Sewer backs up into students' dorm rooms

Damage costs estimated at under $10,000

DEVON HAMMES
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

The entire residence hall maintenance crew and many other supervisors and residents of Borah Hall worked until after midnight Sunday, checking all 526 toilets in Wallace Complex and cleaning the dorm rooms after the sewer backed up through toilets and showers and eventually made its way out into the hallway.

Staff responded to many calls throughout the afternoon from residents complaining about their toilets. It appeared the student's toilets and urinals would not stop flushing. The calls started coming in about noon, and maintenance crews were on the site within 15 minutes, Dan Schoenberg, acting director of auxiliary services, said.

"In the basement of the residence halls, there is a very old water filter system. The filter gasket broke, allowing sand from the filter to enter the water system and traveled up into fixtures such as toilets and urinals, and when they were flushed, it caused the drains to stay open, keeping the water running," Mike Sylvester, director of facilities management, said. "As more and more water entered the system, there was more water than the drains could handle."

caused the problem.

It is estimated that there may be less than $10,000 in damage.

"This is a preliminary number that we assessed when we notified the university's insurance company," Sylvester said.

Sylvester said the system actually started backing up around 1 p.m. after almost all of the toilets began flushing at once, causing the sewer system to overload and spill over into the rooms. The water was shut off later that evening after it was determined that it was indeed the filter system that deep cleaning the floors and carpets and using sanitizing agents to kill the germs.

Every resident of Borah Hall was evacuated and moved into various rooms throughout the residence hall system.

It has not been determined yet if personal damage caused by the backup will be paid for, but money has been put back into resident's accounts with which they can do laundry, Schoenberg said. He also explained that the students are itemizing any damage they have that can be turned in to insurance agencies, and they are urged to contact

Summit calls on Idaho to make commitment to its youth

JENNIFER KARINEN
STAFF

Northern Idaho leaders and teens called on all Idahoans to volunteer and better the conditions for Idaho's youth at a summit held yesterday at the University of Idaho. Conditions for children in the state rated below average in recent studies.

More than 200 people from mayors to ministers, from doctors to concerned citizens, attended "Northern Idaho's Promise to Children: A Kids do Count Summit" held in the Student Union Building.

The summit was a combination of two factors. It took statistics on the status of Idaho's children, gathered by the KIDS COUNT project and applied them to the President's Summit for America's Future. The president's summit outlined five fundamental resources for children and youth.

- An ongoing relationship with a caring adult: mentor, tutor, coach
 - Safe places and structured activities during non-school hours to learn and grow
 - A healthy start
 - A marketable skill through effective education
 - An opportunity to give back through community service
- Janice Fletcher, associate professor of child, family and consumer studies, explained the summit's purpose as to get people, whether they have children or not, to commit to one of the five points. "We're asking, what's your promise? Which one of these five resources are you going to work on as an individual, as a corporation, as a community?"

"It's a promise to say we're going to make our children a part of our community. It's a promise to the children. We're saying we're going to help you," explained Fletcher.

"I've seen a lot of touchy feely emotional pleas over the years," Fletcher said. She explained that since the development of CAT and PET scans it can now be scientifically shown that the prenatal through teenage years are periods of tremendous growth for individuals. The more stimulation and support a child gets in these years, the better life they lead as adults. "This is not touchy feely, it's for real, it's clear. This is science telling us, you do this or you lose this person's potential."

She said some groups have already begun to meet the challenge. Costco has made a commitment to hire a certain number of youth. In Bovill, the mayor has put youth to work on local community projects.

Data gathered by KIDS COUNT compared the status of children in Idaho to others in the U.S. Idaho received a C+ for the status of children in Idaho in 1996. Its lowest ratings were in academic achievement and adolescent risk behavior, which both got Cs.

Fletcher said adolescent risk behavior is one of the problems Latah county faces. "The number of juveniles arrested and convicted has risen dramatically in our county, so we're not doing so well in our own community."

Northern Idaho has had an epidemic of whooping cough in the past year. "This is unnecessary," Fletcher said. Whooping cough is a preventable killer disease. Having children immunized before the age of 2 can prevent it. It is required that children be immunized before entering school. If parents wait until then, they are putting their child at risk. This falls under the category of health, where Idaho received a C+.

KIDS COUNT is a national and state-by-state effort to track the status of children in the United States. The Mountain States Group, Inc., a private non-profit community resource organization, coordinates statistic gathering.

Philanthropy feeds the hungry of Moscow

The Lambda Chi Alpha chapter at the University of Idaho has high hopes in collecting over 10,000 pounds of food this holiday season to benefit the Moscow Food Bank.

They are part of the annual Lambda Chi Alpha North American Food Drive, which is the largest single-day fraternity philanthropy in the world.

The international food drive plans to raise one million pounds of food to feed the hungry across the nation. Last year, chapters and colonies in the United States and Canada collected 835,388 pounds of food.

"The goal of this year's North American Food Drive is not only to raise substantial amounts of food for people across the U.S. and Canada, but also to increase public concern about the hunger problem in Idaho," said Yancey Willis, philanthropy chair for Lambda Chi.

The local chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha, along with Boy Scouts of America, will contribute to the one million pound goal by holding a food drive and placing empty grocery bags in over 300 businesses throughout the week. Over 2,000 Moscow residents will also receive empty bags and be asked to contribute generously.

"We are very excited about the opportunity to work with the boy scouts," said Trent Wright, member of Lambda Chi Alpha. "This community's effort will feed Moscow's hungry."

Along, members of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity raised 3,130 pounds of food last year and they believe it's quite possible to meet their goal this year with the help of the boy scouts.

Contributions of non-perishable food and monetary donations will be collected Nov. 8 by 220 chapters of the fraternity. The food collected in Moscow will be taken to the Moscow county fairgrounds where it will be turned over to the Moscow Food Bank and distributed to local charities for the upcoming holiday season.

Protesters plead guilty to obstructing forest service

BOISE — Two protesters who perched in wooden barricades to block logging on the Nez Perce National Forest have pleaded guilty to federal charges.

Martin Stephen, 25, of Boise, and Joshua Burnim, 23, of Fairfield, Conn., each pleaded guilty Thursday to one count of illegally maintaining a structure on the forest and one count of blocking a forest road in the Cove-Mallard area.

The two occupied log tripod structures on July 18, refusing to leave when asked by Forest Service employees. They were subsequently arrested.

"None of Idaho's four federal judges have ever halted a timber sale," Burnim said. "With the bad reputation of the Forest Service, one begins to wonder if Idaho judges take environmental forestry laws seriously."

U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge sentenced each to one year of probation, 50 hours of community service, a $500 fine and ordered them to steer clear of unauthorized activities on forest lands.

Activists have camped in the Nez Perce forest each summer for years, protesting logging and road-building in the largest undeveloped tract in the 48 contiguous states.

Woman charged with $160,000 in fraudulent claims

BOISE — A Twin Falls woman has been arraigned on 35 counts of federal mail fraud, alleging that she got $160,000 by submitting false claims for speech, therapy and occupational therapy services.

Mary Michener pleaded innocent in a court appearance this week and trial was scheduled for Dec. 16 before U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge.

U.S. Attorney Betty Richardson said the indictment alleges that Michener, doing business as M. Michener and Associates, submitted fraudulent claims to Medicaid, Head Start, Magic Valley Regional Center, Bridgeview Estates and West Magic Care Center.

Richardson said the case was investigated by the FBI and the state's Medicaid Fraud Unit.

In another case, Bestway Pest Control Inc., Pocatello, faces sentencing Jan. 5 after pleading guilty to discharging pesticides or pesticide residue into the city water system.

Federal officials said the discharge violated a permit issued by the city of Pocatello to Bestway. The possible fine is up to $500,000.

The Justice Department said Greg Bybee, 36, Lapwai, has been ordered to appear in federal court next Friday in Moscow on a criminal charge of civil rights violation.

Richardson said the complaint alleges that Bybee last December threatened Tommy Williams, who is black, and struck Williams' wife, who is an Indian. Bybee is charged in a one-count indictment with using force or the threat of force to interfere with the housing rights of Williams, his wife and father-in-law David Miles.

The indictment charges that Bybee acted because of Williams' race.

Steven K. Leslie pleaded innocent to six federal counts that he illegally transported and disposed of hazardous waste.

The charge alleges that the disposal occurred between July 1, 1993, and April 12, 1995, near Kellogg, on Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management property.

Trial was scheduled for Leslie, 45, Palmer, Alaska, on Dec. 1 at Coeur d'Alene.

Inmate steps out for cigarette break

SANDPOINT — A Bonner County jail inmate with a hankering for a smoke broke out of an exercise yard and was on his way back in when he was captured by deputies.

"I guess he was desperate for a smoke," said jail commander Lt. Chuck Day. "After he got the can, he climbed back in."

Day said he didn't know whether charges would be filed against Jason Moore, 28, because he didn't try to flee. "He could have taken off, but all he was after was the butt can," Day said.

Moore didn't get much out of his effort. He didn't have matches or a lighter and all the butts in the cigarette can were soaked by rain.

The article on the student recreation center in the Oct. 21 issue said that rec. center fees would be $58 since the $12 we're paying now would get taken out. Fees for future students would actually still be $70. The $12 we're paying now does not affect the future $70.

Roe v. Wade attorney recalls historic case

JUSTIN OLIVER RUEN

STAFF

If you would have asked Sarah Weddington 25 years ago whether she would argue a major precedent setting case before the Supreme Court, she would have said no way. But the fortuitous hand of fate destined her to make legal history with the 1973 case Roe v. Wade.

Weddington discussed her involvement with the case, as well as her personal triumphs in the face of gender discrimination last Friday at the University of Idaho Law School.

"I believe in something called 'course correction,'" Weddington quipped, still unsure of where life will take her. In all her careers as a trial attorney, Texas state legislator, assistant to President Jimmy Carter, author, and women's rights activist, Weddington has made good use of the analytical tools she obtained in law school. But as the daughter of a Texas small town Methodist minister, she was not expected to study law.

"I told the dean of my college that I wanted to go to law school," Weddington recalled. "He said, 'no woman has ever graduated from here and gone to law school. It would be too hard.' So you know at what moment I decided to go to law school," she said, followed by a roar of audience laughter.

While Weddington bristles at being described as "historic," she admits "that's probably better than being archaic."

Indeed, Roe v. Wade continues to inspire controversy today. In 1969, Weddington was approached by a group of women from Austin, Texas, who wanted to eliminate the state's ban on distributing contraceptives except to married or engaged women. The eventual case came to settle upon Jane Roe, an unmarried, pregnant woman from Dallas, who has recently revealed herself as Norma McCorvey and come out in opposition to abortion.

Roe v. Wade was Weddington's first contested case, which she argued before the Supreme Court at age 27. When asking the women later why they chose her to represent them, they replied that "We just needed someone to do it for free."

Weddington's awe of the majestic courthouse in Washington, D.C., was tempered by overwhelming anxiety. The day of oral arguments, Weddington was unable to answer a question posed by then-Associate Justice William Rehnquist, who wanted to know when Texas was re-admitted to the union. "I didn't know, and I did the only thing I could by saying 'I'm sorry, I cannot answer that question' and later filing a supplemental brief. When my pre-law students take a test, they often ask if they can file a supplemental. They can't," Weddington joked.

Weddington learned of the outcome of the case a short while later when serving as a representative in the Texas state Legislature. When a reporter asked her secretary if Weddington had a comment on the ruling, the secretary asked the outcome of the case, to which the report answered that she had won on a 7-2 ruling.

Despite the clarity of the court's ruling, Weddington believes that the words have been dulled by the passage of time, changes on the Supreme Court bench and the growing strength of abortion opponents. "I am here today because I need your help," she implored, citing the current makeup of the court, which she believes is equally split into three justices who would uphold the Roe

Sarah Weddington, attorney for Jane Roe in the Roe vs. Wade court case, gave encouragement to law students at her lecture on Friday.

v. Wade ruling, three who would weaken it and three who would overturn it.

Motivated by the strength of her opposition, Weddington noted that recent speeches by Pat Robertson indicate that Christian political groups hope to overturn precedent-setting legal cases for women's rights, ban contraception and elect a president in the year 2000.

"Our opposition is strong, because abortion is symbolic of everything they don't like that has changed over the past 25 years," Weddington said. "It's always easier to motivate people to change the law than to maintain it."

"Women do take their rights for granted, but those of us of the older generation remember, and those memories motivate us."

Students to vote on new recreation facility

read more! See page 8

YVONNE WINGETT
STAFF

On Nov. 3, 4, and 5, University of Idaho students will be asked by the Student Referendum Committee to vote on the construction of the proposed Student Recreation Center. Brailsford and Dunlavey, a nationally recognized sports facilities consultant company was hired in 1995 by the university to direct an analysis and study for the student recreational and sports needs. According to the study, current recreation facilities available at UI are "inadequate to accommodate the recreation and sports needs of its students."

The construction of the Student Rec Center will generate approximately 90,000 square feet allotted to "student health and recreation."

The proposed rec center will include: a large weight training center with state-of-the-art equipment; fitness machines area; indoor jogging/walking track; indoor rock climbing wall; racquetball/handball courts; full-size multi-purpose courts for volleyball and basketball; locker rooms with showers and saunas; a juice bar and lounge; multi-purpose rooms for aerobic exercise, martial arts, yoga, and dance; a hot tub/spa area; and the ASUI Outdoor Program.

Jeffrey D. Turner, project associate of Brailsford and Dunlavey, said, "It was a student-based response to a lot of the administration-based responses for development on the university campus."

"The whole project from the very beginning has been totally run by students. They're the ones who began the initiative; they're the ones who pressed the administration to look into it."

Due to the unavailability of state capital funds, the proposed rec center can only be constructed with student fees. In order to support the financing, a $70 per semester fee will be assessed to all students. This fee will not be in effect until the building is open and ready for use.

Phil Auth, a 22-year-old junior majoring in mechanical engineering, said, "I don't think the rec center is necessary now, but it has the potential to be necessary in the future."

If the center is built, Auth would most often use the weight room and racquet-ball courts.

Dee Radford, a 26 year-old mechanical engineering major, doesn't think the idea of another recreational building is a good one. "We already have 90 percent of the facilities that they are proposing to build. It seems like new leadership wants a new building to be remembered by."

If the proposal passes, Radford said he would most often use the basketball courts, but "there's already enough of those around."

If the referendum passes, the facility could be open and ready to use as early as the fall of 2001.

Students can vote on Nov. 3-5 at the Library, the Wallace Complex, the Administration Building, the Student Union Building, or on-line at www.uidaho.edu/asui/vote/.

Damage done to Life Science

Room up and running after a fire last June Building restored

DEVON HAMMES
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

A little extra life was sparked into Room 168 of the Life Science Building this past summer.

On June 29, melted plastic that seeped through an oven started a fire that led to an estimated $500,000 worth of damage, said Fred Hutchison, safety officer for the UI.

"A graduate student placed a wire basket that contained plastic wire tubes in an oven used for drying glassware and plastic ware," Hutchison explained. "They left the oven on the temperature they use for glassware, it melted the plastic, and as it dripped down in the oven, the countertop caught on fire."

Since the incident occurred on a Saturday, no classes were in session and no one was injured in the fire, but Room 168 was completely destroyed. The room, a laboratory preparation room, had to be inspected and two adjoining teaching laboratories were also cleaned and checked for any dangerous damage. The teaching laboratories were not being used at the time.

"The room had to be gutted, and the adjoining areas had some smoke damage," Hutchison said. "We hired a company to come in a clean up the chemical debris and do some post-clean up sampling."

Another threat of the blaze was the concern of inhalation of asbestos fibers. Hutchison said asbestos is material that has been used for many years, good fireproof material. It has been known to cause cancer and alveolar, interstitial and pleural fibrosis. It is insoluble and is used to provide strength, thermal insulation and resistance to fire, heat and corrosion.

"A few minor items in this room were asbestos. The floor tile that was damaged and some pipes in the ceiling had to be removed. The asbestos is not a big concern," he explained.

The room contained many different types of chemicals, including organic and inorganic chemicals and dyes used for microbiological preparation.

Hutchison said he thinks the laboratory and adjacent rooms are back up and running. All of the equipment was replaced. One piece of equipment alone took up nearly 10 percent of the total cost to replace. The instrument used to sterilize microbiological preparations and equipment cost an estimated $50,000 to replace, Hutchison said.

The asbestos is not a big concern.

"Our first concern is taking care of the students," he said. "We're trying to get more information for them, but there are some things we don't have control over."

Chuck Labine, assistant director for facilities and maintenance, said the students worked very hard to help with the cleanup.

"Because everybody worked so hard and quickly, we were able to reduce what actually was damaged. The students did a fabulous job," he said.

Labine also said there have been additional complaints about similar happenings in other areas of campus on Sixth Street, such as McConnell Hall and the Forestry Building.

Recreation center about more than just sports

ERIN SCHULTZ

STAFF

When I first heard about the idea of building a student recreation center, I wasn't sure what to think. While I personally liked the idea of having a brand new facility on campus, I wasn't sure if we could really justify voting to raise future student fees to build a third athletic-type complex, especially at a time when it seemed students should be pushing for computers or something more directly related to education. However, after looking into it a little more, I began to realize that the rec center represents an idea larger than just recreation and athletics.

Though we may not see the entire picture yet, our university is currently at a unique point. The recent discovery of the University of Idaho being viewed as a "distant, remote party school," the ensuing PR campaign, changing educational technology, and the way colleges everywhere must now compete for money with unfortunate state priorities such as building more jails — all these things create interesting tensions for our university.

And if you're still with me, this trickles down and affects how I view the idea of a recreation center. Basically if the UI doesn't choose to act on the offensive right now, these changes could snuff us out of the picture. One of the ways that the UI is acting on the offensive is with the rec center. To some, it may seem commercial, or may seem to undermine the idea of students coming here to learn, not recreate, but the reality is that if we want to survive, we must stay competitive with surrounding universities such as Washington State University and Boise State University who are passing similar initiatives.

Next, some facts. You may be wondering what will make the rec center different from the Memorial Gym and the Kibbie Dome. The main difference is that it will be entirely for recreation instead of classes and athletic events. You would be able to go there any time of day without wondering if a class is already in the weight room, or if a UI game is being played where you want to jog.

If you don't want to work out, you could sit in the lounge and watch the Super Bowl on the big-screen TV, get something from the juice bar, or hang out in the hot tub. The center would provide more exposure to overlooked but very active groups like the Outdoor Program. It would also provide additional opportunities for on-campus jobs since students would be needed to work there.

Overcrowding and outdated equipment are two things the rec center is also supposed to alleviate. While some may be completely content with existing facilities, the question is whether it will remain adequate for future students, especially as the university is currently implementing specific strategies to increase enrollment.

Most of all, the rec center is not something the university has thrown together as part of a PR campaign, though it can certainly be a benefit in recruiting, but it is something entirely led by students. The planning for the center was done by mailing surveys to students and calling them to see what they would like in a rec center. Since then, the initiative has been student driven and student led. It reflects the desires of our peers, not just administrators.

So is the rec center really for everyone? I believe it is because of the fact that it would be another aspect working to improve the overall community of the university and to help us compete, since, like it or not, we must. By the UI considering the idea of a rec center, it shows we are aware of coming changes in higher education and want to act on them. It shows we care about keeping our university up to par with future student needs instead of letting things continue down the "remote" path they are heading. And as our university competes and stays active in the world of higher education, the value of a UI degree can only become higher for everyone here.

Recreation center is a rip-off

OPINION EDITOR

On November 3-5 we have a chance to vote on a big issue which will affect our school and students for years to come. The student recreation center will be the big issue at the polls this year. Students will need to decide whether to increase the tuition of future students at the University of Idaho or to live without a new recreation facility.

One issue surrounding the facility is the sneaky fees that have already come along with the project. It should be pointed out that a $12 per semester fee increase has already been put into place. Why? To pay for things like student surveys, brochures, and souvenir items supporting the measure.

However, despite this spending and the years of planning there are still no concrete plans for the facility. I was told in an e-mail by Ben Rush, chairman of the Public Relations and Outreach for the Student Referendum Committee that, "there aren't any real facts" about the facility right now. There aren't? This measure is about to be voted on and there are no solid plans for it? Sounds a bit fishy to me.

Then, there is the major issue associated with the sheer cost of the building. If this referendum passes it would raise student fees $70 — yes $70, even though it has already been raised $12. (Of course, supporters of the recreation center don't want anybody to know that). So, let's just assume students would have to ante up an additional $70 instead of the more appropriate $82 per semester.

Some people would say that's not so bad — after all, it's only about the cost of another book for school. However, even for the student who flies through the university in only eight semesters, with no summer school, the extra cost would be $560. For students who take summer school for two years and leave after four the cost would rocket up to $700.

But I really pity the graduate students, many of whom take classes all year long. To get a six-year degree and go to school in the summer it would cost an additional $1,260 — just for a recreation center. That is in addition to the rise in tuition that will occur just to cover inflation and other expenses. Is that worth it? No.

Proponents point out that the debt from the facility will be paid for in 22 years. That's like taking out a mortgage payment on a house. Assuming 10,000 students pitch in the extra $70, that would be an additional expense of $700,000 per semester, or $1.4 million per year. Of course, we can't forget about the 3,000 summer school students who will ante up an additional $210,000 per summer.

In other words, the additional cost per school year would be $1.61 million dollars. Over 22 years this would translate into a total of $35.42 million. If we assumed fees would drop $12 if the referendum lost (which they should), then the cost would actually be an extra expense of over $40 million dollars. The scary thing is that this is a conservative estimate. And that is if the project is on budget!

Throw this facility in with the new commons project that has also increased fees and we're talking about some serious gouging of student pocketbooks, likely around $50 million dollars or more.

It seems to me that big-time bucks should instead be spent on improving the education of the university and the existing facilities, many of which are not in the greatest of shape. However, the recreation center has put on a slick campaign beating $70 into everybody's heads. They have said it will only cost $70, even though they already hiked fees $12 for the project.

They should be telling people the truth, that some extra facilities will cost the university $35-40 million, if we're lucky. Don't fall for the $70 sham! Vote no on the student recreation center.

Is $700 of your hard earned money worth a couple of extra racketball courts? This is the question you will be asked in the student referendum on Nov. 3-5.

The cost of this new facility is $70/semester. If we assume that it takes the average student five years to graduate, the combined cost to that student will be $700. The slick promotional campaign by the ASUI fails to mention that fees will rise much higher than the advertised $70 per semester.

Student fees (in the absence of the student recreation center) are projected to rise at least 10 percent per year into the foreseeable future. Thus, a new student entering the University of Idaho next fall will pay $1424 per semester (or $2848 per year) in resident fees by the time he or she graduates (based on a five year program).

Over a five year program, resident student fees will have risen a combined $3,033 above this year's rate structure. With the additional $700 from the student recreation center, the total increase will be $3,733.

As you can see — we are talking real dollars here. Of course the student recreation center is not due to be completed until the year 2001 — but the same principle applies. Do you want to saddle future generations of students with this fee increase on top of the fee increases that will likely be implemented by the UI and the State Board of Education?

There are other difficulties with the student recreation center as well. First of all, the student referendum is rather one-sided. Those favoring the facility have had access to thousands of ASUI dollars to promote the facility in addition to the backing by the UI administrators. Those who might oppose the facility are left to their own devices.

Secondly, what kind of message does this referendum send to the State Board of Education and the Idaho State Legislature? If students are willing to pay $700 for a new recreation center — then they must be willing to pay higher fees for other things as well. This is the wrong message to send during tight economic times.

Finally, fees may rise even faster than 10 percent per year. The Idaho economy has been very good over the past decade. Tax revenues have been high. If the economy goes into a recession — which it eventually must — tax revenues will fall and appropriations to higher education will fall. Student fee increases in a time of financial distress will likely rise even faster than 10 percent per year.

I frequently use most of the recreation facilities on campus. I have rarely been inconvenienced with overcrowding. We already have fine recreational facilities on campus — any additional facilities is a luxury we cannot afford.

I ask you once again — is $700 of your hard earned money worth a couple of extra racketball courts?

What does the ASUI Senate do?

WADE GRUHL
COLUMNIST

I'll be frank. I am more interested in a symposium scheduled for Saturday than I am in the ASUI Senate. The Clearwater National Forest will be on the University of Idaho campus to explain that logging roads and clearcuts were the principal cause of hundreds of landslides in the forest in the winter of 1996.

But this is a campus newspaper, and there is an ASUI Senate election coming up. Consequently, I have chosen to address this issue. Granted, it was a forced choice. "Forced choice" is a behavioral management term describing a situation where an individual is allowed to choose from designated options. "None of the above" is not an option. I'm not complaining, just explaining. I am grateful to have been able to choose my topics up to this point.

When faced with my choices, I decided upon the Senate because of a reaction to a comment I made at an Argonaut staff meeting. An Argonaut manager asked if anyone had any ideas on how to get more students to vote in the election. I said that if the Senate addressed issues of concern to students, that perhaps more of them would vote. Some laughed. Some thought I had a valid point.

What does the Senate do? Some people think some Senators are just in it for the resume padding. I don't know. Maybe if the student newspaper covered their weekly meetings I would be more informed. But then some reporter would have to sit through those boring meetings. The reporters probably feel they aren't paid enough to do that. They may have a good point. The Argonaut could print the minutes of the Senate meetings. Or at least the student paper could let us know where to find them on the Internet, if they are there.

Heck, I don't know. And to be blunt, I really don't much give a fart either. I take that back. The food I buy on campus does make me fart, so if the Senate has a role in deciding what food is available, maybe I do give a fart? I'm not implying that the Senate doesn't do anything, although that is a remote possibility. I just don't know, and am not especially interested in what they do.

At least not at first glance. If I think about it a bit, I realize that I would give a great big fart if the Senate were to cut funds to KUOI. KUOI rocks! Not only does KUOI play the best and most diverse music on the dial, but its news programs are a multi-course gourmet feast compared to the junk food slop served by ABC, CNN, NBC, CBS, the Spokesman, the Tribune, and the Daily Snooze. I digress. But I'll get back to that, for KUOI is more than worthy of a whole column.

The Senate allocates funds to the Argonaut as well. Admittedly, the Argonaut is not nearly as high quality a newspaper as KUOI is a radio station. But it does fulfill a needed role on campus, that being a forum for the exchange of ideas. That forum is largely unused, unfortunately. I'll get back to that one, too.

I think the Outdoor Program is a valuable and worthwhile program. I'd be bummed if the Senate did away with it. Or does the Senate even have that kind of power? I don't know. I know the Senate brings lecturers and musicians to campus, among others. This is good.

But I'm not feeling like I've even come close to making a strong argument for why it is important to vote in ASUI elections. Can you? Surely someone must feel passionately about this issue. I'd be a liar if I said I did.

But the ASUI has a budget of over $1,000,000. Somebody ought to feel strongly about how and where and why these funds are used. This space on the opinion page is for you! Use it. Your fees help fund the ASUI, which funds the Argonaut. So use it, for crying out loud! Got something to say? Say it. I invite ASUI Senators to use this space to explain how clueless I am for being so unappreciative of the hard work they do. I invite students to use this space to make Senators aware of issues of concern. This is the place to raise and debate issues of concern to you. Take advantage of it.

Now, back to my passionate concern for our public forests, which have been so arrogantly degraded by short-sighted logging practices...

Letter to the editor

Setting the grizzly issue straight

There are no such things as facts, but there is such a thing as misinterpretation. It is necessary then, to respond to P.J. Butterfield's response and unwarranted criticism regarding Wade Gruhl's column on Grizzly Recovery in the Bitterroot Ecosystem. P.J. Butterfield has completely misinterpreted the Grizzly Bear recovery document written by the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife, and has succeeded in further confusing the public about this issue. Confusion will not benefit anyone, except further the conflict. So here are the "facts" regarding the Fish and Wildlife proposal, based on a literal translation of the document:

Alternative One — The Resource Organization On Timber Supply (ROOTS) proposal, a political alternative. This will bring back the Grizzly Bear designated as "experimental non-essential," which means it can be killed with a note from Uncle Sam. The central recovery zone is 5600 square miles.

Alternative Two — No action, allows for Natural Recovery and migration of the Grizzly Bear into the Bitterroot Ecosystem.

Alternative Three — Pass legislation that would eliminate Grizzly Bears from the Bitterroot Ecosystem, and prevent them from returning in the future.

Alternative Four — The Conservation Biology Alternative, a science based proposal. To bring back the Grizzly Bear with full protection under the Endangered Species Act, and protect Grizzly Bear habitat. The recovery zone is 26,000 square miles, quite a bit larger than Alternative One.

Butterfield needs to be sure of his interpretations and his inherent basis before he mistakenly presents misinformation to the public. The Grizzly Bear proposal will benefit the people and their economies, and will insure the survival of the wildness essential to Idaho. It is still important that the public comment on the proposal to reintroduce the Grizzly Bear. For further information call Friends of the Clearwater at 882-9755.

Del invierno, la vida y demás

KIKE CALVO

STAFF

Ya lo tenemos aquí. Año tras año, aparece con sus blancos colores. Transición. Parecía ayer cuando todos deambulábamos campus a traves, con cortos shorts y escotadas camisetas. El gran tiempo para el regocijo de la vista quedó atrás. No mas carnes morenas, no más minifaldas insinuantes. Lágrimas recorren las mejillas de muchos. "No llores muchachos," -la primavera exclama- "pronto regresaré con un radiante sol."

Las hojas se tornaron de un rojo rabiante. Los ojos del caminante se veían impactados por tanta belleza. "Que bonita la Creación," ñun árbol grita al viento- "Que razón tienes," ñilas aves le replican- Verdes se tornan rojos, el rojo se tiñe amarillo. La primavera nos da su último adiós. Si ya lo decían: "Caminante no hay camino, se hace camino al andar." No cabe duda, pero a veces parecen surcos lo que tenemos que hacer para abrimos senda en la vida.

Para muchos comienza el tiempo de la depresión. Mañanas grises, ningún pájaro en el horizonte, y un frío que cala los huesos. El test más popular es el de retorcer las orejas. Si ante la más mínima presión, alguna se desprende con facilidad, cayendo sobre la nieve, estamos en el invierno idahoiano. Y lo peor es cuando pasa algún despistado y nos la pisa, haciendola desaparecer entre la blanca capa. ¡Qué tristeza, con los bonitos que son los despertares soleados! Esos días en los que uno abre la vieja ventana de madera, y los rayos de luz crean extranas formas sobre la alfombra de la alcoba. Uno puede demorarse en el baño sin temor a coger una pulmonía. Pero la cosa cambia, al igual que todos cambiamos. Comienza el tiempo de conectar la estufa a la maxima potencia. Más, quiero más. Calor. Cuidado con la toalla, no es la primera vez que se prende, provocando una triste catastrofe. Y para la vida privada recordar el mensaje de Como agua para Chocolate, no se pueden encender todos los fósforos al tiempo, si no queremos hacer arder toda la caja de cerillas...

Para muchos la llegada del invierno se presenta como algo normal. La nieve cubrirá la universidad, y caminaréis sobre ella como si tal cosa. Os habeis parado a pensar que en muchos países el invierno como tal no existe. Puede que las temperaturas desciendan en muchos puntos del país, pero en ningún momento verán la nieve. "Yo nunca he visto la nieve," ñuna amiga me explicaba- "¿Como es? ¿Es dura, parece harina, dime, a que se parece? Es como la escharcha que se forma en el techo de la nevera? (Nevera, frigorífico, refrigeradora)" Y cómo se puede responder a tan compleja pregunta.

¿Y que es el mar? El mar es... inmensidad, azul, vida, cual de los adjetivos describe mejor? ¿O quiza sean todos al unisono los que matizan el termino oceano? Son cosas que uno ha de verlas por sí mismo. Tocarlas. Levantarse una mañana, armarse de valor y saltar al campo de batalla. Uniformado con gorro, guantes y similares indumentarias, comenzar a retozar sobre la nieve. Apilar, recoger, moldear y lanzar.

Batallas de nieve con los amigos. Movimientos rápidos tratando de no ser impactados por los blancos y voladores proyectiles de etereo material. Eso es la nieve mi amiga, que mas podría decir.

¿Influirá el clima sobre el caracter de las personas? No me cabe la menor duda. Cuando te desplazas por distintos países, uno aprecia como una mañana soleada alegre, y un triste día, donde apenas se divisa luz alguna sobre el firmamento, le invitan al mas santo a introducir la cabeza bajo la tierra, cual avestruz africana.

Analicemos Espana como ejemplo. Imaginemos una línea imaginaria seccionando la peninsula por su mitad. En la parte norte, lluvias regulares y dias nublados. En el sur, clima seco y cálido. Gentes más serias y menos farreras (cachondas, animadas, abiertas, divertidas, festivaleras) en Galicia, Asturias y colindantes. Andalucía, sita en el sur, tierra de artistas y toreros. Hablar saleroso, ritmo en la sangre y pasión gitana. Eso sí, en la vida nunca se puede generalizar. Bueno, sí se puede, pero no se debe.

Nos quedan pocos días escuchando el canto de las aves junto a nuestro balcón. Pronto emprenderán largos viajes migratorios a climas más templados, huyendo de un frío intenso, que impediría hasta el vaiven de sus alas. No mas verdes radiantes, no mas coloridas flores decorando las marrones alfombras de tierra. No más olores hipnóticos, no más "oye que te fungelan los tachines," ñcomo dec'a mi abuelo -para aquellos que sufren de olor de pies.

Naturaleza, vida, invierno y creación. Que lindo es el mundo en que vivimos, no lo olvideis, os lo dice un aprendiz de todo, y maestro en nada. Sed buenos.

Fiddler on the Roof approaches curtain time

AMY SANDERSON

STAFF

Time is counting down for the opening of Fiddler On The Roof.

The cast of 56 is the largest produced in the 30 years Director David Lee Painter has been with the theater department. In their second collaboration since Forever Plaid last summer, Painter and University of Idaho Assistant Professor of Voice and Opera Cameron Littlefield now have the huge task of coordinating this well-known Broadway musical.

"I've been more of a traffic cop most of the time than a director," explained Painter, "Trying to just get the elements to come together at the same time has been the largest task that I have ever undertaken." In a production that will involve an orchestra of more than 20 musicians, a 30 member chorus and elaborate costumes and sets, trafficking this show would be like trafficking Times Square.

The sheer number of costumes needed to clothe the enormous cast demonstrates the grand scale of this production. Lisa Richards, costume designer for the show and an undergraduate in theater, will create and help create over 100 costumes to adorn the people of pre-revolution, Czarist Russia. Richards won best costume design at the Northwest Drama Conference last year.

Over 175 lights are required to illuminate the huge space for this show and 20 scene changes will require different lighting schemes. Lighting designer Cate Olson, a BFA in the department, won the American College Theater Festival's best regional lighting design last year for her work on Marvin's Room.

David Wlodarski, scene designer for Fiddler, will be creating the world of the small, fictional village of Anatevka where the story takes place. Wlodarski has won notoriety for his work on last year's School for Scandal and Incident at Vichy.

The story takes place in 1905, only 12 years from the beginning of the Russian revolution. The story centers around a Jewish family, the father Tevye, his wife Golde and their five daughters.

Although the show does make note of the hate crimes against Jewish people during this time, the story is really about the conflicts of a family rooted in tradition that now must make a transfer from the old world to the new. Assistant Director Tracey Benson, who is now finishing a BFA in theater, researched the era and background for this play.

"The show is set in this certain time period with these historical issues going around it but the heart of the story is something that everybody can understand and relate to," Benson said.

The central conflict centers around Tevye and three of his five daughters. To the disapproval of their father, Tevye's daughters fall in love with men who force Tevye to reconcile with the changing world. One of the daughter's lovers is a non-Jewish member of the village, the other a revolutionary.

"The interesting thing is that Fiddler is not a 'Jewish story', that's the historical context, it is really about families and love. It is about the compromises we have to make when we love someone," said Director, David Lee Painter.

Joel Corda plays the central character of Tevye. Corda, a senior in vocal performance, appeared as the lead in Forever Plaid. Many music majors fill the leads in Fiddler, including vocal performance major, Sybil Hammond, who plays Golde.

Violinist and UI student Kurt Hall will take on the role of the fiddler, an important symbol in this story. The fiddler only appears to Tevye. The figure represents the people of this era on the edge of falling into political and social disaster, explained Painter.

Pieces of Jewish and Russian culture can be seen throughout the entire musical. Musical numbers, like the popular tune "Sunrise, Sunset" are based on melodies from the Jewish music tradition, explained Littlefield. Sounds from the culture like clarinet, accordion and the tremolo and the sound of a mandolin will also be heard. Folk dances arranged by choreographer, Meghan Gazdek, a graduate in the dance program, will further recreate the rituals from the Jewish culture.

Both departments have put much effort into creating the authenticity of the era, whether it be through the research of the costumes or the accents performers will use. Those involved in this show have spent the semester getting into the world of the play; some could be seen on campus donning head scarves in the style of Jewish mothers and young women and recently the cast celebrated the Jewish holiday Yom Kippur. Much of the excitement for this play, explained both directors, comes from the cultural exposure these students are partaking in and the enthusiasm present as students branch out into another discipline.

"We're all trying to create a memory here that we can all look back on and say 'this was great, we came together for six weeks and really made something special for the audience and for us all,'" Painter said.

Fiddler On The Roof will run Nov. 9 and Nov. 12-15. Performances are at 7:30 p.m. with one matinee, Nov. 9 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $8 for adults, $5 for youth and non-UI students and $3 for UI students. For reservations and more information call the Hartung Box office (885-7986).

The Caffeinated Rants of

T. Scott Carpenter

To kill a labuser

In last Tuesday's rant entitled "Labuser Sucks," I expressed my contempt toward the soul-sucking machines (computers) which you can find in any dark corner of the University of Idaho campus. I informed you of the injustices that have befallen innocent students (namely me) due to computers and how we are all puppets, being manipulated by their spastic puppeteering. It's almost eerie how correct I was.

It has become clear to me, through recent experiences, that there is a group present on campus which appears to be playing cyber-god. Surprisingly, these are not the computers themselves, but instead they are the servants of cyber-Satan. This group is "Help" Desk.

Shortly after my article came out, I noticed that my user-name, which was previously out of commission, was working once again. Apparently "Help" Desk became wise about my cyber-disposition. Unfortunately, they must have also been perturbed by the fact that I was attempting to turn their prey against them. I am convinced that they have hired a professional killer to exterminate me. Most likely the same people who kill scientists that are about to invent cars that run on double-A batteries and, until recently, scientists on the verge of creating aerosol cheese.

I first became wise to their sinister plot earlier today. I was attempting to log in to the computer to view my mid-term grades. I typed in my pin number and a sign appeared on the screen saying that my pin number had been disabled and that I must go to the "Help" Desk in person to fix it.

I found this rather odd. First of all, who disabled my pin number? And second of all, if I can supposedly fix any other problem over the phone, why must I make an actual appearance at the "Help" Desk to fix this one.

The answer was obvious. The "Help" Desk had purposely disabled my pin number, and left that personal message for me as bait. They wanted me to come see them.

The air was thick as I made my way through the Administration Building on the way to the "Help" Desk. Not thick like a fog, but more like the underground lair of some fire-breathing beast. What sort of fate was about to befall me? I pictured walking through the door and being shot by a poisonous dart or being torn apart by wolves. I entered the room and a woman beckoned me over to her desk. I told her my problem and she asked for my Vandal card. I handed it to her. She looked at the name and turned to look at me. She said nothing and smiled. Not your ordinary smile, this smile seemed to say, "Your days are numbered jerk! You're going to die! Die!! DIE!!" I would like to say that her head morphed into a hissing serpent with eyes of fire for drama's sake, but it didn't.

She fixed my pin number and I left. It was far too quick and easy. Why did I need to go there for that? Perhaps they wanted to get a fix on what I look like. Perhaps...

Footsteps! I could have sworn I heard footsteps behind me, but I look and no one is there! The hired assassin must be following me!

I never had to deal with anything like this before. The only threats I had ever received in the past came after my article about the annihilation of all cows, and people said they were going to break into my house and inoculate my underwear drawer with mad cow disease.

But this was happening now! I ran around the corner of a building and pulled out my Swiss army knife. I flipped up the Louisville slugger, which was in between the toothpick and the corkscrew on this particular model. Judging from the footsteps I figured the killer was just about to come around the corner. I jumped in front of him and commenced to pummel the mysterious figure with the bat.

I was going at it for a while until my left arm got a bit of a cramp so I slowed down, and then stopped. Looking at the broken form before me, it was hard at first to tell if it was even human. Then I recognized it! It was Tim Burton of the Mighty Mighty Bosstones! Apparently he was still bitter about the horrible interview I did with him a few issues back.

Tim Burton's hatred was a personal one, and not in any way related to "Help" Desk. My life is still in danger and I have been forced to abandon my home for a cardboard box behind Rosauers. They will never find me there.

BYU censors nudes from traveling Rodin exhibit

Associated Press
 PROVO, Utah — Mormon Church-owned Brigham Young University has refused to display four nude works of renowned French artist Francois-Auguste-Rene Rodin.

The pieces are part of the traveling exhibit entitled, "The Hands of Rodin, A Tribute to B. Gerald Cantor," a noted collector of the works of the artist perhaps best known for his sculpture, "The Thinker."

"We have felt that the nature of those works are such that the viewer will be concentrating on them in a way that is not good for us," said Campbell Gray, director of the BYU Museum of Art.

The decision surprised the exhibit's manager, who said it has been received without controversy throughout the country.

"We haven't had any other institutions that felt the need to not exhibit any pieces by Rodin," said Rachael Blackburn, curator of exhibits of the Iris and B. Gerald Cantor Foundation. "I can't say that we weren't surprised. We were."

"We are accepting of what they feel they need to do, but their position isn't one that we would support ourselves," Blackburn said.

Gray said museum and university officials discussed the issue for two months before deciding that the four works, including Rodin's world-famous erotic sculpture, "The Kiss," would be censored.

Other pieces pulled from the exhibit during its stay through January at BYU are "Saint John The Baptist Preaching," "The Prodigal Son," and a "Monument to Balzac."

Gray said the decision was complex

We have felt that the nature of those works are such that the viewer will be concentrating on them in a way that is not good for us.

— Campbell Gray, Museum Director and reflects not only the school's interpretation of the moral climate of the surrounding community, but also the views of members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its leaders, who direct the university.

Three years ago, the school was the brunt of considerable criticism for its decision to cut portions of the movie "Schindler's List" showing nudity and violence when it showed on campus. The award-winning film depicted a Nazi industrialist's efforts to save a handful of Jews from the death camps.

It has also been criticized for censoring and in some cases firing professors whose work does not fit with Mormon beliefs.

Rodin (1840-1917) is considered one of the most profound and influential sculptors of the 19th Century. His works are distinguished by their stunning realism and sense of drama.

His marble sculpture, "The Kiss" shows a man and woman, both nude, in an embrace. While considered one of Rodin's most powerful, and popular, works, Gray believes it would disrupt the exhibit and offend some viewers.

The nude statue of French philosopher and writer Balzac created controversy even when it was commissioned in the 1890s, since the portly figure was seen as unflattering, and even grotesque, by some critics.

Gray said the problem with the sculpture of John the Baptist goes beyond nudity. The sculpture shows the prophet nude, in mid-stride and is considered a depiction of his mortality.

In doing so, however, Gray said Rodin failed to show John the Baptist as a Biblical prophet.

"Everyone knows the prophet is mortal," Gray said. "But this conception of the prophet is made less than what we would regard as reverent or honorable. It doesn't show the prophet side of the man at all."

Utah State derails Idaho

Coach John L. Smith starts Kibbie Dome streak, ends it in pummeling of Idaho

BRAD NEUENDORF

STAFF

As far as the conference title goes, Idaho died this weekend as Utah State proved the Kibbie Dome roof could be blown off, defeating the Vandals 63-17.

This loss marked the first time the Vandals have been beat at home since John L. Smith began the streak November 13, 1993, which went 21 games.

Sure Idaho has three games remaining this season, but any hope of a conference championship was erased Saturday.

"These kids have a lot of character and they are not going to quit," said a very disappointed head coach Chris Tormey. "They are going to come back Monday and work hard to be a better team next week."

The Vandals struggled in every aspect of their game. They came into the game knowing that they were not as big as the Aggies but figured they could play with them.

The Vandals fell behind to USU early and were forced to finish the game through the air.

Quarterback Brian Brennan struggled, completing only 12 of 36 passes and two interceptions, trying to avoid a very illusive pass rush being sacked six times.

"Brian wasn't quite Brian, or at least the Brian we have seen on film," said Utah State head coach John L. Smith.

As a unit the Vandals barely gained 300 yards of total offense. Senior wide receiver Antonio Wilson led the Vandal effort with 140 yards receiving on 10 receptions and one of just two Vandal touchdowns.

The Aggie aggression was led by Melvin Blue. The senior running back soon became a workhorse, with the loss of Demario Brown to an injury last week. Blue rushed 33 times for 229 yards and three of the seven Aggie touchdowns.

"We got physically dominated. We were not able to stop them defensively," Tormey said. "We could not stop the run or pass and we got beat long."

Nearly a third of all the Aggies plays went longer than 10 yards, including an 81-yard pass reception from quarterback Matt Sauk to Steve Smith that put the score 20-0 early in the second quarter. USU would average 8.7 yards per play compared to Idaho's 3.7 yard average.

Utah State spent little time adjusting to the Dome. After being denied the first two series, the Aggies soon took the game into their control. With 3:04 left in the first quarter Sauk found wide receiver Nakia Jenkins for 28 yards and the first touchdown. Less than two minutes later, after Brennan threw an interception to Johndale Carty, Melvin Blue went 34 yards for his first touchdown of the day, giving the Aggies a 14-0 first quarter lead. This would give Utah State the momentum that would soon escalate into the biggest defeat Idaho has ever suffered in the Kibbie Dome.

USU would score on three of their next possessions giving them a 35-10 lead going into the locker room.

Quarterback Brian Brennan left early in the second half due to a sprained ankle, leaving sophomore Ed Dean to try to get something going for the Vandals. Dean was able to lead Idaho down the field several times, but only one 12 yard pass to Antonio Wilson ended in a touchdown.

The Aggies offense would just prove to be too much for the Vandals.

Melvin Blue would punch two more touchdowns in for USU, and two second stringers would add a couple more to put an exclamation point on the day for the Aggies.

The Aggies offense would finish with 662 total yards — 10 more yards and the Aggies would have broken the record for the most yards gained by an opponent in the Dome.

"I just want to thank these guys (USU players) for the win," Utah State head coach John L. Smith said. "For me it was very emotional, and to our staff it was very emotional."

Emotional may be an understatement for Coach Smith. In 1994, Coach Smith left the streak he had started in 1993 at nine wins when he accepted his current job as head coach for Utah State. Three years and 12 home victories later he returned to Idaho with the streak still alive and ended it with a very big win in terms of points, emotion and the Big West Championship chase.

Idaho will now travel to Spokane on Saturday to play Big Sky Eastern Washington, who defeated Montana at home two weeks ago.

Unforced errors rip Idaho - Vandals suffer Big West defeat

TONYA SNYDER

ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

Despite a strong performance in game one and 930 screaming fans on the home court of Memorial Gym, the Lady Vandals fell to Western division Big West foe Cal Poly in four games, 15-13, 12-15, 9-15, 6-15.

The Vandals got off to a strong start highlighted with three hits by Kyle Leonard in front of a large and enthusiastic crowd. The Mustangs jumped out to an early 0-2 lead despite the composed Idaho offensive attack. A kill by Jessica Moore got the Vandals on the board at 1-2 and quickly followed with another kill down the sideline to tie the game before a tip by Cal Poly caught the defense unaware, forcing a sideout.

Idaho continued to display incredible teamwork despite an upbeat game tempo, something the Vandals are not known for.

Digs were key to the early Vandal defense with the team looking determined to dig every hit from the Mustangs.

There was energy building in Memorial Gym, both on the court and off, with coach

Carl Ferreira and the crowd showing their approval of this aggressive and physically dominating Idaho team.

The Mustangs slowly pulled away, extending to an 8-4 lead until Idaho came back on the shoulders of aggressive defense and narrowed the gap to within one. Teamwork and self-sacrifice played a key role in pulling UI even with Cal Poly at eight before the Mustangs took a time-out to try and break the building momentum.

Senior Jeri Hymas showed Cal Poly that even a time-out can't break Idaho intensity as she answered with a strong kill and quickly followed by shoving a hit straight back down on the Mustangs.

Two net violations late in the game by Cal Poly opened the door to allow Idaho a two-point advantage going into the homestretch. Leonard continued her intense performance late into the game with a crucial block while Moore kept pounding away at the Mustang front line. Cal Poly closed to within one at 12-11 and closed the one-point deficit to tie the game at 13-13. Two back-to-back blocks by Beth Craig, who is still suffering from a pulled hamstring, brought about game point for the Vandals, but UI was unable to seal the victory. The second time, there was no question as to the Idaho victory as Jeri Hymas served an ace to win the game 15-13.

Leonard led the Vandals' attack at the net in game one with seven kills followed closely by Hymas with five. Overall, Idaho out-dug the Mustangs 30-28 in addition to setting five team blocks compared to three from Cal Poly.

Kari De Soto led the Mustang hitting attack with five kills followed by Asha Wagner and Melanie Hathaway with four apiece.

Idaho seemed to have lost a bit of the fire that helped them blaze through game one

Questions raised about Vandals

BARRY GRAHAM

STAFF

The 21-game home winning streak is over. Now, questions abound about the state of Idaho football. After the University of Idaho's debacle this past weekend against Utah State, can the Vandals come back and be ready for a solid Eastern Washington football team that is playing, well, tremendous ball?

The fact that Idaho lost by 47 points (63-17) tells a great deal of the story. But, the Vandals, going into the game, felt that a win would get them back on the right side of the tracks, after their loss to Nevada two weeks ago, and back into the Big West Conference race. Idaho saw their hopes for staying in the conference title picture and protecting their home-winning streak evaporate about as quickly as it took the Aggies to score on a few of their possessions in the first half of play.

The Vandals, going into the game against Nevada, were 4-2 and coming off two big wins, one of which was against North Texas in Idaho's Big West season opener. The Vandals knew that a huge challenge lie ahead in the Wolfpack of Nevada, but they probably did not envision the hardships they would suffer in that contest.

So, a week later, Idaho is still in line to win the conference if they can defeat Utah State in the Kibbie Dome.

Then the teams took the field and Idaho had the task of shutting down Utah State's vaunted rushing and passing attacks. Well, after giving up 593 yards to Nevada, two weeks ago, the Vandals surrendered 662 yards, a great deal of those coming in large chunks.

On top of the fact that Idaho was outplayed for most of the contest, the Vandals now have to contend with injuries. The biggest being quarterback Brian Brennan, who injured his ankle in the third quarter of the game.

The Vandals have a great deal to work on in preparation for Saturday's game against Eastern Washington in Cheney. Idaho will have sown up some of their problems in the defensive secondary. Offensively, Ed Dean may be the starting signal caller on Saturday. Dean does bring an added dimension to the position, with his speed and ability to make plays on the run.

The Eagles of Eastern Washington have already defeated Montana in the Big Sky Conference and are highly ranked in the Division I-AA polls. The Eagles have balance on both sides of the ball and should pose a challenge to the Vandals.

No, this is not UC Davis or Portland State that Idaho can use as sacrificial lambs. The Vandals, who have officially bowed out of early on. Trishia Jensen drilled one past the Vandal defense to start game two and followed with another two plays later. Kills from Leonard, Anna Reznicek and Moore quickly sparked the intensity once more as UI regained the lead established by Cal Poly early in the match at 6-5.

Unforced errors by Idaho quickly whittled away at the UI advantage, but it was decisive kills by Jemena Yocom, Leonard and a tip by Holzer that kept the Vandals within striking range at 7-10 before taking a time-out.

Hymas stopped the mini-hitting drought by the Vandals, first with a heavy cross-court kill and, one play later, hit another one home that was too hot for the Mustangs to handle. An ace by Cal Poly's Amy Aberle brought the Mustangs within two of match point at 8-13, but freshman Alli Nieman's kill brought a much needed sideout, one Idaho quickly took advantage of. Nieman kept the ball in UI's hands consistently in the last few minutes of the game.

After a huge rally late in the game, highlighted by Moore's finishing block for the sideout, Craig nailed a serve for an ace while Moore kept the late-game rally alive with several powerful hits with Hymas adding several more to pull the Vandals within one at 12-13.

Cal Poly failed to take advantage of their first game-point opportunity, but an unforced hitting error ended the Vandal's chance to take a 2-0 lead as UI suffered a narrow defeat, 12-15.

The Idaho attack percentage improved to .102 in game two thanks to the five kills by both Moore and Hymas, but Cal Poly held the edge with a .200 percentage, led once again by Hathaway and Wagner. While the Mustangs held the advantage with hits, Idaho continued to out-class the Mustang defense, snagging 23 digs in contrast to the Cal Poly 16.

Leonard got the game going with two hits for UI in game three with the Vandals getting on the board first. Nieman kicked in an ace and numerous digs to help propel Idaho to an early lead, 4-0. Blocking was also key to the UI game, with several team blocks in the first few minutes of play.

Cal Poly came back quickly, taking advantage of Idaho lift calls, net violations and uncommon miscommunication to steal back the lead, 5-4 before an ace by freshman standout Regan Butler knotted the teams at five.

After a long series of rallies in the middle of the game, an ace by Nicole Tormano followed up by a Leonard kill brought some life back to the game and pulled the Vandals within one at 9-10. But Cal Poly slowly extended their lead late in the game with a 5-0 streak, taking the game 9-15 for a 2-1 lead over Idaho.

Idaho came out with intensity that, while incomparable to game one, gave them an early boost and helped them hang with the Mustangs' early. An ace by UI's Holzer tied the game at 3-3 before a Cal Poly hitting spree denied Idaho the lead and lifted the Mustangs to 3-7, a lead Cal Poly would maintain for the remainder of the match.

However, Idaho did not give up. Kills from Leonard, Moore, Yocom, and Hymas continued to force sideouts. Reznicek added an ace to sustain the UI attack while, for the most part, the Vandal serving game looked a little rusty.

A net violation by Cal Poly botched their first attempt at match point, a kill by Leonard stopped their second, but the Mustangs would not be denied a third time as Cal Poly-SLO took the match 6-15.

"Unforced errors were the difference," Ferreira said. "Throughout game two, three and four, we made way too many unforced errors."

the Big West Conference title chase, now must save face and play for respect. Against Eastern Washington, Idaho will have a difficult challenge ahead of them.

It is not time for the Vandals to start thinking about next season just yet. Idaho's next task should be to fix some of the problems on offense and to play with a sense of urgency.

Washington State masquerades as Houdini for a week!

If there is anyone out there that does not think that this is Washington State's season, please drop me a line. The Cougars may have had their let down game this past Saturday in their one-point 35-34 overtime win over Pac 10 Conference rival Arizona.

Okay, the Cougars did not play that badly but they were not exactly on their A game either. After the defense surrendered 14 points early on, the Cougars then played the Wildcats evenly throughout the rest of the game. It was a good thing too, because the Cougars could not break away from Arizona.

Arizona quarterback Ortege Jenkins did his best Ryan Leaf impression by leading the Wildcats up and down the field, hitting receivers with sharp passes underneath, over the middle and down the sideline. The Wildcat defense was also solid in the early going as they harassed Leaf and held Cougar running back Michael Black in check.

Still, Washington State pressed on and came back, thanks in part, to Leaf and Black. In overtime, Leaf scored from one yard out to give the Cougars the early lead and then the defense rose to the occasion.

Arizona scored and decided to go for two and the win. The Cougars held the Wildcats out of the endzone to preserve the win. They say that the great teams don't always play like champions all the time but find ways to win.

In any case, Washington State is now 7-0 and 5-0 in the Pac 10.
