Critics: 'Term limits' threaten Constitution

Janet Birdsall
News Editor

Idaho and Washington voters may not get what they're expecting if they vote for term limits today, opponents say.

"It does not limit the term of office of any member of Congress," said George Detweiler, attorney and chairman of Save the Constitution Committee.

Proposition Four (in Idaho) and Initiative 670 (in Washington) will not create term limits. What they will do is direct politicians to call for a convention to propose amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

Opponents are concerned that calling a constitutional convention could lead to radical changes in the Constitution.

"The fear that a constitutional convention could become a 'runaway' convention and propose wholesale changes in our Constitution is by no means unfounded," wrote Gerald Gunther, professor at Stanford Law School.

In 1988, Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger wrote, "After a Convention is convened, it will be too late to stop the Convention if we don't like its agenda. ...A new Convention could plunge our Nation into Constitutional confusion and confrontation at every turn."

Term limits supporters argue that there is no threat to the Constitution.

Article V of the Constitution provides two ways to propose amendments. Congress may propose an amendment by a two-thirds vote of both the House and the Senate, or two-thirds of the states may apply to Congress for a convention to propose amendments.

"Bottom line, there is only one way to amend or even change one word in our Constitution and that is through the ratification of a proposed amendment by three fourths of the states," said Donna Weaver, campaign chairman of Citizens for Federal Term Limits.

"We have 27 amendments to the Constitution. All of them have been proposed by Congress to the states for ratification. However, more than half of these amendments started with the people and the states through Article V applications," Weaver said.

But opponents say there is a reason why Congress has not called a convention for amendments: It could become, as Gunther put it, a "runaway convention."

Gunther said he and many other scholars have "developed lengthy arguments, legal and practical, that support the case that there is no effective way to limit the agenda of a convention."

Burger said, "there is no effective way to limit or muzzle the actions of a Constitutional Convention. The Convention could make its

Candidates not allowed to speak

Jeff Olson
Staff

At 10:10 Friday morning, about 300 University of Idaho students, faculty, and staff met on the Administration Building lawn to show their opposition to the One Percent Initiative on the Idaho ballot today.

Walt Minnick, senate Democratic candidate, chatted with students after flying up from Boise that morning. Representative Maynard Miller and Senator Gary Schroeder were also present, anticipating an opportunity to speak before the assembly.

UI President Hoover spoke briefly, congratulating those assembled for their effort to defeat Proposition One, and urged them to be sure to vote today.

Brian Kane, ASUI president, said the decision to disallow the candidates an opportunity to speak before the students was made because it could too easily be considered an endorsement.

"With President Hoover speaking there, one could easily consider it an endorsement of the candidate," Kane said.

Kane said he "didn't want to turn the walk-out into a campaign issue."

The issue of endorsements or tacit support for a candidate may be a moot point, as both incumbent Sen. Larry Craig and Minnick have come out strongly in opposition to Proposition One, and Miller is running for re-election unopposed.

With a turnout of 300, or about 3 percent of the student body, Kane commented that they could have better announced or publicized the walk-out.

"The second part of the walk-out," Kane said, "is to walk-out to the polls."

All residents living west of Main Street, including those on the UI campus, vote at the Kibbie Dome. Residents living east of Main Street vote at the Latah County Fairgrounds, across from Safeway and the Eastside Marketplace.

Idaho allows for "same-day registration" at the polls for anyone who is not currently registered. All the prospective voter needs is proof of residence, such as a driver's license, a utility or phone bill or a rent receipt, which he can present to the attendant at the polling station. Polls are open until 8 p.m.

Rock the Vote registrations miss deadline

Justin Oliver Ruen
Staff

Students who registered to vote this year through the "Rock the Vote" registration drives should be prepared to re-register at the polls.

A number of registration cards were not received at the Latah County Auditor's Office before the Oct. 11 deadline, and thus were not filed.

However, those who missed the deadline can still vote by registering at the polls, said Latah County Auditor Susan Peterson.

To register at the polls, people need to bring proof that they have been a Latah County resident for at least 30 days prior to the election, such as a driver's license, utility bill or rent receipt. The document must have the prospective voter's name and address and must be dated prior to Oct. 5.

Those who do not know if they are registered can find out at their polling place and register there if necessary.

Polls for precincts west of Main Street will be located at the Kibbie Dome. Those who reside east of Main Street will vote at the 4-H Building in the Latah County Fairgrounds.

Peterson emphasized that an individual's polling place is determined by the location of his/her residence.

Students who live in Troy or Pottlatch will have to vote in their respective town, she said.

The polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

There will be no information about candidates of ballot propositions available at the polls; however, voters are allowed to bring previously marked sample ballots with them.

Peterson predicts that the busiest time at the polls will be between 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the Kibbie Dome and from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. at the Fairgrounds.

There are four propositions on the ballot this year, and most are quite lengthy and can be difficult to understand.

"It is helpful if people review the initiatives and the amendment before they get [to the polls]," Peterson said.

Voters should be prepared to re-register at polls

Corrections

In the Oct. 29 edition of the Argonaut, an incorrect date was given for the League of Women Voters candidates' forum. The correct day was Tuesday, Oct. 26.

In the same issue, it was stated that Thor Holder brought a formal complaint against Brian Claypool. Holder did not bring a complaint against Claypool.

Evergreen publishes blank protest edition

PULLMAN (AP) — When Washington State University students picked up Friday's edition of The Daily Evergreen, they found it nearly blank.

"This is an issue of protest," said a front page letter to readers.

In addition to the letter, only ads ran in the paper.

The letter from the newspaper's editorial board complained that the general manager of student publications, Bob Hilliard, was interfering with the paper's autonomous operation.

The students were unhappy that Hilliard last summer prevented publication of a column critical of campus residence halls.

And last week, the newspaper staff said, Hilliard wanted to delay a story on two candidates for the job of university provost, including one on his boss, interim provost Geoffrey Gamble.

The paper ran the story anyway.

"Hopefully, this will be a wake-up call to Bob," said Isamu Jordan, the Evergreen's editor in chief.

"If he keeps running over students, he won't have any students working at the paper."

Hilliard declined to discuss the students' complaints without having talked with them.

"We definitely have a learning moment going on here," Hilliard said Sunday.

Chemistry professor named interim associate dean

Thomas E. Bitterwolf took up his duties yesterday as interim associate dean of the College of Letters and Science.

Bitterwolf, a University of Idaho professor of inorganic chemistry, replaces Dene Thomas, the current associate provost of academic affairs. A committee set up by Letters and Science Dean Kurt Olsson and comprised of department executives selected Bitterwolf from a pool of UI faculty.

Bitterwolf will work with students on academic and financial aid disqualification, submit student petitions to the academic petition committee, and work with the student advisory board. He will report directly to Olsson, and will hold the position until an associate dean is hired.

Bitterwolf earned a Bachelor of Science degree from Centenary College of Louisiana in 1968 and his doctorate from West Virginia University in 1976.

INEL could get environmental name, mission

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho National Engineering Laboratory with its reactors and nuclear waste piles may be getting a new name.

Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, revealed in an Oct. 30 debate that officials may be adding "environment" to the INEL's name. That prompted laughter from Democrat Walt Minnick's partisans in the crowd.

Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, R-Idaho, said it is no joke.

"It's more than just adding a word, it's defining a mission," Kempthorne said. "We have significant areas in our country that need to be cleaned up. The INEL has the expertise, the experience and the technology to do that."

The INEL would become the Idaho National Environmental Engineering

Laboratory. If the new mission is approved, it would become the central lab for ecological restoration studies in the Department of Energy.

The INEL has a mission just cleaning up the hazardous and nuclear waste left from more than 40 years of operations. The idea is to use the same people and technology to tidy up old mine sites, polluted rivers and other spots.

"It's the natural evolution, where the INEL should be going," Kempthorne said.

One group ready to throw its support behind the new mission is the Snake River Alliance. The INEL's most frequent critic, it enthusiastically backs the proposal.

"I think that's a mission they really should get into," member Bob McEnaney said.

"Their best bet is to help everybody else. If they don't, the only business they'll have is cleaning up themselves."

The proposal also would make its scientists available for preventative environmental engineering across entire watersheds.

Already INEL scientists are developing programs for addressing water quality problems in eastern Idaho's Teton Basin.

From 1949 until 1974, the INEL was called the National Reactor Testing Station. That was changed in 1974 to reflect the move away from reactor testing to more general engineering research.

Lockheed-Martin Idaho has included the proposal in its own long term business plan. But it has yet to get official Energy Department support.

The polls are open
'til 8 so get out and

Virtual life: Girls get place in cyberspace

NEW YORK (AP) — In cyberspace, a virtual world even more male-dominated than the real thing, what's a plugged-in girl to do?

There are dozens of shoot 'em up games for joystick-happy big brothers. Dad has his sleepy flight simulator and computer golf. Even Grandpa is taken care of, able to climb back inside a WWII Sherman tank to chase Panzers again.

Long ignored by mainstream software designers, girls had to wait for an independent woman to create something just for them. Now they have it.

"Let's Talk About Me" (Girl Games-Simon & Schuster Interactive, CD-ROM for Windows, $29.95) is an interactive grab bag of goodies for girls only. Activities range from picking the best hairdo to hearing advice from female role models including U.S. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California and Marlo Thomas, star of "That Girl."

It's all about having fun, but teaching without preaching and building girls' self-esteem were clearly product goals as well.

Reminiscent of the mix-and-match fashion software seen in the movie "Clueless," the disk's crowning glory is the Ultimate Closet. Girls can put together various clothes, shoes and accessories to see how they'll look.

Hairmaster 2000 is a virtually self-explanatory title for the section devoted to avoiding bad-hair days.

Software designed for girls 'a grab bag of goodies'

Naturally, there's a diary (protected by a password to fend off prying eyes) for girls to record their innermost thoughts. And unlike a little locked book hidden under the mattress, the computer journal is easily spiced up with digital pictures and sound recordings.

Like the diary, the address book and scrapbook both can be personalized with photos of friends and outings, along with recorded voice messages, too. There's also a daily activities planner for fledgling go-getters.

Valuable lessons about puberty lace the seemingly goofy Build-a-Body section. I Kid You Not is a true-false survey with more painless instruction on girls' rapidly changing bodies, proper nutrition and life in general.

Absolute privacy for intimate personal reflection is ensured by the "panic button," which blanks the screen on command any time a nosy parent or bratty brother intrudes.

Aimed at girls 8-14, "Let's Talk About Me" was created by Laura Groppe, a 32-year-old Texan who left a promising career as a film producer to found Girl Games, which bears the motto: "Not your brother's software."

Groppe, the perfect role model for her target audience, hopes creating more girl-oriented software will encourage young girls to keep pace with computer-crazy boys.

"Let's Talk About Me" is packed with things to do, even including some games, such as Trashblaster, an arcade-style funfest in which Suzy Surfer saves endangered species and cleans up the environment.

Girls can check their horoscope or biorhythms, even get a palm reading. A fortune teller answers any question. There are jigsaw puzzles, true-to-life girl stories and a Dream Machine to help girls record and analyze their dreams.

The My Personality section has 10 quizzes girls can take to learn more about themselves, their families and their classmates. Categories include: Friends or Foes, Misery Meter and Parents From Mars.

The pop music and splashy artwork are pure girl, helping conjure the feel of a schoolgirl's room decorated with teen idol posters and pictures of ponies, cuddly stuffed animals nestled on the pillow.

There are plans to update the disk periodically to stay current trend- and fashion-wise. There's also the "Let's Talk About Me" World Wide Web site offering hookups to prospective e-mail pen pals, online club membership and cool girl stuff to download (<http://www.aboutme.com>).

Let's talk about untapped market potential.

You go, girl.

Copy centers compete for clients

Effie MacDonald
contributed story

It's the last five weeks of the semester and you decide you have procrastinated on polishing off that report or presentation long enough. Whom do you turn to for copy assistance?

Moscow and the University of Idaho offer students a variety of copy and business service centers for those last-minute rush jobs, as well as everyday needs.

The copy centers located in the SUB and the Media Center Annex are part of Educational Technologies and Services and will do copying for students, faculty and staff.

Copy center coordinator Jerlann Worthington said the Media Center is more of a "specialty shop" for architect and engineering students and faculty and staff. She said full color copying and over-sized reproductions as well as basic copying are done there.

The SUB copy center focuses on black and white copies, binding, transparencies, folding and other basic copy services. Copies (fewer than 100) are 6 cents each, the same as at the Media Center Annex.

Worthington said students use the self-service machines more frequently, while faculty and staff are more "over-the-counter" users.

She said the copy center will be updating its services for faculty and staff around Dec. 1 with a Xerox "Docutech" that will have electronic file handling capabilities.

Lynn Baird of the UI library said there are nine self-service copy machines and a copy center on the second floor, offering basic copy services such as making transparencies, duplexing and color copying.

Copies cost 10 cents each if you are paying cash, but with a copy card, each copy costs 6 1/4 cents each. Baird said the copy cards can be purchased in the circulation lobby at the library for a dollar and are good through July 1997. Copy cards can only be used for copying in the library, said Baird.

She said a more cost-effective copy card system is being considered in conjunction with the Vandal card. Baird said the current system has been in use for a long time and revision is in order.

Kinko's is a 24-hour business service center that offers a variety of services ranging from black and white and color copies to conference room and computer rentals. Debbie Ray, manager of Kinko's, said, "The services fit in nicely with what students need."

Ray said most customers are students, but the largest dollar amount of sales are from corporate accounts and businesses.

With the recent move of Kinko's to the Eastside Market Place on the Troy Highway, Ray said, "Dollar for dollar, business is the same if not better, but we do have a different mix of customers now."

She said the busiest time of the year is still the last two weeks of every semester at the university.

Ray said coupons for Kinko's are offered in the coupon books handed out during registration, and flyers for further savings are inserted in the Argonaut every two months.

Kinko's has seven self-service copiers and regular copies are 7 cents each.

Mike Alperin of the Copy Court on Third Street said the Copy Court either matches prices or is lower than any other copy center in the Palouse.

According to Alperin, local businesses and townspeople far outnumber students as customers. "We'd love to have a lot more students here," said Alperin.

Alperin said in an effort to draw students, the Copy Court offers 4 1/2-cent copies during "Happy Hour," Monday through Friday from 5 p.m. to closing time. The business closes at 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and at 6 p.m. on Friday.

Construction on Third Street has affected business, Alperin said. He said there were a couple times the large orange barrels on the street completely blocked the entrance so he had to move them himself.

Trent Bice, owner of Insty Prints on Main Street, said that company's most emphasized services are printing and copying.

Bice said only about 20 percent of Insty Prints' customers are students. He said students mostly use the copy services. Insty Prints has two self-service copy machines and basic copies are 6 cents each, he said.

Mail Boxes Etc. in the Renaissance Mall focuses mainly on package shipping and all copy services, said Manager Jim Lyons.

"Business has been affected drastically by the Third Street construction," Lyons said. He said business during October has been impacted because the large number of Pullman customers they used to have are no longer coming over because of the construction hassle.

Lyons said students are not major customers, though he wishes they were. He said Mail Boxes Etc.

offers a number of student deals like nationwide and in-house student discount cards, used mostly for copying. He said graduate students doing thesis work automatically get a 10 percent discount. Also, there are coupons in the college coupon books.

Mail Boxes Etc. has three self-service copy machines. Basic black and white copies are 7 cents each.

100,000 Israelis remember Rabin one year after assassination

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The deep voice of Yitzhak Rabin resonated once again Saturday in the square where he was assassinated a year ago, moving more than 100,000 Israelis with his past words for peace.

"Violence is the collapse of the foundation of democracy," the late prime minister warned at the Nov. 4, 1995, peace rally where he was assassinated. Supporters replayed a tape of the speech and projected a huge picture of Rabin on the side of Tel Aviv's municipal building.

Just after 9:40 p.m. — the time Rabin was shot as he left the rally — the multitude stood still for a moment of silence.

Saturday's rally came a week after official commemorations, which honored the anniversary of Rabin's death according to the Hebrew calendar. Most of Rabin's supporters are secular and don't use the traditional lunar calendar.

Rabin's widow, Leah, speaking from the same elevated terrace used by her husband in his last address, implored the crowd to "raise the torch Yitzhak carried."

"Don't give up on peace," she said.

Some in the crowd carried banners saying, "Yitzhak, you are so missed" and "Peace will avenge your death" as they listened to peace songs and speeches.

Rabin was slain by Yigal Amir, an extremist Jew who hoped to stop the peace process and prevent the transfer of parts of the biblical Land of Israel to Palestinians. The slaying culminated a vilification campaign in which right-wing Israelis branded the former army chief a traitor.

In his three years at the helm, Rabin signed the historic 1993 autonomy accords with the PLO which many believed set the stage for a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza. He also reached a peace deal with Jordan and reportedly was edging toward returning the Golan Heights to Syria in exchange for peace.

Rabin was succeeded by Shimon Peres, a leading architect of the peace process. Last May, Peres lost to Benjamin Netanyahu, who bitterly opposed Rabin's tactics and whose actions have strained relations with Arabs.

Songwriter Ehud Manor said "the heart refuses to believe" that Rabin is gone, and introduced a melancholy, hymn-like ode he composed to the late prime minister:

"If you have seen the horizon,
But will not reach it,
Remember that in a sea of darkness,
You taught us how to hope."

Israelis believe co-existence impossible

JERUSALEM (AP) — A new survey says a majority of Israelis believe it is impossible for Jewish settlers to co-exist with Palestinians in the West Bank city of Hebron.

Israel-Palestinian peace talks have stalled over the issue of security for the 450 Jewish settlers who live among Hebron's 94,000 Palestinians. Israel cited those security concerns in delaying its troop withdrawal from Hebron, the last major West Bank town under Israeli occupation.

According to a survey in the Yediot Ahronot newspaper, 55 percent of 503 respondents said co-existence in Hebron is impossible, while 40 percent said it is possible.

Sixty-two percent said militants among the settlers should be removed from the city, while 34 percent said they should be allowed to remain.

The survey was published Friday. It had a margin of error of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

A senior police Israeli police officer told another Israeli newspaper Friday that militant Jews in Hebron are plotting to sabotage any troop pullout.

"According to our information, Jewish right-wing radicals are capable of and are planning ... to severely disrupt public order," the officer, Yossi Levy, told the Haaretz newspaper.

In a sign of the delicacy of the peace process, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's right-wing government suspended one of its top negotiators with the Palestinians for holding an unauthorized meeting with opposition leader Shimon Peres.

Maj. Gen. Oren Shachor was suspended until the completion of an investigation, defense ministry spokesman Avi Benayahu said. The move highlights Netanyahu's efforts to control information emerging from the talks.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai told the Cabinet "there cannot be a situation in which an officer meets political figures without my permission."

Seeking an expanded role in the Mideast negotiations, Russian Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov spoke with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat on Friday. Details of their talks were not released.

Israeli officials told The Associated Press that Russia's help in reviving stalled peace talks with Syria would be welcome, but Israel wants only U.S. mediation in talks with the Palestinians.

NY opinions split on impact of MCI-British Telecom marriage

NEW YORK (AP) — Phone rates are sure to cheapen. The $20.8 billion marriage of MCI and British Telecom will create a marketing free-for-all, goading global rivals to slash prices to get customers.

But wait, rates may get more expensive. A combined MCI-British Telecom could squeeze out foes from local and long-distance markets it controls, smothering the competition.

Both scenarios were peddled as the likely result of the biggest foreign takeover ever of a U.S. company. Which ultimately is deemed more accurate could not only affect consumers' monthly bills, but determine whether government regulators approve what may turn out to be a test case for more such transnational deals.

In joint announcements Sunday, British Telecommunications PLC and MCI Communications Corp. agreed to create a "communications powerhouse," with annual revenue of $42 billion and 43 million business and residential customers in 72 countries. They will call the merged business Concert, named after a joint venture begun three years ago when British Telecom bought a stake in MCI.

While both say they expect government approval within a year, the proposal is sure to get extraordinary scrutiny because of questions over foreign influence in the U.S. telecommunications industry and whether Britain's market is equally open to U.S. competition.

Investors today get their first chance to respond to the takeover agreement. On Friday, MCI stock soared 20 percent on confirmation from the companies that they were in talks, while British Telecom's U.S. shares fell 4 percent.

The issue of whether telecommunications marriages are good for consumers has flared with increasing frequency since the Justice Department in 1982 broke up AT&T, separating long-distance from local phone companies and granting all long-distance carriers equal access to customers.

What was new on Sunday, however, was that the biggest protests came from the old mother of monopolies herself.

AT&T chairman Robert E. Allen warned in a statement that the unprecedented proposal could "negatively impact competition and reduce customer choice" and should be closely scrutinized by government regulators.

Baldness may be linked to female hormone

RALEIGH (AP) — Men who blame women when they start losing their hair may be closer to the truth than they think.

Researchers conducting mouse studies say baldness may be linked to the presence of a female hormone rather than the lack of a male hormone.

The clue to baldness did not begin as a search for more hair.

Dr. Robert Smart and graduate assistant Hye-Sun Oh were studying the effect of a pesticide on skin cancer. The North Carolina State University researchers found that the shaved skin of mice did not grow hair if it had been swabbed with estrogen.

"Estrogen was playing some fundamental role in skin biology," Smart said.

Smart's findings were published in Tuesday's edition of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

The discovery is being tested for possible application in humans, but any commercial use could be five years away, Smart said.

His studies showed that hair growth began when areas in which the hair follicle cells that recognize estrogen, called estrogen receptors, were blocked, he said. Both female and male hormones are found in the hair follicles.

An independent scientist said it was too soon to suggest the research may have applications in humans, either for baldness or for skin cancer.

"It may well be that whatever effect estrogen has is going to be much more significant in the mouse than the human," said Dr. Barbara Gilchrist, chair of the dermatology department at Boston University.

Smart said the next research step would be to determine if the estrogen blocker, which acts as a switch to turn on hair growth in the lab mice, exists in humans.

That is being studied at Wake Forest University's Bowman-Gray School of Medicine.

Another researcher said the finding is "likely to help us understand male pattern baldness" and other hair loss conditions.

"It's almost too new to understand all the implications. But the more we understand about the life of the hair follicle, the better it is for understanding the abnormalities," said Dr. Ulrike Lichti, a hair follicle investigator at the National Cancer Institute.

"What's interesting and frustrating about the hair follicle is it requires the interaction of a lot of signals. This is such a clear demonstration of an agent that it's new and it's exciting."

Smart said the finding could be valuable to people who lose hair through disease or chemotherapy. He said it also was valuable to his original skin cancer research.

Scientists have known that cells at the base of the hair follicle, called dermal papilla cells, regulate the follicle growth and resting periods. But no one knew why. Smart said his research points to a reason.

"In the follicle itself, what we're observing is one particular cell type is being influenced by estrogen and it is influencing the growth of another cell type," Smart said.

Past research into hair growth has focused on male hormones, or androgens.

"People believed that androgens were very important in regulating hair growth," Smart said. "In beard and whisker growth, that's important, but when one talks about hair growth on top of our head, it doesn't necessarily hold. Androgens do play a role, but for all the research that has been done the outcome is not as successful as we would like."

Republicans react to Clinton visit

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Republican candidates for Congress in Arkansas were on the stump when President Clinton spoke in Little Rock Saturday so they didn't hear the speech. But what they heard of it second-hand, they didn't like.

Clinton told the crowd at an airport rally that his goal was to balance the budget and still protect Medicare, Medicaid, the environment and education. He said if Republicans had their way in the 104th Congress, the budget agenda would be: "You're on your own."

Warren Dupwe, the Republican nominee for the 1st Congressional District, said portrayals that Republicans want to eliminate government so people can fend for themselves is a scare tactic. Dupwe faces Democrat Marion Berry in today's election.

Republican Bud Cummins, who opposes Vic Snyder in the 2nd

District race, said voters are more interested in the candidates' political ideology than whether one candidate is more compassionate than the other.

Third District candidate Asa Hutchinson, Democrat Ann Henry's opponent, said he believes in supporting education programs like Head Start, Pell grants and student loans. Clinton accused Republicans of trying to cut education programs.

Hutchinson said his main concern about education is reducing federal regulation and giving more control of spending priorities to local school districts. He said school administrators and board members often complain about not being able to spend money the way they want and about having to fill out too many forms.

Clinton is scheduled to return to Arkansas on Tuesday to wait out election returns and speak at the Old State House.

own-rules and set its own agenda.

"Congress might try to limit the Convention to one amendment or one issue, but there is no way to assure that the Convention would obey."

Other legal scholars disagree. James MacDonald, University of Idaho Law School constitutional law professor, says Article V gives Congress the power to "set the rules" of a convention.

"The biggest proponents of the idea that there would be a runaway convention are extremist groups such as the John Birch Society. It's characteristic of the paranoia of these groups," MacDonald said.

The last time a convention was called, the delegates threw out the document they were supposed to be amending and created an entirely new one, making up the rules as they went. That was in 1787, when the Articles of Confederation were tossed and the Constitution was written.

Opponents argue that this could happen again.

"They don't have to follow anything in the current Constitution," said Cliff Wassum, chapter leader of the John Birch Society in Clarkston, Wash. He said the delegates at the convention could say, "We're going to start over."

MacDonald says that those who think that the 1787 scenario would be repeated are "historically naive." In 1787, a new country was being created. "That's just not the context we're in now. Nobody's talking about putting together a country."

Many on each side of the issue doubt a convention will ever be called.

"It defies 200 years of history and all common sense to think that Congress would ever allow applications to mount up to the point where it would be necessary for them to actually convene a convention to propose amendments and thereby turn over its own power to propose amendments to some other group of elected officials," Weaver said.

Florence Heffron, director of the University of Idaho's Bureau of Public Research, agreed. "If it did get to that point, in all probability Congress would propose an amendment to the Constitution."

Proponents say that since members of Congress will not impose term limits on themselves, the only way to get term limits is to get the states to apply for a convention.

But opponents make the point that voters already have the power to oust any politician they think has been in office too long.

Opponents also argue that "lame duck" politicians won't

It doesn't say what amendments. It just says 'amendments.'

—Cliff Wassum
chapter leader,
John Birch Society

have the re-election incentive to serve their constituents if term limits are implemented.

"One-half of the senate would be lame ducks," Wassum said. "What a temptation to take all the goodies!"

On April 1, Idaho Attorney General Alan Lance wrote that it was his opinion that "the proposed initiative, if challenged, would be declared unconstitutional."

The proposal dictates that politicians who do not vote for (or sign a pledge to vote for) a convention will have a notice placed beside their name on ballots: "DISREGARDED VOTERS' INSTRUCTION ON TERM LIMITS" for incumbents, and "DECLINED TO SUPPORT TERM LIMITS" for non-incumbent candidates.

"The effect of placing unfavorable comments next to a candidate's name places the state in the role of endorsing candidates and issues in the course of a political campaign," Lance said.

"It is highly doubtful the state can use its power to seek to manipulate election results by slanting what appears on the ballot," he said.

Section 4 of Proposition Four states that if any portion of the proposition is found invalid or unconstitutional, the remaining portions will remain in effect.

Nebraska's Attorney General, Don Stenberg, wrote that Lance's opinion is "weak" because he ignored the fact the party labels are already printed on ballots, and he cited no cases directly related to the issue.

Proposals similar to Idaho and Washington's are on the ballot in 14 states, and they all have nearly identical wording.

"U.S. Term Limits, Inc., and not the Idaho based Citizens for Federal Term Limits is responsible for writing the initiative," Detweiler said. "They chose to seek a convention empowered to propose an unlimited number of amendments while at the same time they chose not to require the convention to do anything about limiting federal terms."

The proposals call for a convention "for proposing amendments to the Constitution."

Opponents are quick to point to the plural "amendments," rather than a singular "amendment."

"It doesn't say what amendments. It just says 'amendments,'" Wassum said.

"Should a convention to propose amendments ever be convened, it is ridiculous to think that they would not take up the very issue for which applications were submitted to Congress by the states," Weaver argued.

She reiterated her position that "a convention would have no more power than Congress does every day it is session. It may only propose amendments to the Constitution."

But critics disagree.

According to the May issue of "The Phyllis Schlafly Report," "Delegates to a Constitutional Convention do not have to swear to uphold and defend the U.S. Constitution, and would therefore be free (like the 1787 Convention Delegates) to throw out our existing Constitution."

Members of Congress must take an oath to support the Constitution.

Groups from around the nation are taking positions on the proposals.

Americans for Tax Reform, based in Washington, D.C., is one organization endorsing Proposition Four.

"We are always supportive of term limits, school choice and tax caps. We believe in individual empowerment," said Executive Director Audrey Mullen. Her organization is a 60,000-member coalition of small businesses, groups, and individuals supporting a balanced budget and congressional accountability.

The National Taxpayers Union, with 300,000 members nationwide, has also endorsed Idaho's proposition.

Groups opposed to calling a convention include the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Association of University Women, American Civil Liberties Union, and American Association of Retired Persons.

Reluctant recycler finds haven in Moscow

I have a confession to make.

I've never been much of a recycler.

When the environmental movement hit the town I lived in as a child I was eager to do what I could. I heard about the curbside recycling program and looked forward to doing my part. I was sorely disappointed to discover we lived too far out of town to get a cool green plastic bin.

That was OK though, because the recycling center was just down the road. So I dutifully sorted, washed and crushed. Much to my disappointment, each time I went in to deposit materials the center would be accepting less and less. It got to the point where they would offer money for aluminum, begrudgingly take clear glass and occasionally some newspaper. And that was it.

Needless to say, I soon saved only soda cans.

This fear of recycling centers and the large grubby men who chased me away from them stuck with me all the way to Moscow.

My dorm room was too small to set up different containers for each type of recyclable, so I hardly ever bothered.

Then I moved into an apartment with my boyfriend and he would come to show me the magic that was the Moscow recycling center. Never one to throw anything away (just look at his closet), we sorted and saved everything.

Then one day we took the journey (a rather short one) to deposit our goods.

Imagine my surprise at entering a clean, organized, friendly place. A place that was open for more than 15 minutes a day. A place where large dirty men didn't scare you. A place where you could recycle nearly everything.

I mean cans, bottles, paper, cardboard, yard waste, oil...the list goes on.

We could go anytime we wanted and we could leave it all behind in clearly marked containers.

Not only was I overjoyed at the simplicity, but I was given new hope for my future.

Hey, recycling your stuff is a pretty small drop in the bucket of environmental waste, but if we all did it, and if it were always this easy, think about what a difference it could make.

So take a trip to 401 N. Jackson and see for yourself.

Don't worry about the time, it's a 24-hour drop off service with no rabid dogs or scary guys.

And the best part is that they take just about anything, so you might even be able to get your significant other to clean out that closet.

—Corinne Flowers

Campus could be dry very soon

It has come to my attention that it's very likely that the University of Idaho campus will be officially dry within a few years. That's not too hard to believe, and I, for one, think it's not too bad an idea.

The attitude that many of the students take with alcohol at this institution is way too callous. I mean, look at all the bad press, nasty incidents, and just plain negative karma that the university has gotten in past years because some people go way overboard when they imbibe. Don't get me wrong, I've been known to toss a bit o' sauce back my self from time to time. I've been spotted crawling around on all fours meowing like a cat at 3 in the morning on occasion.

I'm a long way from saying alcohol is evil and should be cast into the lake of fire. It's just that people need to be more responsible with they're drinking. If you're feeling depressed, drinking in any great amount is not a good idea. If you're going to drive, or hang out with minors, drinking is not a good idea. If you're going to be working with heavy equipment, drinking is not a good idea. If you're going to be writing an article for the Argonaut, drinking is not a good idea (just kidding).

When this campus goes dry, it's not going to stop people from downing the elixir of confusion. It's not going to stop people from having fun parties and listening to loud music. It's not gonna stop people from passing out in a bathroom stall just before sunrise. They'll still do it, just not as obviously, because if they get caught, the penalty will be pretty harsh. That's why I submit that if the policy the university is trying to ram down our sino-soaked Greek throats is looked upon as simply something that will promote responsible drinking, then it will be a lot easier on the eyes and we will be perceived as the semi-responsible, occasionally wise, always proud young adults that we really are.

On the other hand, if it's looked upon as something that is abhorrent and a basic denial of why we joined UI and the Greek system, then we will look like a bunch of idiot luses crying about the man taking our beer away. Now don't go and get all down on me for defending the university, either. I'm not saying what they're doing is right. It's not. Basically, the university is trying to wash their hands of the Greek system. They want to throw these rules on us in our own houses and then distance themselves from us so that they don't have to deal with our lifestyle. If the alcohol policy they propose is actualized, they don't have to accept any responsibility for us. If we get our collective butts in a sling, the university can say, "We told them so. It's not our problem." But if that's the way the university wants to handle it, then so be it.

New Guy

So I guess you won't be bonging in the hallways anymore. Oh darn. I guess I won't be able to dance in a common room with a cup of beer in one hand and a cup of love in the other. Oh shucks. I guess I'll just get blasted in a private place (someone's room, sneaky sneaky) before the party starts and then walk wherever I'm going sans the usual backpack full of beverages. I usually did that anyway.

So is this alcohol policy thing bringing big changes? Not really. It's just bringing a little bit more enforced responsibility. Is that a bad thing? Not really. It's just a bit wounding to our pride that we wouldn't do it if we weren't made to. Well, folks, get over it, 'cause I see it coming and ain't nothin' gonna stop it.

And now for some shameless plugs: Hey, well I guess you got your first taste of my opinion. If you don't like it, you have options.

No. 1: Shred this copy of the Argonaut into to little pieces, then put those little pieces into your pipe and smoke them.

No. 2: Write me a letter making me aware of your opinion just like I made

Mud-slinging soon to be over

With the national and local elections underway and with only hours left until the polls close, it's time for something else to come to a close — political advertisements.

Campaign commercials have been plastered over televisions, radios and newspapers now for months. Advertisements are based solely on pushing a particular candidate's face or message into people's minds. Every station, channel and page in the paper reminds us of the who's who in politics.

Now, I'm all for informing the public on the issues facing us in the election. After all, it's those issues that will affect our lives for years to come. However, my problem lies with how the information is presented.

From the national level down to the tiny town elections, mud-slinging is a popular form of trying to win votes.

Candidates will dig up every measly morsel of dirt on each other, add their own views, often distorting the facts, thus mixing water and dirt to create mud. They then take turns slinging the mud across the airwaves and pages in the newspaper.

Often these morsels are "clean" dirt, things candidates have done for the good of communities or have accomplished when others couldn't. Yet because of the popularity of mud-slinging, candidates can't acknowledge these accomplishments. They must distort the facts, or blatantly lie about them in order to win the votes of the undecided voters. Acknowledging the positive side of another candidate just wouldn't be prudent.

The closer to the election, the more mud is thrown back and forth. Often candidates will claim they will not participate in the mud-slinging campaigning like their opponent. That in itself is a form of chucking mud. Comparing themselves directly to the opposing party, and pointing out the negative of their campaign is not the way to prevent, or separate themselves from the mud-slinging.

There is a way that can be possible, however. That is to in no way mention the opposing party or their views. Each candidate should simply state their views, where they stand on the issues and what they plan to do if they were to be elected.

Candidates will look better if they attack the issues, not the person. If each nominee focused on issues, the information would still reach the public. Through the same methods of television, radio and newspaper, viewpoints will get across, just in a more positive light.

Concentrating on pointing out the other's views, and often mistakes they have made, only gives them more publicity. Publicity that the opposing party, the one emphasizing the mistakes, is paying for. Why waste money when it is only, in a sense, helping out the other nominee?

Each office seeker should focus solely on themselves and their viewpoints. That will eliminate, or at least cut down of the ferocious mud-slinging.

Building up their own campaign should be of vital importance for each race competitor. Cutting down the opponent's case will eventually accomplish nothing, but make the public wonder if any one is worth voting for.

Clarifying the facts from each side and simply stating how each party feels about every issue faced in the election will more persuasively help the undecided voters decide.

Now, I know that this election is over in a matter of hours and is thus too far gone for any candidates to take heed as to how a campaign should really be run. No mud-slinging, just straight forward honesty is the way.

Vote for Trail

I am voting for Tom Trail for the Idaho Legislature because he is a person who will support higher education, and particularly the University of Idaho while in Boise. I know Tom personally, and he is the kind of person who will care about and listen to the concerns of his constituents. Please vote for Tom Trail.

Stereotypes on UI campus uncalled for

In the University of Idaho handbook it states, "The University of Idaho has a policy of nondiscrimination on the basis of race, color, national origin, religion, sex, age, disability, or status as a Vietnam-era veteran. This policy applies to all programs, services, and facilities..." Also stated in our handbook, "The University of Idaho is an equal opportunity and affirmative action employer. It is the policy of the regents that equal opportunity be afforded in education and employment to qualified persons regardless of race, color, national origin, religion, sex, age, disability, or status as a Vietnam-era veteran."

In my past three years at the university, I had reached the belief that students and teachers are open-minded individuals that avoid the use of stereotypes and generalizations in reference to people. Unfortunately, this past week has proven that belief wrong.

While walking out of the PE building last week, I observed a male student, of African-American descent, stop and ask two professors where a building was located. Most likely he was a freshman and still didn't quite have a good hold on where some of the buildings were located (I am sure he had tried, like we all have, to find the building using a campus map). These professors directed him toward the building he was asking about and off he went. To myself I thought, "How nice of them to help him out;" but as they walked near me I overheard their conversation, and that thought was quickly gone. The male professor said to the female professor, "... he doesn't know where any of the buildings are because I'm sure he has never been past the gym." Then they both laughed quite heartily and walked on by.

I couldn't believe what I was hearing. Two professors, who are teaching the future leaders of our country, saying that just because the student was of African-American descent. This is uncalled for. Students come to college to gain an education and learn. All students should have an equal opportunity to their education and to be treated equally. Bigotry has no place in our school system and it must be eliminated from our university.

MSCA holds fundraising dinner

On Sunday, Nov. 10, the Moscow Sister City Association will hold a fund-raising dinner at St. Augustine's Catholic Center on the UI campus. Funds will go toward the costs involved in bringing a teacher from our Sister City of Villa El Carmen in Nicaragua to Moscow next spring for a semester of study. The visit of Ana Julia Castillo Lopez represents MSCA's long-standing commitment to supporting educational projects in both our communities. Please help our efforts by attending the dinner on Sunday.

The dinner will consist of black bean burritos, salad and dessert, and will be served from 5-7 p.m. The cost will be $5 for adults, $3 for children or $12 for a family. In addition, the drawing for prizes in our fund raising raffle will be held at 6 p.m.

Speaking of decisions, there's a pretty important one coming up. The ASUI elections. Go out and cast your vote for who gets to represent you on important issues or something like that. I know this guy who is running for one of the six senate positions and he is a champ. The guy is DAVID M. GLENN, and he gives a rat's ass. Another excel-

Remember when you're casting your votes for the senate, vote for GLENN and SHEIK because (do I have to say it again?) they give a rat's ass. (I should've been a campaign writer for Bob Dole.) ## Tight L.A. band rocks the house 'naked'

Jeremy Birdsall
Contributing writer

Sometimes there are bands that are simply amazing, and one must do anything to see their performance again. Naked to the World is one such band. If ever an all-acoustic band rocked, it was these cats.

Naked to the World played a free show Monday, Oct. 28 in the SUB Ballroom, as part of the ASU Productions Coffeehouse series. It wasn't promoted very well, so few people showed. The ones that did received a major treat.

For those who don't know, NTTW is an L.A. band with unusual instrumentation, memorable songs, and a fun prescence.

The drummer uses bass and snare drums and cymbals, but after that you would have to call him an auxiliary percussionist. He had two congas, orchestral chimes, vibraslap, triangle, and some strange South American rattles.

Like the drummer, the rest of the band was also entirely acoustic: violin, bass guitar, guitar, and a guy who played 12-string guitar, six-string and mandolin.

All band members (except for the violinist) sang. Their harmonies were tight and generally original.

NTTW's show was intriguing in that though they had no set list, their segues were still fairly tight. They'd even ask the audience, "Do you want mellow or up?" and then pick their next tune accordingly, all in less than five seconds.

Their songs have strong beats, using four-four, three-four, and six-eight meters. They go from funk to swing to waltz even to renaissance madrigal without (pardon the pun) missing a beat.

Consistently, NTTW writes thought-provoking lyrics about life, relationships and just having fun. At this show they played a piece for one guitar and vocals about Albert Einstein. The lyrics said that although Einstein was the most ground-breaking physicist of this century, even he couldn't comprehend men and women and why they don't understand each other.

Being from L.A., Naked to the World wrote a song about earthquakes. It was an up-tempo booty-shakin' swing tune with hilarious lyrics that I actually got up and danced to.

Considering this wonderful concert was in the SUB Ballroom, we could not escape the inevitable tangle with SUB Systems, the sound technicians. They fiddled with levels (particularly vocals and violin) all night, and had (to SUB Systems' credit) a good mix by NTTW's last set.

For Naked to the World's last song, they unplugged, jumped off the stage and played a nice ballad, "Goodnight." They sang with sweet four-part harmonies and played very tightly. Just when I thought the show was over and certainly couldn't get any better, one by one all the members of NTTW climbed onto the table I was sitting at and continued to sing and play.

It was a riot! They played very seriously through all this, adding to the audience's uncontrollable laughter.

I really dig Naked to the World. They are tight as a band and as singers. They are great song and lyric writers. And most of all, they are spontaneous and loads of fun.

Naked to the World said they would probably be back in the Northwest this March. Be sure not to miss them.

Commercial radio induces Tapioca Syndrome in listeners

David Camden-Britton
Staff

The dam has broken and I must confess — I loathe commercial radio. This offence against art must be eradicated. Or, at least, etherized and kept in a specimen jar as a warning to future generations.

The final damning blow occurred on Halloween night. I was busily engaged in one of my many jobs; a place where I am forced to endure a multi-hour assault of this corporate trash. Not once, but three times did I hear, "The Monster Mash."

As if, in the last 60 years or so of recorded music, nothing more Halloweenish had been recorded. But that didn't seem to bother the DJs, in fact it was like a ritual that had to be performed. A year couldn't pass that this moldy oldie wasn't dragged out and flogged around the airwaves a few more times.

This wasn't enough to bring the taste of bile to my throat though, that honor was reserved for the filler between playings of "The Monster Mash." It was on this night that I most noticed the bland, clammy mush that was being served to their listeners as the latest hot hits. So much new music is being recorded daily that it's impossible to keep up; however, giving a small sampling of what's out there shouldn't be too difficult. Too difficult, it seems, for these stations.

Once, long ago, the music played by each station set them apart. Now, the only difference seems to be in the commercials. In fact, one day at work, I was only conscious of which commercial radio station I was listening to after hearing a commercial spot one station ran, but the other did not. Soon after, I began to formulate a theory, one that makes sense in the digital age.

There aren't individual stations anymore in the smaller markets that are no longer cost-effective.

Instead, there is a computer running a neural net program to determine this week's "hot hits" from its demographic databases and then it sends the data out to the orbiting router satellite. After that, a stream of commands and track information comes pouring down the ether, to be received by the ubiquitous satellite dishes that these commercial stations own. Filtering silently into their Master Audience Control Computer, the top plays of the week are calculated, "fun promos and giveaways" are selected, and with the unerring accuracy of a digital mind, Robotic Radio is on the air. Call-ins are pre-recorded from weeks before and stored in a fast-cache archive for instant use to give the appearances of a live broadcast. Local screw-ups by the engineers (no longer DJs) are coldly "sic rock" you will hear the same songs repeated over a two-day period. In fact, it appears that there are only enough records to play for two days at any classic rock station, but that doesn't seem to bother the fans.

"Stairway to Heaven" one more time sounds just as good as it did the other eight times you heard it this week.

Classical music stations are few and far between and usually play the mel-lower works of the early romantic or baroque eras. Nothing too terribly different to upset their 15 listeners. Neo-classical is just a word to them.

Other genre-specific stations sometimes do better, but are generally to be avoided like classic rock stations.

National Public Radio is fine, but sounds like tapioca — bland, easily digestible.

The only escape is to find college radio, or free-format stations in your area. Of course, beware the College Radio syndrome, "if we play Nirvana one more time, we'll really be cool." These are becoming market formatted and commercialized (but more subtly) in a way that makes me weep with frustration.

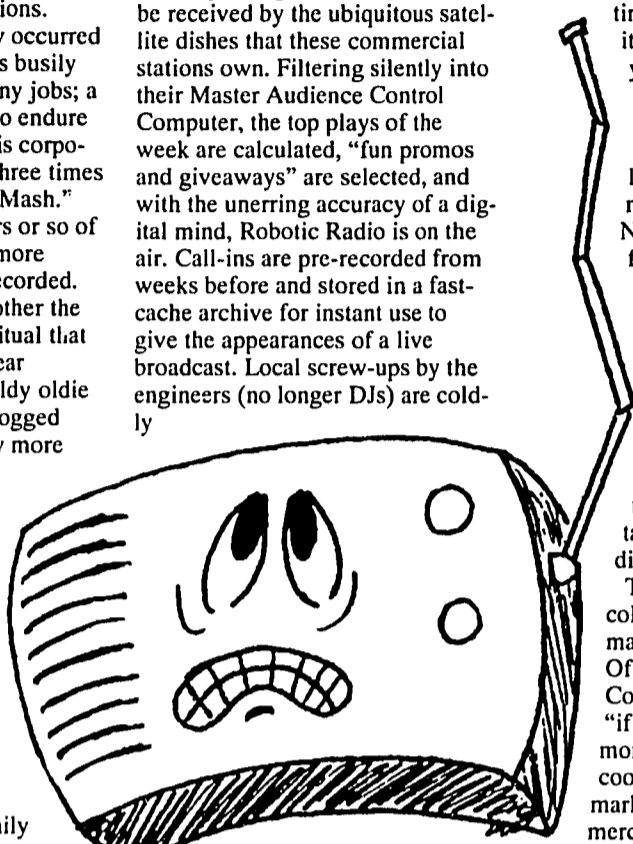

There is always an escape though, somewhere out on the fringes of the dial, there lurks radio stations that are somehow able to make ends meet without sacrificing themselves to the spectre of the Commercial Computer. I urge you to go and explore the radio and find these places. Even if they don't play the "hot hits" all the time, there is usually something quite refereshing about hearing someone who really cares about the music ranting about their favorite band.

It's more refreshing than hearing another pizza commercial.

noted and recorded for the end-of-year performance/marketing report.

Syndicated early-morning shows are broadcast from their home studios in sunnier climes (Mark & Brian in the morning, recorded in San Francisco) and then beamed around to the little feeder stations. Like remoras hungrily attached to their host, the computer is more than happy to send them their "top 10 songs" and "hot picks" for the coming week. It's all so clean, so sterile, so cost effective.

Is there an escape? Not to most ends of the radio dial. If you go to an all-rock station, especially "clas-participate in democracy.

Stubblehead packs Cadillac Jack's

Amy-Marie Smith
Staff

Aaron Miller and Zak Boyle, formerly of Capricorn band Hoolybob, have formed a new group. Ryan Dignan and Daryl Mead, the other half of the band helped to form this new musical entity — Stubblehead — only two and a half months ago.

Lead singer Miller says, "We took a big risk leaving the Cap and going to Cadillac Jack's. We've had to work really hard to get where we are. In two months we've gone from playing for 25 people to 600 last Thursday."

Although Cadillac Jack's is formerly a country bar, Stubblehead, NOT a country band, performs there Thursday through Saturday nights. Their music, as they describe it, is, "high-energy rock 'n' roll, alternative, funk and disco."

Stubblehead members feel that bar-goers in Moscow are just out to have a good time, and they have definitely developed a local following in the short amount of time they've been together.

They try to guess at what songs their crowd want to hear. Boyle, lead guitarist says what works best is "burly, '80s kinda music." Stubblehead plays a huge variety of music at Cadillac Jack's — the best from the '70s, '80s, '90s. Dignan, the band's drummer, says, "We're all pretty diverse." He feels that fact contributes to the group's unique, sort of random sound, that makes them who they are.

The trick, as with any band, is to give the audience what they want to hear. Stubblehead seems to do this successfully. Without a doubt, and if ever having a hard time reaching their audience, "Brown-eyed Girl," they say, is the trump-card. They perform this standard party song like the best of them.

Although a new band, the individual members of Stubblehead are no strangers to music. Mead, the group's bass player, was a member of Seattle band Scatter Creek for 10 years. Crowds in Seattle are "pickier, it's hard to get a rise out of them," says Mead. There are more musicians in Seattle who are harder to entertain when making up the audience.

All of Stubblehead's members are full-time University of Idaho students. Boyle and Dignan are music students. Boyle has performed in the last two Lionel Hampton Jazz Festivals, while Dignan has performed in the last three.

Every Thursday at Cadillac Jack's is dollar night — $1 wells, $1 drafts, $1 cover. Friday from 8-11 p.m. is all you-can-drink beer for $5. Cadillac Jack's also features free popcorn, not to mention the relatively well-known fact that this bar just plain smells better than some other bars in downtown Moscow.

Sunday Mornings on the Palouse with the Medieval Gnome 9-noon

The Gnome's show attempts to provide KUOI listeners with a pleasant but thought provoking mix of spoken word programming, thinking person's rock and roll, and world music. SMotP features spoken word programming performed by the Gnome and others in the 9 o'clock hour including the famous "Here we Have Hillendale" spot at 9:30. Time for Lull at 10 and world music at 11 (The Geomusica Hour). This format leaves a lot of latitude for both Gnomic self-expression and listener requests without being amorphous to the point of utter UNPREDICIABILITY.

The Gnome does this show because he is paying off his karmic debt to some Amberites who shall remain nameless. No, it's because he has delusions of Keilor-hood. No, it's because he is a compulsive teacher. No, it's because—well, tune in and see if you can figure out why he does it. One thing's for sure: SMotP strives to entertain, challenge and (yes) educate listeners.

Will the Grateful Dead ever die?

Associated Press

MIAMI — Grateful Dead fans who have traded in their tie-dyes for neckties could find themselves in a quandary on their next shopping spree.

Will it be neck attire designed by the band's late guitarist Jerry Garcia or fancy wear that carries the group's infamous icons?

A little more than a year after Garcia's death, two companies are battling for the necks of deadheads.

"They are able to put something on that brings back the memories of a time that they loved — whether they are going into an executive board meeting or any business conference," said Irwin Sternberg, president of Stonehenge Inc. in New York.

Stonehenge pioneered the J. Garcia line of ties with psychedelic and geometric artwork by the guitarist. Mulberry Neckwear, its San Rafael, Calif., competitor, introduced in September a new line adorned with art from the band's albums and concert backdrops.

Among the designs are dancing bears, paying tribute to the band's early sound man, Augustus Owsley Stanley III whose nickname was bear. Others are a skull with a lightning bolt, a garland and ribbon decorating many of the group's skeleton characters, and an oversized red-white-and-blue Uncle Sam hat that Garcia often wore in jest. Both lines of ties are sold at department stores — often side by side.

"It's something to wear to work and be slightly rebellious," said Katy Smith, president of Mulberry Neckwear.

Garcia was behind this fashion flashback when he decided in 1992 to allow Stonehenge to manufacture ties in Florida based on his artwork.

Mulberry says the surviving members of the now-defunct band are behind its line. The company believes its neckwear has a stronger connection to the band, while J. Garcia ties are more of an art statement.

"When you buy the ties and you're a Deadhead, you can get a little bit emotional," said Mulberry spokeswoman Judith Agisim. "Jerry Garcia's artwork was his artwork. It did not bring the passion of Uncle Sam or the dancing bears."

"By the time of his death in August 1995, Garcia had given a new look to the necktie industry. Stonehenge went from a company making conservative ties to one on the cutting edge.

It now sells millions of just the Garcia line.

"We owe so much to Jerry," Sternberg said. "When we launched this back in 1992, everything just exploded with our company."

Bloomington's department store in New York City sold about 3,000 ties in 48 hours when the J. Garcia line was first introduced.

On the day of the guitarist's death, some unscrupulous retailers were selling the $35 ties for as much as $200, Sternberg said.

Mulberry sells its Grateful Dead Neckwear for $29.50 and denies it is cannibalizing the J. Garcia line. Smith attributed its success "to the great designs and great colors." The competition disagrees.

Mulberry has "learned from good techniques on success," Sternberg said. "We are just hoping consumers can see the difference. Of course, Garcia never did trade in his tie-dyed shirts for the corporate look."

"Jerry did not even wear a tie in 25 years, and now his name has become synonymous (with) a designer label," said Sternberg.

Contest sucks away the fat, cures couch potatoes

Associated Press

RALEIGH — It's being promoted as a way to turn husbands' eyes from the television and back to their wives.

Just send in hubby's TV remote control, and you could win a radio station's prize of liposuction for yourself and a big screen TV for him.

The idea for "101 Tons of Fun" grew out of a promotions meeting.

"We asked, 'what has never been given out in Raleigh?'" said program director Steve Reynolds of Raleigh's WRAL.

There have been a few complaints, but no one has called asking if it's a joke, Reynolds said.

"This has been his constant companion for the last seven years. He thinks it's just misplaced," wrote one woman who sent in a remote.

The contest is not just for married people. If the winner is a single person who sent in a remote, they would get surgery and the TV.

"It's just to have some fun ... I'm giving out something that people are curious about," Reynolds said.

Women ages 30 to 50 are the most common patients for the procedure that removes fatty tissue, said Dr. Michael Zenn, a plastic surgeon at UNC Hospitals.

People usually get liposuction on one particular area of the body, mostly the stomach or hips, and the procedure can be done under local anesthesia.

Patients will have bruising for the first or second weeks after surgery. Zenn said he recommends patients take a week off from work.

The radio station will give cash if the winner doesn't want surgery, Reynolds said. But he admits he wouldn't mind winning. "I would love a liposuction," Reynolds said.

The contest ends Nov. 23 when a winner is chosen from 40 finalists.

Vandals escape Eastern Washington upset

Damon Barkdull

Staff

It had the makings of an upset. Idaho was coming off an emotional loss to Utah State. Eastern Washington on the other hand, had slipped out of the beaten stepchild suit and assumed the role of conference bully. Moreover, the Vandals possessed a 16-home game win streak, which everyone knew had to be broken eventually.

However, Idaho didn't play victim to a crystal ball or star alignment, escaping an Eagle upset with a 37-27 non-conference win in front of 10,107 fans at the Kibbie Dome on Saturday afternoon.

The Vandals, who moved to the Big West Conference this season, used simple physics in outscoring their old I-AA Big Sky rival: throw the ball to your wide receiver covered by a shorter cornerback.

Idaho quarterback Ryan Fien looked to junior Antonio Wilson when the Vandals needed a big play. At 6-foot 3 inches and 200 pounds, Wilson outpaced the shorter defenders on his way to grabbing 11 catches for 173 yards and a touchdown.

"Their wide receiver corps is outstanding," said Eastern Washington coach Mike Kramer. "We can get better at corner but we can't get taller."

"When you've got big receivers, like we did at UCLA with J.J. Stokes, you use them," said Fien, who transferred from UCLA. "It's nothingscientific."

On this particular Saturday Fien looked nearly flawless. The senior went 30 for 46 and racked up 388 yards and three touchdowns — without any interceptions.

Likewise, the Vandals were able to run the ball. Junior Joel Thomas battered his way to 139 yards on 28 carries and a touchdown.

"Their ability to run the ball really hurt our confidence," Kramer said. "It makes our job so much easier when we're not one-dimensional," Fien said.

Idaho's big offensive statistic was not giving up any turnovers, an accomplishment which hasn't been the trend in the Vandal offense this season.

The Eagles loomed dangerously close to Idaho throughout most of the game. With the 1-2 punch of running backs Joe Sewell and Rex Prescott, EWU racked up 282 yards and three touchdowns on the ground. Two of those touchdowns were on big plays. Sewell scored on an 87-yard run in the third quarter and Prescott dashed 63 yards into the end zone in the fourth quarter.

Their running backs have got excellent speed, both of them — Sewell and Prescott," Tormey said. "They break through the line of scrimmage against an eight-man front and they make one guy miss, they're going to make a big play."

The Vandals (4-4, 1-1) escaped the grasp of a unusually tough Eastern Washington team.

This weekend Idaho entertains New Mexico State at home in a Big West Conference matchup, while EWU welcomes Northern Arizona in Cheney, Wash.

Although Saturday's game showed offensive explosiveness in both teams, early on it looked as though Idaho would dominate.

Idaho chalked up great field position, getting a Vandal bounce on a punt after stopping EWU on its first drive.

Vandal tight end Andy Gilroy caught a 14-yard Fien pass and Joel Thomas carried the ball seven times, getting the ball down to the EWU 7-yard line before eventually punching it in with 7:25 left to go in the first quarter.

After an Eagle field goal, the Vandals again drove down field.

A personal foul call on the Eagles after the kickoff put the ball on the UI 37-yard line. Fien then directed an 11-play, 77-yard drive with the Vandal offense converting on three separate third-down plays. Fien then completed the drive by hitting receiver David Griffin on a 7-yard touchdown pass at the end of the first quarter.

The Eagles added another field goal in the second quarter before Vandal kicker Troy Scott hit a 37-yard field goal of his own two seconds before the half.

EWU looked to retaliate at the start of the third, however, the defense stepped up and Idaho's Arnold Gunn kyped a Griffin Garke pass giving the ball back to the UI offense.

Idaho's offense fell stagnant and EWU once again looked to score.

Sewell took a hand-off from the EWU 13-yard line and galloped 87 yards for the eventual touchdown.

Just like that, the Eagles were back in the game with 13:23 remaining in the third.

"Idaho is a penetrating type of defense," Kramer said. "You're going to get some home runs on a defense like that."

After tacking on another Scott field goal, Fien again directed a long scoring drive. Fien hit Joel Thomas on a 47-yard screen pass, moving the ball to the EWU 4-yard line. Wilson finished the scoring drive catching a 4-yard Fien touchdown pass with 3:59 left in the third.

The Eagle running game again saved EWU, as Prescott scampered for 63 yards from the EWU 37-yard line. The touchdown closed the Vandal lead to 30-20 at the 12:03 mark in the fourth.

Each team earned another touchdown score and the two former rivals remained tied 37-27 with 5:07 in the fourth.

Idaho then took possession of the ball and eventually ran out the clock.

Tormey realized the significance of a win over a tough Eagle ball club.

"It was a great win, that was a very good football team we beat today," Tormey said.

And although it seemed that the Idaho offense won the game, several Vandal defenders had big games.

Senior defensive end Barry Mitchell finished the outing with 1.5 sacks for a loss of eight yards and six total tackles. Linebacker Jason Shelt grabbed a team-high 15 tackles and an assisted sack.

Likewise, the Vandals caused three fumbles and recovered one.

Big West matches yield silver-and-gold lining

Kindra Meyer

Asst. Sports Editor

There was a silver, or rather silver and gold, lining to the gray post-Halloween weekend as the University of Idaho volleyball team nabbed two Big West wins at home.

Friday evening's victory over the University of North Texas was captured in three games, no thanks to an array of questionable net violations. Props could, however, be given to senior Louisa Kawulok and sophomore Jessica Moore who delivered strong performances.

Other assets for the Vandals were Jeri Hymas and Beth Craig, who snagged nine kills each.

Freshman Shalyn Lynch played a substantial role in Friday evening's win as well. She entered the lineup fired up and ready, racking up two kills and two block assists in the first two games.

The first game was won 15-6 due to tough blocking and a flowing defensive effort.

Despite the torrent of Idaho energy, it was the Eagles who jumped out to 6-1 early on in game two, due to the tough serving of Laketa Graham. It wasn't enough to keep Idaho down though, and they were soon on their feet again, surging back to a 15-10 victory.

Junior Jeri Hymas came alive in the match's final game along with strong blocking from Louisa Kawulok. That deadly net combo was enough to lead the Vandals to a 15-6 match wrap-up.

In fact, when it came to blocking, Idaho rocked North Texas 25-9. This aggressive net play kept the Eagle's hitting percentage at or below .050 in every game.

The Eagles' one successful threat was tipping, as the Vandal defense was slow to recognize and recover the dumps.

Friday night's match marked the 20th win of the season. It is the fifth consecutive season the Vandals have reached a 20-win plateau. The league loss dropped North Texas to 6-18 and 1-10 in the Big West.

New Mexico State was no match for Idaho either, as they streaked past the Roadrunners 15-10, 15-6, 15-8.

Moore soared above the net in the first game, punishing NMSU's hitters with two solo stuffs and three assisted blocks. This strength combined with consistently getting to the line helped offset their weak hitting percentage of .115. Fortunately though, Idaho improved to hit .389 and .222 while New Mexico State didn't fare any better with .061, .043 and .000.

Again, blocking was an integral part of the victory, as UI totaled 13 team blocks compared to NMSU's six.

"We still aren't passing well, but our tip coverage got much better in this game," Hilbert said. "Our left-side hitting is also weaker than I would like, but we are blocking great."

Leonard came alive in the second game to pound five kills, sparking a dulled offensive start. The Vandal fans made their presence known as they disturbed the opposing team with artificial noise makers. The NMSU coach finally complained in the second game, since those devices are against Big West rules.

Jemena Yocom dazzled the court in the match's final game, putting away five kills. At 13-2, setter Lynne Hyland was replaced by freshman Lani Kim, but returned at 13-8 to finish off the last few points of the match.

Leonard led the Vandals' offensive effort with nine kills, hitting .300. She also added three assists, one block solo and two block assists.

Craig, Moore and Yocom added seven kills a piece. Craig and Yocom also popped up six balls each.

"It's nice to have Jemena stepping up when Jeri is having trouble. We need to work on getting Jeri back to where she was earlier this season," Hilbert said.

Moore played with usual excellence and finished the game with two block solos, seven block assists and seven digs.

Lynne Hyland racked up 62 assists over the two-match weekend.

NMSU's freshman center Danika Taylor is looking promising for the Roadrunners. She had an impressive hitting percentage of .556 for her six kills and only one error.

"Number six is going to be something else in a few years," said

Peter McKinney

Idaho wrapped up the Eastern Division with a sweep this week-

Hilbert.

This win extends the Vandal record to 21-4 overall and 10-2 in the Big West. NMSU falls to 6-22 and 2-10.

This Thursday UI has the formidable task of taking on Big West competition Long Beach State, ranked third in the nation. It is also the last home match for the Vandals 1996 season, and is the last chance you will ever get to see the play of star seniors Hyland and Kawulok. The match starts at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

Bulls look as if they are destined to win yet again

Nate Petersen

The Chicago Bulls return this season for what will be both an encore performance of last year's record-setting NBA championship run, and the end of the dynasty that has won four and soon to be five championships in the 1990s.

With new coaches, new rookies, and premier players in different uniforms, the rest of the NBA is doing the best they can to play catch up to the Bulls and their previous record-setting, 72-win season.

It is doubtful that the Bulls will duplicate such a miraculous season, but with the core of Michael Jordan, Scottie Pippen, Dennis Rodman, and coach Phil Jackson returning, the Bulls will still run-away with the best record in the league and homecourt advantage throughout the playoffs. In which case no team will have a chance beating them in seven games.

In the history of the NBA, few teams have had a trio as dominating as Jordan, Pippen, and Rodman. Jordan, unarguably the greatest player of all-time, will again lead the NBA in scoring for the ninth season. The most unpredictable and court fashionable Rodman, with his multi-colored hair, makeup, and fishnet nylons, will collect yet another rebounding title while remaining the NBA's best defensive player. The at times invisible Scottie Pippen, will handle the all important job of doing whatever else is necessary for the Bulls to secure a victory.

Handling the ego of Jordan, the spontaneous combustion of Rodman, the mental toughness of Pippen, and the overall team chemistry for the Bulls, is guru coach Jackson. Jackson, a Zen Buddhist, holds the highest winning percentage out of any other coach in the history of the NBA.

The Bulls last year were the NBA's best defensive team, with Jordan, Rodman, and Pippen all being named first-team all-defense. Coupled with their efficiency at the triangle offense, most games quickly turned into blowouts with the starters lounging on the bench in the fourth quarter.

This undoubtedly will be the Bulls' last big hurrah. They are the NBA's oldest team, with Jordan nearing 35, Pippen 30, and Rodman closing in on 37. Bare in mind, should one of the aging Bulls go down, so will their season.

More importantly, however, Jordan, Rodman, and Jackson have all signed huge one-year contracts. Pippen is in the final year of his contract and will become a free agent at the end of the season. Not surprisingly, Jordan hauled in the biggest one-year contract ever, signing for an astronomical $32 million.

With all factors in place, anything short of a repeat championship is unacceptable, not to mention a downright failure.

Those hoping to ambush the Bulls in their quest will be many of the same teams, this time, though, with some new faces.

Charles Barkley, Larry Johnson, and most surprisingly Shaquille O'Neal, are among this year's NBA elite who are wearing new uniforms. Barkley jumped ship from the Phoenix Suns to the Houston Rockets making them a more formidable contender, while former Charlotte Hornet Johnson has become the biggest piece in the revamped New York Knicks that will once again battle Chicago in the East. Both Barkley and Johnson escaped teams that were on a downward spiral to mediocrity.

Shaq on the other hand, left the Orlando Magic, who were considered the heirs to the Bulls' throne. Spurning more money from the Magic, Shaq decided he wanted a more glamorous scenery and better opportunities to follow his acting and rapping career. So the 7-foot, 300 pound walking circus has taken his act to the Los Angeles Lakers for a nine-year, $120 million contract.

As much as the people in Orlando are going to miss him, they will no longer become sick and nauseated watching his futile attempts in shooting free throws. As far as people in Los Angeles are concerned, they finally have their next Kareem Abdul Jabbar, who will take them back to the days of Showtime.

Don't kid yourself L.A., if Shaq was that great the Magic wouldn't have been swept the last two years in the playoffs, besides the fact the Bulls beat the Magic handily 4-0 in the Eastern Conference Finals last year. Shaq's new supporting cast is not nearly as good as his previous team in Orlando.

Who knows what Shaq was thinking, probably something on the line of a new movie deal or rap tour, but the simple fact remains, is that he will never again have the opportunity to play on a team with a player as good as Anfernee Hardaway.

Shaq will lead the Lakers in scoring, rebounding, shot blocking, and continue to be one of the more dominating players in the league. They will win over 60 games and be a force in the playoffs, but if you think they will advance to the finals, you're dreaming.

Not until Shaq fixes his free-throw epidemic will L.A. be in serious contention for the championship. Until that time, count on the Seattle SuperSonics to meet the Bulls once again in the Finals.

Shawn Kemp will continue to have another career year. Teamed with Gary Payton and Dettlef Schrempf, the Sonics have one of the best trios in the league.

Speaking of dynamic trios, in acquiring Barkley, the Rockets boast three future hall of famers in Barkley, Hakeem Olajuwon and Clyde Drexler. If they all stay healthy, which is a big if, the West will turn into a shootout. With an 82-game regular season, however, Rocket fans will most likely see little of the three playing together. The last few season each of them has been hampered with one or many injuries.

The only team standing in the way of the Bulls ascent to their Finals confrontation with Seattle, will be the Knicks in the East. After going shopping during the off-season, added point-guard Chris Childs from New Jersey, shooting-guard Allan Houston from Detroit, and Johnson. Besides free agency, the Knicks drafted three solid forwards, including former Syracuse Orangeman John Wallace.

The new faces will mix with the old ones of Patrick Ewing, Charles Oakley, and John Starks. Expect the Knicks to be less rugged, but able to get up the floor and score points. Their strong frontcourt of Johnson, Oakley, and Ewing, will give the Bulls problems inside.

The Knicks, Lakers, Sonics, and Rockets are the only serious contenders besides the Bulls. The Utah Jazz and Indiana Pacers are pretty good, but will not proceed anywhere past the conference finals. The Magic are still good and might turn into the surprise of the year, but like everyone else in the east, they will be stomped by the Bulls.

For all of the fans of the NBA, this will be a season to cherish. Who knows whether Jordan will decide to retire indefinitely? He proved that he was the greatest athlete of all time and capable of almost anything by coming out of retirement and once again leading the Chicago to the promised land. Add the fact that he signed a one-year deal, we must assume the probable. The Bulls will repeat and Jordan will say goodbye to basketball forever.

Friesz flicks switch, Hawks climb out of the gutter

Byron Jarnagin

Going into Sunday's game against the Houston Oilers, the Seattle Seahawks had accumulated a mid-season total of 3-5 still having a chance to break even on the year. And after Sunday's nail-biting win over the Oilers, that chance still exists.

Who should they thank? John Friesz of course. Sunday's game began as neither an offensive battle nor a defensive battle. It was a two-man battle, as Houston Oiler's place-kicker Al Del Greco traded punches with Seattle's Todd Peterson booting the pigskin through the uprights. The score was 6-3 with Seattle noting the edge by Peterson with one more field goal than Del Greco. All of the scoring for the first three quarters was from either the foot of Peterson or Del Greco.

It was a kicker's paradise, or not. Both Peterson and Del Greco had some problems during the course of the game. Peterson missed a chip shot from 23 yards, basically along the lines of an extra point, that put the Hawks in a difficult situation. In the third quarter, the Oilers got something going when Steve McNair hit Chris Sanders for a 65-yard touchdown pass.

However, Del Greco felt the wrath of the Seattle defensive line. His blocked kick closed the book on the Houston Oilers, as Robert Blackmon took the lateral 61 yards and across the goal line for six.

Chris Warren didn't produce much on the ground to begin with going only 34 yards on 16 carries, but due to an injury which took him out during the game against Houston, the Seahawks produced even less on the ground.

It was the better-than-average Seattle passing game, with Friesz at the helm nailing 24 of 38 passes, that kept the Oiler secondary in check. Friesz has recorded a 3-1 record since taking over the starting quarterback position from Rick Mirer.

Friesz finally got things going late in the game, in the fourth quarter, but threw a touchdown pass that initially changed the course of the game.

He connected with speedy Joey Galloway for 14 yards and a touchdown. Galloway caught eight passes from the gun of Friesz for 94 yards, and Brian Blades held up his share with 69 yards on four receptions. Friesz went on to pass for 323 yards. He is the first Seattle quarterback to pass for over 300 yards since Dave Krieg in 1991.

Bruder finishes seventh at Big West Conference Championship

The University of Idaho cross country squads made good showings in Saturday's Big West Conference Championships. The men's team scores for the five mile run were good enough to finish in sixth place, while the women placed seventh overall in the 3,000.

On the men's side, individually the standout was Frank Bruder, who finished in seventh place at 25:50.6 only 55.8 seconds off Jose Uribe, the overall top finisher from Boise State. Other runners for Idaho finished respectively, including; Bernd Schroeder 25th, Josh Muxen 46th, Blaine Maley 49th, Dan Bartosz 58th and Aaron Denhan 70th.

For the women's team Althea Belgrove placed highest in 25th place with a time of 18:59.2. The top finisher of the race was Denise Danielson of Nevada, who recorded a time of 17:36.8. Other respective placements for the Vandals were; Brigitta Sera 28th, Erica Dallas 37th, Tia Taruscio 38th, Andrea Jenkins 39th and Shannon Kearney 90th.

Palouse Turkey Run results

The Palouse Turkey Run results are in, and the overall male winner is Peter O'Donnell with a time of 31:32. The female winner is Sarah Correll at 37:49.

The top five times for males age 18-29 are Brandon Meal-32:55, Todd Stup-33:05, Brett Caron-34:36, Yusuke Saito-34:36, and Michael Wojcik-39:38.

The top six female finishers 18-29 are Jill Hoff-40:28, Sarah Kincheloe-46:53, Trena Britven-59:08, Bryn Berube-59:10, Brenda Ziegler 1:20:37 and Donella Pratt 1:20:37.

For ages 30-39, the top male runners were Bob Stephens-44:00 and Jim Ross-44:01.

The women 30-39 had five finishers. Gwen Lyons-42:53, Susan Anderson-44:51, Susan Ross-44:60, Beth Marshall-53:27 and Deborah Budwig-55:44.

John Marshall finished at 33:55 in the men ages 40-49 division and Deborah Bell came in at 41:23 in the same age split.

Trudy Kenny was the lone runner in the category of 50-59. She finished at 1:07:51.

UI looks to upset third-ranked Long Beach State

At 7:30 this Thursday in Memorial Gym the University of Idaho volleyball team will play the biggest match in the program's history, according to Idaho coach Tom Hilbert. Their competitor? Merely Long Beach State, who is currently 25-0 and ranked third in the nation, not to mention on top of the Western Division of the Big West Conference.

Hilbert is hoping this aspect will aide his team, since the Vandals are through with their division play, it puts the pressure on LBSU.

"They're a great team. I believe that we're blocking at a level where we could possibly do some disruptive things to them. But we've got to come out handling the ball and passing at a much higher level. If we do that, I think we can play with them," Hilbert said. "We need to play hard, but one point at a time. They play much like WSU, and we have to be ready to see a better blocking and transition game."

UI's blocking must be in top form, because Idaho will be going up against Nique Crump, who leads the Big West with a hitting percentage of .489. Crump is also second in the Big West in blocks per game, averaging 1.28. Jessica Moore is second in the league and right on her heels with a .399 hitting percentage.

As a team Long Beach State is leading the Big West with a percentage of .332, and Idaho is third with .267.

Hilbert also sites the home crowd as one advantage the Vandals must use over LBSU. "It's going to be fun in our gym. We have nothing to lose and everything to gain. I think the people around here are going to see some of the best volleyball ever."

"This is going to be the biggest game Idaho has ever played in Memorial Gym since I've been here," Hilbert said.

Veterans look to propel Idaho into Big West

Editor's note:

This is a two-part series that will run today and Friday as an interlude to the 1996-97 Vandal women's basketball season. The Vandals kick off the season Friday night in Memorial Gym at 7 p.m.

Jennifer Stone

Playing in all 26 games as a freshman, Stone got her feet wet during the absence of Mindy Rice. Now that Rice has graduated, Stone will be looked upon as more of a floor leader.

Traveling only a little over an hour to attend Idaho, Stone hails from nearby Craigmont, Idaho. Stone, along with McDaniel comes from Idaho's A-4 division, in which she led the Huskies to a state title during her stint in high school.

She scored a career-high 13 points against Eastern Washington last season, along with grabbing seven rebounds and also garnering three steals. She finished the season averaging four points and three rebounds a game respectively for the Vandals in only 15 minutes of playing time per contest.

"She brings a lot of athleticism and she has a strong will," said Holt. "She has a strong vision of what the game should look like."

Holt contends that Stone will vie for a starting spot for the Vandals this season, and she should be a plus for the Idaho inside game no matter what her role may turn out to be.

Jill Ortner

Ortner has been known since her arrival as a scrappy player, going after loose balls, and doing the things that often go unnoticed in the stat column, but things that don't go unnoticed by fellow players and coaches.

Playing behind Skorpik for the past few seasons, Ortner has still managed to contribute a lot to a team that has great expectations this season. She handed out 50 assists a year ago, which was third on the team.

"Jill has proven herself and has made great strides," said Holt. "I'm excited about what she can contribute to the team. She brings hard work and enthusiasm."

Kelli Johnson

What can you say? If she gets hot, defenses better stand clear.

This was evident against Boise State last season, as Johnson connected on seven of nine 3-point attempts, paving the way to a career-high 25 points. Johnson is second on Idaho's all-time 3-point field goals made, and is just 27 short of becoming Idaho's all-time leader, this despite the fact that she still has two seasons remaining to accomplish this feat.

After leading Moscow to three A-2 state titles playing alongside Stanford's Heather Owen, Johnson came to Idaho with the label of being primarily an offensive threat.

"She came in known as an offensive player," said Holt. "Now she's showing an ability to play both ends of the court."

This quote is reiterated by the numbers Johnson accumulated last season, posting 68 assists and 46 steals, both second on the team to backcourt partner Ari Skorpik.

Melisa McDaniel

If every coach could choose a players mentality, there would be a host of Melisa McDaniels on their roster.

Hailing from Grandview, Idaho., McDaniel was awarded the A-4 Player of Year honors during both her junior and senior years. If Grandview sounds familiar, it may be that Mindy Rice also hails from there, and yes they did play together, both as Vandals and as teammates at Rimrock High School.

Starting for most of last season, McDaniel averaged 6.8 points and 2.9 rebounds per game, while scoring a career-high of 18 against Idaho State. Her play may be a little deceiving, but when you look at the game-ending stats, she generally has a handful of points and rebounds.

"She plays hard and she plays consistent all of the time. She's fun to coach," said Holt.

Ari Skorpik

Skorpik is entering her senior campaign as the Vandal floor leader, having run the offense for the past few years playing in every game since joining the Vandals during the 1993-94 season.

Skorpik led the team in assists and steals last season with 89 and 51 respectively. She not only dishes the ball, but shoots it rather nicely as well. Her 88 career 3-point goals is third all-time in Idaho history and she returns as the Vandals leading scorer notching 11.5 points per game a year ago.

"She is ready to really take control of the team and step into a leadership role in a way she has never had the opportunity to do," said Idaho coach Julie Holt.

Sarah Blakley

Forgoing a red-shirt season last year, Blakley showed signs of being a very good player in years to come for the Vandals.

Seeing limited playing time as a freshman, Blakley showed very good promise to reach the level she left behind at Capital High in Boise, where she averaged 14.4 points and 6.9 rebounds while in high school.

Blakley brings a toughness to the Vandal squad, something that is often overlooked, but is certainly evident by the bumps and bruises she imposes on the opposition.

"I'm fired up about Sarah," said Holt. "Last year was a very tough, typical freshman year. This year, she's mentally ready for the season."

Standing at 5-10, Blakley has the capability to take her game both into the paint and beyond the arc if the situation requires.

Michelle Greenwood

Greenwood may have been the best addition to the Vandal squad a year ago, after playing her first two seasons at North Idaho College in Coeur d'Alene.

Scoring 20 points twice during key Big Sky action last season showed the capability Greenwood has on the offensive side, and her 4.1 rebounds a game showed she was not a one-dimensional player.

Being one of two returning inside players, Greenwood has to be a force inside for the Vandals to be successful this season, both offensively and defensively.

"What we need her to do this year is rebound and score inside," said Holt. "We also need her to be a positive role model."

Maynard Miller Supports Gary Schroeder for Idaho Senate

Senator Gary Schroeder has proven to be a most energetic and able legislator. He listens to his constituents and follows through immediately when action is needed. He has been especially tenacious and successful in his advocacy and support of public schools, vo-tec and higher education. I believe Gary Schroeder is the best informed and most active Senator in the Statehouse.
