DEFINING JAZZ

Styles, interpretations of jazz have changed over the years

BY LAURA GENTRY
ARGONAUT SENIOR STAFF

For those who like strict definitions and clear boundaries, jazz may be the most unsuitable form of music ever invented.

Jazz musician Wynton Marsalis has described jazz as "music that swings." Encyclopedia Britannica describes jazz as a "musical form, often improvisational, developed by African-Americans and influenced by both European harmonic structure and African rhythmic complexity. It also is often characterized by its use of blues and speech intonations."

Beyond the attempt at a vague definition, Britannica admits jazz is "the most enigmatic of musical forms, never respecting any of the received truths about itself."

Despite the lack of a universal definition, the roots of jazz are fairly well documented. Jazz started in the ghettos of New Orleans in the late 19th century.

During the 20th century, it migrated to Chicago and

New York. From there, the jazz scene spread, as did the genre itself. New varieties of jazz styles started cropping up and continue to do so today. Among the many styles of jazz music, a few of them include:

Swing: Louis Armstrong tentatively started the genre when he joined Fletcher Henderson's Orchestra. The swing era began around 1935 when the Benny Goodman orchestra gained popularity. Swing ensembles are simpler and generally filled with repetitious riffs, while contrasting the solos are more sophisticated.

Bop: Developed in the 1940s, bop, or bebop, soloists engage in chordal (rather than melodic) improvisation, often discarding the melody altogether after the first chorus and using the chords as the basis for the solo. Bop was seen by some as a radical musical style because of its disregard for melody.

Free Jazz: After playing a quick theme, the free jazz soloist does not have to follow any progression or structure and can go in any unpredictable direction. Cecil Taylor and Ornette Coleman were the pioneers of this style.

Fusion: Developed in the late 1960s, fusion is a mixture of jazz improvisation with the power and rhythms of rock. Miles Davis, Pat Metheny and Herbie Hancock are notable contributors to the style.

Acid Jazz: This style originated in London in the mid-'80s. Brought about by the British club scene, DJs concerned only with the "groove" mixed their favorite records with a '70s Cuban jazz twist. Included in the list of acid jazz artists are the Stereo MC's, the Brand New Heavies, Jamiroquai and Medeski and Martin & Wood.

Contemporary Jazz: This style refers to the mainstream jazz performed in the '80s and '90s concentrating on rhythms rather than improvisation. There is a rock and pop influence to contemporary jazz and it can be heard through the likes of David Sanborn, Kenny G. and David Benoit.

Sharing something special with Grandpa Lionel

BY LEAH ANDREWS AND AMANDA HUNDT
ARGONAUT STAFF

Even an 87-year age difference could not stop the remarkable friendship between jazz great Lionel Hampton and Moscow kindergarten Katelyn Skinner. Five-year-old Katelyn has adopted Hampton as part of her family and fondly refers to him as "Grandpa Lionel."

The two owe their connection to the coincidence of their births: Both were born April 20. Every year on her birthday, Katelyn receives roses from the nonagenarian jazz legend, and in return she draws him pictures. Alisa Skinner, Katelyn's mother, said that Katelyn likes to draw pictures of Hampton with his signature black hat on.

When asked why she receives flowers on her birthday, Valentine's Day and other special occasions, Katelyn had a simple answer: "Because Lionel Hampton loves me."

Hampton learned that Katelyn was born on his birthday from Lynn "Doc" Skinner, director of the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival. Doc is Katelyn's grandfather.

"She just gets all giggly and excited when she gets [the roses] but I don't think she realizes how neat it is. I think some day she will."

ALISA SKINNER
KATELYN SKINNER'S MOM

"When she was born her grandpa was really excited because it was Lionel's birthday," said Alisa, who also enjoys the flowers Hampton sends Katelyn.

"Every few months a dozen roses will show up at our house for us to take over and give to Katelyn because he is thinking about her," Doc said.

Katelyn began receiving the bouquets of flowers from Hampton after their first meeting, when she was 10 months old. Alisa Skinner has tried to preserve most of the flowers and has kept the cards sent with the flowers as memoirs for Katelyn.

Katelyn Skinner, granddaughter of jazz festival director Lynn "Doc" Skinner, writes a thank you card to Lionel Hampton. Hampton and Katelyn share the same birthday, April 20. Hampton sends her roses for special events such as Valentine's Day, her birthday and other occasions.

The Skinner family garage is filled with dried roses from Hampton. Alisa finds the juxtaposition of roses and power tools humorous.

"It's been really fun, the collection of roses in the garage hanging with the extension cords and the ladders," she said.

She hopes to be able to do something with the roses that will help her daughter treasure the memory of Hampton's kindness for years to come.

"I'd like to figure out a way to either

The Ada County Sheriff's Department took custody of Amanda Rich after a protest at the state capital Monday. Rich, a Boise State University student, shouted "Minimum wage for farm workers now" as she was being lead off.

Student protesters arrested after disrupting Senate session

BY STUART BRYSON
THE ARBITER

BOISE — As a Senate session was called to order at the Idaho Statehouse on Feb. 19, state legislators were interrupted by a group of about 20 student activists who threw streamers and phony $3 bills off the balcony onto the floor.

The students on the floor and on the balcony chanted and spoke in support of a minimum wage for Idaho farmworkers and protested House Bill 71. They called the bill, which is currently under discussion, a "phony bill." Activists say it does not do enough to guarantee farmworker wage increases, and merely reflects current federal laws.

The Idaho Progressive Student Alliance, students from Boise State and local high schools organized the protest.

Activists do support Senate bill 1029, another piece of proposed legislation under consideration. Senate bill 1029 simply requires the state of Idaho to enforce a minimum wage of $5.15 per hour for all farmworkers.

During the protest, two students locked themselves together with bicycle U-locks. Minutes after the protest began, staff members and an irate den mother of a group of Cub Scouts who were observing Senate proceedings urged protesters to stop their action and leave. Security and police officers then arrested 12 students, including three minors, on charges including criminal trespassing and disturbing the peace.

The activists claim that the normal legislative process has not done enough to address the needs of Idaho farmworkers.

Boise State University professor of ethnic studies Dr. Richard Baker said protests of this type are part of the democratic process, and are legitimate, normal actions to take when the formal processes are not successful.

He said the farmworker minimum wage issue is an example of institutionalized racism and that House Bill 71 is an elaborate image campaign

"People have a right to demonstrate, and we are at the state capital."

MIKE MONROE
LT, BOISE POLICE DEPARTMENT

designed to protect the interests of white farmers. "The legislature is supporting lumber workers and farmers, but has not voiced any concern about farmworkers," he said.

Umberto Hortencia, co-chair of Idaho Minimum Wage for Farm Workers and director of the Idaho Migrant Council, said the protest was an indication of the frustration Idahoans feel about the issue. He called House Bill 71 a "status quo" bill.

"House Bill 71 does not cover one additional farmworker not covered under federal law," he said.

He said legislators were not completely opposed to wage increases, as they are working on a wage increase for themselves right now.

Hortencia said surveys indicate that 76 percent of Idahoans are in support of minimum wage legislation for farmworkers.

At a press conference, Boise Police Department Lt. Mike Monroe said the protest did not constitute a security risk to the capital.

"People have a right to demonstrate, and we are at the state capital," he said.

Representative Doug Jones (R-Filer), who has been working on House Bill 71 for three years, claims that the bill is a huge step forward for farmworkers in Idaho.

Although House Bill 71 parallels existing federal legislation regarding farmworker wages, Jones said federal laws have not been enforced and many farmers are not even familiar with them.

Racial description leads to protest

BY JERRY HICKS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

The police chief in Placentia, Calif., on Wednesday ordered his officers to stop using the letter N as the racial designation on traffic tickets for black motorists after nearly 900 people signed a petition blasting the practice as insensitive and racist.

The N stands for Negro and stems from old law enforcement racial abbreviations that haven't been used for many years.

"I am an African American; I have never been or will ever be the 'N' word," said Placentia resident Comelita Brown.

Brown, 43, was given a speeding ticket in Placentia, southeast of Los Angeles, Jan. 15 by a white traffic officer.

Brown later noticed that in the space designated on the ticket for "race" the officer had used the letter N.

The officer should have used the letter B, for black, Placentia Police Chief Russ Rice told the City Council Tuesday night.

That is the abbreviation used by the National Crime Information Center, which designates letters for other racial groups such as whites and Asians.

Police departments are not required by law to note the race of people who receive traffic citations. For departments that do record the race, court officials said almost all tickets use B to describe blacks.

Most Placentia traffic officers use the proper racial designation, the chief told the City Council. The officer who wrote the citation is a former training officer who taught procedures to recruits, police spokeswoman Corrine Loomis said.

Matt Reynolds, the officer in charge of the police services division, said Rice is "extremely sensitive" to Brown's complaint.

The officer who wrote the ticket, Reynolds said, was unaware how offensive it was to Brown but "I'm sure he knows by now."

Rice said Wednesday that he has instructed the professional standards bureau to issue a memo to make sure everyone in the department knows the proper racial descriptors for tickets.

Brown said she was disappointed that she did not receive a response from the city. But Loomis said that was inadvertent.

Brown's letter had gone to the city manager, who was on vacation. Rice did write Brown on Wednesday as a follow-up to her complaints at the council meeting.

Air strikes

Crapo supports attack; Bush confident in plan

COMPILED BY SARA YATES
NEWS EDITOR

Idaho Sen. Mike Crapo announced his support of the Iraq air strikes Feb. 16, expressing relief for the safety of U.S. military.

"I am relieved that there have been no reports of U.S. casualties," Crapo said. "At this time, our hearts and minds must be with the brave men and women of the U.S. military and their families, who are putting their lives at risk to protect our national security abroad."

The statement was made after U.S. armed forces attacked radar installation in Iraq in response to the continuing threat posed to U.S. forces securing the Southern No-Fly Zone.

"Iraq has consistently flouted the international community and our calls to comply with UN Security Council resolutions. Continued hostility by Iraq against U.S. military personnel cannot be allowed to stand unchallenged. I stand firmly behind President Bush's call to protect our forces and mission in the area," Crapo said.

Most recently, President George W. Bush said Friday's strikes on radar and military communication sites were planned to let Iraq President Saddam Hussein know the Bush administration was serious about staying engaged in the Gulf issues and degrading

Iraq air defenses.

"We got (Saddam's) attention. I think we were successful in both missions," Bush told reporters in his first White House news conference.

U.S. defense and Navy officials told reporters that fewer than half of the U.S. Navy's new satellite-guided glide bombs struck radar sites near Baghdad Feb. 11.

One of the officials, who asked not to be identified, told reporters many of the guided bombs missed their radar site targets by up to 100 yards or more in some cases, but that guided missiles and other remaining bombs were much more successful in damaging air defense communications links.

The misses were attributed to software problems and/or damage to the bombs before they were loaded onto attack jets. Each bomb costs more than $300,000, roughly the cost of living (including tuition, fees, books, and room and board) at the University of Idaho for 79 full-time students.

History in the making

Hampton Center announced with strong backing

BY WYATT BUCHANAN
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

With no other institution spending as much time cultivating future jazz artists, the Lionel Hampton Center is a natural fit for the University of Idaho campus, said former President George Bush on video at a kickoff ceremony for the center.

UI officials, along with Hampton and U.S. Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., gave the $60 million project its official start at the University Inn/Best Western Thursday morning.

Hampton, called a "national treasure" by both Bush and Conyers, said this project was not a fly-by-night operation but world history.

"Soon, when people ask where the best place in the world to learn the art of jazz is, we'll say, 'Moscow, Idaho,' to those who say, 'New Orleans,'" Hampton said.

Conyers echoed Hampton's praise for Moscow, saying the Jazz Festival and project could not happen in cities like New York, Los Angeles, Chicago or Detroit.

"It had to be out in Moscow, Idaho, where you have to have a serious purpose to come," Conyers said. "You're the Big Kahuna [of jazz] in the Northwest and now the world is coming to your doorstep."

The Lionel Hampton Center initiative is a four-part project (or four-part "harmony"). It includes a $6 million endowment fund for the festival to help bring students to the festival, pay costs of bringing musicians to the festival (and keep some as artists-in-residence preceding or following the festival), pay for festival promotion, hire staff for what are now volunteer positions, and extend the "Jazz in Schools" program beyond Idaho.

Another $40 million will pay for a performance and educational facility with a 1,200 seat theater on Sweet Ave. in the current red and gold lot east of the school of music. Planners envision a three-level gothic style building that will eventually connect to the school of music, UI President Bob Hoover said. He said the center will be a good addition to the future main entrance to the campus.

Hoover said the project is moving on "Hoover Time" (a speed above normal time and fast time) and could be completed as early as 2006.

The third portion of the center includes archiving and digitizing over 110,000 pieces of memorabilia UI has received from artists like Ella Fitzgerald, Dizzy Gillespie, Carmen McRae and Lionel Hampton. This collection forms the core of research material that will be available for worldwide access and will cost about $6 million to create.

"I'm happy and the musicians are happy that there will be somewhere to put our knowledge and pass it on," Hampton said.

The final part of the project

UNIVERSITY COMMUNICATIONS AND MARKETING

ARTIST'S RENDERING

will raise $4 million to give full-ride scholarships through the school of music and also attract and hire jazz music professors.

The area proposed for the center is where Hoover said the university wants to establish an arts district on campus.

"The arts has always been one of the key elements of the university," Hoover said. "This will give it a special place."

UI officials hope to pay for the center using a combination of federal, state and private funds. Bev Lingle, director of the Lionel Hampton Center initiative, said she will seek $20 million to $25 million in federal funds, $5 million to $10 million in state matching funds and $10 million to $15 million in private donations.

UI Provost Brian Pitcher said the university has received about $1 million in private donations thus far.

Jazz festival parking far beyond a problem

The University of Idaho has been trying to deal with the lack of parking on campus for years now and every February it becomes host to one of the greatest Jazz festivals in the entire Northwest. And every year parking becomes a disaster for one major group: the students.

If this year was the first to hold the Jazz Festival that would be one thing, but it is not. Every student, whether interested in music or not, is directly affected by the lack of parking.

What about the new lots built to accommodate the increased population of students? Oh, those are also used for the Jazz Festival. This sends a hard message to the students at the university.

We are being told that even though we paid for a lot to park our vehicle our money does not equal the revenue gained by all the attendants and buses that consume our parking. It also conveys that our class time is not important to the university.

give up my paid service of parking to allow the university to look better?

Where is the point of taking enough? UI does not want to fix this problem because there is too much of a greater income in sticking it to the students than truly creating a fix to the situation.

I participated in the parking forum held last month in the Idaho Commons and I did voice my concerns dealing with the issues of parking.

My suggestion to solve the parking problem is for the university to stop using temporary Band-Aids and start working on a long-term solution. That means taking up less land for blacktopped parking lots and build a new parking structure that will meet the demands for now and the future.

The answer from the parking committee was that they are concerned with the structure being aesthetically pleasing. What? Has the mentality now come to what looks good and what functionally works?

The Kibbie Dome is an eye sore. It blocks the view of beautiful summer sunsets and it is checkered in an unorganized array of yellow, white and gray. But it works and fits the needs of the entire campus. I will not take aesthetics as an answer.

Last week, the students of the university were notified with yellow signs that our parking would be off-limits and we were to search for another lot. Tuesday morning after the holiday, we were slapped in the face and displaced across the community to illegally park somewhere else. Not only did the parking police herd us to pasture; they continued to issue tickets to any vehicle parked anywhere near an illegal site. And beyond that, the Moscow Police Department had their own officers patrolling city streets on campus, citing illegally parked vehicles.

In my frustration, I contacted the campus parking office and issued very harsh criticism to the employees to seek an answer for our displacement. I came to the conclusion that the reason parking is never solved is a two-part answer.

No. 1, parking currently makes money for the university through permit sales and parking violation revenue. No. 2, the officials of the parking administration are not displaced by the lack of parking lots. This is simple to see when visiting the office. The main campus parking is located on Third Street across from a furniture store — far from the problems of campus. The other office is located in Wallace Complex and has exclusive rights to its own parking.

I contacted campus parking to voice my concerns.

Anyone who would like to learn more about the issue can call Parking at 885-5500.

put them in a shadow box or something, and maybe get some pictures of her with Lionel, some way that she will know all the neat things that he did to send these flowers and kind of preserve this special time," Alisa said.

The most recent arrivals in the garage are pink roses from Valentine's Day. Alisa said it is not unusual for Hampton to send Katelyn as many as two dozen long stem roses.

When Doc brought Katelyn the roses, she began to ask him about Hampton's next visit to Moscow.

"Grandpa, when is Hamp coming, so I can see him?" Katelyn said.

Katelyn's father, Marc

Skinner, assistant director of the University of Idaho School of Communication, believes his daughter and Hampton have a special friendship.

"I think it is neat that a 92 year old and a 5 year old just kind of hit it off," he said.

Katelyn will be able to tell her children about receiving roses from Hampton someday, but for now she is a normal kindergartner, learning sign language in school and dancing to "Radio Disney" CDs with her brother and sister.

"She just gets all giggly and excited when she gets them (the bouquets) but I don't think she realizes how neat it is. I think some day she will," Alisa said.

Diversity forum today at College of Law, City Hall

The challenges associated with diversity issues will be addressed at the third annual diversity forum today at the University of Idaho Law School Courtroom and Moscow's City Hall.

The event is sponsored by the University of Idaho, National League of Cities' National Black Caucus of Local Elected Officials, the City of Moscow and the Association of Idaho Cities.

The theme for this year's event is "Northwest Cities and Opportunities for African Americans: The Challenge of Diversity and the New Millennium." The forum is for those who are interested in promoting diversity in municipal activities. Participants will exchange perspectives and ideas on a variety of topics related to diversity.

The forum will begin at 9 a.m. in the UI Law School Courtroom. The keynote speech will be given by Felicia Gaskins, associate vice provost for Human Relations and Diversity at Washington State University.

A panel of experts will facilitate discussion following the keynote address in the UI Law School Courtroom. Some include: Carol Y. Clark, NBC-LEO president; Cindy Lopez, community service police officer of Longview, Wash.; Deborah Love, director of WSU's Center for Human Rights; Michael Shaw, human rights coordinator for the Association of Idaho Cities; UI graduate student Phill Allen from the Nez Perce Tribe; Raul Sanchez, UI special assistant to the president for diversity and human rights; Vera White Reynolds, treasurer of NBC-LEO from Harrisburg, Pa., and Sam Byrd, diversity trainer from Boise. The afternoon sessions include:

"Attracting, Recruiting and Retaining People of Color," 1:30 p.m., City Hall Community Center Room.

"Human Rights and Pacific Northwest Cities: What Matters for All of Us When Seeking 'Making it Real: Nuts and Bolts Recruitment, Retention and Advancement,'" 3 p.m., Moscow City Council Chambers.

Jazz Fest junkies of the world, unite

Hi. My name is Mandy and I am a Jazz Fest junkie.

You may recognize us by our "All That Jazz" T-shirts and our use of strange words such as "site manager," "PGE" and "PIS sheets." The most significant sign of a Jazz Fest junkie is the excitement that lights up our faces when we hear names like Ethel Ennis, Brian Bromberg and of course, the man himself, Lionel Hampton.

Jazz Fest junkies are the ones who not only knew who Al Grey was — one of the great brass players and nice guys of our time — we still mourn his loss at this year's festival.

We don't mind getting up for 6:30 a.m. volunteer meetings and dealing with all the elementary through college-age students competing at our competition sites. We take the abuse of band directors, irate parents and sometimes inept judges all with a smile.

The Jazz Fest junkies run this festival. Year after year we disappear from class to work for four days on little sleep and food with not much more compensation than free tickets to the evening concerts, yet we come back for more every year.

As a retiring Jazz Fest junkie, I want to take this opportunity to thank the students and community members who help make this festival possible.

According to jazz critic Leonard Feather, who is only slightly biased, the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival is one of the best festivals in the world. This festival brings much prestige to little Moscow, Idaho and the University of Idaho and it is amazingly done almost completely by volunteers.

Even those students and community members who are not Jazz Fest junkies should appreciate how special it is to have an event such as this happen in their own backyard. It is worth all the parking hassles and general chaos 15,000 people can create.

LIONEL HAMPTON JAZZ FESTIVAL

International artists shine in first night

BY WYATT BUCHANAN
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

Wednesday night's Pepsi International Jazz Concert proved that although jazz is an American musical invention, it transcends age, race and nationality.

Twenty-two performers played on the Kibbie Dome stage for more than four hours to give an electrifying kickoff to the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival evening concerts.

Although the Dome was only about half full (between 4,500 and 5,000 spectators), jazz filled every bit of open space in the vast arena.

Highlights of Wednesday night's show included: Seventeen-year-old Billy Contreras making beautiful jazz explode from his violin (an uncommon jazz instrument). Contreras played for about 10 minutes, including a two-minute solo, showing little facial emotion but letting his arms and legs move with his music.

Hank Jones, arguably the world's greatest jazz pianist, played his own set as well as accompanying other musicians.

Russell Malone showed off his fast fingers on the guitar, playing several sets and countless solos to an enthusiastic audience.

The elegant Nancy Wilson sang for a half-hour set, showcasing her unique vocal style throughout her emotional performance.

Paquito D'Rivera of Cuba and Claudio Rodito from Brazil played the final set of the night, energizing the dwindled crowd with samba flavored jazz.

After intermission, U.S. Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., told the audience that he needed to bring the House of Representatives to the jazz festival.

"We'd get a little more camaraderie and civility by spending a weekend in Idaho," Conyers said.

A member of Russell Malone's Quartet jams Wednesday night.

Carpe diem: Band trip romance is teenage bliss

Her name was Brandy. We had "gone together" in seventh grade (she was, incidentally, the one who taught me how to French kiss) but had gone our separate ways.

DAVIDBROWNING
Production Editor
David has started his own .com site for those recovering from band trip romances. www.bandtriplove.com. His e-mail address is arg_opinion@sub.uidaho.edu

That is, until the band trip. Mel Torne was to sing with the Utah Symphony in Salt Lake City and being the jazz great he was, my band teacher planned a trip with an old Greyhound bus full of 40 teen-agers with too much adrenaline and hormonal urge.

Now, keep in mind, I was just glad to see Mel Torne. Little did I know I would be so blessed as to acquire a band trip romance, too.

It was Brandy. Somehow, we always had those moments of flirtatious nonsense and then we'd drop the ball, but now we were on a bus — a Greyhound bus — and that spelled trouble with a capital T and that stands for Torne.

It happened without even realizing it. Our eighth-grade intelligence somehow surpassed that of our peers and we discussed philosophical theories of why butterflies committed suicide on the bus windshield (rough spring, I suppose). Slowly as we exchanged theories, our hands met beneath my tattered blanket and they didn't separate until hours later. There was as much bliss as a 13-year-old boy could enjoy — no parental supervision, girlfriend at my side and the big city. Oh yeah, and Mel.

But soon, too soon, it was over. Once the Greyhound bus stopped in our school parking lot, I said goodbye to Brandy and hello to bachelorhood. I didn't realize it at the time — I thought we'd always be together. After all, we held hands under my blanket — which, if you remember, is the most significant of all signs leading to a band trip romance.

She didn't break my heart. I knew it would be over once Mel, the Utah Symphony and our little Greyhound had gone home. Band trip romances are a novelty, something that cannot, according to natural law, endure anything outside the boundaries of a bus or off-site location.

Think of it. I cannot cite a single testimonial of a married couple who was a band trip romance and is now celebrating a 50th wedding anniversary. It just doesn't happen in today's society. And shouldn't.

So, for those of you here for the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival, remember some key things before you get your hearts too set on the person sharing a blanket with you on the bus:

1) All this bliss is just an extra bonus for leaving the house on a band trip. Don't thank fate, don't thank your parents, thank your band teacher. He/she is the ultimate cupid in your life.

2) Enjoy freedom while you have it. Hold hands, kiss on the bus and gross out your peers. I recommend the "we can't see them" method when you hide low in the back seat and everyone wonders what is going on and why that back window is fogged up. It's worth the time, trouble, rumors and sometimes discipline. Carpe diem, right?

The Spies Among Us

Espionage aficionados can find quite a few locations in the Washington region tied to famous spy cases—be it the seemingly innocuous mailbox used as a signal site or the footbridge in the park for the "dead drop." A look at a few familiar sites:

Dulles International Airport: CIA officer Harold James Nicholson arrested in 1996 for spying for Russia.

Foxstone Park footbridge: Alleged "drop site" used by FBI agent Robert Phillip Hanssen.

Rockville: Rockville hotel: Retired Navy Warrant Officer John Anthony Walker Jr. and son, Michael Lance Walker, a Navy seaman, arrested in 1985 for spying for the Soviet Union.

Old Evans Farm Inn: CIA hangout (now closed).

Arlington utility pole: "Signal site" allegedly used by FBI agent Robert Phillip Hanssen.

District mailbox: "Signal site" used by CIA counterintelligence officer Aldrich H. Ames, who pleaded guilty in 1994 to spying for the Soviet Union.

Former Soviet Embassy: Now the Russian ambassador's home. Ames, Pelton and John Walker approached the Soviets here.

FBI ignores warnings

BY DAVID A. VISE AND DAN EGGEN
 THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — FBI officials failed for years to heed a series of blunt warnings to tighten security measures, which might have allowed them to detect the kind of espionage that Robert P. Hanssen allegedly conducted with Russian agents for much of the past 15 years, government officials said Wednesday.

Congressional panels, inspectors general, interagency task forces, blue-ribbon commissions and others repeatedly warned the FBI that it needed more frequent lie detector tests like those now used by the CIA, increased financial disclosure by agents, dramatically tighter document controls and enhanced self-policing, Hanssen himself has not been polygraphed since he became an FBI agent 25 years ago, sources said Wednesday, because, despite his increasing access to highly classified information, FBI procedures do not require it.

Many of the suggestions for tightening security at the FBI were made after 1994, in the wake of the Aldrich Ames spy case, which prompted the CIA to overhaul its operations after the CIA operative pleaded guilty to spying for the Soviet Union. The Hanssen case is the second major blow recently for the FBI, which was forced to abandon the prosecution of nuclear scientist Wen Ho Lee when the case fell apart. The FBI has "a history of being fiercely resistant to change or to any oversight from outside," one intelligence expert said. "They always say they're capable of keeping their own house in order. That was obviously not the case here."

Hanssen, 56, was arrested Sunday night as he attempted to deliver a trash bag full of highly classified documents, and was charged with spying for Moscow in return for $1.4 million in cash, diamonds and deposits in a Russian bank. His activities harmed U.S. intelligence operations and contributed to the execution of two Russian double agents, officials said.

Investigators Get 'Black Box' in Submarine-Trawler Crash

HONOLULU — Federal investigators probing the deadly collision between a U.S. submarine and a Japanese fishing trawler said Wednesday that they now have the sub's "black box" — which should help determine how the crew failed to realize that the trawler was virtually overhead. The data recorder should show what sonar information was available to the crew about other ships in the area when the Greenville's commanding officer gave the order for a rapid ascent, called an "emergency blow."

"This is a gold mine," said John Hammerschmidt, investigator for the National Transportation Safety Board. "It's like hitting the mother lode of information."

After the Feb. 9 accident, Navy officials told NTSB investigators that they were unsure whether any recorded video, sonar or audio information was available; but they pledged to investigate. "As it turns out, there was data there," and it was turned over by the Navy, Hammerschmidt said. Still, he warned against expecting any quick determination about what went wrong and who, if anyone, should be blamed.

"We have seven columns of information — including time — and almost 500 sheets in hard copy, every second of the voyage," Hammerschmidt said. "We've got a lot of work ahead in analyzing this."

The 6,600-ton nuclear-powered submarine collided with the Ehime Maru, which serves as a training school for the Japanese fishing industry, just nine miles off the Honolulu coast.

The trawler sank within 10 minutes; twenty-six people were rescued, but nine others — including four teen-age students — still are missing and presumed dead.

On Monday, the Navy will convene a court of inquiry into the incident and decide whether to recommend criminal charges against any Navy personnel. Its probe is separate from the NTSB investigation.

Sixteen civilians were in the sub's control room when the collision occurred. One senior enlisted man has told NTSB investigators that the visitors crowded around his work station and that he was unable to complete his job of plotting sonar data in a written log intended for the officers' use during the voyage.

"What he was telling us was that because of all the activity on board, he stopped maintaining the plot," Hammerschmidt said.

U.S. urges Israel to turn over Palestinian tax revenue

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration urged Wednesday that Israel turn over an estimated $54 million in tax money owed to the Palestinian Authority and urgently needed to pay the salaries of its security forces and civil servants.

State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said Israel should transfer the money, which includes sales taxes and customs duties collected for the Palestinians, to ease the distress of PA chairman Yasser Arafat's government.

"We do believe that the economic pressure on the Palestinians needs to be relieved and that the tax payments, in particular, need to be made, need to be transferred over, because the Palestinian Authority needs the money to support its operations," Boucher said.

Though Israel began withholding the tax money after clashes erupted in September between Palestinian protesters and Israeli security forces, a senior State Department official called the practice a "primarily punitive step" that does little to restrain the violence.

Under Israeli-Palestinian treaties signed in the mid-1990s, Israel promised to turn over the money, which includes sales taxes paid in the West Bank and Gaza Strip on Israeli products and customs duties collected at Israeli ports on goods bound for Palestinian areas.

Secretary of State Colin Powell initially asked that the tax money be transferred to the Palestinian Authority during telephone conversations two weeks ago with Israeli Prime Minister-elect Ariel Sharon and former prime minister Ehud Barak. Powell repeated that message when he met last week with a delegation of former Israeli diplomats dispatched by Sharon to meet with Bush officials.

The same request was also conveyed in recent days to the Israeli government by Martin Indyk, the American ambassador to Israel. Powell is expected to include the issue in his discussions with Israeli officials when he visits Jerusalem this weekend.

Kenyan orphanage seeks to import discounted AIDS drugs

NAIROBI, Kenya — A small orphanage run by a Jesuit priest from the United States will be the first place in Africa to seek to import deeply discounted AIDS drugs under an Indian pharmaceutical company's new program to make such drugs more affordable on the continent where most of the world's AIDS patients live and die.

The Rev. Angelo D'Agostino, a former Georgetown University Hospital medical professor who runs the Nymbani home for orphans with AIDS in suburban Nairobi, said Wednesday that he will import antiretroviral medicines from Cipla Ltd. of Bombay.

"I am sick and tired of doing funerals," D'Agostino said. Although he estimated that the discounted drugs might be sufficient to treat only 20 of the 70 children at his orphanage, his efforts reflect increasing willingness of non-governmental organizations and AIDS activists to defy national regulations and international patent rules to buy cheaper, generic AIDS drugs.

Cipla's chairman, Yusuf Hamied, made headlines two weeks ago when he announced that, by taking advantage of World Trade Organization rules that permit countries to suspend patents in the event of national emergency, he would sell a combination of three generic antiretroviral medicines for as little as $350 for a year's supply for one person; similar treatment in the United States costs $10,000.

Cipla's offer to provide triple-drug therapy for $350 per person was originally made only to the French medical aid group Doctors Without Borders, which would then provide the drugs at no cost to patients at its treatment centers throughout Africa. But D'Agostino said Wednesday that he is seeking to buy the antiretrovirals directly from Cipla and will accept donated AZT, another anti-AIDS drug, from a Brazilian firm.

When — or whether — the drugs will reach D'Agostino's orphanage remains to be seen.

The industry giants have tried to satisfy growing calls to provide drugs for poor countries while assuring the drugs were brand names. Last year, five huge Western firms offered to negotiate with African governments to reduce prices on AIDS medicines by up to 80 percent.

Nine months later, however, agreements have been reached with only three countries. And the deals with Senegal, Uganda and Rwanda will provide medicine for fewer than 3,000 of the 1.3 million infected with HIV in those countries. Across the continent, an estimated 22 million people are infected; 11 million have already died of AIDS.

Pope elevates diverse mix to College of Cardinals

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II elevated 44 Roman Catholic prelates from five continents to cardinal rank Wednesday, to the delight of a multinational crowd that turned a solemn, ancient ritual into a joyous celebration of the church's global reach.

With the pageantry of ages, the new "princes of the church" climbed the steps of St. Peter's Basilica under a blue sky, took a Latin oath of loyalty and knelt one by one before the 81-year-old pontiff to receive his blessing. In a homily, John Paul admonished them to be "strenuous defenders of the truth" and "sure guides" of the faithful.

The promotions swelled the College of Cardinals to a record 184 members and stamped John Paul's doctrinal conservatism more firmly on the body that helps him run the church and will one day pick his successor.

Since his own election in 1978, John Paul has named all but 10 of the 135 cardinals who are now younger than 80 and thus eligible to vote for the next pope.

But it was the 40,000 spectators in St. Peter's Square who stole the show. The diversity of the throng made it the most festive and jubilant to watch a consistory — as such promotion ceremonies are called — in the memory of Romans who have attended them since the 1950s.

Turkey to float currency

ISTANBUL, Turkey — Turkey's leaders, struggling to gain control of a financial crisis that threatens the economic and political stability of one of the most important U.S. allies in the Middle East, announced Thursday morning that they will abandon their fierce defense of the country's currency.

After a 12-hour meeting that lasted until 3 a.m., Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit issued a terse statement declaring that Turkey's currency, the lira, would be allowed to float according to market forces against other currencies, rather than remain loosely pegged to the U.S. dollar and the euro.

The announcement came after a day in which the country's stock market plunged 18 percent, its worst single-day loss ever, and interest rates on overnight bank loans zoomed to annualized levels of 7,500 percent.

EYOB ALEMAYEXU / ASSOCIATED PRESS
A view of the Ethiopian town of Zalambessa, on the border with Eritrea, Wednesday. Zalambessa was allegedly completely destroyed by retreating Eritrean troops last year. Ethiopia is redeploying their troops present in Eritrea. The Ethiopian army authorities, who decline to disclose the precise number of troops present in the area, said that the withdrawal of the Ethiopian troops, including tanks and artillery, was to be completed Thursday at the latest, leaving a 25-kilometer (16 miles) temporary security zone to be patrolled by United Nations peacekeepers.

ArgoNapster good solution

Dear editor:
I just finished the essay Eric Pero wrote on behalf of the board, and his words have inspired me. I see my financial and spiritual future, all based on the Argonaut Editorial Board's spirit of sharing.

I see an alternative to the Argonaut, called ArgoNapster. It will feature exactly the same content as the present day Arg, as I am going to steal, or rather, you are going to share all the Arg's content with my publication.

I won't have any pesky payroll to deal with; you can do that for me, which should allow me to charge far less for my advertising than the Argonaut does (especially if I get equal funding from the students of the UI, who subsidize your paper). It sounds great, doesn't it? You people do all the work, and I benefit from that work, without any cost to me all in the Napster spirit of sharing. And after all, the Argonaut staff doesn't really deserve to be paid for their work, do they?

Thank you for all your help. Please send me that is, share with me, all content as promptly as you can. Trust me; you will really appreciate your sharing nature.

Guy Wikum

Vandals have been winning

Dear editor:
I am a member of the Idaho men's track and field team. I'm writing this to inform you of your gross oversight in your article.

You say that the volleyball team is the only successful team UI has to offer. That the golf team performs adequate at best, and that cross country is the same.

Just for the record, men's track and field won the Big West Conference Championships last year ... for the third time in five years. Men's golf also won conference last season. Women's cross country placed third and went to regionals this year.

The football team has been one win away from going to a bowl for the last two seasons. In 1998, the whole school was living vicariously through the football team when they won the Humanitarian Bowl.

I don't know what ties you have to the music department, but I feel that the band is a huge part of Idaho athletics (football). I also feel that cutting back funding to the athletic department is not an answer.

The athletic department raised the money for the Kibbie Dome expansion. Every team in the athletic department raises its own money. If the band is getting the short end of the stick, they need to take it up with the administration, not the athletic department.

Editorial missed the point

Dear editor:
I am writing in response to the article by Matt McCoy in Wednesday's Argonaut.

The fact that a basketball team with such a poor record receives more credit from the "higher-ups" than, say, the music department, is truly disgusting. However, I would advise Mr. McCoy to not lose sight of his own message for the purpose of making a point.

The last full paragraph of the first column of his article described the success, or lack thereof, of many of our sports teams in our recent history. Again, I agree with the author on points concerning the football team and both basketball teams, but Matt, let's give credit where there is some to be given, shall we?

He described the golf team as performing "adequately at best." It is my understanding that our golf team won the conference title this past year. If that isn't good enough for Mr. McCoy, then I think he may be setting his standards a bit high.

On another note, I would say that the Argonaut as a whole is not consistent with said lesson. A week ago, after just being defeated by either Santa Barbara or Long Beach (I don't remember which, but we lost in both anyway), the Argonaut published their paper with the weekend updates.

The funny thing is that this defeat gained a picture and a full article in our prestigious paper. However, the week-end success, which included record-breaking performances of the men's and women's track team got about a quarter of a page, giving a very brief and "adequate at best" account of the weekend's events.

To avoid straying from the point and being a hypocrite myself, I will at this point thank the Argonaut staff for their much-improved coverage of the most recent track meet, but for a conference winning team looking to repeat with strong talent and Vandal pride, one could ask for more from our supposedly unbiased school paper.

In any event, I would now throw out my own personal good luck and congratulations to all of our school's athletic teams, clubs, music performers, and everyone else who thinks that they deserve at least some credit!

OURVIEW

Get off the sidewalks

Ticketing on campus walkway keeps safe haven for pedestrians

Even the pizza delivery guy isn't safe from the Moscow Police Department's new enforcement of campus walkway regulations. Driving on UI pedestrian walkways without a permit is now a shortcut with a $115 fine and a misdemeanor charge attached to it. And for people who leg it all over campus, it's about time the UI and MPD put the velvet rope on campus walkways.

The city of Moscow, with the support of the university and the ASUI, passed a city ordinance in December allowing the MPD to enforce violations of the limited accessways on campus. One doesn't appreciate this kind of law unless they've been nearly clipped by an oncoming car on the way to class.

Most intercampus roads, at least those in the core of campus, were closed since Mount St. Helens erupted in 1980 because the campus was covered in ash. These roads were never re-opened.

The decision to enforce moving violations on campus walkways has been a long time coming, according to Pam Alsterlund, manager of UI Parking and Information Services.

Campus parking officials, before they joined forces with the MPD, were only able to ticket if someone parked illegally on campus walkways, not for moving violations.

Although there have been some rumblings among those who need closer access to the UI's nucleus, there is a way for students to have temporary permission to drive on walkways. The UI Parking and Information office across from Jack in the Box north of campus will provide temporary permits if you have a giant art project or a box of overdue books to deliver. And if it's after business hours, the police department can also provide the permits.

And for estranged food delivery people Moscow-wide, the office also has vendor permits for sale.

Nevermore should students be nipped in the heels by automobiles while walking to class with headphones on. As Pam Alsterlund eloquently put it, "You can't have cars and pedestrians interacting together, because the pedestrian loses." But finally, pedestrians prevail.

Drivers — stay off the sidewalks. Unless, of course, you have $115 worth of change in the ash-tray to fork over.

Jennifer Warnick for the Argonaut Editorial Board

Guest column

Cannibalizing one program to help another, not solution

I don't often "go to bat" for the athletic department; I usually am a strong, challenging voice about athletics and the mission of the university. But in the case of your opinion piece, "UI Robin Hood," I will step up to the plate as a pinch hitter.

The article basically argues that the University of Idaho's athletic department is wasting money and over paying its coaches because its teams are not posting winning records.

If the purpose of college athletics at Idaho is to win, then perhaps the Argonaut's column would have merit. However, the purpose of college athletics, whether it is here at Idaho, Stanford, or Small Town U, is about participation, the pursuit of excellence, and "enriched lives through the competitive experience."

Of course, every athlete, as St. Paul would say, "runs to win," but all competitive experiences will not result in a win.

To base the purpose of a program on the number of wins that it gains is rather narrow sighted and dogmatic.

Perhaps the Argonaut is attempting to argue that Idaho was once successful but obviously is not now according to their standards of wins and losses. It is true that for several years Idaho was very successful by the marker of "wins" in the Big Sky.

SHARONSTOLL Guest columnist

That success moved a former football coach and athletic director to lead the charge to "big time athletics." When Idaho moved from the Big Sky to the Big West, most of us who knew argued, to little avail, that the bottom line of Division I athletics is about revenue and potential for revenue.

For example, the operating budget of a big-time athletics program like University of Michigan is about 49-55 million dollars a year. Idaho's budget is approximately one tenth of that. It takes little economic aplomb to know that such disparity has a direct effect on the total program.

And, as well meaning as most supporters of Idaho athletics were at the time, the potential for revenue is truncated in our rural environment. History can teach hard lessons if we would listen. Once before, Idaho was "big time."

In the '60s and '70s, Idaho played within what was then the Pac Eight, with such great athletic stars as Jerry Kramer, who went on to football fame with Lombardi at the Packers, and Bill Stoneman, who pitched two no-hitters for the Expos.

The "big-time" glamour ended in a bankrupted budget in 1973, and Idaho escaped to a different division where the bills could be paid. Idaho athletics has a difficult task: to stay within budget while meeting their goals of quality programs and enriched environments.

Considering the economic conditions in which they function, they are doing an admirable job.

The column argued argues that Tom Cable's salary is too high and that his salary should go to buy musical instruments. Actually, faculty salaries are too low here at Idaho, which makes Coach Cable's salary appear disproportionately high.

In reality, his salary on the competitive market of Division I athletics is rather meager, as is all faculty and staff who work here. The more important issue about Coach Cable is not his salary but his dedication to "enrich" the lives of his athletes.

Perhaps no one has noticed, but few if any criminal problems have surfaced this year. Instead, what I do see in class with Cable's athletes are respectful young men who appear to be working toward their academic goals. This has not been the standard operating procedure in years past.

I don't know that any argument that supports cannibalizing one program for another is the stuff of which we want to deal. Such thinking bogs down in such silliness as to what is more important: music or athletics, dance or art, science or history. These questions are not thoughtful or fruitful. Interestingly, the original legislative statement authorizing the University of Idaho in 1889 mandated programs in physical activity.

An educated individual is one who is a body/subject of thought and action. I teach classes in history and ethics of sport; I invite the Argonaut editorial board to study the issue more. It might be an "enriching" experience.

Argonaut fails to cover College Bowl; academics need more attention

Dear Editor:
I am appalled at the Argonaut's lack of recognition for academic efforts. This last weekend, the UI College Bowl team competed at the Regional Competition and placed third, defeating our Idaho friends from BSU handily.

There was nothing in the Argonaut recognizing the team for their achievement, not even a paragraph. Even the WSU Evergreen had an article about their own team, which the UI team also easily defeated.

What kind of school are we attending? We hear all the time about how athletics are secondary to learning, but is this really the case?

College Bowl is a test of learning and football is a test of athletics, but which one receives more recognition? The basketball team defeated BSU on Saturday and received a large front-page article (and congrats to them on that achievement), but when the College Bowl team does the same, they receive no recognition whatsoever. At the very least, the Argonaut could have put them in the "News in Brief" section. But this was not done. Obviously, to say that academics matter more than sports at UI is clearly not true. The next time I hear our school going on about how academics are the most important thing in college, I'll know better than to believe them. After all, who really cares whether or not we know more than BSU and WSU if we can play better football?

Eating well is secret to health, wealth and wise college experience

In a survey recently conducted by USA TODAY, and an even more recent survey made up by me, researchers found that the No. 1 concern of parents as they send their kids to college is, "Will he/she eat right? Are his/her nutritional needs going to be met?"

My intention today is to address those concerns and put them to rest.

(Incidentally, the No. 2 concern of parents as they send their kids off to college is, "Who reads USA TODAY, anyway?")

The nation's top nutritional experts agree that they have very dull jobs. They also agree that, for optimum physical health, the average adult should receive his/her recommended daily allowance of slash marks, which can be found in the basic food groups: bread/cereal/pasta, fruit, vegetable, milk/yogurt/cheese/nachos, and meat/poultry/fish/eggs/nuts/A-1 Steak Sauce/Penzoil.

A nice addition to the food groups is the fats/oils/sweets group, although these are to be used "sparingly." Isn't that a laugh? These experts might as well tell the ocean to be economical in its use of oxygen and hydrogen atoms. The average adult spends more money on items from the fats/oils/sweets group than on products from the personal hygiene group.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, also known as the KGB, has set the precedent for how many servings we should eat from each group. In the Eating Healthy Handbook, a serving is defined as "not even close to enough food." Examples: a serving of fruit = the core from one peach; a serving of meat = 1 teaspoon of Puppy Chow; a serving of sweets = 4 sprinkles from a chocolate donut.

We should get most of our nutrition from the bread/cereal/pasta group, eating 8-11 servings each day. Pay no attention to the fact that those 8-11 servings wouldn't be enough; square footage-wise, to cover a deck of playing cards.

In another recent study that I just made up, nutritional experts also agree that, while adults should take in approximately 2,000 calories a day, college students can only be classified as "adults" in a strictly legal sense of the word, and in no way do the rules for healthy eating apply.

It's a biological fact that we college students can eat anything resembling food and our bodies will process it. Our Food Guide Pyramid is quite different from the one that other people must adhere to. While we still must eat several of the same types of food, we have the added bonus of being able to combine the benefits from those groups in a liberal way. And we don't call it a serving; we call it a "bunch."

Let's use Shane as an example. For breakfast, Shane eats a bowl of fruit loops, drinks some grape Kool-Aid, downs a few Milk Duds, chomps on some sour cream & onion potato chips, brushes his teeth with guacamole and rinses with Peach Schnapps.

Right there, Shane has already consumed a good portion of his daily nutritional intake. He had a big bunch of fruit, depending on the color and variety of his fruit loops, the grape Kool-Aid, and the peach liquor; a bunch of milk, from the cereal, the Milk Duds, and the sour cream; and a big bunch from the vegetable group: the onion potato chips, and the avocados and tomatoes from the guacamole.

I plan to take advantage of the nutrition fad that is going on in this country. And in light of the fact that my student loan is just about gone, I am offering nutrition seminars to teach these principles to anybody who has the desire to eat right, get in shape and write out a $50 check, payable to me.

A University of Idaho choir sings in the Administration Building Auditorium.

SingSingSing

Largest of its kind, Jazz Choir I captivates audiences

BY HEATHER BRANSTETTER
ARGONAUT STAFF

Drums and the marimba pulsate and throb like a heartbeat — a heart that thumps amid the 200-some students who constitute the soul of the captivating and distinctive melodies of the Jazz Choir I. This impressive choir, the largest of its kind in the nation, is composed of a variety of students brought together by their love for music.

Combining to form a unified presence onstage, they offer an unrivaled array of talents and epitomize the concepts of focus and determination as they create a rare musical delicacy.

Dressed all in black, the choir is characterized by their unique blend of percussion effects with musical styles that range from classic American songs to African traditional songs and religious arrangements. Known throughout the region for their energy and intensity, the Director Dan Buchvich and jazz choir possess an uncanny ability to please the audience.

The choir, open to all students who would like to participate, provides a unique opportunity for those who love to sing. "It doesn't matter if you're a music major ... everyone is welcome," said choir student Carri-Anne John, adding that participating in the choir has been "one of the best experiences" she's had at UI.

And although the Jazz Choir I doesn't require auditions, their concerts don't reflect this fact; rather, they perform as if Buchvich handpicked every member.

"I can't sing," Chris Kornelis, jazz choir student, said. Like many of the singers, he doesn't participate in the jazz choir to showcase his stellar voice.

"I admire the positive energy [of the choir], the intensity of it. The rehearsals and performances are just so much fun because Dan makes people want to excel," Kornelis said.

Even from a bystander's viewpoint, it is apparent that Buchvich motivates the students to perform to the extent of their ability, by demanding respect, dedication and focus. While the choir members are the obvious featured act, Buchvich is the mastermind, the artist that molds them into an energetic and powerful force onstage.

A gracious and unassuming leader, Buchvich polishes the students' voices into a crisp sound, a reflection of perfect synchronization and harmony. Their 200 pairs of eyes concentrate on his every move while their voices carry their trademark style, combining flashy drum solos with chants and catchy refrains to artfully weave the many threads of voices into melodious harmony.

Buchvich, who recently won the Idaho Music Educator of the Year award for outstanding musical excellence and peer leadership, seems oblivious to the fact that he is an inspiring role model for the students.

"It [the award] is just recognition for something that's been going on for years — he would never expect it, or even think that it's deserved, but we all knew," Kornelis said. "I admire his passion for music and for his students," fellow singer Carri-Anne John said.

Never coddled or babied in any way, the talented singers of the jazz choir are realistically challenged, and as a result they consistently deliver entertaining and inspiring performances. Tonight they will perform at 4:15 in the Kibbie Dome.

Steely Dan, U2 come back to Grammy glory

BY GEOFF BOUCHER
LOS ANGELES TIMES

LOS ANGELES — Steely Dan, the reclusive studio wizards who left the music scene for 20 years, won the best album award Wednesday at the 43rd annual Grammy Awards, but the duo's long-awaited victory was overshadowed by Eminem, the firebrand rapper whose performance and nominations fed a yearlong furor over his lyrics.

Eminem won three Grammys in rap categories, but his "Marshall Mathers LP" was snubbed in the marquee best album category despite piling up huge critical and commercial success — a snub likely prompted by the roiling national debate about his lyrics and whether they represent envelope-pushing street art or loutish bigotry.

Ironically, if the famously conservative voters in the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences turned their backs on Eminem for controversial themes, they in turn embraced Steely Dan's Two Against Nature, an album that has songs presenting the first-person world view of a pedophile and a comic account of a man lusting after his teenage cousin.

Irish rockers U2 had a surprisingly strong showing for the buoyant but wry "Beautiful Day," which won record and song of the year — the latter category is the Grammy honoring songwriting — along with best rock performance by a group or duo.

Lead singer Bono, sometimes chided for taking himself too seriously, playfully mocked that from stage and also served notice that U2 is not ready to cede its lofty perch in the rock world.

"It's a very unusual emotion I'm feeling right now. I think it's called humility; I'm completely not used to it," Bono said. "The whole year has been quite humbling. Going back to scratch, reapplying for the job. What job? The best band in the world job. There are a lot of people here tonight up for that job."

U2 joined Steely Dan, Eminem and country singer Faith Hill as triple winners on the night, which saw a first in the gala's history —

there was no artist who was nominated for both record of the year and album of the year, illustrating the lack of a single dominating star in the spotlight a la Carlos Santana in 2000 or Lauryn Hill in 1999.

The high-drama point of the night came near the close of the three-hour global broadcast from Staples Center in downtown Los Angeles when Eminem performed "Stan," the most critically acclaimed song from Mathers. He was joined by pop icon Elton John, a champion of the gay community whose endorsement of the rapper bewildered many in that community who see Eminem as anti-gay.

The sparse performance was peppered with several vulgar words and drew a standing ovation when, at the close, Eminem and John embraced and then clasped hands. John told the Los Angeles Times earlier this month that the rapper's invitation to join him was "an olive branch" to gays. Predictions that some in the audience would boo did not materialize, just as the protest showing outside the arena was meager.

Accepting the award for best rap performance early in the show, Eminem addressed his critics in passing.

"What should I say first? I guess first of all I want to thank everybody who could look past the controversy and whatever and see the album for what it was — and also for what it isn't," Eminem said.

WSU cutbacks

Who's next for the axe?

Every student has a life outside of classes and homework. For many of us, this includes commitments to drama, newspaper, radio and television, which are represented by campus departments such as communications and theatre.

CHRISTINACARNEY
Argonaut staff

Christina's regularly writes for the Arts and Entertainment section. Her e-mail address is arg_opinion@sub.uidaho.edu

The support behind these endeavors comes from within the university departments themselves and from the passion and dedication of faculty working side by side with students.

Unfortunately, the administration of universities such as Washington State University and the University of Idaho have more say in the importance of these relationships than either of the directly involved parties. In recent weeks, the administration at WSU has proposed drastic changes in its theatre department.

These changes included actions that would cause the full-time theatre faculty to spread themselves out amongst other departments.

The WSU theatre department began in 1925, not long after the university itself, but is obviously considered less important than many other entities on campus.

The department's eight productions in the last year alone make it an integral part in the cultural aspect of Pullman.

Its recent efforts have seen professors in the English and general education departments incorporating theatre productions into class assignments.

Many may think that this reorganization of the WSU theatre department does not directly affect them as students, especially those enrolled at the University of Idaho.

These are the same individuals who might not wince at a downsizing of the art department, Argonaut, KRFA, KUID or KUOI. But when the students whose lives revolve around these entities watch their funding be reduced or their efforts go unnoticed, they feel enough pain for the entire academic community.

Who is to judge the importance of a department? To what standard does the administration compare the quality of products or services provided by different departments?

What incentive would faculty members have to burden themselves in underfunded and underappreciated departments if not for the dedication of the students?

It is often not common knowledge that students actively participate or run sections of university campuses, but without their involvement in artwork, theatrical productions, newspaper, television and radio would be mere reflections of the administration.

With the proposed adjustment to the WSU theatre department, students may not have as many opportunities to participate in productions because the number of plays will most likely decrease.

Theatre departments may not bring in money like athletic departments do, but the time commitment and dedication is parallel. This fact is often overlooked.

By ignoring this devotion, administrators are in turn ignoring the student.

Sometimes a person who is dying is also the only one who can teach others how to live. This is not a new revelation, but it still makes for a bittersweet plot in the new movie "Sweet November."

Keanu Reeves ("The Matrix") plays Nelson Moss, an advertising workaholic who never stops to sit and watch the clouds drift by. Charlize Theron ("The Legend of Nelson's "time is money" attitude. Sara won't take his money to compensate her troubles, so she embarrasses him through a series of events, like making him drive her to an animal testing lab to free a pair of dogs. Much to Nelson's annoyance, he becomes intrigued with Sara's eccentric and carefree attitude.

Sara has good intentions; she knows Nelson's self-involved type. She offers him to move in with her for the month of November to help him learn to enjoy life. He rejects Sara, but later goes back to her after his girlfriend leaves him and he loses his job. Nelson still won't give Sara a whole month, but he promises to spend one full day with her. That day does become a month, and during November, Nelson has more fun than he thought possible. But Sara is still a mystery. Nelson is not her first "monthly project." In fact, Sara has helped many people through their problems by inviting them to share her enthusiasm for life. Sara's past also includes leaving a prosperous company that she owned and being estranged from her family.

Nelson shrugs his curiosity off for a while and surprises himself and Sara by falling deeply in love with her. He asks her to marry him and she rejects. Nelson soon learns that Sara is dying of cancer. Nelson has to make a decision to either stay by Sara's side or honor her wishes of leaving while his memory of her is still vibrant. Reeves and Theron have paired up before in "Devil's Advocate" (also starring Al Pacino). In "Sweet November," Theron played her romantic part well. However, Reeves was not so convincing as a selfish control freak-turned-enlightened lover.

"Sweet November" is by no means a new story, but it would still be a cute movie to see on a date or with friends. The soundtrack, which includes Enya (the music played during the emotional parts of the movie), sounds like it would be worth checking out also. For the moviegoers who have easy heartstrings to pull, a tissue may be required for the last 20 minutes of the film. There is also plenty of comedy with Greg Germann ("Ally McBeal") starring as Vince, Nelson's shallow and brown-nosing advertising partner, and Jason Isaacs ("Patriot") as Sara's cross-dressing neighbor Chaz.

Howie Day to perform at the Idaho Commons

BY BRUCE MANN
ARGONAUT STAFF

Often heard in small smoke-filled clubs and overcrowded college bars is the incessant conversational buzz about how "so and so" musician is such an incredible talent that it is just a matter of time before they are the next big thing. The majority of the time, however, half-drunken bar patrons do not play the part of pop music prophets with much success.

It is a rare thing indeed to behold an artist so naturally gifted and moving that the audience cannot help but know deep in their hearts that they are extremely lucky to witness such a performance. While rare, the phenomenon is not completely deceased, for it arises Monday at the Idaho Commons with a noontime performance from singer and songwriter Howie Day.

Howie Day, a 20-year-old native of Bangor, Maine, brings to the stage an impassioned blend of acoustic rock ripe with skillful guitar work, a beautifully poignant voice and the stage presence of a veteran road musician.

Day's music comes off as fresh but strikingly familiar. On Day's debut album, "Australia," the honesty and passion that pervades through each note and every line creates a comfortable and touching sound. Warm tones and salient vocals fill the air, washing completely over the ears and minds, making the music feel like a long lost friend.

Vocally, it is easy to compare Day to a more laid-back Dave Matthews, but after more intense listening to his album, Day comes off deeper and more complex than Matthews. There are times when he channels the bitter soul, the waves of immense emotion, and haunting vocals of the genius Jeff Buckley. During these moments, he reaches a point of semi-enlightenment, pushing the impact of his music to even higher altitudes. The bits of rawness and unfettered, guttural emotive outbursts in Day's music leave lasting impressions and has ears jonesing for more.

There are many standout cuts on the 11-track "Australia," with a range of noticeable influences including the work of Buckley, Matthews, Richard Ashcroft and Thom York. However, Day pushes the sonic envelope beyond his influences, to create a work that tends to squat indefinitely in whatever CD player it is lucky to get put in.

The tracks "Ghost," "More You Understand" and "Morning After" have such soul-digging intensity that they elicit the same forceful feelings felt on the first listen. This is not the music of someone who has been touring for just under two years; this music is the product of deep pain, love, and the experience of living, winning and losing, the trials of life. Day is an old, wise soul trapped in the body of a 20-year-old.

While playing live, Day engages the audience not only with his music but also with his erratic spiky hair, boyish charm, and goofy between-song banter. Day also gives his audiences small bonuses with near perfect yet very unique versions of cover songs. He has been known to do impressive covers of "#41" by Dave Matthews Band and "Babylon" by David Gray and a near immortal version of the "80's" classic "Africa" by Toto.

At 20, Howie Day already possesses the requisite skills to make a tremendous impact on the national music scene. Before he is on the minds and radios of the American public, Howie Day can be caught doing what he does best Monday morning at 11:30 in the Idaho Commons Food Atrium.

The best new artist award went to Shelby Lynne, a 32-year-old singer-songwriter whose album I Am Shelby Lynne mixes country twang with soulful stylings and follows a long struggle in Nashville to find a place for her music.

As a youngster, the Alabama singer watched her father murder her mother and then turn the gun on himself — providing a harrowing and touching back story to her acceptance speech.

"Thirteen years and six albums to get here. ... I would like to thank my parents for always stressing: Be an individual," Lynne said. "And I stand here and represent nothing but music."

Patience also served Steely

Dan — the team of Donald Fagen and Walter Becker — who have long been Grammy best-album bridesmaids but never the bride for their jazz-minded, high-craft rock.

The duo was nominated but lost in 1977 for "Aja" and four years later for "Gaucho." Fagen had two solo albums receive nods in the category as well, Nightfly in 1982 and Kamakiriad in 1993, only to be passed over again.

"These things tend to be cumulative awards for the course of a career," Becker said backstage. "Just because we've been around so long they had to give us something."

Becker also admitted to being stunned by the honor, having expected Eminem to win in face of the vast difference between the two acts in sales and radio play — Eminem had the second best selling album of 2000 and easily outsold all of the other best album nominees (Beck, Radiohead, Paul Simon, Steely Dan) combined.

Rap icon Dr. Dre, who produced key tracks on the Mathers album and enjoyed comeback success with his own Dr. Dre 2001 album, became the first hard-core rapper to win the producer of the year Grammy. He also won best rap performance by a duo or group for his partnering with Eminem on Forgot About Dre.

Screamin' reels and leapin' steelhead

February is a great time to catch steelhead in the deep pools of the Snake River at Hell's Canyon

BY ZAC SEXTON
ASSISTANT LEISURE EDITOR

This spring, head down to the Snake River to hear a reel scream and feel a rod pulsate under a steelhead's weight.

February is a month of rest for migrating schools of steelhead. The best areas to fish are bottoms of pools. Occasionally the shallow downstream end or tail-out of a pool holds steelhead.

A popular way to fish is to dead-drift shrimp through a pool. To setup a bait rig, attach a swivel on the end of the running line. Ten-pound test line is good to start with.

Attach enough weight to get the bait down fast.

A section of lead shaped like a pencil with a loop on top will prevent most snags.

Sections, two inches to two and a half inches long, should be enough weight for most pools.

Attach a 4- to 5-foot leader of 8-pound test monofilament line to the swivel. Slip a round float of a fish-catching color on the mono leader.

Then tie a barbless hook to the line. Barbless hooks are required by Idaho, Washington and Oregon regulations. Fishing with a barbed hook will attract the attention of the local game warden.

The bait shrimp must be attached so it looks like it is fleeing from danger. The shrimp will be curled in a U-shape. Hold the shrimp so its head is facing down and on the left-side of the U. The shrimp should be held in an upside-down U before attaching to a hook.

Run the hook point through one segment of the shrimp, near the arch in its tail. Be sure to leave the hook point exposed.

"Otherwise you won't hook a fish," said Jason Schultz, owner-operator of Hells Canyon Sport Fishing.

Once a rod is baited an angler needs to find the fish. The most efficient way is to use a boat. A boat enables an angler to fish a hole, then move upstream if no fish are willing to bite.

The best fishing on the Snake is upstream from its confluence with the Grand Ronde, which is another reason to use a boat. Upstream from the mouth of the Grand Ronde, the highway, ends and the walls of Hell's Canyon become steep and rocky, making walking tough.

Renting a drift boat is one option. Rafting is another option. However, an angler will then need to start above the desired fishing holes and drift down.

A raft is cheaper to own or rent than most other boats, but more paddling and planning is needed for a successful trip. Another option is to hire a guide. A guide will provide tackle and boat as well as expertise on how to catch fish.

One such trip started about 14 miles upstream of Asotin. The guide, Schultz, and his wife, Heather, an assistant, loaded the anglers' gear. Three anglers baited their hooks and began to fish the first hole. The fourth angler insisted on trying his fly rod and received some good-natured heckling from the rest of the crew on board.

After about 20 minutes of not catching fish, the guide decided to head up to the next hole.

"You won't need your fly rod for the rest of the day. Put it away," Schultz said.

Two casts with bait and the "fly" fisherman hooked into the first steelhead of the day. The struggle lasted several minutes passed before landing the wild steelhead on board.

A wild steelhead can be distinguished from a hatchery steelhead by the adipose fin. The adipose fin is a fleshy appendage between the tail and back fin. A scar shows where the fin once was on a hatchery steelhead.

The "fly" fisherman kissed the steelhead with a little passion for good luck and then released it.

The other three members felt a mixture of excitement and resentment because each now owed the "fly" fisherman $5 for catching the first fish of the day.

The best part of the day was "latching on to the steelhead and fighting him through the rapids," Tim Schneider, co-owner of Covey Run Kennels said. Schneider landed a 30-plus inch, 12-pound hatchery steelhead after Heather Schultz hooked it for him.

Schneider managed to land a wild four-pound steelhead on his own earlier in the day.

Sightseeing is a bonus on any trip into Hell's canyon. Bighorn sheep, mule deer, eagles, chuckar partridge, quail, waterfowl and otter can all be seen in a day trip.

"It's beautiful, isn't it?" Schneider said.

Golf: A guide for hackers, duffers, and whiffers ... everyone

BY BRIAN ARMSTRONG
ARGONAUT STAFF

The game of golf is very complicated, and no matter what level you play at — beginner or professional — it will always spoil your afternoon walk.

Even people who have played for years are perhaps a little confused about how to actually play the game. Also, it will be helpful to learn about mistakes golfers made in the past, so that you don't make those same mistakes yourself.

The first word every golfer should know is "honors." If you have "honors," you have the privilege of being laughed at first on the tee. The person with the best score on the previous hole tees off first on the next one.

Another important term is the word "putt." A putt is when you hit a shot straight, but to the left, the right, beyond, short of, over or around the intended target.

The term "whiff" is used when a player swings but does not make contact with the ball. This is also often referred to as "just a practice swing."

When you hear your opponent use the word "birdie," what they're actually saying is, "You didn't see me kick the ball out from under the tree."

"Winter rules" is a phrase that is used whenever the weather is slightly less than desirable. If you're not happy with your lie, ask yourself, "Could it be a little nicer out today?" If the answer is yes, the rule states that you may place your ball on a new lie with no penalty.

Even some of the most experienced golfers in the world have made some dumb mistakes out on the course. Read these tales carefully, and never forget the lessons they teach.

Lesson One

Mathieu Boya was one of the best golfers in the country of Benin. Unfortunately, there were no courses where he lived, so he practiced by hitting balls in a field next to the Benin Air Force Base.

One day, one of his balls struck a bird, causing it to fall into the open cockpit of a jet fighter about to take off. The pilot lost control of his plane and crashed into four other jets, Benin's entire Air Force, destroying them all.

Lesson Two

Beware of the dangers of chili. In 1959, Tommy Bolt was fined $250 for loudly passing gas just as his playing partner was about to putt.

Lesson Three

In 1913, George Russell hit a 300-yard drive backwards. When he started his backswing, he bumped the ball, sending it behind him and down a steep embankment. It rolled for 300 yards until it stopped.

Lesson Four

In 1890, A.J. Lewis putted his ball 156 times on the green. The ball just would not go into the hole. Finally, he picked up and moved on to the next hole.

Lesson Five

In 1973, Hale Irwin used his amazing golf skill to land his ball inside the bra of a spectator. The rule states that he is required to remove the ball from its obstruction and take a free drop. Unfortunately for Hale, the woman was permitted to remove the ball herself.

Golf is a confusing game, but it is a lot of fun and is a great way to spend some time outdoors. As soon as the snow melts and the University of Idaho opens its golf course, take a day off and play 18 holes with some friends.

You'll find that you are more stressed and ticked off than you were when you started. But at least you'll have a tan.

Men's basketball loses to Cal Fullerton

BY ROLFE DAUS PETERSON
ARGONAUT STAFF

The University of Idaho men's basketball team took a step back in their bid to qualify for the Big West tournament. The Vandals fell short in the clutch, losing to Cal State Fullerton 63-60.

The Vandals converted on only five out of their nine final minute free-throw attempts. The squad slips into last place in the conference with a league record of 2-11.

In the first half, UI jumped out to 13-5 on the strength of a 7-0 run over the home Titans. The Vandals held the lead through the majority of the half as the two teams geared up the defense.

With seven minutes to play,

Adam Miller's pull-up jumper widened the Vandal lead by six to 25-19. The Titans wouldn't be denied for long and UI didn't score again in the half as the hot shooting of Cal Fullerton spurred a 12-0 run to take the lead 30-25.

Cal State Fullerton took full advantage of the seven-minute Vandal dry spell to knock down a couple of deep balls and take a five-point advantage into the break after UI led by as much as nine in the contest.

The Titans didn't miss a step early in the second half. While UI imploded, going cold from the field, Cal State Fullerton gathered steam, hitting back to back 3-pointers and pushing the first half run to 26-3, setting into a comfortable 44-28 lead.

With UI's shooting percentage slipping under 30 percent, Miller stabilized the reeling Vandals with a couple of 3-pointers, followed by a Jerald Jenkins jumper to cut the lead to eight, 46-38, with 10 minutes to play in the contest.

Over the next seven minutes, a fighting UI team continued to lessen the gap, but they were continually denied by opportunistic Titan shooting. Junior guard Bethuel Fletcher finally broke into the lead and attacked the basket, picking up four points and an assist to Bret Wise, cutting the lead to five, 60-55, with 2:15 left to play.

UI continued to hammer away, crafting a 12-3 run and pulling the squad to within three, 59-62. The team squandered late free-throw attempts while the cool-headed Titans sealed the win.

The Vandals weren't able to replicate the strong finish against Boise State. Instead, Cal State Fullerton, who snaps a seven game losing streak, sweeps the season series with UI, and the Titans push ahead of UI in the conference with a 3-11 record.

UI travels to face Cal Poly this weekend. With only three Big West games to play, the Vandals need to pick up two wins to have a shot to surpass Cal State Fullerton in record and qualify for the post-season tournament.

It's your turn to be more than a fan.

UTEP cancels game with rival New Mexico St.

BY GEOFF GRAMMER
THE ROUND UP (NEW MEXICO STATE U.)

LAS CRUCES, N.M. — The 79-game, 87-year football rivalry between New Mexico State University and the University of Texas-El Paso will not continue next season.

Citing financial concerns, UTEP Director of Athletics Bob Stull informed NMSU Monday he was backing out of the teams' six-year contract and the Miners would not be traveling to Las Cruces Sept. 8, as previously scheduled.

Instead, the Miners have scheduled a sixth home game to their 2001 schedule.

"I'm very disappointed for our fans," NMSU Director of Athletics Brian Faison said. "I'm disappointed for our football team. I'm disappointed for Las Cruces. I'm disappointed for the UTEP fans. This game should happen and (UTEP) should honor their contract. They should play the game here."

The contract between the two schools, which was signed in January 1998 by then-NMSU AD Jim Paul and then-UTEP AD John Thompson, called for the rivalry to continue through the 2004 season with three games being played in El Paso and three being played in Las Cruces. The previous two meetings between the two schools had been in El Paso.

UTEP faces no financial penalties for canceling the game because of a provision in the contract allowing either school to cancel for any reason.

"Everyone talks about this contract, but there is an escape clause for a reason," Stull said. "In college athletics these things arise. I think the reason nobody ever put a penalty on it was because I think both sides realized down the line it could happen at any time. It could have been there."

Earlier this year, Stull had proposed the game be played in the Sun Bowl, rather than in Aggie Memorial Stadium, in order to accommodate more fans from both schools (the Sun Bowl seats 52,000 compared to 30,043 at Aggie Memorial). In turn, more money would be generated, and the teams would split the revenue.

Despite the NMSU Department of Athletics $2.8 million deficit, Faison rejected the proposal, saying Aggie fans

TONY SAMUEL
NMSU HEAD FOOTBALL COACH

"deserved" the rivalry game to be played in Las Cruces.

Faison also said future dealings with UTEP would be handled differently.

"When they did this contract back in '98 between '98 and '99, a provision (to place a financial penalty for breaking the contract) was basically labeled as not applicable," Faison said. "Penalties are standard in all of our contracts, but in this case they did it that way. I can understand that because you've played for 70-plus years, and they probably didn't think it was necessary. That was then, and I wasn't the AD then, but obviously we won't ever make that mistake again."

Jim Paul and their then AD, John Thompson, a provision (to place a financial penalty for breaking the contract) was basically labeled as not applicable," Faison said. "Penalties are standard in all of our contracts, but in this case they did it that way. I can understand that because you've played for 70-plus years, and they probably didn't think it was necessary. That was then, and I wasn't the AD then, but obviously we won't ever make that mistake again."

Stull said the estimated $400,000 increase in student athlete scholarships next year was the primary reason for the move.

"Next year, with the cost of housing our student athletes, scholarships are going up about $1,800 a person which equates to about $400,000 more scholarship costs," Stull said. "If New Mexico State came down here, we both could have made a lot more money. Going up there, we are just not going to make very much money. This comes down to the reality that both us and New Mexico State both need to make more money."

NMSU head football coach Tony Samuel disagrees with UTEP's decision.

"It's a shame that things have gotten to a point that every single thing has to have some sort of financial scheme to it," Samuel said. "It's not going to hurt us. We were looking forward to playing them, though, because of some of the things that went on last year down there. I thought it really intensified the rivalry a bunch."

In Samuel's four seasons at NMSU, the annual rivalry game has been played in El Paso three times and in Las Cruces once with the home team winning each contest. Last season, the Miners won 41-31, and a fight nearly broke out between members of both teams following the game.

Although an official replacement has not been made for the Sept. 8 void in the Aggies' schedule, NMSU has already been in contact with various teams.

"We've had three or four schools we've been talking to just in case this happened," Samuel said.

As for UTEP, they have already filled their Sept. 8 opening with Division I-AA Texas Southern University.

NMSU's 2001 football schedule has three home games currently scheduled: Middle Tennessee State University, the University of North Texas and the University of Louisiana-Lafayette. The long-term future of the rivalry has not been determined, but the sentiment from both sides seems to be the tradition will resume.

But where? "Well, I can't determine the future. I still think the best thing for us is to always play the game here because we can both make a lot more money," Stull said.

"I hear a lot of talk about 'this is the end of an 80-year rivalry.' Well it's not going to be the end. Hopefully we'll play in basketball and again in football in the future."

BYU tries to save diving football diploma rate

BY MIKI MEEK
THE DAILY UNIVERSITE (BRIGHAM YOUNG U.)

PROVO, Utah — At the start of winter semester, BYU head coach Gary Crowton called all 108 football players into the team room and told half of them to stand up, and the other half to sit down. He was trying to give them a visual picture of the team's graduation rate. But Crowton should have asked a few more to sit down.

Of the players who enrolled as freshmen in 1993 and received athletics-related financial aid, 20 percent graduated by August 2000, said Student Athletic Center Director Paul Warner. BYU falls below the national graduation rate for football players at Division I-A schools, which is 48 percent, according to the 2000 NCAA graduation rates report.

GRADUATION RATES

BYU's Student Athletic Center's goal is to raise the athletes' graduation rates up to 90 percent over the next five years for all sports. The graduation rate for student athletes at BYU from 1993 to 2000 was 49 percent, according to the NCAA. The university's general student body graduation rate is 72 percent.

Warner added that missions and redshirts could have lowered this percentage and numbers are improving for players who entered after 1993. Thirteen out of 17 senior football players will graduate this academic year. The team's low graduation rate encouraged the administration and Crowton to hire an academic coach and enact a new academic policy: six hours of study hall each week and a three-strike policy for class attendance, he said.

"The graduation rate is a big concern here and in NCAA football overall," Crowton said. "We want these kids to graduate, so we are putting an emphasis on their education and giving them support to reach their goals."

He has reason for concern. Thirty-seven of his players, who have a GPA below 2.49, have been placed under the new policy, said E.J. Caffaro, academic coach for the football team. A player can be removed from academic monitoring if he has two good consecutive semesters that push his cumulative GPA above 2.49. Every day, hired "trackers" peek in the classrooms of these players and submit an attendance report to Caffaro.

If they're absent, he puts them on his "missing-in-action" list and lets the strikes begin. Strike one: The player does additional training and a letter is sent home to his parents. Strike two: He faces extra running, academic work and a phone call home. Strike three: Crowton, who could suspend him or revoke his scholarship.

"Some of the seniors didn't really enjoy this at first, because there were never really any consequences if they didn't show for class when Edwards was here," Caffaro said. "Overall, however, I think the reaction has been good."

Although sophomore Brandon Heaney said it's "weird being babysat," the new academic policies have been a positive experience.

"It gives me a set time to do my homework and we have coaches in there watching and making sure we get our work done," Heaney said. "But of course there are going to be some people who aren't happy when they're told they have to make study hall six hours a week."

Offensive lineman Aaron J. McCubbins is one of those who isn't happy.

"My main beef is that I am a senior and it's frustrating to be treated like a freshman when I've been here for four, going on five, years," he said.

The stiffer consequences have been an adjustment for McCubbins, and he said the "old ways" resonated better with him, since no one was looking over his shoulder. However, football academic adviser Eddie Sampson said supervision is a necessity. The high-profile status and large number of players in football often overshadow academics.

Pemberton selected to Verizon All-Academic Team

LONG BEACH, Calif. — University of Idaho women's basketball player Darci Pemberton was selected to the 2001 Verizon Academic All-District VIII second team, which was announced Wednesday. The first and second teams represent players from a 29-team district including schools in the Pac 10, West Coast and Big West Conferences.

Pemberton was one of five players selected to the second team. The junior forward is the Vandals' leading scorer this season at 11.2 points per game as well as one of the Big West Conference's top rebounders with 8.0 per game. A native of Everett, Wash., Pemberton is majoring in physical education.

The first team included Megan Franza (Washington), Annie Garrison (Santa Clara), Victoria Harrod (Washington State), Millie Kimpton (Pacific) and Katie Nyseth (Washington State). Pemberton was joined on the second team by Kayte Christensen (UC Santa Barbara), Leah Combs (Arizona State), Jessica Malone (Gonzaga) and Christine Urbanski (Idaho State).

In order to be eligible, a student-athlete must have a cumulative 3.2 GPA, be a starter or important reserve and in at least their second season of athletic and academic eligibility at her school. A total of 47 eligible student-athletes were nominated by 23 different schools. UI has had at least one player selected to the district first or second team each of the last four years.

Women's game to benefit American Cancer Society

The University of Idaho women's basketball game tonight against Cal Poly will be a Coaches vs. Cancer fundraiser game for the American Cancer Society. Coach Hilary Recknor, the Idaho women's basketball team and Hot 104 KHTR are co-sponsoring the event.

A goal of $1,000 has been set for donations to the ACS. Fans in attendance will be asked to make a tax-deductible donation. Volunteers will be set up at a booth and the first 25 fans to donate $10 or more will receive a special Coaches vs. Cancer T-shirt. To date, the program has raised more than $12.5 million, funding research, education, advocacy and ACS services, which are invested directly into local communities.

Football recruiting signs new defensive end Mike Bonelli

The University of Idaho added another high school football signee with Mike Bonelli's commitment to play for the Vandals. Bonelli, who graduates this spring from St. Bonaventure High School, was a two-year starter for a team that won 28 successive games and the 2000 California high school championship.

Bonelli, a 6-foot-3, 220-pound defensive end, was a major contributor in St. Bonaventure's success. As a senior, he had 55 tackles and 15 sacks. He also forced three fumbles and recovered one. He was a two-time player of the week and went on to be recognized as the CIF Defensive Player of the Year, the Ventura County Defensive Lineman of the Year, and as a first-team choice on the all-Tri Valley team.

He also was a team captain and has been chosen to play in the Ventura County all-star game and the California-Florida all-star game.

As a junior, Bonelli had 57 tackles and eight sacks and was a two-time choice as player of the week in addition to earning all-league honors.

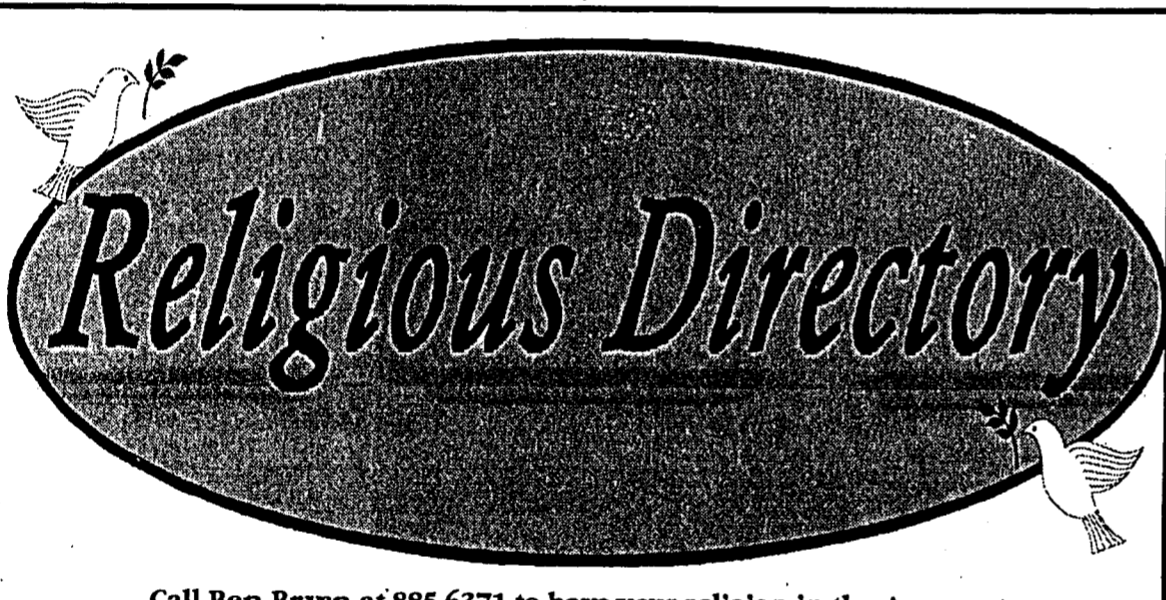

"The first thing that stands out about him is his coachability," St. Bonaventure coach Jon Mack said. "His gift is his tremendous speed and he's a relentless worker in the weight room. It's a great combination."

Bonelli is the son of Carl and Karen Bonelli and comes to Idaho from Camarillo, Calif. He will join the Vandals in January 2002.

Spring Career Expo of the Palouse 2001

WSU Beasley Coliseum
February 27, 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

A Message from WSU President Lane Rawlins

WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY JOINS
THE UNIVERSITY OF
IDAHO TO WELCOME A RECORD

Rawlins

NUMBER OF EMPLOYERS FROM 25 STATES TO THE
2001 SPRING
CAREER EXPO OF
THE PALOUSE. WE ARE CONFIDENT THAT

YOU WILL FIND EXCELLENT STUDENTS TO FILL YOUR CAREER OPPORTUNI-TIES, SUMMER JOBS, INTERNSHIPS AND GRADUATE PROGRAMS.

In an effort to make Expo events as inclusive as possible, Spring Expo continues to be sponsored by WSU Career Services, WSU
Office of Multicultural Student Services, UI Cooperative Education and UI Office of Multicultural Affairs. Students from every discipline are encouraged to take advantage of the diverse opportunities offered by national corporations and local organizations alike.

In addition, we welcome and encourage the continuing partnership between our respective educational institutions and the private sector to produce several associated activities. These include the mock interviews between Expo employers and students;
"Dress to Impress" professional dress exhibition and style consultation; and "Internships Do Make a Difference," featuring successful WSU and UI alumni offering valuable internship tips. Employers will surely benefit from the newly acquired skills of participating students.

We wish everyone well at Spring Expo in the pursuit of matching the needs of participating employers and graduate programs with the goals of students seeking their next challenge.

A Message from UI President Robert A. Hoover

WELCOME TO THE

IDAHO IS PLEASED TO JOIN

Hoover

WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY IN CO-SPONSORING THE 2001 SPRING
CAREER EXPO OF

THE PALOUSE.

I commend the efforts of the UI's Cooperative Education Program and Office of Multicultural Affairs as well as WSU's Career Services and Multicultural Student Services who have collaborated to put together an exciting series of programs and events to benefit students and employers.

For students, the Spring Career Expo is a tremendous opportunity to talk with a record number of employers and to explore many options for exciting summer jobs, internships or entry-level positions. For employers, this event is an opportunity to learn more about the exceptional quality of the education and preparation of students from both campuses.
Our best wishes to all of you.

WSU CAREER SERVICES

Whether a freshman or graduate student, WSU Career Services offers something for everyone

Undecided about your major? Want to know more about job/career opportunities? Interested in an inter-ship to enhance your academic experience? Need advice about how to put your best foot forward in an interview?
These questions and more will be answered as you participate in Career Services programs.

You are not alone entering college not knowing what you want to do with your life or how to channel your educational interests with career opportunities. Meet one-on-one with a career counselor who can help you establish academic goals and career direction. Take a U-100 or 300-level course to assist in self-assessment, career planning and the job search. Use Career Services computer resource center for such purposes as conducting an interest assessment to researching occupational information.

Once you are on the right track applying your interests to academic goals, Career Services provides more tools to help you determine your future. Attend a career development workshop conducted by Career Services or an informational session sponsored by an employer. Utilize the computer resource center for job searches. Browse and take a handout on a variety of subjects ranging from how to write a resume to what to wear to an interview. Find a graduate school to further advance your passion. Discover how an internship can not only enhance your academic experience but also help you make a great impression in an interview. Regularly attend the two Career Expos sponsored by WSU Career Services and the University of Idaho. Attend Career Expo associated events such as mock interviews, "Dress to Impress" and "Internships Do Make a Difference" to help you acquire new skills and give you an advantage in the job hiring process.

You will find a wealth of information on our website at www.careers.wsu.edu or by coming to Lighty 180 and talking with a knowledgeable, friendly staff. Finally, whether you are an underclassman or focusing on a career, register now with Career Services. It's online, easy and a must-do if you want to interview with any one of more than 200 employers who conduct on-campus interviewing each year. Visit our booth at Expo and register then. Remember, all of our services are free to students.

Career Services welcomes our employer partners and we wish all students success.
Have a great Expo!

WSU OFFICE OF MULTICULTURAL STUDENT SERVICES

The Office of Multicultural Student Services (MSS) was created to develop and implement programs for the purpose of recruitment, retention and the ultimate graduation of multicultural students at Washington State University.
Furthermore, this office assists WSU in creating an environment that acknowledges, respects and enhances diversity.

Each one of the four Multicultural Student Centers—
African American, Asian American and Pacific Islander, Chicana/o Latina/o and Native American—provides a
"home away from home" atmosphere. Each Center's staff offers cultural, social and academic support for our students. At the Centers, students enjoy services that include personal advising, student mentoring, academic advising, scholarship and financial aid information, university and community resource referrals, internship and other career-related information.

The Multicultural Student Mentor Program is a retention outreach effort designed to assist multicultural students in adjusting academically and socially to the WSU environment. Student mentors provide peer support and contribute their knowledge, proficiency and experience to assist new students during their first year at WSU. More specifically, student mentors provide information about services offered by MSS, Student Affairs and other university areas as well as encourage their mentees to utilize these services. Through their work, student mentors model cross-cultural understanding, communication, interaction and cooperation.

Through the Multicultural
Student Leadership Initiatives Program, MSS sponsors educational activities for students in leadership roles. Retreats, student gatherings and other initiatives prepare students to become community leaders.

There are about 40 multicul-tural student organizations at WSU. These organizations are credited with most of the cultural programming in the WSU campus and the Pullman community. Joining any of the multicultural student organizations is an incredible way to increase personal understanding and sensitivity about multicultural issues and become the leaders needed by a growing multicultural society.

Located in the Multicultural Center, the Academic Enrichment Center supports students in their educational endeavors through tutoring, a computer lab and a series of workshops. You can find more about the Office of Multicultural Student Services
by visiting any of the Centers or on our website at www.wsu.edu/multicultural.

UI COOPERATIVE EDUCATION

Internships and So Much More!

Practical skills, on-the-job experience and professional applications of classroom theory — employers look for these qualities in prospective employees. Students will acquire such traits by working through the University of Idaho
Cooperative Education Program. The Cooperative Education staff assists students in finding internship positions with local, regional and national employers.

In 1999-2000 more than 450 students gained relevant experience through inter-ships with more than 180 different employers including NASA, Micron Technology,
Idaho Governor's Office, Idaho
Division of Environmental Quality, Idaho Fish and Game, Potlatch Corporation,
Microsoft, Boeing, Bureau of Land Management, Battelle Pacific Northwest National Lab, Hummel Architects, Walt
Disney World, INEEL, Senator
Larry Craig, Weyerhaeuser, and Hewlett Packard.

To assist students in securing internships, the co-op program gives individual advice on preparing resumes, writing effective cover letters and internship search and networking strategies. Resources are available to help students find internships to fit their individual needs. To give students an opportunity to meet regional
and national employers,
Cooperative Education cosponsors the annual Spring Career Expo with UI's Office of Multicultural Affairs and Washington State University.

To help acquaint students with local opportunities, Cooperative Education annually co-sponsors the Local Internship & Student Employment Fair.

The Cooperative Education Program serves undergraduate and graduate students in all majors. To be eligible for cooperative education experiences, students must be in good academic standing in their degree program.
Placements are typically for one summer or semester,
although many employers request students with the flexibility to work two semesters.
The compensation level (pay) for internships is determined by each employer; and many well-paying and volunteer (unpaid) positions are available. Typically, over 70% of the placements each year are in paid internships.

It is never too early to begin searching for an internship.
Contact Cooperative
Education located in Idaho Commons 330. Check our web site for helpful information at www.uidaho.edu/cooped.

UI OFFICE OF MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS

The University of Idaho is committed to establishing and maintaining a campus environment that promotes cultural diversity. This is accomplished through the provision of services that address specific needs of Asian American/Pacific Islander,
African American, Hispanic American and Native American students. The Office of Multicultural Affairs (OMA) provides assistance to multicul-tural students in the areas of advocacy, financial aid and accessing university student support programs. OMA also works collaboratively with the university to resolve issues that may hinder recruitment and retention of multicultural students. This includes but is not limited to helping multicul-tural students access federal and university financial aid, especially scholarships.

Multicultural student organizations serve a vital role in retention and helping to promote cultural diversity on the UI campus. OMA assists the organizations in planning and executing campus activities of special interest to their group's members; e.g., cultural heritage months, student leadership retreat, organizational meetings and campus educational cultural activities.

question & answers

Question: I want to major in biology, get into medical school and eventually work as a physician. The problem is, I got a big "D" in Bio 101!! I plan to take the course over again since my school allows that option and I will work harder this time (I admit I didn't give it my best effort the first time). But how will potential employers look at someone who wants to be a doctor, but couldn't even pass an introductory course in his intended field?

Answer: My first reaction was: if you know the beginning bio course is essential for medical school (and you want to be a doctor) why didn't you give it your best effort the first time? Are you sure that you really want to be a doctor.... or is it perhaps more the expectation of others than your own desire?

On the other hand, the first year of college is often a very difficult adjustment for young people. Many feel intense pressure to succeed, and end up so stressed out that they do not perform well. Perhaps that is what has happened to you. In any case, if you really want to be a doctor and feel that you otherwise have what it takes, make sure you do well next time and not just in this course, but do your very best in ALL your classes. Start laying down the foundation of a medical background by getting involved in medical organizations and perhaps, even volunteering at a health center or nursing home. Do well in school, network, get through medical school, and I seriously doubt your one "D" "way back when" will raise any eyebrows.

Toot your horn, don't blow it

By Kevin Donlin

Do you have trouble talking about yourself and your achievements in a résumé? You're not alone!

Here's a sampling of the comments I get every week from people who have a hard time selling themselves on paper:

- "It's not in my character to tell the whole story of my achievements very well."

- "I'm just a humble Midwesterner - I have a hard time tooting my own horn."

No matter where you live or what your career, it can be difficult to describe your achievements without feeling as if you're bragging. It can be especially uncomfortable if you haven't written a résumé before.

But if you don't toot your horn, who's going to hear you, much less hire you?

As countless deodorant and mouthwash commercials have drilled into our heads, you don't get a second chance to make a first impression. So, fire all of your guns in every résumé and cover letter you send out.

Good news - even the tasks and skills you take for granted have potential value to employers.

To illustrate, here's a bullet point I wrote today for a client who wants to move from nursing to pharmaceutical sales.

* Proven communication skills. Expert at building trust and consulting with physicians.

This woman spends all day assisting doctors in a busy hospital. To her, it's a given that she won't waste a doctor's time. She has to be concise and serve as a resource when talking to physicians. Surprise! These qualities are exactly what companies are looking for in a pharmaceutical sales rep. So I emphasized them in her résumé.

What do you do and what have you done that's attractive to employers?

Take a few minutes during lunch today to list every skill you use and every bit of value you create. Assume nothing - write it all down.

Then take a look at some want ads that appeal to you. Do you see a match between what employers want and what you can offer? I'm sure you can.

So, toot your horn and get ready for the phone to ring.

question & answers

Question: I have several years of experience working in sales/marketing areas in hotels in Australia, Asia and Europe. I would like to work for two to three years in the U.S., but the hotels respond to my letters by writing that they can't hire me without a work visa, but without an offer of employment I can't get a work visa. I've thought of getting a Masters in Hospitality degree in the U.S. before working there.

First Answer: A visa issued for full-time academic study in the United States is called an F-1 Visa. The F-1 category includes academic students in colleges, universities, seminaries, conservatories, academic high schools, other academic institutions and in language training.

A visa issued for full-time vocational study in the United States is called an M-1 Visa. The M-1 category includes students in vocational or other nonacademic programs, other than language training.

If you are international student in the United States on an F-1 visa, then you have an excellent opportunity to eventually become a permanent resident of the United States. F-1 visa holders can become H-1B visa holders by accepting a job that will sponsor them for the visa, and then use the job to get their green card. Learn how to turn your F-1 into a green card.

BUT IT IS ALL MINE.

I always saw myself working in an office. But it turned out I like thinking on my feet, doing ten things at once. I like managing a balance sheet impacting a $5 billion company. And I definitely like the potential to earn more money than my friends climbing the corporate ladder.

It's a little surprising how much I enjoy it. But Enterprise is a surprising place. They train me. Support me. Reward me when I perform. Yet they let me do it my way, and I've never learned so much in my life.

Simple is best in résumés

By Kevin Donlin

About 150 years ago, Henry David Thoreau had two things to say that can help you write a better résumé today. They are: "Simplify! Simplify!"

You've heard many times that you have only 15-30 seconds to impress readers of your résumé. So, the simpler and easier-to-read you can make it, the better. Here are three ways to do that.

1. Begin with clarity.

I'm always amazed by the number of résumés that begin with no objective or summary statement. As a result, the employer is forced to start reading without knowing what the applicant can do.

Many résumés begin by listing education, for example. But even if your degree is in high demand, such as computer science, you're still leaving room for misinterpretation (Does this person want a job in network administration? Telephone support? Internal help desk?)

Instead, try opening with an objective such as this: "Position in network administration where my computer science degree and technical skills will add value."

If you want to be more flexible about the job you're after, you can say: "Position where my computer science degree, troubleshooting skills and customer service experience will add value."

2. Group information logically.

Hurried readers want to quickly scan through your résumé. You can help them by breaking things down into logical groupings. Don't jumble things together, as in this example:

WINDOWS NT 4.0 WORKSTATION, WINDOWS NT 4.0 SERVER, MS EXCHANGE, DOS, WINDOWS 95/98, MS WORD, MS EXCEL, MS ACCESS, MS OUTLOOK.

Break longer lists into smaller bits and give them a clear heading, like this:

COMPUTER SKILLS

• OPERATING SYSTEMS - WINDOWS NT 4.0 (WORKSTATION AND SERVER), WINDOWS 95/98 AND DOS.

• APPLICATIONS - MICROSOFT EXCHANGE, WORD, EXCEL, ACCESS AND OUTLOOK.

3. Focus on results.

To make it easier for your reader to picture you achieving results on the job for him/her, clearly show how you've done it for others. Be as specific as possible.

Avoid dry language, like this:
• RESPONSIBLE FOR MAINTAINING ACCURATE INVENTORY, ACQUISITION AND DELIVERY OF SUPPLIES.

Try saying this, instead:
• VASTLY IMPROVED CUSTOMER SERVICE WHILE CUTTING COSTS 24% BY ACCURATELY MANAGING INVENTORY, ACQUISITIONS AND DELIVERIES.

Simple is good. When you begin your résumé with clarity, group your information logically and focus on results, you'll enjoy a simply wonderful job search.
