Students campaign against binge drinking

Downing that beer may not be the best way to go, health students say

The stereotypical view of college life is a scene out of Animal House, complete with crazy fraternity antics. However, the UI Health and Wellness Promotion class wants students to know that Animal House isn't always the way to go.

In a campaign that began this week, posters, leaflets and "table-toppers" have found their way on to bulletin boards, tables, and lockers, all giving some startling facts about binge drinking on the UI campus.

"We used statistics from a survey that Randy Page did a while ago," said Health Promotion student and campaign organizer Jennifer Chapman. The statistics show that 28 percent of all women and 50 percent of all men on campus binge drink.

The group's goal, according to a written release, is to bring awareness to binge drinking, which is the primary health concern on most college campuses. The group hopes to shed some light on the issue and make students more aware of their bingeing habits.

"We want people to know that not everyone does it," said Chapman. "Yes, 28 percent and 50 percent of our students do, but there's also a great deal of kids that don't. We hope that people will understand that they don't have to drink."

The campaign was funded by a grant from the Student Advisory Services, and the students formed groups to approach the issue from all sides. Along with leaflets and brochures, tips to prevent date rape were given and a "trivia" contest of sorts encouraged students to wrack their brains for drinking statistics.

At the end of the week, HP students will survey English 104 classes about the effectiveness of the campaign.

Mike Wilson, left, and Amber Stonecipher along with Stacey Kile, not pictured, founders of Students for Responsible Drinking, are putting together cups with information concerning sexual assault awareness to give to every woman on campus. Funding was donated from various living groups on campus. See pages 8 and 9 for more in-depth information regarding Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

Former Idaho governor promotes compromise for 'Planetary Stewardship'

Andrus says smile and carry a big stick

Adam E-H Wilson
staff

Jovial Cecil Andrus said yesterday the way to accomplish conservation is to smile and carry a very big stick.

The former Idaho State Governor injected some humor into this year's Borah Foundation conference, which is entitled "Planetary Stewardship."

Overall, the 67-year-old said action was the bottom line, and that requires innovation.

"Sometimes when you reside in the ivy-clad walls of an institution, you become isolated," he said, and that can lead to inactivity.

He also said the salmon recovery effort was over.

"The sockeye are gone; they're extinct," he said. "We lost that battle, I think." He said there are no longer enough fish to procreate effectively.

Andrus discussed moments in his own career, which included being Secretary of the Interior under President Jimmy Carter, when he was able to meet the needs of conservation by using inventive methods.

He recalled when he was governor, he tried to have environmental groups and Sometimes when you reside in the ivy-clad walls of an institution, you become isolated.

— Cecil Andrus

industry representatives come up with new water-quality regulations together. They quickly told him a compromise could not be reached and he would have to design the legislation himself and let the courts sort it out.

"Well, I said, 'Tell ya what I'm gonna do. I'm gonna take the environmental regulations in this hand and take the proposed industrial regulations in this hand and the first one that leaves the table, I'm gonna implement the other one's plan.'"

The resulting compromise, said Andrus, was a "pretty fair set of regs."

The conversational Andrus joked about politics and the fun of being retired from them with a large crowd in the SUB Ballroom yesterday afternoon. He said science was important, but action was the bottom line.

He told of a large section of Alaskan land that was to be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior at the end of a nine-year period to the various interested parties, including oil companies, native peoples, the federal government and the State of Alaska. The proposed deal was torn up while time was running out, and if Andrus didn't make a move the land would be open for industrial appropriation.

"Well, I didn't have the stick in my hands," Andrus said. So he took advantage of the Antiquities Act, which allows the president to designate national monuments at his discretion.

"So I had staff draft up monuments covering a hundred million acres," Andrus said. "And I made sure that every one of those choice places where they thought there was oil or gas or a specialty group wanted was a monument."

Smiling, Andrus said the parties compromised.

He warned that if you thought the cigarette companies have been hard to deal with, the trillion-dollar fuel companies would be unimaginably difficult when it came to regulations.

Andrus said that as the most powerful country in the world, the United States should take the lead in environmental protection.

"The most productive way is education, but it's too slow, much too slow," Andrus said. "The most enforceable way is legislation."

But Congress only reacts to a crisis, he explained. "The state Legislature in Idaho creates crises," he said to laughter.

She told the students earlier that she had become a target of the media in her first term because she was perceived to be a conservative woman come to Congress and stand up for western rights.

"For a while they tried, instead of reporting what I said, to make a caricature of me," she said. She also noted that she had never fired for a number of comments.

Most recently she was accused for complaining about a Forest Service member's two responses and threats of retribution. She said those numbers — what she called "the warm-weather community" — were not attracted to the Panhandle and climate.

But since beginning her recent term and becoming chairman of the Forest and Rangeland Improvement Act Subcommittee, she has met with her constituents for the first time, and she maintains the media now realize she is a serious legislator.

At the same time, she returned her pledge that if re-elected to a third term, it would be her last.

Sexual assault survivor tells her story

Charlotte West
Assistant News Editor

Enjoying the silence and solitude of a moment can bring inner peace and harmony. However, sometimes when the silence lasts longer than a moment, it turns from comfort to nightmares.

On Tuesday evening, Allyson Kurker, a survivor of sexual assault, spoke about her experience with a classmate who attempted to rape her and the pain it caused.

The presentation, entitled As They See It..., was sponsored by the UI Women's Center and Safety Board in honor of Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

She grew up in a small town in Massachusetts. "We weren't what some people call progressive," she said.

She said there was never any discussion of controversial issues. Her only experience with sexual assault was one day a park was closed because a woman had been raped there the previous evening.

"Rape was something that happened to women in dark places by a stranger," Kurker said.

She did not know how wrong this perception was — 84 percent of all women assaulted know their assailant.

Kurker said statistics are still just impersonal facts and figures. Personal experiences are much more powerful.

"What means something to me are all the stories that I hear at every college," she said. She is currently traveling to high schools and colleges to speak about sexual assault, and often talks to victims of sexual assault.

Her own experience is similar to many of the stories she hears. On the night of her graduation from high school, after attending a family get-together, she asked her mother if she could go to a party at her friend Brian's house. Her mother was worried about alcohol, but Kurker persisted.

"Reluctantly she let me go off to this party," she said.

All of her friends were there and there was "a feeling of group intimacy." She had a few beers. "I had enough to let my guard down," she said.

She said there is a strong relationship between alcohol and sexual assault. "We all need to think seriously about the responsibility we take on when we decide to drink," Kurker said.

Bryan's parents had allowed the kids to drink, but they took all of their car keys and expected them to spend the night. Kurker found a couch in a room in Brian's basement, and decided to sleep there. As she was going down the stairwell, she saw Brian and asked him if he wanted to come down and talk for awhile.

In the midst of their conversation, he suddenly said that it would mean so much to him if she would make love to him.

"I explained that I didn't want to have sex with him that night," she said.

He quickly said goodnight and went upstairs. Kurker went to sleep, but was later woken by Brian. He had his hands up her shirt.

She asked him what he was doing, but she didn't slap him. "I didn't want to make him angry. I had fallen into the trap of how I should behave as a nice young woman," she said.

She told her best friend who "blew it off as something that wasn't a big deal." Since Brian's parents had her car keys, she was stuck there for the night. She found a bedroom and curled up into a tight ball with her face to the wall.

A while later, she heard Bryan come into the room. He pinned her up against the wall and attempted to rape her.

"I was able to get away before he completed the act," she said. "I thought it was just about sex. [but] Brian wanted to have control over someone that night. It had become a game to [him]."

She told her friends about what had happened, and their response was, "Thank God. It could have been so much worse."

After her assault, Kurker said she tried to think about how she would be able to deal with what had happened. After Brian's parents returned the keys, she drove over to her boyfriend's house. He told her to try to forget the experience.

"I thought about how I would be able to forget. What I tried not to think about during the day came back in the form of nightmares at night," she said.

At that time, Kurker did not press charges. She enrolled in Connecticut College the next fall, but it became "more and more difficult" to deal with.

The next year, her mother called to tell her that Brian had been expelled from college because he raped someone. "It was a validation that what had happened was real. I went into shock," she said.

She relived the episode over and over in her head. Shortly after, Kurker was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder.

She decided to do something about it. Two years to the date of the assault, she filed a police report and Brian was arrested. He originally pleaded not guilty, but after six months changed his plea to guilty. In exchange, he would not spend any time in jail.

Kurker said her high school principal wrote a letter to the court testifying on Brian's behalf. When she talked to him about it, he said that Brian had been a good kid up until the point of the assault.

She went to the local paper, and the issue divided the town. She said that she was called "a bitter woman with a political agenda."

Kurker agrees with the statement that she has political interests. "When one crime affects one-fourth of the female population, it becomes political in nature," she said.

Her case received national media attention during the winter of 1996. Pulitzer Prize-winning commentator Eileen McNamara covered her story. "If nothing else, I'm glad I came forward because a dialogue finally started," Kurker said.

In 1997, she graduated from Connecticut College with a B.A. in economics. She has also written a book, entitled Normal Protocol: Society's Betrayal of the Victim.

Kurker said that oftentimes a victim will not come forward because they fear that society will turn against them. Many times, there is an emphasis on what the victims of sexual assault could have done differently. Men will assume that "she's dressed that way so she must be looking for some action." Also, within relationships, people assume that they "negate the ability to say no after they've said yes."

"I think it has become much easier to have sex than talk about it," she said.

She said that sometimes sexual assault is "equated with something not that serious." "What we need to realize is that as soon as someone says no, it becomes a sexual assault," Kurker said.

I thought it was just about sex,[but] Brian wanted to have control over someone that night. It had become a game to [him].

'Free Tibet' is not worth demonstration

Do people protest just for fun?

Matt Burgoon
columnist

I often hang out in the fishbowl in the front of the Library this semester. I made the mistake of registering for classes leaving hour gaps between. What do you do in an hour? If you walk home, there's enough time to do just that: walk home — and then walk back. Some people can spend an hour reading their e-mail, but my average of two messages a day just won't suffice. I feel dumb if I'm twiddling with Netscape and there are 12 people in line waiting to type papers. So I go to the fishbowl and watch people.

I've seen more demonstrations this year than I've seen my entire life. They start out with a few people standing by the fountain-cum-planter looking like they are about to do something important. Then the signs come. Hand-painted cardboard gets passed around and there's some practicing of walking around in circles and chanting. Meanwhile a crowd gathers and sometimes I lose my comfortable view and have to stand outside to watch. They make up chants like I used to do in little league: generally starting with counting and ending with a cute phrase. They walk around with their signs and eventually leave.

One thing I have noticed: the same people seem to be in all the demonstrations. The SEAC and anti-war rallies had the same people with different clothes and different signs. I think these people like to be creative and make up chants. Perhaps they just like to get involved in aggressive-liberal-type functions as a resume-builder. Or maybe they are graphic designers who like to make signs — maybe not.

This whole Free Tibet sentiment is another thing I don't understand. Two movies, a big concert, and a walk-about on the National Day Without Violence haven't enlightened me as to why Tibet should be free. Wars have been fought over boundaries since boundaries were invented. As history tells it, when a country is invaded and loses the resulting war, it also loses its sovereignty. That's just the way it is. There is no reason that I can think of why the China-Tibet thing should be different.

What is the purpose of demonstrating to free Tibet? The only people who really watch are fellow students, most of whom will never even visit China. If the demonstration is well organized and promoted, it might get coverage in the Argonaut, or maybe even the Daily News.

Two movies, a big concert, and a walk-about on the National Day Without Violence haven't enlightened me as to why Tibet should be free.

Suppose that for some crazy reason a legislator gets wind of the Free Tibet sentiment. Maybe even all the legislators — I'm sure there are similar demonstrations all around the country. The worst thing that could happen would be for the United States to put pressure on China to free Tibet. We as a country need the economic and social support of China.

Economic sanctions, embargoes, or war threats can only be bad. As a nation, we have no business promoting Tibet as a "free" nation. Imagine if Japan refused to sell televisions in America unless Hawaii was released. That would be absurd. But that's basically what the demonstrators seem to be promoting.

What most Americans don't seem to understand is that we don't have the right to impose our freedom on others. Democracy is good — probably the best form of government ever invented — but other countries do other things. It is important that the United States doesn't use economic or military power to try to dispel other forms of government. There are much better ways of spreading democracy than sanctions and embargoes. Economic aid comes to mind, among other things.

Most of all, my support goes out to those people who believe strongly enough in an idea that they will take the time to organize and perform a demonstration. I think the time and effort could be used more efficiently, but the fact that I can say so freely strongly supports their cause.

Kenaf paper cheaper in the long run

I was pleased with the front page coverage on the tree-free paper issue in Tuesday's Argonaut, however some clarification is in order. The cost of kenaf paper is currently about two cents per page. Paper produced from timber is less than one cent per page, but this figure does not take into account hidden costs such as the preparations we as a society will soon have to make for degradation to the environment caused by the process of producing paper.

The article pointed out the fact that student computing fees would increase next year from the current $28 per semester to $42. One of the major reasons for this increase, wasted paper, was not stressed enough. Switching to kenaf paper, although slightly more expensive, would help students to establish priorities in deciding what to print, because they would be more aware of the cost of the paper. This would undoubtedly lead to less waste in the long run.

All this talk about expenses, and no one is throwing out any real figures as to the per student, per semester cost of switching to kenaf paper. A reasonable estimate is that a $5 per student lab fee would cover the cost of converting computer labs at the UI to tree-free, chlorine-free kenaf paper.

Now come on all you people that won't sign the petitions because you can't shell out five bucks — that's less than you spend on drinks any given night at the bars. Show some foresight, fellow students, I guarantee the costs of cleaning the dioxin out of our air, water, and lungs will be much greater, and who wants to see their loved ones die of cancer simply because they breathed dioxin air for too long?

Another factor mentioned in the article that may deter students from signing the petitions was that kenaf has a rougher texture than bleached-white paper. Kenaf paper looks and feels just like timber paper except for its slightly more cream-colored hue. For those of you who pictured something like an ancient Egyptian papyrus tablet, reconfigure your mental imaging — there is very little visible difference. It is also important to note that kenaf production uses 37 percent less energy than wood.

And finally there are those who will not sign a petition because they simply do not care about "environmental" issues. Clue-in Cornucopian Capitalists — stewardship of the environment is no longer a tree-hugging, pot-smoker's issue. It is something that we all must do our part in in order that we still have an earth to walk upon in 20 years. It may not look so bad to an average Joe from suburban American, but underneath the quickly shrinking magic carpet of blissful ignorance lies a malignant tumor that grows every day people continue to ignore its presence.

Academic standards continue to decline at UI

It takes enormous courage to talk of the plight of higher education that Wade Gruhl and Scott Mahurin point out in their Argonaut columns (4/10/98). Two columns in the same issue, with similar commentaries! Most refreshing, indeed. I am sure I am not alone in extending my deepest admiration for their candid, blunt, but absolutely valid observations.

Some of us have helplessly seen this evolution over decades. I have a huge collection in my archives, including some Argonaut pieces such as those mentioned. I hope you both and others (e.g., John Russell — his "Stop sucking your baby bottle," Argonaut, 2/18/98, was great!) can initiate a grassroots movement about improving academic standards — that might be the key to reversing the trends. I know of such attempts at some other campuses (e.g., Bucknell, where a couple of years ago students boycotted student-evaluations of faculty, as currently employed at most campuses, for the damage they do). Do it, Wade and Scott; you might be the leaders of a national campaign.

Some of us have been harking on such issues for decades. Back in 1974, I opened the box on standards (see Argonaut, 4/12/74), and a blue-ribbon committee was appointed to study the issues. Its conclusion: "Academic standards declining at UI" (headlined the local newspaper, 7/24/75). That was then. Where are we over two decades later? Most of us (especially the "old timers") know well. It is a national tragedy that strikes at the roots of the modern civilization but which took decades to evolve — and, thus, one cannot blame any particular group or individuals (including students).

There have been dozens of national/regional studies on the subject; and their common conclusion: "The American imperative for the 21st century is that society must hold higher education to much higher expectations or to risk national decline" and, further, "the widely acknowledged deterioration of quality seen in elementary and secondary education has thoroughly penetrated post-secondary education."

One of my young friends refers to the Generation-X syndrome. Of course, not all young folks reflect that syndrome. However, there is a recent, widely-quoted, controversial book that some might find fascinating reading: Peter Sacks, Generation X Goes to College (1996). Sacks has almost become a national celebrity, and those of us who have been around a while know well what he is talking about. Among other things; he identifies some key factors: rampant "consumerism," "entertainment" mindset, and "entitlement" attitude ("Have paid my fees, so I am entitled to the best grades and a degree"). He argues (and there is overwhelming evidence) that teaching (and survival) tends to be driven by student-evaluations, as currently used (some call them "Nielsen's ratings"), which typically seek "happy, satisfied" clients — and that determines "effective" teachers! And incidentally, we often talk of "effective teaching," and hardly focus on "effective learners" (something both Argonaut articles discuss, however). Related to all of this is another emerging phenomenon: increasingly violent and intimidating environment on our campuses (partly an extension of our public schools).

I know President Hoover is committed to making UI the "university of choice," meaning not only attracting more students, but also commitment to enhancing academic quality. The September 1997 Faculty Secretary's Report included a proposed agenda item, "Academic standards and quality, the discussion of which may be carried out by one of President Hoover's four strategic task forces for the current academic year." I am not aware, but I sincerely hope there have been some genuine discussions which can lead to some tangible actions — especially for the sake of students' own short and long-run interests, as well as the academic community generally.

Again, congratulations Wade and Scott.

Treatment of mentally ill shocking

It is with great sadness that I find that I must leave higher education forever. Unfortunately, I have a near fatal disease of the brain. Previously, I came out of the "mental HELL closet" as a man suffering from mental illness.

The sad state of affairs in this country for people like me is shocking. As my country gets more conservative I fear that I will have to live in the streets if a Republican wins the White House.

Lately, I have been fed up with all the medicines I have taken, bad therapists, etc. Now I am trusting in the ways of peace as taught by Buddha. Students — stay away from drugs and work hard.

I have decided to try to change society by forming my own political party in the fall. I will call it the Lunatic Fringe party. If I am to be labeled a lunatic by a society that hates and fears me then by the grace of the Great Buddha in the sky; I will be an angry, political, insane man. Those that hate injustice done to my kind are asked to call Dennis Stone at (208) 882-2585.

Bible gives Christians concrete values

Justin Hopper had a few good points in his letter in the April 10 issue, but doesn't understand a lot of things about what he wrote. First, Mr. Hopper, I don't think you understand the term "atheist." Atheist simply means "a person who does not believe in God". The next time Mr. Mahurin uses this term, you will know what he means.

I want you to tell me why an atheist would stop a rape. You claim that just because a person is an atheist, does not mean he doesn't have "ethics" as we know them. I would disagree. Where do you get your ethics from, Mr. Hopper? Do you look deep down inside of yourself and see what feels "right" and what feels "wrong"? What if I do this, and decide that I like rape? Wouldn't you be wrong in stopping me from carrying out my ethics? By saying "no, rape is wrong," you would be claiming an absolute truth which applies to all men. Here I would agree with you. There is an absolute truth, and it comes from the God of the Bible. I'm not referring to the Mormon god, or Buddha, Krishna, or that tree outside my window. I'm speaking of the living God of the Bible. By claiming an absolute truth, you would agree with me that there is a standard outside of man to govern his actions. Where does this standard exist? In an atheistic world, there is nothing greater than humans.

My challenge is simply this: tell me where you get your ethics from and why they're "right." As an atheist, you can't claim to be any more right than Hitler, and should applaud him for "following his heart." So what if he killed several million Jews in the process? According to your world-view, what he decided to do was "right" for him. Those were his "ethical values," if you will. Was he right in killing all of those Jews? Of course not. Hitler knew that killing those Jews was wrong, just as we know it was wrong.

But because of your world view, you can only say that murder is something that you don't like. I believe that murder is wrong, but I have something to base my beliefs upon. The Bible says that we were created "in God's image." When we murder (I'm not referring to capital punishment, war, or accident death), we are attacking and destroying that image. The Bible says that God's law is written on our hearts. This, and nothing else, is the source of your "ethical principals."

Are students ready for college?

After reading Wade Gruhl's column "Inattention of students in the classroom is intolerable," I felt compelled to write and express my agreement with his observation. I too have noticed the incredible lack of effort given by many students. It seems as though they would prefer to be doing something else besides reading a textbook or going to a lecture.

The thing is, I know what they would rather be doing. I've done it. I tried college when I was 18. I went to classes — for a while. Homework took a back seat to parties. Eventually I realized I was wasting my time in college. Classes were just getting in the way of what I really wanted to do. So I quit and spent the next five years of my life having fun.

Well here I am at the U of I, 28 years old, 110 credits to my name and have a 3.8 GPA. I love being in school and wouldn't miss a class for anything. Not only do I read my textbook, I read everything I can get my hands on. This makes me wonder when I see students in their late teens and early twenties who prefer to go through college making C's and showing up for class when they "have to." Maybe they are not ready for college. I once had a teacher who told me his favorite quote he overheard a student asking another was "so, did you study for the test?" Come on!

But just for argument's sake, let's assume that they aren't ready. Why do they stay after a semester or two of pain and misery? Why not go have some fun and come back when they are ready? Well, perhaps they believe the old myth that if you don't go right after high school, you will never go — that's B.S. Or, maybe the folks are giving them a guilt trip over it. Don't be a wimp. If you feel like school is a drag, don't fall for the misconception that you must get an education now, when you are young.

I must admit that there are a few "straight out of high school" students I know who obviously like college and are doing very well. They are excited about their studies and about the opportunity to learn here at the university. These students should be here. Let's face it, the sooner you get out of college, the sooner you can use your education to your benefit. But these students seem to be the exception.

I think we as a society might want to step back and evaluate the possibility that the average 18-year-old is not mature enough to handle a college education. I know I wasn't, and it seems like a lot of other students aren't either.

Independent music dealers offer service, selection, and good prices

by Heather Frye

Our area is not as privileged as some of the larger cities as far as variety among record dealers is concerned. We are pretty much stuck with homogenous dealerships like Hastings and Sam Goody who stab at our slender little wallets and put crap that no one would buy on sale to mock us. The independent music dealer is a dying breed across the nation and they are certainly going the way of the dinosaurs (my apologies to Pterodactyl) here in our area. However, a few still remain, and they offer much better service and often better prices than the big guys as well as the rare albums and advice that are essential to those of us who collect music. Here is a small listing and review of a few within driving distance.

Moscow: The loss of RPM Records and Pterodactyl (in Pullman) has narrowed our choices as far independent dealers here in town. However, Paradise Ridge thankfully remains open. Their selection is pretty good when it comes to jazz, folk, Celtic, and bluegrass and not bad among the other genres. Used CDs are a little harder to come by at Paradise Ridge due to a stiffer than usual buying policy. They carry a number of box sets and a few rare picks as well. The prices are not bad, usually coming in a dollar or two cheaper than the larger chains. Their claim is that they can special order items that are not in stock and have them within one to seven days. However, I have heard more than one patron of the store say that they have had little luck getting their orders that quickly. One friend of mine has been waiting for four years for one CD and over one year for another. Ah well, time is relative. At any rate, Paradise Ridge is still a great resource here in town. They are located at 117 E 3rd Street, and have a really great website (<www.letsboogie.com>) for keeping up to date on their sale items. You can call them at 882-1670.

Pullman: John is a lonely man these days. His business, Jungle Face Jake Records, is the only minor act left on the Washington side. There is no actual store by this name; it is a small business, run out of the proprietor's home. Special orders and hard-to-finds are his only business. He offers prices much better than the big stores and even some of the other independents as he has no overhead. The only pitfall is that it may take him a good deal of time to get your order in as he has to build up to a minimum order. But, if you have time, give him a shot. Besides, he delivers! His business is by phone only. Call at 332-8810 and leave a message if he is not there.

Lewiston: Dr. Rocks and its progeny Bob Dr. Rocks are the places to go to buy and sell used CDs and tapes. Their over 1,500 used albums and low prices make a trip down the grade worthwhile. Used CDs will net you four dollars if they are in good condition and they are resold at a fairly reasonable $7.95. These are guaranteed to be as good as a new or your money back. Buying 10 used CDs will get you an 11th one free. Dr. Rocks senior, who has been open since 1978, carries a fairly good selection of classic rock and country, while his son Bob caters to the younger set. Both Dr. Rocks stores welcome special orders and, since they order often during the week, it is a good chance that they can get it in quickly. They also sell comics and used video games. Dr. Rocks is located at 1021 14th Street and Bob Dr. Rocks can be found at 1036 Bryden.

The prices at Pepperland Records are comparable to those at the major chains as far as new albums are concerned, but sales, specials and great selection of quality used CDs and vinyl (Yes! Vinyl! Rejoice turntable owners!) makes it worth a look. He is a little more finicky with his buy back policy than his competitors, but to his credit, this does serve to weed out some of the lemons. His bargain bin is a must peruse as it features brand new CDs for $9.99, some of them major bands and even a few rares and out-of-prints. Vinyl is a great bargain, costing between $2 and $5. As far as variety goes, they tend to focus on the rock/classic market but will special order other titles. For the next two weeks Pepperland is offering a "buy two, get one free" deal on CDs. Shweet! Orders are done every day so special orders are (he claims) next day. Pepperland is located at 527 Main Street close to the fountain in the downtown area.

Spokane: Holy Ringo! Moving northward we find 4,000 Holes. Proprietor Bob Gallagher and his right hand woman Angel Miller are two of the nicest and most knowledgeable music dealers in the Northwest. To boot, they have a really decent shop. Gallagher carries a super assortment of good, clean used vinyl as well as a decent variety of new and used CDs both usual and unusual. He prides himself on selling albums by bands that are good but unknown. He carried Nirvana and the Bosstones long before anyone had ever heard of them. 4,000 Holes is a collector's dream as he stocks a lot of imports and independent labels at really decent prices. Like many other small dealers, Gallagher and his cohorts do not make a lot of money doing what they do.

"It's a labor of love," said Gallagher. This love for their craft comes through, too. Gallagher's greatest passions are the Beatles and rock 'n' roll as both his store and his website attest. Nevertheless, he gives credence to a lot of other music types as well. This is the place to stop if you are in Spokane. The shop is located on Monroe Street a few blocks north of the Monroe Street Bridge. Look closely; it is a little hard to find. For more information you can call at 509-325-1914. The website is <www.4000holes.com>.

Coeur d'Alene:

The Long Ear, Coeur d'Alene's only independent music dealer, sells CDs for $1-$2 cheaper than the big chains and offers specials as well. Free promo posters, weekly drawings, collectable 25 cent discount tickets, and discounts for members of the jazz and blues societies are just a few of their many extraordinary offerings. Their new selection is pretty much on par with the mainstream dealers but they do offer a few used CDs and fast special ordering for the hard-to-gets. They are at 2920 Government Way.

Walla Walla: OK, it's a stretch, but Hot Poop is one of the best all-around dealerships in the area and worth a day trip. They carry a little bit of everything: CDs, vinyl, magazines, vintage Rolling Stones, Dupree's Diamond and Relix mags for the Deadheads, stereo equipment, out of prints, t-shirts, stickers, cheesy old videos, ...whew! Their prices are about medium but they do have that occasional diamond, that perfect find, sitting in their dusty bins and, after all, the fun of record shopping is looking at your friends, beaming and saying "Look what I got and you don't, and look how much it didn't cost — nah-nah-nah!" They are the oldest video rental in Walla Walla and, hence, have a lot of really old stuff. Hot Poop has plans to sell most of it cheap over the next few months so if you don't mind a little dust and dig old videos hop to it. Used CDs are limited but new stuff and promos are prolific. They are located at 210 E Main. You can call them at 509-525-9080. Happy hunting!

Moscow music collector Mark Tomas proudly displays some vinyl purchased at 4000 Holes in Spokane along with all the money he saved.

CJ's to host Battle of the Bands benefit

by Mike Last

With a music school right here in Moscow, the level of musical ability floating around town is certainly high. Every style of music, from jazz to punk, is represented in this little college town. But of every band in Moscow, is there one that stands significantly above the rest? The time to find out is rapidly approaching with CJ's Battle of the Bands.

CJ's Battle of the Bands Benefit and Micro-Brew Festival will determine which local band is head and shoulders above the rest. But it will do something much more important. This event is a fundraiser for a 16-year-old Potlatch girl struggling with cancer.

Sara Largent suffers from osteogenic sarcoma, or bone cancer. She is being treated with a procedure called a stem cell harvest, which must be done several times. Each harvest costs around $10,000.

Phil Roderick, owner of CJ's, read an article about Largent in the Moscow/Pullman Daily News and wanted to help out.

"All we're trying to do is break even, and all profit will go to (Largent's) trust fund," Roderick said.

One draw that should be a big money maker is the micro-brew price. During the event all micro-brews will be a buck a pop. There are five micro-breweries that have already confirmed, and more are expected.

Five bands have also already confirmed, and applications are still being accepted. The confirmed list consists of the bands Postal Joe, Mr. Meaner, Humphead Wrasse, Empty Threat, and Liftkit. These bands will be competing for the Best Covers Awards, Best Originals Award, and People's Choice Award.

The People's Choice Award is voted on by the audience, and is covered in the ticket price. The ticket also lets people take a trip down the pasta bar (provided by Main Street Spaghetti Station), gets them their favorite micro-brew, and enters them into the door prize barrel.

The door prizes include a snowboard, T-shirts and CDs donated by Bonzai Grandpa, and other items donated by the community.

The bands will be rated on a scale of 1 to 10 by a panel of six judges. The panel tentatively consists of musician Jim Fricke, "computer genius" Jason McMonn, Cathy from Safari Pearl, and Craig Kelson from Kelson Distributing.

The judges will be voting on difficulty of material, stage presence, vocals, instrumentals, and all out creativity.

Other fundraisers have been done to help Largent out. Her hometown has had two fundraisers that collected nearly $5,000. Everyone seems to stand behind her. Josh Gilmore, bass player from Postal Joe said, "I think it's great that everyone is willing to donate their time and money to help her and her family. I hope that a lot of people come to support her."

The Battle of the Bands benefit and Micro-Brew Festival will be at CJ's Sat., May 2. The bands will play from 1 to 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $6. Donations can be made to the Sara Largent Trust Fund at Zion's Bank in Moscow.

Birdie to bop into Beasley

by Amy Sanderson

Foxtails, bubble gum and hoop skirts make their way to the Beasley Coliseum this weekend for a performance of the popular musical about '50's-style puberty, teenagers and adoration for numerous heartthrobs and dreamboats of the era.

Swooning and crooning is bound to be a large part of this musical about a small town and an eager fan club thrown upside down with the arrival of a teenage idol resembling the king of rock and roll himself, Elvis Presley. This well-known musical, Bye Bye Birdie, won 8 Tony awards in 1960 including one for Best Musical.

The show's story deals with situations resulting from a publicity stunt involving the current singing sensation, Conrad Birdie, and a teenage girl from Sweet Apple, Ohio, who wins a kiss from the big stud. Bye Bye Birdie is set in the era of Ed Sullivan and early rock and roll.

The show parodies the phenomenon of '50s rock stars and hysterical, dedicated fans and is filled with innocent humor and sugary tunes like "Put on a Happy Face." Timing is perfect for this musical on tour as a resurfacing in '50s nostalgia is also evident in the re-released musical film, Grease.

The musical will star icon of the '50s and '60s Troy Donahue. Much like the beach films of Mouseketeer Frankie Avalon, Donahue starred in the similar TV series Surfside Six and Hawaiian Eye. Donahue may also be recognized from his roles in numerous films of the era, including A Summer Place with Sandra Dee and Imitation of Life with Lana Turner.

Over the years, Donahue has made 40-plus Hollywood films and appeared in The Godfather: Part 2.

"It's kind of ironic because in this show he plays the father worried about his daughter going crazy for this teenage idol when he was the one all the teenagers were going crazy over in his time," said Festival Dance and Performing Arts Director Joann Muneta.

Bye Bye Birdie is being sponsored by Festival Dance and Performing Arts. The organization teaches dance courses privately as well as here at the UI. Typically dance performances are sponsored by Festival Dance, but due to demand, the organization now produces one musical each year.

"People here like musicals and they don't get a chance to see them...ours is usually the only touring musicals brought into the Palouse area," said Muneta. Past musicals sponsored by the organization include Annie Get Your Gun. Tickets for Bye Bye Birdie are $20 and $16 for adults, and $16 and $10 for students. Tickets are available at the Beasley, the UI Ticket Office and SUB Info Desk and all G&B Select-A-Seat outlets.

Upcoming CD release party for Bonzai Grandpa

by Travis Bombersbach

Dust off your dancin' shoes because local legend Bonzai Grandpa performs tonight at CJ's. They will be launching off their new self-titled album at their CD release party and plan on celebrating with an evening of madcap music and fun.

The trio consists of Stu Speer, guitar and vocals, Tyler Williams, bass and vocals, and Bob Pickford on drums. Together they form a super hero music coalition known to mere mortals as Bonzai Grandpa. The group has returned to Moscow after playing other gigs and they have recently found a home at CJ's.

"We have spent the last few years traveling the circuit, but now we are back and ready to stay," says Speer.

For this evening's event, the band says they plan on their usual high-intensity performance combined with their own unique bag of tricks and fun surprises. There will be drawings to give away the band's CD, T-shirts, and many other wonderful items to aid in the celebration of their album release.

Bonzai Grandpa thrives on playing different styles of music, whether it is their own material or any of the top 40 tunes they cover. Their own material is a mixture of all types of music including jazz influences, rock, ska, Latino jam, and just about any other sound imaginable.

One of the best traits of the band is their commitment to the audience. They enjoy seeing the crowd have a good time. Since the band is virtually wireless they can roam onto the dance floor and get down with the crowd.

"The band participates with the audience and the audience participates with the band," says Pickford. "It freaks people out because there's no place to hide from Bonzai Grandpa; we've even followed people into the bathroom."

When it comes to cover songs, the band is always trying new techniques and methods to spice up the show. They hand out request cards and set lists so the audience is pretty much in charge of what they want to hear. When the group is not playing tracks from their CD they act as a live jukebox. Their basic rule to playing covers is to make them their own, with a Bonzai Grandpa sound.

Their album has 12 tracks with each one sounding different than the other. Stu Speer's guitar solos are interspersed here and there to rock up the funky-jazz based album. One track is even purely instrumental with each member having an equal amount of time to show their stuff in a solo.

The album is perfect for anyone who enjoys all sorts of music and the lyrics are a down-to-earth and simple soul oriented blend. The record was actually produced right here in Moscow by Roger Crozier of Guitar's Friend.

The band considers themselves "Real rock, for real people," and there's no doubt about it, that sums up Bonzai Grandpa fairly well.

Student Health, Women's Center offer solace

Candice Long
staff

Sexual assault is a spectrum of unlawful, violent behaviors that includes anything from acquaintance rape to unwanted sexual comments, jokes and gestures.

While these acts of assault may seem permissible to some, many students on campus, both men and women, are actively participating in Sexual Assault Awareness Week and speaking out against violence toward women.

Alternatives to Violence visited the UI campus yesterday to provide information on sexual assault to students while members of the Sigma Chi fraternity distributed white ribbons on campus which symbolized men who openly oppose violence against women.

"This is a nationally recognized week and it's really to honor the people that have been affected by sexual assault and violence," said Valerie Russo, women's resource specialist at the Women's Center.

According to the American College Health Association, over 1,000 women are raped or sexually assaulted every day. Every 15 seconds a woman is abused by her partner and one in four college women have experienced rape or attempted rape since age 14.

Gloria Workman, nurse practitioner, says many of these acts of violence can be avoided if students are educated and aware.

"I don't think people take sexual assault as seriously as they should unless it happens to them or one of their friends," said Workman.

Workman, along with Dr. Debra McKinnon, assistant director at Student Health, gives presentations throughout the year on rape, sexual assault and sexually transmitted diseases and educate women on the resources and support systems available on campus. They also work closely with the Women's Center and the Student Counseling Center.

Workman said the Student Health Center is always open to both men and women to culture for STDs, but a victim of rape should always go directly to the emergency room without bathing or changing their clothing.

"If a woman has been sexually assaulted, there's a whole train of things that need to take place in order for non-disputed evidence collection," Workman said. "It's a very elaborate procedure — specimen collection, blood drawn, and gathering recent physical evidence. It's also a good way to document it in conjunction with the police."

Workman also said there is a difference between date rape and stranger abuse on campus. Alcohol plays a big part in date rapes because it alters decision making.

"You need to know your person and be comfortable with your person, limit your alcohol, and keep track of your drink. That's a real basic thing anymore," said Workman.

For more information on Sexual Assault Awareness Week, contact Russo at the Women's Center at 885-6616.

UI rape stats not unusual

Yvonne Wingett
staff

The results are in, and the University of Idaho rates the same as other universities for instances of sexual assault in acquaintances.

Susan Palmer, women's resource specialist at the UI, says the results from the survey were not particularly surprising.

"The University of Idaho, in terms of 'stranger' incidents, appears to be safer than many other places. When it comes to 'acquaintance' incidents, however, we are very close to other institutions."

"The U of I is essentially consistent with the results throughout the nation," Palmer said.

The Women's Center recently released results from a survey they administered in the spring of 1997 to "measure incidents of coercive sexual behavior on the UI campus."

The survey was a replication of a survey conducted by Washington State University in 1994, and was modeled after Mary P. Koss' 1982 study.

A random sample of undergraduate classes was created for participation in the survey. According to the survey summary report, "A total of 530 undergraduate respondents completed the questionnaire — 274 women and 256 men — representing all colleges at the University of Idaho, not including Law."

Only 5.3 percent of male respondents reported coercive sexual behavior of any kind. The report states, "We can merely speculate whether this accurately reflects the small number of males who behave coercively, or whether few males are aware of their coercive behavior."

Due to the small number, statistically significant findings among males was impossible, however, the results among female respondents "produce cell frequencies large enough to test for statistical significance and generalize to the larger undergraduate female population."

The data below is taken from the survey summary report, and reflects survey responses of females only:

Among female respondents, 25.7 percent report at least one sexually coercive incident while at UI (9.3 percent reported multiple incidents). Of these incidents, 11.3 percent meet the legal definition of rape in the state of Idaho.

Of the incidents that meet the legal definition of rape in Idaho, 62.1 percent of the females did not perceive it as rape.*

Of the incidents that did not meet the legal definition of rape, 16.7 percent of the females perceived it as rape.*

Approximately 44 percent of the incidents reported in the survey occurred in apartments or other locations off campus, while nearly 28 percent reportedly occurred in Greek houses, compared to almost 18 percent in Residence Halls.*

Approximately 20 percent of the females who experienced coercion told nobody.*

Over 85 percent of the females were acquainted with the coercive offender.*

At least 32 percent of the females who experienced coercion reported that they consumed alcohol prior to the incident, most of whom described themselves as "drunk."*

Over 35 percent of the respondents who experienced coercion said that the offender was drinking, with 23 percent describing the offender as "drunk."*

Almost no incidents were reported that involved the use of other drugs.

*Asterisks refer to respondents who reported a single incident only. Respondents who reported multiple incidents also reported varied components of each incident (e.g., location, offender, alcohol) which are not well-suited to aggregation. Most asterisk items are underreported percentages, since they exclude multiple-incident respondents. Depending on the individual survey item, to include multiple-incident respondents adds from 1 percent to 20 percent to the figures reported above.

Women's golf peaks for championships

staff

The UI women's golf team is flying high heading into the Big West Championships after winning the Eagle Golf Classic in Spokane earlier this week. Idaho not only won the tournament, but also set a school record for low team score with a 611.

The improved play of Elizabeth Carter and the steady game of senior Marci Bernhardt have led the Vandals' late season charge.

Bernhardt led after the first day of the tournament, firing an impressive 73, just one over par. Carter, however, was very consistent for 36 holes and captured the title.

After struggling throughout the year, Carter put it all together at the Eagle Golf Classic. The victory was especially gratifying for Carter because at the beginning of this year, she didn't even travel with the team. The win is her first as a collegiate.

Bernhardt, who leads the team with a stroke average of 81.8 for the year, is excited about the improved play of the team.

"Lately we've all been playing really well. Now we feel like we can really compete," Bernhardt said.

The Vandals are looking to contend at the Big West tournament, something they didn't believe they could do a few weeks ago. Perennial power New Mexico State looked to be the hands down favorite, but the Vandals' recent surge makes them a legitimate threat.

"I think earlier, people didn't think we had the capability to beat New Mexico State, but I think we'll give them a pretty good run," Carter said.

As of April 8, NMSU was ranked 23rd in the nation. The Roadrunners are led by senior A.J. Eathorne, who is ranked fifth in the country individually.

Carter and Bernhardt both said the team has really been focused the last few weeks and the practice and concentration has paid off. The players have challenged each other and set high goals for improvement. The team's stroke average has dropped from 336 in the fall to 325 this spring.

Bernhardt, who is a senior, said it has been great to see the UI program grow and become competitive over the last five years. She will graduate in May with a degree in marketing and would like to combine her love for golf with marketing. Bernhardt didn't begin to play golf until her sophomore year of high school in Portland, Ore.

"My friend and I decided to go out for the golf team. I played other sports and I didn't have anything for the spring and we thought we would just go out and start playing golf. Fortunately everything kind of fell into place and I got to come here and play," Bernhardt explained.

Carter is a junior from Boise and, unlike Bernhardt, she has played golf her whole life. She is a zoology major and will be going to Australia next fall on exchange. Carter will be back with the UI golf team next spring.

The team will leave for Denton, Texas on Saturday and play 36 holes on Monday and 18 on Tuesday.

Vandal student-athletes give Helping Hands

Steve Blatner
staff

Even the strongest among us need a helping hand once in a while. As part of the National Student-Athlete Day celebration, the University of Idaho student-athletes and department of athletics will honor faculty and staff by handing out Vandal Helping Hand Awards today.

The Helping Hand Awards are a show of gratitude to faculty and staff as well as residents of the Moscow community who have helped student-athletes with the delicate balance between academics and athletics.

"Too often student-athletes are looked at as only athletes by people outside the athletic department, and they forget an enormous responsibility is put on these kids. They are asked to juggle two extremely important things in academics and athletics, and they [the student-athletes] recognize that success is facilitated by a lot of people. They appreciate the opportunity to thank those who have helped," said Tami Moore, director of Academics and Student Development.

Award recipients were nominated by student-athletes for their advising or tutoring assistance, career planning or guidance, help with a problem, simply listening, a specific act of kindness, or some sort of meaningful contribution to the life of a student athlete.

April 6 marked the 11th annual National Student-Athlete Day and throughout the month, colleges and universities nationwide will be taking part in events that honor the hard work and accomplishments of student-athletes.

The National Student-Athlete Day was co-created by Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport in Society and the National Consortium for Academics and Sports to "acknowledge the accomplishments of student-athletes in the classroom, field, and community," Adam Zand of the Center for the Study of Sport in Society said.

Suzi Katz, national director for the National Consortium for Academics and Sports echoes Zand's sentiments.

"Student-athletes are incredible role models in the community and it's a chance to recognize their accomplishments outside of athletics," Katz said.

Besides recognizing the accomplishments of student-athletes, on and off the field of play, National Student-Athlete Day is a chance for the student-athlete to honor the behind the scenes people who help to ensure academic success along with athletic success.

The day gives student-athletes an opportunity "to thank teachers, coaches, and parents who help to strike a balance between athletics and academics," Zand said.

The UI will also be sponsoring a College-Bound Student-Athlete Fair on April 28 as part of National Student-Athlete Day.

The Student-Athlete Fair is designed to help high school students, who may participate in intercollegiate athletics at any level, make a better and more informed decision when deciding on a college. The fair is not intended to be a recruiting event, it is a strictly informational session.

"It essentially is a community service project to help students make a more informed decision after talking to student-athletes from all levels and all sports," Moore said.

High schools from a 100-mile radius have been invited to attend the fair, which will feature Idaho student-athletes and Academic Services giving short presentations on the different aspects of becoming a college student-athlete.

High school students who attend the College-Bound Student-Athlete Fair may also sign up to shadow a student-athlete for a day. Volunteers from each sport will be available to spend a day with interested high school students to answer questions and give them a feel for what a typical day is like for a student-athlete at the UI.

Sportsmanship, role models in sports sorely lacking

staff

If one athlete, point blank, alludes to the fact that sportsmanship in athletics is important, then it would be logical for that competitor to exhibit the characteristics of a good sportsman.

Take for instance, the words of one Karl Malone, who is the third-leading scorer in the NBA. The Utah Jazz competitor is somewhat outspoken in his views on physical abuse. He has made a few commercials over the years that verbally attack the perpetrators of abuse. And his aim is to protect small children.

Malone is quite the player and, in the commercials, quite the sympathetic speaker on abuse. Fans of the "Mailman" know that he plays with the ferocity and drive that few competitors seem to show these days. Fans will always remember Malone for his one-handed dunks on the wing after a fast break and his ability to work the inside with the biggest of players.

Sometimes, though, the "Mailman" has gone a bit overboard with his comments and his play. You see, Malone is the kind of player that thinks that he has earned the respect of all his fellow competitors and demands that they acknowledge him for a spectacular career. There really isn't anything wrong with that, but it seems he has become more and more adamant about respect as his career winds down.

Malone has verbally attacked many of the younger players in the league and challenged their respect for the game. When Karl Malone sets up the pick-and-roll in the 1998 NBA All-Star game, he expects the "younger" players to pass to him down low for the score. When a younger player drives and shoots a jumpshot and, in the process, overlooks the aged veteran, a player like Malone becomes angry and hostile.

In sports, just as in any other profession, the veterans should be respected by their peers. However, one would think a skilled professional with years of experience shouldn't have to lobby for respect each and every time he does an interview.

Respect is the name of the game as we all know. There is little respect in professional and, for that matter, college and high school sports. The Mailman believes that he is not respected by everyone and so he passes the blame on the younger players and states that the game is no longer "fun." These same comments can be heard by Houston's Charles Barkley, who also verbally attacks the NBA on a weekly basis.

It has gotten a little out of hand for Malone, who was suspended last week for landing a vicious elbow on San Antonio's David Robinson in a crucial Western Conference game. Now many of you are probably wondering what an elbow has to do with a lack of respect. Yes, Malone is a very physical player but he is frustrated and it showed against Robinson.

Karl has a great many things to deal with. First, he has yet to help his team win the World Championship. His ability is as solid as ever but his team is aging and may not be able to win in future years. Finally, the NBA is a young man's game with egos and a monstrous talent pool.

Make no mistake: Malone is an all-star, but is on the decline. The sad thing is that he refuses to bow down in dignity and instead attacks the game that has made him a legend. He refuses to acknowledge the fact that players like a Kobe Bryant or a Kevin Garnett are the future of the league. He does this because they are charismatic and will not call him Mr. Malone before, during and after a game.

If Malone intends on spreading the good word that he alludes to in his commercials about abuse, then maybe he should practice what he preaches and exhibit the behavior of a role model. Even if he says that he does not want to be a role model, he already has taken the reigns of being one — and not a very good one for that matter.

With an epidemic of sour displays of sportsmanship that many of us are guilty of from time to time, it would be nice if the "professionals" could pave the way for positive behavior on and off the playing field.

The time is right for the Mailman to deliver on his message.
