Death to meeting law

ASUI leaders attempt to remove Idaho code from bylaws, censure Shofner

By David Grunke
Argonaut

A new piece of legislation introduced to the ASUI senate Wednesday evening would change the ASUI constitution's guidelines concerning executive sessions.

Senate Bill F05-30 amends the ASUI constitution in regards to the procedures necessary for the senate to call an executive session.

The law currently states that "all ASUI senate meetings shall be publicly noticed and in accordance with Idaho Code, which deals with the open meeting laws and notice of meetings." This requires members of ASUI to follow Idaho law when attempting to conduct a closed-door senate meeting.

The proposed legislation would strike out all reference to Idaho open meeting procedures. The new law would state that ASUI senate meetings "shall be conducted in the spirit of openness with regard to public interest and input." It also states "ASUI shall reserve the right to hold private meetings or call executive sessions regarding any sensitive matters."

ASUI presidential policy adviser Chris Dockrey and president pro tempore Travis Galloway stressed the importance of passing the proposed bill.

"This bill will clarify the obligations of ASUI when it comes to (closed) meetings," Dockrey said. "However, this won't affect ASUI's openness to student input and involvement."

"Executive sessions give the senate time to sit down and discuss issues without having to follow parliamentary procedure," Galloway said. "There are some issues that are best dealt with in private." Dockrey and Galloway also commented on recent allegations ASUI violated its constitution. During the Sept. 28 senate meeting, an executive session was proposed by sen. Travis Shofner, who cited personnel matters as the reason for sending the general public out of the room.

Shofner later admitted the closed meeting was used to discuss not only personnel matters, but also legislation concerning killing the Vandal Tax program.

The discussion violated Idaho Open Meeting law which the Argonaut reported Sept. 30.

"We did not break the open meeting laws," Dockrey said. "We're an organization that does not make decisions. We make recommendations and exert influence. ... We have no ultimate power."

Therefore, Dockrey said, ASUI is not bound by open meeting laws.

"We want to prevent what happened in last Friday's (Argonaut)," Galloway said. "Stuff like that impedes on our ability to do business."

An executive session was again called during Wednesday night's senate meeting to discuss personnel matters. Senators discussed a resolution, authored by Galloway and ASUI Vice President Liz Bento, which stated that Shofner intentionally disclosed detailed information from the executive session that took place on Sept. 28. The resolution contended that Shofner violated ASUI bylaws because they state that "all information

Career expo set for next week

By Nate Poppino
Argonaut

With two large universities within 10 miles of each other, Moscow and Pullman are any company's recruiting dream.

That's why so many of them will be at the Fall 2005 Career Expo of the Palouse, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Tuesday at Washington State University's Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum.

The expo, which takes place every semester at either WSU or the University of Idaho, will feature 143 companies and state and national agencies looking for college students from WSU, UI and other nearby institutions to fill empty positions and summer internships. Companies recruiting at the expo will include Microsoft, Boeing, the Peace Corps and the U.S. Naval Criminal Investigative Service.

"We've got a very wide range this year," said Ginger Gallagher, Career Services events coordinator at WSU. "It's exciting that we are very full."

Gallagher said the expo usually attracts between 2,000 and 2,500 students and will also include a Monday open house for the Career Services Office and Wednesday follow-up interviews.

Jewish students celebrate holy days

By Jessica Mullins
Argonaut

Jewish University of Idaho students have to adjust to celebrating the High Holy Days, the most sacred time of the year for Jews around the world, in the Moscow community.

UI does not have any organization for Jewish students and is holding no events to acknowledge the High Holy Days, Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur. While some schools on the East Coast and other areas with high Jewish populations cancel classes for the holidays, there is little acknowledgement of the High Holy Days at UI.

Groups available to Jewish students are the Jewish Community of the Palouse and the Washington State University Hillel, a campus group for Jewish students.

Sophomore Jennel Hall said the High Holy Days can be an inconvenience in Moscow.

"I don't think the school and faculty cares to take notice of us," Hall said.

Hall regularly attends the WSU Hillel and plans on going to services and fasting for Yom Kippur, also known as the Day of Atonement. Jews are required to fast for the holiday starting sundown Tuesday and ending Wednesday evening.

The Jewish Community of the Palouse holds services for the High Holy Days. Services for Rosh Hashana, the Jewish New Year, were the evening of Oct. 3 at the Unitarian Universalist Church in Moscow and on Oct. 4 at the home of JCP president Myron Schreck.

The JCP has about 70 dues-paying members. The group doesn't have a Rabbi and relies on the support and volunteerism of the members. Schreck said he enjoys the JCP's strong sense of community.

"The community is a means of saying we aren't alone," Schreck said. "We are the face of Judaism on the Palouse."

Jewish students at UI all have different reactions to the Jewish community in Moscow, depending on where they are from.

Israeli Yochai Avital said the number of people at the Rosh Hashanah Service surpassed his expectations. Avital met about six Jewish UI students in the crowd of about 70 filling the church.

"I didn't know so many students were Jewish," Avital said.

Hall, from New Meadows, said the Jewish community in Moscow is better than everywhere she has been.

"It is nice to be around other Jewish people and have them understand where you are coming from," Hall said.

Growing up, Hall practiced a few Jewish holidays with her mother but had no community group to celebrate with. When she went to college, she further explored her religion on her own.

"It felt the religion fit personally," Hall said. "It is a religion that made sense."

She said when she is around other Jews she feels more at home.

Junior Zev Kronenberg said even though Moscow has its own charm he misses the Boise Jewish community during Jewish holidays. He said the Boise community is growing exponentially, with options for services becoming more plentiful.

"The temple in Boise is more conservative than the Moscow one and

Legislation passes to kill two ASUI boards, add directors

By David Grunke
Argonaut

ASUI passed legislation Wednesday evening that kills two of its student boards.

The bill, authored by ASUI President Autumn Hansen, changes the ASUI Athletics and Academics boards into directorship positions if passed by the senate.

"We have come to the conclusion that the Athletics Board and the Academics Board would be better served as directorship positions to both the groups they work with and the general student population and ASUI," said Hansen in an address to the senate Sept. 28.

"There are two types of boards in ASUI. Programmatic Boards help with the programming of activities and functions. Advisory boards have ambiguous goals focused on building relationships and ideas."

She said that both the academics and athletics boards are classified as advisory boards.

Another issue affecting these boards is the problem of open positions. The athletics board does not currently have a chairperson and has not yet operated during the 2005-06 school year, said Chris Dockrey, ASUI presidential policy adviser. He said that he also believes that consolidating these boards would save money on salaries.

Hansen said she feels that changing these boards into directorships will also provide a benefit to students.

"We want to focus on staying student-centered."

Autumn Hansen
ASUI President

She believes the legislation would allow the new directors to provide support and ideas better than a board.

ASUI sen. Eric Everett said the state of ASUI boards is continually evolving. Last year, the campus recreation as well as the Idaho commons and union boards were created to better serve and represent students.

"The idea of creating an athletics director has been kicked around for about a semester," said Everett. He said that senators seem to be supportive of the legislation, but have a few concerns.

"An academics directorship may be too much for one person," Everett said. He cited the fact that the board currently manages the student achievement awards every spring. The process requires several individuals to work on the award ceremony.

Academics Board chairperson Heather Pearson, who lost the position with the death of her board, said she is supportive of the change, but could not be reached for further comments.

The open house will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Room 180 of the Lighty Student Services Building at WSU. Organizers stressed that students will likely need to attend the expo to set up interviews.

To prepare students for the expo, a series of mock interviews by company representatives will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday. Resume review clinics will be today and Monday in UI's Career and Professional Planning Office, located in Room 334 of the Idaho Commons.

Susie Billington, director of UI's CAPP office, said organizers are trying for 3,000 students this year.

"It's a combination of WSU, UI, Lewis-Clark State College and Spokane schools. Sometimes we even get Boise State University students up here," she said.

Though many of the companies look for business majors and similar students, UI senior Michelle LeBaron said, she still plans on searching the expo for biological systems engineering jobs.

"I'm going mostly to see what's there," said LeBaron, who wants to work in water quality control. "I went there last year to possibly make some sort of connections."

Freshman Neil Walther, part of UI's Martin School for International Affairs, said he will visit the expo not to find a job, but instead to see what his options could be in future years.

"Especially in college, I like to look ahead," he said. "I think that's what college is about."

Senior Colin Seley, who also went to one of last year's expos, said the event is a good opportunity to network with professionals.

"I got a couple of interviews out of it," said Seley, who is majoring in food science. "If nothing else, you should go for the free stuff."

Virginia Delgado, assistant director of WSU's Career Services, said it is important for students to prepare before going to the expo. They should study four or five of the companies that interest them and be sure to dress nicely.

"When they go to the career fair, they should focus on first those companies they're interested in working for," she said. "After they conclude their visit, they can go through the other booths."

Students should also bring copies of their resumes and, when leaving the booths, take notes on each company.

Billington also stressed the importance of being prepared and said the mock interviews will help students avoid problems at the expo.

"You don't want to be practicing your interviewing in an actual job interview," she said. "Oftentimes students will have gone through small interviews for the summer jobs they have, but that's not an actual interview. This gets them the opportunity to practice with some of the more challenging questions and figure out how they are going to respond to some of those."

Local/BRIEFS

UI student receives major scholarship, research assignment

UI senior Hillery Metz knows which job she will start her career with when she graduates next spring: a National Institutes of Health researcher.

Metz, who graduated from Bonners Ferry High School in 2002, learned recently that she was one of 12 students chosen nationwide to receive a NIH Undergraduate Scholarship for Individuals from Disadvantaged Backgrounds providing up to $20,000 for her education.

The award will pay educational and living expenses and includes a 10-week paid summer laboratory research experience. Her selection includes a year of paid research service at the NIH in Bethesda, Md.

A double major in biology and microbiology, Metz grew up as one of four children in a single-parent family. Financial hurdles made it difficult for her to attend college. She is the daughter of Marva Behrman of Moyie Springs.

The NIH award will help her to pursue her career goal, seeking a graduate degree and work in academia.

"My dream would be to get my doctorate and then teach and do research at a university," Metz said. "I've always liked science. It's compatible with my inquisitive mind."

Series examines implications of 1855 treaties

This year's American Indian Speakers Series, co-sponsored by the University of Idaho and Washington State University, will examine the significance of the 1855 treaties and the effects such treaties had on the region's tribes.

Sessions are free and open to the public.

"The intent is to consider the continuing significance and future implications of the so-called 'Steven's Treaties of 1855,' from the viewpoints of the Nez Perce, Umatilla and Yakama tribes," said Rodney Frey, professor of American Indian studies and anthropology.

With the signing of the treaty between the U.S. government and the Nez Perce Tribe on June 11, 1855, the government-to-government legal and political foundations of the Nez Perce Nation were established.

"Virtually every decision relating to the Nez Perce Tribe, from water rights and law enforcement jurisdiction to tribal self-determination, is grounded in the legal precedents agreed to in the Treaty of 1855," Frey said. "To understand the legal and political dynamics of the Nez Perce Nation, you must begin by understanding the Treaty of 1855." A keynote address by Umatilla elder Ron Halfmoon will take place Oct. 24 at 7 p.m. at the Washington State University Fine Arts Auditorium. The topic is "Significance of the Treaties of 1855: Contemporary Perspectives on Traditional Plant Resources." A panel discussion on the same topic will follow. Panel speakers include: Tonia Garcia, attorney for the Nez Perce Tribe; Alvina Heusties, Umatilla elder; Feather Sams Heusties of the Tamastlikt Institute; Emily Washines of the Yakama Tribe and Janie Pond, Umatilla elder and traditional food gathering practitioner.

UI professor gives curriculum to Katrina-struck schools

About 300 elementary school teachers who lost valuable teaching materials in Katrina's devastation will soon receive complementary copies of an earth science curriculum co-created by a UI professor.

Lee Vierling, a spatial ecologist in the UI College of Natural Resources, partnered with NASA six years ago to create "Earth Systems Connections," a K-5 natural resources curriculum that helps young children appreciate the significance and delicate nature of our environment.

In August, 16,000 copies were printed and released nationwide to teachers participating in Earth Science Week.

"A central premise supporting the ESC program is that understanding - or learning - is inevitably constructed by children as they actively explore their environment, engage in meaningful activities and interact with others," Vierling said.

Using a CD-ROM format, the team packaged a wide variety of lessons that engage children in mathematics, science and technology.

For example, an animated cartoon character named "Pixel the Satellite" guides the user through complex ideas of remote sensing and other examples that illustrate the relationships that humans have with the environment.

Vierling has coordinated the shipment of 300 free copies to Gayle Glusman of the Louisiana Art and Science Museum's Challenger Learning Center. Glusman sought out additional copies of the curriculum after trying it herself. She will give top priority to teachers who lost their teaching materials in the hurricane and distribute the rest to other Louisiana elementary educators attending educational conferences.

At this time, anyone with a computer loaded with Quicktime software can access the programs on the CD, which may be ordered by emailing info@earthsystemsconnections.com.

presented in executive session shall be considered privileged and not open to public disclosure."

"The resolution expressed the disappointment of the senate," Dockrey said.

"It was not our intent to punish (Shofner) or tarnish his reputation," Galloway said. "That was for us as a way of holding each other accountable." The executive session lasted nearly 30 minutes. Once the senate was again called to order, a vote was called on the matter. The resolution was voted down six to four with five senators abstaining.

Both Dockrey and Galloway were adamant that the new legislation cutting Idaho Open Meeting law out of the ASUI bylaws and Shofner's censure were unrelated issues.

HOLY DAYS from page A3

has a lot of events and activities during the High Holy Days," Kronenberg said. "I miss the familiarity of the services I have been going to for over six years."

Kronenberg said he values the few Jewish students he has met at UI.

"We have an amazing group of Jewish students up here," Kronenberg said. "Every student I've met has been wonderful."

Kronenberg said he encourages all the Jewish students at UI to get involved.

JCP president Myron Schreck said the organization appreciates college students participating in events and services.

"It helps us by showing our children that there is life after a bar/bat mitzvah," Shreck said. "It shows there are young adults who go away to college and don't forget about traditions and families."

Schreck said there is a noticeable increase in the number of students at the UI campus who identify themselves as being Jewish. He knows of about 12 Jewish students at UI. He was impressed with the increasing number of students from the Boise congregation, which is at about six students. Schreck said he thinks a UI student organization could happen, especially if numbers keep noticeably increasing like they have been.

The JCP has Friday night services, which are held at the WSU K-House. Other events JCP organizes through the year include a Sukkot party and Hanukkah party. The WSU Hillel meets two Thursdays a month at the WSU K-House.

Group wants community to know about Sudan genocide

By Davin Post
Argonaut

In Sudan people are starving, being killed and ignored. A group of University of Idaho students would like the Palouse community to know that.

Backed with support from the Chi Alpha Christian Fellowship, students banded together earlier this week in an effort to raise support for the people of Sudan who are being subjected to genocide.

In February 2003, the Arab militia, known as the Janjaweed, began to systematically execute hundreds of thousands of citizens in the Darfur region of Sudan. Since then, an estimated 400,000 Sudanese men, women and children have been killed and roughly 2.5 million others have been forced from their homes.

"A friend of mine from Kenya sent me a link to savedarfur.com about a month ago," said Karen Lichtenberg, a member of Chi Alpha's staff and organizer of the campaign. "I was blown away to learn about what was happening in Darfur and wanted to do something to help."

Lichtenberg and other volunteers helped run a booth in front of the Idaho Commons for three days, accepting donations and handing out literature on the issue. The flyers gave a rundown of what is happening, links to relief sites and sample letters that could be sent to representatives, senators, President Bush or the United Nations.

"The response, or lack of response, is a huge social injustice," volunteer Shaun Shaw said. "We are aware earlier of this genocide than the one in Rwanda, but not much is happening to seriously help."

Jason Kelly, campus pastor

for Chi Alpha, is working with Lichtenberg's efforts.

"I saw the movie Hotel Rwanda and was appalled that something similar was currently happening. It is very sad and not many people understand what is going on," he said.

"The money donated is going to the Human Rights Watch," Lichtenberg said. "They are trying to gain enough funds to investigate the situation further, raise publicity and organize aid."

Students' response to the issue has been minimal.

"So far we have $2," volunteer Norm Wall said Thursday morning. "This is the least politically active campus I've ever been on."

Wall has been involved with Sudan relief work since high school, when he played on a soccer team with refugees, referred to as The Lost Boys, of the 21-year civil war in Sudan.

"What's happening is atrocious. Millions of people have been displaced. It is simply ethnic cleansing," Wall said.

Thursday was an international day of fasting designed to raise money and publicity for the ongoing tragedies.

"If people fast for a day and donate the money they would have spent on food, it can make a difference," Kelly said. "It may seem difficult, but in light of what the people in Darfur are going through, it's nothing."

"This doesn't compare to the hunger and suffering in Darfur," Shaw said while participating in the fast. "It helps to make people more aware and appreciative of the pain they are going through."

Lichtenberg wants to extend support efforts beyond the week, although plans are still only preliminary.

"I'm not sure what to do

Chi Alpha adviser Karen Lichtenberg collects donations to send to Darfur, Sudan, in front of the Commons Wednesday afternoon.

next," she said, "but I definitely want to continue. College students can be very active if they want to be, and this shouldn't be a one-time thing."

Some non-religious students hesitate to get involved with faith-based charities, Kelly said, but he stressed that any support or donations won't be in an effort to get Chi Alpha's name out.

"You don't have to be Christian to care about the genocide," he said. "We're certainly not doing this for the sake of Chi Alpha. We aren't trying to trick people into getting involved with us, our name isn't even on the table. We are just concerned about these people. They've lost everything, even their loved ones. Our difference may be small, but at least it's something."

Aside from offering several suggestions for college activism, the Save Darfur Organization has campus outreach programs available, including opportunities to book speakers on the issue.

"Having a speaker come would be great," Kelly said. "Money is an issue, but it would be interesting none the less. We might be able to get someone to come next semester. I really do believe it isn't too late to help."

The United States has provided more than $90 million in support for the conflict. A few senators, including Bill Frist of Tennessee, are striving to take more action. After seeing the impacts of the genocide, Frist said he "talked to scores of refugees who, several weeks ago, watched as their wives were raped, as their brothers and fathers and sons were killed before their eyes. Scattered. Entire villages wiped out. It's savagery. It's slaughter, and it is going on, in essence, as we speak."

Organizations worldwide, political and independent, are attempting to cease the continued murders, rapes and torture. Despite good intentions, their endeavors are being thwarted.

"The Nairobi Peace Treaty is being used to distract people from the issue," Wall said.

The treaty was signed to declare peace over the civil war, which was Africa's longest-lasting armed conflict of all time.

"Even though some governments do, the international community sees no difference between the civil war and the genocide that is happening now," Wall said. "Representatives from Sudan took the treaty to the floor of the UN and said, 'Look, now we have peace', but the genocide is still going on."

Furthermore, the government in Sudan is closely linked to the Janjaweed, and consequently refuses to cooperate with humanitarian aid workers. The conflict remains highly volatile and has proved a threat for relief workers as well as refugees.

At least 10 al-Qaida terrorist plots thwarted since 9-11, Bush says

By William Douglas and Nancy Youssef (KRT)

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Thursday that the United States and its allies have thwarted at least 10 serious terrorist plots by al-Qaida — three of them on American soil — and have blocked five attempts to case targets or infiltrate the country since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

Bush's revelation came in a speech that administration officials billed as a major address designed to stem slipping domestic support for the war in Iraq and to drive home the relevance of the war on terrorism to Americans.

Bush used his strongest language to date in labeling Iraq as the central battleground in the war on terror and describing efforts by insurgents, Osama bin Laden, and other terrorists to force the United States out of the Middle East and to create a "totalitarian empire" from Spain to Indonesia.

"Some might be tempted to dismiss these goals as fanatical or extreme," Bush said. "Well, they are fanatical and extreme — and should not be dismissed. Our enemy is utterly committed. ... And the civilized world knows very well that other fanatics in history, from Hitler to Stalin to Pol Pot, consumed whole nations in war and genocide before leaving the stage of history."

In Baghdad, government officials from various parties agreed with Bush that insurgents are using Iraq as a staging ground. But they said a failed U.S. policy led them there.

Some said that while they are grateful that multinational forces liberated their country from Saddam Hussein's tyranny, they are frustrated by this new threat to the nation. They contend that better military planning could have prevented the insurgency from burgeoning within their borders.

Most believe the insurgency first consisted largely of former Baathists loyal to Saddam but since has expanded to include foreign fighters and everyday Iraqis frustrated by the country's current state.

"If he is right, then all thanks goes to Mr. Bush," said Sadoun al-Zubaydi, a Sunni Muslim who both advised on and opposes the new Iraqi constitution that is being crafted. "He has no one to blame but himself."

President Bush speaks about war on terror to the National Endowment for Democracy, Thursday, October 6, 2005, in the Ronald Reagan Building in Washington, D.C.

In an effort to show the seriousness of the terrorist threat and its potential impact on American shores, Bush said that al-Qaida has unsuccessfully attempted 10 terrorist plots, three within the United States.

"We've stopped at least five more al-Qaida efforts to case targets in the United States or infiltrate operatives into our country," he said.

"Because of this steady progress, the enemy is wounded — but the enemy is still capable of global operations." Bush gave no specifics on the thwarted plots. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales told reporters that some of the information is classified. National Security Council officials were working Thursday afternoon to get some of the information declassified, an administration official said.

In the meantime, White House Press Secretary Scott

McClellan cited the cases of Jose Padilla and Lyman Farris as foiled terrorist attempts. Federal authorities arrested Padilla at Chicago's O'Hare Airport in May 2002 and charged him with plotting to detonate a radioactive "dirty bomb" in the United States. Farris, a Columbus, Ohio, truck driver pleaded guilty in May 2003 to helping al-Qaida leaders plot against U.S. targets, including the Brooklyn Bridge.

Bush said these examples show that America needs to combat terror in places such as Iraq and Afghanistan to prevent more terrorist efforts at home.

"Some observers also claim that America would be better off by cutting our losses and leaving Iraq now," Bush said. "This is a dangerous illusion, refuted with a simple question: Would the United States and other free nations be more safe, or less safe with (Jordanian terrorist Abu Musab al) Zarqawi and bin Laden in control of Iraq, its people and its resources? Having removed a dictator who hated free peoples, we will not stand by as a new set of killers, dedicated to the destruction of our own country, seizes control of Iraq by violence."

Bush also had harsh words for Iran and Syria, describing them as "helpers and enablers" that "share the goal of hurting America and moderate Muslim governments, and use terrorist propaganda to blame their own failures on the West and America and on the Jews."

Bush delivered his speech amid polls showing declining domestic support for a war that so far has claimed the lives of more than 1,940 members of the U.S. military. A CNN/Gallup/USA Today survey last month found 32 percent of those surveyed approved of Bush's handling of the war.

The president also has found support for his handling of the war eroding on Capitol Hill, even among Republicans. Congressional Democrats pounced on Bush's comments as misleading.

"Once again the president had an opportunity to lay out for the American people the facts on the ground in Iraq and his strategy to achieve the military, political, and economic success needed in order to bring our troops home," said Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev. "Instead, the president continued to falsely assert there is a link between the war in Iraq and the tragedy of September 11, a link that did not and does not exist."

Emily Davis, homecoming chair and director of communications, filled the senate in on Homecoming Week. She said the week was a great success and thanked the senate for their participation.

Presidential Communications

Acting President Elizabeth Bento expressed her condolences to President Autumn Hansen who was absent due to a death in the family. She also spoke to senators about the success of Homecoming Week and coming activities involving hurricane relief.

Bento informed the senate about a resolution she authored to address the "code of responsibility" of ASUI leaders. Finally, she expressed support for an amendment that would change the ASUI constitution in regard to open meeting laws.

Senate Bill F05-16, providing for the appointment of Ryan Jacobson to the position of SUI director of diversity affairs, passed unanimously.

Senate Bill F05-17, providing for the appointment of Jonathan Gaffney to the position of ASUI faculty council, Senate Bill F05-18, providing for the amendment of the ASUI constitution to change the succession of the ASUI vice president, passed unanimously. The amendment allows the ASUI President to choose a new vice president if the position becomes unexpectedly vacant.

Senate Bills F05-19 and 20 were voted on as a block. These bills jointly delete the ASUI athletics and academics boards as part of a move to create directorships in athletics and academics.

Senate Bill F05-23, providing for the amendment of the timeline of the presidential election, was sent to the senate rules and regulations committee. The bill would shift presidential elections from fall to spring.

Senate Bill F05-24, providing for the amendment of series 5000 of the ASUI rules and regulations to update the duties of the ASUI chief of staff and ASUI presidential policy adviser, passed unanimously. The bill brings both positions up to date with their job descriptions.

Senate Bill F05-25, providing for the appointment of Jessica Pollack to the position of ASUI director of community relations, passed unanimously.

Senate Resolution F05-03, which supports fair trade practices at the University of Idaho and around the world, passed unanimously.

Senate Resolution F05-04, resolving that self-interested behavior that sacrifices the interest of ASUI is improper for an ASUI leader, was not passed.

SenateREPORT

Open Forum

Jacob Parker, ASUI Civic Engagement Board chair, spoke to the senate about the Serve-A-Thon program. He said that the program is working both locally and nationally to help support victims of Hurricane Katrina. He also reminded senators of the coming hurricane relief week that is scheduled for Oct. 17-22.

Megan Thompson, ASUI chief of staff, gave more information on the coming hurricane relief week. He said that a variety of fundraising efforts were underway. He encouraged senators to inform their living groups about the event. She also voiced her support for a number of appointments to ASUI that the senate was scheduled to consider.

Chris Dockrey, presidential policy adviser, voiced his support for Senate Bill F05-30, which would change the ASUI constitution in regards to open meeting laws. He stressed the importance of the bill to resolve issues concerning executive sessions.

Senate Bill F05-28, providing for the appointment of Justin Saydell to the position of ASUI director of sustainability, passed unanimously.

Senate Bill F05-29, providing for the amendment to ASUI rules and regulations in order to lower the number of signatures a senate candidate needs to run for election from 75 to 45, was sent to the rules and regulations committee.

Senate Bill F05-30, providing for the amendment to the ASUI bylaws on the matter of open meetings, was sent to the rules and regulations committee.

Senate Resolution F05-03, which supports fair trade practices at the University of Idaho and around the world, passed unanimously.

Senate Resolution F05-04, resolving that self-interested behavior that sacrifices the interest of ASUI is improper for an ASUI leader, was not passed.

Absolute power corrupts, again

There are two different justice systems in this country, one for rich Republicans and one for everybody else (except rich Democrats). It's a good thing for the ruling Republican regime that they're now in a position to stack the courts in their favor, because it looks like they're going to need all the help they can get.

Frank McGovern
Argonaut
arg_opinion@sub.uidaho.edu

Tom Delay is the most recent good Christian Republican to be indicted for conspiring to defraud the United States. Delay is being charged with using a fundraising apparatus he created — Texans for a Republican Majority — to funnel corporate monies to be used in funding Texas political campaigns during the 2002 election.

I can't be too quick to jump to any conclusions concerning Delay's guilt or innocence, since Delay has a lot of support from the government. The White House has defended Delay as a "good ally," and many Republicans from both the House and Senate are supporting him against this vicious and unfounded partisan attack. However, I wouldn't feel as though I'd done my job as a supporter of terrorism if I didn't point out a couple of wee inconsistencies.

The White House is run by this guy, George W. Bush. This Bush fellow is a high-ranking government functionary and no stranger to corporate adversity himself. He somehow escaped prison after being caught red-handed in an insider trading scam that involved somewhere around $800,000. That's more than ten times the amount that sent Martha Stewart to the ol' Federal Prison Hotel.

Bush's right-hand man is Dick Cheney who, prior to running the country, ran a corporation called Halliburton. Halliburton is using a war the American poor are dying in to violate American taxpayers to the tune of several billion dollars. One of Bush's best friends is Ken Lay, arguably the most heinous corporate criminal in the history of our country. Enron was the No. 1 contributor to the Bush campaign. They were so close, in fact, that Bush called him Kenny-Boy. Isn't that sweet?

The corporations Bush, his family, Cheney and a huge majority of Bush's cabinet and friends are intimately involved with stand to make billions in Iraq. (That's the war started by Bush, who knowingly lied about the intelligence it took to get us there.) Another supporter of House Majority Leader Tom Delay is Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist. The Frister has been relatively quiet about the Delay scandal because Frist himself now faces federal investigation into a super-shady stock sale.

It's not that Democrats are totally clean. Kennedy did that Chappaquiddick thing ... I don't know, in the '80s. Plus there was that massive, ultra-expensive investigation into Clinton. He was mixed up in that Whitewater scandal that turned out to be ... oh, absolutely nothing. But he totally lied about fooling around on his wife. If it wasn't for the Godly Republicans, how would the sordid details of a man's sex life have been forced down the throats of every person in the country?

I guess the point is, the Republican majority is flushing your money down the toilet along with governmental class, trust and integrity. If I were to snatch the purse of a woman who'd been financially ruined by Enron, I would be filing down the business-end of a toothbrush as we speak to keep Martha Stewart away from my smokes.

Clinton was impeached for lying about a (rhymes with snow-cob), and the corpulent, mendacious elephants fleecing this great nation are the patriots of the "values" party.

OUR VIEW

ASUI should learn from its mistakes

At the ASUI senate meeting Wednesday, the senate introduced a resolution and a bill regarding last week's open meeting law violation. The resolution reprimanded sen. Travis Shofner for disclosing information to The Argonaut, and the bill proposed a change in the ASUI constitution, eliminating the need to follow Idaho law in senate meetings. These actions are inappropriate and inexcusable.

While the resolution against Shofner did not pass, it should not have been introduced in the first place. In admitting to The Argonaut that an executive session moved from appropriate discussion of personnel issues and into illegal territory (discussing the imminent death of Vandal Taxi), Shofner did the right thing. He admitted a mistake, something politicians need to do far more often. By telling The Argonaut what happened in the meeting, he allowed his constituents — University of Idaho students — to know what their governing body was discussing without student input. ASUI does, after all, deal with students' funds. Shofner should be commended for his honest actions, not chastised.

The bill, which has been sent to the ASUI Rules and Regulations committee for further discussion, is not illegal. ASUI does not have to adhere to the same rules as state government bodies, but it chose to by adding "all ASUI senate meetings shall be ... in accordance with Idaho Code, which deals with the open meeting laws" to its constitution. Agreeing to adhere to these laws made ASUI a more viable, responsible and transparent political body.

Members of the ASUI senate are gaining real-life political experience, and if they want to be considered real politicians, they should be held accountable in real-life political situations.

Every state has an open meeting law, and out of college, at any level of government, ASUI senators will have to deal with these issues. Amending its constitution to remove the obligation to follow these laws would lessen ASUI's legitimacy.

It seems this bill is in reaction to The Argonaut's article and editorial regarding the open meeting law violation. It is the media's job to act as a "fourth estate" and keep check on governing bodies, and The Argonaut did just that. Rather than trying to change its rules to avoid further mistakes being revealed, ASUI should learn from its mistakes and do right by the students in the future.

Chris Dockrey, ASUI presidential policy adviser, said the bill "won't affect ASUI's openness to student input and involvement." This is a false statement. By shutting students and the media out of sessions where ASUI discusses matters pertinent to students, ASUI is definitely affecting input and involvement.

If students can't hear discussions and the media can't report on them, how will students know what is going on and be able to speak up about it? After all, "Associated Students of the University of Idaho" means all students, not just the senate.

UI students, before your chance to know what your student politicians discuss is gone, say your piece.

Congratulate Shofner for his integrity and encourage senators not to pass the bill reversing a good decision. Don't let ASUI shut you out of meetings that matter to you, your money and your university.

THIS WEEK AT THE BAR

Oh Canada: That's what it is all about, 'eh

They are a hockey-loving, socialism-embracing and pot-loving people. They are the Canadians, and last weekend I was privileged enough to spend a weekend in the great white north consuming Canuck brews.

Sam Taylor
Argonaut
arg_opinion@sub.uidaho.edu

I love Canada, my aunt is Canadian and I've never been able to get enough of her accent and her happy ways. I've never seen her angry or sad. I don't think it's legal to be anything other than happy up there and I've come to the conclusion that they make it easier by drinking alcohol and smoking marijuana. I actually witnessed some of the indigenous people participating in that event in public while walking down the sidewalk in Nelson, British Columbia.

I'm using my experience in Canada as my column this week. It's been a while since I wrote last, and of course I've had some interesting times out at the ol' pub (as they say in Canada), but this is a perfect opportunity to use an experience that I normally don't get. Going to Canada is like going to some far-off alien planet. Did you know that you must show two pieces of picture identification to prove you're not a minor up there? Did you also know you only have to be 19 in British Columbia to drink alcohol, and in some places it's only 18 years old?

Of course students know these things. I'm sure many college-aged men and women go up there to get around the legal drinking age of the United States. I would have too if I ever had a car back in the day. Alas, I did not, so I get to experience these things when I'm already 21.

But it was a fantastic experience, nonetheless. I sampled the finest in hops, barley, wheat and oatmeal from the Nelson Brewing Company. NBC, which is located, of course, in the city it is named for, has a wonderful selection of beers.

I'm here, however, to expose a horrendous injustice in Canadian tourism — and that is the egregious act of price markup.

At Ainsworth Hot Springs, I paid $4.75 per bottle for Nelson beer, but it was worth it. Keep that in mind that's in Canadian dollars, so it was basically like I was handing them a couple of seashells and getting a buzz in exchange.

Yeah right, the Canadian dollar is quite close to the American one right now. What's up with that? I want to know who decided to run our economy so low into the ground that I only get a little more than eighty cents per dollar upon conversion. That's just wrong, is what that is.

When my girlfriend and I actually got to Nelson and stayed at the New Grant Hotel in the downtown area of the city (I recommend that hotel highly, it had great service and a great old-time feel to it. No elevator, though, so either take your luggage up one piece at a time or drop the doughnuts now) the beer was far cheaper for the same thing.

Needless to say that gave me an excuse to try them all. I am a fan of darker beers — stouts generally.

Another interesting quirk about the Canada is that the cover bands at their bars are fantastic. At an Irish pub next to our hotel, I gulped down some Irish stout and listened to a band croon tunes from Michael Jackson, Cheech and Chong, the Beastie Boys, The Beatles and more. The lead singer, who we thought was female when we first got there, even belted out "Girls Just Want to Have Fun." They don't judge in Canada, you know.

Canada is a great place to drink, and despite my colleagues' lack of bar enthusiasm in the past weeks, I encourage everyone to go to different countries and experience their rituals for drinking and their local concoctions.

Remember, also, to bring some sea shells.

Columnist relies on personal attacks

Dear Editor,
How long did it take Brett Walter to write his column, "We surrender," for Oct. 4's Argonaut? Ten minutes? Well, it shows. His column was filled with more off-the-mark personal attacks than a Rush Limbaugh show. In case he, being the "intellectual giant" he is, can't figure out what I am referring to, let me list them off: "intellectual giants," "dressed in hippie clothing," "smelled," "explains their infatuation with France," "the lives of the soldiers are (not) of great concern to the left," the

It is important to note that those people who resort to name-calling are typically just on the losing end of a debate.

But after wading through your trite and uninspired diatribe some arguments did show up. Nothing new, mind you. What was surprising was that Walter would compare an internationally illegal, immoral and unnecessary war to World War II. WWII was a horrible war against a hostile regime bent on taking over the world. In the Iraq war, we are the hostile regime.

Regardless of what the talking heads and President Bush say, the war in Iraq did nothing for the war on terror except create more terrorists. There were no weapons of mass destruction, Saddam was not associated with al-Qaida and the 9-11 terrorists didn't even come from Iraq. They came from our ally, Saudi Arabia.

I have some words to describe the protestors too: patriotic, brave, informed, caring, passionate, concerned, human and loving. Try using all of those words to describe Bush.

I would challenge Walter to write one, just one, column that is void of all personal attacks. Talk about substantive arguments. Argue real points. All in all, quit being a dullard.

Josh Studor
Coeur d'Alene

Article hurts columnist's credibility

Dear Editor,
I am writing in regard to Brett Walter's Oct. 4th column, "We Surrender." Besides being incredibly mean spirited, his column was also poorly thought out and devoid of any actual argument. Although the letters policy for The Argonaut states that "letters should focus on issues, not on personalities," at least half of Mr. Walter's column consists of ad hominem attacks on Democrats and "the left." In light of the fact that his column contains no clearly stated thesis, it seems as if its sole purpose is to smear those who oppose the war with a wide range of unsupported accusations — everything from bad personal hygiene to appeasement of terrorists.

The debate about the war in Iraq is not as black and white as Mr. Walter would have us believe. There are many Democrats who support the war, and many Republicans who have called for a withdrawal plan. Indeed, two of the sponsors of a recent bill calling for a withdrawal plan to be in place by the end of the year are Republicans, Sen. Chuck Hagel and Rep. Ron Paul.

Some of Mr. Walter's other accusations aren't just wrong; they are shameful and vicious. How dare he claim that Democrats don't believe that "the lives of American soldiers are of great concern," and "don't admire bravery." Try telling that to former Sen. Max Cleland who lost three limbs fighting in Vietnam, or former Sen. Bob Kerrey who won the Medal of Honor as a Navy SEAL.

I appreciate The Argonaut's attempt to bring different viewpoints to the opinion page, but I think conservatives would be better served by someone who uses well-reasoned arguments instead of malicious smears.

Student writing shines in 'Native Voices'

By Abby Anderson
Argonaut

Killer squirrels, magician's bunnies and basketballs with NBA dreams were only some of the characters brought to the stage Monday night by eight Coeur d'Alene Tribal School students at the University of Idaho's Hartung Theatre.

As participants of the Autry National Center's Young Native Playwrights Project, "Native Voices," the students each penned a five- to 10-minute one-act play that was brought to life by professional American Indian actors from Los Angeles.

The plays received a standing ovation not only for the high caliber of the actors, but also for the students' ability to

"I like writing. I can do whatever I want when I write."

Sophia George
"Native Voices" playwright

cover important subjects in an abstract way.

In Kersey Miller's play, "Bunnies Ain't So Cute After All," a black bunny dreams of dying his fur white so he can be a magician's bunny in order to be close to his sister. The play covers the themes of acceptance, perfection, depression and losing parents.

The play ends on a positive note, but not all the plays had happy endings. The conclusion of Armondo Garcia's "It's About Soul," a play about a tiger and a squirrel on the hunt for an elk, goes in a different direction.

Tom Kellogg, the workshop master artist, explained the stage setup.

"There are two chairs for two actors, a chair for the stage director and one for the student," Kellogg said. "It's an opportunity to hear (the play) fresh from the writer."

When it was Rochelle LaFountain's turn to sit down with the actors onstage, she was nervous.

"I felt kind of scared because I'm a shy person," said LaFountain, writer of "Groovy, Kenneth and Their Greatest Wishes."

LaFountain's play portrayed an argument between a brother and sister stuffed bears Kenneth and Groovy, who were trying to figure out whose wish would be granted. The brother bear wanted to be a real bear so he could beat up bullies, while the sister bear wanted to go on a family trip to spend more time with her parents.

While the storyline is fiction, LaFountain said the bears are real.

"My dad gave it to me," she said. "The other bear was my brother's."

She said her mentor throughout the week long workshop, Sally Eames-Harlan, a UI

Master of Fine Arts graduate, was a big help in writing.

"I just said things and she wrote them down and made a story," she said. "I really liked my mentor, she was really nice."

Sophia George said she also communicated well with her mentor, Maaika Davidson, a first-year MFA student from Idaho Falls.

"I expressed my feelings to her," she said. "It was kind of hard, because there was a lot of thinking."

Author of the play "Sneaky Sly," George said she wrote about her own life and was very nervous about appearing onstage during the reading.

"I can't stand being up in front of all those people," she said.

Readings Schedule

3 p.m. Sunday, Museum of Art and Culture, Spokane
9:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. Monday, Boswell Hall Auditorium, North Idaho College, Coeur d'Alene

In the future, George said, she would like to continue writing plays. She said the Young Native Playwrights Project has helped her believe in herself.

"I like writing," she said. "I can do whatever I want to do when I write."

12th and Vine wants to take over

By Caitlin Rice
Argonaut

Blues-rock band 12th and Vine didn't start out with a cosmic plan of world domination, but the idea has grown on them.

"We are probably going to be the most famous band in the world," jokes pianist Aaron Myers.

12th and Vine will be performing Saturday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight at Bucer's Coffeehouse Pub in Moscow.

The five band members, all Washington State University students, came together gradually, beginning with drummer Drew Fletcher's idea to start a blues band in Pullman. Guitarist Greg Floyd and bassist Eric Gobel joined Fletcher. Soon afterward, Faizah Fard brought her vocal talents to the group.

The four were becoming successful with writing and performing their own music when they decided their vision lacked one musician.

At the time, Myers was a recording studio pianist who accompanied any performers needing back up. One day he was asked to accompany 12th and Vine.

"We were doing our CD and we had him sit in on three tracks," says Floyd. "We really liked him. He fit in perfectly."

Myers has had to make a few adjustments to perform with 12th and Vine.

Before starting a performance, he peels down the piano, leaving the front open so the audience can see inside.

"I take the piano apart because I have an amplified guitar and drums to compete with," he says. "I try my hardest to be heard so they don't have to hold back."

And they don't hold back.

"We definitely started straight-up blues and moved into rock — I guess R & B would describe it pretty well," says Floyd.

He believes the variation of what they perform appeals to both a younger audience, because of the familiar rock influences, and to the older crowd, because of its emphasis on classic blues.

Fletcher says the band's blues style is something many people can relate to because of its powerful influence.

"About 98 percent of what we play is original," says Myers.

The group members write their music collectively and their newest work has some new elements, Myers says.

"It is really different from our old stuff, more complex and sophisticated ... but at the same time more simple," he says.

"Everybody plays simple parts to make a complex whole — like a mosaic instead of a puzzle," adds Fletcher.

The only place 12th and Vine still performs on the Palouse is Bucer's. All its other work is done elsewhere, says Myers.

After graduating from WSU, Fard moved to Seattle to work and involved himself in the bigger music scene of a large city.

The band now makes numerous trips to Seattle to perform and does more work in the city than it does locally.

"We play more gigs than is healthy," says Fletcher.

The trips can be exhausting, but have provided great opportunities for the band, allowing it to perform all night and record all of the next day, he says.

"We kind of play it by ear," Floyd says, adding the band's overall performance style is improvisational.

"It gives you the freedom to go with the crowd ... play towards them ... or take them up," says Myers.

The band has had good turnouts for its local performances, but, jokes Fletcher, there are a lot of people yet to be enlightened.

"We've had great support in the Palouse, which we have really appreciated."

The Blood Brothers bring chaotic screams to UI

By Hillary Flowers
Argonaut

Screaming lyrics and noisy chaotic sounds are just the things The Blood Brothers strive for in their music.

ASUI Vandal Entertainment's Small Concert Series brings The Blood Brothers to the University of Idaho at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in the SUB Ballroom to promote their new album, "Crimes." The concert is free and doors open at 7 p.m.

The band members grew up in similar musical communities. Some of them went to high school together in Kirkland, Wash., and others just played in bands together.

The Blood Brothers formed in 1997 as something to do for fun. Eight years later, the band is serious about its music. Once they started getting gigs and putting records together, they realized just how serious they had become. The band has produced five albums total.

"It's what's most important in our lives," said Johnny Whitney, singer and keyboard player. "It's what we spend most of our time on."

Whitney said the band's music is a screaming style with noisy, melodic, abrasive and chaotic lyrics. It is the sum of five different people's creative interests.

"I love playing music," Whitney said. "I love making music."

Other band members include singer Jordan Blilie, bass and keyboard player Morgan Henderson, guitar player Cody Votolato and drummer Mark Gajadhar. They've played with such bands as A.F.I., The Used and Mudhoney.

"It took a long time to get established," Whitney said. "We weren't taking it super seriously right at the beginning."

The lyrics of "Trash Flavored Trash," off of the album, "Crimes," talk about how the media portrayed the beginning of the war in Iraq. Whitney said the band had watched a broadcast on Fox News about the war and didn't approve of how it was being portrayed.

The song talks about everything that's unfair and unbalanced in television news. Whitney sings, "And I've done the division/trash into trash equals trash flavored trash."

"My favorite thing about it is being able to write music for a living ... the ability to be creative as a job," Whitney said.

This is the first time The Blood Brothers will visit Moscow. Currently they're touring with the band Coheed in Cambria, which will not be in Moscow. Instead, the band MewithoutYou will open.

Whitney said the band members are really excited to come to Moscow and UI since they've never been here before. The Blood Brothers have done shows for colleges in the past.

For more information on The Blood Brothers, tour dates or albums, visit www.thebloodbrothers.com.

The Blood Brothers, of Kirkland, Wash., will play a free concert at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in the SUB Ballroom.

'Peter Sellers' biopic better than average TV fare

By Tyler Wilson
Argonaut

Usually TV movies are considered vastly inferior to those released theatrically.

"The Life and Death of Peter Sellers," however, is an HBO film that probably would have picked up more than a few Oscar nominations last year.

Directed by Stephen Hopkins from a book by Roger Lewis, "The Life and Death of Peter Sellers" chronicles exactly that, focusing on the periods between his various films for much of the time.

Geoffrey Rush, who just won an Emmy for the role a couple weeks ago, plays Sellers and all his most outlandish characters, from Inspector Clouseau to Dr. Strangelove. In true Sellers fashion, Rush also has scenes portraying other characters, mainly Sellers' mother, father, and directors Blake Edwards and Stanley Kubrick. Actors such as John Lithgow and Stanley Tucci play the roles a majority of the time, but Rush performs a single monologue for each character evaluating the character of Peter Sellers. It's a pretty trippy device at first, but the scenes aptly co-exist with the film's zany tone.

In many ways, the film is often as outrageous as the public persona of Sellers, using animated sequences, dream sequences and film within a film scenarios. One sequence has Sellers on his apparent deathbed, confronted by his famous characters preparing him for a literal liftoff from earth. These scenes give the film the mile-a-minute spirit that so many cinema fans remember fondly of Sellers.

At the same time, Sellers isn't glorified by the proceedings. Rush depicts Sellers as a man desperate for attention, with an overwhelming ego and a certain streak of cruelty about him. In some instances, Sellers is portrayed as borderline psychotic. In an early scene, Sellers decides to leave his first wife (the always wonderful Emily Watson) to pursue an unrealistic affair with screen legend Sophia Lauren. One of his children asks if he still loves them, in which he responds, "Of course. Just not as much as Sophia Lauren."

Despite his flaws, Sellers is still depicted as the comedic genius he is and deserves to be remembered for. This is easily Rush's finest performance in a career full of them. Had the film screened in theaters last fall, he would have certainly beaten out Jamie Foxx for the Best Actor Oscar. Charlize Theron has a memorable role as Britt Eckland, another Sellers wife who falls for his charm before eventually growing tired of his ego and eccentricities. Lithgow and Tucci's depictions of Blake Edwards and Stanley Kubrick are also delightful to watch, providing the audience with an alternative view of two directing legends.

"The Life and Death of Peter Sellers"

"The Life and Death of Peter Sellers" is another fine motion picture made exclusively for HBO. It seems like every year the Emmy awards are dominated by HBO programming, with the network's motion pictures and miniseries being especially exceptional. Now if they could only teach the rest of Hollywood to be so consistent.

'Evil Dead: Regeneration' video game a gory treat

By Rylli Hennessey
Argonaut

"Evil Dead: Regeneration" is everything an "Evil Dead" fan could want in a video game.

Ash is back and he's kicking more butt than ever. With his trusty boomstick and chainsaw at his side, he is killing and mangling Deadites left and right.

Players get to relive some classic scenes from "Evil Dead 2" as well as a new adventure. Ash must save the world, again, from the insane Dr. Reinhard.

Ash is convicted of killing his friends in the woods after they are taken over by the Necronomicon. After being convicted, he is put in the Sunny Meadows Asylum. Dr. Reinhard, a doctor at the asylum, uses the Necronomicon to harness the powers of the dead and open portals that let evil in the world.

Ash gets some help saving the world from his new sidekick Sam, a Deadite midget experiment who can use the powers of the dead to help Ash. In a game extra, Bruce Campbell (the voice of Ash) calls his relationship with Sam a good cop/bad cop relationship, like '48 Hours' with a chain saw.

Campbell is a perfect voice talent for video games. He delivers biting and usually vulgar quips like they're second nature.

A word of warning: this game is not for anyone who does not want to see the graphic killing of Deadites. Ash shoots them, chops off limbs, lights them on fire and delivers some awful finishing blows. His friend Sam is even more disgusting, making comments such as, "Have you ever dated a girl with one leg?"

If you (the player) get annoyed with your small partner Sam, you can always kick him into a wall or a fan, or light him on fire with your flamethrower. The game's only flaw is it is too short. Just when you're really getting into kicking Deadite butt, the game ends. I guess no amount of "Evil Dead" is ever enough.

"Evil Dead: Regeneration" is awesome. It is violent, funny, it's "Evil Dead" and there's nothing better than that.

Reeves takes on role of New Age orthodontist in 'Thumbsucker'

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

TORONTO — Inscrutable. That's what Keanu Reeves is.

That's the public face he puts on for journalists, the folks who long ago tagged him perma-dude, the actor with the cool name and surfer-dim vocabulary.

"Vacant-looking," critic Leonard Maltin labeled him.

You don't get much out of him in interviews. Sometimes that's because he doesn't have much to say. But sometimes, it's because the press, even in small group settings such as this one, can't resist riffing on the first fragment of whatever he wants to say. He never gets to finish a thought.

Then again, there's a reason the small studio releasing the indie "Thumbsucker" has paired him with his director, Mike Mills, for interviews. And it's not just "that the movie isn't about Keanu," as the publicist says. Mills, a first-time filmmaker from the world of graphic design (think album covers), is here to fill in the blanks that Reeves leaves behind.

But really, the guy is perfectly capable of expressing himself. And if people are saying that his odd, New Age guru/orthodontist in "Thumbsucker" is the role he was born to play, he'll run with it. A little.

"I liked his richness of feeling," says Reeves, 41. "I don't know how else to describe it. No matter what he was doing, he felt it. He just seemed so open."

If the ortho-doc seems like an adult, self-mocking version of the "Whoa, dude" Reeves we've all grown to expect, well, that's not his fault.

"I didn't think I was doing that in this role," he says, scratching his scruffy, 20-day-plus beard. "But maybe I'm naive."

That gets a laugh, as does his take on the stardom that seems to have sat in his lap for the past 15 years.

As does his co-star, Tilda Swinton, who shepherded this project about a functionally dysfunctional family (she plays the mom) dealing with a potentially brilliant 17-year-old who still sucks his thumb (Lou Pucci).

"I kept a poster of Keanu in the 'Matrix' on my wall throughout the whole production of this film," she says. "I knew if he stayed with the project we might actually get it made. He was my 'power animal.'"

Reeves had the good taste to see, in the script from Walter Kirn's novel, a good movie. He wouldn't be the star. He wouldn't rack up a "Matrix" or "Constantine" payday ($15 million plus) or the perks.

"The humanity of the piece, the humor and insightfulness and intelligence, they were what I read and what I experienced when I got to see what was on the screen," Reeves says. "I'm really happy with the film. In terms of my hopes and expectations, they were realized. It's a great role, and I had a great time performing it."

Mills says that Reeves, who has for years earned several times more than the entire budget of indie films such as this one, doesn't do "the star thing." Especially on the set.

"He never, with words or anything else, said 'I'm special or different' and never asked for anything special," says Mills. "Working with Keanu is like working with one of my electricians or the grip or anybody. The worst thing you could do was pay too much attention to him."

Fire station to host 'The Guys'

Sirius Idaho Theatre will host a reading of "The Guys" as a fund-raiser for the Moscow Volunteer Fire Department.

Performances of "The Guys," by Anne Nelson, the second production of the theater's current season, will take place at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 14 and 15 at the downtown Moscow fire station. Directed by Pam Palmer, the theater group's managing artistic director, "The Guys" features Kelly Quinnett as Joan and Peter Aylward as Nick.

Ticket prices are $20, with all proceeds benefiting the volunteer firefighters. Advance tickets can be purchased at BookPeople of Moscow and at Moscow Fire Station #3. Tickets are also available through the mail by contacting John Dickinson, chair of the group's board of directors, at (208) 301-4361.

"The Guys" is based on a true story that takes place less than two weeks after the Sept. 11 attacks. Joan, an editor, receives an unexpected phone call on behalf of Nick, a fire captain who has lost most of his men in the attack. He's looking for a writer to help him with the eulogies he must present at their memorial services. Nick and Joan spend a long afternoon together, recalling the fallen men through recounting their virtues and their foibles, and fashioning the stories into memorials of words. In the process, Nick and Joan discover the possibilities of friendship in each other and their shared love for New York City.

'Garden' begins in Pullman

The Pullman Civic Theatre's production of "The Chalk Garden" will run at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 13-15 and Oct. 20-22 at the new Nye Street Theatre. Advance tickets are $10 and are available at Dissmore's, Neill's Flowers and Gifts and Safeway in Pullman. Tickets are $12 at the door.

"The Chalk Garden," by Enid Bagnold, concludes Pullman Civic Theatre's 2005 season but also marks a new beginning, as the company will christen its Nye Street Theatre. The theater has remodeled the building behind and above Dissmore's and will now perform its smaller productions in the theater that seats approximately 100 patrons.

The play details the story of a governess with a mysterious past who takes charge of an unsettled household of an upper-class English family in the early 1950s. Deborah Kerr and Hailey Mills starred in the 1964 movie.

Supergrass throws back to the '90s with new album 'Supergrass is 10'

By Rylli Hennessey
Argonaut

Supergrass's new album, "Supergrass is 10," will make college listeners nostalgic for their younger years.

This album must have been made for people who went to junior high and high school in the '90s. The best of Supergrass from 1994 to 2004, it has some songs people might remember, but mostly songs with a familiar sound. Songs such as "Caught by the Fuzz" are full of teen angst. In fact, the album sounds like it should be one continuous soundtrack for a teen movie.

The song "Alright" was on the soundtrack to every '90s girl's favorite movie, "Clueless." It also appeared in a few other movies at the time.

Who can resist lyrics like, "We wake up/We go out/Smoke a fag/Put it out/See our friends/See the sights/Feel alright." "Alright" is probably the most familiar song on the album, but just because "Supergrass is 10" isn't filled with big hits doesn't mean it's not good.

Supergrass sounds a bit like Smashing Pumpkins and Radiohead at times, and its biggest flaw is that it doesn't have a distinct enough sound to separate it from other bands who were in their prime in the mid-'90s.

The sound is kind of alternative, but has enough of a European pop sound that the average listener would not be put off.

"Supergrass is 10" is a fun album. It's the kind of rock music people sing to in their cars and rock out to while they're cleaning. It might even inspire some listeners to buy another Supergrass album or two, or maybe just remind people of how much they miss their tape of the "Clueless" soundtrack.

David Duchovny is ready for another 'X-Files' movie, feels nostalgia for show

By Daniel Fienberg
Zap2it.com

LOS ANGELES — As tempting as it might be to try, it's nearly impossible to talk to David Duchovny about his creative endeavors without steering the conversation, unavoidably, to "The X-Files" and the potential for a second feature film.

Unfortunately, Duchovny has no new information beyond confirming, as he's done several times previously, that he and co-star Gillian Anderson are ready to return whenever the situation allows.

"I guess we're just in an indefinite holding pattern," Duchovny admits. "It's about Chris Carter and Fox coming to terms. Gillian and I are signed on. We're ready to go. Chris and Fox are slugging it out."

The first "X-Files" movie, which hit theaters in the summer of 1998, made around $84 million at the domestic box office and exceeded that figure internationally.

"I feel nostalgia for the show in a way," says Duchovny. "I'd always wanted it to be a movie franchise. I never thought that when I felt the show ending or when I wanted to leave the show that it was the end of the show. I always thought that it was a natural for the screen. I'm happy to go back and continue it that way."

While Duchovny has heard vague rumblings about the negotiations between Fox and Carter, he isn't aware of any potential scripts, much less story arcs for the film.

Up next for Duchovny is a lead role in the dark comedy "The TV Set," playing a television producer who struggles to get a pilot on air.

"I had a wonderful time and I think it's going to be great," he says. "I think Jake Kasdan is a really talented director and a really smart guy. Sigourney Weaver was great. Judy Greer's fantastic. I had a great time working with all the actors. It's one of the best experiences I've had as an actor anywhere, so I'm hoping that shows in the performance."

Electronic-oriented clothes are latest for high-tech gadget gurus

By Abigail Leichman
The Record

HACKENSACK, N.J. — We ordinary mortals have only two hands. And how many items, really, can we throw in a bag or clip to a belt?

That's why you'll be seeing more and more clothes and accessories designed by entrepreneurs who know we need better hands-free ways to carry, locate and use our electronic gear.

Here are a few of the latest examples:

The Idaho-based Scottevest (SeV) trademarked the term "technology enabled clothing" for garments that allow you to store — and even network and recharge — lots of wired and wireless devices while staying neat and fashionable (no pocket protectors here).

Version 4.0 is the name of its newest line of lounge pants, cargo pants, microfleece pullovers, hoodies, shorts and baseball caps with hidden storage for all the electronics we tote around, available at scottevest.com.

The Tactical VC Jacket ($310), for example, has 40 ergonomically designed pockets and compartments hooked up to a patented personal area network (PAN), which allows you to channel wires through the jacket's lining to connect various devices.

Plus, you can adjust the volume of any device inside the jacket by touching integrated controls on its exterior. The controls are made of flexible, washable fabric switches.

Less high-tech but still useful for gadget toters is the Delapod, Delaware Designs' bag with a secure iPod pouch on the outside, facing the wearer's body.

The zippered, double-lined pouch has a translucent window so you can use the iPod's click wheel without taking it out. On either side are small holes through which you pull your headphone wires.

Check out four styles at delapod.net, shop.com, or powermax.com. Each can accommodate the iPod mini, iPod or iPod photo.

'Corpse Bride,' 'Wallace & Gromit' makers feeling motion sickness

By Bruce Newman
Knight Ridder Newspapers

It turns out it's a small world after all.

Just how small will become apparent on Friday, when "Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit" joins "Tim Burton's Corpse Bride" in flooding thousands of American movie screens with animated figures that stand just a foot tall. Fourteen inches tops, and that's counting monster bunny rabbits.

The men who created these two small worlds — Burton and Aardman Animation Studios' Nick Park — did not set out to stand them side by side. And yet the only two feature-length pictures made with stop-motion animation since Aardman's 2000 hit "Chicken Run" will have arrived in theaters just two weeks apart in most cities.

"It's a bit of a shame," says Helena Bonham Carter, who does the voices for the leading ladies in both movies (we told you it's a small world). "They're both beautiful works of art, and they're so different. And suddenly there are two of them at the same time."

Bonham Carter is the voice of a daffy vegetable-loving aristocrat in "Curse of the Were-Rabbit" and plays the Corpse Bride for Burton, with whom she also is involved romantically (in an itty-bitty, teeny-weeny world).

Burton worries that mysterious "outside forces" will "pit the two stop-motion animated films against each other," although if he's referring to the press, it would first have to prove itself capable of discerning that events occurring 14 days apart constitute a trend.

Park describes the movies' simultaneous phantasms as "a very odd coincidence," which sounds like the title of a Wallace & Gromit short. Park had already begun production on "Curse of the Were-Rabbit" — his first full-length Wallace & Gromit picture, following the shorts "A Grand Day Out," "The Wrong Trousers" and "A Close Shave" — when Bonham Carter told him that her boyfriend was also beginning his follow-up to the 1993 stop-motion hit, "Tim Burton's The Nightmare Before Christmas."

Stop-motion animation is undoubtedly the most labor-intensive form of filmmaking ever invented. Figures are carefully positioned to correspond with a fragment of dialogue, photographed, then moved a fraction of an inch and shot again. The process is repeated over and over until the pictures can be stripped together to produce movement, as Thomas Edison did with his kinetoscopes in the 19th century. A week of production often produces no more than a minute of usable footage.

Stop-motion animation has advanced remarkably little since its heyday, when Ray Harryhausen was creating groundbreaking visual effects for pictures such as "Mighty Joe Young" (1949) and "Jason and the Argonauts" (1963). That's one of the things both Burton and Park love about it. "There's something very primal about the medium, something very textural and dimensional about it," Burton says. "It's different from a computer that way. It's such an old-fashioned technique that, with this story, the medium and the story seemed to match."

With computer animation now firmly entrenched in Hollywood because of such Pixar hits as "Toy Story" and "Finding Nemo," using clay figures and puppets to enact full-length movies seems almost willfully archaic.

"I think computer animation is very valid," Burton says. "But in Hollywood, they think drawn animation doesn't work anymore, computers are the way. They forget that the reason computers are the way is that Pixar makes good movies. So everybody tries to copy Pixar. They're relying too much on the technology, and not enough on the artists. The fact that Disney closed down its cel animation division is frightening to me. Someday soon, somebody will come along and do a drawn-animated film, and it'll be beautiful and connect with people, and they'll all go, 'Oh, we've got to do THAT!' It's ridiculous."

As Aardman's collaboration with DreamWorks Animation has grown since, "Chicken Run," Park has slowly increased the number of computer-generated effects in his films. (Just as Burton had an on-set co-director for "Corpse" in Mike Johnson, Park's co-director is Steve Box.)

"It's great to be able to fall back on computer technology, especially for things that are totally impractical to do in stop-frame," Park says.

Because of Lady Tottington's desire to humanely eradicate rabbits from her vegetable patch, there's a scene in "Curse of the Were-Rabbit" in which Wallace sucks quite a few bunnies into a contraption dubbed the Bun-Vac. The shot was achieved digitally, but not until the rabbits had been reproduced from clay models, breeding like, well, rabbits.

"We actually provided a clay bunny, and he was scanned into a computer, fingerprints and all," Park says. "And then he was cloned, many times so they could show them all floating around inside the glass chamber in slow motion."

It's a small, exceedingly, STRANGE world.

Soccer prepares for WAC play

By Alisa Hart
Argonaut

The University of Idaho women's soccer team will begin conference play today with a 2-9 record after dropping its seventh consecutive game in a 1-0 loss to Eastern Washington on Sunday.

Eagle Jennie Summers scored the only goal of the game 54 seconds into play. Aside from the first-minute breakdown, the Vandals played a solid game. Idaho outshot Eastern 18-10, but couldn't convert on any of the attempts. Idaho goalkeeper Lindsay Smith snatched two saves, pushing her to 265 career saves and setting a new school record.

"We didn't come out ready to win the first half," Idaho forward Jenny Springer said. "The urgency we played with the second half is what we have to play with the whole game."

Although coach Pete Showler isn't happy with the team's losing record, he looks at it as a learning curve. He attributes part of the team's ongoing struggle to lack of confidence.

"Many of these girls have had three losing seasons. Mentally, some of the girls go into the game thinking what do we do not to lose, rather than the mentality I try to instill in them of what do we need to do to win," he said. "It's 90 percent mental with this team right now."

The team is now focusing on the next phase of the season. The players will travel to Hawaii today and San Jose State on Sunday, going into the weekend with the intention to win.

"We can win games and we will win games," Showler said. "I have every belief that we will. They have to go out and prove my belief in them."

Neither of the Vandals' next two opponents are having strong seasons. Hawai'i (3-6-2) is coming off a two-game losing streak and San Jose State (0-9-2) has yet to win a game this season.

Idaho's meeting with Hawai'i today will be the second for the teams. Their first meeting in 2001 ended in a 1-0 loss for the Idaho.

Offensively, the Warriors could give the Vandals quite a challenge. Hawai'i has one of the best forwards in the country, Natasha Kai. As a junior last year, Kai led the team in scoring for the third consecutive season with 29 points and scored a team-high 12 goals.

Smith optimistic about future

By Keanan Lamb
Argonaut

D.J. Smith's got everything a college football receiver could want: Electric feet, hands glue companies would love to endorse and a cocky swagger that says, "You can't cover me," on any down in any situation.

In private, he's happily married to recording artist/actress Solange Knowles, and the couple has a son who is nearly a year old.

Smith remains humble, but the junior transfer from L.A. Pierce College in southern California hungers for more than just the attention.

"I feel like we can go out and win the last six games, and get to a bowl game," Smith says. "I want to come back my senior year and do it all over again on an even bigger level."

Personal goals? Team wins. Defining success? Team wins. Goals for the team?

"All-out effort; mistake-free football is something I think we can strive for," Smith says. "Which will get us those wins."

Wins are the one number that drives Smith. At the season's halfway point, he looks back and is disappointed with what could have been.

"I wouldn't say average, because we are a good club," Smith says. "I'd call it rocky."

The Houston, Texas, native spent two years at L.A. Pierce, hoping to grab the attention of Pac-10 scouts and recruiters. When it came time to make a decision on transferring, Smith was smitten by the Idaho coaches, and vice-versa. "I really liked the coaching staff here," Smith says of his decision to transfer. "They told me I'd get a chance to play a big part in the offense and I have."

"He is a very talented athlete," says Chad Brown, recruiting coordinator and Smith's position coach. "He has gifted ball skills and is a natural, not to mention an excellent personality."

Brown adds that Idaho was the beneficiary of an unusual recruiting year by the Pac-10.

"When it comes to JC players, schools will go after need positions they have to fill immediately," Brown says. "We were fortunate that we had a need at his position and other teams that could have gone after him didn't."

After living in the fourth and largest metropolitan areas in the country, Smith is transitioning to the bustling metropolis of Moscow.

"I'm here to do two things: get an education and play football," Smith says. "Those consume a significant amount of my day, and without them I'd probably lose my mind."

The line between education and football often blurs, as Brown feels some responsibility for Smith.

"Daniel has all the qualities to be a great leader for our program," Brown says. "It's our job as a coaching staff to help him."

Smith didn't play in the Vandal's one win of the season over Utah State last weekend, due to a concussion sustained in the game against Hawai'i. However, he plans to enjoy more wins the rest of this season and his senior year before curtailing his experience into an NFL career.

"It's every kid's dream to make it that far," Smith says. "If I play the way I have been and play the way I know I can, then I think I can make it."

Smith is no different from most college football players when it comes to his professional aspirations. On the other hand, he may have something most players don't.

A real shot.

Notes: Senior linebacker Mike Anderson was named the Xbox Live Western Athletic Conference

Defensive Player of the Week after his efforts in Idaho's victory over Utah State last weekend. He had seven tackles and an interception that he returned for a TD to put the game out of reach of the Aggies. ... Also nominated for WAC Player of the Week honors were quarterback Steve Wichman, and kicker/punter Mike Barrow. Wichman completed

20 of 25 passes for 238 yards and a touchdown. Barrow averaged 47.5 yards per punt, made both his field goal attempts, including a 46-yarder, and converted on all three PATs. ... Heading into Saturday's game against Nevada, the Vandals are seeking their first back-to-back wins since the last two games of the 2003 season. The Vandals did not win consecutive games in 2001 or 2002. ... In the all-time series against Nevada, Idaho has a 9-13 record, but won the last meeting 42-33 in 1999. ... Several players have recently moved to different positions. ## Vandal volleyball takes first home win

By Mackenzie Stone
Argonaut

The University of Idaho volleyball team pulled a four-game win over Gonzaga University for its first home win of the season.

After two home losses last week, the Vandals won

Tuesday night to advance their all-time record to 38-11 against the Bulldogs.

"It feels late but good," junior Saxony Brown said. "It's good to get one under our belt. I think we needed that win."

The game scores were 30-18, 25-30, 30-25 and 30-27, as the Vandals lost the second game.

"It's a win. It wasn't pretty, but at this point we have to keep trying to get better as a team," coach Debbie Buchanan said. "Our team still isn't playing consistent enough, but we're lucky that we did some things and we got a win."

The Vandals led throughout the first game, letting the Bulldogs get close but never catch up. The Vandals stole the opening serve and ran the scoreboard at a steady pace until 22-11, where they sat comfortably with a 10-point lead for the rest of the game. It ended with a kill by freshman Haley Larsen, who recorded five kills and no errors.

"It was a little rough at parts, but we showed the fight in us and played hard to win."

Kati Tikker
Senior

"We've gotten across a hurdle because we focused on what we do well at," Meghan Brown said. "It wasn't pretty but it was a win."

Idaho out-hit Gonzaga 414 to .065 and recorded 16 kills to seven and was able to find the holes in Gonzaga's court to score many of its points. Still, they were unable to record any blocks.

"We dug okay but we still aren't blocking enough balls," Buchanan said. "It's not that we aren't physical enough or making the moves out there, we just have more of an intent to block some balls."

The Vandals out-dug the Bulldogs 14-9 in the first game, but Gonzaga came back in the second game and out-dug Idaho 12-10.

"They didn't play well in game one and we knew they would be better in game two, but we didn't react to it," Saxony Brown said.

Although it was the Vandals' one loss to Gonzaga, senior Meghan Brown recorded her highest hitting percentage of the night at .625 and three kills. Larsen and senior Kati Tikker also recorded three kills in the second game.

"We won the first game pretty easy and Gonzaga played better," Buchanan said. "I think we thought we were going to roll through another game instead of competing a little bit."

The Vandals came back in game three, but the Bulldogs weren't ready to hand it to them. The teams battled, but the Vandals were able to keep an edge on Gonzaga. Idaho recorded 18 kills, led by junior Erin Curtis at 4 kills, to the Bulldogs' 15 kills.

Throughout much of game four, there was no more than a two-point lead by either team. Idaho led the beginning of the match until 15-15, when

Melissa Davlin/Argonaut

Gonzaga pulled ahead. The Bulldogs tied it up four times before leading the scoreboard to 21-20, but their lead was short-lived as Idaho junior Amanda Bowman slammed the ball into Gonzaga's court to even the score 21-21. From there, Idaho dominated the court and finished the game at 30-27 with a kill by Curtis. "It was a little rough at parts, but we showed the fight in us and played hard to win the fourth game," Tikker said.

The Vandals will be back on the road to Boise State (4-7 overall, 0-4 WAC) for their next conference game at 1 p.m. Saturday.

"I haven't seen their tape yet, so I'm not sure what we need to do to defend them," Buchanan said. "From our side of things we have to continue to make all areas better than we are right now. I don't think we have one area that is so great right now so we have to continue to be an all-around team."

Sophomore Brittney Beitel passes the ball during practice Wednesday afternoon at Guy Wicks Field.

Hawai'i also has won its last seven WAC home matches dating back to the 2003 season, and 13 of 14 dating back to 2001.

Idaho's biggest challenge will be playing on the road. Hawai'i attracts more than 1,000 fans every game, giving the home team a perceived advantage.

"Being the first weekend on the road, it's hugely important that we do well for our confidence," Showler said. "Our aim is to play consistently for four halves and score some goals. A lot of focus will be on the offense and to continue doing well defensively."

Idaho will then play San Jose State on Sunday. The teams' only previous meeting was in 2002 when the game ended in a 1-1 tie.

Showler doesn't intend to make any major adjustments for the rest of the season. Although the record may not reflect it, Showler feels the team is doing well and just needs to turn its hard work into positive results.

"We're in a trough right now and the only way to go is up."

Seven conference games remain until the WAC tournament Nov. 3-5.

Peterson hopes to return Sooner than later

By Gerald Tang
Daily Northwestern
(Northwestern U.)

EVANSTON, Ill. — Adrian Peterson sat out Oklahoma's practice on Monday to nurse his ailing right ankle. Coach Bob Stoops said he hopes the sophomore running back will be able to play Saturday against No. 2 Texas.

Peterson aggravated the injury in the second quarter of the Sooners' 43-21 win against Kansas State on Saturday. He wore a boot at Monday's practice and was not allowed to speak to reporters.

"It's better than it was (Sunday). It's improved," Stoops said. "They're probably going to take that boot off (Tuesday). He'll probably be ready to go, hopefully by Wednesday."

Peterson left two other games with foot injuries this season, but he returned to finish the game both times. Stoops has said the injury was similar to the other ones, and Peterson could have played in the second half if the Sooners weren't ahead 26-0.

Last season's Heisman runner-up, Peterson rushed for 225 yards in Oklahoma's 12-0 win over Texas last year. Longhorns coach Mack Brown said he expected Peterson — a Texas native — to be ready for the Red River Shootout.

Skidmore holds onto second in golf tournament

Renee Skidmore continued her first-class play at the annual Heather Farr Memorial Invitational hosted by the University of Colorado at the Omni Interlocken Resort in Broomfield, Colo. with a second-place finish.

Skidmore's steady play shows in three successive rounds of even-par 72 over the 6,236-yard course. Her 54-hole total of 216 was just one stroke off the winning pace of Denver's Emily Hoepfer, who had a closing round 68 for her total 215.

"That's a pretty awesome start to her sophomore season," UI coach Brad Rickel said of Skidmore, whose effort helped the Vandals to a sixth-place team finish. "Everybody contributed. Everybody had good rounds."

Rickel, however, said he would like to see more consistency throughout the ranks from round-to-round.

"They had all good rounds but not back to back to back," he said. "If we want to be an elite team, we have to step up; we have to have a second or third person step up with three good rounds."

Denver won the two-day event with an 884. Fresno State was second at 897, San Jose State was third at 903, New Mexico State was fourth at 904, Washington State was fifth at 905 and the Vandals were at 907. There were 18 teams in the field.

Boot camps make run on physical fitness

By Gwen Fowler
Knight Ridder Newspapers

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. — "Hut-Hup-three-four!" Guy Osborne calls out cadence, and the women push themselves through yet another set of arm exercises — flies with dumbbells, presses with a body bar, curls with dumbbells.

It's not even daylight, not even 6 a.m., and the three women already are soaked with sweat. Before they head out for a mile run around a lake, they stop at a bench where they do a set of dips, using their upper arms to lift and lower their bodies.

For a Friday session, the group of four or five women meet Osborne at a high school football stadium so they can incorporate eight to 10 runs up the stadium steps into their routine.

Welcome to boot camp, a program Osborne leads to jump-start a person's fitness level.

"It's designed to get a person ready to go out on their own on some type of physical-fitness regiment," Osborne said. "The most important thing is that they build self-confidence. They get to be proud of who they are."

Jennifer Spencer of Strong Body, Strong Mind, also has been conducting boot camps in different locations for the past five years.

This summer, 18 to 20 people met twice a week for a 90-minute class.

"It's really like any exercise class, except that it is a little more extreme outside, having to deal with the elements. It might be a 95-degree day and you're doing push-ups on the ground. Basically, there's no girly stuff." After a warm-up, the class does cardiovascular exercises and weight lifting. They'll do running drills, jump rope work, lunges or squats with barbells.

The participants come at different fitness levels, Spencer said, so she has to modify the program for each individual.

Over the past five years, Osborne, the Pawleys Island police chief, has led seven boot camps, he estimates.

His eighth recently began with a group of about 15 in the Litchfield Beach/Pawleys Island area.

He begins each boot camp by doing a physical-fitness assessment of each participant. In addition to weighing them and taking body measurements, Osborne has them perform sit-ups and push-ups and times how long it takes them to do a certain amount of laps on a track.

"The goal of most people initially is to lose some weight," he said. "They come in a little overweight, so I try to stress running and aerobics." Osborne went to the Cooper Institute in Dallas to be certified as a personal trainer, and he was impressed with the concept of getting a full-body workout in an hour to an hour and 15 minutes.

"A lot of people just don't have time to spend a lot of time in a gym," he said.

He says his program emphasizes cardiovascular fitness as well as weight training to tone up muscles.

Boot camps usually last four weeks, but he has done a couple of advanced camps, where the group works out with him for another four weeks.

That is the case with the group of women who worked out with him this summer. One of the participants, Gina Olivetti, has known Osborne for a long time, and she got a group of friends together who wanted to get in shape.

When the group first began, Osborne said, they had trouble completing a quarter-mile run.

Six weeks later they all finished a four-mile run.

Cathy Elliman said the group looked like little ducklings on their first runs.

"When we first started, he'd be running and we'd all be behind him, trying to keep up," she said.

Olivetti, the mother of three, has lost weight and inches, and gained strength.

She got what she needed out of the program: "I needed a kick in the butt," she said.

Boot camp is intensive, Osborne said.

"We start slow, and we build up as weeks pass by," he said. "It whips you into shape. Most of these people will be in the best shapes of their lives when they get through," Osborne said.

Aggie safety likes playing football on, off field

By Andrea Edmunds
The Utah Statesman (Utah State U.)

LOGAN, Utah — When Utah State football player Terrance Washington was in elementary school, he realized something that would affect the rest of his life — at least until college.

He liked to hit people.

When the Ogden, Utah, native was in fourth grade, he said he started playing flag football, but it didn't really do it for him.

"I actually started playing flag football in fourth grade, but I didn't really like that a whole lot," said Washington, a safety for the Aggies. "You didn't get to hit anybody."

So in fifth grade, Washington followed in his dad's footsteps and put pads and a helmet on.

Washington's dad, Darryl, played football and basketball at Fort Lewis College. Growing up, Washington said he was always around sports. So it seemed pretty natural when he wanted to follow in his dad's footsteps and play football.

It also seems logical that he would want to play for the same reasons.

"He said he liked (football) because he liked to hit people," Washington said. "He said if you're on the street and you come up and hit somebody, you'll get thrown in jail for it. At least on a football field you won't get thrown in jail for it and people praise you for hitting somebody real hard."

Off the field, Washington said his dad has been a huge influence in other aspects of his life. Washington said his dad has taught him to have integrity and that "nobody can ever take your integrity from you," he said.

Despite wanting him to wait until he got bigger before he played football, Washington said his dad has been behind his football career from the beginning.

"Sports-wise, he could teach you anything. He knows a lot about that kind of stuff," Washington said.

Although he loves playing football, it hasn't been all fun and games for Washington — especially last season.

He came into the season with high hopes and expectations. In 2003, his freshman year, Washington was named a second-team Freshman All-American by the College Football News and was ranked among the top 10 freshmen in the country in tackles per game. These came on top of other conference honors and being named Utah State's outstanding freshman.

But after playing only two games in 2004, he went down with a season-ending injury.

"In the second game, an offensive lineman came out to block me," he said. "While he was blocking me, my foot got caught in the turf and my knee just buckled underneath me and tore some ligaments and cartilage. It was hard."

Not only was Washington out for the rest of the season, he missed the 2005 spring training. Although it was hard enough to watch the game from the sidelines for the season, it was made even harder because it was something he had seen before.

"It was the same thing that happened to me in high school so I kind of knew (what it would be like)," he said. "But it was harder this time."

While a senior at Ben Lomond High School, Washington went down with the same injury.

Because of his injury, Washington wasn't recruited by very many schools. After the University of Utah dropped out, Washington said Utah State was really the only school offering him a scholarship.

Fellow Ben Lomond alumni Emmitt White was playing at Utah State during Washington's senior year. White, who still holds the NCAA record for all-purpose yards, talked to the USU coaches and really pushed recruiting Washington.

Something the Aggies didn't regret.

Although Washington was hoping to get a football scholarship at an out-of-state college, he said he has liked Utah State and staying closer to his family.

"My favorite memory is probably the first time being out on the football field with my teammates," Washington said. "Our first game was against Utah. Finally being out on a football field competing at a (Division I) level. That was one of my main goals was to play D-I football or some D-I sport."

During games, Washington anchors the defense. Something, he says, he does a "decent" job at. But his coaches say differently.

"Terrance is a great kid," said Jeff Copp, safeties and kickoff team coach. "He is a quiet leader and does a nice job of getting our defense set. He is a tremendously smart football player and a very heady player."

Before the play starts, Washington said he is constantly talking to himself and thinking of what plays the opposition likes to run out of certain formations.

"I have to talk to myself to make sure I know what I'm doing," he said. "A lot of guys probably do it, they need to. There's a lot of things that you need to remember."

But once the play starts, Washington said he is focused on the play.

Copp said Washington is one of the hardest workers he has.

"No matter what's going on, he's working," Copp said.

Even when he's not practicing or playing on the field, Washington is still playing football in his free time — if playing the video games "NCAA" or "Madden" football counts as "playing" football.

In the spring, Washington will graduate from Utah State with a degree in finance. After that, he doesn't know what will happen.

"I used to (want to play football)," he said, "but I don't think I've got the ability to do that anymore."

"I don't think I really want to do that anymore. I think I'm almost done with playing football, I guess, because of my injuries and other things that come up."

WSU doing the defensive shuffle

By Marcus Potts
Daily Evergreen
(Washington State U.)

PULLMAN — The Washington State football team lost more than a game this past Saturday.

Middle linebacker Will Derting, a team captain and All-America candidate, will miss the next two to four weeks after suffering an MCL strain in his left knee against Oregon State.

Now the team is working on a replacement strategy until Derting can return.

"As a football player, (Derting is) unbelievable," linebackers coach Leon Burnnett said. "Plus, he's the leadership on the field. That's what scares me as much as his playing ability right now, to make sure somebody steps up and is able to do that."

That leadership weight falls on the remaining healthy starters, Scott Davis and Steve Dildine.

"I think we'll be all right. We've got good backups," Davis said. "I've just gotta step my role up a little bit more and make a few more plays, and so does Dildine."

Dildine and Davis rank second and fourth respectively in total tackles for the Cougars this season. Together they will be in charge of marshalling Derting's replacement, most likely true freshman Greg Trent.

Burnnett said fellow true freshman Jason Stripling and junior Chris Baltzer will also get looks, and said that Stripling and Trent will see the field together in the team's new 3-4 scheme.

"They're gonna make mistakes, but everybody makes mistakes," Burnnett said. "People around them step up and are able to cover up if they do make mistakes."

Along with another true freshman, outside backer Cory Evans, Stripling and Trent have been lauded since fall camp opened in August. The trio have seen the field extensively this season, substituting for starters and getting quality minutes late in games against Nevada and Grambling State when WSU held decisive leads.

"All of them are good right now, they're all stepping up during practice," Davis said. Davis said extended periods without Derting during the off-season will be a benefit in the transition to playing without him this Saturday. Derting missed the majority of spring action earlier this year while recovering from a wrist injury. He also missed a lot of time during fall training camp with a hamstring injury.

"It's always hard adding someone new," Davis said, "but that's what we have practice for. I think we'll be all right during the game as long as we just keep communicating."

Aside from Derting, WSU could also be without record-setting wide receiver Jason Hill, who suffered a left quadricep injury Saturday, and starting senior cornerback Alex Teems, who suffered an AC sprain in his left shoulder against the Beavers.

The prognosis on Hill, who head coach Bill Doba said is probable for Saturday's game against Stanford, is better than Teems, who Doba said is questionable.

If Teems can't go, Don Turner will start opposite Wally Dada, who is also being limited this week due to a knee injury but is expected to play. Trandon Harvey and Greg Prator will replace Hill if the receiver can't go.

Doba said both Turner and Harvey had their best Cougar games in replacing Derting and Hill against the Beavers Saturday. Turner had an interception, while Harvey caught four balls for 92 yards.

"You can look at it a couple of ways," Doba said of the sudden rash of injuries. "Now you're challenged and you can either (say), 'Woe is me' and 'There's no way,' or you can have somebody step up and get it done."

Notes: WSU is currently first in the Pac-10 in run defense, giving up 84 yards per game. The Cougars are also second in scoring offense and total defense in the conference and rank fifth in the nation in total offense. ... The 638 total yards WSU put on the OSU defense was the best showing since the 2001 season when the Cougars racked up 653 yards against Montana State. ... Quarterback Alex Brink set a single-game WSU passing record against the Beavers with 531 yards through the air. That's the fourth highest passing total in Pac-10 history.

"You're challenged and you can either (say), 'Woe is me'... or you can have somebody step up and get it done."

Hockey is back, but Flyers struggle in opener

By Phil Sheridan
Knight Ridder Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA — At 7:04 on Wednesday night, a powerful chant, 17 months in the making, filled the Wachovia Center.

Let's go, Flyers. Let's go, Flyers.

At 9:35 p.m. a halfhearted chant, 30 years in the making, failed to pick up momentum in the same building.

"Let's go, Flyers. Let's go..."

The boos drowned out the hopeful minority, proving that flat-screen TVs, trips to Florida and orange T-shirts will not buy a full game's worth of patience from Philadelphia sports fans.

The Flyers' heralded return to action turned into one of Those Nights — a couple of bad goals allowed, a strangely tepid power play. Yes, it was as if the NHL lockout had never happened.

Actually, watching the Flyers' power play, it was as if the NHL lockout had never ended. They had a bunch of them, too. The visiting New York Rangers were whistled for 10 penalties, more than twice the Flyers' four. There were stretches of the second period in which the only time the Flyers didn't have a man advantage was when they had a two-man advantage.

But it was all good. Hockey was back. The Flyers built a nice little 3-1 lead on two lovely assists by the great Peter Forsberg and a monstrous Sidney-Who? play by Flyers rookie center Mike Richards.

Then it was all bad. The little lead should have been a bigger lead, what with all the power plays. The Rangers had four power plays and three power-play goals. That's going to be the name of the game in the brave new NHL.

The Flyers were 1 for 10. That was bad before. With all the new rules and gizmos? Still bad.

"The chances we missed in the second period, where we could have put the game out of reach, really came back to haunt us," Flyers coach Ken Hitchcock said. "With all the five-on-threes, we could have put it away. We missed six, seven no-brainers."

It was the great Jaromir Jagr who pooped the Flyers' party. Jagr set up one goal with a hustle play, and then scored the tying and go-ahead goals himself.

These were not the no-brainers that Hitchcock was talking about. These were, well, brainers. Jagr beat Robert Esche on a pair of what would have been considered pretty soft goals in the bad old days when men made $10 million a season to execute the neutral-zone trap.

Esche conceded as much. A startup guy as always, he was waiting when the media horde was allowed in the locker room.

(And what a horde it was, swollen by the novelty of a post-lockout season opener and what looked like half of Sweden.)

Jagr's first goal was a 20-footer from Esche's left. It was just the two of them, no one in between, and Jagr just blasted it in.

"The first one, I saw," Esche said. "It powered in off my blocker."

Five hockey minutes later, with Forsberg in the penalty box for tripping, Jagr again got the puck along the boards to Esche's left. This time, he wheeled his way toward the blue line and looped back around.

"Jagr was at the top of the circle on whatever goal it was — the fourth, or the 10th, or whatever it was," Esche said. "I couldn't see the puck."

This is how it is going to be this season. The Flyers scored a couple of goals that wouldn't have been likely under the old rules. Mike Knuble was in the slot for what literally felt like a New York minute before one-timing Forsberg's soft pass past Kevin Weekes.

Then there was the goal by Richards, who is going to be very, very popular with Flyers fans. Imagine Chase Utley on skates and you get the idea.

Richards came off the bench around the Rangers' blue line, and took a two-line pass from Eric Desjardins. In May, when Richards was helping the Phantoms win the Calder Cup, that was offside. Wednesday night, it was an assist, thanks to a stunning play in which Richards kept his body between the puck and defenseman Fedor Tyutin as he closed on Weekes.

For Esche, the big difference was the mass of bodies in front of him. His defenses were unable to clear them out in the old style.

"I'm not complaining," Esche said. "It's a much different league. You just can't see the pucks anymore. But the goalie's got to stop the puck. That's my job."

He will adjust. And Forsberg, who faded after playing so little in the pre-season, will make plenty of great plays. With the sheer offensive talent on this team, the Flyers' power play can't be this bad for long.

This was a bad loss, but there will be cheering and chanting for this team again. Best of all, it won't take 17 months to hear it.

Career Services offers something for everyone, from freshman to graduate students

If you are entering college not knowing what major to choose or how to channel your educational interests with career opportunities, you are not alone. We are here to help.

Wsu Career services

■ Meet one-on-one with a career counselor who can help you establish academic goals and career direction.

■ Visit our Resource & Technology Center to assess your interest, skills and values and learn about occupational information by using SIGI, a self-interactive assessment tool. The Resource & Technology Center is also a great place to browse and get ideas about careers and get free handouts and magazines in career related issues.

■ Take a U-100 or U-300-level course to assist in self-assessment, career planning, and job search strategies.

Once you are on the right track applying your interests to academic goals, Career Services provides more tools to help you determine your future:

■ Attend a career development workshop conducted by Career Services or an informational session sponsored by an employer.

■ Find out how an internship can enhance your academic experience as well as help you make a great impression in an interview.

■ Visit our Resource and Technology Center and get information about job search strategies, occupational statistics, potential employers, graduate school, resume writing, interviewing, and what to wear for an interview.

■ Explore the work world by conducting an informational interview, shadowing a professional in a career of interest, and touring companies at the Career Quest.

■ Attend the spring and fall Career Expos sponsored by WSU Career Services and the University of Idaho.

At the Career Expos you will find employers and graduate schools from all over the country offering careers, summer jobs, internships and advanced educational opportunities in every academic discipline. Attend Career Expo associated events such as mock interviews, Career Services' Open House, and Employer Workshops to help you acquire new skills and give you an advantage in the job hiring process.

Finally, whether you are an underclassman or focusing on a career, register with Career Services. It is online, easy, and a must-do if you want to interview with any of the more than 200 employers who conduct on-campus interviews each year. To register go to www.careers.wsu.edu and select the "login/register" link.

Our services are free to students, our staff is knowledgeable and friendly, and our website is a wealth of information. Don't miss out!! Call the office at (509) 335-2546 to find out how we can help you, or visit our website www.careers.wsu.edu to learn about upcoming events and services.

Career Services welcomes our employer partners and wishes all students success. Have a Great Expo!

Students assist in Career Services

Career Development Specialists are undergraduate students who intern at the Career Services office while gaining specialized professional experience and knowledge within the area of career development. CDS students participate in direct service to students, outreach presentations and workshops, program development, marketing, public relations, and special events.

In preparation for the Career Expo of the Palouse, CDS students assisted extensively with marketing activities by promoting the event during outreach presentations and by distributing various promotional materials. They also assisted and participated in the Career Week, a week of informative workshops to prepare students to get the most out of the Career Expo.

Thank you, CDS students!

Vandals: free rides to and from fall expo!

UI students who wish to attend the Fall Expo on the campus of Washington State University can ride to the event for free and avoid parking hassles. A free shuttle service will run from the south side of the Idaho Commons to the WSU Beasley Coliseum in Pullman. The first vans will leave the UI campus at 8:30 a.m. and will run continuously during Expo hours. The last van will leave the Beasley Coliseum at 3:30 p.m.

The Wheatland Express bus service will also transport students from Moscow to the WSU French Administration building. "Show your Vandal ID card and ride for free!"

Avoid parking hassles, conserve energy and concentrate on making a good impression on employers. Leave your car at home!

UI CAREER AND PROFESSIONAL PLANNING

Career fairs for every season and student

WSU Career Services

Classes have just recently begun and a whole year looms ahead, but it's not too early to think about summer internships or after-graduation jobs!

Through the statewide Washington State University system, a variety of career fairs and events will be occurring throughout the academic year, in different locations. For example, the Partnership in Employment Career Fair 2005 will be held in Spokane in February.

These events provide special opportunities for students to meet with employers and make those oh-so-important connections, which lead to jobs and training placements.

In today's competitive environment, the savvy student can greatly boost career options by preparing for and attending one or more career fairs. It's important to remember that most firms and government offices attending career fairs are recruiting for a wide variety of majors. For example, last year the Department of State was recruiting for more than 36 majors! Some of these majors included Accounting, Architecture, Business, Engineering, Geography, Journalism, Humanities, and Political Science. When attending, be sure to check out all opportunities! There's no fee for attending.

Calendar dates, locations, and additional information for these events is available online at www.careers.wsu.edu -- click on Career Fairs & Events. Don't miss out!

Find your future at WSU's next career fair!

www.abercrombie.com
Abercrombie & Fitch is the most successful specialty retailer in operation today. Our casual, classic, all-American lifestyle brand of clothing is synonymous with quality. The A&F culture is one-of-a-kind. We design, merchandise, market, and live the Abercrombie & Fitch brand. We are our best customer. A&F's brand-powered momentum is fueled by additional lifestyle reinforcement. Every aspect of our stores—the music, the marketing and photos, and overall aesthetic—has made the in-store experience more potent than ever. Our website, abercrombie.com, receives more than 1 million hits per month. Through the web site, e-commerce has expanded the A&F experience beyond our stores, and gives customers access to the brand from anywhere at any time. With the addition of Abercrombie, the lifestyle for kids 7-14, and Hollister Co., a West Coast inspired line of clothing, and the launch of our newest concept, Ruehl, the brand has never been stronger.

Does working for one of the "10 Best Places to Work in the Federal Government" and helping to "Protect the Public and the Environment" sound like something you would like to do?

If so, read on...

The U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) was recently recognized as one of the "Top 10 Best Places to Work in the Federal Government" in 2005, according to the Partnership for Public Service and American University's Institute for the Study of Public Policy Implementation.

The NRC ensures the Nation's Safety and Security by: regulating the civilian use of byproduct, source, and special nuclear materials; issuing regulations for the public health and safety; promoting the common defense and security; and, protecting the environment.

To carry out the various programs and operations that encompass the NRC's mission, we employ some 3,300 people. Historically, the individuals we attract and hire are of the highest caliber. And while our engineering and scientific professionals are diverse — representing various ethnic backgrounds, cultures, educational credentials, and experiences — they all share a keen interest in public service...and in the interplay between science and public policy. As an NRC employee, you will work in a stimulating environment, allowing you to hone your skills, to grow, and to achieve.

We invite you to explore a future at our headquarters near Washington, DC, or at any of our Regional Offices. Begin, quite literally, to make a world of difference.

The NRC offers:

Extensive Training opportunities with a great Benefits package.

How to Apply:

For full details on available positions, visit our Web site at www.nrc.gov/who-we-are/employment.html. You must enter your resume into our web-based system and apply online for a vacancy, referencing Dept. A-2691. To enter your resume into the system, simply prepare it using WordPerfect, Word, or another commonly used program. Then copy and paste your resume into NRCareers. You can have NRCareers notify you automatically, via e-mail, when new vacancies occur. Candidates interested in our Nuclear Safety Professional Development Program, our entry-level program, should apply to announcement no. NSPDP-2005-0007. You should apply soon to receive earliest consideration.

The Washington Society of Certified Public Accountants is the state-wide professional organization for accountants. We are here to promote that accounting profession to students as a career choice and to answer questions about accounting. We aren't the people who hire accountants, but we can point you in the direction of those who do!
