothing to do with personnel records or disgraced campaign cronies. It's simply this — the voters of Latah County are lucky this year. I'm 100 percent serious. I'm convinced after conversations with them both, that either Kenny Piel or Jeff Crouch could be an excellent sheriff. The citizens could be well served if either candidate comes out on top. Notice the coulds? They're there because if things keep on like they're going, everyone comes out a loser. The county has too much at stake for that to happen. Yeah, it could happen that Latah County has a new sheriff who can really turn things around this year. But to do it, both candidates need a plan to get this campaign into issue discussion instead of reputation destruction.

The problem is I don't see one on the horizon, and the hour is getting way late. So Jeff and Kenny, as presumptuous as it may sound, I guess I'll have to make a stab at it here and now. Listen up, guys, here's the deal: Call a truce. A cease fire. Bury the hatchet. Smoke a peace pipe if you have to. Do it now and do it publicly. It won't be all that tough. I honestly believe both of you guys want the campaign to be at a substantially higher level than the one it's currently plunging to. Sure, you've both made mistakes. You're both human beings. Everyone knows that. Let's talk about the future, not the past. So make some calls, get the campaign workers to chill out. Ask for positive actions and statements from them, then lead by example.

That's it. If it sounds simple, it is. That's OK. Do it and conserve your energy. You'll need it to propose creative solutions for the county's real problems and then act on them. There's still three weeks until election day. That's plenty of time to turn things around. What'cha think, fellas?

Dandelion Wine to play Kerouac Room

Christopher Clancy
Entertainment Editor

If folksy tunes and free java sound like a good excuse to ditch your homework, the San Diego-based band Dandelion Wine may be just the (free) ticket.

The duo will be performing in the Kerouac room of the Student Union Basement tonight and will be playing selections from their latest release, northsoutheastwest while luring the general public with the aroma of strong coffee.

The performance is part of a three week tour of colleges in Idaho, Washington, and Utah, and is the sixth performance of the band's fall 1996 tour. Last summer the band completed a Pacific Coast tour and has also played with Tori Amos.

The duo employ a simple acoustic sound and a very natural, almost Celtic style that works well. In fact, the main instruments that the band use are the mandolin and acoustic guitar, played by both Steve Schroeder and lead vocalist, Kris Skaie. The sum of this less-is-more approach, is a musical quality that is simple and refreshing.

Adding to the clean sound of the instruments are the pure vocal stylings of Skaie, whose vocals are at once reminiscent of Kate Bush with just a hint of the aforementioned icon of the alternative ethereal, Tori Amos.

But, it seems that the music has an overtly natural feel to it, that may have something to do with the musician's personal convictions. Both Skaie and Schroeder are serious environmentalists and their music shows it. In songs such as "River of Blood," the band addresses the environmental issues and the need for preservation.

"Many environmentalist groups are at the cutting edge and have information that the public needs to know about, so positive steps can be taken," said

Schroeder, "If we wait until the mainstream media tells us how bad the environmental problems are, then it may be too late."

Other songs on the album, such as "Eunice" and the title track, "northsoutheastwest," serve as reminders that people need to remain innocent and hold on to their dreams, said Schroeder. "Gravity," the third song on the album, is about the struggle that everyone must go through to keep the "kid inside us alive." It's about "remembering how light and free that feels."

Northsoutheastwest is a very professional production in both its look and sound. As for the band's name, Dandelion Wine, the dandelion has a special significance, said Schroeder. "You blow on a dandelion and make a wish; with it you always have hope that your dreams will come true."

The performance starts at 8 p.m. and admission is free.

Ænima: New album delves into the Darkness

Matthew Baldwin
Staff

Tool's first album, Opiate, met with marginal success. The second album, Undertow, won them acclaim, production and airing of three videos — "Sober," "Intolerance," "Prison Sex" — on MTV. Their new album, Ænima, promised to fans last year, finally released at the end of September, under the seventh Zodiac sign, Libra.

Ænima is an evolution from Undertow — the heavy bass remains, the vocals are still harsh, plaintive and angry, but variation has been added to the music: Tool vacillates between melancholy to, at times, a saner, more softer sound, an effect that might offset Undertow and Opiate fans on the first listen.

Tool broadens during the discourse of the album, their music enters into harder, experimental sounds — samples, random noises, a baby's gurgling, etc. — then fades, from the feeling of madness, entrapment, loneliness, back into the light with songs like "Pushit" and the title song, "Ænima."

"Message to Harry Manback" is a slow, piano driven song. It is a sober and angry speech that leads into the abrasive "Hooker With A Penis." The song is quick and pulses like a heartrate, a sine wave of energy.

The fact that Tool's music changes its tone does not nullify the fact that their lyrics are still rooted in a darker atmosphere — they are still brilliantly written, often poetic and oratorical.

"Stinkfist," the first track off the album, marks Tool as having altered, from their previous albums, the mission of their music. "One of the goals of the record was to make it obvious to materialistic society that energy is primary and the illusion of matter is secondary," Danny Carey, drummer, said. "Stinkfist" still reminisces of Undertow and carries the listener, for a few moments, into the bass lines of "Intolerance" or "Sober". It is the first release to radio off of the album.

CMJ says, "Musically, Ænima is dark, an ominous drone rumbling from its depths and churning its way up into a brusque and unyielding sonic assault."

"Third Eye" is a song that builds upon a basic beginning, the sound of a distant drum and a recording about drugs. Tool begins to add in different elements, more samples, a sprinkling of guitar, synthesizer and their staple, the heavy bass.

Ænima contains 15 tracks. A majority of the songs are around six to 10 minutes in length, each a narrative, a bundled story.

Ænima is out in the stores right now, off of Zoo Entertainment. Though breaking from traditional Tool (who's really to say what is traditional), Tool still resonates with the sound that made Undertow powerful and popular. Search the shelves of the local music stores for this album. It is a unique third addition to the Tool canon.

UI goes Hollywood style with 'Marvin's Room'

Amy-Marie Smith
Staff

This holiday season, "Marvin's Room" will be released as a major motion picture starring Meryl Streep, Diane Keaton and Robert DeNiro. Next Tuesday, however, it will open here at the University of Idaho — in our very own Hartung Theater.

Director Forrest Sears says the drama department was "fortunate to get [this play]. When a movie comes out, they close down the stage rights."

UI will be one of the last stage productions of "Marvin's Room," for about a year or so. While the movie is in the theaters, up until video time, copy rights to produce the play aren't given when a major screen production is done.

"Marvin's Room" held many challenges for the drama department. The trick with a tragic comedy, such as this play, is the balancing act that must be conveyed to the audience. One minute this play is horrendously sad, then a split-second later, hilariously funny. A flip-flopping of emotional portrayals, providing for a unique aspect of entertainment.

There is no doubt that Sears will provide us, the audience, with this flip-flop "Marvin's Room" requires. He has been with the theater arts department for 31 years, and this is his 70th production. His recent productions for UI include, but are hardly limited to: "Incident at Vichy" and "Sleuth." His summers are involved with the Idaho Repertory Theatre.

Another challenge with this play was the fact that there are 14 scenes. Set designer

David Wlodarski actually had to construct 14 different sets, which, if you've ever been involved with or seen a play, is quite substantial. Wlodarski accomplished his goal mostly with the use of revolves — most of the sets revolve into place during the play. Sears says this set up is, "an interesting, elaborate scene of production."

"Marvin's Room," Sears says, is "very much a play of the '90s, a serious but hilarious comedy." This play deals with death and dying, but it is approached in such a way that we can laugh at this tragic, yet inevitable occurrence.

Sears also says "this isn't a 'disease of the week' play." In addition, he says the characters are "simply wonderful." Among other adjectives, the characters we meet in "Marvin's Room" are wacky, bumbling, eccentric, nerdy, and delightful.

Arguably the most intriguing aspect of this play is its history. Playwright Scott McPherson has loosely based the story line of "Marvin's Room" on his childhood experience.

When McPherson was young, his grandmother was dying with cancer. The only television in the house was in her room, and McPherson had to go in there — where she was receiving morphine treatments for her disease — to watch the "Ed Sullivan Show." It's all about a notion of laughter through tears and tragedy.

While McPherson was writing "Marvin's Room," he himself was dying of AIDS. Although McPherson received an Oppy award for the play, he died of complications of the disease in late 1992 before success of it really accelerated.

Starring in "Marvin's Room" at UI will be Kelly Quinette playing the lead, Bessie. Quinette is a third year MFA student. (For all you non-experts in the theatrical world, that is the master's of fine arts.) Quinette was involved in last semester's "Top Girls," and the production "Dancing at Luneca," both of which went to the Kennedy Center in Washington D.C. "Marvin's Room" is her thesis production.

"Marvin's Room" opens Tuesday, Oct. 15, and runs through Oct. 20. Tuesday through Saturday's shows will be at 8 p.m., the Sunday matinee is at 2 p.m. UI student admission is free, $5 for non-UI students and children, $8 for other adults, and $7 for senior citizens.

Sly and the Family Stone frees minds, asses

Miah Miller
Staff

They were the epitome of the '60s love and unity movement and quite possibly the greatest funk band in history. The band had members of different races and creeds and representatives of both sexes, which is uncommon even today. Sly and the Family Stone made getting your groove on a "Family Affair," in which all races, ages, and sexes could be a part.

Anthology, a compilation album of the Family's greatest hits, is chock-full of tracks that are sure to get that fat, cellulite-filled booty of yours out of the Lazy Boy and on to the dance floor.

The track "Everyday People" is the Family's credo if ever they had one. It's about being the same because of our differences. Sly says it best: "Sometimes I'm right, but I can be wrong; my own beliefs are in my song. The butcher, the baker, the drummer and them, it makes no difference what group I'm in. We've got to live together! I am no better and neither are you, we're all the same, whatever we do. I am everyday people!"

This song is nicer than your mother on your birthday. Not only that, it coined the phrase "Different Strokes For Different Folks," that later became the name of a TV show featuring Willis and his pesky little brother Arnold who were adopted by a rich man and his really hot daughter.

"Don't Call Me Nigger, Whitey" is as angry and dirty as racism itself. But they get their point across by simply repeating the chorus over and over. "Don't call me nigger, whitey; Don't call me whitey, nigger." It throws our ignorance in our faces and then leaves it up for us to do something about it.

"Thankyou Falletinme Be Mice Elf Again" is not only a phat track, but it literally made history with its funky-ass bassline. It was the first time "Slap Bass" had appeared on a recording. This technique of bass playing opened a whole new realm for later generations of funkateers. Sly's vocals here are on point as usual.

"Runnin' from the devil, grinnin' at his gun ... We began to wrestle, I was on the top ... " This track also featured one of Sly's trademarks — a distinctly uplifted sound and attitude. Sly was known for his positive music and profound lyrics as well as his ability to move a party.

Meanwhile, "Family Affair" is smooth like butter. The wah-wah guitar and organ jam funkintaneously while the drums groove along like Don Cornelius' Soul Train. This one sounds almost like Sly turned down all the treble when this was recording. It's got a strange, distantly muffled sound.

"You Can Make It If You Try" is uplifting enough to make you feel like you're worth your weight, even when you're feeling lower than your shoes. "Time's still creepin', especially when you're sleepin'; Wake up and go for what you know!" Sly urges an apathetic society to get off their ass, while the horn section goes for theirs.

The best, however, is "If You Want Me To Stay." The drifting bassline and organ accents throughout, make for a warm, empty sound. And Sly's eccentric singing style takes control of your attention and refuses to let go. From a gravely baritone to a high-pitched squeal and back again, Sly charms his audience into a trance like state — all in the name of the Almighty Funk.

All in all, Anthology is not just a funkscapade of Sly and the Family Stone's greatest, but a step forward for racial equality. So next time you're kicking back with your friends, pop in some Family Stone. And while you're being grooved into a higher state of boogie, make sure you check out the lyrics. He'll move your mind along with your ass ...

Prichard Art Gallery shows off UI architecture

Justin Cason
Staff

When you stroll around the University of Idaho campus, it's easy to see a sharp contrast in architecture. If you walk around the UI Prichard Art Gallery the next two months, you'll see one of the main reasons why these distinct differences exist.

The gallery will be a virtual museum of architectural history for the next six weeks, showing off the works of one of the state's most reputable and enduring design firms, Tourtellotte & Hummel.

The architecture partnership is responsible for the blueprinting of many major buildings on the UI campus, as well as several other facilities in the town of Moscow.

Included in the exhibit will be drawings, renderings, floor plans, photographs, blueprints and even a model of a proposed courthouse in Ada County.

"It's basically going to be a history of their architecture," said Gail Siegel, interim director of university galleries.

Anyone familiar with regional architecture will attest that the firm is one of the largest and most renowned in the Northwest. Their buildings, though, are not the only thing that has brought about this gallery showing.

"They were not the only large architectural firm in Idaho," Siegel said. "But what is important is that they kept their written documents and can trace them back 100 years."

John Tourtellotte and Charles Frederick Hummel founded the organization in 1896, and it is this centennial of architectural accomplishments which has in large part led the corporation to create this exhibit.

While responsible for numerous other notable works outside the confines of northern Idaho, it is on the UI campus, however, that the firm's unique style is best flaunted. Its first work at the university was the redesign of the Administration Building, which had burned down in a 1906 fire.

Tourtellotte & Hummel's subsequent works on campus include the College of Forestry, Wildlife & Range Sciences Building, the College of Education Building, the Kiva and, symbolically enough, the Art and Architecture South, North and Annex Buildings. Idaho State University and Boise State University also boast facilities designed by the architects.

Still, the company's best known works, remain in Boise. The Idaho State Capital Building, St. John's Cathedral and the classic Egyptian Theatre all fall within the broad label of Tourtellotte and Hummel's works. They even designed the home of NBA star Karl Malone in Salt Lake City.

Though the name of the firm has changed this year — as it has eight other times in the past — to "Hummel Architects P.A.," the quality work remains the same. Frederick C. Hummel, grandson of the co-founder and current executive at the business, will be presenting a slide show and accompanying lecture in addition to the Prichard Gallery showing. The lecture will be held in the UI Life Science Building Room 277 on Wednesday, Oct. 23 at 7:30 p.m. and will detail Tourtellotte & Hummel's success throughout the years.

India Night brings flavor of Asia to Idaho

A flash of color, swish of skirts and they're past me. Resplendent in their finery, a troupe of young girls giggles their way towards the stage. In a few moments, the house lights dim, and the pageantry of dance begins.

Welcome to India Night, a celebration of culture from our Neighbors to the East. India is a land of many states, cultures, and languages (over 1,000 differing dialects are spoken in 26 states). The world's oldest democracy, India has a vivid and intriguing culture, and a part of this was presented to the university community Friday evening, Oct. 4. Dancing, interesting cuisine, and travel videos and slides were a major portion of the evening's entertainment, which culminated in a mock traditional wedding.

The number of people at the event was staggering. Seldom have I seen the ballroom filled to capacity, but this night was just such an event. After everyone was seated, and room was made, an introductory ceremony — the lighting of the candle — was conducted. This was followed by a traditional dance performed by some of the younger members of the troupe.

All in all, a celebration of color, unity, and the variety of cultures available in one continent. For those who missed this event, WSU will be holding a similar event in November, and of course, there is always next year.

—David Camden-Britton

Rhyme of the Week!

The height of the clouds
Is a visible clue,
Of how high or low
Is the point of dew.

Tip of the Week!

The Core

Keeping the core (your organs) warm will allow the body to keep your extremities warm (your fingers and toes).

A vest is the perfect way to regulate core temperature, especially one with a high neck to keep breezes off your neck.

Keep the vest on and regulate your warmth with a hat, your jacket (unless it is precipitating), and the vest zipped or unzipped.

You'll be surprised how much a simple little vest can do to comfort.

Imagining Bermuda . . .

Shawn Vidmar

This century-old lighthouse cautions weary seafarers of hazards.

Shawn Vidmar

A typical parking lot: cruise ships and mopeds.

Shawn Vidmar

Outdoor Editor

Imagine a place where people whitewash and clean their roofs in order to drink the water which collects in rain barrels after the wet season.

Imagine house hues in pastels with angles only M.C. Escher could conjure and admire.

Imagine the blue-green Atlantic Ocean rising up to the world's second most isolated island and the northern most coral outcrop.

Picture Bermuda.

Bermuda, an island of fun, sun and discovery, can be a flight from reality and a vacation of fancy. If relaxing on the sand, occasionally going for a snorkel, and being treated like royalty is your cup of tea, then by all means, Bermuda should be your next destination.

The picturesque island rests 650 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C.; therefore, it remains a quick flight from the States. But remember, Bermuda is in fact a foreign country and thus a passport is needed for entry.

Originally discovered by the Spanish in the early 16th century, the island remained uninhabited until a ship bound for Virginia sunk on the 150 some odd coral rocks, islets, and islands surrounding the main land mass in 1609. Britain claimed Bermuda under its crown in 1684 and ruled until 1968 whereas and Air Force base there for refueling and thirst quenching.

The United States is not the only one to take advantage of the beautiful layout of the island. Many cruise ships dock in Hamilton Harbour to take on water and allow its passengers a day on the island.

Since the infrastructure is minimal, and motorists drive on the left hand side of the road due to British rule, the only mode of transportation available for tourists happens to be mopeds.

Usually the harbor or the hotels will outfit the tourist in a jazzy little machine which maxes out at 30 miles an hour — downhill with a tailwind. Helmets are mandatory and because the roads are so windy and narrow, a brain bucket proves to be crucial in the predictable spill.

Scuba diving in the area is fantastic. The Gulf Stream warms the waters to a comfortable 75-80 degrees. There are many shipwrecks to explore and the tropical fish, with their brilliant colors and markings, go on about their business paying the diver no mind at all.

Other outings consist of crusading around on the moped, finding a pristine beach, picking up a game or two of tennis, finding the best spot to view the sunrise or sunset, and otherwise just relaxing and having every whim catered to.

The tennis courts are clay and well kept. The island breeze cools the courts so it stays a comfortable 85 degrees out of the water. People consistently hang out at the courts looking to pick up a game, so not having a partner shouldn't be an excuse to walk away without a match.

Hotels on the island are luxurious and immaculate, and oftentimes the lobby and greater parts of the hotel structure consist of clean white walls and beautiful marble. Again, the amazing pastel colors with white roofs and odd angles — to maximize the water collection — invite the tourist to admire the many architects who designed these island bungalows.

Imagining a place as beautiful as Bermuda may seem impossible, but visiting there is not. Don't let the famed Bermuda Triangle dampen your desire to experience the wonder of a glorious sunset, viewed from the balcony of a pub while waiting for your shepherd's pie and enjoying a nice full-bodied stout.

Bermuda claimed internal self-government, which it remains today.

Bermuda, only 20 square miles total land mass, remains important for the United States because of its capacity for fresh water. Therefore, the United States operates a Naval

Kamiak Butte, a relaxing spot

Kevin Murphy
Staff

You may never have heard of Kamiak Butte County Park, and it's not surprising. Although this small 298-acre park may be a new name, it is located less than one-half hour from your home, apartment, fraternity, or residence hall.

Kamiak Butte Park is pretty easy to locate — just go to Pullman, get on Highway 27, and follow it for about 13 miles. The turnoff is designated by a small wooden sign with the international symbol for "scenic view" (a pair of binoculars). About one-half mile on that road will bring you to the actual turnoff to the park.

Small would be one way to describe the park. It has a small picnic area, only a handful of camping spots and two trails designated for hiking; but its meager accommodations do not detract from the fact that the park is out of the way and that is all that is necessary.

Kamiak isn't for the serious hiker, or for someone interested in camping in the wilderness. It's just a small retreat away from the city, a relaxing spot.

In the main parking lot is the trail head labeled with a sign declaring: Vista Walk 1/2 mile, Loop Walk 3 1/2 miles. From this point it is obvious the hiking is not going to be too rough, considering that from the parking lot one can easily see the crest of the hill through the trees.

On the kiosk in the parking lot pick up a "Self Guiding Nature Walk" pamphlet, and if there are none there, the ranger station (also in the park) should have one. The pamphlets are quite nice and very well done. They are full of information and sketches and are quite specific about what the park has to offer.

Heading up the trail, you'll be welcomed by a cool, moist breeze, which the pamphlet explains is due to the fact that the sun's direct rays never reach the north side of the park. The pamphlet also points out several other factoids about Kamiak Butte Park, from how it was named (after Chief Kamiaken of the Yakima Indian Nation), to types of plants, and species of animals which inhabit the park.

From the crest of the hill/mountain, the view is different that you would expect. It is odd to be looking out from a forest on to farm land, especially now as the fields take on the colors of fall. Not too far away is the shadow of Moscow Mountain, and the ghost of other mountain ranges hover in the distance.

The Vista walk will lead into the Loop walk. The latter will lead you through a good deal more of the park, bringing you back to the camping areas, which are not too far from the parking lot. The Loop walk offers the opportunity to visit the summit of the "mountain."

If you feel like spending the night, there is a small fee for the use of the campgrounds. There are about six or seven spots available for tents only. The stay should be relatively quiet, the park doesn't seem as though it is thoroughly frequented, but it doesn't appear to be abandoned, either.

Even if you don't stay the night, the park is a very nice area to get away. It is quiet, and scenic — definitely a good place to rest, relax, write, sketch, or to do whatever is needed to escape.

A kaleidoscope of color at Robinson Park

Heather McCoy
Staff

Robinson Park, although one of the nicest parks in the area, also remains one of Moscow's best kept secrets.

Not many people take advantage of one of our most beautiful parks, but for those who do, the privacy is a bonus. Because not many people are out there, the park usually provides peace and quiet. Serving as an excellent spot for barbecues, picnics, volleyball games, horseshoe games, nature hikes, and softball, it can offer any individual something to do outdoors.

The park once had a small lake which gave it the name, Robinson

Lake Park. Now, however, only a small stream runs through it and the name has been reduced to Robinson Park.

Although the lake has disappeared, the park is still an awesome place to go. Autumn's brilliant colors makes visiting the park especially rejuvenating this time of year. Leaves the color of fiery red flames and sun-kissed shades of oranges and yellows seem to consume the tips of trees and roadside bushes like blazing wildfire.

On my way to the park, I wished that I had taken my bicycle instead of my car for the five-mile trek. The colors, although beautiful through the bug-splattered glass of my windshield, would have appeared even more vivid had I been out in the fresh air. Buckskin tan and dusty brown fields contrasted with the majestic midnight blue Moscow Mountain that loomed over the windy road.

When driving the speed limit, (which is 35 miles per hour) it should only take about 10 minutes to get to Robinson Lake Park. To get there, turn east on Joseph Street off of Mountainview Road (next to the Church of Latter Day Saints). Stay on Joseph Street and it will change into Robinson Park Road. Keep driving past Schierman's Slurp and Burp, unless you want to stop for a cold one, of course, and continue past Syringa Mobile Home Park. Keep following this road until you come to a "Y" then turn left. A huge sign will greet you to the large open meadow surrounded by deep green forest. The park extends to both sides of the road, so you won't have a problem finding a secluded spot.

Picnic shelters are scattered about the park, fully equipped with barbecues. In the far corner of the left half of the park lies an old-fashioned softball diamond and some swing sets and a slide. A muddy creek, which dogs love to bathe in, runs through the meadow so you'll have no problem entertaining your pets if you choose to bring them out to the park. On the right side of the park, more swing sets and two sanded horseshoe pits offer endless hours of fun. Also on the right side, a volleyball court and an amphitheater made of old logs are surrounded by colorful underbrush.

Don't delay visiting, these next two weeks are the ideal times to visit this park; the one-mile Nature Trail never looks more kaleidoscopic and the weather will soon turn dreary.

If you choose to stay overnight, you are more than welcome to do so. The Park Headquarters asks only that you register with them at 2094 Robinson Park Road.

Letters to the Editor

Vandals involved made homecoming success

The 1996 "Justice Is Coming" Vandal homecoming was an unqualified success. Many people were involved to complete this team effort. Speaking of thank yous, a big one to the Vandal football and volleyball teams for their big wins!

First, a rousing thank you to the students who cheered at the game, stuffed napkins in floats, sang in the jingles contest, decorated their living groups, and did the hundreds of other details that made campus alive with homecoming activities.

Thank you to the ASUI and Student Alumni Relations Board committees who worked so long and hard to make a fun-filled weekend. In addition, thank you to Amy Czarniecki, homecoming chairperson; Emily MacDonald, co-chair; Katie Jolley, public relations and advertising chair; Sarah Jo Schneider and Vince Hordemann, living group co-chairs; Tracy Eber, residence hall representative, Allison Rockwell, Panhellenic Council representative; Jim Riley, Interfraternity Council representative; Chris Houck, all-campus chair; Lori Manzanara, parade chair, Bill Brooks, assistant parade chair; Traci Kilgore, royalty co-chair; Rebecca Coyle and Brian Kane, bonfire co-chairs, and Julie Browne and Wendy Kellogg, breakfast co-chairs.

Congratulations to Homecoming Queen Katie Egland, King John Carpenter, and attendants Katie Jolley, Jim Dalton, Kim Dutchak, and Brian Kane.

I would also like to express my thanks to all the living groups who participated and special congratulations to the winners of the events including Delta Gamma and Alpha Kappa Lambda for overall homecoming winners; Delta Gamma and Alpha Kappa Lambda, banner event; Gamma Phi Beta and Alpha Kappa Lambda for the single elimination volleyball tournament; Phi Gamma Delta and Kappa Kappa Gamma, Vandal Jingles winners Alpha Kappa Lambda for decoration of the living environment from the Greeks, and Hays Hall from the residences. Alpha Kappa Lambda and Alpha Gamma Delta were first in the float competition.

The 10,000 or so alumni returning to campus saw the enthusiasm at Idaho. The class reunions (1956 and 1971) were excited by what was happening here. Because of everyone's help and involvement, the weekend was a great success.

Thank you on behalf of the 72,000 former students who make up the university's alumni association, for making Homecoming such an outstanding weekend.

—Flip Kleffner
Director of Alumni Relations

Return to 'Vandalville' not to forget

To all who made the 1996 Homecoming activities a true showing of Vandal Spirit, I bow in acknowledgement and thanks. It was a wonderful weekend for a returning member of the class of 1956 — who has more fabulous memories than this entire publication could hold.

The Student Alumni Relations Board is to be thanked by all who enjoyed the breakfast production staged in the Student Union Building on Saturday morning. Couldn't have been better! Thanks to all who made it happen.

A return to 804 Elm Street — the first in more than 20 years — was great for this old Vandal who still believes his years at Phi Delta Theta and Vandalville represent the best years of his life. The tour given me by Jim Dalton last Saturday night brought back a flood of wonderful memories.

The great volleyball victory and the Vandals' win over Cal Poly SLO proved to be highlights for a grand and fun-filled weekend. Thanks again for making it all happen for all of us who were fortunate enough to return for a great weekend.

politicians and unlike the righteous Democrat he is painting himself to be, counts on voters to set him into office because in some Beavis-and-Butt-Headish way, he made them "feel good."

The issue which makes this perfectly clear is the one issue he has made so dear to his campaign: nuclear waste. While in anti-nuke bastions such as North Idaho and the Magic Valley, Minnick is all cheers for the Stop the Shipments initiative and practically challenges that Republican rogue of a heartless Gov. Phil Batt to a knife fight over the waste deal he signed with the feds.

Then when he goes to pro-nuke bastions such as the state capitol in Boise and Eastern Idaho, he touts himself as the champion of the INEL who promises when elected to be a guard dog against more rogue Republicans in the Evil East who aim to cut the deficit by cutting the INEL's cleanup budget. He also makes promises to ensure a nuclear research future for the INEL while whining when Gov. Batt agrees to hold up the carpet for 40 years while the feds sweep nuclear waste under it. Minnick's views on the subject are nothing but contradictions in terms.

This Minnick flip-flopping is political pandering at its worst. It adds only to the divisiveness between north and south and makes a mockery of his complaints against Craig for unfair political practices while campaigning. Any champion of righteousness should be able to say with a clear conscience that he does not use the disreputable tactics of the empire he berates.

Minnick cannot make any such claim.

Nuclear waste is an issue Idahoans will have to deal with whether or not Proposition 3 passes or not and no matter who gets elected to the Senate. Rescinding Gov. Batt's deal with the government would be a gross embarrassment to the state of Idaho and only put the state in a weaker position for bargaining when — no question of if — future waste deals are arranged. Batt's deal may not please everyone but Idaho stands unique as the only state with such a deal. South Carolina, Colorado, Texas, Tennessee and Washington have no such deals, though they may want them terribly.

Craig may not be the most popular politician in every corner of Idaho, but his commitment to, rather than his disdain towards Gov. Batt's agreement will ensure Idaho's continued strong representation on nuclear waste issues.

Minnick, the wannabe Republican, allied with those forces aimed at rescinding Gov. Batt's deal, would result in greater embarrassments to the state than Helen Chenoweth ever committed. Their noble goals would only turn Idaho into the one-way nuclear waste gate they fear the most.

Now I'm going to tell you something that will haunt quite a few of you for the rest of your days: I see all of this from the point of view of a Democrat. Yes, I have voted consistently Democrat since I won the right to vote, but I will be voting for Larry Craig and not Walt Minnick because I believe Craig is the better man for the job.

Pay up, Dad!

I'm sure we have all heard the term "dead-beat dads" applied to any number of men in this country who refuse to accept responsibility for their children. But do we understand its implications and what the American government is really doing to stop it?

I remember a few months ago a man back East was arrested and jailed. His crime? He divorced his wife and didn't pay child support for six months. The U.S. government, deciding it had to get tough on dead-beat dads, tracked down this man and threw him in jail, announcing to the media that it had begun to fight the problem. We've heard nothing since then.

The family involved was wealthy. The mother wasn't in any danger of starving and her children still had clothing. It was just an instance of political bullshit that made it look like Big Brother was there helping the common folk. What about the millions of other single mothers out there whose husbands ran off for whatever reason? Those mothers that are living at or below the poverty line because some man wanted to prove his virility and then escape the responsibility involved in raising children?

Let's take my father for instance. When I was 4 years old, he told my mother on a spring morning that he was going fishing and that was the last time I saw him for almost 10 years. Never once, since then, has he paid any child support for me or my two younger sisters. He's wanted for tax evasion in four states as well. And how much detective work do you think the government has done in tracking down this dead-beat dad and tearing the thousands of dollars out of him he owes us? None at all.

My father — and I use the term loosely — is now on his fourth wife, dodging the government with a neat little scheme he has worked up in which his boss pays him under the table and all the money goes into his current wife's bank account. He's been turned in for this as well, the government knows about it. They know where he lives, where he works, they probably know the kind of coffee he drinks in the morning. And I'm sure the government knows this about almost every dead-beat dad in America.

With the election year, we've all seen a lot of partisan political stances revolving around Medicare and Welfare and food stamps. The simple problem solver here is finding and prosecuting the men of this country who aren't taking care of their kids. There would be less people on welfare and food stamps if the government would just take the time to pull their heads out of the red tape and think on any level above a political one. It takes very little detective work to find these men and punish them.

So, as it stands now, dead-beat dads are a media-frenzied political 15 seconds of fame that has been lost in the jumble of Washington bureaucracy. If we want to "bring back family values," a highly preached topic this year, then this is where we should start. Focus on these men, and I guarantee a lot of problems in this country will be solved. Continue to ignore these men, and our problems will only get worse.

Golf returns home

The University of Idaho men's golf team finished 15th at the Nike Northwest Classic, and the women's team turned in a 10th-place effort at the Lumberjack Women's Golf Invitational.

Brian King, who played for Lewiston High School, led the men in the tournament that concluded Tuesday, and Trisha Einspahr from Pasco, Wash., had the low round for the women in an event that also finished Tuesday.

King's rounds of 76-71-73 (220) were good enough for a tie for 14th. New Mexico's Paul Baack was a medalist with rounds of 72-70-70—212 (4-under par at Trysting Tree Golf Club near Corvallis, Ore.). The Vandal men combined for a 905. Brigham Young won the tournament with an 872.

Einspahr, who finished at 91-75 (166) finished in a tie for 28th. The women totaled 676 compared to 630 for team winner Weber State.

Idaho men: T47, Neil Schneider, 226; T68, Jason Stephenson, 230; T78, Tyler Sullivan, 233; T82, Ed Kavan (234).

Idaho women: T34, Sara Thompson, 168; T43, Darcy Ritz, 170; T51, Dawna Hogaboam, 175; T61, Kellee Vosberg, 188.

1/4 mile drive underway

The Vandal Student Advisory Board (S.A.A.B.) is currently working with the United Way in raising funds for needy families. We are kicking off a "1/4 Mile" drive. If pennies are put together end-to-end for a 1/4 mile, it adds up to approximately $4,000. Our goal is to earn $4,000 for the Moscow United Way (We accept pennies, dimes, dollars, etc.). We set up a booth during the homecoming football game, and will set up a United Way booth for the Nevada football game. We need the support of the athletes, athletic staff, and community to attain our goal.

Athletes plan more school visits

Each Thursday, we send a group of athletes to visit with the McDonald Elementary students during their recess period (from 11:10-12:10). A different sport is picked each week. The athletes are good role models and this, in turn, increases the attendance at our sporting events. We have also sent athletes to St. Mary's School. The athletes ate lunch and gave free tickets to the kids for the homecoming football game. We are in the process of securing visits for additional elementary schools.

Krulitz making most of education

Mark Vanderwall
Sports Editor

When looking up a definition for student-athlete in the dictionary, University of Idaho students may find a heading labeled, see Kirsten Krulitz.

Since arriving on the UI campus, Krulitz has achieved rave reviews both on the court and in the classroom for the Vandals. Graduating from Wallace High School in Wallace, Idaho, Krulitz landed a spot on the Idaho roster as a walk-on. The 5-11 red-shirt freshman sat out last season, and despite limited playing time thus far this season, Krulitz is earning more time on the court as the season progresses.

"It was actually my choice to red-shirt," said Krulitz. "I really wanted to stabilize my academics first, along with being able to watch and learn the college game before stepping on the court in a game situation."

Attending volleyball camps at Idaho since the seventh grade, Krulitz developed a solid relationship with UI coach Tom Hilbert and passed up scholarships to smaller schools back East for the chance to make the Vandal team as a walk-on. After making the team, all the hard work almost went for naught as homework almost got the best of Krulitz during her freshman campaign. Now traveling with the team to all away games, Krulitz has found that the time off as a red-shirt has helped immensely.

"I was scared traveling would hurt my grades, but all it really means is that you have to cut into your social time if something needs done," said Krulitz. "If we get bogged down with homework, we don't practice. That says a lot for this program, because I would not play here if education wasn't important."

Pursuing a degree in environmental sciences, Krulitz plans to pursue a career in environmental engineering, and also plans to tackle coaching in some fashion as well. Coaching runs in the blood of Krulitz, for her father coaches basketball at Wallace. Speaking of basketball, Krulitz had every intention of pursuing a love for the hardwood rather than that of the nets.

"I actually hated volleyball for a long time, because many of the girls played just because their friends did," said Krulitz. "When I started to play with girls who played for the love of the game, it changed my whole outlook on the sport, and I'd be lying if I told you it wasn't easier than basketball for me."

Being only a couple of hours from home, Krulitz is not too far away from her family, but far enough. Her parents have supported her throughout her sports career, and drove her five days a week to club volleyball. Perhaps more importantly to Krulitz, they dropped everything for her to allow for this opportunity to take her career one step further.

"They traveled down here just to watch me warm up last year," said Krulitz. "They are so proud to just see my name on the roster."

Making several transitions during her first couple of years on campus, Krulitz is excited about the move to the Big West and thinks it will better the team both this season and in the future. The biggest transition may yet lie ahead for Krulitz, who realizes the importance of a good education after the five-year volleyball window closes.

"I know that this is it for my volleyball career, so its very important for me to get a good education first," said Krulitz. "I think I have figured out to give both the sport and my education 100 percent, and still do well at both."

This is a plus for both the university and the volleyball team.

Vandals venture out on the Big West road

Kindra Meyer
Staff

Familiar faces in the crowd are temporarily a thing of the past as the University of Idaho volleyball team took to the highway for two league matches.

The Vandals, who are 3-1 in the Big West, look to Saturday night's match at the University of North Texas in their quest for a conference title. Following a defeat at Pacific and a win over BSU, coach Tom Hilbert believes it's time be consistent and show they're Big West material.

"Every conference match is important because it's a road match in our division," Hilbert said. "It's sort of a feeling out period. We need to go on the road and play well. We've got to establish ourselves, show that we belong."

Leading the Eastern division and holding a 13-2 overall record, two road wins would help solidify their position.

UNT is struggling so far this season with 0-4 Big West and 5-12 overall records. The Eagles are eager for a win, especially against the No. 1 team in their division. Although they are a bit of an unknown, Hilbert points out that they are an NCAA qualifier from last year. Playing in the "Snake Pit" alone is a challenge, too.

"Their gym, I know from my past experience, is a very difficult place to play in," Hilbert said. "It's hot, un-air-conditioned. It's a lot like Memorial Gym."

Like Idaho, this is North

Texas' first year in the Big West. They began this new experience with three returning starters, Carly Collins, Rachel Troell and Laketa Graham. Collins, the team's lone senior, is the schools all-time leader in attack percentage (.304). She's also among the top in kills (683), block solos (74) and block assists (180).

Junior Troell returned as middle blocker, last season recording the fourth-best attacking percentage in the programs history with .306. Outside hitter Graham was voted the Southland Conference's Newcomer of the Year last season as a freshman. A setter fresh out of high school, Kim Burnette, takes on the role of running the offense.

Jessica Moore leads the Vandals attack force averaging 3.198 kills per game with an impressive .398 percentage. She also heads block assists with 52. Jeri Hymas is hot on Moore's heels with 3.750 kills per game with a .226 accuracy. Hymas holds a team best of 29 service aces as well. Louisa Kawulok leads the team's block solo record with 10, and is second in block assists with 47. Lynne Hyland continues to peak UI's defensive effort, with 137 digs although Kawulok follows closely with 132. Hyland has 593 assists so far this fall, only 707 shy of breaking the all-time assist record.

In the Big West, the Vandals are averaging 16.462 attacks per game while holding opponents to only 11.615. Their league hitting percentage is .255 compared to competitor's .146.

DeGraw battles adversity to land starting job

Nate Petersen
Staff

Through much pain and agony, defensive tackle Mike DeGraw has fought misfortune throughout his college career to finally reach his goal of starting for the University of Idaho Vandals.

"It means a lot to me to start," said DeGraw. "I had a lot of adversity since I've been here and I can honestly say in the back of my mind I questioned whether or not I would ever start for the Vandal team."

DeGraw, a senior, has been sidelined by knee surgeries during his career. He had arthroscopic knee surgery his freshman year, and shortly after, full reconstructive surgery. Then again he underwent arthroscopic surgery his junior year.

"It was really frustrating," said DeGraw. "It was pretty hard getting back and each time took quite a while, but you've just gotta keep battling. It's not an easy process and it takes everything out of you."

Using religious motivation, DeGraw succeeded in returning to playing form and eventually gaining a starting role this season.

"The biggest motivation for me is the fact that I knew God had a plan for me," said DeGraw. "I wasn't sure what was going to happen, but he was keeping me around for some reason, so he intended for me to stick around and start some games here."

Likewise, DeGraw credits his collegiate football career to his relationship with God.

"God put me in a position where I could play college football, get an education, and eventually get a degree," said DeGraw.

Coming out of Centralia, Wash., in 1991, DeGraw was a first-team all-league defensive end and team coaches award winner. In addition, DeGraw led the team in sacks his senior year.

Unfortunately the status of a football player goes down with every major surgery, especially knee surgeries. DeGraw's goal of starting changed.

"My initial goal when coming to the University of Idaho was starting," said DeGraw. "After having surgery, those goals changed and it was more staying on the field and sticking around rather than starting."

DeGraw's physical abilities changed and he had to adapt to them.

"When I came in I was really fast and sort of a finesse type of player," said DeGraw. "After surgery I had put on weight, and I didn't have the same speed as before so I had to change my game up."

After fulfilling his goal of again becoming a solid fixture on the roster and on the field, DeGraw was again determined to attain a starting position.

"The simple fact is that you can get through a knee surgery and feel fine, but it's not all there mentally," said DeGraw.

DeGraw is excited for the defense to come together and return to the winning formulas of the past to reach success.

"We are going to do it the same way we always have," said DeGraw. "We are going to come off the ball, hit them hard and keep hitting them until they give in."

The Vandals next game is against Big West-favorite Nevada. DeGraw sees a solid effort out of the Vandal defense in containing the Wolf Pack.

"We definitely have the skill on this defense and the team dedication," said DeGraw.

"The biggest thing in the game will be staying focused and having self confidence in ourselves."

With the recent fourth-quarter breakdown against Cal Poly last week, DeGraw believes that a new attitude will be instilled in the players for Nevada.

"We are going to have to suck it up," said DeGraw. "It's all mental and just knowing that the fourth quarter does not mean that the game is over."

If there was an athlete worthy enough to be a role model, No. 93 Mike DeGraw is definitely entitled. DeGraw's goals and achievements can't be measured on a stat line.

His ever-present attitude to overcome and beat adversity makes him extremely unique. His goals, although they sound simple, many times in his career were far out of reach, but DeGraw overcame, and in turn, has accomplished everything he set out to do at UI.

"When I first got here, there was 30 of us freshmen and now only seven seniors," said DeGraw. "One of my biggest goals was just to make it through my senior year and speak at the senior banquet."

NFL college football heating up

Damon Barkdull

Parity among National Football League and college football teams has almost always been non-existent. This season has added a splash of Mrs. Dash to the big enchilada and gives us football fans something to cheer about.

Thus far in 1996, there are no truly dominant teams. Sure, the Green Bay Packers and Pittsburgh Steelers look as though they might be the favorites to go to the Super Bowl but with eight teams with only one loss, anything could happen.

The big game of the NFL week comes on Monday Night when the San Francisco 49ers (4-1) travel to the cheese state to face the Packers (5-1).

The same goes for college football. Nine college football teams in the top 25 rankings are undefeated. These universities include: (1) Florida, (2) Ohio State, (3) Florida State, (4) Arizona State, (6) Miami, (8) Alabama, (12) LSU, (14) West Virginia, and (24) Wyoming.

Of the nine undefeated schools, four of them play this weekend. The LSU Tigers travel to "The Swamp" to face the top-ranked Florida Gators in a possible preview of the Southeastern Conference Championship. Meanwhile, Florida State journeys to the Orange Bowl to square off against the upstart Miami Hurricanes. NFL gives us no clear Super Bowl contenders

In a season where the expansion Carolina Panthers are 3-2 and a depleted Minnesota squad is 5-1, the journey to the Super Bowl has never been so unclear.

And now, throw into the mix a Dallas Cowboys squad who's escaped the Michael Irvinless phase with a 2-3 record and you have yourself one interesting NFL season.

However, the upcoming Monday Night matchup between the 49ers and Packers is being touted as a preview of the NFC Championship Game. San Francisco has won two straight games under the arm of Elvis Grbac after being tossed by Carolina previously. The Cheeseheads have won their last two games as well, thumping their laughable rival, 'da Bears in a very convincing manner last weekend.

The 49ers may have revenge on their mind.

Last season, the Packers booted the overconfident 49ers from the second round of the NFC playoffs with a 27-17 win. This season, an interesting matchup takes place — the top-rated NFC defense (49ers) against the No. 1 NFC offense (Packers).

Monday Night prediction: Packers 27, 49ers 13.

Although the AFC is usually the sacrificial lamb in the Super Bowl, this conference is much more exciting to watch, with their high scoring and intense rivalries.

The AFC West is probably the most wide open, with one team (Denver) with a 5-1 record and two teams tied for second at 4-2 (Kansas City and San Diego).

Last Monday was supposed to be a preview of the AFC Championship Game, however, Kansas City was upset in the tough to play in Arrowhead Stadium by the defending conference champion Pittsburgh Steelers.

Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Indianapolis and Miami have also shown signs of greatness but until around November, predictions are far and behind the reality of truth.

SEC and ACC teams battle it out to stay undefeated, Ohio State still gets no respect

Just for the record, I'll say that even with the exciting events taking place in the NFL this year, college football still reigns supreme.

This year, of the 111 Division I-A programs which set foot at the beginning season to battle for a national championship, only nine undefeated teams remain.

And this Saturday, mark it down on your calendar folks, is the greatest day of college football this year, excluding New Year's Day of course.

Four of the nine undefeated teams play each other this Saturday.

The biggest matchup of the weekend is 3rd-ranked Florida State against 6th-ranked Miami. The overall series between these two schools is 23-16, led by Miami. In the last meeting (1995), the Seminoles crushed the Hurricanes 41-17 in a rebuilding year for Miami.

FSU coach Bobby Bowden has added many things to his large resume in the 1990s, including a national championship. However, the one thing missing from his resume is a victory over Atlantic Coast Conference rival Miami in the Orange Bowl.

The Orange Bowl is a tough place to win and the Hurricanes have one hell of a ball club this season, though, the Seminole defense is too tough.

Prediction: FSU 24, Miami 16.

Also on Saturday, top-ranked Florida will try to declaw the Tigers in "The Swamp," as 12th-ranked LSU will try to stay unbeaten and land the second biggest upset of the season (first, Arizona State over Nebraska).

Gator coach Steve Spurrier is still reeling from the whooping his club took at the Fiesta Bowl last year against Nebraska. He wants nothing worse than a national championship. Don't expect the good but not good enough Tigers to get in his way.

Prediction: Florida 53, LSU 17

Ohio State moved up to a No. 2 ranking after crushing previously 4th-ranked Penn State 38-7.

The Buckeyes look tougher than ever and even at No. 2 and aren't getting the same attention as the Florida universities. John Cooper is hoping his Buckeyes don't let down this weekend against Wisconsin after big wins against Notre Dame and Penn State.

After racking up 368 rushing yards last weekend compared to the Nittay Lions 68 yards, look for Lombardi Trophy candidate Orlando Pace and the rest of the offensive line to shove the ball down the Badgers throat.

Prediction: Ohio State 45, Wisconsin 17

In other notable top 25 games, the 11th-ranked Fighting Irish face the 16th-ranked Washington Huskies in South Bend, Ind., this weekend. Notre Dame is still fussing over the loss to Ohio State, while the boys from Seattle's only loss was a 45-42 squeaker to 4th-ranked Arizona State.

Prediction: Washington 17, Notre Dame 8

This season, college football is totally out of whack. Could you imagine an undefeated Arizona State team meeting the invincible Buckeyes in the Rose Bowl? How about throwing the bowl alliance into a hole?

Or how about Florida and Florida State meeting in the Sugar Bowl?

Whoever becomes the national champion in January is significantly decided in the coming two weekends.

Friesz starting again

Nate Petersen

To many people's surprise, the Seattle Seahawks upset the Miami Dolphins in Miami this past Sunday. An even bigger surprise was that it was not former Notre Dame quarterback Rick Mirer holding the reins, but journeyman quarterback and ex-vandal John Friesz.

The win may have turned around what has been a very dismal season for the Seahawks and coach Dennis Erickson. The Seahawks, now 2-4, have given fans little to cheer about in their first five games. For the second year under coach Erickson, much pressure has been lifted from his shoulders.

Erickson's NFL career has been frustrating. The Seahawks last year finished 8-8 in his pro debut. Adding to his frustration has been the performance of Mirer.

Although extremely athletic and gifted, Mirer has had problems recognizing defenses and operating in a pro offense. He ended the season with more interceptions than touchdowns. Collegiately, Erickson is a coach used to winning. He left a highly successful career at the University of Miami that included national championships in '91 and '92. His roots also trace back to the University of Idaho where he was a coach. His offensive system has remained the past 15 years since his departure.

Enter Friesz, the quarterback for UI from '87-'89. Friesz holds several Vandal records, including passing yards in a season and completions in a career. In '89, he was selected as the Coaches I-AA Player of the Year and named Offensive Player of the Year.

The smartest thing that Erickson has done for the Seahawks was his acquisition of Friesz. Who better than a player who rewrote his school record books and flourished under the very system that Erickson had incorporated?

It was not until the Miami game that Friesz got his first start. What do you know, but instantaneously the Seahawks win a game against a good opponent. Friesz's composure and direction led them through crunchtime and onto victory.

Friesz completed 18 of 32 passes for 301 yards and three touchdowns, including an 80-yard scoring strike to win the game with 2:03 remaining.

Friesz threw into Dolphin man-to-man coverage to receiver Brian Blades, who caught the ball and raced the rest of the way for the score.

It was the third big play of the day that took place between Friesz and one of his receivers. Joey Galloway earlier had touchdown receptions of 51 and 65 yards courtesy of Friesz.

Friesz's performance gave Erickson a much needed win that has released some of the pressure of disappointed Seahawk fans.

Among other things, Friesz may have silenced trade rumors of the Seahawks acquiring suspended Atlanta quarterback Jeff George.

Erickson has confirmed that Friesz will remain the starting quarterback for now, but has declined to say anything about the potential acquisition for George.

If Erickson's smart, he will realize that Friesz is the man to lead his ball club. Friesz understands Erickson's offense and operates efficiently in it.

Should Erickson trade for George he may as well change his whole offensive system. Rather than have Seahawk fans undergo another stench of a stinking Seattle offense reminiscent to that of Mirer's lead.

Since beginning his career with Indianapolis, George was traded to Atlanta after years of discontent between himself and the fans. Now Atlanta is fed up with him, so why would it be any different in Seattle?
