

Moscow home damaged by fire

MICHELLE KALBEITZER
 EDITOR IN CHIEF

University of Idaho senior Jennifer Mitchell waited numbly outside her home Wednesday evening while the Moscow Fire Department fought the fire which was burning inside the 815 W. A St. house.

Around 6:45 p.m. police received a call that the house was on fire. Mitchell said she was sitting in her living room when a neighbor from the basement unit of the house ran into the living room and told her to call the fire department.

Mitchell then stood patiently outside with some of her roommates while firefighters worked to put out the fire.

It didn't take long for the surrounding skies to become clouded with billows of smoke.

"Smoke was coming out everywhere and you could see the flames in the basement," Moscow resident Jodi Gear said.

By 7:15 p.m. it looked as if the flames had been doused for the evening, but they ignited again when firefighters tried to assess the condition of the house. Moscow Police Officer Rick McNanny said the recurring fire was a normal phenomenon since new fluxes of oxygen fans hot spots within the dwelling causing another surge of fire.

At one point during the evening the water hose on one of the fire engines malfunctioned which caused a cloud of steam to engulf the vehicle. However, another fire engine was called in to take the place of the one with the malfunctioning hose.

At press time the cause of the fire was unknown. Both units in the house are rented by university students.

Firefighters left after hours of trying to extinguish a fire on A Street. The house served as a residence for UI students.

GRE goes from pen and paper to computer

JENNIFER KARINEN

Filling in the oval with a No. 2 pencil is quickly becoming archaic in the realm of institutionalized testing.

In 1991 the Graduate Record Exam, the SAT for graduate school, was administered only by paper and pencil. The Educational Testing Service, the GRE's publisher, decided it wanted to computerize the test completely as soon as 1997. They started phasing out paper and pencil tests.

It didn't work out to be a technological testing utopia.

Sylvan Learning Centers has a non-exclusive contract with ETS to administer the computerized test. When ETS started cutting paper and pencil tests, students had to travel to the nearest Sylvan Center to take the test by computer.

"People have to drive a long way to get to a computer," explained Steve Saladin, psychologist at the UI Student Counseling Center where the paper and pencil test is administered. The nearest center to the University of Idaho is in Spokane.

Taking the test by computer has several advantages. The test is offered almost every day of the year. Results are available immediately and schools get them in about two weeks. Results are available four to six weeks after the paper and pencil exam meaning more than a month before schools received them.

Just because it was available every day of the year didn't mean people wouldn't wait until the last minute. There are four computers at the Spokane center. This means eight tests can be administered each day, four in the morning and four in the afternoon. People scheduling three weeks in advance, as advised, found the center booked for months. If they didn't get in they missed grad school application deadlines.

Difficulties in scheduling and the long distances students travel, often in bad weather, to computer test centers has made many schools seriously reevaluate the GRE as a requirement.

Students and grad schools put up a fight this year when the UI decided to phase out the October paper and pencil exam test date. The October exam stayed. June and December test dates were removed within the last two years.

The UI is trying to make itself a regional testing center to help deal with the problem. It would serve students from UI, Washington State University, Lewis-Clark State College and the surrounding area. Saturday it will be handling overflow from the Spokane center with the paper and pencil test.

Strategies for studying and test format have changed with the move to computerized testing. The GRE offered by computer is a Computer Adaptive Test. It interacts with the test taker. The simplest explanation of the CAT is when a person answers a question right they get a harder question next. If the person gets a question wrong their next question will be easier. This goes on until the computer assesses the person's level of ability.

One of the rumors that circulate around test preparation is scores on the computer-based version are generally lower than paper and pencil scores. This warning is on a GRE information sheet in the psychology department. Saladin said the ETS researched this and found test results comparative.

What the SAT was for college the GRE is for grad school. It is a measure to predict a student's performance in graduate school. One GRE preparation book, Cracking the GRE, claims that grad schools would make almost the same admissions decisions if they used old SAT scores instead of new GRE scores.

The GRE is made up of two components. First it is the General Test which measures verbal, quantitative and analytical ability. It lasts three and a half hours. The other part of the GRE is individual field tests from molecular biology to English literature.

Not all schools require the GRE in the application process. Only some programs require it at the UI. All WSU grad programs require the test. Schools sometimes consider only parts of the score. For example ignoring the qualitative and use the composite of other scores.

The Educational Testing Service publishes the GRE for the Graduate Record Examinations Board. ETS also publishes the SAT, the National Teacher Examination and several other exams including certification tests for hair stylists and plumbers.

What's that smell?

YVONNE WINGETT
 STAFF

Christmas tree hunters beware! University of Idaho landscape crews have once again treated all campus evergreen trees of Christmas-tree size with a powerful natural repellent to prevent them from being cut for holiday use.

The noxious repellent is a chemical composition created from coyote or fox urine, water and a sticking agent, such as glue. Once the spruces are sprayed, the repellent is glued to the trees, and won't begin to wash off until early next year.

The repellent's foul odor is hard to identify on trees in cool, outdoor temperatures; however, once the tree is brought indoors, the scent becomes unendurable. The coyote urine is released once it's brought into a warm atmosphere, and the rancid smell can linger in the house or apartment for weeks.

David Rock, of UI Facilities Management, says there were three spruce trees on I-tank Hill that were topped last year.

"They got them before they were sprayed — they just cut off the top half and took off," Rock said. Due to that incident, they decided to spray the trees earlier this year, hoping that would deter tree hunters from cutting them down.

Anyone caught stealing or in possession of one of the trees from on campus could be charged with grand theft since nearly all of these evergreens are valued at about $350. Some replacements could cost more than $1,000.

Charles M. Zillinger, assistant director of Campus Grounds at Facilities Management, says the campus police, the night-watchers, signs and the spraying have all effectively discouraged people from stealing the trees.

The UI started treating the evergreens in 1990. Before then, four to five trees a year would be cut down and stolen around Christmas time.

According to Rock, signs are posted on Hello Walk, Perimeter Drive, I-tank Hill, and various other landscape areas where there are a significant number of evergreens to warn "tree poachers" of the repellent.

Zillinger warns prospective thieves, "You pay for your pleasure. Your house will reek, and your eyes will water!"

Secretary for ASUI takes new UI position

CANDICE LONG
STAFF

ASUI Secretary Candy Boas is making a move she calls "going back to my old home."

After two years at ASUI, Boas has resigned to take a job she feels is the "perfect opportunity to allow me to grow." She will now go to work for the director of development in the College of Agriculture, Caroline Nilson. Boas has worked for the University of Idaho for the past 10 years, and worked for the director of state for 4-H, also in the College of Agriculture prior to working for ASUI.

"Taking this job was something I really struggled with because I do like working with ASUI students and the student body in general," Boas said. "It was definitely the students I wanted to work for all along. From what I understand, my new job will still consist of working with students, just alumni."

Her new job will entail working closely with UI alumnae organizing fundraising events, reunions, get togethers, and special events, Boas said.

When looking back on her experiences with ASUI, Boas said she will miss the daily and all-day occurrences at ASUI most of all. She feels she may go through a withdrawal from being with the students and the energy they give her from being with them everyday. Not only will she leave her everyday ASUI tasks, but her advisory position for the Student Issues Board as well.

"I feel almost like an advisor for all ASUI students," Boas said. "I feel like I've had some kind of relationship with a student that has passed through this door and I've made some really, really good friends here."

Even though Boas is leaving ASUI, she plans on staying as active as possible by volunteering for Homecoming and giving notice to all incoming senators that she will be available as a resource any time they have questions or need advice.

"I feel I have kind of been an older sister to these students or someone they look to for guidance. I've always tried to be there for them and I hope to continue doing that," Boas said.

"The joke around the office is that I would run for president if I ever went to school full time — that's how involved I like to be. But I have to say that it's been my privilege to serve all the students at this university."

Eye on the ASUI Senate

From Dec. 10 meeting, held at the SUB

Presidential Communications

Dalton reviewed some of the ASUI's accomplishments over the last year. His list included the GSA/ASUI separation, improvements to campus safety, the establishment of a student fee committee, bringing the AIDS quilt to the Palouse, and UI license plates.

Dalton presented a tie to Senator Adam Browning. The tie was passed to Dalton from Brian Kane.

It was meant for the next president. Since the next president is a woman, Dalton gave the tie to the vice president and presented Annie Averitt with his UI stocking hat.

Appointments

#41 Mike Twigg to Recreational Advisory Board

#42 Katie Heffelfinger to the Associated Student Fee Committee

Bills Passed

#53 A bill allowing senators to be paid lecture note takers

Grizzly issue polarizes Idaho

COLUMNIST

There has been a lot of discussion among people on the opposing side of the grizzly bear issue threatening to file a suit upon the big bears' reintroduction. The threats come from farmers, ranchers, and people within the timber industry. However, nothing is likely to happen for at least another year. Congress approved a funding limitation that prohibits the use of government funds in 1998 for anything but analyzing comments on the proposed reintroduction and making a Record of Decision. Bears will not be introduced during that period.

With this in mind, it seems unlikely that the U.S. Forest Service's recommendation that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service draft another grizzly bear reintroduction alternative, one they say is more acceptable to the people of central Idaho, will do any good. The Fish and Wildlife Service contends that the public acceptance of any grizzly reintroduction has not been shown. This is not the case, however.

Plucking just one poll from the several that show widespread public support of reintroduction, the National Wildlife Federation and Defenders of Wildlife took a poll of 254 adults (the majority polled lived in grizzly-designated areas) to see how Idaho and Montana residents feel about reintroducing grizzly bears into the Selway-Bitterroot wilderness area. Forty-six percent were in favor, 35 percent said no, 10 percent didn't know, and nine percent said they had no opinion.

If a new alternative was to be drafted, the public comment period to review the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's new draft environmental impact statement on grizzly bears in the Bitterroot ecosystem would have to be rescheduled and carried out all over again, delaying the reintroduction for years. The Service provided seven public hearings at which the public could ask questions, gather information, and provide testimony regarding the impact statement. These hearings, which were in Challis, Lewiston, Boise and Salmon, Idaho. They were also held in Hamilton, Missoula, and Helena, Mont. — all places that could be affected by proposed grizzly bear activities in the Bitterroot ecosystem. Introducing a new plan means doing this all over again, consuming even more time and money.

The plan was short-sighted and too hastily put together.

— John J. Craighead
Founder of the Wildlife-Wildlands Institute

John J. Craighead, world famous bear biologist and founder of the Wildlife-Wildlands Institute in Missoula, opposed the original plan unveiled in the released Draft Environmental Impact Statement by the Fish and Wildlife Service.

"It protected neither the bear nor the habitat," he said. "The plan was shortsighted and too hastily put together." Craighead recommended that the Fish and Wildlife Services start over, using the data independent bear biologists have learned from studying the grizzly, and write a plan based on that information.

"They didn't sought professional assistance from those qualified to provide it," he said. "We've studied the grizzly bear for nearly 40 years intensively. Biologists of the northern Rocky Mountain region have amassed more biological and ecological information on grizzlies than has been done on any large carnivore worldwide."

Craighead supports the Conservation Biology Alternative (Alternative Four) for grizzly reintroduction based on this research, and he said it is scientifically sounder than the Fish and Wildlife Service's preferred alternative.

The plan to reintroduce grizzly bears must be completed if the bears are also to be brought back to the southwest.

The Southwest Center for Biological Diversity, headquartered in Tucson, Ariz., stated that scientists have identified the Blue Range and Gila wildernesses and their vicinity as ideal grizzly habitat. The reintroduction in the Bitterroot wilderness on the Idaho-Montana border is necessary for them to be introduced in Arizona.

The Selway-Bitterroot ecosystem is a critical bridge between grizzly populations, and is blessed with one of the largest blocks of undeveloped public lands in the lower 48 states.

The Selway-Bitterroot ecosystem is the key not only to the future of grizzly recovery in Arizona and the lower 48, but also to the looming Salmon extinction as well.

In regards to salmon, the reintroduction of grizzlies will greatly benefit preserving the existence of salmon and other fish. If grizzly bears are reintroduced, then old logging roads will be removed. It is estimated that millions of tons of sediment will be prevented from going into streams in Idaho by obliterating these roads. This situation fills spawning pools and has led to declines in fish such as bull trout, salmon, and westslope cutthroat trout — simply another example of how helping grizzly bears also helps other species and one of the many reasons for removing old roads.

If we have low-cost logging of roadless areas in the Salmon-Selway ecosystem, this will mean there will be more human-bear conflicts and the bears will be killed. I can't understand why we should log a pristine roadless area when to do so would cost $137 million.

The timber industry proposal for grizzly bear recovery will only result in bears being transplanted to central Idaho and then killed when they come into conflict with the timber companies who will be paid to destroy grizzly bear habitat.

The true spirit of Christmas

LANCE R. CURTIS
COLUMNIST

Ah, Christmas, the season of giving, the season of family, and the season of compassion, just to name a few. We can read about and see many student organizations and other groups within the community who give themselves, their time, their talents, and their substance to those around them. All this holiday cheer just warms the heart.

Traditionally, Christmas is a time when Christians celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ. Yet the spirit of Christmas is not so much about being Christian as it is about being Christ-like. Thus, everyone can celebrate the season by adopting a Christ-like attribute. But what kind of attributes does Christ have?

Christ is kind. We could all display a little more kindness, like stopping for a pedestrian who wants to cross the street. Expressing kindness could also mean doing a good deed for a friend or even smiling to someone you don't know.

Christ is compassionate. Everyone is lonely at one time or another. So with all the loneliness in this world, we can each reach out in our own way to those in need of a smile, a hug, or just a listening ear.

Christ is patient. That's an attribute I could work on some more. Many people think that we writers title our articles, and we do. Yet somehow my titles rarely seem to be good enough in the eyes of the copy editor. So often I'll open up the paper to see my article with a completely different title that has nothing to do with the piece that I wrote and that makes me look like something I am not. But, instead of blowing my top, I try to be patient.

Christ is forgiving. How easily we are offended by trite remarks! Sometimes we take some things too seriously. Harboring a grudge against someone only adds to the weight that finals have already placed upon our shoulders.

Christ is long-suffering. When unfortunate accidents happen to us, what is our attitude? Do we wallow in the mire of self-pity and ask, "Why me?" Or do we look to discover what we might learn from our experience? Christ suffered many things, yet the few words which left his mouth during his greatest pains were words of love and forgiveness. What an example in a world so full of complaints about lesser things!

Christ is selfless sacrifice. In these days when major assignments and final exams are due and the difference between letter grades is sometimes only a few extra points, we can get absorbed in ourselves and our own needs. But there are thousands of other people in addition to you and I who attend this university. Taking a small moment to do a kind deed or say a thoughtful word will not only brighten someone else's day but also give you and I a good study break.

Christ is love. Every act he performed, every word he uttered, he did out of love. What an example in a world so full of hatred and spite! What an example in a world almost devoid of love! How much better would this world be if we could all put aside petty differences and learn to love each other for who we are inside?

Not everyone is Christian, but everyone can adopt these good attributes which Christ exemplified so well. Unfortunately, some in our society wish to strip the holiday of its Christian flavor. Some promote commercialism, convincing the masses that the season is primarily one of buying and exchanging gifts. While this practice is not inherently bad, many go through these motions with high expectations to receive rather than to give. We can get absorbed by materialism if we are not careful. How true an example is Christ, who freely gave everything he had, always thinking of others!

Some do not say "Merry Christmas" but rather "Happy Holidays." Many do this so as not to offend those who are not Christian. Such intentions to avoid offense are admirable, but I feel that Christians should use the traditional gesture. We need to remember the reason for the season.

So while some may want to belittle the role that Christ has traditionally played during the Christmas season, those of us who are Christian should assert our faith, not by coercion or manipulation, but, in the true spirit of the season — by gentle persuasion, by long-suffering, and by pure love. And certainly everyone, regardless of religious affirmation (if any), can adopt the good attributes which Christ exemplified. In this way, we all can more fully savor the Christmas season and improve our communities by improving ourselves.

Oregon prisoners shouldn't make minimum wage

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The most popular idea on the Oregon ballot in 1994 was a proposal requiring prisoners to work.

Three years later, the notion has lost favor with at least a few citizens. And it has become clear the measure would work better if state, and possibly federal, lawmakers would do some legislative tinkering.

While people on the outside might be wondering if Measure 17 was worth it, there is evidence it has made a difference on the inside. This week, Eastern Oregon Correctional Institute officials reported they are pleased with the first year of a work and education program at the prison. Although the program is over budget, the Prison Recognition and Award System has motivated prisoners to improve their behavior.

For most prisoners the financial rewards aren't great. They receive up to $100 per month for working, going to class or entering treatment programs. The big exception involves those inmates who work in the prison's blue jeans factory. Under interstate commerce rules, they must be paid more. They can make minimum wage or higher, allowing them to sock away hundreds of dollars a month.

This may not be what most citizens have in mind when they think of prison labor. But neither do citizens appear to want inmates doing much work outside the walls. So the question becomes: How do we meet Measure 17's requirements without overpaying inmates or allowing work crews in the community?

The Legislature could clarify voter intentions by setting up a system similar to Pendleton's, in which medium and maximum security prisons must confine inmates to their grounds. And our federal representatives could at least look at the possibility of amending laws that require inmates to be paid at a certain level.

Letter to the editor

Remembering Sophie's choice

The recent births of the McCaughey septuplets brought joyous responses from around the nation — but not from a part of the medical community.

"We don't consider this a happy moment," stated Dr. Elizabeth Ginsburg of Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. Dr. David Walmer of Duke University announced "this is something we fear."

Do the births bring fear to some because, against medical advice, all of the seven were spared premature deaths from direct abortion? The procedure is referred to as "selective reduction" — a sanitized phrase for an ultrasound guided needle aimed into the hearts of unborn babies selected to be "reduced" in multiple pregnancies. Selective sacrifice of the few for the hypothetical larger good of the many extends beyond this case. Each of our million aborted children annually is a victim of this choice, this stark expediency.

We might recall from the movie Sophie's Choice a mother in Holocaust Germany who was forced by Nazi soldiers to choose which one of her two young children would be allowed to live. In her fear, she selected one over the other, and in her action became part of the culture of death. Part of the medical profession is embarrassed by parents who refuse to be coaxed into a modern day Sophie's choice.

Today, doctors speak again of fear. But, facing the expanding horizon of medical technology, combined with the decline of medical ethics, we might notice that it is the unborn child — not the doctor — who has reason to fear.

Made in the USA still means it

ASSOCIATED PRESS

As we rush into a global economy, most of us need all the points of stability possible. That may be part of the reason behind a wise decision not to mess with the "Made in USA" labels that appear on many of the world's best consumer products.

Recently, the Federal Trade Commission voted unanimously to preserve the current standards for the labels. Goods with the labels must be "all or virtually all" made in this country. The vote came after furious opposition to a proposal to weaken the requirement and allow goods with as little as 75 percent of their manufacturing done here to be marked as "Made in USA."

It apparently came as a great shock to the commission staff that labor, small business groups and others would resent the change enormously. The change had been developed with the idea that globalization of the economy means that most products have components from various countries.

Thanks to the small businesses and labor groups, consumers will have labels that still really mean what they say. And shoppers will continue to be able to use the labels in whatever ways they wish in making their own buying decisions. They can do anything from ignoring country of origin markings to making them the critical factor. Especially at this time of year, that's a right Americans ought to have and use as they see fit.

McManus to sign books in Moscow

HEATHER FRYE

Popular Idaho humorist Patrick McManus will make two appearances tomorrow in Moscow: a morning book signing at the University of Idaho Bookstore will be followed later in the day with a visit to Waldenbooks. McManus will be signing his works and promoting his tenth volume of short stories, Into the Twilight, Endlessly Grousing.

McManus, a native of Sandpoint, Idaho was born in 1933 during the Great Depression. Few people came away from this time in history with much to laugh about but McManus was fortunate. Descended from a rich Irish heritage, McManus' family made no secret of their troubles, often spinning their tribulations into tales rich with humor and studded with a little fact and a lot of fiction. His mother read to her children constantly and McManus became an early admirer of Mark Twain, an obvious influence on his work.

Despite his humble beginnings, McManus has gone on to receive a vast education, become an English professor, tour the United States and the world, and become one of our nation's best loved writers. He has published numerous volumes of his own including such best sellers as They Shoot Canoes Don't They? and Real Ponties Don't Go Oink and is a renowned columnist for Outdoor Life magazine. Like Twain, whom he is often compared to, McManus bridges the gap between adult and adolescent literature. With his goofy-old-uncle sense of humor and moderately visceral descriptive touch, McManus is clean enough to satisfy even the most concerned parent yet he leaves in enough innuendo to keep the older set happy.

McManus' work has inspired two highly successful one-man stage plays as well. A Fine and Pleasant Memory and McManus in Love are currently touring the country starring Tim Behrens. Behrens portrays McManus, as well as the other comic citizens of McManus' imaginary city of Blight, Idaho.

From fly fishing and fattening food to pipe smoking and practical jokes, McManus' stories reflect the humor in the trials of everyday life. In the title story of his new book, he explores the topics of old age, progress, and the sadness of our shrinking environment, all wrapped into a tale of a curmudgeonly old man with a penchant for mild lechery and a sentimental yearning for an old-fashioned grouse hunt. McManus' usual motley crew, the denizens of Blight, Idaho also make their appearance in his new work.

In Work and Other Horrors, a young Pat and his semi-felonious sidekick Crazy Eddie Muldoon discover the value and inevitability of hard work through the misadventures of Pat's womanizing Uncle Flynn, and his odorous woodsman friend Rancid Crabtree. McManus' alter ego, private eye Sam Spud, makes an appearance in the case of the Maltese Fly, a famous fishing lure that has been spirited away by the victim's wife and milkman.

Even if you are not a fan of McManus' work, you may have some friends or family that are. A signed copy of his latest book would make a great and economical Christmas/Hanukkah gift at $20 for the hard bound edition. Another Idaho writer, Stan Tate, an Episcopal priest and teacher will also be on hand to sign copies of his new novel Jumping Skyward. Tate's novel chronicles his journey through his many fire seasons on the Seventh Squad of McCall, Idaho, where he was known as the "smokejumping priest." Tate will be at Waldenbooks from noon until 3:30 p.m. McManus will make his appearance between 4 and 5 p.m., preceded by an appearance at the UI Bookstore from 10 a.m.-11 a.m.

Hey, hey we're the Space Monkeys!

A review by T. Scott Carpenter

Off-stage they may be mistaken for Oasis. The get-out-of-my-face-before-I-shoot-you attitudes of the Space Monkeys are comparable to those of the popular British band that finds pleasure in creating controversy. Why is it that Britain spawns so many ill-tempered youths? Maybe it's the food.

Whatever it is, Britain is also a country responsible for many extremely talented musical groups. Space Monkeys follow in that tradition with their new album The Daddy of Them All which was released Nov. 4.

Space Monkeys began in 1994 and had a six album deal week after their first gig in November of 1995. While lead singer and guitarist Richard McNevin sounds much like the lead singer for Oasis, that's probably because everyone with an English accent sounds the same to ignorant Americans such as I. Other members include Chas Morrison on drums, vocals and percussion, Dom Morrison on bass guitar and sub bass, and the DJ Tony Pipes on keyboards, beats and samples.

You may have heard their most recent single "Sugar Cane" playing on the radio lately. If you have, then you still do not have an accurate idea of what the rest of the CD sounds like. Whereas "Sugar Cane" is more like a Sugar Ray remix, the majority of their album is more oriented toward electronica. We're not talking about any of the full-blown ambient sounds created by Chemical Brothers or Aphex Twin, but some influence in that direction is definitely present.

A perfect example is the first track on the CD, which I feel is the best song on the whole album. "Acid House Killed Rock and Roll" is an energetic orgy of powerful guitars and brain thumping drum beats all set in the middle of a Martian invasion. I think the Martians lose. This is one of those songs that will have you throwing furniture out windows and swinging the family dog over your head.

Then there are the slower songs. Track 10, which is entitled "Sweetest Dream," comes to mind. This particular song sounds exactly like something that would play at the end of some heartwrenching teen oriented love-story. I think it was designed to bring a single tear to your eye. It didn't work.

The lyrics, for the most part, are really quite interesting.

Why is it that Britain spawns so many ill-tempered youths? Maybe it's the food.

There are certain parts that are horribly cliché though. Here is an example from the song "Inside My Soul":

They say that love is shorter than a moment/But longer than memory and as deep as the sea. Why is it that the depth of the sea, ocean, or other various bodies of water are constantly used as a metaphor for love? It's like a metaphorical cop-out. Why can't people be a little more creative in this area? Yes, the ocean is indeed deep, but there are other deep things in the world too. Have you ever seen pictures of those humongous vats of pudding at the Jell-O factories? That's definitely a lot of pudding.

This one instance is more than made up for by the rest of the CD. The remaining lyrics are beautifully done: Spitting their bile down the back of my throat/Ain't you ever wondered why they call it dope/I used to run around with a head like a soupcan/speeding like a train, popping pills like Pac-Man.

Fans of other recent British bands who have made a name for themselves in America should not be disappointed with this album.

New Prichard exhibit displays diversity

AMY SANDERSON
STAFF

The latest exhibit at the Prichard Gallery features a few shocking, eye catching and thoughtful works created by instructors in the art and architecture department.

This year's annual exhibit displays the diversity present in the department with mediums ranging from oil paintings to a rubber sculpture. While some of the works are more traditional, most of the pieces are experimental and abstract.

Several of the works display specific, special interests like the work of David Giese. Giese's pieces reflect a fetish with classical Roman architecture. The three large, wall mounted pieces displayed are created with replicas of fragments excavated from the Villa Bitricci.

In another display, Glenn Grishkoff shows off his craftsmanship in a giant coat made with bamboo and hair brushes. The coat is even lined, in case it ever does get worn, and comes with matching moccasins and gloves. Grishkoff offers workshops on the craft of brush making.

One of the more memorable pieces is the installation created by Sharon Tetly, A Life of Stories: My Mother's Coat of Arms. The work mixes natural materials such as clay dust, leather and driftwood with metal pieces greened from oxidation.

An installation of a different kind created by Lori Calentine, is a far cry from the sentimental work of Tetly. Calentine, a temporary staff member with the department, has created a piece called Helminthine

Dreams: Tapeworm of the Imagination based on the idea of parasites. Outside a closet space created for the piece, a poem by A.D. Hqp explains why the tapeworm is king of the animal world. Covering the interior walls are repetitious images of the parasite. As the viewer walks into the small, enclosed space created for the exhibit, they suddenly find themselves up close and personal with several vials filled with tapeworms. The effect is pure claustrophobia and a feeling of being invaded by these slimy creatures.

Other puzzling works include the mixed media display created by Art History Professor Nathan Griffith. The piece shows one of Griffith's early report cards, a dish full of bees and a large needle. The viewer is left to wonder on the significance of the objects.

Many of the works have been shown at other locations such as the surreal and colorful oil paintings of Val Carter. Each painting shown is marked by the returning subject; man's best friend. In the work, Semper Fidelis (Always Faithful), Carter depicts several devilish dogs having a good time while the master is out.

Art instructor Richard Higgs has created an interesting piece of work painted directly onto one of the gallery walls. The experimental design is a large, black-lined spiral that appears to have no starting or ending point.

Other works at the exhibit include photographic and imaging work, drawing, and sculpture. The exhibit is a chance for students to see works done by a wide range of artists in the department. The exhibit runs until Jan. 21. Gallery hours are Monday - Friday from 11 a.m - 8 p.m.

Lady Vandals steal bragging rights from WSU

TONYA SNYDER

SPORTS EDITOR

If anyone had doubts about the direction of the University of Idaho's women's basketball team for this year, they were extinguished Tuesday night as the Vandals upset neighboring Washington State 62-51 in Memorial Gym.

"We expected to win. We expected to win since we played them last year," said Idaho head coach Julie Holt. "People have been kind of concerned about our preseason record. We've been playing the best preseason schedule in the history of women's basketball here at Idaho."

A very physically aggressive and athletic team, the Cougars seemed to have the advantage before the ball was tipped. Boasting two 6-foot-4 centers in Alke Dietel and Yvonne Kunze, WSU had a definite height advantage over even the tallest Idaho women at 6-foot-2. The Cougs lead the series over Idaho 22-8, winning their past nine games over Idaho including last season's 78-68 rout in Pullman.

Poor passes killed the Vandals in the opening minutes of the game with UI turning the ball over three times. Fortunately, this incident removed the turnover bug from Idaho's system. For the entire game UI, phenomenally, had only five turnovers compared to the 23 of Washington State. The Vandals took advantage of the high number of turnovers by Wazzu — in fact, they scored 23 points total off them.

In the meantime, WSU was in the midst of an 8-0 scoring run, led by two jumpers from Kunze. The scoring blitz came to a short close with the two-point jumper from Idaho sophomore Susan Woolf, a shot that rallied her troops and basically handed UI momentum that would sustain the attack, both offensively and defensively, for the rest of the game.

While the Vandals took the lead for the first time, the Cougar offense withered against the ever-changing Idaho defense. That was all part of the Idaho plan of attack.

"They [WSU] didn't score once against the 1-3-1 [defense] once in the first half. I think we did a good job changing up our defense and causing some confusion for them. I'm really proud of our kids. It was a great team effort," Holt said.

Washington State failed to score their next field goal until a 3-pointer by Joanna Smith snapped the nearly eight-minute drought, bringing the Cougs within two at 11-9. The Cougs knotted the score at 11 and then at 13, but poor shooting from the field opened the door for the Vandals. On the half, the Cougars would hit only 25 percent from the floor and only 12.5 percent from beyond the arc.

Idaho edged ahead thanks in part to Melissa McDaniel, who chipped in three field goals. Idaho headed into the locker room at the half, up a very respectable 30-18 despite their relatively slow start.

The shooting woes of the Cougars were by no means contagious. Idaho shot 40 percent from three-point range and 39 percent from the floor. Woolf led all scorers at the half with 11 points, draining two of three three-pointers. Woolf has been aggressive on the floor for Idaho already this season, this after tearing her ACL at the beginning of last season.

"Realistically, she hasn't played in two years. She played the first six games of her freshman year, maybe fifteen minutes a game," Holt said. "Tonight, she played really well. She's really come along."

UI managed to sustain its lead into the second half of play, but Wazzu slowly chipped away with jumpers by Kunze and Dietel in the paint. With 11:07 left in the game, freshman star Tricia Lamb came up with a huge offensive board and easy lay-up to drag the Cougs within two at 36-34, but that would be as close as WSU would get to catching Idaho.

WSU fouls put the Vandals right where they wanted to be down the stretch — on the line and in the bonus. While Lamb smoked two straight treys with a little over two minutes to play, endless fouls canceled out all her efforts.

Jennifer Stone went six for six from the charity stripe in the last four minutes of play while Kelli Johnson chipped in two with 7.5 seconds remaining. A buzzer-beating three-pointer by Smith couldn't pull the Cougs out from under the Vandals, 62-51.

Woolf led the Vandals with 14 points with teammate Alli Nieman nipping on her heels with 13. Kathryn Gussett came up huge on the boards for Idaho with nine rebounds, eight of those on the defensive end. Kunze finished off her game for the Cougs with 16 followed by Lamb with ten. The Vandals are now 3-5 in non-conference play while WSU drops to 4-2.

"We're really happy. I thought we played like a team. We came out and were confident and believed," Holt said.

The Lady Vandals will be back in action this Saturday night in Memorial Gym against Portland. Tipoff is at 7 p.m.

How quickly things change

BARRY GRAHAM

STAFF

The Denver Broncos were once the elite team in the AFC in 1997. Denver was in line to wrap up the AFC West division and, for all intents and purposes, had wrapped up home-field advantage throughout the American Football Conference playoffs.

So much has changed in the past few weeks.

First, the Broncos lose a nail-biter to their rivals, the Kansas City Chiefs, at Arrowhead Stadium. Then this past weekend, they fall to the resurgent Pittsburgh Steelers. As it stands right now, the Broncos have dropped from the top seed to the fourth. The difference is huge if you consider that Denver won't be a division champ and will host just one playoff game at Mile-High Stadium, where the Broncos have yet to lose this season.

It appears as if Denver has not lost a step, but has simply played against tough competition on the road. It is hard to imagine winning two tough games at Pittsburgh and Kansas City this late in the season.

Don't worry Bronco fans, your team has one last game in which to redeem themselves, and it will be a difficult one, make no mistake of that. First of all, you have to contend with one of the elite teams in the NFL, in their home ballpark.

Next, throw in the fact that Joe Montana will have his jersey retired at half-time. Can you imagine the jubilation and anticipation that awaits that ceremony? Finally, throw in the fact that one of the most miraculous comebacks could possibly take place — that being the return of wide receiver Jerry Rice, who tore his ACL in the opening game of the season.

If Denver hopes to really solidify itself as the toast of the AFC, they are going to have to rise above the great beast that is San Francisco and win.

But haven't we heard this familiar storyline before — the upstart AFC team that goes into enemy territory and hopes to take down the champ? And what happens? The upstart AFC team leaves battered and bruised, muttering, "We will be back next year!" Somehow, I think on Monday night, we will get to see and hear this story again!

'Just win' no longer Raider motto

As I watched Sports Center on ESPN Monday night, I couldn't help but see a poll that was being run on the internet in which the Oakland Raiders of the NFL received the most votes out any other team. So, you're probably wondering, was the poll asking which team in the league has the most talent? The answer is no. Well, how about the best uniforms? Once again, the answer is no. Well, maybe, which team has the most number one draft picks? Good guess, but again, no.

Over 40 percent of the polled response thought that the Raiders were the most disappointing team this season in the league. And you know what? They're right.

The Raiders have possibly the most

Vandal men can't hang on, fall to Cougs

TODD MORDHORST

STAFF

An intense Idaho men's basketball team outplayed Washington State for 30 minutes on Wednesday, but the Cougars made a run late in the second half and pulled away for a 63-52 victory.

Idaho coach Dave Farrar was pleased with his team's effort in Pullman and said his team will have to match or better that effort tonight against Southwest Missouri State.

"I'm proud of our kids. We weren't as prepared for a couple things as we would like to be, but the effort and enthusiasm was very good," Farrar said.

It appeared Washington State might dominate the game early as the Cougars looked to exploit their size advantage. Leif Nelson, a 6-foot-11 junior, scored several buckets early on jump-hook shots from the baseline. Idaho countered with Clifford Gray, who hit jumpers and drove hard to the basket for eight points in the first half. Idaho was down early, but made a 13-2 run, claiming a 23-18 lead with 2:38 left in the first half. The Cougars fought back and closed the gap to 26-25 at the half.

Washington State coach Kevin Eastman said the Vandals were the aggressors for the first 30 minutes of the game.

"I thought they came out a lot more fired up to play us than we did them. We just hung around and our coaches told our team this is like a Pac-10 game. Pac-10 games are grind it out, not real pretty type games, and from that standpoint, it was a good game to play," said Eastman.

Idaho tried to build a lead in the second half, but was unable to pull away. Point guard Avery Curry led the Vandal attack, scoring 18 of his 20 points in the second period. Idaho led 46-41, before the inevitable Washington State run.

The Cougars' Blake Pengelly hit a three-pointer at the 5:30 mark to tie the game at 46 and Washington State outscored Idaho 17-6 the rest of the way.

Idaho managed to compete very well despite shooting just 35 percent from the field. Turnovers down the stretch hurt the Vandals in their upset bid.

Turnovers in the second half had as much to do with the loss as anything. We struggled to score over the last four minutes of the game. If it wasn't for that, I think we would have beat Washington State," Farrar said.

With just two Vandals scoring in double figures, Curry said the team needs to have better balance.

Washington State's balanced scoring was led by Rodrigo de la Fuente, who finished with 16 points and seven rebounds, and made critical shots late in the game. Idaho's Kris Baumann said de la Fuente was the difference down the stretch.

"We knew they were going to make a run and de la Fuente hit some big jumpers. Every basket down the stretch was critical," Baumann said.

Carlos Daniel scored 12 points and grabbed seven rebounds for WSU and Nelson finished with 11 points.

The Vandals are making improvements in each game as they learn how to play with each other and how to run the offense. Curry said the team is starting to work better as a unit and is getting used to Coach Farrar's system.

"I think we are beginning to gel as a team. We've got to put it together pretty quick here, but I think it's coming around," Curry said.

Farrar agreed the team is improving and good competition should bring success.

"We don't execute things the way I'd like. I'm not thrilled with that, but they know what needs to be done and they're going to try to do it. I like the personality of my team. They're good guys, they're going to get better and we'll get better this year."

Idaho will try to impress a national television audience tonight against Southwest Missouri State. The game begins at 9 p.m. and will be broadcast live on ESPN2.

Idaho will have to deal with a Bears team that has superior size and talented guards. SMSU is led by 6-11 post Danny Mobre who averages 17 points a game, and guard Keyin Ault who averages 15 a game.

Coach Farrar knows his team will have to play at a high level to have a chance against the Bears.

"The schedule doesn't get any easier. We play Southwest Missouri State tonight and then the 60th ranked team in Montana State. It's the kind of people we like to play and we'll have to get better to win," Farrar said.
