Moscow breaks ground for tech park

Justin Oliver Ruen

A ceremonial groundbreaking was held Wednesday to commemorate the establishment of the Alturas Technology Park. The park seeks to improve the local economy by providing affordable space to technology-based companies.

The park will be located on a 16-acre site beside Highway 8, next to the Tidyman's store. The project has been in progress for nearly five years, said Robb Parish of the Moscow Latah County Economic Development Council.

The need for such a park was highlighted by the case of Advanced Hardware Architectures Incorporated, which graduated from the current incubator facility and needed more space to expand. Since no such facilities existed, the firm relocated to Pullman's research park, Parish said.

"That just further demonstrated to the community that there was a need for office space and buildings to go up here in Moscow," he said.

Parish says that bids will be accepted, and that construction could begin as soon as weather allows. It may be next fall before the first phase of construction is completed.

The project is funded through a state urban renewal authority, which has secured bonds through First Security Bank that will be paid off through "tax increment financing." The companies in the business park will pay property taxes, which will support servicing of the bonds first, and after the bonds are paid off, tax revenue will go to local authorities.

The first phase of the project will encompass six plots as well as a public park, and two additional future phases will add six sites, Parish said.

Technology firms are committed to Moscow, and it is crucial for local economic development that there is space for them, he emphasized. "Companies like the proximity to the university," he added.

The current incubator facility provides employment for over 100 people, Parish said. The new park will "provide a mechanism for growth" in terms of local employment and revenue, he added.

Character top priority in the workplace

Character is the single most important issue in getting a job, Dr. Sharon Stoll told listeners at her presentation, "Leadership and Ethics," Wednesday afternoon in the SUB.

Stoll is a professor of physical education at University of Idaho and the director of the Center for ETHICS. Her presentation was sponsored by the students in the Developing Leadership Relationships course.

Stoll began by asking the audience what they thought leadership is. She pointed out that good leadership involves more than just control, organization, and taking charge. It also involves character. Stoll used Adolph Hitler as an example of a good leader with bad values.

Stoll discussed with the audience where our character comes from. "From where does character emerge? We don't know the right answer, really," Stoll said. Studies on babies have concluded that some character is in-born, but we also get a lot from experiences.

"People can vastly change their character," Stoll said. This often occurs through spiritual experiences, but she also said that environment has a powerful effect on people. If a person's environment supports unethical behavior, they begin to compromise.

Stoll told the audience that there is more crime in white-collar American industry than anywhere else, which is why character is important in hiring. Many employees rip-off their employers by stealing services and doing personal business on company time. Many businesses now make sure employees know what is and is not allowed at work.

"When you go get a job, wherever it may be, there will be a professional code of ethics," Stoll said. The main reason companies have a written code is for legal purposes. If an employee breaks the rules and is fired, they're less likely to come back to sue the company.

Besides teaching, Stoll is also a consultant on character issues. She has done consulting for the U.S. Navy, the CIA, and the American Bar Association, plus many other organizations. But she plans to stay in the area.

"I am an Idaho person," Stoll said. "I married an Idaho native and I'll never leave."

Officer warns students about date rape drug

Erin Schultz

A personal friend of Moscow D.A.R.E. officer Bob Marr experienced first hand the trauma of having someone slip an unwanted substance into his food. He was taken to the hospital after a prankster dropped LSD into his bar-room drink.

But LSD isn't the only thing that has been getting slipped into drinks.

Rohypnol, the "date rape drug," has gained attention lately for its use and abuse. The drug is odorless, colorless, tasteless, and is most well known for its ability to cause temporary memory loss.

Rohypnol is becoming more popular among American youth as a cheap and easily accessible drug, and it has also been used in conjunction with several rape cases.

"I can't think of a crime more insidious than slipping something into someone's drink and then raping them," Marr said.

Marr doesn't know of any reports in Moscow concerning Rohypnol, but crimes have occurred in neighboring cities, including Lewiston and Spokane.

The effects of Rohypnol occur around 20 minutes after intake. Depending on the amount ingested, the drug can lead to memory loss, black outs, or in extreme dosages, death.

"It is primarily prescribed in Europe, where it is used as a sedative or hypnotic," Kaye Gurrard, UI Student Health Center pharmacist said. It is similar to Valium, although Rohypnol is supposed to be stronger.

In most cases, people will pass out from this drug. They will then have no traces of remembering what happened while experiencing the effects of the drug, Gurrard said.

Since the drug is not legal in the United States, its first introduction to Americans was through illegal means in the early 1990s. Though most people know of it as the

As 1996 comes to a close, so does a year of accomplishments for the University of Idaho's Alpha Phi chapter of Alpha Kappa Lambda.

Throughout the past year, the Alpha Phi chapter has shown excellence in all areas of fraternity life.

This summer the Alpha Phi chapter won the Founder's Award at their National Conclave held in Indianapolis, Ind. This award is presented to the chapter of AKL that the National President feels performed the best in all areas of fraternity life, including rush, community service, and academics. The Founder's Award is given once every two years and is the top honor an AKL chapter can receive.

"The award signifies us as the best AKL chapter in the nation," said Jeff Allen, Alpha Phi chapter president. "We are ecstatic. It is a great award and we earned it."

AKL also won awards at the conclave for fraternity education, which recognizes a chapter for excellence in pledge programs and training; public relations, which recognizes excellence in com-

"date rape drug," Rohypnol is becoming more and more popular among high school and college students. Street names include roofies, rope or R2.

Rohypnol is often used with alcohol, which intensifies effects of disorientation. Officer Marr cautions students not only about Rohypnol, but also any dangerous drug that could be slipped into your drink at bars or elsewhere.

"Although the national media is currently focused on 'the date rape drug,' Rohypnol, having someone slip an unwanted substance into your food or drink is not a new concern," Marr said. Since many attacks of this nature occur in bars, Marr encourages students to use common sense when going out.

The team played in 80-degree heat and managed to place third out of 29 in the tournament.

"We really had a different attitude this year. The athleticism was at its best and the guys really worked well together," explained Kirk Kolb, AKL member. "We also practiced twice a week in addition to playing one game a week, and practiced in the [Kibbie] Dome before the tournament."

The Alpha Phi chapter also won this year's Homecoming competition, extending their streak to six consecutive years. The chapter placed first in float, house decorating, volleyball tournament and crowd noise at the bonfire, and placed third in the song jingles competition.

Chipman Palouse Trail needs funds

Bryant J. Kuechle
Staff

The Moscow-to-Pullman recreational path is in the final planning stages, but is still $248,000 short of completion. On Tuesday path promoter Nancy Mack of the Pullman Civic Trust addressed the fundraising issue at a slide-show presentation in the University of Idaho library.

The Bill Chipman Palouse trail was originally fully funded by a grant from the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of Washington because the project lies in a highway area.

After the flooding last winter, the $900,000 grant wouldn't cover the damages. Therefore, an additional $450,000 was needed for completion. About $202,000 has already been raised.

Among the local groups planning fund raisers for the project is the ASUI (with a $2,000 donation) and the UI Greek system, spearheaded by Delta Chi and Gamma Phi Beta.

"Bill (Chipman) was a Delta Chi and our Greek advisor; his wife is a Gamma Phi," Adam Way, Delta Chi president said. "Our biggest goal as the two houses is to be the leaders in the Greek system in raising money for this cause."

Chipman was an influential UI alum and owner of Chipman-Taylor Chevrolet-Oldsmobile in Pullman. His family asked if the trail could be named in his honor after a fatal car accident in February.

"He represents a bridge between the two communities," Mack said. "There has been a lot of money raised because of his name."

The trail is to run beside the Moscow-Pullman highway on the Palouse River Railroad tracks grade. Palouse River Railroad agreed to consolidate train travel with the parallel Burlington Northern tracks and donate the land.

"It's a great thing for the community," Grant Morton, UI capital planner, said. "It will be good for students that need to commute to WSU."

Work on the trail is planned for the upcoming summer. With its completion, additional attractions are planned for its future.

Washington State University junior level architects have created designs for a $15,000 rest stop on the path.

"The kids were given a vision and they got really excited," Mack said. "They all walked the path and figured out their locations."

Environment and educational signs may also be placed along the trail at places of interest. Mack hopes that attention will be focused on Paradise Creek, which the trail will cross 17 times.

"With the trail, it will make people more aware of the creek," she said. "Right now it's pretty infected with various pollutants."

The recreational link will go from the Main Street bridge in Pullman to Moscow's Perimeter Drive. There it will connect to the existing path at Deakin and 6th Street and continue downtown.

President, senators bid farewell

Andrew White

Tears and laughter overwhelmed the weekly ASUI Senate meeting Wednesday as new and old student representatives said goodbye and hello to the ASUI. Numerous resolutions recognizing achievements on the part of the senate and executive branch passed unanimously.

Lyndsay McCall, assistant director of SUB Business and Operations, reminded the students that a SUB Swap Meet will be taking place today. Students interested in doing some Christmas shopping are encouraged to attend. Also, campus organizations interested in participating should contact the Student Union offices.

ASUI Attorney General Tonya Lysne gave the Senate a brief update of the AG's office. She told the Senate the office has dealt with issues regarding the ASUI Advertising lawsuit, Graduate Student Association separation request, the creation of the ASUI Judicial Board, on-line elections, and numerous cases involving students which are protected by the attorney/client relationship.

Argonaut Editor-in-Chief Corinne Flowers represented Jamie Waggoner, Gem of the Mountains editor-in-chief, with a statement of progress. Flowers reported that the Gem of the Mountains has successfully submitted pages of color to be printed in this year's annual. This is the first time since 1983 that the yearbook will feature color pages.

A teary-eyed Brian Kane thanked the University of Idaho for the opportunity to serve as student body president. Kane said, "I campaigned on a shoestring and I probably shouldn't have won — but somehow I got elected. I campaigned on several topics: campus safety, increased access for parking, better funding for the sports club teams and the expansion of our varsity athletic clubs programs. I'm happy to announce that in all those areas, we have made significant improvement."

Kane passed on a "UI tie" to ASUI President-elect Jim Dalton, who was sworn into office along with other elected senators following the meeting.

The Senate debated a bill which would provide $47,105 from the student body general reserve to help fund a Sting concert. The representative body decided to wait on final action and carefully review the legislation.

Drugs help AIDS patients embrace prospect of survival

SANTA FE, New Mexico (AP) — A clinic physician said the mood among members of Santa Fe's AIDS-infected community has changed from dismay to excitement since the introduction of protease inhibitors about a year ago.

"They're having a remarkable effect," said Trevor Hawkins, chief physician at Southwest CARE Clinic. "It's really quite a dramatic change in the practice. I have a lot fewer people who are sick."

Hawkins, who has treated AIDS patients in Santa Fe for 10 years, said the new drugs work "like a biological scalpel."

They stop the HIV protease enzyme from reproducing and from attaching to RNA building blocks.

The result is a decrease in the amount of the virus, sometimes to undetectable levels, in the bloodstream.

Jeffrey, 31, was struggling to recover from a debilitating bout of pneumonia last year. As medical costs pushed him toward bankruptcy, he gave up on buying property or establishing credit.

Then he started taking a "cocktail" of Crixivan, Zerit and Eпивir. Within a few months, Jeffrey's health improved dramatically.

"After the cocktail, I almost had too much energy," said Jeffrey, who asked to keep his last name anonymous. "It changed my attitude toward life."

After two months, the amount of human immunodeficiency virus in Jeffrey's bloodstream dropped to zero. His T-cell count, which helps determine health and immunity, increased from nine to 220 per milliliter of blood.

Hawkins said about 65 percent of his patients do well with protease inhibitors, but there are down sides to the new drugs.

The normal dosage is 13 to 18 pills a day, and patients must be careful to take them at timed intervals. Many patients also experience side effects such as nausea, headaches, kidney stones, diarrhea and fatigue.

"It's been pretty hard on the system," said Juanita, 22, who has taken protease inhibitors for one month. "I got really sick, with constant nausea and vomiting. I'm getting over that now."

Juanita, who asked that her last name not be used, said she has not seen any positive results from the drugs yet.

"My viral load is still really high," she said.

The cost of protease inhibitors can be prohibitive: about $1,200 a month. In New Mexico, Medicaid and state programs have helped pay for treatment for some patients, but such subsidies might not last forever.

Some patients fear the AIDS virus might mutate and become impervious to certain protease inhibitors. The virus already has adapted to evade older drugs such as AZT.

No food, no electricity: Would you survive?

Tim Lohrmann

If you had the good fortune to sit down with family or friends for a holiday dinner recently, you're conscious of the importance of atmosphere. Dimming the overhead incandescents in favor of warm candle glow can really make the occasion a bit more special. But take my advice, don't try to make a case for the charms of candlelight to a resident of the Spokane/Coeur d'Alene area.

Many folks in those cities and the surrounding region have had more than their fill of candles courtesy of the recent massive weather-related power outages. For up to two weeks their lights, refrigerators, computers and electric heaters and yes, even televisions, all the fixtures that mean civilization to many were frustratingly useless. Their typically American energy-hungry lifestyle came to a grinding or more likely whining halt.

And I'll wager that during those days of dark inconvenience, quite a few of the powerless started asking themselves some pretty radical questions. Some disturbing "what if" questions about where they would be if something even more unthinkable happened. What if the power went out in mid-winter, and this time the trusted public servants had no calming reassurances that all would be well in a few days? What if the cupboards became chronically bare down at the super-mega food mart they rely on so heavily for their plastic-wrapped rations? Or what if the money they work so hard to earn was suddenly valueless and just wouldn't spend anymore?

There's nothing like a semi-prolonged spell of basic service deprivation to cut through some of the denial about living standards and just how vulnerable they may be. There are quite a few groups and individuals who have given this plenty of thought. A few official government agencies have made some plans, and some of our major religious affiliations urge their adherents to be prepared for food shortages. Other than that, except for a few of those much maligned, allegedly paranoid survivalists, we're on the whole a pitifully unprepared lot.

The popular thinking on disaster survival seems to be "don't" for most of us. Just don't think about it, it could never happen here. Is that rational thought process or childish naiveté? After all, disaster and societal breakdown can and do happen all over the globe. Even in the good ol' USA.

Ask a grandparent, parent or if you're blessed with the wisdom and experience yourself, just jog your own memory for an account of America in the late '20s and '30s.

There was little money or food for millions. The homelessness then made our present problem seem minor. In a nutshell, the Great Depression brought third-world living standards to the land of plenty in a hurry. If you're from a third-world, or so called underdeveloped country, then you've surely seen hunger and primitive living conditions first hand.

It wasn't easy for those Americans who lived it in the Depression or those enduring it all over the globe at present, but what if we, the masses of comfortably pampered present-day Americans, had to face widespread shortages, chronic power outages, hunger or some combination of the above? After all, we know the good life, and I'll bet we'd really miss it if suddenly evaporated. But how would we react?

What if, say, a sustained international fuel shortage put all those big semis idle, if food skyrocketed out of sight price-wise and then became mostly unavailable? Would we line up courteously and gratefully in weekly bread lines or would something a little more disorderly happen?

Something a little like the scenes in south-central Los Angeles after the infamous acquittal of the cops who almost succeeded in giving a pre-trial death penalty to hard-partying motorist Rodney King, maybe? It could happen. After all, the L.A. riots started as reaction to police brutality suffered by a relatively small population segment. And as riots go, it was a real doozy. If most of the food supply for the entire urban United States was cut off, that might be even a little bigger deal, if you follow me.

Now that's just an off-the-cuff hypothetical. If you really start trying to imagine the worst, you can go even further. You know, rogue Russian military commanders could do some really tacky irresponsible things with missiles. Big, bad, (and dare I add, anticipated), earthquakes just to the west of here, creating Idaho oceanfront property are another unthinkable thinkable.

So now that your mood is brightened, I've got something to ask. First here's the situation: Let's say you're cold and hungry, the power's out, the streets are too dangerous for travel, and you've got two neighbors. On one side is a beautiful compassionate, broad-minded person — your best and dearest friend who's in the exact same boat as you. On the other side is a grumpy guy with a bad attitude, weird political beliefs, and a basement full of nonperishable food, drinking water, a diesel power generator, and weapons and ammunition to make sure it all stays right where it is. The question is who are you gonna call? Got a new best friend? Be honest.

Orlando: How I spent my Thanksgiving break

Two weeks ago I boarded a plane for Orlando, Fla., leaving the remnants of "Ice Storm '96" in my wake.

I went to attend a college journalism conference and learn about things I could do to continue to make this paper better.

I participated in several interesting workshops on a variety of topics such as design, photographic styles and ethics, effective staff coordination, legal issues, the role of the student newspaper as well as others.

The prevailing thought I left Florida with was that we have come a long way in the past semester, but that we still have a lot of work to do.

Next semester I am implementing changes in most of the aspects of the paper, and hopefully they will serve to produce a more readable and visually appealing product.

I want to remind the readers, yet again, that their input is important. You can send a letter to the editor, an informal letter, e-mail, a phone call, or stop by the office and let us know what you think of the Argonaut and any changes or improvements you'd like to see. We'd also like to know what we're doing right.

And please remember that name-calling and deconstructive criticism don't help anyone.

You'll also notice that there was a recruiting ad in the last issue as well as in this one. All positions are open, and everyone is encouraged to apply. Even if there isn't a paid position available to you, we are always looking for interesting material to publish — so submit something to News or Opinion, a review to our entertainment section or the story of an interesting trek to the outdoors. And of course, we have a creative writing/art page that is intended for the use of any and all students who are interested.

So in the meantime, try to get through finals and winter. I'll survive both with warm memories of sunbathing under palm trees and 60-degree nights. Gosh, life is just hell sometimes.

Where's Ronco when paradigms need opening?

Gary Larson said it the best when he gave the caption "Full Moon and Empty Head" to one of his cartoons. We humans, as you know, have great capacity for rational thought, yet are the only beings on the planet who routinely choose to ignore the capacities we have.

For instance, a university student sees two policemen enter the Student Union at approximately 12 noon and order hamburgers and french fries. He cannot figure out why these officers are wasting their time and taxpayers' money in such a flagrant manner and questions their dedication to the public they are paid to serve. How could they dare, he wondered, park their car in the fire lane and waste 30 minutes of their time greedily consuming sundry fatty foods?

Perhaps what this person considered a violation of civil liberty, the police simply considered lunch. Had they parked in a spot traditionally reserved for student vehicles, that would have been an even grosser abuse of said power. Ordinary citizens park in the fire lane and are surprised when their vehicles are gone when they come out of the building. That's abuse of power, too, or so they say.

Of course policemen, like the

Pas d'ardouilles ici

rest of us, are not perfect. Many of them in their zeal to enforce the law make themselves appear to be on vendettas that make that of Les Miserables' Javert look like a simple traffic stop.

For instance, a certain person was stopped on U.S. 20 in Madison County because one of the headlights on her car was out. Her eyes, due to Graves' Disease (which afflicted the bug-eyed Marty Feldman) are not normal in appearance, so the police automatically assume drugs are involved. The car is searched and the prescription medication used to treat the disease is discovered.

To complicate matters, this person had begun only two days before at a new job, and restrictions on her drivers license do not indicate the change. This paperwork discrepancy combined with the suspected drug use earns this person a night in jail.

That this person is trying to put her life together after committing some mistakes she regrets is not taken into consideration by the arresting officers.

"Police are heartless," she told the judge.

The arresting officers complained, asking, "Who else do you think will come out and help you when you're in an emergency?"

"Who else," she retorted, "is paid to do just that?"

We as citizens complain of abuses of power, of time, of money on the hands of those we pay to protect us. Sometimes we're right. Sometimes we're wrong. That's because cops and citizens alike are victims of Full Moon and Empty Head: We exist not on earth but within our own minds. If information does not click immediately with what is the accepted paradigm in our own infinite universe which is the only universe measured in cubic centimeters, that information is rejected as pure fantasy not worth the time or trouble to interpret.

The citizen assumes any attempt at normal behavior on the part of a policeman (illegal parking, eating lunch, etc.) is an aberration which should be eradicated because it is outside the normal realm of behaviors we assign to the police, namely making sure other so-called rational beings obey the law or at least suffer the consequences of law breaking.

The police have heard every story and are weary of them. They are trained to look for certain signs of trouble and react to what they observe first and what is told to them second merely because to behave otherwise can lead to trouble. A policeman making a similar stop on the same stretch of Madison County highway was shot last year, so who can blame the police for being a bit overzealous?

Such individually canned paradigms do not lend to open and constructive discourse, and it is the rare person or the liar who claims to possess paradigm can openers. The rest of us are either full moons or empty heads.

Letters to the Editor

Vets should be honored publicly

Emma Saunders' Nov. 22 letter about how to "celebrate" Veterans Day was correct about many things, e.g., the need for respect, tolerance, and understanding. But you don't have to be "right wing" (or any other label) to appreciate the depth of sacrifice that some have made in war that makes it possible for us to live free, even to publicly express our opinions in letters like these. It is true war is ugly and should be avoided, but nothing can excuse overlooking the life-changing heroism of those called to the warfront while the rest of us stayed home safe.

How to honor our veterans? "Privately," as Saunders suggests? Absolutely not. PUBLICLY. How many of us have or ever will give life or limb for our fellow humans? We can never repay our veterans enough. Because of their actions, even actions they themselves may not have approved of at the time, we live almost as we please and many of them live in wheelchairs, or worse. Their lives will never be the same. The "rest of your life" is a long time. Think about it.

Regarding the German students on campus during Veterans Day: I, too, am part German and have relatives in Germany, none of whom would ask me to forego my recognition of our national heroes for their sake. None would change any important German holiday to appease me, an American visitor. Generally, it is the visitors who show tolerance for the culturally and psychologically important festivities of the country that has welcomed them.

Class suggestions for an alcoholic campus

I have been viewing, with much intrigue, the parade of arguments against removing underage drinking from the UI campus. Since opinions have already accumulated like empty beer bottles in a Greek Row dumpster, I thought it appropriate to toss another on the pile.

I agree with your recruiting strategy analysis (Nov. 12). Today, Idaho is well known only for russet potatoes, neo-nazis and retired L.A. police detectives. In order to squash this negative image, I think it is imperative we promote this region as a haven for drunk college students. We would best accomplish this by developing a core curriculum in Alcohol Consumption. Below is a proposed list of courses developed while quaffing cold home brew:

- ALC 101: Keg Tapping for Freshmen
- ALC 102: Introduction to Binge Drinking
- ALC 151: Contemporary Fluid Consumption
- ALC 201: Sophomore Straight Shots (requires concurrent enrollment in ALC 202)

- ALC 202: Hit and Run Driving Laboratory
- ALC 273: Practical Spouse and Family Abuse
- ALC 285: Introduction to Denial
- ALC 307: Advanced Denial and Irrational Argument
- ALC 350: Special Topic: Fortified Wines on a Budget
- ALC 361: Chronic Diseases for Alcoholics
- ALC 499: Seminar in Narrow-Minded Thought

We need to seize this opportunity to remake the campus after our own likeness. I believe that these modest proposals will attract many more underage drinkers to our campus and help us escape the unrelenting burden of our current ugly stereotype. After all, only dweebs come here to study.

3-1 Vandals ready for tough weekend

Mark Vanderwall
Sports Editor

What a difference a point can make. If not for a one-point loss to New Mexico, this year's Idaho Vandals would be 4-0 entering tonight's University Inn Tournament. This year's field looks like a group of powerhouses, as Kansas State and the University of Texas-El Paso enter action undefeated. The Vandals face the other tournament member of Eastern Michigan who will come to Moscow with a 1-2 record.

Tip-off for the game between Kansas State and UTEP will begin at 5 p.m., while the Idaho-Eastern Michigan game gets underway at 7 p.m. These games will mark the beginning of a five-game stint during the next nine days for the Vandals, four of which will be in Memorial Gym.

Starting the season at 3-1 is a whole new experience for both Julie Holt and her Vandal squad, but one they wouldn't trade for anything.

"We are really competing this season," said Holt. "I think this will be a great display of women's basketball this weekend."

Leading the way for the Vandals is freshman Alli Nieman. Nieman is averaging a double-double, at 15 points and 11.5 rebounds a game.

Three other Vandals average in double figures, as Ari Skorpik and Michelle Greenwood average just over 11 points a game apiece, while Kelli Johnson pitches in nearly 10 points a game.

Idaho is far from a one-dimensional team as the statistics may show, but what they don't show is that Idaho plays an average of 10 different players a game. This allows Idaho to play a different style of ball from past years, and allows them to wear other teams down in the process.

"We play 10 different girls every game," said Holt. "Eastern

The University of Idaho men's basketball team lost an emotional game Tuesday night at the University of Washington.

The Vandals stayed with the Pac-10 Conference Huskies until the final 2 1/2 minutes when two technical fouls put them farther down than they could recover from and the result was a 68-52 loss at Hec Edmundson Pavilion.

"I feel so bad for our guys," said Idaho coach Kermit Davis, whose team suffered its third successive road loss against one home victory. "They just battled and battled."

The Vandals led 31-30 as the game entered the second half. Neither team could take control until 2:46 remained when Idaho was assessed a technical foul for having six players on the court. Jamie Booker made both free throws for a 54-47 Husky lead then Washington scored on its next possession to go up 56-47.

Derrick Elliot brought the Vandals back to within six with a 3-point goal with 2:16 remaining but Chris Thompson answered with a field goal and a free throw for a 58-50 UW lead. Elliot then was called for a technical foul and the ensuing free throws put the Huskies up 60-50 with 2:09 to play.

Washington then outscored Idaho 8-2 in the final two minutes to improve to 3-0. Idaho is 1-3 and headed to Pocatello for a Thursday night game against Idaho State University.

"The game just got out of whack," Davis said. "It got so screwed up I can't hardly remember the plays. All I remember is it was a very good college basketball game. Our team played hard and executed the plays."

Even without the injured Kevin Byrne, who sprained his left ankle last Saturday at Southwest Missouri State, the shorter Vandals managed to contain UW's 7-1 Patrick Fenerling, 7-0 Todd MacCulloch and 6-9 Mark Sanford. Between them, they combined for 23 Washington points (Fenerling 6, Sanford 4, MacCulloch 13).

Idaho was led by Elliot and Reggie Rose with 13 points each and Jason Jackman with 12 points.

"You just want a chance to win the game in the last three and a half minutes," Davis said. "That's part of the road. You've got to overcome it. You have to put it behind you."

Don't forget to catch your Idaho Vandals on the court in the Kibbie Dome for their second game in front of the home crowd. Idaho will be returning home to take on Simon Fraser under the Kibbie lid Sunday afternoon at 3 p.m.

AKLs place third in San Diego

Damon Barkdull
Staff

In California, the state of Idaho is referred to as a haven for disgruntled Los Angeles police officers who want to begin a career in potato farming.

Over Thanksgiving Break, a flag football team from the University of Idaho left the Sunshine State with a different image of Idaho: a state with competitive athletics and a knack for winning.

On Nov. 22-23 Alpha Kappa Lambda fraternity of UI rolled through its competition en route to grabbing a third-place trophy in the Nike Collegiate Flag Football Tournament at the University of San Diego.

Teams from schools such as USC and the University of Arizona competed in the 29-team regional flag football tournament. The top three schools from every university in the West were invited to compete in this event.

In the consolation game, AKL defeated the Wild Turkey's of Cal-Poly SLO by a score of 14-7 and secured the third-place trophy.

"I learned our intramural program here is very competitive in this region," said Jim "G-pa" Paterson, the team quarterback. "We're every bit as good as any of those teams and we're excited about next year."

Idaho was the only male collegiate team from the Northwest. Boise State University did, however, send a women's team which ended up taking first place in the tournament.

The Nike Tournament takes the top three finishers from each regional and makes them eligible for the national tournament in New Orleans over Christmas Break. However, because of lack of funding, Paterson says that UI won't be competing in the event.

"We can go to Nationals but the big thing is money," Paterson said, who won the individual sportsmanship award in San Diego. "I'd like to take a team from UI but it costs too much if you consider gas money and everything."

Although the AKL team most likely won't be heading to New Orleans, Paterson said he gained some valuable experiences during the tournament.

"There's a team down there from the University of Arizona called the Tribe. They run their offense like a rugby team," Paterson said. "I've never seen anything like it before in my life. It takes quick athletes to run that offense."

Likewise, the AKLs impressed many teams with their spread offense and stifling defense.

In their first game, the UI squad shook off the pre-game jitters and routed Cal-Poly SLO by a score of 26-0, which is a mercy rule. Then, against an all-star team from the University of Arizona, the AKLs again scored big with a 25-6 pummeling.

The AKLs put Idaho on the map in the third game, literally.

"We played a team from San Bernadino, they were really good," Paterson said. "They were African-American and to them, we looked like a bunch of small, pale-looking, group of geeks. They asked us where Idaho was and if it was near Iowa or Ohio. They asked us if we played any football in Idaho."

Paterson soon answered their question with a 33-0 shellacking.

"It was good public relations. We talked to them a lot and they said they were going to use some of our plays back in San Bernadino," Paterson said.

"I liked going down there and realizing we could play with anyone," said freshman Brian St. Peter, one of the team's offensive linemen.

After three back-to-back games, with the only rest coming in the form of running to the next field, the AKLs soon wore out in the warm weather.

In the next game, the UI squad barely escaped the SAEs of Cal-Poly SLO by a score of 18-14 and later ran out of steam against the eventual regional champion, Cal-State Fullerton. The AKLs lost 14-7 to CSFU in the mid-afternoon sun.

"I think the big factor was fatigue," Paterson said. "We played a lot better down there than we did here during intramurals but we just weren't used to the sun after being in the snow. By then I was tired mentally. We had a chance to win the game. In the future we'll know you have to be in good shape."

And while most teams carried 16 guys on their roster, UI had only 10.

"I'm not making any excuses," Paterson said.

In the last game of the day, AKL finally gathered enough energy to win the consolation game and the third place trophy.

Although, next year Paterson would like to see more teams from Idaho make the journey to compete.

"Honestly, I think the Fijis (Phi Gamma Delta, who finished second in UI intramural football) would've done well," Paterson said. "I'd like to send more than one team from Idaho in the future."

Professional hoops now include women

Kindra Meyer

Move over big boys, make way for the ladies. Yes it's finally here. The highly anticipated professional women's basketball season is in full effect.

For those of you who are tired of seeing players stand around on defense, testosterone-pumped flagrant fouls, and more tattoos and hair colors than a sidewalk freak show, I suggest you tune into a refreshing breed of basketball. Dedicated, talented, muscular and sweaty, the American Basketball League's players promise a bright future.

Springing into action about a month ago, the league is composed of teams such as Atlanta, Portland, Colorado, Columbus, New England, Seattle, San Jose and Richmond.

In comparison to their male counterparts such as Shaq and Jordan, these women will be bringing home table scraps. While top NBA stars rake in 10s of millions per year, these female competitors will only be pulling in a little over 100,000 for their first year at the office. Although this figure seems meager in comparison, it is sure to grow once a network of fan support appears for the league.

After two prior failed attempts at embarking on this sort of endeavor, the big scorers were lured back to the United States after commanding six-digit salaries in pro leagues overseas. Even in the overcrowded professional mainstream, with the help of exceptional Olympic gold medalists such as Dawn Staley, Rebecca Lobo, Lisa Leslie and Sheryl Swoopes, the ABL is sure to have staying power.

At 5-foot-6 Staley's intimidation factor is less than overwhelming ... that is until she breezes by you with a fake, and then precedes to dish out a no-look pass for the basket. This "unstately" wonder guard truly appeared larger than life when Nike depicted her in a 100-foot tall mural which spanned an entire building wall in her hometown of Philadelphia.

Lobo has become one of the first few female hoopsters recognized solely by last name. This very well may be credited to her outstanding 1995 season at UConn, where she led the team to a national championship, and held an undefeated record.

Center Leslie friendly reminds opponents to "stay outta her kitchen" as she powerfully leaps, extends, and yes boys, dunks the ball. Standing at 6-foot-5 she lets her presence be known down low, and although she enjoys playing ball with the boys, stresses that doesn't mean she acts like them.

Jordan discovered the hard way how it felt to have "Swoopes upside ya head" when she challenged him to a friendly game of one on one. Even he had to dole out props to the hoop star, and told her afterwards, "Girl, you can play!" Now hoping to earn not only respect, but her keep, Swoopes is capitalizing on all her hard work. Just like Mike, she too has her own Nike basketball shoe — Air Swoopes — and happily endorses everything from ankle braces to cereal.

It's about time that these fine athletes have a chance to do what they love in their home country. With any luck, the ABL will prove that the third time's a charm, and we can enjoy watching these talented women for years to come. Games are being televised on cable's Sports Channel, so tune in and show them some support.

'America's Team'?

Nate Peterson

There are some people in our society who often choose to break the rules without regard to any consequences they may face and no matter how severe and devastating they may be.

For All-Pro defensive tackle Leon Lett, the rules he chose to break will cost him and the Dallas Cowboys heavily.

Lett, one of the premier players for the Cowboys, was suspended by the National Football League for a minimum of one year Tuesday for violating the league's substance-abuse policy.

The loss of Lett brings irreparable consequences for the Cowboys who currently are the top-ranked defense in the league. Lett's absence seriously hampers his team's chances at a fourth Super Bowl in five years.

Lett tested positive for cocaine, which is a big mistake in any line of business that you are in. It seems that Lett obviously wasn't too worried about the consequences his actions would've had on the team.

Already with defensive end Charles Haley out for the season, Dallas' defensive front will find it impossible rotating players and maintaining what has been one of the most dominating pass rushes in the '90s.

In his defense, Lett has appealed to the one-year suspension on the basis that proper testing procedures were not followed. Commissioner Paul Tagliabue, however, denied the appeal and Lett's futile attempts of an ethical defense.

This wasn't the first time Lett has bent the rules. Last season the NFL suspended him for four games after Lett's first violation of the league's substance-abuse policy. He was in turn required to undergo urine tests two to 10 times per month.

Some people like Lett just don't learn, or they are just too stupid to understand that when you do something like cocaine and you are a pro football player, people are bound to find out. Just ask Dallas All-Pro receiver Michael Irvin who spent the first part of the season suspended after getting busted this past summer in a hotel with drugs and prostitutes.

Irvin is the biggest reason that the Cowboys started the season 1-3. Dallas' passing game pretty much stunk during that time until Irvin's return. Now Lett is going to hurt the defense in the same way that Irvin hurt the offense. The Cowboys recovered from that debacle with Irvin and are now 8-5. One thing is for certain, if Dallas goes 1-3 without Lett, they're will be no time to recover and they will miss the playoffs.

Besides Irvin and Lett, America's so-called "team" has had a string of players that have been busted for abusing substances. Defensive back Clayton Holmes is currently suspended, and All-Pro offensive tackle Erik Williams pleaded no contest to drunk driving in '94 after wrecking his car. Williams injured his knee in the accident and missed the season as a result.

Maybe the Cowboys just aren't cut out to play football. Instead of football they could start a band up. They could be called the Cowboy Junkies. Too bad, though, that's already been done.

I guess I could produce a movie, starring Michael Irvin, Clayton Holmes, Erik Williams, and most importantly, Leon Lett. I'm sure I could give Barry Switzer a measly payoff to direct it, and give Jerry Jones his usual cut. I'd call it the Drugstore Cowboys. Unfortunately, that, too, has been done.

With no options for the Cowboys besides football, I think that its time for the Dallas Cowboys to retire, instead of insulting this country by proclaiming themselves "America's team."

•Eastern Michigan — Leading the way for the Eagles are the tandem of Traci Parsons and Tori Bergman, who together are averaging more than half of Eastern Michigan's points this season. The downfall for the Eagles, however, is its defense. It is allowing opponents to shoot 52 percent from the field, while allowing an average of 80 points a game.

•Kansas State — The Wildcats have two women who are averaging nearly 20 points a game in Brit Jacobson (19.8) and Andria Jones (19.3). 56.3 to 42. With only one starter over 6-feet, UTEP has done a good job on the boards. With four of its five starters averaging in double-figures and the outscoring of opponents by an average of 30 points, the Lady Miners' offense will be a hindrance to the opposition all weekend long.

Tha Doggfather takes us to Doggyland

Miah Miller
Staff

Brushin' off fleas, haters and doubts about the now-wounded Death Row Records is Snoop Doggy Dogg, with his second release, Tha Doggfather. But much has changed since we last heard from this laid-back Long Beach native, who had the whole world jockin' with his multi-platinum debut.

In just the past year, Snoop caught a murder case, lost his mentor, Dr. Dre, watched his label-mate and friend, Tupac Shakur, die, and saw the CEO/Producer of his record label, Suge Knight get hauled off to the pen for five to 10.

But despite all of the madness, Snoop managed to get in the studio and come up with an album that proves to be his best yet. And if that isn't enough to have everybody and their mother riding his jock, he's brought along DJ Pooh, Charlie Wilson from the Gap Band, and cameo appearances by Soopafly and player veteran Too Short.

This album also comes as a pimp-slap in the face to those who thought that Snoop didn't have a chance after he and Dr. Dre parted ways. Because he's proved without a doubt, that Tha Dogg Father is better off without him.

The return trip to "Doggyland" kicks off with the dark but funky "Doggfather," featuring Wilson's trademark buttery vocals and Snoop's laid-back drawl. And right from the get-go, we're slapped upside the head with whiny keyboards, breakbeats and shit-talking that ranges from boasts of being the biggest player around, to commentary on his murder case: "You know I ain't tryin' to floss, but murder, murder, murder was the case that they lost."

Too Short and Soopafly team up with Snoop for the Pimp Olympics on "You Thought," the best track on the album. Shit-talking over jumpy beats brings a smile to even the hardest of fools. Too Short asks: "Biiiiiiiiitch, what are ya smokin'?" And then enters the chorus, "You thought you had my grip, but Snoop Dogg never ever slips; You thought you had my cash, until I turned around and whooped your ass!" Needless to say, this is one cut that wasn't meant for the radio!

"Vapors" is a funky cover of Biz Markie's looney tribute to fame. Although this version isn't quite as humorous as Biz' original, it still boasts a bumpin' sample of James Brown's "Papa Don't Take No Mess," and becomes a decent remake. Greatly missed, however, is

Biz' crazy ass vocals and stutteringly spoken: "THAA VAAAAPORRS!"

"Groupie" featuring Tha Dogg Pound, Nate Dogg, Warren G, and Wilson, is another laughable cut about the mistreating of groupie hoos. But what's really on display here are the buttery-smooth vocals of Daz, Kurupt and Tha Doggfather himself. This track alone proves that these boys have earned their fame by displaying some of the most skilled flows out there.

Bouncing through your earholes with a funky sample of the Gap Band's "Oops Up Side Your Head" is the first single, "Snoop's Upside Your Head" featuring Wilson. And it's nothin' but a fat ass party jam! Beats thump and pound underneath Wilson's super-tasty crooning, while Snoop plays the role of resident player. Topics for discussion include everything from Dr. Dre's leaving of Death Row Records, the East-West Coast beef and the smoking of crazy glue. Crazy glue?!

Overall, this album shows Snoop trying to shed all of the negative stereotypes that have ridden him during the years. And does he does it well. His smooth, often laughable lyrics make for a well-rounded experience through "Doggyland" that proves to be worth the ride.

Rollins delivers cynicism as Spoken Word

Daniel Oexeman
Contributed Story

Assume for a moment that Henry Rollins is a musician; that his voice is an instrument. His repertoire is deep and varied, perhaps more so than many of the musicians he plays with. No single avenue provides him with enough latitude to express the emotion inside. Rollins ranges ever further along the roads of self-expression forcing his bag of self-examination and cutting social criticism.

The Rollins Band's latest release, Weight, faded as Rollins took the stage at the Compton Union Ballroom, Thursday, Nov. 21 at WSU. He was delayed by weather and the capacity crowd waited patiently. Certainly, Rollins appeals to a young, musically minded audience, but with his volumes of poetry, spoken word albums and recent spoken word tours he reaches a widening group.

Rollins veered between humorous recollections of life and apartments in New York and reflected on the population's seething anger. Tugging vigorously at a bottle of water, Rollins explained in funny and effacing detail the particulars of setting up house. Disarmingly, he described purchasing bath towels, killing roaches in the bathroom and battling with a vindictive radiator.

This is a side of Rollins not portrayed elsewhere. On the recently released Everything, Rollins recounts the ugliness of urban America, and he decries the bovine tendencies of the human race. With sparse saxophone and jazz percussion accompaniment, Rollins moves through depiction's of rape and murder; in a Darwinian sense he records the ever-evolving human form: a being that survives on beatings and mistreatment.

Rollins verged on the apologetic

Thursday night, explaining that he is a nice guy and painfully polite. Well into his two hour, 15-minute monologue, Rollins arrived at what he wanted the audience to understand: "People take time for granted," he said, "and this personally offends me." Urged on by the finite quality of his life, Rollins is a doer. He can't understand sitting in front of the TV,

"giving away your time" to some asinine program like "Baywatch." Rollins embodies action. He is cut and aggressive like much of the music he makes. from his stint with Black Flag to his role as prime motivator for the taut and muscular Rollins Band.

Rollins typically delivers verbal bombast. He criticizes the use and abuse of alcohol and drugs. At once, he appeals to an audience that thirst for change and radical views, but simultaneously alienates many with his intolerance for those who imbibe. The heart of Rollins' paradox is his appeal to the same audience entrenched in the use of substances that Rollins feels stand in the way of being the type of whole and intense people that he sees in front of him.

"You must think you're going to live forever,"

Rollins rages in a song from the album The End of Silence. Henry Rollins wants you to be all that you can be, soberly and aggressively overthrowing the numbing, mindless, consuming, lowest-common-denominator tendencies of society.

In the midst of recalling his affinity for many current pop-icons, from Iggy Pop to Ozzy Osbourne, Rollins told the story of visiting a leukemia patient in Australia.

Immediately, Rollins recognized that the young man facing death, was in the role of teacher. The boy's proximity to death placed him in a unique position to view life. Wasting even a second of life in non-thinking complacency is ridiculous to Rollins: his own life was changed a few years previous when his roommate was gunned down before him on their way back from the grocery store. Rollins urged, "Take your time seriously, and take your thoughts seriously."

Media machine graces Student Union

Justin Cason
Staff

There's something large and flashy by the food court at the Student Union, and it's not the arcade version of "Mortal Kombat 3."

The Interactive Kiosk Experience, or IKE, has been sitting outside the eatery's entrance for a large chunk of the semester, boasting a vast assortment of both national and local advertisements, as well as a large supply of information on the University of Idaho campus.

This media center came to UI two years ago and free of charge. Since then, it's seen its share of bugs and glitches, eventually culminating in the info extravaganza that Union patrons see when they walk in the building's southeast entrance.

Currently, the media database has seen mediocre attention among students. Most who stop and try it out are there to see what it's about or check local movie listings.

According to Student Union Director David Mucci, though, the kiosk should soon become a more integral part of student interaction with UI.

"It brings community info to the campus and also puts us (UI) into the mainstream with other universities," he said, adding that UI is one of about 50 other institutions implementing the media device.

Mucci also emphasized the importance of the kiosk bringing increased revenue to student media, in particular the Argonaut, which sells local spots on the IKE.

The most significant and interactive aspect appears to be the middle portion of the three-section center. This campus-related part promises to add on to its already large mixture of sports scores, coupons and discounts for local businesses, event schedules and other campus-related material.

For the time being, the IKE will remain at its locale on the south side of the union.

"This seems to be a space which lends itself to this purpose," Mucci said. Future sites for this multi-media experience, however, have not been ruled out.

Street Wank

This week, Slip of the Tongue asks people to submit the following: Who is your favorite superhero, and why?

"Michael Jordan. He had a rough time, took a break, and came back."

—Jared Gehring, sophomore, business finance

"Wonder Woman. She has cool bracelets that deflect bullets."

—Erin MacDonald, freshman, general studies

"Batman. He has a cool lab, and he's a regular guy on the inside. He doesn't rely on superpowers."

—Laura Heady, sophomore, criminal justice

"Batman. He does it all himself without any superpowers."

—Holly Schwager, Jr., plant science

Some folks appear to have a rather different view of who is and who isn't a superhero. But, until next week: Think you can do better? Have a question you would like to see asked? Send comments or questions to the Argonaut offices or brit9353@cs.uidaho.edu

Merril Bainbridge: Queen of Eclecticism

Amy-Marie Smith
Staff

If you haven't heard Merrill Bainbridge's song "Mouth" on the radio, you must not own one. Although you couldn't make this song more redundant if you tried, it's catchy. Bainbridge's vocals are also smooth and melodic.

The rest of her new CD The Garden, is less pleasant to listen to. A prepared statement from Universal Records prides Bainbridge with creating an album "full of melodies with hidden lyrical meanings and rich baroque textures."

This description is a very polite way of saying that this CD is as random as hell, this reviewer would describe the disc as a musical nightmare requiring a large dose of Excedrin.

The problem with this CD is definitely not the vocals — they're great. Bainbridge, a native of Melbourne, Australia, began singing in school choirs. By 18, she was playing in cover bands, and also got some work as a session singer. This helped her acquire the contacts to get signed with Universal.

What makes the disc so much torture to endure is the instrumentation. Did I mention how random this album is? From one song to the next you are introduced to another distinct sound. That fact makes the CD sound more like a compilation of various artists rather than a production from one singer/song-writer.

The introduction to one of Bainbridge's songs is loud feedback — painful — while still another song's beginning sounds like hippie-guitar you might recall from the songs of the late '60s, early '70s.

It shouldn't go unnoticed that Bainbridge wrote all but one of the selections on The Garden. Several songs were co-written with various groups and individual artists. Track seven, "Sleeping Dogs," contains a bridge from the Bee Gees' 1969 hit, "I Started A Joke." (Remember

Today is the last day in our week of HIV/AIDS awareness. Many groups have ongoing awareness of this deadly virus, and are doing all they can to raise money for the research on how to cure it.

Red Hot + Rio, one in a series of discs donating proceeds to AIDS research, is a compilation of tunes guaranteed to make you want to grab your maracas and boogie down.

OK, the disc isn't all that moving. It is, however, for a good cause.

The mood of all the 21 tracks on this disc can be summed up in the No. 5 song by Crystal Waters, "The Boy From Ipanema." (Remember "Pure Love"?)

Waters' remake of "The Girl From Ipanema" we've all heard — circa 1960s — sounds just like the original. Well, almost just like it. It's not much of a shock that other than the main character in the song-changing genders, the beat of the little ditty underwent a change toward a more techno/dance — yet Brazilian — beat.

That's the whole idea behind this new CD from Antilles/Verve Records. If you have ever been around an electronic keyboard with those preset beats, and have listened to "Samba," or "Bossa Nova," then you've heard the music from this CD.

That unique sound is only half of the concept behind the new CD, however.

Red Hot + Rio, is another of Antilles/Verve's productions offering a cross-genre grouping of new songs. Brazilian pop makes up the backbone of this compilation which also features PM Dawn and Sting. This group and artist sound, vocally, as they always have, only with a wacky twist of Samba we've not heard from them before.

According to information in the jacket of the CD, Samba, which gives Brazilian music its modern identity, is made up of several somewhat dissimilar characteristics. Samba is a mixture of African rhythms, Portuguese melodies, and Native American chants. Pretty hoppin' stuff.

The Red Hot series began in 1990. The first disc in this chain helping research and awareness of AIDS was Red Hot + Blue. Next came Red Hot + Dance, No Alternative, Red Hot + Country, Stolen Moments: Red Hot + Cool, Red Hot + Bothered, Offbeat, and

America Is Dying Slowly.

The inside of the CD has more than information of the artists and songs; they've included a moving statements against the disease they are working to stop.

"AIDS is not only a problem of certain countries or types of people. It is a global human tragedy of epic proportions; perhaps the worst health crisis the world has ever known. So much needs to be done that one pop album may seem poorly suited to the task. But music brings people together. The everlasting beauty of Brazilian pop is that it celebrates love with a knowing sense of its complications. The lesson we hope to share in this samba school is that although the language of love now includes latex, it will never end."

Get lit with five new smokin tracks

Mathew Baldwin
Asst. Entertainment Editor

Five Smokin' Tracks from... by Lit is tight, nervous, and energetic. It is Lit's newest and most promising release.

This EP is littered with variety from Lit's first track "Bitter," to "Stain," the final track of the disc. The music remains constant, at times becoming monotonous, but Lit is able to pull away from the downward slope of monotony, tedium and boredom by constant change in their guitar, bass and drum beats.

Lit's songs run in the vein of Nirvana. Their music is fast-paced, energetic, but not as distorted or convoluted as some of Nirvana's songs were. Don't get me wrong. Lit is not a rip-off band. In fact, their music runs the gamut of punk to almost, what would be called, standard rock. But that Nirvana sound permeates throughout the disc.

"Bitter" the first song on the disc, starts in with a repetitive guitar rhythm that fluctuates throughout the song, becoming a little more intricate than just strumming the guitar. The song remains fast 'til the end when Lit breaks into a chorus that is startlingly sober and clear in vocalization.

Lit does toy a little, but not too much, with feedback. They don't rely on it to give their music a semblance of cohesion. The primary focus of the music is Ajay Popoff's focus. The vocals don't really get on the nerves, nor are they astounding. Luckily they are not bad. Unlike a majority of indie and major label bands, Popoff varies his inflection from song to song. He does not stay in a certain form of singing: screaming, harmony, etc.

"Beginning," the fourth track, sounds like a mellower Korn: it is dark, but not too dark in the way the guitar and bass work, nor are the vocals melancholic, just angry.

The only song that really hurts Lit is "Stain," a cover of Nirvana's song. This is the song that deconstructs Lit's creativity. It is noticeable throughout their first four songs that they are influenced by the Seattle band. "Stain" is a decent cover, but it doesn't need to be on this disc.

It's a pity that Five Smokin' Tracks from... is only an EP. Lit has the ability to become a successful band. If they turned down the Nirvana influence a little more they'd have a different sound. At least they don't sing about heroin.

If you are interested in Lit, Five Smokin' Tracks from... can be gathered at any music store. But you will probably have better luck at RPM as opposed to Musicland or any other large chain store. Lit is off of Malicious Vinyl, an independent label out of California. Lit is also on the web: <www.dvinyl.com>. Pick them up.

The Garden is supposed to be full of deep meaning, about life and cross-gender relationships. On her music, Bainbridge says, "I've always wanted to keep it natural... If I want to experiment with things then I want to be able to and not feel restricted. I think the music ultimately speaks for itself."

Semi-decent tracks of the disc include "Mouth," (of course) "Miss You," and "Power of One." Again, I must reiterate how incredible Bainbridge's vocals are. She is an extremely talented individual.

The single "Mouth" was originally released in Australia in late 1994. It was re-released in 1995 and was Australia's No. 1 song for six weeks. The album was released in the country later that year and has since gone double platinum. Universal signed Bainbridge in the United States in 1996.

If Bainbridge gets another shot at a full-length album with Universal, hopefully she'll get some different musicians. It would be a shame for Bainbridge to not have the international success she deserves due to poor instrumental organization.

Shawn Rider

Assistant Outdoor Editor

Last spring there was a show on KUOI called "Naked Radio." It was one of the most popular shows I've heard, and they had legions of fans they called "Nakamaniacs."

So when I was thinking about what article I could do to help spawn ideas to alleviate the seasonal blahs associated with cold temps and gray skies, it was relatively easy to put two and two together: Students at the University of Idaho liked "Naked Radio" and they want fresh, exhilarating ideas to chase away the wintertime blues.

Go to a nudist resort for Christmas.

I'm serious. Naturism has taken off in the United States, and there are a lot of options out there for nude recreation. I'm not talking about some sleazy massage parlor or a swinging country club. There are a lot of opportunities to let go of the material world and kick back and enjoy some quality time. Naked.

Just last summer, nude resorts and clubs in the southeastern United States experienced a huge boost in popularity during the Atlanta Olympics. A lot of people from around the world don't judge nudity as harshly as we tend to in America, and were quite pleased to find that when all the hotels had booked up in Atlanta there was still plenty of room at nudist facilities. It's fitting because the original Olympic competitions in Greece were held in the nude. Legend has it that athletes began competing in the nude because a marathon runner was once tripped by his shorts.

Life magazine was also in on the nude Olympic kick with their special issue featuring nude photos of Olympic athletes.

The American Association for Nude Recreation, an organization that helps coordinate nudist organizations and set guidelines for nude recreation, applauded Life's spread as "a tasteful, positive portrayal of the nude body." This is the reputation the AANR is trying to promote, and they have been quite successful.

Nude recreation has made it big in the last few years. From Sports Illustrated to Newsweek, The Tonight Show to Good Morning America, the nudist lifestyle has been receiving positive reviews. There are over 200 clubs affiliated with the AANR, and 24 new clubs have formed in the past year and a half. Cruise ships have been selling out clothes-free and clothing-optional cruises, and nearly a third of their customers are first timers. Forbes estimates that nudism is a $120-plus million a year industry, and surveys show that about 40 million Americans have gone skinny-dipping before.

What's caused this change in attitude? Well, the average nudist would say that it's a result of people's increased tolerance and understanding that clothes do not necessarily make the individual.

When is it going to get to Moscow? It's already here.

The Running Bears, pun intended I'm sure, are a travel club that operates out of Moscow. They organize trips to hot springs and clothing-optional recreation areas. Basically, think of the Outdoor Program without the Patagonia shorts. Except the Running Bears also throw parties and other social functions.

The Running Bears aren't alone here, either. There are a few more clubs in Idaho, two in the Spokane area, and a lot more throughout Washington, Oregon and British Columbia. The Naturals in Spokane have a monthly swim at the YWCA and there's a landed club that operates during the summer months in the area as well.

So how do you work this into your vacation plans? The AANR can provide information about clubs and resorts around the country and point you in the right direction. Generally, clubs and resorts are members-only, although many will let you participate as long as you are a member of the AANR or another nudist club. A lot of them are family-oriented, meaning that there is a definite etiquette and certain behavioral expectations that must be followed. Nudist groups are interested in providing a safe and wholesome experience for everybody involved.

Don't fret if you are not a family. Singles are also welcome at clubs and resorts. A representative of the Running Bears said that they hoped for more student involvement, and would be happy to introduce UI students to the nudist experience.

The nudists that I've talked to are not focused on any kind of sexual agenda, but rather concentrate on a deep moral and political argument. The fact of the matter is, we as a society are sold everything, including how we are supposed to look. The AANR describes their resorts as places where "the only fashion is no fashion at all," and the Running Bears representative said that he felt people he meets at nudist functions tend to be "a little more in tune with the world." These are individuals who are emphasizing just that; they don't need clothes to make their image, and they won't be bought and sold by corporations telling them what is "in" or "out."

You can get in touch with the AANR at:

Denali preserve: help or harm?

Kevin Murphy
Staff

Denali. The name means nearly nothing to most people. However, it does mean everything to several wildlife species from moose to Dall sheep and beyond. The National Park is the largest continuously protective ecosystem in the world, yet it may soon prove to be detrimental to the natural behavior of some of the animals it protects.

Gerry Wright, a University of Idaho professor in the department of fish and wildlife and a research scientist with the U.S. Geological Survey hosted a lecture entitled, "Wildlife Management Issues in Denali National Park." Wright lectured on the potential impact of visitor usage of the park, and also gave a short history on the park.

Established in 1917, Denali National Park was one year after the National Parks Service was created. At that time it was named Mount McKinley National Park, though its boundaries did not include the entire mountain, and was established as a game refuge for Dall sheep, moose and caribou. When crowned Mount McKinley National Park, the area's size measured 1.9 million acres.

By 1926, a railroad and a new park road brought access to the park, where access was previously available only to those brave enough to hike their way into the area. A direct highway leading into the park was not begun until 1937. Quickly thereafter, another road gave access to Wonder Lake. During the early years of Mount McKinley National Park's existence.

The park was expanded by roughly 3.3 million acres in 1980, and the entire area was renamed Denali National Park. There are certain distinct areas of the park, now. Namely, the Denali Wilderness, the area originally named Mount McKinley National Park, which is set aside as an exclusive wildlife preserve wherein no hunting whatsoever is permitted. Sport hunting or subsistence hunting is allowed in other areas of the park, but are restricted to regulations set by the Alaska Fish and Game.

After 1957, the number of visitors to the park increased greatly, and later a system was enforced, putting a strict limitation on the number of visitors allowed into the park each year. Visitors are now allowed only 15 miles into the park. If visitors wish to go further into the park, they must acquire a tour bus ticket. It is this high influx of visitors that may be damaging to the wildlife within the park. Gerry Wright lectured on this aspect of the park's culture. In his lecture he made clear the high number of visitors may be harmful to the animals in the park. Although visitors are allowed in only on buses, are also allowed to leave the bus along the park road. They are allowed to walk along the road, take pictures, and view the several animals which may make their way alongside the road. It is possible some of the animals which frequent areas along the road may soon disappear due to fear of human interaction. It would be harmful to the animals to fear a certain place within their ecosystem. Researchers are now studying animal behavior in the park to determine if there are any changes in their natural conduct. When the study is completed, researchers will know whether the amount of park visitors is harmful to the animals behavioral patterns.

Another aspect being researched is whether some animals are using the park road or the visitors as a safety system from predators. "It's difficult to determine cause and effect," said Wright. "Some animals may get used to human activity." The prey may allow themselves to get closer to humans and further from their predators. Such behavior would disrupt the natural cycle of "survival of the fittest," causing an unnaturally high population of some animal species.

The one main problem, Wright said, against these studies is that it is difficult to determine what is "natural" behavior in some of the animals. Said Wright, "We don't know actual data because they don't know what the data was in the '40s and '50s."

Wright also explained that even though the park's attraction may prove harmful, there may be nothing to do about it. The park is, after all, an attraction — an area set aside to preserve not only wildlife, but to preserve the beauty of America. Wright backed up his statements by quoting an 1872 quote from a congressman: "Why establish a park in the Yellowstone region? No one would ever go there." Was he right?

Wright concluded his lecture with these thoughts on cause and effect, adding that we will soon know what effect visitors have on the wilderness and animals, and what there is to prevent any damage.
