UI alumni honored

Tree dedicated to couple for years of commitment to University of Idaho

Wayne and Ellie Anderson were honored Wednesday between the TLC and Memorial Gym by the Student Alumni Relations Board for their years of commitment and dedication to the University of Idaho.

"We were surprised when we were asked," Wayne Anderson said. "... UI meant a lot to us over the years and we try to give back to UI. This is a nice tribute they bestowed on us. We are proud alums."

Steve Johnson, executive director for the UI Alumni Association, thanked the Andersons for their loyalty, passion and service to UI. Johnson said they dedicated their entire lives to advocacy for the university.

"Their passion is matched by few," he said. "It reaches levels we could call epic."

He said the Andersons are leaders in the community and they recognize the importance of giving back.

Every year, the Alumni Association celebrates its birthday on April 7 by honoring and dedicating a tree to a UI alumnus. It selects a winner from a list of nominees and makes its decision based on active alumni who give back to the university.

This year Wayne and Ellie, both UI alums who have been married since 1953, had a scarlet oak (Quercus coccinea) dedicated to them near the north face of Memorial Gym, along with a dedication plaque.

The Andersons met through their Greek affiliations at UI. Wayne is a Delta Chi and Ellie is a Kappa Alpha Theta.

Wayne spent his student years as both a baseball and football player for the Vandals and graduated in 1953 with a bachelor's degree in education. He came back in 1956 as the intramural sports coordinator. He later moved on to head coach for both the baseball and basketball teams and assistant coach of the football team.

Before retiring in 1994, his final 12 years were spent as the assistant athletic director. Before that he spent nine years

Adderall, other stimulants used as study aids

Editor's Note: This is the second part of a four-part series covering the issues of stress on a college campus. A name has been changed to protect anonymity.

When students accept stress into their schedule, they also accept the need for more time. Students are finding alternate ways to complete tasks, including energy drinks, coffee and even prescription medicine obtained legally and sometimes illegally.

Adderall, like Ritalin, is a prescription that allows people with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder to focus. Students without a prescription have gotten their hands on Adderall to use for recreational purposes or to focus when studying.

Mark Jones*, a University of Idaho junior, said he uses Adderall strictly for academic purposes. He said he has a demanding schedule so he constantly needs to focus.

"I'm pretty strict about my schedule. I micromanage my days down to the naps," Jones said. "Being able to take something that can keep me on that tight schedule ... it's nice."

He said his experiences using Adderall have been positive and allowed him to focus on one task at a time. He said it isn't good for multiple projects that need to be finished, but it does the job. If there is one that he can direct all his attention toward.

Local pharmacist Lisa Morse said the drug, a methylphenidate, increases the concentration of neurotransmitters in the brain to boost focus and memory.

Jones said once he takes the Adderall, his mind doesn't turn off for about six hours. This can make it difficult to go to sleep after taking it, but it gives him the complete focus he is looking for. Morse said sleep is one aspect people have trouble adjusting to on the medicine.

It is also possible for it to increase any anxiety or tension that already exists in a person.

Jones said, though he does not have a prescription he gets the drug through a friend who does, but who chooses not to use it.

"I avoid coffee because it makes me jittery," Jones said. "Adderall gives me a nice calm focus. (I) don't

Borah panel discusses media impact

Dara Barney
Argonaut

The Borah Symposium came to the University of Idaho with a new mission this year: communicating the idea social media is a force that should be utilized.

Numbers were part of the panel discussion that involved a question and answer session titled, "Social Media - Global Impact," which took place at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the UI Student Union Building ballroom.

This year marks 73 years since the first Borah Foundation-sponsored program, which featured an address by then-First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt. It also marks the 63rd consecutive annual Borah Symposium, dating from 1948's event titled, 'The Causes of War and the Conditions for Peace,' Daljit Dhaliwal read from the program flyer, anchor of Worldfocus and the host of Foreign Exchange, a series on international affairs on PBS.

Dhaliwal was the host for the "Global Action Through Social Media" program.

Deborah Frincke, a former UI professor who is now a technology scientist (chief scientist at Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL), had a positive attitude to the collections of social media available to us.

"This is a new social media. It isn't e-mail. It is like you are having a conversation," she said. "The 'thumbs-up' tab is like a tap on the shoulder."

The challenge is to figure out how to benefit as much as possible from social media without giving safety up, she said.

Bryan Semaan, a Ph.D. candidate at the University of California, researches how people who are experiencing war as a part of everyday life adapt in areas such as social practices.

"There is a lot of value to what's being passed around in the social media," he said.

When people are dealing with living in a war, being able to get on the Internet and communicate is a way to stay attached, he said.

Many issues were covered, including what social media can do for the globe as a whole, and if the Internet will replace all communications.

Sheldon Himelfarb, associate vice president of Center of Innovation Media, Conflict & Peacebuilding at the United States Institute for Peace, was also positive about the use of social media.

Beitz, Berge run 'faceless' campaign

Ashley Centers
Argonaut

University of Idaho junior Ryan Beitz is running for ASUI president because he can.

Beitz, an architecture major from Pullman, is running a faceless campaign.

"You will not see my face on any campaign material," he said. "There are three reasons for this: The first is that I believe that no one student can effectively represent the entire student body, so by remaining faceless I make no claim that I can. The second reason is that I'm incredibly ugly and feel that the campaign should not be based on vanity. And the third is that I do not feel the ideas Tim and I have generated are our own, but rather that they exist to serve the student body, not one person."

Junior Tim Berge is running for the vice-presidential position. He also said he is running simply because he can.

Nothing, Beitz said, makes any student qualified to represent the whole student body.

To run for president and vice-president was a decision Beitz and Berge made because they said they didn't feel adequately represented by ASUI. They also said they weren't satisfied that both of them knew very little about what was happening across campus.

"ASUI is an organization that exists simply to represent the student body (that) fails more often than it succeeds," Berge said. "First of all, the majority of the student body does not know what goes on in ASUI and this is not the fault of the student. We have gone in there several times ourselves and have directly asked, 'What is it exactly that ASUI does?' and we have yet to get a straight answer."

Beitz said he may not have an answer to his question, but he believes he knows how to help ASUI become a more efficient organization to better serve the needs of students.

One possible answer Beitz said is reorganization. He said one of the first things he would do as president is restructure the senate to include representatives from each college. Currently, ASUI offers representation based on living groups.

"The College of Art and Architecture, for example, would elect two senators from their college to represent students and the same would go for all colleges," Beitz said. "We feel that this would more fairly and effectively represent students, as people typically form relationships with the other people in their college, as they have a lot of the same classes. Students who share the same major also face the same concerns with their education."

Beitz and Berge said they have other plans as well. Some of these plans may come across as controversial. For example, they said they plan to convert the positions in ASUI from paid positions to volunteer.

"If elected, we would forgo our salaries," Beitz said. "Get rid of the senator's salaries and pay only those people who perform a service for the students in the ASUI office such as the graphic designer. The university, and not ASUI fees, pay professional staff. Therefore we haven't the power to take away their pay, nor would we want to. The purpose of this is to save the students money and to make their ASUI fees go further."

One thing Beitz and Berge have in common with the other pairs of candidates is that they want to help keep student fees low while maintaining a reasonable budget.

"Fees are awful — that is something everyone should be able to get behind," Berge said. "Everyone would like to pay less. Everyone would like to make it out of college with the least amount of debt as possible. No one can be blamed for wanting these things."

Beitz and Berge said they have big plans and changes for UI and its students if they are elected, and they said they know much of it seems outrageous at first, but they believe they've had UI students in mind throughout their paperless, faceless, $37 campaign.

Tyler Macy/Argonaut
Tim Berge, left, and Ryan Beitz, who chose to run a "faceless" campaign, pose just after a non-traditional ASUI Open Forum at Bob's Place Thursday evening. Ryan is running for president of the Associated Students of the University of Idaho, and Tim is running for vice president.

Law professor remembered for 30 years at UI

Kayla Herrmann
Argonaut

For 30 years at the University of Idaho College of Law, Dean Emeritus Sheldon A. Vincenti was known as a man of intelligence, honesty and loyalty.

After a nine-month battle with cancer, Vincenti died March 31. A memorial service for Vincenti will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday in the College of Law courtroom.

Vincenti was born on Sept. 4, 1938, in Ogden, Utah, to Arnold and Mae Vincenti.

According to a biography written by professor and former dean Jack Miller, Vincenti's family and others, Vincenti graduated from Harvard University in 1960 and received his Juris Doctor from Harvard Law School in 1963.

In 1973, Vincenti accepted a faculty job with the UI College of Law, and in 1974 became the college's first associate dean. Vincenti then was appointed and went on to serve as dean of the law school from 1984 to 1995.

"During his deanship, the college made important investments in modern technology, the law library facility and collection and the legal aid clinic," said Don Burnett, dean of the College of Law. "The college's reputation grew, diversity was enhanced, faculty strength was augmented, and curricular offerings increased."

Vincenti retired in 2002, but continued to advise faculty and taught at the law school for many years after his retirement.

Monique Lillard, a professor of law, was a friend and colleague of Vincenti and expressed that Vincenti was a "gentleman" and unfailingly polite.

"Sheldon was a loyal friend," she said. "Nearly every one of us on the faculty at one time or another had been championed by Sheldon. He was not just wise, he was very, very kind. We had all been his admiring students as he had taught, by his example, great lessons in law, in leadership and in honor. We loved him."

Vincenti did his best to keep faculty salaries nationally competitive, and increased the number of women on the faculty from one to five, Lillard said.

Vincenti is survived by his wife Donna, his father Arnold, his son and daughter and several grandchildren.

Donations may be made to the University of Idaho College of Law Sheldon A. Vincenti Law Scholarship fund.

UI will host Navy ROTC annual competition

Ross Bingham
Argonaut

Alica Lustgraff, Navy ROTC student executive officer, will be competing in her fourth Northwest Navy competition this weekend for bragging rights and trophies against four other schools from around the Northwest.

The competition has a long tradition that started in the 1960s, according to Lustgraff. The event will feature military, academic, sports and physical fitness competitions. It is held annually and the location rotates each year, allowing the University of Idaho to host the competition.

"It is a great way for the four units in the Northwest to gain camaraderie and meet each other," Lustgraff said.

The competition is scored on a points system for the events, with individual trophies given out. One university will claim the championship trophy at the end of the competition Saturday. The event most contested and coveted among the ROTC competitors is the drill competition, Lustgraff said.

The UI ROTC began training for the events during the fall semester and will continue right up until the competition.

"The greatest part about the competition is meeting so many great people from all over the Northwest," Lustgraff said.

The funding for the event is dependent on which school hosts it. Every year, the host team arranges the opening and closing ceremonies as well as the booking of the facilities that are for the competition.

"It is typically funded through the unit, but (for) this we got a little bit of university financial support," Lustgraff said.

The unit does stadium cleanups at the Kibbie Dome and at WSU, who also helped pay for the event. The allotment for this year's competition was $7,500, Lustgraff said.

The competition will begin today with the majority of the competition occurring on Saturday.

STRESS

drink energy drinks either. I don't want to load my body with both."

Morse said drugs like Adderall can be dangerous if mixed with other stimulants. She said sometimes the drug can have the opposite effect and send a body into a hyperactive state — this could be as extreme as a heart attack. Another worry is that a minor heart condition could be exposed and dangerous if a stimulant is taken without consulting a doctor. There is also the possibility for physical and psychological addictions to the drug.

Students sometimes walk a wobbly road looking to stay awake for those few extra hours of homework. Where is the line drawn?

Jones said the academic world is highly competitive and he will do whatever he can for an advantage.

"My concern with being here is just that I can learn everything I can and become more skilled in the areas that I need to be," he said. "With Adderall, I can learn better, I can learn faster and I can retain more."

Jones, like other students using Adderall, is using it as a study aid and not for recreational purposes. Although trying to stay awake is not new to the university atmosphere, Adderall is a newer method.

Jones said he doesn't see it as unethical — he just wants to learn better. He looked into the drug's health concerns, but didn't find any negative effects. Jones said he personally has never felt anything wrong with Adderall.

Adderall, like all meth-ylphenidates, is a controlled substance, meaning students have to be diagnosed before they are allowed access to the drug. Federal law prohibits the transfer of methylphenidates to anyone other than whom it was prescribed to — but like everything illegal, it slips through the cracks somehow.

UI dietitian Verna Bergmann said staying awake is part of student lifestyles. She said coffee, energy drinks, and other forms of caffeine or stimulants aren't a large concern until it interferes with a student's diet.

"Caffeine will never be able to replace food," Bergmann said. "If they have an energy drink instead of a meal, they are still going to need that food energy later."

Bergmann said most students are missing balance in their diets — UI Counseling and Testing Center psychologist Sharon Fritz said most students are missing balance in their schedules. Sleep, stress and overall lifestyle are main factors in students' diets. Eating too much or too little or having odd snacking habits is the unhealthy result.

Bergmann said there needs to be stability in a person's diet and schedule. Students often grab a cup of coffee because it is easy, but it won't help for long. Sophomore Caitlin Short spends most of her week grabbing small snacks and drinking coffee to get through her loads of homework. She also likes to sit down with a cup of Celestial Seasonings Tension Tamer tea, to work on homework calmly. She makes it a major point to cook a nice big meal from scratch every week.

"Unfortunately there are times when I'm eating lots of mac and cheese," Short said. "It's always nice to take time to make a big meal and have leftovers."

Many students find taking time to make a good, full meal can be relaxing. When time is spent to make an entire meal it will usually encompass nutritious items, such as vegetables.

"I'm a health freak too," Short said. "So I love cooking everything from scratch and using lots of vegetables and chicken."

Part of what Bergmann does is helps students go through their day and find their unhealthy habits. She looks at their lifestyles and can determine what's missing or what they shouldn't be doing. She said drinking coffee throughout the day only helps at that second.

She said a student who drinks coffee in the morning and skips breakfast will be tired and hungry during the day. Then they might have a larger lunch that in turn makes them tired, forcing them to reach for another cup of coffee. Through the afternoon, they find a lack of focus, so they turn to another cup of coffee that might keep them awake into the night. They won't get a good night's sleep, and they will need an even bigger cup of coffee the next morning.

But as Bergmann said, coffee won't be able to fix tiredness. Eating healthy is at the core of being able to function throughout the day. She said unhealthy habits like being addicted to coffee or energy drinks or using Adderall are part of a "vicious cycle."

"There are tremendous rewards. Students are able to walk out of my office and feel like they are in the driver's seat," Bergmann said. "There are ways out of it. You can get out of those habits."

ASUI SENATE

ASUI Senate Kelby Wilson, ASUI president, returned from Washington, D.C., this week from a convention held for university student body representatives around the nation. Wilson said the convention was informational and gave him a chance to see how the University of Idaho's student government stacks up to other schools around the nation.

"We are pretty much on par from what I learned," he said. "Most other universities have a similar style and infrastructure to that of the UI."

The convention is held annually and is paid from money allocated by ASUI.

Unfinished Business

"There is a lot of value to what's being passed around in the social media," he said.

He also referenced a group of Tuff University students who were behind a program where people in need of supplies or stranded under rubble from the result of a natural disaster could text a number that put their GPS location on a Web site on a Google map.

"Who used this? The Red Cross, the Marines, and many other organizations who helped provide aid," he said.

People just have to figure out how to use the media to benefit instead of challenging their security, he said. James Lewis, program director and senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, also participated in the conversation.

"We have this new technology that we don't know how to manage," he said.

Frinke implied human-to-human communication will always be a way of life. "You can't keep humans from being humans," she said. "We will always have a need for face-to-face communication."

Wayne Anderson was involved for more than half of its existence.

They are four generations deep at UI, he said. Ellie Anderson's father was a UI graduate and the Anderson's four children and some grandchildren are UI graduates.

"I'm proud of my grandparents," Andrew Lauda, an architect major at UI, said. "It's nice to know the tree will be here when my kids come through."

Wayne and Ellie broke ground with two commemorative shovels. Wayne wielded a shovel painted gold with "Vandals" in black on it. Ellie used the same shovel the first U.S. president to visit campus used in planting the campus' first tree. Theodore Roosevelt first used it April 9, 1911 in front of the Administration Building.

Bill Belknap, who hired Wayne Anderson as assistant athletic director, said the site for the oak seemed fit for Wayne Anderson's work as a coach.

"He taught Gus Johnson everything he knows about basketball in that gym," Belknap said.

Wayne Anderson joked about it overlooking the library.

"That's where I spent all my time — studying," he said.

Belknap said that of UI's 120-year-long life,

New Business

Bill S10-24 proposing a changing of location of the April 21 senate meeting was immediately considered and passed. The change of location to the UI Commons Crest-Horizon Room is due to the State Board of Education meeting being held the same day in the Whitewater Room.

Bill S10-25 will provide a $1,000 contribution to the UI Sustainability Center for Earth Week, if passed. If the bill passes the $1,000 will help sponsor the sound, production and lighting for Earth Week 2010. S10-25 was sent to the financial committee and will be voted on next week.

Fee increases necessary

Money UI needs to operate must come from somewhere if not Idaho

The University of Idaho administration and ASUI got it right.

They tried to get the Idaho State Board of Education to pass a 12.5 percent fee increase but no luck there — the best they could get was a 9.5 percent increase, good for an estimated $8.9 million in extra revenue.

The board members expressed concern that raises in student fees would make higher education less accessible for Idaho residents. Come on — UI was asking for a measly $616.50 per student from the state government in order to counter the tens of millions of dollars that have been slashed from UI's budget in recent years.

While it's nice UI was able to land a 9.5 percent increase — the largest increase UI has received in recent years — the larger problem of a $6 million budget hole looms. Duane Nellis calls the continued loss of public education dollars a "disinvestment," and he's absolutely right.

It's good to remember UI is cheaper to Washington residents than Washington State University in Pullman if they are accepted into the Western Undergraduate Exchange program. UI offers one of the cheapest educations in the United States, and even with the proposed 12.5 percent increase, it would continue to do so.

This situation is ridiculous. As SBOE members squabble over $100 here or $100 there, UI has a massive budget hole to deal with, and that's really what will cause higher education in Idaho to suffer.

And while many students will inevitably complain of the higher cost of attending UI, the student fee increase is absolutely necessary in order for them to continue to enjoy the quality of education they currently receive. The school has costs with which it must deal, and for students, this is what education costs during an economically turbulent period.

Carry-on fees push limits

Those airlines are greedy, aren't they? As any quasi-frequent airline traveler can attest, airlines in America have been hard at work thinking of potential ways to screw ordinary citizens for every nickel and dime they have.

It started with the cancellation of free in-flight meals, then quickly progressed to charging a dollar or more for a bag of nasty peanuts and a glass of water.

Then came the ever-increasing fuel surcharge per passenger. Fair is fair, said travelers in those days — higher gas prices mean a slightly higher fee. Oil, after all, was hovering around $100 a barrel in those days.

Lo and behold, fuel prices dropped and airlines, realizing they could once again make profit with their old prices, scaled back the fee.

Oh wait, no they didn't.

It was just the tip of the iceberg.

In early 2008, American Airlines very fittingly blew open the dam by instituting a $15 fee for a second checked bag. Seeing money, airlines jumped on this idea faster than a pitbull on a poodle, and decided to one-up American Airlines for good measure and increase those fees, applying them to any checked luggage.

Now the nickel and diming has really taken off.

Want to make your reservation over the phone? Be prepared to shell out an extra $5 to $25 for this "luxury."

It used to be that passengers could check in a pet onboard for petty change, but not anymore. If they want to take Fido along for a trip, they must be prepared to shell out anywhere from $50 to $100 for each leg of your journey. If they happen to have a few connecting flights, poor Fido's fare may very well end up costing more than the passenger's.

Recent mothers beware, no longer can you bring a lap child onboard and expect to care for your newborn without forking over as much as 10 percent of a full adult fare.

Oh, and your five-pound child, who is not taking up any more room than a carry-on, will also have to pay the $90

Video shows Iraq failure

On Monday, an organization called WikiLeaks released a video from an Apache helicopter in Iraq from 2007. This video — easily found online — must be watched by all.

It shows American servicemen calmly discussing the slaughter of what is clearly not a hostile group of Iraqis, and then laughing about it. A van pulls up later to help the dead and wounded, and they are fired on as well. I read about this video the day it came out, but I didn't watch it until Wednesday as I sat down to write this column. After watching it, it took me a while to be able to focus enough to write.

This illustrates once again, perhaps more clearly than anything before, that we are not doing things right in the Middle East. If the objective was to fight terrorism on its own turf, that was never going to work, because there is no "Terrorist Army" that can be engaged in combat, defeated and formally vanquished. If it was to stem the tide of terrorism — well, murdering civilians isn't exactly going to convince someone on the fence not to fight invading Americans.

matt ADAMS-WENGER

Glenn Greenwald, writer at Salon.com, has been following this from the moment the video broke and he's done a much better job than I would do here of detailing what's happened since, so I would urge you to just go read what he's written.

What I'll add is this: How can anyone, in the face of years of mounting evidence to the contrary, still think that war in Iraq is good or effective? There are literally hundreds of thousands of dead Iraqis and Afghans as a result of this war — how do you think they died? Did Saddam go on a killing spree right before we caught him? Is the Taliban offing people left and right, thereby necessitating our continued presence to stop the senseless killing?

Volunteer for a cause, not for yourself

People thrive on emotion, specifically that warm fuzzy feeling we get when we do something good. Most choose an outlet that requires little effort but maximizes the ability to say, "Hey. Look at me. I did something good," but it's not enough.

Volunteering and raising awareness is something that more people need to get involved in, but most of the time the only person being helped is the volunteer.

These types of events are especially popular on college campuses. UI is no exception. On Thursday, TOMS shoes sponsored One Day Without Shoes. The point of this event was to raise awareness about children in developing nations who go everyday without shoes and suffer health problems as a result. The idea behind this is noble. There is no better way to get college students involved than sending out a Facebook invitation. However, what good will walking a day without shoes really do for those who are being brought to our attention?

Absolutely nothing. Despite the fact that events such as this do not actually help those it was targeted toward, they happen all the time. The amount of social awareness causes dramatically increase with natural disasters as well. Take the earthquake in Haiti as an example. We all heard about it, and naturally felt guilty for the people affected. Various efforts sprang up across campus echoing the actions of the nation as a whole. Money was raised, but some events are questionable.

I attended the Vigil for Haiti, and while it was inspiring and made me feel the need to empty my pocketbook, the actual event itself did not really do very much. People could walk with those involved throughout downtown and to campus, then leave. No actual good was accomplished. The vigil was more productive than One Day Without Shoes, but the underlying concept remains the same. It really was primarily effective in stimulating participants' moral compass.

These events are hosted, I assume or would hope, with the expectation students will find motivation based on what they witness or learn about, and will find their own ways to make a difference. For some, this may be true. Nevertheless, the efforts designated to "raising awareness" would be better spent actually making a difference in the first place. Having faith in the good nature of people is perfectly acceptable. But the reality is this: Most people will not make it their mission to change the world. We need a reward. Whether it is self-gratitude, recognition or something possessing material value, we unfortunately operate this way. No amount of wishful thinking will change this.

Closing the book on textbook costs

The prices of college textbooks rose by twice the rate of inflation between 1986 and 2004, according to the U.S. Government Accountability Office.

Students (and their parents) understandably are alarmed by that trend, which accompanies across-the-board increases in the out-of-pocket costs of attending college, including tuition charges, which have increased 240 percent in the past two decades.

Under mounting external pressure, the board that oversees Mississippi's eight public universities recently gave initial approval to policies that intend to control textbook cost inflation. Among other things, faculty members would be required to use the same edition of the texts they assign in lower-division undergraduate courses for three consecutive academic years, and for two years in their upper-division courses. Academic departments would be encouraged to adopt the same textbook for all sections of the same course and to make those adoption decisions earlier.

If only it were that simple. Attempts to regulate the prices of any commodity, including textbooks, are bound to fail if they ignore the realities of the commercial marketplace.

The fundamental cause of ever-rising textbook prices is that authors and publishers earn income only on first-time sales. Once a new book is sold, it ends up in the second-hand market, after the buyer sells it back to the bookstore. The author and publisher do not benefit no matter how often a used book is resold. Profits from used textbook sales are earned only by college bookstores and the wholesalers who supply them.

The blunt fact is that the income streams of publishers and authors dry up about six months after publication.

Authors and publishers therefore have strong incentives to issue new editions, many of which incorporate only cosmetic changes — a new cover, a new layout or a few new applications. The market for the old edition is thereby eliminated (whole-salers will not pay anything for an out-of-print edition and the purchaser thus will be offered little or nothing for reselling it). When the new edition is published two or three years later, the author and publisher therefore can expect income from sales for the next six months or so, and the cycle begins anew.

Short timelines for revising and publishing new editions of existing textbooks are driven by the profit motive. That is the only way authors and publishers can justify the investments necessary to write, print and to market educational materials.

Students are asked (and are willing) to pay higher prices for new textbooks because they can resell them at semester's end. Used textbooks are worth less at resale, depending on the book's condition, which deteriorates over time. Planned obsolescence (cheap bindings and not very durable covers) is another predictable consequence of the economics of college textbook marketing.

What is to be done? One impractical option would be to ban sales of used textbooks, which would reduce the prices of new ones, since they would have no value in the second-hand market. Another would be to create an institution for authors and publishers of textbooks similar to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the clearinghouse for royalty payments to the composers, artists and publishers of music, which provides them with royalty income for performances of their work.

If the authors and publishers of college textbooks earned income on second-hand sales, there would be less incentive to issue new editions, the used-book market would flourish and prices would not rise so quickly. That objective is laudable but certainly will not be reached by regulatory fiat.

VIDEO

The fact is they're being killed by US and allied forces. I doubt anyone is ever given orders to kill civilians, but as this video proves yet again, official military policy is to assume the worst. As a result, we are responsible for the deaths of untold thousands in the name of freedom. Not only that, the current commander of American forces in Iraq, General Stanley McChrystal, said, "To my knowledge, in the nine-plus months I've been here, not a single case where we have engaged in an escalation of force incident and hurt someone has it turned out that the vehicle

(at a checkpoint) had a suicide bomb or weapons in it and, in many cases, had families in it."

It's for reasons like this I get frustrated with the Tea Party crowd. Bush & Co. spent eight years gutting the Treasury and treating the Constitution as nothing more than a piece of paper, but now that a Democrat is in office, suddenly they're pissed. And about what? About a marginal expansion in the federal government's power to oversee health care. About a small hike in the income tax for the very top earners. About any number of perceived slights that aren't based in a shred of reality.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of dead Iraqis and Afghans as a result of this war — how do you think they died?

Meanwhile, people are dying in Iraq and have been every day for several years now. George W. Bush started it, but Nobel Peace Prize winner Barack Obama is continuing it. If we're going to get pissed about something, let's get pissed about something truly worth our ire. I'd say this counts. Send letters to arg-opinion@uidaho.edu.

FEES

fuel surcharge each way.

Gunning for the cozy window or exit row seat will ding passengers to the tune of an extra $10 each way, and forget about flying standby, as you are liable to be charged a "walk-up" last-minute fare, which can be as much as $200 more than the original price.

One would think airlines have found every possible way to bend their customers over backward.

However, Spirit Airlines recently announced the next big thing in airline fees. Carry-on items are no longer safe, as Spirit will charge $35 per bag for any carry-on item.

And here we are expected to believe airline executives when, as Spirit Airlines Chief Operating Officer Ken McKenzie said, "We have the best interests of our customers."

This new fee really crosses the border from the trying-to-make-a-good-profit camp into the screwing-you-in-front-of-your-face camp.

People get it — airlines — you are out to make money, but give travelers some respect.

"What could they possibly charge us for next?" wrote a commentator on a travel blog. "How about a pay-to-pee fee. Ha-ha ha-ha."

Before the virtual ink dried from this commentator's post, no less than three others provided links to Ryanair announcing they were planning on installing just such a system.

What can you do?

Fight back with your wallet by choosing the only airline that doesn't charge a checked baggage fee and will likely never adopt an excessive fuel surcharge or carry-on fee — Southwest.

Send a message to the greedy CEOs and Chief Operating Officers of major airlines that you won't be another statistic for them, and tell them in the language they speak best — money — where they can shove those ridiculous fees.

Pull the trigger

Freshman Caitlin Stagg plays on the Chatroulette Web site Thursday afternoon. Chatroulette, an Internet site created by a 17-year-old boy from Moscow, Russia, will connect users with random strangers to chat with via webcam.

'Last Song' falls flat

"The Notebook" and "A Walk to Remember" top almost every teen girl's chick flick list, but Nicholas Sparks' latest novel and movie combo doesn't quite measure up to his previous legendary love stories.

Kelli HADLEY Argonaut

In "The Last Song," Miley Cyrus plays Veronica "Ronnie" Miller, an angst-ridden 18-year-old who abandoned her dreams of being a pianist when her parents divorced. Despite her protests, she and her younger brother Jonah (Bobby Coleman) are sent to live with their dad Steve (Greg Kinnear) at his beach house in Georgia for the summer. There she confronts her anguished emotions about her dad, her past and a chance for love. Overall, it's a cute, fairly predictable story, but it does not reach the same caliber as "The Notebook."

The acting in this film was pretty average. Cyrus wasn't bad at playing a huffy teenager, but that's probably because she still is a huffy teenager. It is time for her to leave behind the Hannah Montana persona, but it seemed like she was trying too hard to be mature in this movie. Basically, the best part about Cyrus appearing in the film was her new song that played during the credits.

"The Last Song" Miley Cyrus. In theaters now

C-

Liam Hemsworth, Cyrus's on-and-off screen boyfriend, added a nice element with his physical appearance, though his acting wasn't bad. Kinnear, who also played in "Little Miss Sunshine" and "Invincible," was more convincing than Cyrus, and did an impressive job portraying a wise, caring father who teaches her the importance of forgiveness and, of course, love.

As far as the storyline goes, it's not particularly original. Like every other Sparks story, there is an improbable romance, snobbish parents, an unfair twist and life lessons learned somewhere along the way. Viewers should be prepared to remember "The Last Song" was written by Sparks, and be prepared for the heartbreaking incident that is sure to occur. Though his love stories are getting trite, Sparks still has a knack for writing stories that have everyone in the theater weeping.

New chat service combines strangers with webcams

Felicia Read Argonaut

For those who are into chatting with random strangers, Chatroulette's the new game. It's a new craze going around in which the Web site pairs users with random people from around the world for a webcam-based chat session.

The site was created by a 17-year-old boy from Moscow, Russia. It came from the concept of Skype, the free video chatting service that enables a person to chat via webcam with friends in other countries without the long distance cost. But with Skype, the chatters know each other.

Chatroulette begins with the chatter clicking "new game," and the screen shows that the chatter is "looking for a random stranger," which is when the site begins looking for another user to connect with. Seconds later, a screen appears with a video of the stranger, as well as a screen with the chatter's own video feed.

Chatroulette does not require fees, and participants do not need to sign up for the service. This is an issue of security and makes it more difficult for a stranger to trace information, unlike Facebook, where people know a user's history.

A warning should be given before diving into Chatroulette — the encounters are unpredictable. Although the two rules of the Web site are no nudity and the participant must be 16 years old, users tend to do what they want. Chatroulette might seem like fun and games, but it is yet another concern for parents. Anybody can access the site and partake in the activities. For those who encounter an "inappropriate stranger," the Web site has a quick way of getting rid of them by clicking a "next" or "report" button.

Conor Sheehy, a junior at the University of Idaho, said he uses Chatroulette for pure entertainment.

"I've always got on the Web site with friends," Sheehy said. "I compare it to drinking. Drinking is a ton of fun with friends, but if you are doing it alone, it's just sad."

Sheehy experienced many strange incidents on Chatroulette, but there is one that stood out. He said one time he and his friends got a bathroom scene with a bathtub full of blood and what appeared to be a dead body in it. He said it looked like a staged murder scene, and assumed it was fake.

"It was definitely startling, but I think people use this site for the social experience," Sheehy said. "People do weird things to see peoples' reaction."

Sheehy said it is common to see users holding pieces of paper with tallies requesting random tasks from other users, often men asking women to flash the webcam. He said that he enjoys mocking the users who participate in these activities.

"Some of my friends and I have made a sign asking if they wanted to see boobs," Sheehy said. "We were all guys, so when we moved the sign and revealed our faces, joke was on them."

Justin Kilian and Casey Siegwarth, both seniors at UI, came across the rare opportunity of getting a celebrity on Chatroulette.

Kilian connected to the site and hooked a computer up to a big screen TV so a group of friends could all experience the site.

"When we first started we got a group of people who were also sitting around drinking," Kilian said. "It was like a mirror image — kind of sad this was what we were all doing on a weekend night."

Kilian and Siegwarth and their friends soon came across a user they did not expect — Ashton Kutcher.

'Guys and Dolls': gambling love affairs

Rhiannon Rinas Argonaut

"Guys and Dolls" is two different love stories mixed into one messy gamble.

The first is the story of the 14-year-long engagement of Nathan Detroit, who runs a floating craps game, and Miss Adelaide, who works at a late night dance club. Miss Adelaide has been trying to get Nathan to settle down and become a family man with her. Nathan, in an attempt to find a space for his craps game, needs $1,000 for a down payment.

In order to get the money, he makes a bet with his friend — Sky Masterson — that Sky cannot get Sarah Brown, a religious mission girl, to go to Havana with him. The challenge becomes the second love story as Sarah and Sky — a most unlikely couple — fall in love. Their love story throws a wrench in Nathan and Adelaide's love life because the lack of money prevents them from being able to elope.

The plot twists and turns, leading to the finale where "everyone gets their 'Guys and Dolls,'" said Shairylann Lisonbee, one of the actresses who plays Miss Adelaide.

The four leads — Miss Adelaide, Nathan Detroit, Sky Masterson and Sarah Brown — are double-casted.

"It's a fun show," said Lacy Sutter, a Washington State University graduate, who plays Sarah Brown. "It's enjoyable. The music is great. (There is a) varied cast (as) the four leads are double-casted. Each cast brings something different. It's a different show if you see a different cast."

Favorite scenes are varied among the cast, including when the gamblers are in the sewer, which is known as the "Luck Be A Lady" scene.

"It reveals a lot of Sky's true heart," said Michael Snyder, who plays Sky Masterson. "It shows that he cares much more about Sarah than he does his reputation as a gambler."

Snyder, who works at the University of Idaho golf course, has been acting since he was young.

"It's in my blood," Snyder said.

He has been in close to 20 plays in the last six years, including several Idaho Repertory Theatre productions such as "High School Musical," as Coach Bolton, and "Romeo and Juliet," as Prince Escalus.

Music:

MGMT
Congratulations
MGMT offers a heartfelt "Hear! Hear!" with Congratulations and an invitation to join the group in a new musical odyssey mirroring the psyches of the band's core duo, Andrew VanWyngarden and Ben Goldwasser. The album was inspired by adventures on the frontiers of 21st century pop 'n' roll consciousness. With its previous album, Oracular Spectacular, MGMT gained a ridiculous amount of fans, so hopefully the fan base isn't alienated by this new album.

Coheed & Cambria
Year of the Black Rainbow
This album was produced by Atticus Ross and Joe Barresi, and features the studio debut of Coheed & Cambria drummer, Chris Pennie, who has been playing alongside Sanchez, guitarist Travis Stever and bassist Michael Robert Todd since 2007. Year of the Black Rainbow will probably be the end of the narrative, "The Amory Wars," that has driven the lyrical content for all of the Coheed albums.

Jeff Beck
Emotion & Commotion
His first studio album in seven years, Beck has not left the music scene but has been busy with other side projects. In Emotion & Commotion, Beck seems to stay true to his guitar roots, but listen for the 64-piece orchestral arrangements. These attributing artists will probably make this album a treat to listen to.

Movies:

"Apollo 13: 15th Anniversary Edition"
When this film came out 15 years ago, most of the world was intrigued by Rob Howard's cinematic venture to shoot a movie about space while making it look like the actors were actually there. Starring a handful of greats including Tom Hanks, Kevin Bacon and Ed Harris, fans get a chance to relive the quote, "Houston, we have a problem" as they walk around the house in their space helmets.

"Pirate Radio"
This film recalls American teen exploitation films of the 1950s, in which uptight authority figures wanted to keep rock 'n' roll's corrupting influence from children. Though set in 1966 Great Britain, this high-spirited comedy will strike a resonant chord in anyone who ever snuck a transistor radio under their pillow at night to have their world rocked.

Musically, 1966 was the best of the times (the killer soundtrack spins a Who's Who of vintage vinyl, including The Kinks, The Rolling Stones, Dusty Springfield and The Who). But the kids weren't all right. The BBC broadcast less than an hour of rock music a day. Pirate radio stations broadcasting from ships anchored off the coast exemplified rock's rebellious spirit. Cinematically this film was great, but probably only worth a rent or two.

Make easy omelets

One of the best ways to test one's merits as a cook is preparing eggs. Fifteen seconds of cooking time can mean the difference between a perfectly cooked egg and an overdone mess.

Omelets are among the most daunting of egg preparations. It can be difficult to get the eggs to cook evenly, and getting the omelet all in one piece is often impossible. However, with a few tips and tricks it becomes easy.

The first step to creating an excellent omelet is using quality eggs. Free range eggs are best and contain more nutrients, but any egg Grade A or above will taste good. Beat the eggs well and add a bit of salt and pepper for flavor.

It's best to use a nonstick frying pan to prepare an omelet. Heating the pan over medium-low heat with a good amount of butter in the pan will help the eggs cook evenly and not stick to the pan. Cooking spray can be used, but it does not give the same rich flavor as butter.

THOMAS
Argonaut

To cook the eggs, pour them into the pan and allow them to sit undisturbed until you can see the eggs start to solidify. Use a spatula to move the cooked pieces of egg to the top and let the uncooked egg seep to the bottom.

At this point, extra ingredients can be added to the omelet. A plain omelet tastes great, but a little extra meat, cheese or vegetables can vary the flavor. Use cooked meat, and choose grated or crumbled cheese. Most vegetables will cook quickly in the eggs and do not need to be precooked.

Once the omelet is mostly solidified, flip it over and cook for about 30 seconds until the last bit of uncooked egg is solid. Try different sauces on the omelet — ketchup or hot sauce add a bit of a flavor kick, and hollandaise sauce adds a creamy texture and flavor. Ideally, omelets are served with hash browns and toast, but a large omelet is perfect for a quick and delicious meal.

"We didn't realize who it was at first, but once we did you could tell he knew we had," Siegwarth said. "He and the people he was with just laughed and waved."

Kilian and Siegwarth said Kutcher showed them around the room and everyone who was in the room with him. After Kutcher set the computer back down, the chat froze, ending the session.

"We were only chatting with him for about 45 seconds, but I don't think it was set up," Siegwarth said.

Both Kilian and Siegwarth said it was one of the positive Chatroulette experiences they have come across. They said they have not been on the site since because of the common occurrence of obscene gestures.

Everyday, more users enter the unpredictable world of Chatroulette, whether for entertainment or with the intent to find that certain someone — either way, Chatroulette can be an interesting experience.

dancing. I love to dance but I'm not built for dancing," Snyder said.

Snyder's son Clayton, a junior at Moscow High School, is also in "Guys and Dolls," playing the role of Harry the Horse, one of the gamblers. Snyder said it is a blast working with him and this is their fifth show together.

The fight scene between Nathan and Miss Adelaide where the song, "Sue Me" is performed is a favorite for Lisonbee, because she gets to throw Nathan, played opposite by her husband, across the stage. Playing opposite her husband makes portraying the relationship easier because they already have the right kind of chemistry, Lisonbee said.

"It is a blast. I absolutely love it. I love the chance to yell at him and kiss him on stage and all that kind of stuff," Lisonbee said.

"Adelaide is just the most humorous character," Lisonbee said. "She has some of the best lines like, 'Tell him I never want to speak to him again and have him call me tonight.'"

For Lisonbee, the most challenging aspect of the play is having her newborn baby on set. She was born one week before rehearsals started, and perfected harmonies on a couple of the musical numbers.

The scene in Havana where Sarah

Brown sings a solo number titled, "If I Were a Bell" is the favorite and most challenging for Sutter. In this scene, Sarah Brown, an extremely religious mission girl whose goal is to convert all of Broadway, loses her inhibitions and has a little too much to drink. She dances around Sky while performing her solo. Sutter said this was challenging for her because she was trained to sing a certain way, and a lot of the dance moves cut her air supply.

"Acting is magical," Sutter said. "It's fun to delve into a different character. I feel like I grow as a person each time I'm in a show. I feel like I learn not only about the character, but I learn about myself as (a) person."

Time for redemption

Idaho tries to improve on 0-2 conference record

Lisa Short
Argonaut

Conflicting records are befuddling the Idaho women's tennis team. Idaho sits with a 16-3 record this season but are the unhappy owners of a 0-2 record in the WAC as it heads into its next two conference matches this week.

Coach Tyler Neill said although their record doesn't look good, the Vandals played two tough teams to start their conference matches.

The Vandals kick off competition this weekend by facing a talented squad from New Mexico State on Saturday and will look to go one-up on Nevada on Sunday. Neill said the Vandals are close in talent with both teams, and he expects some exciting matches this weekend.

"They should be close matches," Neill said. "Nevada is nationally ranked."

Idaho lost in disappointing fashion to NMS last year in a match where the Vandals didn't showcase their talent or strengths. Neill expects a stronger effort this year, and said the Vandals are looking for another chance against the Aggies.

"The team is really fired up for the NMS match," Neill said. "Because of last year's disappointing performance, they want to prove themselves."

Idaho will have little time to recover after its match against NMS, as the Vandals take the court less than 24 hours later for another match against Nevada.

Neill said he expects both NMS and Nevada to "play" hard, and said the Vandals realize they aren't going to be easy matches, but they should be able to push hard in both. Neill said playing only two matches this weekend benefits the Vandals, especially after last weekend's marathon four-match series.

Neill is also pleased to have Daniela Cohen feeling well and in the line-up. Cohen had chronic elbow pain but has played well as of late. Neill said Cohen is really a strong addition to their team.

Neill said the No. 3 doubles team, Alexandra Ulesanu and Barbara Maciocha, have been playing well, adding a tough punch at the end of their line-up. Not content with tough competition, the Vandals will have to deal with the change in location. Neill said Las Cruces is a difficult place to play because of the unpredictable winds and high elevation.

Home for the long haul

Incremental weather taking its toll on team

Ilya Pinchuk
Argonaut

Idaho tennis director Jeff Beaman has seen enough rain this season. Inclement weather has been following Idaho like a plague. The Vandals left wind and snow last weekend to travel to Hawaii, where one of their matches was promptly rained out, and another match extended over a 21-hour period because of numerous rain delays.

If that wasn't enough, rain in the Portland area shut down the Vandals' return flight, forcing the team to drive the remainder of the way back home.

"We are just really hoping for some good weather right now," Beaman said. "Facing rain delays, starting, stopping, it's draining."

With sporadic hail and rain accompanied by gusting winds and near-freezing temperatures this week, good weather may be difficult to find on the Palouse.

Thankfully for the Vandals, should inclement weather strike again they will be close to home, as Idaho closes out the season in preparation for the WAC Conference tournament with five straight matches split over two days at home.

After splitting the road trip in Hawaii, earning a win against Utah State but dropping a match against Hawaii Pacific, Beaman said the Vandals hope to use the downtime before the final push of the season to rest up and give the players a chance to catch up on their academics.

"We are going to focus on working on academics and focus on getting healthy and rested for the upcoming matches," Beaman said.

any more conference opponents in the two weeks leading up to the tournament, which is scheduled to start April 29.

Instead, Idaho opens up its five-game home stand against Weber State Saturday morning, and takes on Seattle that very same afternoon.

Weber State is riding a four-game winning streak, recently blowing out their in-state rivals Utah State in a 6-1 decision. The Wildcats are the owners of a 9-10 record, but are a blazing 5-1 in conference play, with their only loss coming to Sacramento State in late January.

Seattle will come into Saturday's game a day after facing Lewis-Clark in Lewiston. The Redhawks' season record sits at 5-10, with their most recent competition being a close 4-5 loss against Pacific Lutheran. The Redhawks' season started off with four wins in six games, but a disastrous seven-game losing streak wrecked their season.

During that slide, Seattle suffered five shut-outs, able to manage points against Portland State in a 7-2 loss and managing to win one game against the Vandals in a 6-1 loss on February 7th.

Narrowing down the WAC championship

Jacobs plays final conference tourney

Lisa Short
Argonaut

In her last regular season tournament, senior Amanda Jacobs pushed herself to play her best and was rewarded as the Vandals finished sixth in the Wyoming Cowgirl Classic.

Jacobs gave the tournament all she had, shooting a 72 in the closing round and tying for 29th with a score of 230 to finish her regular season career.

The sixth place finish by the Vandals guarantees them a spot in the WAC tournament, which is scheduled to begin April 19.

"She (Jacobs) started the spring season with a 69 and finished with a 72," coach Lisa Johnson said, "so that will give her a lot of confidence going into the WAC championship." "She played quite a bit better this tournament."

The tournament was a success for the Vandals, as Idaho started and ended the tournament strong with an opening round of 297 and closed with a 300. The Vandals faltered in the second round, scoring 311 points, which dropped them out of top-three contention.

"Our team played okay first and third, struggled a little the second round," Johnson said. "I think that is a result of the team being worn down from illness and not handling the wind as well as we could have."

Sophomore Kayla Mortellaro was back at the helm for Idaho, leading the team with a score of 220, good enough for a fifth place finish in the tournament. In addition to strong play from Mortellaro and Jacobs, Idaho's cause was boosted by quality play from sophomores Annika Karlsson, Teo Poplawski and Frida Nilsson, who finished 35th, 39th and 51st, respectively.

Johnson said their goal all season has been consistency, and she likes what she sees from the squad so far.

"I feel like we're almost to the peak of playing our best golf," Johnson said. "It is right where we want to be, we wanted to peak at conference. Scores and the team's mental attitude shows we're on the right path."

While Jacobs enjoyed her final regular season tournament, Mortellaro had reasons of her own to celebrate this weekend. Her fifth place finish at the Wyoming Cowgirl Classic propelled Mortellaro into the elite club of top-10 female golfers in the nation.

Mortellaro is currently ranked ninth by GolfStat.com, the college ranking site, and with two more years of golf at Idaho left, her stock could rise even higher.

Mortellaro's personal performance, coupled with a deep pool of talent, has helped propel the Idaho team to 50th in the nation, according to GolfStat.com.

Going into the WAC, only one school — San Jose State — is ranked ahead of Idaho.

Jacobs wants to end her career the same way she started it four years ago at UI — with a conference championship.

WAC awards for Dittmer, Hartz

Idaho to face-off against eight Washington teams at Spokane Falls Dual Meet

Ilya Pinchuk
Argonaut

No one needs to tell the Idaho track and field team of their impressive performance last weekend, which included several WAC-best scores.

Of course, a little recognition never hurts.

The WAC honored two Idaho athletes this week. Junior Paul Dittmer earned the WAC Men's Track Athlete of the Week for his performance at the Texas Relays. Dittmer ran the second-fastest race of his collegiate career, finishing fourth in the 110 meter hurdles with a time of 13.87 seconds.

Dittmer's time is top in the WAC, sixth in the region and 10th in the NCAA this year. This award is Dittmer's fifth at Idaho.

Junior Ulrike Hartz earned the WAC women's track Athlete of the Week honors after taking second place in the 'B' group in the javelin throw. Hartz's toss of 47.97 meters is the second-best throw for the javelin in Idaho school history, as well as the best in the WAC this year. Hartz's throw ranks her 21st in the nation.

"She (Hartz) threw really well this past weekend," said Idaho throwing coach Julie Taylor. "She is on her way to doing a lot better things this year."

The award is Hartz's first of her career, and with this week's awards, Idaho has captured three track Athlete of the Week awards since the start of the outdoor track season.

Coach Wayne Phipps said he was impressed with the way the team performed at the Texas Relays, but said the team is focused on preparing for the Spokane Falls Dual Meet, which takes place Saturday in Spokane.

Idaho will be happy to be closer to home, which will make it easier for the athletes to compete at a higher level. The difference in time zones plays havoc with athletes, Phipps explained.

"The most difficult thing about the Texas Relays was making the finals," Phipps said. "It's early in the morning and there's a two time zone change."

The Vandals will avoid those pesky time zone troubles, which could spell trouble for opposing teams. Phipps said one of the more impressive things about Dittmer — and by extension the team's — success at the Texas Relays was how the team handled the time change.

"I was really impressed with the way Paul performed just to make it to the finals, and then even more so up against a very elite field," Phipps said.

The Spokane Falls Dual Meet is unique in the fact that it pits eight schools located in Washington State against eight schools from Idaho, Montana and Oregon.

Unofficially titled, "Washington versus the World," the meet will give Idaho a chance to show off its competitive edge against plenty of local schools. Given their track record this year, it would seem Washington schools will have their work cut out for them.

Dittmer and Hartz, along with James Rogan, Mykael Bothum and K.C. Dahlgren are certainly expected to place high, but the meet also gives Idaho's newcomers a chance to get another race under their belt, a fact Phipps alluded to at the last meet.

"It (the Texas Relays) was a first meet for a few people," Phipps said. "They were going to be a bit rusty and it's a tough place to compete, but I thought they did pretty well."

A changing game

The roar of a bugling bull elk echoing over the landscape could, arguably, be the sound of Western hunting. The high-pitched challenge from a monster bull pulls people from all over the world to the Western United States just for a crack at the trophy of a lifetime. The sound inspires awe to the first timer, and a smile to the face of every seasoned elk hunter.

Traditionally, elk hunters use the sound of the bugling elk to locate and track a bull. Bulls will bugle to find other elk and assert their dominance during mating season. Hunters use this to their advantage and this technique has worked for years.

Until now. With the introduction of wolves, the game has changed. The wolves are out there, and one of their main sources of food is big game. This being so hunters have to update their playbook and work around the wolves.

The biggest change observed in the past two years has been the silence in the elk woods. Hunters have bugled their brains out only to be met with the drawn-out howl of a hungry wolf. In our area the pressure from hunting, both from wolves and people, has caused the elk to smarten up and shut up.

This calls for a whole new game plan.

The best way to become acquainted with how the elk in an area are dealing with the added pressures is to observe them, and the only way to do that is to get out there. By putting in time prior to elk season, hunters will be able to find patterns in where and when herds of elk are moving, as well as know when the bulls are starting to gather their harem of cows and if they are even experiencing any changes since the introduction of added hunting pressure. In some zones the bulls scream louder than ever, wolves or no. Scouting is the key to 90 percent of successful elk hunts.

While scouting plays a major role, the changing tendencies of elk will always keep a hunter on their toes.

While working as a livestock wrangler and guide for two years under Bill Mitchell Outfitters, I witnessed the elk herd scream all September one year, and not make a sound the next. This made every guide in camp scramble to figure a way to fill their client's tags.

Wisconsin tops RIT 8-1 in Frozen Four

Larry Lage
Associated Press

Wisconsin scored in the opening minutes of the first two periods and went on to rout Rochester Institute of Technology 8-1 in the Frozen Four on Thursday night at Ford Field in Detroit, Michigan.

The Badgers will play the winner of the Miami of Ohio-Boston College game for the national title on Saturday night.

John Mitchell scored 1:27 into the game and Jordy Murray made it 3-0 at 2:18 in the second period, allowing Wisconsin to coast against the overmatched Tigers. Scott Gudmandson made 13 saves for the Badgers.

RIT's Jared Demichiel stopped 27 shots before being replaced late in the game by Shane Madolara, who gave up a goal on the only shot he faced. Jan Ropponen then came on and allowed one goal on three shots.

The game was played at the home of the NFL's Detroit Lions. About 35,000 tickets were sold, but empty seats in the football facility and a lopsided game without a local team led to a lackluster atmosphere.

When Detroit landed the Frozen Four, organizers dreamed of putting the ice in the middle of the field and packing 70,000-plus fans around it as was done for the men's basketball Final Four last year.

It felt like a hockey arena with a game-time temperature of 60 degrees and 47 percent humidity thanks to air conditioning that created a breeze strong enough to make curtains that cut off portions of the venue sway from side to side.

RIT fans who made the trip from upstate New York tried to create a buzz 90 minutes before the puck dropped, chanting "R-I-T! R-I-T!" but the Badgers quickly quieted them and made the final score the only thing in doubt.

Mitchell scored off a rebound on the second shot of the game, and Derek Stepan put Wisconsin ahead 2-0 midway through the second period.

After Murray scored early in the second, Justin Schultz made it 4-0 a couple minutes later.

Wisconsin had a pair of two-man advantages midway through the second period and took advantage of both, on goals from Michael Davies and Blake Geoffrion, to lead 6-0.

RIT then called a timeout, but there was nothing that could be said or done to change the outcome.

The Tigers did, though, avoid a shutout with 28 seconds left in the second when Tyler Brenner banged in a shot from the left side off a crisp pass to make it 6-1.

Craig Smith and Stepan scored 20 seconds apart late in the game to finish the scoring barrage for the Badgers.

There are plenty of hiking opportunities on the Palouse for outdoor oriented students. Some possible locations include Moscow Mountain, Kamiak Butte, McGrady State Park or Steptoe Park.

Take a hike to the hills

Hiking is one of the premier summer and spring outdoor activities here on the Palouse. It's more than just taking a walk through the forest, it's a chance to get away from the problems of everyday life and be surrounded by the quiet and peaceful nature of the wilderness instead of the hustle and bustle of the city.

With this year's mild winter, hikers in the Palouse have the unique opportunity to hit the trails much earlier than in recent years.

Hiking is an activity almost anyone can enjoy. Every person has his or her own reasons for hiking. Some like the quiet and some like the solitude and some like the workout.

Exercise is one of the main draws for hiking for many people. It's a low-impact, high-intensity workout that comes with piece of mind.

With spring and summer on the way, many are anxious to get out of the gym and exercise in the fresh air. It's a much better workout than walking around because the uneven surface of a trail forces the body to use all the muscles in the legs. Hiking provides the opportunity to get in a good workout while experiencing the wilderness.

Kevin BINGAMAN Argonaut

"It's important to have an active lifestyle," said Stephen Yoder, the academic success adviser at the University of Idaho. "In our society, we're not as active, and it's important to move back in that direction."

For some, hiking means the chance to backpack to a remote mountain lake and fish. Fishing high mountain lakes is an experience like no other, as there will rarely be another person around, and fishing with towering mountains and vast forests around is something to behold.

For hunters, spring and summer hiking is a chance to get out and scout the areas they intend to hunt in the fall. Hiking gives hunters a chance to get acquainted with the landscape as well as learn the habits of the wildlife. A successful hunt in the fall often begins with preparation in the spring.

Hiking can also be a time to recharge emotionally. Leaving the stress and routine of everyday life is a calming and peaceful experience, and once on the trail, the chirping of birds, the smell of the forest and the sun's warm rays melts all the problems. It's just the hiker and nature.

For many, hiking is a chance to get out and experience nature in an active way. The true beauty of the wilderness cannot be experienced through a photograph or even through a drive. It must be experienced personally.

There is nothing quite like the breathtaking view while looking down from atop a mountain, or hearing the bugle of an elk echo through the hills. Hiking is a chance to submerge yourself in nature and see the world for what it truly is.

Spending time outdoors is part of the tradition and culture of Idaho and the West. Hiking is just another opportunity to engage in that tradition.

"Being outdoors will always be intertwined with the traditional Westerner and be part of who we are," Yoder said.

While there may not be towering mountains in the Palouse, there are still numerous opportunities for a good hike.

Moscow Mountain has many different trails to hike and is only a few miles from campus. Kamiak Butte is only a 20-minute drive from Moscow and offers a campground, picnic area and incredible views of the Palouse.

Those with access to a vehicle can check out McCroskey State Park and Steptoe Butte, both of which offer close areas for students looking to hike. More adventurous students who want higher intensity experience can backpack the St. Joe Wilderness.

Hiking is an activity everyone can appreciate. Whether one wants to hunt, fish, backpack, go for a casual walk or look down from atop a mountain peak, hiking can get you there. It's time to get away from campus and see where the trail leads.

Week of frustration

Ilya Pinchuk Argonaut

The young Vandal men's golf squad hit a rut this week at the Wyoming Cowboy Classic, placing 14th in the 24-team tournament a week after having great success in Oregon.

Idaho coach Jon Reehorn said while the result wasn't as good as he had hoped for coming off an amazing result in Oregon, such hiccups were to be expected.

"When you have two freshmen and two sophomores in the lineup, part of the process of building a team is that you will inevitably have a hiccup like this along the way," Reehorn said. "After such a great week in Oregon, this week definitely was not our week."

Last week in Oregon, sophomore Stefan Richardson had his best collegiate tournament, with a second place finish to lead the young up-and-coming Vandals to a fourth-place tournament finish.

That luck would not carry over to this past weekend. Freshman Damian Telles was the top-scoring Vandal, tying for 36th place with a three-round score of 218, while senior presence David Nuhn finished the 54-hole event tied for 60th with a score of 222. "At times you have to just say that is golf," Reehorn said. "I know this team is better than we showed this week — it's very frustrating."

This week's event was dominated by California, with California State-Northridge and San Diego taking the top two spots. The Vandals' 14th place finish put them behind the likes of New Mexico State, Gonzaga, Utah State and Nevada.

The Vandals were tied for 14th after the second round and were within striking distance, only five strokes out of fifth place and 11 strokes back of the University of California-Santa Barbara, which held the lead after two rounds. In addition, Nuhn was tied for 24th and was five strokes out of the lead at the end of the second day.

Unfortunately for Idaho, the third day proved its undoing, as Nuhn slipped to 60th and Idaho dropped out of the standings.

Idaho wasn't the only team to struggle on the third day, as UC Santa Barbara, despite leading at the start of the day, had problems of their own and dropped from first to seventh.

"What matters now is how we respond (to the loss)," Reehorn said. "In one month we will begin play at the WAC Championships, and our focus for the next four weeks will be to be totally prepared for the opportunity and challenge of competing for a WAC Championship."

The Vandals come home to windy weather and have a week and a half hiatus before its next matchup, which will be in San Jose. Reehorn said the team will spend the break preparing both mentally and physically for San Jose.

"We will spend the week getting better, Reehorn said, "and making sure we are prepared for what is going to be a very difficult golf course against a strong field."

MAC, WAC to play in Humanitarian Bowl

Associate Press

Teams from the Mid-American Conference and Western Athletic Conference will play in the Humanitarian Bowl for the next four years.

The third selection of bowl-eligible MAC teams will participate in the bowl, played at Boise State. The WAC is committed to sending one of its top teams.

Last year's Humanitarian Bowl on Dec. 30 saw the Idaho Vandals edge Bowling Green 43-42. It received a 2.4 rating on ESPN, tying for the game's highest rating, set the previous year by a match-up between Maryland and Nevada. Roady's is the official sponsors the Humanitarian Bowl.

Marlins beat Mets

Jay Cohen
Associated Press

Nate Robertson pitched five solid innings in his first start for Florida in eight seasons, and the Marlins beat the New York Mets 3-1 on Thursday night to win their season-opening series.

Jorge Cantu hit a tiebreaking RBI double in the fifth and Gaby Sanchez added a run-scoring double in the sixth for Florida, which took the last two of the three-game set after losing 7-1 on opening day.

The Mets wasted an effective outing by Jonathon Niese, who made his first start at Citi Field since he tore his right hamstring during a victory over St. Louis last August. The 23-year-old left-hander allowed three runs and eight hits in six innings.

Jeff Francoeur hit an RBI double in the fourth but that was all New York could manage against Robertson, who was acquired from Detroit on March 30 when the Tigers decided to give their final rotation spot to former Marlins star Dontrelle Willis. Florida got Robertson and cash from Detroit for a minor league pitcher.

It sure looked like a nice deal on Thursday night.

Robertson (1-0) allowed six hits in his first start for the Marlins since Sept. 7, 2002, at Pittsburgh. Florida selected the lefty in the fifth round of the 1999 draft and included him in a 2003 trade with Detroit that put Mark Redman in Miami, where he helped the Marlins win the World Series later that year.

Burke Badenhop followed Robertson with three innings of one-hit ball and Leo Nunez finished for his first save. The crisp effort by Florida's bullpen came one night after the Marlins had to go to the 10th inning for a 7-6 victory after they led 6-1 in the seventh.

New York left two runners on in the second and fourth in front of a sluggish crowd of 25,982. Ruben Tejada, making his first career start, grounded into a fielder's choice to end the second and Niese tapped out to finish the fourth.

Niese's injury last year was one of the lasting images from a trying season for the Mets. He was hurt covering first base on Aug. 5, and collapsed when he tried to throw a practice pitch. He spent three weeks in bed after surgery to repair his hamstring and couldn't walk normally for six weeks.

Back on the mound in New York, Niese (0-1) got a couple of bad breaks in the first. Cameron Maybin reached on a one-out grounder that skipped past lunging first baseman Fernando Tatis. He moved up on Hanley Ramirez's walk and scored when Dan Uggla's hard bouncer appeared to glance off third baseman David Wright's glove for an RBI single.

Tatis helped Niese with his glove in the third. With runners on second and third, he scooped up Wright's bouncing throw to retire Uggla for the final out of the inning.

NOTES: Mets SS Jose Reyes (thyroid) was scheduled to play in Class-A St. Lucie's season opener on Thursday night. If he gets through the rehab game with no problems, New York manager Jerry Manuel said he likely would play against Washington on Saturday. ... Marlins manager Fredi Gonzalez said he may try to get C Ronny Paulino some work at first base so he has more options late in games. ... Citi Field had a sell-out crowd of 41,245 on Monday and hosted 38,863 on Wednesday night. ... Marlins RHP Chris Volstad is scheduled to face Dodgers RHP Hiroki Kuroda in Florida's home opener on Friday night. ... Mets RHP Mike Pelfrey and Nationals RHP Garrett Mock are slated to pitch when New York hosts Washington on Friday night in the opener of a three-game series.

Bulls squeeze out 109-108 win against Cavaliers

Andrew Seligman
Associated Press

Derrick Rose scored 24 points, Kirk Hinrich had 23 and the Chicago Bulls survived some shaky free-throw shooting down the stretch to beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 109-108 with LeBron James on the sideline on Thursday night.

Luol Deng had 22 points and 10 rebounds, Joakim Noah added 17 points and 15 boards, and the Bulls moved into a tie with eighth-place Toronto in the Eastern Conference. The Raptors hold the tiebreaker, but with Chris Bosh injured, Chicago's odds are looking good.

The Bulls prevailed even though Rose and Deng each missed two free throws in the final 15 seconds and Cleveland's Mo Williams scored a season-high 35 points on a night when James sat out to rest some bumps and bruises.

Chicago let a 12-point third-quarter lead slip away and couldn't put Cleveland away after going back up by seven in the fourth.

The Cavaliers were leading 108-107 after Williams'

3-pointer with 1:29 remaining. Noah answered with a tip-in to put Chicago back on top, and the Bulls hung on.

Taj Gibson blocked Williams' layup with 26 seconds left and the Cavaliers couldn't take advantage after Deng missed two free throws with 14.4 seconds left. Anderson Varejao put up an airball on a jumper and Moon had a layup blocked by Noah with 1.9 seconds left.

Rose missed two free throws, but it didn't matter.

With the league's best record locked up and the playoffs approaching, Cavaliers coach Mike Brown is taking a cautious approach with James. The last thing he needs is to see his superstar go down like Bosh, who suffered a facial injury against the Cavaliers, or Milwaukee's Andrew Bogut.

So James watched from the sideline dressed in a suit and he's a gametime decision for Friday's matchup with Indiana.

Williams did his part, scoring 12 on four 3-pointers in the fourth.

Antawn Jamison added 23 points and Jamario Moon scored 14.

Johnson said she is determined to win this championship for Jacobs and the team.

"Right now we're focused on the things we can control, like getting healthy and a few more practices. We're putting in the final preparations needed," Johnson said. "We can only control how well we play and hope that'll be good enough."
