Graduate student elections end today

Adam E-H Wilson
Staff

The Graduate Student Association closes the polls today in its first general election. "I've been pretty pleased with the turnout," said Tyler Bramble, who was operating a voting station in the Forestry Building yesterday. "We built this thing from the ground up without knowing what we were doing."

I was gonna be real happy if we got 5 percent, and we've probably exceeded it.

—Brian Peterson,
GSA President

While none of the booths was swamped with graduate students, most of the monitors thought the turnout was decent, especially for the first time.

The voting will continue today until 3:30 p.m.; students may also vote via e-mail.

President Brian Peterson, who is running for reelection, said the turnout had exceeded his expectations.

"I was gonna be real happy if we got 5 percent, and we've probably exceeded it," he said.

Bramble said he hoped for a 10 percent showing of grad students at the polls. He added that conducting the election entirely online would be easier for students who are usually pressed for time.

"It's so much easier to send them an e-mail and say 'Hey, vote,'" he said.

Five positions are open, two of which are contested.

Fayaz Khazi is challenging Brian Peterson for president. Both would like to increase stipends for research and teaching assistants. Khazi named better health coverage and placement services for grad students in his list of objectives. Peterson would like more money for grad student travel.

Running for vice president is Zaid Abdo. Tim "Chuck" Rinehart is going it solo for secretary, and Chris Manis for chair.

Paul McCarthy and Don Tobin vie for treasurer. The GSA formally separated from ASUI a year ago. Previously, its executive officers were elected by a vote from the GSA council.

Pop tab philanthropy pulls in 70 pounds

Candice Long

The pull tab philanthropy for 16-year-old Sarah Largent is well underway and UI students have contributed 70 pounds of pull tabs in the last four weeks — the equivalent of almost 96,000 tabs.

The philanthropy is being co-sponsored by ASUI and SARb in order to help Largent's mother stay with her in Seattle while she receives cancer treatments. Largent is one-third of the way through and is doing fairly well.

"I think we've put forth a pretty awesome effort," said Allyson Lee, community service co-chairperson for SARb. "But I still think we drink more than that. It's definitely a good start and every little bit helps if people will just continue to pull off more pull tabs."

The first set of pull tabs were recently collected and the Delta Delta Delta sorority has set the pace for the living group competition by collecting more than three times the amount of any other living group. Delta Sigma Phi was a close second by collecting almost twice as much.

"There's a really competitive attitude," Lee said. "Not only are students on campus participating, but a number of off-campus students have stopped in and asked if they can help as well. They've either stopped by and asked for cans to fill up or dropped off tabs. We've had really great support from all of Moscow in general."

Lee also said that local businesses, including Walmart, have also been collecting tabs in their employee lounges.

The next round of pull tabs will be collected on April 21, and Lee is hoping to get another 100 pounds. "I think our goal right now to get as much as possible — every penny will help them," Lee said.

The living group with the highest amount of tabs collected at the end of the semester will receive a general prestigious service award that will be given out at the ASUI awards banquet during Mom's Weekend.

Note — Beer bottle caps are not part of the philanthropy.

Queer: It doesn't just mean 'strange' anymore

Kate Lombardi
Staff

Queer (kwir) adj. 1. different from usual, strange 2. eccentric 3. [slang] to spoil the success of 4. [slang] a strange person 5. [slang] homosexual (Webster's New World Dictionary)

By using a term that has often been deemed as offensive by gays and straights alike, the former Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Student Association of the University of Idaho hopes to make the term 'queer' more socially acceptable.

Last semester, the group changed its name from the GLBA to the QSA, or Queer Student Association. In popular culture, the term has two meanings; one being the dictionary definition of "anybody that deviates from the expected or normal." The other is more commonly used to describe gays in a degrading way along with words like "faggot" and "dyke."

However, the QSA doesn't want the word to continue to carry its negative connotation. A quote on the organization's web page describes the name change. "As a group that tries to provide a supportive and understanding environment for all students, staff, and faculty on the U of I campus...the GLBA members struggled with trying to make the group more inclusive."

By choosing the word "queer," the group hopes to encompass all aspects of the homosexual community: lesbians, gays, bisexuals, and transgenders. The QSA hopes that it will close the door on specific stereotypes.

Dan Martin, co-chair of the QSA, explains the name as a change in the overall direction for the group. "The focus of our group has changed," Martin said. "When the GLBA came under new leadership last semester, the plan was to break away from a stale rut...as we broke away, things changed in the group's core."

Martin hopes that the name change is the first step in a long line of improvements and revamping. "We had to change the focus of our group in order to promote positive future change on our campus. The name change is something that is slowly occurring on a national level. Not just in little Moscow. In another five years, no one will even bat an eye at the term 'queer,'" he said.

Not everyone shares the same optimism as Martin. Freshman Staci Ballain said, "I'm not gay, but if I was, I would really take offense to being called a queer. I've always heard it associated with a negative connotation. I wouldn't want to embrace a term that had been used to degrade in the past."

The name change was also a risky move with the political atmosphere of Idaho. In a state where an anti-gay initiative failed by an inch a few years ago, the change and desire for a new direction also carries with it a high-risk factor. Yet the QSA is ready for whatever comes.

"[Queer] is less passive and more upfront," was the statement from the group. "By using the term 'queer,' we are making a statement that we will not be kept silent and that the queer students of the U of I are active in the fight for an open and respectful society."

Changing their name isn't the only thing that the QSA has been up to lately. On April 10, there will be a Northwest Queer College Conference at WSU. In late April, the group plans to bring the "Love Makes a Family" exhibit to the SUB. The exhibit discusses the issues and obstacles that gay families must face, much like heterosexual families.

QSA is sponsoring lectures and encourage all those interested to come and speak. The times are: 9:30-10:20 a.m. on Friday and 9:30-10:45 a.m. on April 9. The group also has speaker panels where they will hold a Q & A session for students.

QSA meets every Monday at 6 p.m. at the Women's Center and can be reached at 885-9621.

Father pleads guilty in daughter's death

MOSCOW — A 24-year-old father has pleaded guilty to killing his 15-month old daughter in a plea bargain that will keep him behind bars for at least 15 years.

David Pettit was shackled as he entered the guilty plea to second-degree murder before 2nd District Judge John Stegner. He also pleaded guilty to possessing a weapon while he has been in jail since the child died of shaken baby syndrome last October.

The plea headed off a May 5 trial for the former University of Idaho student on a first-degree murder charge in the death of Rebekkah Pettit. In exchange for the plea, Latah County Prosecutor William Thompson is recommending a 40-year prison term with no parole for the first 15. Pettit faced the possibility of life without parole for first-degree murder.

"I feel it's a compromise I can live with," Pettit told Stegner. "I've looked it up in some law books. ... According to what I've seen, it could be interpreted that way. The events that took place could be interpreted as second-degree murder."

Stegner withheld a commitment to the plea bargain until after assessing a pre-sentence evaluation of Pettit, who has been taking prescription drugs to fight depression.

Evidence compiled by prosecutors showed that the infant died of a "brutal shaking" that caused bleeding within the brain. It also showed that the baby suffered injuries prior to her death, including several broken ribs and more bleeding within the brain.

Pettit, who has two other daughters ages 7 and 6, is under stepped-up security since authorities reportedly thwarted an escape plan. Two other jail inmates who shared a cell with him tipped jailers off to the attempt, and a search of Pettit's cell turned up a toothbrush with the handle sharpened and a journal in which Pettit wrote about his intentions to escape.

Defense attorney Steven Mahaffy had argued from the outset that the first-degree murder charge was excessive, even after the state decided to not pursue the death sentence.

According to court records, Pettit had been baby-sitting his daughter for about an hour last October when, he told police, she fell from a chair and struck her head on a coffee table. He said he shook the infant in an attempt to revive her.

Pettit and his wife, Dawn, eventually took the child to Pullman, where doctors treated her for severe trauma and called authorities.

Dawn Pettit testified against her husband, saying he called the baby a "parasite" and wished they had never had the child. She said Pettit even tried to talk her out of taking the baby to the doctor.

Former WSU student is Titanic expert

PULLMAN — A Washington State University graduate is gaining new attention for his 7-year-old book on the Titanic disaster.

Don Lynch served as an adviser on the hit movie Titanic, and is listed in the credits as Titanic historian. His book, Titanic, An Illustrated History, is now selling briskly.

Lynch also has been showing up on numerous television shows to discuss the sinking of the luxury liner.

"There was week after week of interviews," Lynch said last week from his Los Angeles home.

Lynch became interested in the ship after reading Walter Lord's A Night to Remember.

He became a member of the Titanic Historical Society, and now serves as its vice president and official historian.

Lynch majored in finance, with minors in English and economics at WSU. He works as a controller for an aerospace company.

His book about the Titanic was one of the books movie director James Cameron read in researching his film. He offered Lynch a job as historian.

"Before the script was even a completed script, I went through it page by page, line by line" checking for accuracy, he said.

He caught some mistakes. Cameron had included some Italian passengers in steerage. Actually, there were no Italians on Titanic, Lynch said.

Lynch said the recreation of the ship is incredible.

"The sets are perfect," he said. "To be on the set was like walking on the Titanic...it was heartstopping."

He has a small role in the movie, as the father of a little boy spinning a top on the deck. Lynch has seen the movie nine times.

Fed funds nearer for U.S. 95 bypass

BOISE — The Sandpoint bypass project on U.S. Highway 95 may get a $15 million infusion of federal cash.

U.S. Rep. Helen Chenoweth, R-Idaho, has lobbied successfully for $25 million for two repair projects on that road, including the plan to reroute traffic around downtown Sandpoint.

"A $15 million earmark from 'ol Washington, D.C., puts a big priority toward the bypass," Sandpoint Mayor David Sawyer said.

The House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee approved funding for the bypass and $10 million for repairs to a stretch of the highway south of Coeur d'Alene between Bellgrove and Mica. Chenoweth is not on that committee but persuaded its members to approve the money.

The two projects are part of a House plan that would spread about $218 billion in transportation money nationwide up to 2003. Chenoweth spokesman Chad Hyslop said the Highway 95 work should survive because Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, R-Idaho, is on the panel working out a compromise.

Sawyer said the federal plan includes two interchanges which will allow drivers more access to downtown, a big selling point for businesses which fear losing profits if traffic is rerouted.

The money also would improve a six-mile stretch from Mica to Bellgrove, adding lanes and rebuilding new bridges.

Hundreds of new freshmen register on Vandal Friday

Charlotte West
Assistant News Editor

Many members of next year's freshman class have now made the first step in their college careers. High school seniors who attended Vandal Friday last week were able to spend a night on campus and register for next year's classes.

"A lot of them like the opportunity to come in and see what college life was like," said Sean Wilson of New Student Services.

Over 800 students attended the event. Almost 700 students were from Idaho, but there were also significant numbers from Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Alaska. Participants from as far away as Wisconsin and Texas also attended.

"We had a significant turnout from a long ways away," said Lloyd Scott, director of New Student Services. "It was easily bigger than what we've seen before."

He was very pleased with the results of the event. "This weekend cemented the deal for a lot of them," he said.

It was also an opportunity to make plans for next year. Financial aid statements were available, and participants were able to become acquainted with on-campus living groups. Almost 400 students on Thursday and 500 students on Friday night spent the night on campus. They were also able to meet with academic advisors on Friday afternoon.

Registrar Reta Pikowsky said 506 students registered for classes on Vandal Friday. "Although the actual registration process did not begin until the afternoon, it seems to have progressed very efficiently," she said.

All colleges registered students, with the most popular being Letters and Science and Engineering.

Wilson said much of the positive response to the event was due to the people on campus who were involved with Vandal Friday. They made a big difference in students' perception of the university. Scott said that the event was very "user-friendly."

Scott offers a "huge thanks" to the student body for hosting, guiding tours, escorting and making accommodations in their daily routines because of the extra influx on campus. He also thanks the faculty members who spent time with the visiting students. He said that studies have shown the faculty interaction can have the most positive or negative influence on students' impressions during orientation visits, and the UI staff certainly made a positive influence.

Scott also said he met several freshmen who participated in Vandal Friday last year who became involved this year. It was a kind of "generational passing of the torch."

He was impressed with the students that he met. "From an admission standpoint, the quality of the files that have been submitted looks to be very good this year," he said.

He said that they have already begun making plans for next year's event. They are looking for ways to improve and are considering holding two Vandal Fridays next year. "We're looking for creative ways to deal with the popularity of the event," Scott said.

Argonaut gains honors in Idaho Press Club competition

The Idaho Argonaut has walked away with nine awards from the Idaho Press Club, four of which were first place winners. The awards, which were announced on Saturday at a banquet in Boise, were given based on issues from September to November 1997.

"I found it was very difficult to choose particular entries for the Idaho Press Club contest — we had so many great stories, photos, and graphics that it took hours to finally pick which ones to send in to the contest," said Editor-in-Chief Michelle Kalbeitzer.

The Argonaut competed with several other Idaho educational institutions, including Boise State University, North Idaho College, and Idaho State University.

The awards were as follows:

First Place — Laura LaFrance, Photography

First Place — Tonya Snyder, Sports News Report

First Place — Jay Dertinger, Graphics

First Place — Wade Gruhl, Editorial

Second Place — General Excellence

Second Place — Ryan Donahue, Graphics

Second Place — Tim Lohrmann, Editorial

Second Place — Jennifer Karinen, Light Feature

Third Place — Jennifer Karinen,

Watchdog/Investigative

"We work very hard to provide the students with the best college newspaper we can produce...and it shows. In fact, these awards validate that we are doing some of the best work in the state. That says something," said Kalbeitzer.

"The fact that these awards are based on issues that came out months ago shows that we are doing something right," said Copy Editor Aaron Schab. "The staff strives to constantly improve, and I think we've done that. It would be interesting to see how we would fare in a current contest, since I believe we are putting out a better paper now than in September."

The Argonaut staff is waiting to hear the verdict from two other contests.

Architecture students identify buildings for UI historic district

*U-Hut, other doomed
buildings on list*

Yvonne Wingett
Staff

Their project began as just a class research assignment, but ended up being nearly a year-long undertaking.

In the fall of 1996, University of Idaho architecture student Amy Hogue and architecture graduate student Michael Brady set out to identify buildings which might be included in a future proposal for a historic district on the UI campus. Cathy Ballensky, and photographer Randy Meyer, both architect majors, later joined Brady in their quest.

The survey was undertaken as a cooperative agreement between the Latah County Historic Preservation Commission, the University of Idaho Architecture Department, and the architectural historian of the State Historical Society.

The project was completed in the spring of 1997, and recently, the Latah County Historical Preservation Commission released copies of the federally funded 1997 document regarding the historical significance of architectural features on the UI campus.

Brady says the idea was to be able to identify buildings of "historic character" — buildings or structures that are 50 years or older. Once these structures are identified, the next step is to restore or preserve them.

"It took up much more time than I expected it would," said Brady, "We had to go back and look at old records, find out who built the buildings and find out what they were made out of. To get pictures of old campus maps, we worked from old course catalogs, because sometimes they included maps. We just worked from bits and pieces of information, and then finally we got a Geographic Information System Map, which saved us!"

According to Brady's report, "of the 122 buildings included in the report, 61 are of historical character. Fifty-eight of the remaining buildings were built between 1947 and 1960. The remaining three were included to complete the historical record of fraternities and sororities on campus."

The buildings surveyed are clustered on the main campus, with the Administration Building as the "southern anchor."

The crew's primary goal was to identify the buildings and structures that were of historical significance, then to try to find buildings which might potentially qualify for a historic district. A "district" is a cluster of buildings and structures rather than just the structure or building alone.

In his report, Brady says, "while individual districts within the University of Idaho could be justified based on form and function of individual buildings and programs, what makes this university is the synthesis of the whole."

Throughout the campus, says Brady, there are small structures, such as sheds, and to include all of those for recommendation for "historical significance" wouldn't necessarily reflect the character he was looking for, so a lot of those "small structures" were left out of the report.

The advantage of historic districts versus historic buildings, says Brady, is that you can try to capture the flavor of what they were working with. Individual buildings don't really give a feel for the campus as a whole, whereas districts do.

Districts can include notable structures, landscape, and ruins that are part of the campus, such as the older trees along "Hello Walk," which predate the current Administration Building, and the Old Arboretum, which was the first college arboretum west of the Mississippi River.

The university is getting ready to tear down several buildings, including the Landscape Architecture Building and Communications Building, to make way for the proposed "University Commons," which is, in Brady's opinion, "not necessarily the best thing to do."

"I'd look at the university as a community," says Brady. "Right now, it becomes really easy to tear down an old wooden structure like the U-Hut, for example, because it's old and wooden, and it hasn't really had good maintenance as of late, but in itself, it reflects a layer of history that is not reflected in other buildings...it's a World War I-era building, and it reflects a layer of history that was important to this university, and that layer will be lost, and I think that's unfortunate."

"I think it's kinda funny that we're in a state that prides itself on traditional values, and the 'love of country,' and yet we have World War I-era buildings and World War II-era buildings which are going to be torn down...unfortunately I think that these buildings are being lost due to short-term thinking and short-term economics."

It's significant for these buildings to be named on this preservation list because it represents a part of Idaho history.

Buildings included on the list include: the Administration Building, the GAS House, Morrill Hall, Ridenbaugh Hall, Delta Chi,

AMY RENDALL

Despite being placed on UI architecture students Michael Brady and Amy Hogue's list of historic buildings, the U-Hut is destined to be bulldozed to make way for the University Commons.

Kappa Sigma, and Delta Gamma.

Brady says he thinks the recommendations are currently being processed, and he assumes that the recommended boundaries of historical zones for the UI campus, as well as structures, will possibly be eligible for inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places.

WSU professor hopes reactor remains open

Associated Press

PULLMAN — A professor who was awarded a $1 million federal grant is hoping that a Washington State University nuclear reactor — being studied for possible shutdown — can be modified for his advanced research into canine cancer.

Patrick Gavin's three-year grant from the U.S. Energy Department calls for researching a technique called boron neutron capture, which kills cancer cells by creating a small nuclear reaction within them.

Gavin, a veterinary radiation oncologist, for 11 years has transported sick dogs from Pullman to a reactor in Brookhaven, N.Y., to carry out experiments on the promising cancer therapy.

Now, Gavin hopes to keep his research at home using WSU's on-campus reactor. If school officials give him the go-ahead, he will seek an additional Energy Department grant to pay for necessary modifications.

Meanwhile, a WSU faculty committee is studying whether the Nuclear Radiation Center reactor should be decommissioned. The review has been under way since August 1997, when new federal regulations required replacement of a special enriched uranium used by the WSU reactor.

The university gets about $3.5 million in research money each year through the center. In the past five years, 35 students have received graduate degrees using the center, which costs about $300,000 a year to operate.

Every time, the decision was that the reactor was beneficial and should be continued as an important educational tool and research tool.

— Herb Hill, WSU chemistry professor

Gavin said discussions with WSU officials have convinced him the reactor would be allowed to operate for the duration of his studies. Decommissioning likely would begin in 2010.

"Realistically, this reactor would remain a research reactor," he said.

The WSU reactor would be useful in his research because its core is on a movable track, which would allow researchers to experiment with different kinds of neutron beams to treat different kinds of cancers, Gavin said.

Herb Hill, a chemistry professor and chairman of the faculty committee, said the evaluation will take at least a year.

The committee will present faculty and WSU administrators with "numbers everybody can agree on," Hill said.

"Over the years, there have been lots of evaluations of the reactor," he said. "Every time, the decision was that the reactor was beneficial and should be continued as an important educational tool and research tool."

The committee will study both the economic benefits of new grant monies for research and the costs of keeping research programs without a reactor.

Gavin's research involves dogs suffering from cancer, especially of the brain.

In the treatment, dogs are injected with boron, which makes its way to cancerous cells and then is activated by a neutron beam. The beam causes fission, which releases large amounts of energy that kills the cancerous cells.

The energy dissipates and does not harm nearby healthy cells, Gavin said.

There are two ongoing clinical trials of the treatment in humans; at Massachusetts General Hospital and Brookhaven National Laboratory at Brookhaven, N.Y.

University Residences should give reasons to stay in dorms

Explaining advantages of on-campus living could increase retention

Lance R. Curtis
columnist

Those who live in the dorms know that rate increases for next year have been proposed. University Residences organized a meeting last week to discuss the proposal as well as to obtain student feedback about the dorms in general.

The main reason for the rate increase surprised me. University Residences (UR) has been in debt for several years, and Michael Griffel, the recently hired Director of UR, is committed to correcting the situation. While it pays the salaries of UR employees, the university does not subsidize the dorms. Computer Services provides the computers in the computer labs, but everything else comes from funds secured directly from the students living there.

Even with the proposed increase in room and board rates, UR will still be in debt. Part of the problem is that rates have not increased for four years. Another part of the problem is that the various programs and services which the dorms offer to students. These programs and services have a price tag, and UR has been spending more money than it has taken in an effort to retain students residing in the dorms.

I agree with this reasoning. Room and board rates should be increased, especially in light of UR's present debt. I think that UR sees the need to raise rates, but they don't want to scare students away. Retention greatly concerns the UR staff, as well it should any business with customers, and it seems UR has determined that retention may best be obtained by offering students more than what other alternatives do.

If UR wishes to retain students, then they need to help them make an informed decision. Mr. Griffel talked consistently at the meeting about the convenience and value the dorms afford to students. If that is true (and I'm not saying that it isn't), then why doesn't UR point that out to students?

Instead of just listing the total price tags for various living options, UR should also list the various conveniences afforded to students who live in the dorms. Remind them about things like cable TV hookup and using their Vandal card instead of coins to pay for laundry. In this way, students can weigh the big picture on the scales when they decide what is and is not important to them in a college living environment.

UR also needs to give students a breakdown of the costs associated with the various services and conveniences provided. For example, how much does each student pay for a cable TV hookup? What about the telephone? How about utilities? With a breakdown in various costs, students can better compare living in the Residence Halls to living elsewhere.

Someone at the meeting suggested that it is unfair for students to compare food costs for those living in the dorms to food costs for those living off campus. The logic went like this: You cannot compare the price of food in the grocery store with the price you pay Marriott not only to buy and prepare food, but also to pay wages to employees. It's like comparing apples and oranges, and put that way, I agree.

Instead of just listing the total price tags for various living options, UR should also list the various conveniences afforded to students who live in the dorms. Remind them about things like cable TV hookup and using their Vandal card instead of coins to pay for laundry.

However, I see nothing unfair in comparing the cost both in time and money of purchasing a meal plan with the cost in both time and money of fending for oneself living off campus. The amount of money spent for food-related costs living off campus is certainly less than that spent by those who live in the dorms, yet off-campus students spend more time planning, purchasing, preparing, and cleaning than do dorm residents. When one includes time and money in the picture, the comparison becomes more fair than if one looked at money alone.

UR has developed some excellent ideas to improve retention. The computer labs will receive various upgrades. Many rooms will receive a "face lift." Tutoring and advising services will be established in the Wallace Complex. I believe these to be very good ideas so long as the students really want them. UR should determine what the students really want and then focus their attention accordingly.

This can be difficult to do. Many students say things like "The dorms suck" but do not elaborate. They condemn but do not justify their judgment. I doubt that many people think of UR employees as people who care about catering to student needs; people who have been beating their heads twice over to develop ways of retaining students. No one can properly address a problem which is not first identified. Instead of running away from the problem, students should work with UR, who I believe is totally willing to work with them, to find a solution which satisfies everyone involved.

UR took a good step in organizing a meeting where students could share their views with UR staff members. Such forums provide means for communication and understanding. Many of my perceptions were changed. But not everyone went to that meeting. If UR really wants to increase retention rates, they need to take the information from that meeting and spread it to the students. If UR were to explain to students the advantages offered by on-campus living, students might think twice about moving off campus. At the very least, even if students continue to move off campus, at least their decision will be more informed.

Student Insurance plans should have a chart in their brochures

Making coverages easy to compare should be a priority

Wes Rimel
Opinion Editor

Due to some errors in my chart covering the student health insurance, many students must be wondering about my mental capacity. Is Wes dumb? Or is he just on a misinformation campaign? I would propose that the answer is neither.

Some may wonder how it is possible I could interpret the student health insurance so inaccurately. I point to the brochure itself, which seemingly contradicts itself in its wording.

First off, the benefits do say expenses are covered for "treatment by a physician or surgeon," and it also says it covers "x-rays and diagnostic imaging." However, under exclusions, the plan says it does not provide benefits for "routine physical examinations including all screening tests (except mammograph examinations)." Wait a second. Aren't most doctor's visits more or less "routine physical examinations?" And isn't an x-ray a kind of screening test?

Webster's Third New International Dictionary defines screening as "the act of examining in order to make a separation into different groups." In other words, it's when a doctor runs tests or examines your body to try to figure out what is wrong with you.

The plan also says in section six of benefits that it covers "inpatient benefits for mental and nervous disorders."

However, in section 11 under exclusions the plan says it does not cover "expense incurred for mental or nervous disorders." So which part is right?

In addition, people get the most x-rays taken at the dentist. The dentist I'm going to now wants one a year. But the student plan doesn't cover dental expenses, so does it cover x-rays from the dentist? If so, how is an x-ray not a screening test? And isn't a laboratory exam, like a blood test, a screening test?

Assuming that the insurance does not cover x-rays at the dentist, which should be the case if they cover no dental charges except due to injuries, then I would say they basically don't cover x-rays. That is because most people get far more x-rays from the dentist than at the doctor, unless they are extremely injury prone.

The benefits also say they cover "prescriptions." However, in the exclusions the plan says it does not provide benefits for "preventive medicines" or "vaccines." Aren't most prescription medications preventive medicines? Take common medicines as examples: inhalers for asthma, drugs for allergy sufferers, pills for high blood pressure, heart disease, epilepsy, and on and on. All of these medicines prevent something: asthma attacks, allergic reactions, heart attacks, seizure... So any of these could be defined as "preventive medicines." So could antibiotics. Don't they "prevent" the spread of infection? It seems almost any medicine could be argued as being a "preventive medicine."

The plan also says in section 6 of benefits that it covers "inpatient benefits for mental and nervous disorders." However, in section 11 under exclusions the plan says it does not cover "expense incurred for mental or nervous disorders." So which part is right? I assumed the exclusions were right, because that is the only reason the insurance can say "sorry, we don't cover that."

Contrast this confusion with the other plan

I included in the comparison. It had a chart of what was covered and what wasn't covered, and it was easy to see, line by line, what was covered and what wasn't. The student plan, on the other hand, was like swimming through a sea of legal jargon that seems to contradict itself saying the plan has these specific "benefits", which are also listed under exclusions.

However, all of this confusion may be why some people have said the plan covers nothing, and why others seem to think it is a reasonable health plan. Again, it seems that nearly all medical help we receive could be perceived as "preventive medicine" or a "routine physical examination" or a "screening test."

With exclusions so broad and unclear, it seems that the student health insurance can more or less cover what they want, and declare they don't cover other things they don't feel like covering. My real concern is precisely that — students rely on the insurance to cover certain costs, but then are shocked when they are told "the plan doesn't cover that." Another concern is that the insurance only covers bills in certain situations.

However, some of this confusion could easily be cleared up. It would be beneficial to everyone involved if the university could include a chart and include what is and isn't covered, with their brochure — like the one that was advertised in the Argonaut last issue. This would keep confusion to a minimum and make it easier for students to make a sound decision on their health coverage.

Pacifica Network News provides alternative to corporate slant

columnist

Did you know that corporations actually control what gets on the news? Get this: Disney owns ABC, GE owns NBC, Westinghouse owns CBS, and the list goes on. Even in public radio, with all the corporate underwriting going on these days, it can be hard to know where to turn for truly honest, accurate and independent news. Listen up! Because there is more to news than meets the ear. Pacifica Network News (PNN) can be heard weekdays at 3 and again at 6 p.m.

Those who listen to KUOI 89.3 FM are likely familiar with the above promotion and with Democracy Now, an in-depth, one hour news magazine produced by PNN <www.pacifica.org> that can be heard weekdays at 8:30 a.m. PNN programs are a multi-course gourmet feast compared to the fast food slop served up by ABC, CBS, NBC, CNN and other major corporate news organizations.

Don't believe me? Listen to Counterspin on KUOI Sundays at 6 p.m. or Wednesdays at 5:30 p.m. Counterspin is produced by Fairness and Accuracy In Reporting (FAIR). FAIR also publishes a magazine called Extra. Counterspin and Extra take inaccurate or shallow reports and investigate them thoroughly, then present the differences between the real story and the corporate media story. Check it out!

A perfect example of Counterspin material is a recent 15 second blurb on riots and protests in Indonesia by Dan Rather of CBS News. The clip showed footage of a riot scene, but explained nothing about why. PNN listeners know that the riots are in response to the so-called "election" of military dictator Suharto as president. The "election" was one of those Soviet-style, unanimous "elections," with no opposition. In fact, candidates from the Indonesian Democratic Party were banned from campaigning. Apparently CBS feels that is of no interest to its viewers. Surely this disinterest has nothing to do with the huge profits U.S. corporations are reaping from cheap Indonesian labor, or that Indonesia is a massive emerging market, having the world's fourth largest population.

Perhaps the most significant story in the world today is that the stock market is booming as a result of corporate exploitation of cheap labor in places like Indonesia. Corporate media mostly ignores the labor conditions aspect of this story. This scenario was brought on by free trade agreements such as the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). These agreements have expedited the exportation of U.S. jobs, and sharply increased profits for large, multinational corporations. They do little good for the average citizen of Earth.

Are you aware that President Clinton is visiting Africa right now? Tougher question: why is he there? He is there to promote the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act, referred to as "African NAFTA." Yes, the President is in Africa to offer Africans the opportunity to work in sweatshops for pennies per day so that U.S. corporations can continue to earn obscene profits. Want details? Listen to PNN programs.

If you rely on corporate media you know little of the oppressive, brutal military dictatorship of Sani Abacha and the ongoing human and civil rights atrocities in Nigeria. In 1995 Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight other Ogoni people were hanged for opposing oil production on Ogoni lands. Recently witnesses in the trials of these executed men have signed sworn statements saying they were bribed to testify by Nigerian officials and Shell Oil. The

Clinton Administration currently gives lukewarm support to Abacha though human rights activists and journalists continue to be arrested, jailed, beaten, and even executed. There has to be a reason why the United States condemns some military dictators like Saddam Hussein, yet supports others such as Abacha. The reason is always commerce. If Shell Oil is operating in Nigeria, there is your answer. Who cares if some indigenous people and human rights activists are murdered so long as the oil and profits flow? I do. The sickening part of this is that Abacha would be destabilized if we cut off his oil revenues. But we don't.

Nigerian authorities continue to brutally suppress dissenting opinions. On March 3, more than 30 activists were arrested and beaten for participating in a pro-democracy rally. Four journalists are now serving 15 year prison terms for reporting on such events. This is just the tip of the iceberg.

Back to "free trade" agreements: Massachusetts is considering a bill that would impose sanctions on Nigeria for its human and civil rights abuses. This is good. Disturbing to me is that the White House warned Massachusetts that such a law would violate free trade agreements! If these free trade agreements were in place during the '80s, apartheid would still be law in South Africa. Apartheid, legalized racism, was dismantled mainly because of international divestment from South Africa. Under these so-called free trade agreements, such strategies appear to be illegal.

Tune in to PNN, and find out what you are missing. Then do something about it!

Perhaps the most significant story in the world today is that the stock market is booming as a result of corporate exploitation of cheap labor in places like Indonesia. Corporate media mostly ignores the labor conditions aspect of this story.

Try quitting donuts and burgers cold turkey sometime

This smoker-trying-to-quit agrees with Mary Schwantes (student health) that chewing tobacco representatives attempting to hook new users is "medically wrong, an addiction you can't (easily) quit cold turkey and is absolutely horrible for the body."

My problem comes with a university health professional, a university, and a country that (to paraphrase Barry Goldwater) has decided extremism in defense of health is no vice. In this instance we have a condemnation of tobacco "pushers" that hundreds of students/faculty are reading even as they sip soft drinks, eat maple bars, chocolate muffins, cheeseburgers, etc., all supplied by that same university.

Anybody tried to quit cheeseburgers cold turkey lately? Chocolate? Do the words diabetes, obesity, high cholesterol, stroke or heart attack ring a bell when discussing the high cost of health care?

These are not new observations in the smoking debates of the past 20 years. Nor is it new to mention the high cost of sports/exercise injuries or work-a-holic stress implications. But I don't see any donut munchers, track runners (limping from their last blown knee ligament), football players (still recovering from that recent concussion) or work-a-holic administrators standing out in sub-freezing temperatures while indulging in their bad health habits. I don't see any scholarships for smokers.

I do begin to read of doctors who will no longer treat smokers who won't quit, feel the effects of increased health costs because I am a smoker, and see at least one local employer who will hire only non-smokers. Presumably, "chewers" are treated the same. Before we continue down this road which demands "health perfection," we need to really think about where it leads. It always begins with a target that's easy for a given population to "hate," but it usually ends quite differently. This comparison is not new, either. But I think in light of this health hypocrisy, it needs repeating.

Strong relationship between students and faculty is vital

Lance R. Curtis' column of March 24, "Students should be responsible for their learning," makes many important and valid points. He is quite correct in pointing out that UI students pay only a small portion of the cost of their college education. He further notes that, because of this, it is difficult to make the case that teachers work for the student. One of the challenges faced by almost all public universities is the large group of differing constituencies (bosses) with sometimes divergent interests. For instance, the UI would number among its primary constituencies industry, taxpayers and society at large, elected and appointed state officials, the local community, parents, alumni, the federal government (a primary source of grant money), staff and faculty, and last, but certainly not least, students. When contemplating this reality, it might be helpful to consider that, in marketing, customers are generally defined as those that pay for a product while consumers are those that actually use the product. In this respect, students are only one of a large number of customers of the UI. However, they are one of the primary and key consumers of the university's product offering.

As Lance also points out, students are ultimately and primarily responsible for their education. However, faculty and students are both responsible for the learning that transpires in the classroom. Education is a co-production process.

Ultimately, the student's performance is inseparable from the performance of the instructor just as the instructor's performance is inseparable from the performance of the student. For instance, if a student does poorly on an exam, is it because the student didn't study, or is it because the instructor did not prepare the class?

Therefore, while the faculty does not work for the students, the relationship between the two is still significant. Perhaps the best way to consider the relationship between faculty and student is that of a coach and player who work together for a common goal. Lance did an excellent job of pointing out the complex nature of the relationship between instructor and student and in forcefully making the point that students who take charge of their education will reap the most from their education. We agree with Lance that students should take responsibility for their learning. In fact, our observations lead us to believe that students who "take charge" of their education tend to "take charge" of their careers and become very valuable employees and contributors to society.

Scott condones un-Christian acts and attacks true love

In response to Mr. Mahurin's column, I am appalled and insulted. Mr. Mahurin proceeds to lash out at what millions consider a wonderful film on the premise that the "Love Story" between the heroes Jack and Rose is immoral, and sinful in the eyes of God.

Mr. Mahurin considers the love story sinful and attaches the label "fornication" to the intimacy they shared hours before the sinking. Never mind the fact that he has no comment about the arrogance of man in the face of nature. Never mind that he has no comment on the cruelty and arrogance of man toward his fellow man. Mr. Mahurin saw fit to trash and foul the single thing of real beauty on board that ship — true, lasting love.

Mr. Mahurin saw fit to attack Titanic director James Cameron's self-proclaimed theme of "follow your heart, it will never lead you astray," and attempted to compare the desire to risk all for the one true love of our lives to petty theft in a shopping mall. Real love makes one do crazy things like "buck the establishment," or to remain in 30 degree seawater so that a loved one should survive. What of Rose's jilted fiancé when he "followed his heart"? Mr. Mahurin mentions nothing of his violent, vindictive, cowardly behavior, and by his silence he condones these extremely un-Christian acts.

Mr. Mahurin objects to and deems the "Love Story" sinful with an argument I can only guess to be "intimacy outside the covenant of marriage." Granted, Rose and Jack's love was short-lived in the flesh, but it was just as legitimate and true as any loving, healthy, lasting marriage. This love overcame the tragedy of the Titanic; it outlasted the sorrow and terror of the moment. Their love survived the ages and fathoms, and they were rewarded for their fidelity in the afterlife. How can such devotion, honor, and love be so wrong? Isn't this the love each of us desperately seeks? Doesn't Mr. Mahurin want a love like this? I would assume not, as his labors work to make cheap such passion. In the end, Rose took Jack's name, Dawson. To me, this is as great a symbol of love and union as any ring or document.

Somehow, Mr. Mahurin forgets that Christianity is a faith of humility, tolerance, peace, and love. He ignores the arrogance, elitism, and violence, and he attacks the love, passion, and freedom so beautifully portrayed in the film. In my eyes, this true, lasting love is more brilliant than the splendor of any ship, more beautiful than the elegance of any ballroom, and more noble than the creases and perfume of the landed gentry.

I feel that Mr. Mahurin has embarrassed himself with his hasty lack of vision and his judgementality. What's worse is that he feebly attempts to justify a weak argument with Christian fundamentalism, somehow lending moral credence to the column. I seriously doubt Mr. Mahurin has any concept of true love, otherwise he may have seen the true beauty of the film. Mr. Mahurin specifically mentioned "holes" throughout the column, holes in the ship, holes in the story, etc. To tell the honest truth Mr. Mahurin, the only hole I see is you, asshole.

Final show marks end of Collette

by Amy Sanderson

Come summer the run-down but well-loved Jean Collette Theatre will no longer be. When the lights go down on the last show of Orchards (which opens tonight), the well-used building will be gone and with it a long history.

"It's a special space, and even though the roof leaks and its been repaired probably more than any building on campus, the students still feel very attached to it...it's their home away from home," said Forrest Sears, a professor who has been with the department for the last 30 years.

Having kept track of the Collette's historical background, Sears offered a few legends and stories surrounding the vintage theater. For one, the Collette is believed to have served as a USO building for entertaining troops during WWI in Spokane. "I tend to think the story is absolutely true because when we were remodeling the theater we found a newspaper reporting the Armistice declare of 1918," said Sears.

Other historical interests exist in the theater, including murals in the building's loft painted by art students in the 1930s. "The building is not just a cinder box with character, there is a lot of history there," said Sears.

Sears first came to the university in 1966 and since then has seen the theater undergo many different levels of metamorphosis from the first time he laid eyes on it. "It was just a little proscenium theater with a little American flag out front...It was like a high school auditorium," said Sears.

In the '70s, the modest theater was transformed from a "cold and unfriendly" proscenium stage to a thrust stage bringing the audience closer to the actors. A more intimate and flexible setting was created, explained Sears. During this time the Collette hosted some of the most memorable shows including Playboy and a large-scale Romeo and Juliet equipped with a full set and balcony. "There was a wonderful sense of intimacy and spectacle that was possible to do that surprised us all," said Sears.

It wasn't until last year that the theater was transformed into a space with movable rows of seats and stage that could be easily transformed into any configuration. Now the space could stage theater-in-the-round or Black Box, the Collette's current hallmark. The Collette continues to provide students a creative ground for experimentation and student directed productions. "It has always been the students' theater," said Sears. The KIVA auditorium in the Education Building will become the new space for student productions in the future.

Graduate student Todd Jasmin is the last director to host a show in Collette before it is torn down this summer. Orchards, a collection of seven one-act plays based on adaptations of Anton Chekov's short stories, is the grand finale of the theater's long life. Realizing it was the last show, Jasmin and scenic designer Nick Fouch chose the collection of one-acts as a final farewell.

"We wanted the Collette to go out in glory; we wanted her to look the best she could," said Jasmin.

Orchards will take the audience on a journey through several very different settings, from Chekov's Russia to the Louisiana Bayou. The ensemble cast was challenged with the ambitious task of putting together a variety of works ranging from humor and farce to works of a more serious nature. "We have seven plays, so basically we have seven worlds that we have to create in a very short amount of time," said Jasmin.

In The Talking Dog, creativity was called on to solve a staging problem. In this humorous piece written by John Guare, a couple confesses their love for the first time as they dangle in the air on hang-gliders. Based on Chekov's The Joke, set on a hill with a tobogganing couple, the modern play is a love story set in a '90s-style situation. In the Collette performance, the actors will not hang from the ceiling but cruise down large ramps on roller blades creating a similar effect to hang-gliding.

Jasmin, who directed Independence last spring, felt the group of plays would be appropriate for Collette's unique intimate space and the experimental presence the theater is known for. After weeks of rehearsal, the cast and crew is now prepared for the final moments with their theater. "I don't think it's going to hit us until the Sunday matinee when we take the bow...that's the last one," said Jasmin.

Orchards plays March 31 to April 4 at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, April 5 at 2 p.m. Tickets go on sale an hour prior to each performance and there are no reservations or advance sales. Prices are $5 for the public and $3 for students, with ID.

The Suicide Machines prove relatively harmless

A movie review by Mark Deming

Despite brandishing some creative body piercings and a morbid name, a new album by The Suicide Machines gives listeners an injection which is not necessarily therapeutic, but not lethal either.

Catching the newest wave in popular music, The Suicide Machines are surfing into success with the rest of the ska crowd. The foursome from Detroit have opened for the likes of The Mighty Mighty Bosstones and Rancid. In 1994, they left Motor City to embark on their own West Coast tour followed by an even more ambitious national tour in 1995 for which they paired up with ska punk buddies Buck-O-Nine. Their first major label recording, Destruction by Definition, on the Hollywood Records label, has sold nearly 200,000 units since its release in 1996 and earned the distinction of being named #15 on Soundscan's 1997 ranking of alternative artists.

On their freshly cut second album, Battle Hymns, the band picks up where they left off by continuing to develop a unique musical style that jukes and jives in and out of poppish ska and raging thrash punk. Their style succeeds in that it is relatively fresh with moments of enticing grooviness but often borders on the incredible by slipping into a schizophrenic identity crisis competition between Debbie Gibson and Marilyn Manson.

When comparing Battle Hymns with their first album in a prepared statement, vocalist Jason Navarro reaffirms the music's contradictory nature, saying: "The music is poppier but also harder."

Despite tackling some very weighty subject matter, the album's lyrics prove to be its biggest downfall. Whether taking on social issues such as racism or personal issues such as failed love, their words slip into banal cliches that hit with all the power of a Beach Boy's Christmas album. At risk of doing a disservice to an important cause, the group lashes out at racism with the profundity-lacking opening lines "some persecute their brothers because of/ the color of their skin, oh yeah./ well that's wrong." The cut's title, "Black and White World," fails to match the cutting edge inventiveness of Stevie Wonder and Paul McCartney, who at least had the good sense to employ a thesaurus when writing the song "Ebony and Ivory." When speaking for the cause of adolescent individuality and the importance of freeing the mind of prejudice and paradigms in the tune "In The End," Navarro sings "Being different means being cool/ it's alright to be different." Were it not for a few strategical usages of the sincerity enhancing f-word and the token exclamation "oil oil!" the band's promoter might have booked them a gig joining Lydia and Gordon for a jam session on the steps of Sesame Street.

The importance of good lyrics, however, is negligible for the bump and groove bar hopper crowd that frequents TSM's average venue. Some background noise, sound reverberation, and a few beers will do wonders for a band with good licks and lame lyrics.

"We always try to keep sight of the fact that this band is about having fun," said guitarist Dan Lukacinsky in a prepared statement.

And so should listeners.

...a few beers will do wonders for a band with good licks and lame lyrics.

Corekshun - Korrection Correction...

The end of a line was mistakenly cut from T. Scott Carpenter's March 24 "Caffeinated Rant" concerning the lack of humor in The Family Circus. The sentence should have read, "I blame Bil Keane for the murders of John Lennon and JFK as well as the declining population of Botswana tree monkeys." The last 10 words were unfortunately erased from this sentence. The Argonaut regrets the error.

AIDS lectures offer double-dose of tragedy and inspiration

by Heather Frye

The blight of the AIDS epidemic may seem a world away from our small Idaho college town, however, two AIDS awareness speakers will be here tonight at the Student Union Building Ballroom to remind of just how close to home this, the gravest affliction of our time, actually is.

Steve Sawyer, of Wolfeboro, N.H., was diagnosed with AIDS as a senior in high school. A life-long hemophiliac, he acquired HIV from various contaminated blood transfusions. At the time he was diagnosed, his doctors gave him less than a year to live.

Now, three years later, he is touring our nation's college campuses to describe his life story, which was part of the television special Too Young to Die. With his unusual sense of humor, Sawyer details the enormous flux of emotion he went through after his diagnosis and his renewed faith in his God that lent him peace of mind.

San Francisco art student-turned-political activist Cleve Jones is a founding member of the San Francisco AIDS Foundation and one of the progenitors of the world famous NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt. Jones has been a prominent gay rights activist since 1978, when he organized the candlelight marches to commemorate the ruthless assassination of gay San Francisco Supervisor Harvey Milk and Mayor George Moscone. During the 1985 march, when the death toll due to AIDS had already risen to over 1,000 people, Jones urged marchers to write the names of loved ones that had passed on due to AIDS on cards and affix them to the San Francisco Federal Building. The cards placed together reminded Jones of a patchwork quilt and inspired him to found the NAMES Quilt Project. He began with six others in a humble San Francisco storefront in 1987. His idea was to create 3' x 6' (the size of a human grave) quilt panels that would commemorate the lives of AIDS victims and serve as a visual reminder of the growing AIDS epidemic.

The project quickly picked up steam, gathering the interest of thousands who put together the original 1,920 panel quilt that was displayed in October 1987 on the National Mall in Washington, D.C. Since then, the quilt has toured the United States and abroad, growing at an alarming rate at nearly every stop as locals with relatives, friends, and lovers who have died of AIDS come forward to add yet another square to the now over 15,000 panel (and still growing) quilt. The NAMES Project has 44 U.S. Chapters and 39 independent affiliates worldwide and was nominated for a Nobel Peace Prize in 1989.

Jones is HIV-positive and will be speaking on AIDS awareness as well as the work he has done as an activist in the gay community.

Both of these inspirational lectures will be held in the SUB Ballroom. Though they will both be talking on the topic of AIDS, they will be speaking from two entirely different perspectives on the subject. The fact that two groups sponsored AIDS speakers on the same night is coincidental. Sawyer, whose speech is sponsored by The Campus Crusade for Christ and The Baptist Unitarian Ministries will speak at 7 p.m. Jones, brought to Moscow by the ASUI, will follow at eight at 8 p.m.

To find out more information on Sawyer, check out his homepage at <http://www.thecampusministry.com/stevesawyer>. The NAMES Project has an excellent website at <http://www.aidsquilt.com> which includes information on many gay rights and AIDS foundations as well as information on the quilt. Both lectures are free to the public. If you have any questions, call ASUI Productions at 885-6485.

The Yard of St. Mary's Catholic

by Mike Last

By the sixth grade, by the time
I was old enough to learn Spanish
but not old enough to care,
I slunched at my desk, as I did in pews on bright Sunday mornings where I was forced to recite
the Apostle's Creed, and mumbled in a congregation
of 12 year old boys,
"Esto es mi libro,
mi libro esta verde," while staring out the window to the warm invitation of freshly cut grass;
a gathering place for grade school monks,
an open yard we yelled across,
where open sky welcomed our running,
our jumping. And when we fell,
as children do, hard as Goliath's heavy arms,
we sat on that yard
pulling out fistfuls of grass and earth that St. Mary's was built on;
uprooting the schoolyard from the school.

A Look Ahead

- International artist and clinician Deanna Swoboda will present a concert tonight in the Lionel Hampton School of Music Recital Hall and at 8 p.m. This concert is free and open to the public. Swoboda plays the tuba.

- AIDS awareness speakers Steve Sawyer and Cleve Jones will lecture at the SUB Ballroom tonight. Sawyer begins at 7 p.m. and Jones at 8 p.m.

- The last production to take place in the Collette Theatre, Orchards, starts tonight at 7:30 p.m. and will go through April 4. On April 5, the very last show begins at 2 p.m. Go and see it before the wrecking ball starts swinging!

- Why read the play? The movie version of Hamlet comes to the Borah Theater tomorrow at 7 p.m. On April 3, the Amistad will come to the Borah at the same time. Admission to either show is $2 to students with ID and $3 general admission.

- Well-known mystery writer Elizabeth George will speak about "The Mystery as Literature" at the WSU CUB Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. on April 9. George has been compared to Dorothy Sayers, Ruth Rendall, and other literary big-wigs. The lecture is free and open to the public.

- The Glen Bach and Mel Strawn exhibit at the Prichard Gallery continues until April 8. That's just a little over a week, so if you haven't seen it yet, make plans. Glen Bach's work is entitled Breaking the Sound Barrier and is composed of digital mixed media. Mel Strawn's work also consists of digital mixed media and is called Transitions.

Ski team sends two to regionals

Marty, Kerby hope for team invite next season

Tonya Snyder
Sports Editor

It was one of those years for Cathy Marty, a junior on the Idaho ski team. "I didn't have the greatest season ever," said Marty. "Sometimes you just have bad days, and I guess I was having a lot of bad days."

During the course of the three regular season races, Marty performed well when she was on, consistently finishing in the top 15 of the Northwest Conference competitors. But when she was off, it showed with unfinished races.

But her performance, though mixed, was good enough to earn her a spot at the Regional Championships where she was joined by Idaho teammate Dane Kerby.

"I was shocked when it was announced I had made it [to regionals]," said Marty. "It really took me by surprise."

Kerby had a bit more success than Marty on the season. Twice during the regular season, he finished third in his races. Serious competition for Kerby, however, is nothing new.

"I've raced since I was 5 at a serious competitive level," he said.

With just the three regular season races and a weeklong Christmas camp as their only training on the slopes, the UI team performed very well.

"As a team, we did pretty well considering we didn't have any real training. We were actually next in line to make it as a team to regionals."

Marty and Kerby were the only two Idaho representatives at the meet, period. Unlike many of the other teams, the Idaho squad had no coaches to help ease the burden. Marty and Kerby were responsible for attending coaches meetings, and arranging for travel and accommodations on top of keeping their focus out on the slopes.

Having another teammate around was a blessing to Marty.

"It really helped having someone go down there with me. We didn't have any coaches go down — it was just the two of us. It's a lot of responsibility to take care of all the arrangements for two people."

The performances by Marty and Kerby were less than Olympic, despite the slopes on which they competed. The site of the 2002 Winter Olympics, the Giant Slalom in Park City, Utah, brought falls and disappointment.

The bad luck Marty had experienced during the regular season continued to plague her performance at regionals. A fall in the GS saw Marty finish far back in the field of nearly 70 women's competitors. The slalom, a slower and more technical race for Marty, also went badly, when a fall kept her from finishing.

"I've had bad luck the past couple years, and in three years of competing at regionals, I have never completed a slalom run," Marty said.

Kerby, a freshman at UI completed the first run on the Giant Slalom course before a fall in the second knocked him out of competition. Kerby and Marty competed with over 16 schools from the entire Northwest.

Next season, Kerby has high hopes for himself and the Idaho club team.

"I definitely want to make it to nationals next year. Another goal is to have the whole team make it individually to regionals."

As for Marty, she wants another shot at a clean run in the slalom at regionals.

According to Marty, next season may look even more promising for the Idaho club team. With most club team members never having competed competitively before joining the club, extra training would be a great asset.

With the reopening of a nearby ski slope rumored, the team hopes to possibly take advantage of some more training time, time that Marty thinks will make a significant difference in the team's overall performance next year and in the years to come.

Cathy Marty (above) and teammate Dane Kerby (below) were the only two members of the UI ski team to compete at regionals in Park City, Utah. They competed against 16 other schools from around the Northwest.

1998 NCAA tournament promises to be one to remember

staff

How good was this year's NCAA men's basketball tournament? Well, this writer believes that it may have been one of the best ever. There was a moment during the Final Four this past Saturday in which one of the CBS basketball analysts stated that 18 of the 62 games played up until this point had been decided by three points or less. This is an amazing statistic that serves notice to all of those that have stated that college basketball is losing its luster.

Regardless of whether Kentucky or Utah wins the NCAA National Championship, the tournament will be remembered for the buzzer beaters, the tremendous performances and the amount of surprises from the "higher seeds".

First and foremost, what about the Cinderellas of this year's tourney? They called it "Pacer" and Valparaiso used it to its max in their stunning first round win over Mississippi. The Valparaiso kids and coach Homer Drew had practiced the play, that had been invented by the Indiana Pacers, and fully intended on using it last-second game-like situations. They had their opportunity against Ole Miss. A full-court pass was tipped twice and then into the awaiting hands of Bryce Drew, Valpo's best shooter, who drilled the shot from about 25 feet. Congratulations to Valparaiso!

How about Rhode Island's stunner over Kansas in the second round of the tourney? Coach Jim Harrick had the experience and the type of guards that could breakdown Kansas's pressure. Guards Cuttino Mobley and Tyson Wheeler came to play against Kansas and the Jayhawks outside shooting was once again suspect in the loss. To this day, Kansas coach Roy Williams can hardly believe that his Jayhawk squad was unable to win that game against the Rams.

Sticking with the Midwest bracket, of all of the teams that advanced to the Final Four from the Pac 10, how many people had Stanford as one of those squads? Especially after losing Brevin Knight to the NBA. The Cardinal proved many people wrong even after their tough one-point loss to Kentucky in the Final Four. The Cardinal had so much size in the middle. But, fans may not have realized how good their perimeter players were. Kudos to the Cardinal.

Michigan's Robert "Tractor" Traylor may have been one of the hottest players going into the NCAA tourney. Traylor was so confident that he guaranteed that his Michigan Wolverine team would get to the Final Four. His prediction was off as the Wolverines were defeated by the UCLA Bruins in the second round of the South bracket.

The biggest shocker of the tournament may have been North Carolina's exit in the Final Four. The Tar Heels seemed to be over confident and lethargic from the start and only made a comeback late in the second half against Utah.

The Tar Heels had many layups and dunks throughout the contest but their outside touch deserted them especially at crucial times of the game.

Still Antawn Jamison was the man for North Carolina in the tourney and was honored as the much NCAA Player of the Year.

And the Utes of Utah. What a season for coach Rick Majerus! Majerus had to reload after the departure of Keith Van Horn and did it in style. His players believed in him and his style. The Utes made defense look easy as they shut down opponents game after game.

Finally, forget about the legacy left behind by former coach Rick Pitino. Former coach of Tulsa and Georgia and current Kentucky coach Tubby Smith won over the fans and the writers in Lexington, KY with style and substance.

ATP tour's "most hated" player becomes No. 1!

For all of you Sports Illustrated readers, doesn't it seem as though the content of the some of the writing lately details the attitude problems of various athlete?. A couple of weeks ago, I read about New York Yankees second baseman Chuck Knoblauch. Apparently Knoblauch is a rather irritable competitor that has mood changes that swing faster than Ken Griffey, Jr.'s bat on a 3-2 fastball. Seemingly a week later, the magazine chronicled the ferocity and temperamental moody side of Miami Heat forward Alonzo Mourning. Mourning is described as one of the most disliked players in the NBA. A player that openly fires obscenities at fans and other players and growls at fans that attempt to get autographs.

Prior to the article about Mourning, Sports Illustrated published a story about Chilean tennis pro Marcelo Rios. Rios, apparently, is one of the most hated tennis players on the men's tour. He "never says please or thank you" to reporters or other people, flips off kids who ask for his signature, and is less than kind to various players on the women's tour. However, the real story about Rios is how he came to be the No. 1 player in the world. Yes, that's

Intramurals: A little something for everybody

staff

From early September to late May, an almost countless number of University of Idaho students, faculty, and staff can be found at Guy Wicks Field, Memorial Gym, or the Physical Education Building participating in any number of the intramural activities available. Both the fall and spring semesters offer a wide variety of activities ranging from flag football, co-rec floor hockey, and billiards in the fall, to basketball, foosball, and frisbee golf in the spring.

With such an assortment of activities available, almost anybody on campus can find something to suit their needs.

But why do students take part in intramural sports? Is it the thrill of competition? Is it the companionship? Is it to stay in shape? Is it for fun? Is it for stress relief?

If you answered yes to any or all of these questions you would be right.

Intramurals offer students, faculty, and staff a chance to compete, make new friends, stay fit, have some fun, and blow off some steam, all at the same time.

"Intramurals are a nice change of pace from the everyday school routine," said Jen Jerome, a senior from Emmett.

Wayne Gehring from Cottonwood couldn't agree more.

"After a long day of classes, an intramural game gives me something to look forward to, besides homework," he said.

Exercise is another reason why students are active in intramural sports.

Jake Wasko, a senior from Nez Perce and a member of the UI club baseball team, is busy with senior projects, so intramurals, "keeps me active and in shape," he said.

Gehring, a senior with a double major in architecture and advertising, also sees intramurals as a way to not only stay in shape, but also help with schoolwork.

"I'm firm believer that a healthy body leads to a healthy mind and intramurals provides a nice balance between academics and recreation," Gehring said.

For Gehring, a competitive game of basketball can be just what the doctor ordered when school starts to get hectic and stressful.

"Intramurals are great when things start to pile up, because the second I step on the court or field I forget about all of my problems for the hour or so that I'm competing," he said.

Competition is another reason students enjoy the intramural experience.

Travis Ribordy, a senior from Emmett, and Jodi Putnam, a senior from Billings, Mont., along with Jerome, Wasko, and Gehring, not only like the competition aspect of intramurals, but also the chance to compete with and against friends.

"It's the best feeling when you can beat one of your friends at a basketball or softball game, but it can also be the worst feeling when you lose to your friends," Gehring said.

Intramurals at the UI is an integral part of the college experience, which provides students, faculty, and staff with a tremendous opportunity to forget about the stresses of academic life for an hour or so, and a chance to get out and have some fun.

Softball, as well as many other sports and activities, is offered through the intramural program.

right, the short left-hander with the precise groundstrokes and feather-light touch at the net has risen to the top of the men's tour surpassing Pete Sampras. Rios, despite all of the nasty character attacks, has been the most dominant player on the men's circuit, beating all comers whether they are big servers, heavy groundstrokers or comeback players like Andre Agassi this past weekend.

Just how long will Rios be the No. 1 player in the world? Only Marcelo really knows because he has the game to stay at the top for a long time. Does he have the heart though? Maybe Sports Illustrated should publish a followup of Rios in which they take a look at his rise to the top and leave out all of the negative dirty laundry!

Women's Golf

The University of Idaho Women's Spring Invitational continues today at the UI Golf course. Ten teams from around the Northwest will compete in the 54-hole event. Two rounds were completed yesterday with the final 18 holes beginning this morning at 8 a.m.

Swimming

The Idaho club team will be hosting a swim meet this weekend at the Idaho pool. The Idaho team will be up against teams from Washington, Nevada, and California.

Track and Field

Four University of Idaho athletes won their events at the prestigious Baldy Castillo Invitational Track and Field meet at Arizona State University Saturday.

Hugo Munoz, Oscar Duncan, Melanie Kreizenbeck and Felix Kamangirira won their specialties at the meet that attracted athletes from across the nation.

Munoz cleared 7 feet, 1 inch to win the high jump while Kreizenbeck won the women's pole vault with a height of 10-2. Kamangirira was the 400-meter champion after edging Colorado's James Davis by one one-hundredth of a second. Kamangirira was timed in 46.46 seconds.

Duncan, who was hobbled last season by a foot injury, showed he is back in form with a throw of 216 feet, 8 inches in the javelin.

Triple jumper Chris Kwaramba was in second with a leap of 52 feet, 8 inches, while distance runner Bernd Schroeder had one of his best outings with a third-place in the 1,500 meters. He was timed in 3:48.51.

Volleyball

Heather Kniss, a 5-foot-10 outside hitter from Gresham, Ore., signed a letter of intent to play volleyball at the UI.

Kniss started for three years on the Centennial High School varsity squad, earning first-team all-conference in 1996 and 1997. Her team placed fourth last year in the state 4-A tournament as Kniss was selected to a first-team all-tournament. She also earned second-team all-state honors as a senior.

"She is a very strong, solid and experienced all-around player," second year Idaho coach Carl Ferreira said. "She's somebody that's polished and ready to contribute."

As a senior, Kniss led Centennial High with 17 kills and 12 digs per match as well as a team-leading .638 hitting percentage.

Kniss joins 5-foot-11 setter Jennifer Neville (Sonoma, Calif.) and 5-foot-10 outside hitter Kelly Weiss (Mesa, Ariz.) in Idaho's 1998 recruiting class.

"Overall I'm excited that we've filled the holes and signed the student-athletes we wanted," Ferreira said.

Adult Softball League

The organizational meeting for the Adult Softball League will be Sunday, April 5 at 6 p.m. at the Eggan Youth Center. The center is located at 1515 East "D" Street. A team manager and/or representative must attend. Team registration will be one day only, Monday, April 20, from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. with a team fee of $600. For more information, please call 883-7085.

Spring Forward Community Fun Run

The Spring Forward Run/Walk/Stroll will be held April 25 and features a 5K course which begins and ends on the UI Administration Building lawn. Race deadline is April 13 at the Women's Center with late entries accepted until 9 a.m. on race day. Registration is $15 with a short sleeve shirt, $8 without. Late registration is $17 with a shirt, $10 without. For more information or to register, please contact the Idaho Women's Center at 885-6616.

Ultimate Frisbee

The Ultimate Club is looking for men and women members to play Ultimate Frisbee. If you are interested, contact Dale Blankenship at <blan2122@uidaho.edu>, 883-1156, or visit <http://www.uidaho.uidaho.edu/~blan2122/frisbee> for more information.

Aerobics Classes

The UI Community Enrichment Program will be offering several aerobics classes beginning March 23. Neuromuscular Integrative Action (NIA) Mind/Body Aerobics is a combination of Eastern and Western philosophies of movement that incorporates both dance and martial arts. Section 1 will be held on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 5:30-7 p.m. with a fee of $45 for 22 sessions and $25 for 10 sessions. Section 2 will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:30-7 p.m. with a fee of $32 for 16 sessions.

A variety of aerobics classes will be held Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings from 8-9 p.m. with class fees at $43 for 21 sessions or $30 for 11 sessions. Enrollment is continuous.

For more information or to register, please call the UI Community Enrichment Program at 882-4270.

Women's Fast Pitch Softball

Women's fast pitch softball players are needed to help start a club team at UI. For more information, or if you are interested in playing, please contact Dawn Hopp at 885-8720 or e-mail her at <hopp1048@uidaho.edu>.

Fourth Annual Chris Tormey Golf Tournament

May 1-2 sees the Silver and Gold intra-squad spring game, the 1998 Big Sky championship team reunion and the fourth annual Chris Tormey golf tournament. Entry fees for the tournament are $70 which includes shirts, lunch, dinner and green fees. For more information, please call 885-0250.

Jr. Volleyball Tour

Sports for Youth Foundation Inc. is currently accepting applications for boys and girls ages 15-21, who are accomplished volleyball players to represent the U.S. on the 1998 Goodwill Ambassadors World Tour. Registration is due no later than March 31. For additional tour information, contact the Sports for Youth office at (425) 251-6951, e-mail <info@volleyballnw.com>, or write to 18475 Olympic Ave. S., Tukwila, WA 98188.

Spring Registration

The Moscow Parks and Recreation's spring brochure is available and program registration is now open. For more information, please call 883-7085.

Correction: In Friday's Argonaut, in the article regarding Vandal Boosters, Inc., approximately $700,000 was raised for athletic scholarships, not $70,000.

Bar Guide

Featured Bar of the Week

TREATY GROUNDS

Enjoy some good cheer at Treaty Grounds!

Founded in 1991 as Moscow's first and only micro-brew, Treaty Grounds BrewPub is the place for Vandals and Cougars alike to meet. On brew days you can sit and watch the brewmaster brew a batch of beer right in front of you. The Treaty Ground "regulars" of Moscow Gold, Pullman Red and Scottish Ale are always on tap with an interesting array of their own brewed guest taps. These include everything from ales to stouts to fruit beers.

Of course, Treaty Grounds isn't just a micro-brew, it's a family style restaurant also. The large menu has everything from chicken and gourmet salads to mouth-watering burgers, steaks and ribs. You're sure to be satisfied after your dining experience. Bring the kids, they have a great children's menu also.

Looking for a place to have your super-bowl party or watch the baseball championships? Treaty Grounds has televisions located in the bar and restaurant areas to satisfy your sports telecast cravings.

Join the Moose Club. With every twenty-five ounce mug of beer you buy, you will receive a Moose chip. Collect fifty of these chips to get a membership. In the club you will receive happy hour prices all day long, a lifetime membership, a souvenir mug full of your choice of beer, a souvenir Moose Club T-shirt, a membership card and your name permanently engraved on a plaque with all of the other Moose Club members.

If you like to enjoy the summertime weather in Moscow, sit outside on the deck and enjoy a tall one in the sun. All Treaty Grounds beer can be enjoyed in a sampler, a pint, a twenty-five ounce mug, or by the pitcher. Also you can purchase beer in the half-gallon "Growler" jug to enjoy at home. Souvenirs are a great way to remember where you've visited. Treaty Grounds has a variety of shirts and hats in the form of T-shirts, polos, tie-dyes and hemp hats available for sale.

Need to save money because you're a starving college student? Look no further. Everyday of the week there is a lunch and dinner special! Mondays get Buffalo wings for $3.50 and $5.00 micro-brew pitchers. Tuesdays are 2-for-1 pints for $2.50. Thursdays get the huge 25 ounce Moose Mug for $2.50.

So, whether you belly up to the bar, gather with a large group of friends or enjoy an intimate dinner for two, Treaty Grounds is sure to serve up good hospitality along with good food and beer!
