OMA prepares for Hispanic Heritage Month

BY YVONNE WINGETT ARGONAUT STAFF

The University of Idaho will spotlight the achievements of Hispanics in celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month, a nationally recognized celebra-tion, which lasts from Sept. 15 through

The Office of Multicultural Affairs, with the help of several student organizations, is coordinating numerous activities for the celebration, Leathia Botello, interim coordinator of multicultural programs, said tural programs, said.

Botello said student participation in minority-based organizations, such as La Organizacion de Estudiantes Latino Americanos has doubled compared to last year. OELA has approximately 30 active members this semester. Last semester, there were 15, she said.

The increase of participation may be due to an increase of minority students on campus. Hal Godwin, vice president for student dent for student affairs, said the number of minority students at UI grew 11 percent this fall over last fall.

Overall, UI's minority enrollment rate has reached 8 percent. He said these figures represent students who identify themselves as minority stu-dents, and does not include international students.

Tonight, the OMA will show "The Price of Glory," a movie highlighting Latino actors. The showing will be held in the Borah Theater at the Student Union Building at 7 p.m. and admission is free. OELA members will lead a discussion following the movie and refreshments will be served.

OMA set up displays in the library (UCC 223) highlighting Hispanic heroes who have earned personal success while contributing to their commu-

OELA, in conjunction with the Dean of Students, OMA, New Student Services, and Vice Provost for Student Services, and Vice Provost for Student Affairs, will present the fourth annual "Vandal Challenge: Hispanics for a Better Mañana" Oct. 5 through Oct. 8. Congress: tests show Firestone 'had to know' of tire defects

Dan Adomitis, a spokesman for Firestone, said he was not aware of the test results cited by Johnson, but he added: "Tire failures are an integral part of testing and they are to be expected.'

The disclosure, on the eve of new Capitol Hill hearings focusing on the testing of the 6.5 million tires recalled last month, came in a day of fast-paced developments:

Ford said it cannot find records of its initial testing of Firestone tires, and acknowledged they were not tested on an Explorer. Instead, the company said the tires had been rigorously tested on an F-150 pick-up rigged to mimic an Explorer, apparently a standard industry practice.

Sentiment on Capitol Hill swung in favor of imposing criminal penalties on automakers who knowingly sell a defective product as a Senate committee unanimously approved such legislation and a key House lawmaker said that chamber would probably adopt a similar meas-

In more trouble for Ford, the Department of Transportation opened a new safety investigation of 1995 and 1996 Explorers for a suspension-related problem that could affect handling in sharp turns.

Johnson, spokesman, said congressional investigators were taken aback by the 1996 Firestone tests. The results showed that tires of the type ultimately recalled were failing in tests in which they were run at 112 mph for 10 minutes. Johnson said that is not much faster than the top speed of an Explorer, and the results suggested the tires had little margin of safety.

He called the test results "incredible."

Johnson also castigated Ford, suggesting that an affidavit on testing which the company submitted was less than full disclosure. In the document, retired Ford engineer James Avouris described 1989 tests of the Firestone tires prior to the introduction of the Explorer. Ford has been unable to locate records of the tests.

Avouris said that the tires met Ford's performance at the lower inflation pressure of 26 pounds per square inch recommended by the company. However, the affidavit did not disclose the fact that the tires were tested on an F-150 pick-up, not an Explorer. Johnson said investigators House learned that when they directly questioned Avouris on Tuesday. "Certainly the wording of the affidavit was very curious," said Johnson. "But was it an attempt: to mislead Congress? I suspect someone will ask Ford that question at our hearing (Thursday)."

Responded Ford spokesman Jason Vines: "They weren't mis-Vines said the F-150 test "totally mimics an Explorer. Is this real-world testing? No, it was out of this world testing. It was excruciating testing. If they are confused, we've got to do a better job of explaining to Rep. Tauzin and the non-engineers on (Capitol) Hill.

Ford said the tires were tested for 200 miles at a minimum speed of 90 mph in 90-degree temperatures.

David Champion, director of auto testing for Consumers Union, said such tests would be acceptable if the F-150 had been set up with the same suspension characteristics and weight as the Explorer.

Bruce Kaster, a Florida lawyer who has represented dozens of victims in tire failure, cases, said the new revelations about Firestone and Ford tests will make it easier to prove negligence and punitive damages, claims against both companies.

"This increases the (financial) exposure that Ford and firestone have in these cases," Kaster said. As mistrust deepened between the Republicanled House investigators and the companies, lawmakers indicated they will seek new criminal penalties for auto companies that knowingly sell a defective

Teen accused of using Internet to manipulate stocks

BY ROBERT O'HARROW JR. THE WASHINGTON POST

NEW YORK - He is a teenage computer whiz obsessed by Wall Street, a stock maven precocious that as an eighth-grader he nearly won a national trading tournament for students.

But Wednesday federal reg-ulators said 15-year-old Jonathan Lebed had become too crafty for his own good, accusing him of using the Internet to manipulate stocks and earn nearly $273,000 in illegal profits.

It was the first time the agency has charged a minor. In a settlement announced Wednesday, Lebed agreed to pay the government $285,000, which includes interest on his profits. He neither denied nor admitted wrongdoing, but agreed to refrain from such behavior.

Working up to six hours a day on a computer in his suburban New Jersey bedroom, Lebed sent out hundreds of phony postings on the Internet, extolling stocks he bought through a brokerage account his parents set up for him when he was 12, accord-ing to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Because he used aliases, the SEC said, there was no way that other Internet surfers in search of a promising tip could know they were being manipulated by his exciting pronouncements.

And because he used "sell limit orders," which automatically sold the stock when it reached a certain level, he often was in school when he made his biggest profits, the SEC said.

"At about 14, he crossed into the dark side," said Ronald C. Long, the SEC's disadministrator Philadelphia, which announced Wednesday that Lebed has agreed to pay back his ill-gotten gains. "While he was sitting in math or science, he knew he was making his

SUB workers hit gas pipe; no damage reported

BY ANNETTE HENKE ARGONAUT STAFF

Officials are blaming incorrect blueprints for the evacua-tion of the Student Union Building Tuesday morning.

Construction workers hit a gas pipe outside the SUB at approximately 8:40 a.m., Lyndsay Read McCall, associate director of business and operations of the Idaho Commons and Union, said.

The blueprints the workers were using gave the location of the gas pipe as 3 feet below ground, when the pipe was clos-er to only 18 inches under-ground, McCall said.

As soon as the workers hit the line, they reported it, Carrie Davis, who was working at the Information Desk at the time,

"We called Environmental Health and Safety immediately," Davis said.

The building was evacuated because fumes from the pipe were leaking into the building.

"The building was evacuated because of air quality con-cerns," said Jeff Kimberling, supervisor of broadcast field engineering for the Idaho Commons and Union.

There was no danger of an explosion, and there was only a slight risk of fire inside the building, Kimberling said.

The all-clear signal was given at about 10:50 a.m. The problem was fixed and no injuries or damage were report-

Mexicans reap NAFTA's benefits

By Mary Jordan THE WASHINGTON POST

GOMEZ PALACIO, Mexico -Stitch by stitch, Hortensia Hernandez's life is getting better. The 29-year-old mother sits in a factory with hundreds of other workers sewing jeans for the Gap, Tommy Hilfiger, Ralph Lauren and other U.S. retailers, earning triple the salary she did a couple of years ago doing the same work.

The La Laguna region around Torreon, 250 miles south of the Texas border, is known as the jean capital of the world - 4.5 million pairs are sewn here every week. Factories are expanding and hiring so fast that unemployment is virtually

That is great news for Hernandez, who is in such demand that her new employer sends a free bus for her every morning, offers her free lunch and pays her a top-end salary of $100 a week. The company also pumps in air-conditioning and Mexican music for Hernandez and its other 7,000 employees – 6,000 of whom have been hired since 1995.

"Things are changing rapid-ly," said Hernandez, who works for the Bull-D jeans company because it offered her the best salary, hours and perks - even an ergonomically correct chair. 'And if this doesn't work out, if they don't pay me enough, I will leave and get another job."

Hernandez is on the leading edge of the Mexican economy. Average wages for the majority of Mexico's 8 million industrial workers have fallen 10 percent since the early 1990s to less than $14 a day, mainly because of a financial crisis that struck in

But notable exceptions are the 2.6 million jobs in the booming export sector, where salaries are typically 30 percent higher than those for jobs related to the domestic market. This is the way the 1994 North American Free Trade Agreement was supposed to work - more exports, more jobs.

But many Mexicans complain its benefits have spread far too slowly through the economy and were undermined by the currency debacle five years ago. Still, exports are growing fast. They account for nearly one-third of Mexico's $500 billion economy and at least half the three million jobs created since NAFTA took hold.

President-elect Vicente Fox has said repeatedly that bring-ing the benefits of this new economy to more Mexicans, and reducing the wage gap with the United States, is the way to better relations between the two countries.

More than 300,000 Mexicans flood across the border each year because they have no jobs, no money and no future. Give them those things, Fox argues, and illegal immigration will dry up.

La Laguna and other middle-class meccas emerging across Mexico are beginning to offer evidence that such a future, while still far off, may be more than a politician's pipe dream.

The hum and buzz of the factories in this region – an eight-hour drive south of the border – show much of what the future could become.

"This is the process of the development of a country: modernizing one company at a time," said Luis de la Calle, one of Mexico's chief trade officials.

Mexico is expected to replace Japan this year as the secondlargest supplier of foreign-made goods to the United States, with more than $120 billion in exports moving across the bor-

Only Canada has a bigger presence in the lucrative U.S. market. In just six years, Mexico shot up from being America's fifth-largest supplier of garments to its largest, passing China, Hong Kong, Taiwan and South Korea. American shoppers increasingly see "Hecho en Mexico" tags on their clothes as Mexico assumes the dominance once held by Asia.

Overall, exports have risen from $61 billion in 1994 to an estimated $165 billion this year, more than the combined exports of all South American countries. More significant for many Mexican workers, export factories usually require higher skills and pay more for it. In the case of the garment industry, many U.S. retailers worried about the pub-lic-relations nightmare of being affiliated with sweatshops will only do business with companies such as Bull-D, which offer good working conditions working conditions.

The forces of global competi-tion are not a big topic of discus-sion among the factory workers, but they do talk about its effect: increasing wages.

Hernandez earns $20 a day. While not much compared with the factory worker in Texas who typically earns $12 an hour, it is triple what she earned sewing in 1997. Only last month, she said, she was working longer hours at a different company for less NAFTA was a bold continental pact that allowed the tax-free flow of goods among Canada, the United States and Mexico. It allowed, among other things, Mexican companies to buy duty-free U.S. computers and technology to upgrade factories.

These companies could then export their goods duty-free back to New York City electronics stores and Houston shopping

Jennifer Bair, a Duke University scholar studying the Mexican apparel industry, said there is still a large gap between U.S. and Mexican wages but that U.S. and Mexican wages but that it is "inspiring" to talk to employees and managers around La Laguna because of the changes under way.

Clinton proposes thinning and burning of private, state and tribal lands

BY JODIE SALZ ARGONAUT STAFF

Wildfires burned nearly 6.7 million acres this year, which makes this one of the most destructive fire seasons in almost 50 years.

In response to the destruction, the Clinton administration made a proposition last weekend to clear brush and trees on another 455,000 acres of federal lands next year. This would be a 33 percent increase over what agencies had initially planned. If accepted, a total of 1.8 million acres would be thinned through logging and prescribed burns. The thinning would occur mostly near fastgrowing areas such as Billings, Mont., and Jim Lyons, an Agriculture Department under-secretary, told the Idaho Spokesman Review that "the agencies are committed to minimizing the

This proposed thinning is part of the plan Clinton proposed Sept. 9, which would increase next year's firefighting and fire prevention spending to $1.6 billion.

Department officials offered to help thin 315,000 acres of private, state and tribal lands and told reporters they planned to clean watersheds, stabilize soils and replant vegetation on about 750,000 acres of fire-damaged land.

Government officials seem to have varying opinions on the proposed projects. Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Chairman, Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, told the Idaho Spokesman Review the effort is "totally inadequate."

Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, blasted Clinton's proposed roadless initiative, which would ban road building on 43 million acres of roadless forests.

You're turning your back and years. walking away from living things that Mother Nature will burn down," he said. In defense of his position, Craig cites Forest Service figures that show two-thirds of agency lands that burned in the West this year were in wilderness and roadless areas.

Lyons opposes this viewpoint, saying that remote areas burned because agency officials focused on fighting fires in areas where the fire was a threat to communities.

Vandal fans wait in line Tuesday for tickets to Saturday's game against the WSU Cougars. Candace Baltz, editor of the WSU newspaper accepted the Argonaut's hair-dying wager (see her response below). The editor of the losing school will have to dye her hair a shade of the other school's colors.

Daily Evergreen editor accepts football challenge, berates Vandals and Moscow

might be a blonde next Monday morning.

This was before we beat Utah Saturday.

your lunch money in high school.

And we're gonna beat the Vandals like a redheaded stepchild, because one of them will be one after Saturday.

What sparked this turn of pity for our Idaho neighbors into a mini-border war? Well, a bizarre thing happened last

I'm fairly accustomed to reading and comprehending articles about WSU president Lane Rawlins or the Middle East peace process, but give me a hockey story and my eyes start to twitch. I'm the girl that doesn't know a golf ball from a football. And I'm the one that the University of Idaho's newspaper, the Argonaut, decided to make a "friendly" bet with on our homecoming game. Go

The "friendly" bet is over the color of my hair.

That may become a problem. Unless we win. We have to win.

Her fake tattoo

will soon read

"Argonaut."

The Argonaut1s editor, the aggressive Jenny "I want to have Butch's love Child" Warnick, dedicated an entire page to challenging The Daily

Evergreen's editor, moi. It was quite a treat to see my face smiling back at me from Page 4, but kind of a disturbing thought to ponder. I

For those of you who don't read the Argonaut (I don't blame you, it is Idaho, after all) the bet goes something like this: If WSU wins, Jenny agrees to become a redhead for at least one week in honor of WSU's crimson and gray. If WSU loses, I go vandal-gold. Yuck. I think someone's been spending too much time sniffing fixer and developer in the newspaper dark room. What are you thinking, Jenny? Your team has an inflatable mascot. Your football players wear yellow pants. The only thing they could "vandalize" would be a patch of pansies. You're in Idaho, don't forget.

See Joe Vandal. See Joe Vandal suck.

See Joe Vandal suck royal Coug at the homecoming game Saturday.

Yeah, that's right. I said the Idaho Vandals suck. Suck suck suck suck. What are you gonna do about it? "Vandalize" us with your "cable-ready" skills?

Y'know what else, Jenny? Your town stinks. Moscow actually smells like crap. And just think, it was one of your own who decided to put a sewage treatment plant right smack-dab next to your school of choice. Somebody doesn't like you. I mean, they really

So bring it on, redhead. I accept your bet. Did I mention your team wears yellow pants?

Candace Baltz, Daily Evergreen Editor

Still not

So, the bet is on and the hair dye will be flowing — flowing a deep yellow gold all over the Daily Evergreen's brunette head.

Now let's get back to the point, and away from all the "sucking." UI and WSU are playing a football game tomorrow, gold pants and all (and if Blonde Candace isn't nicer, those gold pants may be waiting in a dark alley for the tow-head who doesn't know that her town smells like poop, too). So, yes, the pseudo-tattooed Candace Baltz has accepted the challenge. What does this all mean for the Vandals?

WSU will hear their fair share of blonde jokes.

And I — I will enjoy my natural hair color along with our victory Saturday. Go get 'em, boys. I bet you will. I bet my HAIR on it! I will be cheering you on with a black and gold sweatshirt and ever-BROWN hair.

Too much freedom of speech can be negative unlight is essential for life, yet too much sun causes skin cancer. Food is something we need to survive, yet too much food causes bad health.

The same idea goes for the nour-ishment of a healthy country – too much freedom of speech allows room for prejudice to feed the minds and hearts of others with hate.

The United States is a free country, where people have the right to openly express their views and opinions on any matter. I believe the line should be drawn when these views start affecting others in hurtful and demeaning ways.

The Aryan Nations leader, Richard Butler, has asked for a permit to have a parade Oct. 28 in downtown Coeur d'Alene, just two hours fromhere. A parade for a bunch of people who, feel special because their skin is white is silly, but can still be accepted and protected by the first amend-ment. A parade for a bunch of people who think they are superior over others because their skin is white, and act on that view, should be a different The Aryan Nations group is vio-nt. Two years are rity guards chased and shot a defenseless woman and her son as they drove past their building because they assumed they were a Jewish conspiracy aimed at canceling a parade they planned to have.

This kind of behavior should be more than enough proof of their vio-lent reactions; they do not deserve to have a parade, they are nothing to celebrate. Parades are for festive occasions. Racism is something the United States has been struggling with for years. It's time to put a firm stop to it.

I don't believe it would be an invasion of constitutional rights to prevent this group from having a parade. The constitution gives equal rights to all people, but the Aryan Nations go against the constitution by preaching white supremacy and lessening adio, and recently TV, talk show host Dr. Laura Schlessinger has an opinion on L vevery issue imaginable. The opinion earning her the most visibility and boycotts is undoubtedly her view of homosexuality.

Referring to homosexuals as "biological errors" has earned Dr. Laura protests and worldwide petitions against the airing of her new daytime television talk show.

The organization fueling the fire against Dr. Laura is the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation, and it appears as though the group's efforts are paying off. One by one, sponsors and advertisers are dropping the new talk show from their ranks.

Dr. Laura's infamy is rivaled only by notorious raw-rapper, Eminem. GLAAD has also taken action against the artists' controversial work by boycotting The Marshall Mathers LP, and protesting outside the MTV Video Music Awards earlier this month.

The organization claims these two prominent icons of contemporary culture are contributing to intolerance and hatred of the gay and lesbian community; and feels the banishment of their work from radio and television will help pave the way for tolerance and acceptance.

I submit to you that such action only reinforces the notion of intolerance.

The last time I checked, the freedom of speech guaranteed by the First Amendment applied to everyone in the United States of merica, not only those with popular opinions.

Everyone, including Dr. Laura and Eminem, has the constitutional right to express themselves and their views. Does that mean everyone else must listen and agree? Of course not. But they have a right to say what they feel. For organizations such as GLAAD to call for the banning of Eminem's album or the removal of Dr. laura's program is to deny First Amendment rights.

These are the same rights, by the way, that minority groups themselves fought so hard to attain; they, most of all, should understand their importance.

By censoring those who contradict their views, groups such as GLAAD are becoming part of the oppressive force, which they fought

They battled censors and protestors to get their message out in the public eye; they etched their place in history by refusing to adhere to the "popular," accepted majority.

They must remember this when speaking out against Dr. laura and Eminem. The only difference between them is that the latter is taking the opposite side of the argument. But that doesn't make them any less valid, or worthy of Personally, I do not endorse or condone the message put forth by either Dr. Laura or Eminem, but my solution to the dilemma is simple: don't listen to them. If you find yourself in a similar situation, don't tune in to her shows; don't buy his albums. But don't try to strip them of their fundamental rights. Freedom of speech is a right enjoyed by all, not just those with popular or warm and fuzzy opinions. would ask GLAAD, and its fellow protestors to think back to a time when they were silenced simply because of their less-than-popular views, and remember what they fought for while they strive to take the very same right away from

How can you ask others to be open to understanding and tolerance when you won't exercise these ideas yourselves? Think about what the freedom of speech means to you - now go do the right thing.

It seems as though Wal-Mart is trying to take over the world. Their strategy is simple.

Step one: open a Wal-Mart store in every town with a population exceeding 18 across the United States.

Step two: make all other countries jealous of the convenience and low prices Americans are getting and set up stores in every other nation.

Step three: out-sell local businesses, start carrying their products and get as many people as possible into the Wal-Mart "family."

Step four: eliminate the need for shoppers to go anywhere else. Make sure they keel happy and content in their Wel-Mart.

Step five: harness loyal Wal-Mart shoppers as drones for a new Wal-Mart Universal

Drinking alcohol keeps you in control

K, people have been com-plaining about fraternity drinking parties since 1840. And yes, binge drinking is considered a huge problem among college students.

By now, I'm sure you've heard about all of the bad things that come from drinking.

It's time to re-evaluate the situation.

Alcohol does have many beneficial side effects, and I'll discuss those, to show why people should go out drinking as often as possible instead of turning down so many opportunities to get wasted, as they obviously do

First off, alcohol picks you up. When you're drinking, you're having fun. Unless you're depressed, in which case the depression gets worse, or if you have a bad temper, in which case your temper gets worse, but these aren't normal college

Only about one of five students undergo depression, so there's only a 20 percent chance drinking is going to make some-one more depressed. The odds are good that you'll just have fun.

Next, alcohol aids some types of memory recall. Think about how often you forget what you had for dinner the night before.

If you've been binge drinking, there's a good chance you can poke around the blob inside or beside the toilet and figure out what you ate last. However, alcohol doesn't really aid academic memory recall, but hey, that's not a big deal. We are not here to learn, are we? Third, alcohol helps you meet new and interesting people. Without drinking, you would never notice how attractive the smelly, unwashed man in the corner really was. And then there's that fantas-tic dialogue at the break of dawn, when you introduce your-self to the chain-smoking prostitute beside you before you run out for breakfast. But think, you would have never met her if you hadn't been drinking.

Another side effect of alcohol is the adventure brought to your otherwise boring life. I mean, in 85 percent of homicides, the attacker, victim, or both had been drinking. And in car accidents, 50 percent are alcohol related.

But going to jail for killing someone in a bar fight would teach you many new skills and introduce you to many new people.

Besides, some people are furned on by prosthetic limbs, so the car accident that took your leg just makes you more appealing to the opposite sex.

Consider the facts and you'll discover the hangovers, shame and fear are worth it in the end. Go on, get plastered as often as you can handle.

Don't listen to the nay-sayers who tell you drinking is all bad.

Look at the great benefits I touched on! And that was only the beginning. I didn't mention making friends with doctors and nurses because of unplanned pregnancy or STD's.

And for guys, those extra child support payments can be a blessing in disguise, if you put the right spin on it. But binge drinking is no big deal, because you'll probably only do it in college. I mean, only one out of three alcohol-consuming adults ever becomes an alco-

I'm sure that will never happen to you.

Station did not uphold standards

Dear Editor:
The letter "Where Diversity Will Never Reign"
by David LaVigne was to be congratulated. That letter spoke my mind, and many others as well.

KUOI did the same thing to me — they took my popular radio show off the Fall list.

They cited their reasons, but I don't think they stood up for what the station is supposed to uphold: "Where Diversity Reins."

People loved my show. I featured fast/upbeat Latin & Dance music. One of the only DJs who played quality Latin music nobody has heard often it went beyond the "import album" thing — music I picked up during my travels in South

People had me turned on at Goodwill, Brannegan's, and toward the end of the season, people were calling me up and saying, "Oh, so this is the Legendary Jonathan I'm talking to?"

Many, many other people called saying they liked the variety of music I featured — comments like these were played every time I was on the air.

The station manager received over 200 e-mails and calls from people requesting to put The Super Dave show back on the air. I know my show was good — as did Super Dave — and people loved lisening to us.

But because I did not play most of my music 38 from their library (which was actually a suggestion), and did not make playlists, they did not at

Student discusses 'open' religion

"Religious beliefs are private" (Sept. 12,2000) really got me thinking. I am not attacking the one who wrote it, but discussing the ideas therein. Let me tell you about my mother: She is the best! You have to meet her! Obviously, I've known her my whole life, and I know a lot about her. She's an awesome cook. She's a great musician. She's very intelligent, and an awesome teacher. Just ask any of the students she's taught over the years.

I don't know one student she has taught that will ever forget her. Can you tell I like my mother? I have been known to brag about her without being asked about it.

If you had a friend who changed your life (or nearly formed your life like my parents have), wouldn't you want others to know about him or her? If you had a friend who saved your life, as wouldn't you want others to know? You would recognize them in public like America recognizes our World Wars veterans and Korean and Vietnam veterans.

Let me introduce you to a friend of mine, and if this is preaching, so be it, because this is real to me: Have you met Jesus? You have to meet him! I've known him for much of my life, and I hope I know a lot about him. He's a great cook. He provides me with my daily bread, and makes his home in the heart of man. He's very intelligent and is an awesome teacher. Ask any of those who've been taught under him. I don't know one student of his who will ever forget him.

Nobody asked me, but the credit card fraud recently experienced by an over-trusting student could have and should have been easily prevent-

I'm not referring to locking away one's goods, but what retailers can do to prevent fraud. Why is it that many retail stores (big and small) are not checking a purchaser's identity when they use credit or debit cards?

This is not only a courtesy, but also a step used to protect customers.

The last time my ID was checked when making a credit card purchase was overseas — six years ago! Retailers have a responsibility to protect consumers from credit card fraud like our fellow student recently experienced.

I would appreciate knowing that a salesclerk and the store have the customer's interest in mind by asking for an ID when making a pur-

Freedom of speech and of the press, is declared in the 1st Amendment. For the past 19 years, the American Library Association and other organizations have sponsored "Banned Book

Week," a celebration of the freedom to read and, as stated on the ALA Web site, the "freedom to express one's opinion even if that opinion might be considered unorthodox or unpopular ... "

The University of Idaho bookstore is among those who will be involved in recognizing this event.

Peg Godwin, the bookstore manager, said the store plans to set up displays exhibiting banned and challenged books, among which will be Mark Twain's "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" and the popular "Harry Pottor" porior

"Harry Potter" series. The displays are intended to help the public become aware of Banned Book Week and to encourage people to read those books which have faced sup-

"Banned Book Week focuses attention on misguided efforts to suppress good books," said Bob Green, Moscow resident and owner of the local bookstore Book People.

According to Green, Banned Book
Week began focusing its attention in 1981 when it was first organized, but the spirit of the celebration certainly has roots reaching back much further to the times of Martin Luther, Galileo Galilei and John Milton who were suppressed and punished for expressing ideas which differed from their societies' established ways of thinking.

Although today's writers are technically protected by the constitution, many of them face similar difficulties as they attempt to express their ideas to the world. In the past 10 years over 5,000 books have been reported challenged or banned throughout the nation. Well-known works included among ose are Mark Twain's "The those are Mark Twain's "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," because of offensive racial content; John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men," because of offensive language; "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings," by Maya Angelou, because the book was said to be too explicit about the subjects of rape and abuse; the "American Heritage Dictionary," because of inappropriate language; and the "Harry Potter" series, by J.K. Rowling, which was said by South Carolina schools to have "a serious tone of death, hate, lack of respect, and sheer evil," a surprising accusation considering the books' popularity among children and adults alike.

In most recent cases, books have been banned or challenged by public and school libraries in an attempt to protect minors from that which has been judged to be offensive.

But, as stated in the ALA Intellectual Freedom Manual, "It is not the function of the library to screen materials according to arbitrary standards of acceptability."

Parents only reserve the right to protect their children from offensive materials. HIM releases second album of improvised jazz and rock

BY CRISTINA CARNEY

The new HIM record holds some of the smallest instrumental jazz and rock that has debuted all year. It is as progressive as it is spontaneous, consisting of six lengthy tracks most of which were recorded in one take. HIM moves away from their previous tinkering in experimental electronics and more towards organic and traditional instruments used in not so traditional ways.

Featuring Doug Scharin and Sean Meadows of June of '44 fame, as well as Jon Theodore from The Royal Trux.
On each track obscure sound effects mingle with brassy horns and improvised squealing saxophones as voodoo influenced drum beats add a primitive tribal rhythm to sounds seemingly unstructured extept for the dependable percussion beat.

These distinctive drums are those of Theodore who allegedly spent two months in Haiti studying the art of Voodoo drummers. Throughout the album he is constantly switching from con-

provided by Fred Erskine whose sense of rhythm may place him more naturally into percussive tendencies than the riffs heard from the lead guitar.

Wah wah petals are no stranger to lead guitarist Carlo Cennamo as heard in the third track entitled "Liberation Part I" in which the centerpiece is an overly extensive guitar solo constantly morphing from '70s-era effects pedal abuses.

The more subtle moments on this album often feel more silent and separate than the actual pauses between each of the

Although the saxophone is found screeching on this album, it is also utilized in a more popular and seductive manner. This is how it made its reputation as the sexiest band instrument in elevator music. But HIM are not going to let you get too sappy by leaving this soft sax to its own devices, instead they add piano, guitar, and organs, as well as random cymbals and percus-

It is in this unpredictable way that HIM stands out on this album from other improv and experimental bands working in the same genre.

Planned experimentalism could perhaps be a term used to explain the nature of HIM, or perhaps the quality, which a song is in which five or six different music themes and sounds revolves around a solid beat, and this solid beat being the only constituent that keeps your feet on the ground.

Madonna's album Music shorts out

BY DAVID BROWNING PRODUCTION EDITOR

Madonna is beginning to have some trouble making

Her 13th album, Music, released Sept. 19, is what we have seen in Madonna albums of the past - something new, innovative and flat-out funky.

But still, it is a smash. Music is a welcomed change and defies what other record labels call "music" — acts like 'NSync and Britney pop relies far too heavily on what electronic edge she could place on each single that it strongly overpowers her vocal presence she worked so hard to obtain with moving ballads

MUSIC

The album, released Sept. 19, features 10 singles, a running time of 44 minutes, 37 seconds.

The album starts strong with its dominant title single, "Music." The '80s dance pop, yet futura techno quickly climbed to the top of Billboard's Hot 100 singles chart (where it remains for Week 2) and is numero uno in 14 foreign countries.

But despite its thumping beats and help from French techno mixer Mirwais, Music won't make it much further than the clubs. The queen of and her statuesque portrayal in However, we cannot blame Madonna for this wave of electronica of which America refuses to let go. It is Cher's fault. Really.

Let us take a trip back in time to 1999 when the aging Cher was the first to decide that old age is best hidden in techno tweaks. Case in point – "Believe." Soon followed by Kid Rock, and now Madonna, is this a trend? We could very soon be bombarded by albums completely sung in robotic four-part harmonies.

Blame Cher for Madonna's shortcomings with Music.

'Runaway Lover," Music's third track, keeps the dance groove flowing, but, things quickly slow by the fourth song, "I deserve it." After that, the album tries to pick up the pace with "Amazing," reminiscent of "Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me's" "Beautiful Stranger" without the "da da da

The women's soccer team rolled over the Eastern Washington Eagles

"We played well enough," said assistant coach Steve Crum. "We finished our scoring chances better than we did last Sunday."

We came out not focused. We were taking our opponents way too lightly, based upon their record coming in," Crum said.

The Vandals shrugged off the cold weather, which may be their ally in weeks to come.

This is what they [the UI players] play in all year-round growing up. This is what we are counting on when the California teams come up to play," said Crum.

The Vandals meet the University of Nevada Wolfpack today at 3 p.m. at Guy Wicks Field. The Nevada women's soccer team is in its first year of competition, and the team sports an experienced coach and young group of athletes.

"We're creating our own demise," Head Coach Tom Cable said. "We're our own issue." The Vandals are hoping to resolve these issues on Saturday when they attempt their second straight victory over Washington State University in the "Battle of the Palouse."

"The biggest key is that emotions are going to be so high, who's going to go in there and make the least amount of mistakes," Cable said.

Mistakes have plagued the Vandals during their rigorous early schedule, mostly in the terms of penalties and turnovers. The Vandals are hoping to break out of this rut and

Getting through was not a problem last year when Senior Defensive Tackle Mao Tosi crushed WSU Quarterback Steve Birnbaum early in the Steve Birnbaum early in the third quarter. The play, considered the turning point in the game, set up 14 unanswered points by the Vandals.

The Vandal defense plans to send a similar message to WSU Sophomore Quarterback Jason Gesser, who was last week's Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Week.

"He's got an ability to scramble," Senior Linebacker Rick Giampietri said. "He makes most of his plays on the run. We have to contain him."

Containing Gesser will be the main priority of the Vandal defense. Gesser was on target against Utah last Saturday when he wontpleted 11-18 for 211-2 yards and four touchdowns.

"Keep him in the pocket," Junior Nose Tackle Wil Beck said, who has already claimed said, who has already claimed two quarterback sacks this season.

The "Battle of the Palouse" is quickly becoming the biggest non-conference rivalry for both UI and WSU. The increased interest has been assisted by the close proximity of the two schools and the Vandals ability to threaten the WSU dominance of the series. Another contributing factor is that 36 players on the Vandal football team call the state of Washington their home.

"We've got all these Washington guys over here (at UI) that grew up watching Cougar football," Giampietri said. "This is a huge game. It's one that we really want to win." "We're definitely ready for them," Beck said. "We need a win."

The series dates back to 1894 and is the longest in either school's history. The Cougars have dominated the series with a 63-16-3 mark, but the Vandals may have dawned a new era last year when they dominated the second half to gain the respect of the WSU Cougars by a score of 28-17 - ending a 25-year losing streak.

The game will be played at Martin Stadium and kickoff is 2 p.m. The game will be televised by Fox's Sports Northwest on a delay basis.

Jenny Neville serves humble pie

By JENNIFER WARNICK BDITOR IN CHIEF

Jenny Neville eats humble pie for nearly every meal.

Vandal volleyball's 5'10 starter is not only a humble person, but also a stellar setter. Jenny wondered out loud why anyone would want to interview

Well, could it be because she's been a starter for each of the three years since she moved here from her home in Sonoma, Calif.? Maybe.

Or, is it because of how she's the Big West top 10 for assists for

But maybe Jenny should be spotlighted because, on and off the court, she is a kind and gracious person and a team player. A person whose passion for vol-leyball and life shines brighter than the gleaming, reflective number 12 on her jersey.

"I am a very compassionate person," she said, noting that she often takes care of other people before she cares for herself.

However unselfish, Jenny does know how to distinguish herself in sports. She grew up as the child of an athlete, her father played college baseball, and always had a goal to get a sports scholarship.

She was a gym rat in high school, but worked hard at sports not just for her own personal enjoyment. "It was a way for me to pay back my parents for everything they've done for me," she said.

Jenny played basketball and softball, as well as volleyball, but soon the time came, as it does for many high school athletes, to choose one sport. When she was a junior, Jenny made this choice, and put her heart into volleyball. Because of her hard work and talent, she was heavily recruited out of high school. Jenny had several options for college, but chose Moscow after visiting the campus. "I just fell in love with the campus," she said. "It just felt

Not only was the UI a good fit for Jenny, she was a vital addition to the team from the beginning. In fact, she consid-ers playing collegiate volleyball one of the greatest accomplishments of her life. Along with her love of the sport comes an appreciation for her team-

Much of her life is volleyball, but Jenny also makes time for other things. Like oranges (her favorite snack) and parties (the under-21 kind) and reading (from anatomy texts to romance novels) and music (some hiphop) and movies (especially "Pretty Woman" or "Ever After").

So yes, she does have a life. A life she describes as 45 percent volleyball, 40 percent school, 10 percent fun and 5 percent sleep.

But it's the 45 percent volley-ball that helps draw a crowd to Memorial Gym, especially a crowd the size of Wednesday's.

That was awesome - one of the biggest crowds we have ever played in front of," she said. "I hope that many people keep coming."

Memorial Gym is a killer away-game for other teams, she said, because the crowd is "right there" next to the court. The result is a loud band of Vandals that for many visiting teams is a little close for comfort. "They hate our crowd," she said.

The future undoubtedly holds more records, assists, kills and digs for Jenny and her

Olympian sees end of solo career

BY SALLY JENKINS

SYDNEY, Australia — Jenny Thompson is the archetype swimmer, eyes the color of lapis, hair an ashy chemical blond and torso as big as a larch tree.

But the voice is too small for her, soft and whispery without a hint of larynx, and she lacks the typical self-assertion of a gold medalist.

Instead, she is supremely philosophic, maybe even a bit woo-woo, Pilates-honed and Stanford-educated. She doesn't own a television. Thompson is an Olympic puzzle: she has more gold medals than any other U.S. female swimmer-but not one of them came in an individual event.

Thompson swam in what was probably the last solo race of her Olympic career on Thursday night, the 100-meter freestyle, a once-and-forall chance to Get hooked in Avery

BY STEPHEN KAMINSKY OUTDOOR AND TRAVEL EDITOR

Idaho's most interesting resident lives in the town of Avery. 9 He resides in a hanging glass 3 cabinet alongside the bar in the Avery Trading Post. He guards the building with a hook as one arm and a rifle by his side. He has been there for 40 years without complaint, and will likely do another 40 years of sentry duty without murmuring a word.

O Avery, located about 50 miles from St Maries, up the St. Joe River on the St. Joe River Road (FH50), is the last town on the driver before the highway snakes up to the Montana border, and turns to gravel. Woodrow Wilson visited Avery when he was pres-

The resident in the glass case was a hapless trapper, who set off in about 1900 for the wilds of the Yukon to trap animals for a fur. Caught in a snowstorm, he died, and left the ground around him littered with bear traps, his nifle and the hook that replaced the half of his left arm which whad gone missing years before.

A wandering Canadian found the bones some 60 years later, and returned them to Idaho. He's been hanging out in the bar ever since.

Avery's sub-100-person population has created some entertainment to keep itself busy in the long winter months. Near othe downtown area, which consists of only the Avery Trading the town's original jail. It measlures about 10 feet by 10 feet, and has bars on the windows and a

Next to the jail is the trout pond which is actually an oval pool with a water jet on the far side to keep the water moving and the trout happy. Eric Leitz, a native Parkline, Idaho, resident, describes the fish as, "big vitrout.'

The road over Moon Pass, an old rail grade, leads 28 miles through four tunnels en route to Wallace, Idaho. The road is wide, and the tunnels cold, even in the issummer. Winter travel is not recommended; always watch out for logging trucks barreling around blind corners.

b The road to Moon Pass is a deft turn immediately after the town ends.

Popular with people who fish, Lost Lake is located across the river and about 25 miles east of Avery. The drive on the gravel road takes about an hour, and the hike is 3 miles and another hour. This year, 6 feet of snow remained around the lake in

On the road to Lost Lake, foldow signs carefully and keep a sharp eye out for the small, brown, Forest Service road signs. Many of the road signs have been perforated with high-speed ventilation holes, so make sure there is a map handy in the car before setting off into the mountains.

The finished Egg Sucking Leech in the jaws of a fly tying vice.

ARGONAUT STAFF Sucking Leech. Though the materials may vary, anglers that fish for steelhead will have some form of the Egg Sucking Leech in their fly box. By changing the size and bulk of this pattern one can catch steelhead in a variety of fishing conditions. Below is a listing of materials or "dressing" needed to tie the Egg Sucking Leech.

HOOK: salmon/steelhead, sizes two through eight

BY ZAC SEXTON

THREAD: red or orange 6/0 TAIL: two purple turkey marabou feathers and four to five strands of crystal holographic flashabout medium gold or copper wire BODY: medium black chenille HACKLE: purple strung Chinese saddle EGG MASS: hot orange or pink cactus chenille,

These are the steps required to tie the Egg Sucking

1) Use pliers or forceps to pinch barb on hook. (Regulations require the use of a pinched or barb-less hook while fishing during the catch and release season). Start thread and work back to a point between the hook point and barb. Tie in two strands of purple marabou. Be sure to wet fingers and dampen the marabou. This process enables easier handling. Secure marabou along the hook shank, allowing room for egg mass and thread head, about three-quarters of the hook length. Secure and

2) Tie in flashabou on far side of hook shank. Work flashabou over to the near side and secure. Clip flashabou to the length of the marabou.

3) Tie in wire on near side of hook shank. Strip fuzzy material off the end of chenille to be tied in. This makes it easier to neatly form the body. Tie in chenille on near side of shank. Wrap chenille forward forming a cigarshaped body. Secure and clip excess chenille.

4) Strip a short section of the base of hackle, about onequarter of an inch. Tie in base of hackle just in front of chenille body with the shiny side facing out. Wrap two turns at tie-in point. Palmer the hackle back to base of tail, about five to six turns. Wrap gold wire forward to secure hackle. Be sure to work the wire through the hackle fibers so the fibers are not trapped against the body. Secure wire at the hackle tie-in point. To break the wire, twist wire in a motion similar to the hands of a clock. 5) Tie in chenille. Wrap forward being sure to stroke fibers of chenille back before each turn. Leave room for the thread head. Secure chenille and clip excess. 6) Build a tapered head, whip-finish and clip thread.

Chenille ready to be tyied into the lure.

cement head.

This pattern is effective on cloudy and/or windy days. Fish tend to be less spooky in these conditions and will hit a larger bulkier fly. When the sun is shining and the wind is calm, an angler will need a smaller, less obtrusive fly. Following the steps above and using the dressing below, a fly tier will have just such a fly.

HOOK: salmon/steelhead, sizes six through 10 THREAD: red or orange 6/0

TAIL: one purple turkey marabou feather and three to four strands of crystal holographic flashabou

RIB: medium gold or copper wire BODY: black four-strand floss or small black chenille HACKLE: purple strung Chinese saddle EGG MASS: orange or pink cactus chenille, small Adjust proportions to allow for the slimmer body. Use a smaller hackle to produce less of a silhouette. Unweighted, this fly will ride just below the surface of the water, just where early season steelhead are found. As the water cools an angler should weight the fly by using lead wire or adding a bead to the fly. Split-shot can be added to the line to get the fly deeper. Be careful not to hit your rod with the extra weight.

Next time an angler is on the Snake or Clearwater rivers watching steelhead roll at the surface, that angler would be wise to tie on an Egg Sucking Leach and present it to the fish. Once a steelhead is hooked, the memory of the fight will stick in an angler's mind forever. Knowing the angler caught a steelhead on a fly tied with the their own hands makes the moment worthwhile.

UI Logger Sports Club moves to new location

Jack and Jill, Single Bucking, Cantilever Pole — all logger sporting events the University of Idaho Logger Sports club participates in every May.

For the last 27 years, the men and women of the logger sports club have gathered in the parking lot west of the Kibbie Dome to practice their skills.

Lately, there has been controversy over the inclusion of women on the team.

"In order to win, you have to have a woman on the team," assistant professor Richard Folk said. He said 17 or 18 women are on the team.

At first, the male members of the team were apprehensive and stubborn about women joining the team. After women joined, the team enjoyed greater success, Folk said.

Folk is the coach of the team, which consists mkostly of students from within the College of Natural Resources, but other Vandals majoring in math, education and other non-environmental studies are also on the team. He said that stu-dents from LCSC and WSU are also omemvers of the UI team. Folk said the club was founded in 1917 and went through a few iterations before settling on the current name in 1978. Logger sports events consist of a range of activities, one of which is the chopping event. Participants of the chopping event use single-bit axes to hack through a block of wood. The winner is the person with the fewest chops or the lowest time. In the cantilever pole event, a member of the team runs onto a log that has a pole sticking out of it. The winner is the person who chops off the pole first.

Other events are logrolling and poll-

"Occasionally, a person comes up with a new event, like fire starting," Folk said. Since the construction of the new facilities management building where the log-ger sports area was, the university is building a new place for logger sports events at the Agriculture Experimental Farm on the Troy Highway. Last week, workers poured cedar chips. The chips came from donations by Idaho Cedar Sales or the university.

"The site has the potential for becoming a first-rate location," Folk said.

The finished area will contain lighting, seating and refreshments. The UI Logger Sports Team offers three $500 scholarships. One team member set up his own scholarship in 1991 called the Unique Endowment Fund. While that member only completed one year on the team, he was so impressed he asked his parents to set up an endowment fund, Folk said.

2000-2001 hunting season Fish and Game releases rules and regulation in manual

BY ELAINA DONOHOE ARGONAUT STAFF

In the race to get ready for hunting and fishing, don't forget to check the rules and regulations for this season.

Whether a seasoned hunter or fisher, consult the Idaho Fish and Game manuals available at local retail-als available at local retailers for a full list of legal codes. Below is a partial list of rules for game in season in Idaho, excerpted from the Fish and Game manual.

POSSESSION AND SALE

OF WILDLIFE PARTS: One fully-feathered wing or head must be left naturally attached to any dressed game bird (except turkey); the beard or spurred leg must be left naturally attached to turkey carcasses. Naturally-attached parts are needed so enforcement and management personnel are able to identify the species and sex of the birds in possession or being transported.

WASTE OF GAME: Hunters are required to remove and care for the edible meat of big game animals, except mountain lion.

This includes the meat of the front quarters as far down as the knee, hindquarters as far down as the hock, neck meat, meat along the backbone, and meat covering the ribs. It does not include the meat of the head, internal organs, or meat on the bones after close trimming.
PREDATORY AND

UNPROTECTED WILDLIFE:

Coyotes, skunks, weasels and jackrabbits are classified by Idaho law as predatory and unprotected wildlife. They may be taken in any amount year-round and at amount year-round and at any time by holders of the appropriate valid Idaho hunting, trapping or combination hunting and fishing licenses, provided such taking is not in violation of state, county, or city laws, ordinances, rules, or regulations

EQUIPMENT RESTRIC-TIONS- UNLAWFUL METH-ODS OF TAKE

No person shall take big game animals with any firearm that, in combination with a scope, sling, and/or any other attachment, weighs more than 16 pounds, with any rimfire rifle, rimfire handgun or muzzle. fire handgun, or muzzle-loading handgun, EXCEPT for mountain lion.

With any chemicals or explosives attached to the arrow or bolt, with arrows or bolts having expanding broadheads or with any bow capable of shooting more than one arrow at a time, or with electronic calls.

FISHING:

It is unlawful to use live fish as bait, except crayfish and bullfrogs may be used if caught on the body of water being fished. Bullfrogs and crayfish must be taken with the hands.

To use chemicals, poisons, electric current in attempting to catch or destroy fish. To leave a fishing line unattended, to molest any fish by shooting at it with a firearm or pellet gun, striking at it with a club, hands, rocks, building obstructions for catching fish, or chasing fish up or down stream in any manner, are also bit allowed.

To Lost Lake, drive across the St Joe River, and follow signs for Fishhook Creek. Take Fishhook Creek Road, also called 301, about 20 miles. Pass through a tunnel, over a small pass, and down the other side. Turn right on FR216. Follow that road for a few miles, then ford the Little North Fork Creek. The stream passes over the road, but a two-wheel-drive car can easily pass through when the water is low.

The unmarked trailhead to the lake is located shortly after the stream crossing on the right. The trail is well-kept for about half the way, and then deteriorates after a collapsed bridge across a shallow creek. Crossing the creek can be a slick experience for the non-fleet of foot.

The trail meanders about another 30 minutes before it opens up into Lost Lake basin. Lost Lake is nestled at the foot of a mountain and is nearly circular. The water is impossibly clear; it's possible to see the bottom of the lake from the bank 100 feet away. Fish jump in the late afternoon, and often bears: will trot along the hillside above:
