

University channel shows six hours of pornography

UI's first and last porno

Knowledge TV was a titillating crash course in carnal knowledge last week when the University of Idaho's education channel broadcast more than six hours of hard-core pornography. The accidental show went along uninterrupted from 1 a.m. to after 7 a.m. on Thursday morning.

Teleproductions specialist Troy Murison got up and turned on the TV Thursday morning to check the temperature. He then flipped over to Channel 8. When his eyes clapped onto the rudimentary skills being mastered he ran to the station to turn it off. The technological peepshow came to a grinding halt at 7:20 a.m.

Murison explains the porno's premiere was due to one student's oversight and a lot of bad luck.

Channel 8 uses two satellite dishes to receive programs. Before going home Wednesday night, a student operator tried to do Murison a favor. He aligned dish No. 1 with the satellite that would transmit a teleconference at 9 a.m. the next morning.

"We usually don't set up that far ahead of time," explained Instructional Television Manager Dave Tong. "The student operator was going above and beyond the call of duty."

The student should have hooked up dish No. 2. However, Dish No. 1 was programmed to begin broadcasting Knowledge TV at 1 a.m. It turned on and found the channel it was joined to blank. When a channel is blank, neighboring signals sometimes leak into it. The dishes are set to auto-tune and they'll suck in the strongest signal they can find.

"It just happened to be adjacent to a transponder carrying adult material," Murison said. The channel with the porno had a very strong signal that bled into the surrounding channels. He explained scrambling kicks in only when the dish is tuned directly to the station.

Material swallowed up from an adjacent channel is usually very distorted. The picture is mostly snow. This was a vigorous signal. The images were grainy and in black and white. There was no audio. Murison said, "You could still see the information there. It was," he paused for a moment, "not pretty."

"We're all rather red-faced," said Tong. "Looking at the bright side, we verified we have viewers."

About half a dozen upset viewers called the station. One caller informed Murison that Thursday was a teacher in-service day. All public school children were home that morning. "I thought 'Oh No,'" said Murison. Early morning channel surfers may have received some extra schooling in

The Pi Beta Phi sorority raised nearly $600 for their annual Arrow Challenge philanthropy on Saturday. Fifteen fraternities paid a $40 entry fee to participate in relay games and events in support of the national Pi Phi philanthropy to raise money for the Arrowmont School of Arts and Crafts in Gatlinburg, Tenn. Arrowmont was founded to help underprivileged children.

"Pi Beta Phi was the first women's organization to have a national philanthropy and Arrow Challenge is our way of supporting our heritage," said Emily MacDonald, a junior who helped organize the event.

Fraternities that could not participate due to prior engagements, Kappa Sigma, Farm House and Pi Kappa Alpha, still donated the entry fee and bought T-shirts.

"It's nice to know they show their support even when they can't be there to participate," Tessa Iverson, philanthropy chair for Pi Beta Phi, said.

Activities included a human pyramid, a bat relay race, a "surprise" event, and an obstacle course.

"We tailored the events to the liking of the guys," Iverson said. "Arrow Challenge is a great opportunity for our house to interact with all the fraternities on campus, instead of just a few at a time. It's also a good time for them to interact with each other on a friendly, competitive basis."

Iverson said every year the favorite activity is the obstacle course. It seems to be a tradition for the fraternities to throw their coaches in the pudding slide whether they win or not. And the winners of Arrow Challenge, the Alpha Kappa Lambdas, didn't waste any time in doing that.

"The AKLs were a really enthusiastic group of guys," said coach Erin Brady. "They had their older members as well as freshmen participating. It was nice to work with a fraternity that didn't mind hanging out in the cold weather for a good cause."

Although Iverson was disappointed Arrow Challenge didn't take place on UI Dads' Weekend like in years past, she is hoping things will work out next year.

"It's nice to have parents at Arrow Challenge to see their students participating in philanthropies and the more people there, the better it turns out."

Until next year, the Pi Phis will concentrate on Links to Literacy, a service project that entails reading to children at the local elementary schools.

Enrollment Issue

Editor's note: This is part 3 of a 3-part series on the issue of declining enrollment at the University of Idaho

What are the facts on out-of-state enrollment?

ERIN SCHULTZ
STAFF

Yet another piece of the enrollment puzzle is the trend in out-of-state student numbers.

"We have had a decline in non-resident enrollment since the non-resident tuition and fee increase occurred in 1993," Hal Godwin, vice president of Student Affairs, said.

Prior to 1993, the total cost for many non-Idaho residents to come to the University of Idaho was less than staying at their own state university.

However, non-resident fees soon weren't enough to cover costs for the delivery of their education, Godwin said. When this happens, in-state students begin to subsidize for the cost of out-of-state students.

Late in 1993, a tuition hike was decided on. While both in-state and out-of-state fees went up, the increase for out-of-state students was greater.

Godwin said that many surrounding states have seen increases in their own resident fees lately, and it is once again becoming comparable for a non-Idaho resident to come to UI.

"We're treating non-residents as a targeted market segment," Godwin said. "We're going to increase marketing to them through letters and calling."

While Godwin sees fee increase as the most significant factor

Latah denies coverage for domestic partners

MOSCOW, Idaho — Stacey Chapman says she just wants equality in the Latah County Courthouse, but her efforts to add domestic partners to an employee's insurance benefits have been denied.

"We should include both same-sex and opposite-sex partners because the definition of the family is changing," the deputy clerk said.

"I think people need to be recognized that they're in a committed, loving relationship, whether it be gay, lesbian or straight," she said. "They consider their significant other their family."

Chapman's partner, Amy Wilson, does not need the coverage from the policy. The two were "holy union married" in 1992 before moving to Moscow.

The county's insurance contract with QualMed recognizes only employees, their spouses and children for health coverage. A spouse is defined as being in a legal union between two people of the opposite sex, according to state law.

The county commissioners voted against changing the policy to extend the options for benefits to Chapman and at least one other courthouse employee.

"It would just be a bucket of worms to start with," Commissioner Harry DeWitt said. "What's a domestic partnership? Is it same sex, different sex?"

The county pays an additional $62.50 per month for employees who choose to have their husbands or wives covered by the county policy.

"The Bible says God created Adam and Eve, not Adam and Adam and Eve and Eve," Commissioner Tom Spangler said.

Blaze burns 7,000 acres northwest of Boise

BOISE, Idaho — About 220 firefighters attacked a 7,500-acre wildfire burning through brush and grass today. Fire bosses got some relief from a storm system that was already dropping light rain on the area about 20 miles northwest of Boise.

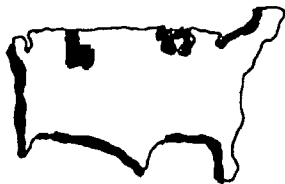

They anticipated the blaze would be declared contained this evening.

No structures were destroyed and no injuries were reported from the fire that started during the heat of Wednesday afternoon. But the old ranching and mining community of Pearl was threatened for a time before crews set backfires and cleared break lines ahead of the flames.

The Boise Interagency Fire Dispatch Center said the Highway 55 fire was man-caused, but exactly how it started remained under investigation. The fire began on private land about a quarter mile northwest of Shadow Valley Golf Course and was spread quickly northwest by winds whipping up to 30 mph.

After burning around Pearl after nightfall Wednesday, the fire began creeping north over Horseshoe Bend Hill and toward the Payette River along ridges and gullies thick with vegetation affected by winds throughout the night.

Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman Janelle Smith said 23 fire engines, nine bulldozers, two air tankers and three helicopters were assigned to the fire, with units from the BLM, Forest Service, Idaho Department of Lands and, Kuna, Eagle, Star and Middleton fire departments.

Man with AIDS accused of sex abuse faces more charges

McMINNVILLE, Ore. — A man accused of sexually abusing two boys and a mentally handicapped teenager despite knowing he had AIDS is facing additional charges.

Andrew Lee Boyer of Newberg was arraigned Friday in Yamhill County Circuit Court. He is being held at the county jail on $750,000 bail.

Boyer, 35, now is charged with abusing a 14-year-old boy and attempting to murder the mentally handicapped teen by forcing the 18-year-old to have sex with him when Boyer knew he was infected with the AIDS virus.

Boyer previously was charged with one count of attempted aggravated murder, one count of attempted murder, five counts of first-degree sodomy, four counts of second-degree sodomy and nine counts of first-degree sexual abuse. His trial is scheduled for Dec. 2.

Carroll Tichenor, a Yamhill County deputy district attorney, made a motion Friday to combine the new charges against Boyer. Circuit Judge John Hitchcock set a hearing on the matter for Oct. 10.

Boyer was arrested in May and charged with sexually abusing two 12-year-old boys in March in his apartment, according to court documents.

On March 18 the boys skipped class and went to Boyer's apartment, where Boyer fondled one of the boys, according to court documents. The boys told police that during an earlier visit to the apartment, Boyer also forced one of the boys to have sex with him.

A search later at Boyer's apartment turned up medical documents indicating Boyer was infected with the AIDS virus.

Trail linking Moscow to Pullman faces monetary hurdle

JENNIFER KARINEN

STAFF

The group building the Bill Chipman Palouse Trail is rushing to raise $60,000 more from private sources. The group needs to raise the money by December in order to complete the long awaited link between Moscow and Pullman.

"We're urgently hoping people will pitch in so we can get over this hump and get the darn path built," said Nancy Mack, who has been working on the project since its beginning 11 years ago.

The trail was supposed to be ready for use this fall. "Boy did we try hard," Mack said with a sigh. It could be ready for use by the end of this year. With winter looming on the Palouse horizon, it most likely won't be finished until next spring.

Money is the cause of the delay. Bids from contractors came in higher than was expected. The group now needs $510,000 in private contributions. They're almost there with $468,000.

Additional costs also came from unplanned expenditures. In some areas the builders had to construct a new track off the railroad line. Other funds paid for the havoc wreaked by floods last spring. The floods washed out areas under the tracks, creating ditches. Builders had to haul in rocks to fill the holes.

The trail winds along beside the Moscow Pullman highway, reaching from Perimeter Drive in Moscow to Bishop Boulevard in Pullman. It will be 12 feet wide with 10 feet of paved asphalt surface one-and-a-half inches thick. Mack said the original plan was for two inches of asphalt but they cut it down half an inch to trim costs. The trail is eight miles long and crosses over 12 bridges. Walkers, joggers, bicyclists, and skaters will use it.

The $60,000 will cover the cost for Phase I, the bare bones trail.

"We don't want people to expect it to be embellished" Mack explains Phase I is basic construction. Trail amenities will come in during Phase II of the project. Phase II ideas include rest stops, water stations, trail markers, and maybe even a rollerblade rental shop.

Support has spilled in from both sides of the Washington/Idaho border. Whitman County was instrumental in obtaining a federal grant of $900,000. This pays a large part of the total bill for Phase I, which now amounts to over $1 million.

In Idaho, funding has come from members of the community and the university. Linda Williams at the UI Foundation Office said the university has received $59,148 in contributions and $6,159 in pledges from 217 families. The ASUI Senate donated $2,000 from the General Reserve last October and is currently planning ways to earn more money. Residence Halls and Greeks in both cities have donated time, money and energy.

"I can't think of any other project that's raised so much community support," Mack said. "The state line is invisible."

Since it was conceived 11 years ago, the idea of the trail has faced down politics and convinced most members of the area it's a good thing. Mack hopes this is the last hurdle the trail will have to jump before its completion. "We said if this was a good idea, we were going to be able to do it. This was a good idea."

Mary Ann Boehmke, a reference librarian at UI, has been working to get word of the trail out to the University community. "Lots of people see it as a unifying project for the community." She said the trail's namesake really ties it all together. Bill Chipman was a UI alumni and WSU volunteer. He was a community leader in both Pullman and Moscow.

Still under construction, the Bill Chipman trail is yet to be completed due to lack of funding.

the birds and the bees. "It made me feel even worse," he said and added that hopefully it was early enough that most children were still asleep.

Murison said this is the first time something like this has happened in the three years he's been here. He said the student operators are very conscientious in general and he's very sorry this happened. He hopes better training for operators will correct any future problems.

other factors could be increased competition from regional schools, a perception of additional costs created by going to an out-of-state school, and a healthy economy causing some to choose to work now and go to school later.

Godwin doesn't anticipate any future tuition increases for out-of-state students beyond the normal inflationary increases.

Several out-of-state scholarships and tuition fee waivers are offered. This fall, there was an increase in the amount of scholarships given to out-of-state as well as in-state students, Dan Davenport, director of Admissions and Financial Aid, said.

"Scholarships increase every year with new donors and such...but a special effort is being made to award more scholarships to out-of-state and in-state students," Davenport said

When out-of-state student enrollment is put into the overall picture of enrollment, it plays one part of many. Currently, 25 percent of Idaho high school seniors who are college bound go to out-of-state colleges or universities. This is in comparison to only 8 percent in Washington and Oregon, said Bob Hieronymus, UI Director of Marketing.

UI is presently launching a five-year initiative to enhance the image of the university, called the "image campaign." The four components of the campaign are television commercials, newspaper ads, airport displays, and magazine ads.

Since the ads are largely directed within the state of Idaho, it is not a campaign for the recruitment of out-of-state students.

"This is not a recruitment campaign. It's not just about recruitment. This is broader...It's the beginning of this institution speaking in a public way about its benefit to the state," Hieronymus said.

The campaign will cover all of Idaho and the Spokane area. Full page ads for UI have already appeared in subscriber editions of northern Idaho and Spokane magazines such as Time, Newsweek, US News and World Report, and Sports Illustrated.

Content of the ads has been developed around a value strategy and three words: tradition, change and excellence.

Cost of the campaign totals $200,000 a year for the next five years. The money is not state appropriated but is coming from the UI budget. Since it is a new expense, some reallocations had to be made.

"This is an investment. It has to be looked at as that," Hieronymus said. "Staff, faculty and students have been overwhelmingly in support of this effort. Reactions of many people have been 'well it's about time.'"

Dispelling the diet-pill myth

Eating healthy still best way to lose weight

CANDICE LONG
STAFF

Many Americans believe thinner is better and people are basing their self-worth on body weight and shape, even if it means putting their lives in danger.

Whether it be eating disorders, such as anorexia and bulimia, over exercising, or taking diet pills, which seem to be the latest fad, people are hurting themselves to be thin. Fen-Phen is the prime example of a diet pill that does not emphasize a healthy lifestyle.

Fen-Phen was taken off the market Sept. 15 after the Federal Drug Administration conducted a study on the effects of Fen-Phen and weight control. Out of 291 people, 92 had damaged heart valves, which in turn led to fatigue, weakness, shortness of breath, and heart failure.

The so-called medical breakthrough in weight control was soon known to be a dangerous health risk.

"The FDA's decision to discontinue Fen-Phen is a very positive step in the right direction," said Heather Knox, a registered dietitian at Washington State University. "They sent a very negative message to women by allowing these diet pills on the market."

Knox said that Fen-Phen also had links to moods. Although it is unsuitably proven, patient feedback and reports show that Fen-Phen caused anxiety and depression.

Fen-Phen is a combination of the drug dex-fenfluramine, also called Redux, and fenfluramine. These two components control serotonin levels and allow a person to feel full after eating very little. It also reduces food cravings. Phentermine, on the other hand, is a drug similar to Redux and fenfluramine that remains on the market and is designed to suppress the appetite.

"I'm not all together against diet pills, they were just prescribed inappropriately," Knox said. "There's a difference between someone who is 15 to 20 pounds overweight and someone who is 300 pounds overweight. Obesity is much more complex and diet pills might be appropriate. Fen-Phen was described for people who weren't clinically obese."

"Basically, healthy eating and a healthy lifestyle are sometimes ignored and things like these (diet pills) take away from overall health," Knox said. "The first thing I say to someone who is looking to lose weight is increase your intake diet of fruits and vegetables. Not only are fruits and vegetables high in fiber and nutrients, they decrease the risk of heart disease and cancer. Weight control and a healthy diet should start there."

"The focus or highlight should be on healthy eating," Knox said.

Knox believes that health is the number one priority and if a person is looking to lose weight they must exercise and eat properly.

The recommended diet for healthy eaters consists of drawing 55 to 60 percent of energy from carbohydrates, 30 percent from fat, and 12 percent from protein.

"The reality is, any excess calories are stored as fat," said Knox. "But eating healthy things like fruits and vegetables can help fill you up and provide you with carbohydrates and they are our best source of energy."

Freshman medical students give WAMI high marks

JUSTIN OLIVER RUEN
STAFF

Some would say that University of Idaho medical students don't get the attention they deserve. But despite their toil in relative obscurity, this year's freshman medical school class gives their program, faculty and director high marks.

"I think part of the reason that we aren't well recognized is that (our program) doesn't have much interaction with other students," said UI WAMI Director Michael Laskowski. "We are pretty much off by ourselves doing our own work."

WAMI is an alliance of the states of Wash., Alaska, Mont., and Idaho to provide medical education to northwest students. The program takes advantage of the medical school at the University of Washington and students spend their first year of study in their respective state WAMI programs, gathering in Seattle for their second year of training and dispersing to their WAMI state of choice for their last two years of study.

Prior to WAMI's inauguration in 1972, access for Idaho students to medical school was extremely limited. Now 16 medical students enter the program every year at UI, paying $8,500 in tuition while the state of Idaho picks up the rest of the tab. This year over 120 students applied for the hotly contested 16 UI WAMI seats.

Though the freshman class recently finished their first exams, few showed any permanent scars. The group had high praise for Laskowski and the other WAMI faculty.

"I think the best part of the WAMI program is the small class size," said first-year student Matt Packham of Blackfoot. "I plan to do my third and fourth years of school in Boise and the program feels like an Idaho school."

"It's going to be hard to move my family to Seattle for the second year of school," Packham added. "But I think the advantages are worth it in that I can come back to Idaho for my training in rural medicine."

Laskowski believes that the small size of the UI medical program allows for more flexible, hands-on training. "We offer preceptorships for first year students, allowing them the opportunity to work with a local physician one day per week. We also offer a small class size which allows closer interaction with faculty, a plus in the first year. Third, we offer workshops in technical skills which would be more difficult to offer at bigger schools in subjects such as suturing, CPR, sterilization, and first aid."

First-year student Heidi Bendorf Chasan was eager in her enthusiasm for the preceptorship opportunity. "It is really amazing that we get to do this in our first year," she said. Other students must wait until their third or fourth year to interact with patients. "It gets us focused and out of the classroom."

Despite the 26 credit load their first semester, Laskowski describes the WAMI freshmen as "a very outgoing, bright, sociable group. For the first time, the first-year students have asked what they can do in the community for volunteerism. They are also very supportive of each other and I've watched them help each other through our recent exams. The students help each other, that's why we have no need for tutors."

Despite their education in Idaho, only 35 percent of UI WAMI students remain to work in the state. Laskowski notes that most attain residencies outside of Idaho, and choose to work near where their residency was completed. "The purpose of the WAMI program is to have access for Idaho students to medical school." He notes that the urgent need for rural Idaho doctors has mitigated in the last five years. "Aggressive recruiting programs, combined with an exodus of Californian doctors seeking to avoid managed care, have improved our state situation."

Coop-Ed program offers students opportunities, support

DEVON HAMMES
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

The University of Idaho Cooperative Education Program will host a presentation about internships in the Boise area titled "Do You Want an Internship in Boise?" Thursday in the Student Union Gold Room from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m.

"Since Boise is the largest metropolitan area in the state of Idaho with many corporate headquarters and one of the fastest growing areas of the state," Alice Pope Barbut, director of Cooperative Education/Service

Learning, said, "it is important for us to make students aware of the many opportunities there for internships."

Barbut said the program assists students in preparing for the interviews, critiques resumes and advises participants on internship strategies.

"We help students find academically relevant internships to help them find out more about career interests, develop skills in area of interests and learn about the world of work before they graduate," Barbut said.

The Cooperative Education Program has placed students with internships in a wide variety of fields, such as political science, graphic design, architecture, public relations, finance, engineering, computer science, and resource recreation and tourism.

Barbut explained that the qualifications for interning vary because they are set by the organization for which the student would intern but to be involved in the Cooperative Education Program students must be in good academic standing.

"We really encourage students to participate in our program and take advantage of what we have to offer," Barbut said. "It's a good place to start and learn what opportunities are out there."

She said of the 700 students who were registered in last year's program, 360 students placed in internships all across the nation, representing every college in the university.

Christine Allen, senior accounting major, participated in the program and interned as a management trainee in Mervyns. She said the internship has helped her prepare for her future because when she is asked about previous work experience during interviews, she is able to tell them about her internship.

Allen said she has benefited from the Cooperative Education Program.

"It gave me my first on the job experience, and they helped me with my resume, cover letter and prepared me for my interview. They were just great," she said. "Not only that, they offered me encouragement the whole time."

For more information, stop by the Cooperative Education Office located in the Education Building Room 204. The phone number is 885-5822 and the e-mail address is ccoped@uidaho.edu. The program also has a website, located at <http://www.uidaho.edu/cooped>.

Grizzlies need habitat in Idaho

WADE GRUHL
COLUMNIST

We are very fortunate to live where we do. Most settlements can only dream about the wide-open spaces, crystal-clear mountain streams, relatively abundant wildlife, and unlimited outdoor recreational opportunities available to us. What the benefits of living in such a fantastic place as Idaho comes the responsibility to care for, protect, and enhance our home. One way to take action towards this responsibility is to support current efforts to reintroduce grizzly bears in central Idaho.

Roughly 1,000 grizzlies inhabit the lower 48 states. Scientists believe at least 1,000 bears are required for long term viability of the species. Most of the 1,000 bears in the lower 48 are in the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem and the Yellowstone Ecosystem. The long term viability of these unconnected populations is threatened by interbreeding, and the genetic complications that go with it. That is why it is essential that grizzlies be reintroduced to the Salmon Selway Ecosystem in central Idaho. The Salmon Selway not only supported grizzlies historically, but it provides large blocks of necessary unroaded habitat. Grizzlies in the Salmon Selway can play a crucial role in facilitating long term survival of the species by connecting with both the Yellowstone and Continental Divide populations. Once reintroduced, the Salmon Selway bears could provide genetic diversity to the Yellowstone and Continental Divide bears by breeding with them.

Some claim that grizzlies may harm people. This is true, but it is also true that people are in more danger when riding in a car than when increasing it grizzly country.

The big bear roadways in Idaho and it needs big habitat. It also needs linkage corridors to other subpopulations. This set of circumstances renders the Salmon Selway bears as the only potential vehicle by which a long term grizzly population may be sustained in the lower 48 states. Therefore, we have a chance to advocate for all grizzlies by supporting the Conservation Biology Alternative to grizzly bear reintroduction.

The Fish & Wildlife Service has released a Draft Environmental Impact Statement for grizzly bear recovery. The preferred alternative is the one supported by the Resource Organization on Timber Supply, which limits the reintroduction to protected wilderness areas, which is just one-fourth of the habitat available in the Salmon Selway Ecosystem. These bears would not have Endangered Species Act protection, and would not be connected to the other grizzly populations. That is why many of the world's leading grizzly experts support the Conservation Biology Alternative.

The Conservation Biology Alternative was designed with the needs of the bear in mind. It encompasses the entire Salmon Selway, provides full legal protection for bears, and links the Idaho bears to the other populations. Perhaps most importantly, it protects habitat by prohibiting logging and road construction in roadless areas of National Forests.

Grizzlies sometimes inhabit degraded habitat, but they don't prefer it. Studies have shown that slow grizzlies with cubs select roadless habitat, and that roads in Yellowstone increase mortality by five times. Much of the best grizzly habitat in Idaho is in unroaded roadless National Forests not far from here. The timber industry proves that habitat for its own desires, and that is why the "Timber Supply" alternative restricts the reintroduced bears to designated wilderness. The Conservation Biology Alternative, based on the work of the world's leading grizzly experts, recognizes the supreme importance of habitat.

Take advantage of this opportunity to defend the big wild and its biological diversity. I urge you to go to the computer and write a comment letter supporting the Conservation Biology Alternative. Send your comment letter to:

Thanks from Palouse Habitat for Humanity

On behalf of Palouse Habitat for Humanity, I want to thank the men of Sigma Chi and Alpha Kappa Lambda for helping to make our 4th Walkathon the most successful ever. Our business sponsors contributed over $8,000 and these U of I fraternities, along with WSU students, secured member pledges and community donations of over $3,000. In addition, they gave up two hours on a gorgeous Sunday afternoon for walking to help finance our next building project in Moscow. Their acts of kindness in support of our commitment to eliminate poverty housing and homelessness are gratefully acknowledged.

Wade has a good point

Jonathan Ness's attack on Wade Gruhl displays the arrogance of one who has never thought about his place in society. Does he really believe that people are poor because they don't want to work? And does he really believe that CEOs rose to their positions simply because they worked hard?

Believe it or not, some people are born into this society with all sorts of privileges and advantages. It's true that these CEOs had to work hard to make their privileges pay off. But it's equally true that for most people who weren't born white, male and middle or upper-class, hard work is a route to survival, not to prosperity. And it's often a precarious survival, at that.

The so-called "American dream" that hard work is all it takes to rise to the top is exactly that — a dream. The stories of Horatio Alger are the exception, not the rule. They are a myth created to justify the inequality inherent in a capitalist society.

Ness's argument doesn't stand up — not even well enough to write a decent letter about it. Instead, he must resort to name-calling and personal attacks. Finally, if Ness insists on attacking Gruhl, he should find better grounds than his grammar. After all, he's the one who decries the "inability to write thoughtful and intelligent articles." Using a letter to make personal attacks, not getting to the point until the last paragraph, and then dismissing an article based on a hackneyed and unfounded myth is not thoughtful and intelligent. Rather, it smacks of the arrogance of one who does not believe he needs to think about his own ideas.

Now is the time to make careful decisions

I find myself agreeing with J.R. Wright that now is a time when society must make careful choices to ensure that future generations enjoy their lives fully. Our society is presently confronted with many important choices in regards to population and control of the effects of this population.

But society must be very careful to avoid wanting the right things while going about this in the wrong ways. It is not an extraordinary stretch of the imagination in our present age to believe that we can colonize surrounding planets. It is not hard to see that we use the resources of this planet very poorly. To contrast our own society with that of neighboring continents it is even possible to argue that the U.S. is not fully populated. At a certain point in the growth of systems often cooperation and full utilization can lead in desired directions rather than the opposite approach.

In any event, the choices we make now as a society will bear heavily upon choices that will have to be made in the not too distant future. Personally, I believe that the existence of a Forest Service should be considered an ideal which exists for our future benefit. A guardian of the quality of life we enjoy that is the envy of the world.

The reckoning of our generation

J.R. WRIGHT
COLUMNIST

No more protesting. No more anger, no more shouting, and no more violence. At one point in this country's history, such tactics were not only effective but necessary. But the trails blazed by those who used their emotional will to move the social structure of this country have been fading away.

The fervor which gripped this country by the collar during the Civil Rights Movement and the Vietnam War implanted severe cynicism into this country's mainstream psyche. Before this time period anything and everything authorities said was accepted, for the most part. It was then, during the shouting and anger and rage of the 1960s, that everything was questioned and things changed.

Our generation seems to have nothing to fight for. No civil rights, no women's lib, not even a universally-accepted band to spend all of our time, money, and energy following around the country to have a good-old-carefree time.

I fear for our generation. If we accept the world the previous generation left for us, we will be living on our knees with nothing but tremendous suffering and pain as we try to correct the error of their ways.

They have already written us off, labeling us Generation X, looking at us, the students, as drug-using, sex-frenzied fools. So they taught us, as they were taught, to obey and fear God, and filled our heads with doctrine that had absolutely no bearing on our everyday lives. They taught us fear, and they taught us to be afraid. They told us that the religious institution was something we should turn to for answers instead of looking up to our parents, or our brothers and sisters, or each other. They said "follow this to penetrate you and fill your heart," and the entire time they had their hand in your pocket, taking 10 percent of all you own.

Students beware, we are being steered into a way of life that is based solely on earning money and the spending thereof. We are slammed with increasing fees at this university and given opiates and mental enemies to forget all which we suffer through. Shouting, protesting, or being angry about such things is only met with bureaucratic processes. They have learned to deal with radical activists who spend their time out on the lawn, holding up signs, chanting, and all the rest. They simply ignore the students. Or they just lean into us with the law, or give us loads of paperwork and a national address to write to if we want anything changed. Students are seemingly powerless, pounding our collective head against a wall that will not budge. Open, outward protesting simply doesn't work anymore.

All is not lost, however. A change has begun on this university's campus. There aren't any picket lines, there aren't any sit-ins, and not all students even know about it.

It encompasses students from all around the University of Idaho: engineers, psychologists, journalists, artists, writers, biologists, lawyers, political scientists, physicians, musicians, mathematicians, computer geinuses, and anyone that wants to change the way things are for us today. The numbers are small but we students are diverse and we are extremely intelligent. We are not underground and not out in the open. We students are not violent yet we are not pacifists. We are entwined in the very fabric of American life, controlling those tools by which we were raised—television, computers, radio, and publications.

It is a movement so young, so fresh and so new, that these old, stodgy controllers-of-our-lives haven't even been able to put a name on it. Desperately, those who have written you and I off simply as consumers want to discover the means to our salvation and what we have in store for them. The University of Idaho and the Northwest is the center of a youth movement so amazing and potentially so huge that life as we know it will never be the same.

Not unlike the 1960s, students are aware things have been changing for the worse. Only this time around things in the country are really bad. But the means by which we will get things changed are drastically different. Fight now students are working as individuals, doing what it takes to get what they want changed. Literature is being written, legislation is being formed and ideas are being transferred among these people. Some went down to Lewiston last week and proved the way for the grizzly bear to be reintroduced, others spent their time in some isolated room with some paint and a canvas, others worked on clearly defining their approach to battling our corporate government, and still others spent hours composing extraordinarily beautiful music.

The communication is open and the vision remains always intact. A new uprising is developing on American soil, and there are no commercials, no trendy spins, and no bayings of belief. No devils denounced and no gurus glorified. And if there is any dogma at all it's kept tied up under the back porch, where the old smelly hound belongs.

Gov. Kempthorne? Things point that way

BOB FICK

ASSOCIATED PRESS

As the former mayor of Boise and rising presence in the U.S. Senate finalizes plans for his political future, pieces keep falling into place that point to the Republican's return to Idaho.

GOP Rep. Michael Crapo surprised few on Wednesday when he said he planned to stay in Congress rather than run to succeed retiring Republican Gov. Phil Batt. But he left up in the air whether that meant seeking a fourth term in the House or taking over from Kempthorne in the Senate.

A week ago, Crapo, 46, hemmed and hawed when asked about whether he would run for governor even though it would mean an end to the weekly commute between his young family in Idaho Falls and Washington, D.C. But he was unequivocal about running for the Senate if Kempthorne set his sights on the second floor of the state Capitol.

Kempthorne, 46, said he will make an announcement in a matter of days. For more than a few Republicans, the sooner the better. Ready to run if Kempthorne does not are House Speaker Michael Simpson of Blackfoot, Senate Republican Leader James Risch of Boise, Lt. Gov. Butch Otter. Looking at a race with no clear front-runner are any number of others including Kootenai County Commissioner Dick Compton and former attorney general and unsuccessful Supreme Court candidate Wayne Kidwell.

Kempthorne finds himself in a position few politicians experience: having to pick between two top offices that are his for the asking. But countering the handful of reasons he might cite for staying in the Senate is a laundry list of reasons for him to become governor.

Economics seems to top the list of those predicting Kempthorne will stay in Congress where the salary will be just over $137,000. But a deal has been struck for lawmakers next winter to raise the governor's pay to $105,000 a year from the current $85,000 along with the free house and car.

Anyway you cut it, that combination goes a lot farther in Boise than $137,000 does in Washington.

Then there is the pension question.

It is not the windfall many think. Kempthorne was elected to the Senate after the extremely lucrative retirement system was dropped and members became part of the plan that covers every other federal worker. He will be vested in that plan at the beginning of next year and will be due about $13,000 a year in benefits at 65 for his one Senate term. The benefit at 65 after a second term would still be less than $30,000 a year.

The state's retirement plan would provide about $30,000 after eight years as governor on top of Kempthorne's seven years as mayor.

The fact is Kempthorne has wanted to be governor, and the real question he faces is, "If not now, when?"

The office is his now. If he stays in the Senate, he may not be at the head of the line in 2006 when presumably the next governor ends his two terms of service. Others will likely have moved ahead since he passed up his chance now.

A Kempthorne gubernatorial campaign also heads off the kind of politically bloody, divisive primary that could fracture the party and leave it with a weak candidate susceptible to even a near-moribund Democratic party.

Much of the pressure on Kempthorne to succeed Batt is coming from the legions of GOP rank-and-file who waited 24 years to wrest the state's top office from Democrat Cecil Andrus and want a sure thing like Kempthorne to keep it in Republican hands.

And few people believe Batt, who had only momentary second thoughts after making his retirement decision in June, would leave the office without some idea of the political ramifications. A lifelong committed Republican, Batt spent 1991 and 1992 rebuilding a state GOP that gave up the biggest Democratic victory in a generation.

And few people believe Batt, who had only momentary second thoughts after making his retirement decision in June, would leave the office without some idea of the political ramifications. A lifelong committed Republican, Batt spent 1991 and 1992 rebuilding a state GOP that gave up the biggest Democratic victory in a generation.

There seems little allure to returning, if possible, to the Senate where members elected after he was in 1992 would have chairmanships and seniority over him.

Staying in the Senate, where he is now a rising star who has gained the respect of his colleagues, would allow him to accrue the power that opens doors like the one that was cracked briefly during the 1996 presidential campaign when Kempthorne was mentioned for vice president.

But as governor, he has the National Governors Association and the Western Governors Association as national platforms. Wisconsin's Tommy Thompson, Michigan's John Engler and close to home Utah's Mike Leavitt are doing just that. But Kempthorne would move to the head of the class since he would be the only Republican chief executive who could also walk on to the floor of the U.S. Senate to talk turkey with his former colleagues.

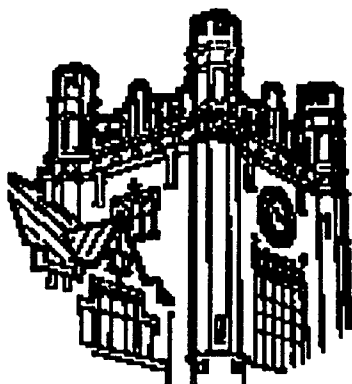

In the end, however, governor, like president, is the only political job in America where the only vote that means anything is the one the incumbent casts.

Andrus and Batt both agree it is the best political job available and the only one where the results were in their control. And that becomes even more meaningful in an era when Congress seems bent on turning over more and more decisions to the states.

It would seem a simple decision.

But then most people thought Batt would run for re-election.

Tibetan Monks spread message of peace

Perform ancient dances at WSU

AMY SANDERSON
STAFF

Bringing culture and the message of world peace with them, monks from the famed Drepung Loseling Monastery of Tibet will perform their sacred music and dances on the Washington State University campus Sunday.

The performance, "The Mystical Arts of Tibet: Sacred Music, Sacred Dance for World Healing," is the only one the nine monks will make on their fifth tour to the West.

The tour was created for three purposes: to bring awareness about the endangered Tibetan culture, to contribute to world healing and peace, and to raise funds for refugee communities in India.

The Loseling lamas will play traditional instruments such as cymbals, drums, long horns, and trumpets as well as perform their famed multiphonic singing. This tradition, also known as "overtone singing", is performed by each chantmaster who simultaneously sings three notes creating a complete chord with just one voice. Overtone singing takes years of training to learn to control the muscles of the vocal cavity and is unique to the five monasteries of Tibet.

A few of the masked dances to be performed include the Skeleton Dance (pictured) performed to remind people of the cycle of life and death, and the Yak Dance, symbolic of the rugged strength and playfulness of Tibetans.

In Tibet, people from villages and nomadic tribes would assemble in the monastery's courtyard during spiritual festivals for three or four days of music and dance. These dances were born centuries ago from visions of great saints and sages. The traditions were carefully passed to future generations in an oral legacy.

The pieces to be performed come from the long history of the Drepung Loseling Monastery - founded in 1416 - the home of the early Dalai Lamas. Along with spiritual and philosophical training, the monks also practiced these ancient performing arts.

The Drepung Loseling

Monastery, now based in India, was closed by Chinese Communists in 1959 after Mao Tse-tung's invasion of Tibet. At one time the monastery held over 10,000 monks. Those who were not killed or put into concentration camps escaped to India and reestablished the monastery. The lamas are traveling in hopes of gaining support from the United States to pressure the People's Republic of China to free the totalitarian control of Tibet.

"Their hope, I know, is eventually that the Dalai Lama could return to Tibet and reestablish the monastery there," said the performance's coordinator, Marty Mullen.

The group has visited over 100 cities in America and Europe and was made Honorary Goodwill Ambassadors by President Clinton. Although they should not be considered "professional" entertainers, the group has shared the stage at Carnegie Hall with Paul Simon and Natalie Merchant. Their music also appears on the soundtrack to the recent film starring Brad Pitt, Seven Years in Tibet.

The performance is free to all who would like to show support for the Tibet cause or learn more about Tibetan culture.

The performance begins at 3 p.m. in the Bryan Auditorium at WSU.

The Caffeinated Rants of

T. Scott Carpenter

Hi, I'm a worm

In the last issue of the Argonaut, I interviewed Mighty Mighty Bosstone sax player Tim Burton. My first reaction upon hanging up with Mr. Burton was to exclaim, "What an a—hole!" My reason for this feeling of contempt stemmed from his crabby demeanor and eagerness to get off the phone, which was apparent as he fed me a line about his cell phone batteries dying. Now maybe his phone was about to go on the blink — I don't know. It's just that under the circumstances of that moment, it seemed way too convenient for him. However, I don't blame him anymore.

Upon listening to the interview over again on my recorder, I realized that at the beginning, he was rather polite and somewhat humorous. Then I pinpointed the precise spot where Mr. Burton's attitude shifted from that of Johnny Carson to Oliver North. It all happened so quickly, I didn't even catch it at first.

After comparing the origin of the Bosstones' name to that of "suck-rock" band Better Than Ezra, I proceeded to inform him of how Better Than Ezra was hot stuff up here in northern Idaho. Bewildered by this, he asked if they were from up here or something. To this I replied, "No, actually I've been lying about the whole thing."

Judging by the way he said, "oh," I gathered he was not as amused by this as I was, which is something I'm used to. After living most my life as an only child, I've acquired the ability to be fascinated by the most mundane phenomenon. I'm reminded of the time my older brother got a sunburn in the pool and it became a game for me to see how big a sheet of skin I could peel off his back while he was sleeping.

Chances are that that vivid little flashback of mine just weeded out some of the more timid folk who were reading this out of curiosity, which is good. This column is not for the faint of heart.

Anyway, Tim Burton does not like to be lied to — this I learned. However, the 12-inch stake, which is my ignorance, was driven a little bit further into his spleen as I used the name of The New Kids On the Block in a derogatory manner. How was I supposed to know that they were his friends? I thought that they were all dead or something, seeing as how you never see or hear of them anymore.

Looking back on this interview, I like to think of it as an educational experience for myself. I have now set some personal rules for my future interviews, that I hope will make the result more pleasing to the senses. Hopefully they will also reduce the chances of me being picked off the street by a sniper.

1.) Never ask the interviewee an off-the-wall question unless:

a.) It is relevant to what they do.

b.) I think I can get away with it.

c.) It involves the word "monkey."

2.) Never lie to the interviewee for the purpose of making myself feel in control, and...

3.) If I do lie to them, DON'T TELL THEM SO!

A good example of "1a" would be "What's the largest creature you ever stuck in a microwave?" Unless I'm interviewing an appliance salesman for some reason, this question has no place in the interview, unless I feel the person would reply to the twisted question with an equally twisted answer. When I asked Tim Burton this question, I am sure he viewed it as a waste of his time. The quote that I got from him with this question was, "A white fish like a fish in there like a white fish." While I found this incredibly amusing at first, I realize now that he was stuttering, because he was amazed at what an idiot I am. I respect that.

In fact, I believe the only thing I did do right with the Tim Burton interview was the fact I did not go off on his name.

"So, what was it like to work with Johnny Depp on the set of Edward Scissorhands? Tee hee."

Hindsight shows me that this was a bad interview, and that it's at least 50 percent my fault. The other half of the blame, of course, can be equally divided among the members of Better Than Ezra and The New Kids On the Block.

Vandal defense ignites offensive attack

BRAD NEUENDORF

STAFF

The University of Idaho offense ignited Saturday, leading the Vandals to a 30-17 opening Big West Conference victory over the University of North Texas before 10,270 fans in the Kibbie Dome Saturday afternoon.

The Vandal's offense sparked in the second half after being carried by the defense in the first half.

North Texas learned early what the Kibbie Dome is all about.

The first half netted 16 yards on 26 attempts for the North Texas offense. Their only score of the half came after a 34 yard Troy Scott field goal attempt was blocked resulting in a 66 yard touchdown return for the Eagles.

Meanwhile, after a convincing first series going 55 yards in four plays ending in a 46 yard Jerome Thomas touchdown run, the Vandal's offense struggled.

Senior center Bill Verdonk went down early to an ankle injury, leaving four freshmen on the offensive line.

This created problems in the running game and put a lot of pressure on Brennan, slowing down the Vandal offense and resulting in only one field goal for the rest of the half.

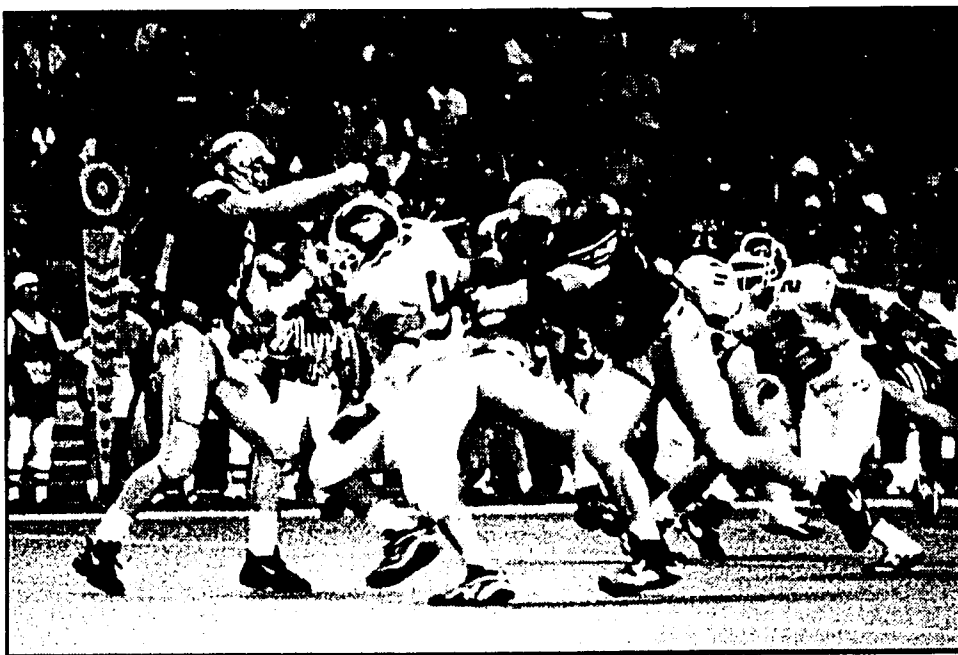

"I was pretty concerned at halftime — playing with four freshmen on the offensive line," said head coach Chris Tormey.

Idaho came out of the locker room in four- and five-wide receiver formations, with Brennan in the shotgun completing 21 of 28 passes for 286 yards in the second half. Brennan completed 34 of 49 passes for 396 yards and three touchdowns during the day. This included a 14-yard touchdown run that put the Vandals ahead 24-10 early in the fourth quarter.

With the spread of the receivers, the pressure of a very good defensive front was soon relieved and what remained was taken care of by the rookie line.

Brennan was only sacked three times on the afternoon, against a team that is averaging over five sacks a game against Big 12 schools—Texas Tech and 18th ranked Texas A&M.

"It was just a tribute to this football team the way they were able to hang through there and battle through adversity," Tormey said on the effort of the offensive line.

Quarterback Brian Brennan's line held steady for him Saturday, allowing the senior to complete 34 of 49 passes for 396 yards.

Antonio Wilson became Brennan's favorite target, receiving nine passes for a season high 125 yards. In many dazzling third down plays, Wilson led the Vandals second half surge.

"Our wide receivers just took over in the second half, especially Antonio Wilson," said head coach Chris Tormey. "I cannot say enough about how good he played...making critical plays in critical times, giving us a chance to move the football and go ahead." The Vandal defense never let up, allowing the Mean Green just 209 yards. Idaho's defense stance was led by James Durrrough. The inside linebacker had nine tackles, eight solo with four tackles for loss and three sacks. Durrrough's effort up-front was mirrored by the Vandal secondary.

Safetys Kevin Hill and Bryson Gardner not only shut down the pass but helped the rush defense also. UNT's quarterback, Jason Mills, completed just 13 of 25 passes for a mere 173 yards and an interception.

This interception may have been a possible turning point of the game when Mills was picked by Gardner early in the fourth quarter on the North Texas 30 yard line. This interception by Gardner led to a touchdown for the Vandals—increasing their lead to 14.

On the next drive, North Texas rallied the ball to the three yard line but Kevin Hill picked up the fumble by running back James Allred on the one yard line—ending hopes of a quick fourth quarter score.

A defensive combination that allowed just 42 yards rushing, 173 yards passing and just one touchdown, with an offensive arsenal that produced a season high 501 yards, combined for a team effort that was just as much for the mighty "Mean Green."

Broncos snap six-year losing streak, demolish Vandals in five

TONYA SNYDER

ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

The last time the Vandal volleyball team fell to the Broncos was years ago—1991 in fact, in Bronco Gym.

After 13 straight wins over BSU since that fateful day, Idaho looked to improve their phenomenal five-game road winning streak and notch a win 14 over the Broncos.

Yet, as the huge 1,333 crowd in Boise witnessed, the Vandals finally bowed to nemesis BSU, ending the six-year winning spree of Idaho in five games, 9-15, 15-9, 6-13, 5-15, 12-15.

"We always get pumped when we play Boise State," said Kyle Leonard after Thursday's loss to Pacific.

Unfortunately, there wasn't enough adrenaline to power the Vandals over a well-oiled Bronco volleyball machine.

Idaho came out strong in the first two games of the match. In game one, Idaho was out-hit at the net 13-18 for a .205 attack percentage while the Broncos came out on top with a .389 percentage.

In game two, the Vandals turned things around and came out strong. Both teams suffered miserably at the net in game two, with hitting percentages well below those in game one. Despite poor hitting on both sides, the score remained lopsidedly in favor of the Vandals as they stole the game 15-9.

It was in game three that the Vandals hitting woes came to a close as Idaho led the net attack for the only game all match as they squeaked by BSU 15-13.

The Vandals lost their fire early on in the fourth game, opening the door for BSU.

Early on in game five, Idaho looked to have things all wrapped up. BSU was down 6-3 before calling time-out in an effort to stop the Vandal rally. Two back-to-back kills by BSU's Becky Meek pulled the Broncos back into the game. The Broncos relied mainly on their superior court speed and hard play to pull into the lead. Julie Kaulius sealed the victory for Boise State with her game-winning hit 15-12.

Overall, the Vandals were outclassed all around. BSU dominated the majority of the game, surrendering only a small victory to UI in the way of blocking. Idaho set a total of 13 team blocks compared to BSU's seven.

The rest of the statistics show the solid teamwork of the Broncos. They outdid the Vandals 77-66 in kills, 61-54 in assists and 78-61 in digs. The list goes on and on, from service aces to overall attack percentage, BSU smoked Idaho in each and every aspect.

Jeri Hymas led the Vandals with 17 kills and a .318 hitting percentage, impressive numbers from a little-used senior middle blocker. Jessica Moore and Beth Craig were right behind, both coming up with 12 kills apiece. Moore also chipped in 13 solid digs for the Vandal effort.

BSU setter led the Broncos with 55 assists, nine kills and 10 digs. Outside hitter Becky Chilton added a total of 15 kills for an impressive .444 attack percentage. Chilton was followed closely by Katy Shepard with 11 kills and 19 digs.

The Broncos now stand with a

3-1 Big West conference record, going 14-6 overall this season. BSU is tied for first place in the Eastern Division with New Mexico State. Idaho falls to 2-2 in conference play for an 8-8 overall record.

The Vandals are back in action today at Eastern Washington at 7 p.m.

The 'Antonio Wilson Show' returns to Moscow

BRAD NEUENDORF

STAFF

Since transferring from West Los Angeles Junior College, senior wide receiver Antonio Wilson has caught a pass in every game.

In 16 successive games the receiver has come down with at least one reception, but has impacted the Vandal offense even further than that.

"I am going to continue to keep catching one in each game," Wilson said. "They could put all eleven players on me but I am still going to catch a pass."

Saturday he proved this, catching nine passes for a season high 125 yards to lead the Vandals past Big West Conference foe North Texas.

Last year, his first season as a Vandal, Wilson averaged 5.9 receptions per game, fourth in Idaho history. This year, he is averaging six receptions per game, placing him third in the Big West and 22nd in the nation.

This is the first time this season he has gone over the century mark in receiving. Last year he had seven 100 yard receiving games.

This change in yardage has little to do with Wilson though. With the new quarterbacks, Coach Phil Early and Brian Brennan balancing out the pass attack between his three starters—Ryan Prestimonico, Deon Price and Wilson, the Vandals have a receiving core that is going to be very hard for opposition to stop.

In a team effort the three have combined for 55 receptions, 746 yards and seven touchdowns in four games for the Vandals.

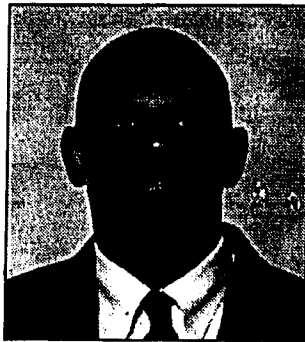

"It is a team game and I am a team player—it is not a personal thing with me," said Wilson on the distribution of the pass attack.

Wilson currently leads all Vandal receivers with 33 receptions and four touchdowns, averaging almost 10 yards per reception.

Wilson enjoys his leadership role as the only returning starter, helping out Price and Prestimonico on the offense.

"They have questions for me and I just try to help them learn the offense," Wilson said.

Wilson also had a chance against Idaho State to receive a kick. His 40 yard return,

It's a team game and I am a team player—it is not a personal thing with me.

— Antonio Wilson

leaving the Vandals in scoring position, places him third in the Big West for single returns attempts, behind Idaho's own Jeffrey Townsley and Matt McElravy.

Last year Wilson caught 65 passes, for 1,203 yards. His 1,203 receiving yards are the fourth-best single season effort for a team with a history of a relentless passing attack. He was rewarded for his efforts being named all-Big West last season and being a pre-season selection this year by The Football News. At his current pace of six receptions per game, Wilson will surpass receiving greats David Griffin and Eric Yarber for sixth place in total career receptions with 130.

Wilson opened his last chance for a Big West title with a very impressive outing and victory for the Vandals against North Texas.

The Vandals will now celebrate Homecoming in what should be a learning week against UC Davis before continuing their campaign for a conference championship, traveling to Reno to take on the reigning Big West Champion, Nevada, on Oct. 18.

Heisman hopefuls in spotlight

BARRY GRAHAM

STAFF

The Heisman trophy watch has officially begun in college football.

Yeah right, the Heisman watch began as soon as Peyton Manning decided to forego a chance at a big time NFL contract and stay at Tennessee this season. However, Manning lost a lot of ground with a loss to Florida two weeks ago and several other players have stepped up and are looking like contenders.

For one, you can't look past Doug Johnson, the University of Florida quarterback, who was instrumental in the Gators' win over Manning and the Volunteers. Johnson has quickly stamped his name in Gainesville and has put an end to the talk of not being able to fill the shoes left by legendary signal caller Danny Wuerffel.

In Saturday's 56-7 win over Arkansas in the "Swamp" in Gainesville, Johnson threw for three touchdowns. Johnson impressed many in the Gators biggest win of the season, the 28-20 win over Tennessee, on September 20, in which he showed tremendous poise and knowledge of Florida coach Steve Spurrier's complex offensive system. A week later, Johnson led the Gators to a rout over Kentucky. Johnson threw four touchdown passes in the first quarter of that contest.

What about Washington State's Ryan Leaf? Leaf had an average game against Oregon this past weekend but the Cougars won 24-13 in the hostile environment of Eugene, Ore. Leaf completed 16 of 27 passes for 226 yards and a score. A workman-like performance, not great but not bad either. Overall, Leaf has played solid ball all season and is the main factor in Washington State's high rank in the polls.

Leaf will have to continue to lead the offense and put up big numbers in order to be considered a Heisman favorite.

Tavian Banks slipped a bit as he was held to 125 yards under his average in Iowa's 23-7 loss to Ohio State on Saturday. Banks did run for a respectable 84 yards but when you consider that he leads the nation with 209 yards a contest, the Buckeyes held him in check.

Banks will likely have to put up even bigger numbers in order to get back into the race. However, that could be difficult as the rusher will have to explode versus a few Big Ten powerhouses in the future weeks.

Darkhorses Daunte Culpepper of Central Florida and Tim Couch of Kentucky had big weekends. Culpepper accounted for five touchdowns (four passing and one rushing) in the Knights thrilling 59-43 win over Kent. The game featured 873 yards of offense through the air and 10 touchdown passes. Couch led the Wildcats of Kentucky to their first win over Alabama in 75 years.

Couch passed for 355 yards, including a 26-yard scoring strike to receiver Craig Yeast in overtime, lifting the Cats to a 40-34 win. Couch completed 34 of 49 passes.

Braves will try to sink the fish

The Florida Marlins have owned the Atlanta Braves this season. Florida, which spent over $89 million on free agents and acquisitions before the beginning of the 1997 season, including manager Jim Leyland, defeated the defending National League champions in eight out of 12 games this regular season.

The Marlins think those wins are a trend that will continue in Tuesday's opening game in the N.L.C.S. in Atlanta.

The Braves, who have won an impressive six-straight N.L. East titles and have played in the N.L.C.S. every year since 1992, think that those losses are a mere coincidence. Atlanta is just itching to find out how much game the Marlins really have going into the most important series in their history.

In the regular season, Florida pitchers matched Atlanta's aces game for game and were even better. Can they continue that in this pressure packed series?

And the band played on

As the Vandal football team cranked out the touchdowns, the band cranked out the tunes — firing up Saturday's ravenous crowd of 10,270.

Can the Marlins manufacture enough runs early on to neutralize the Braves' vaunted pitching staff? Against San Francisco, in the N.L. Division Series, Moises Alou, Gary Sheffield and company welcomed the pressure with open arms while providing late inning heroics in the first two games of the series.

If the Marlins expect to win this series, the top hitters in the lineup will have to come up big once again. On the Braves' side is history and experience. Atlanta has been here before and has seen just about everything. Sluggers Chipper Jones, Fred McGriff and Ryan Klesko have to drive in runs while dependables Jeff Blauser and Javier Lopez must play steady baseball.

All stats aside, this series will come down to pitching and defense, which win championships at any level of any sport. Both squads have outstanding staffs from A to Z, which includes starters, relievers and closers. The defenses for both teams are solid. The edge may come down to Atlanta's experience and Florida's drive. Whichever intangible shines brightest could determine the N.L. representative in the World Series.
