Dean of Students Bruce Pitman announced on Friday his plan to retire from the University of Idaho next fall. Pitman began his career in 1973 as the Greek adviser and became Dean of Students in 1981. Pitman said the beginnings of a search process are underway, and will remain at UI until a replacement is found.

Dean of Students Bruce Pitman announces plans to retire next fall after replacement is named

When Dean of Students Bruce Pitman arrived in Moscow as the University of Idaho Greek Adviser in 1973, the drinking age in Idaho was 19, the Kibbie Dome wasn't yet a dome, the pedestrian-only streets running through campus were open to cars, he had yet to go on four Alternative Service Break trips and there wasn't a single McDonald's in town.

Now, after 40 years of service spanning five decades, Pitman has announced his intention to retire from UI early next fall. The announcement — which could have come seven years ago when Pitman became eligible for retirement — came as a surprise to few and many have expressed their sadness at the news of Pitman's impending departure.

"This is very bitter sweet," Pitman said. "But I think it's better to leave when people are encouraging you to stay rather than wait until they are wishing you'd go."

Pitman said he's been considering retirement for a while, but the decision wasn't an easy one, because of the passion he has for UI and its students.

"I have great passion for the work that we do and I love this place," Pitman said. "When I put the key in the ignition to come to campus it's because I feel it's important."

Pitman said his colleagues throughout the years have also contributed to his deep-rooted passion for the university. He said his love for the community and a combination of other factors contributed to his hesitation when it came to the question of retirement. But he said his family has always been supportive of his desire to continue working.

"My wife and family have been wonderfully supportive and have simply encouraged me to make the change only when I'm ready to and have not been putting pressure on me to do this," Pitman said.

Jeanne Stevenson, vice provost for Academic Affairs, has worked with Pitman in a variety of capacities since the early 1990s. The two co-chaired the implementation of a strategic plan under former provost Doug Baker, and Stevenson said they continued their working relationship across student and academic affairs ever since with a focus on student retention, success and capacity. She described their relationship as a "sharing sweet spot" between academic and student affairs.

"I think that he has had a very significant and a very positive impact on the University of Idaho," Stevenson said. "I am confident that the process that has been described — to be able to do a search while he is still here — will help us have as smooth a transition as possible, and hopefully we will have a highly qualified person like Bruce."

The exact date of Pitman's retirement has yet to be set, as Pitman has committed to remain in his position through the search process, in order to eliminate the need for an interim. He said he's not in any hurry to leave and an interim would only hinder the operations of the department.

Pitman said retirement will allow him to commit more time to recreational activities, travel opportunities with his family and community projects such as "Family Promise of the Palouse" which he said he's become very involved with in recent years.

"It's a program that I've been deeply committed to in the last few years in helping families with children," Pitman said. "Certainly I'm looking forward to a bit more recreational time. I think, instead of gold retirement watches, I'd rather have a new pair of running shoes. I'm also looking forward to finding some sunshine in February."

Pitman said he and his wife are deeply rooted in Moscow and Chase is a 10-year-old boy living in Moscow, with a brain tumor near his optic nerve that makes him blind in one eye and is causing him to lose vision in the other.

When the Make-A-Wish Foundation contacted him, Chase wished to travel with his family to Disney World.

This cause was something the fraternities and sororities of the University of Idaho decided they can work together to achieve, as part of an All-Greek Philanthropy project.

"When (Make-A-Wish) approached us and said that we have a child in the Moscow area that has a wish to come true, we really wanted to get involved," said Elise Moote, vice president of leadership for UI Panhellenic council.

During Greek Week, more than $1,000 was raised in a penny drop fundraiser. Brittany Bowles, director of Fraternity and Sorority Life, said it costs about $6,500 to send a family to Disney World — so they still need to raise about $5,500.

That's when Moote came up with the idea of Gerald.

Gerald is a bright yellow waving air dancer who began his trek throughout the UI campus in Dean of Students Bruce Pitman's office Monday and will end his journey on April 18. Moote said the idea was inspired by another idea the Office of Alumni Relations came up with, and when they were thinking of names, "Gerald" just sounded right.

Finding waves

UI professor finds waves on Saturn's largest moon

Emily Aizawa

Jason Barnes, assistant professor of physics, has found waves on Saturn's largest moon, Titan — the first waves found anywhere besides Earth.

Titan is the only moon with an atmosphere, Barnes said. Like Earth's moon, the rest are airless.

Titan's atmosphere is a lot like Earth's, made up of mostly nitrogen with about the same pressure, he said.

Inside Titan's atmosphere there are clouds, rain and lakes. It's the only known place in the solar system, other than Earth, where this happens.

Titan and Earth also differ in many ways. Titan's temperature is 90 degrees Kelvin which equals to negative 297.67 degrees Fahrenheit, he said. The clouds on Titan are not made of water but of liquid methane, which is the same natural gas that is used to power stoves. The natural gas is what forms the lakes and rivers on Titan.

Since lakes do exist on Titan, Barnes said, surely there must be waves on the lakes. But when first looking for waves the research showed there was no evidence of wave activity, he said.

Spreading awareness, not disease

Get Yourself Tested campaign begins on campus this week

Erin Bamer

The Vandal Health Education Office will table the Health Hut April 16 in the Idaho Commons, as part of the Get Yourself Tested campaign to spread awareness of the importance of STD testing.

According to the Center of Disease Control and Prevention, one in two people will contract an STD by the age of 25.

This statistic shocked Bailey Hewitt, a Vandal Health

Ed intern, and led her to search for more facts about STDs.

Hewitt said there are many misconceptions people have about STDs. She said one of the most dangerous misconceptions is that someone with an STD will always show symptoms. Often people with STDs don't show symptoms and can pass the disease on to other people, Hewitt said.

Another misconception she mentioned is that doctors will automatically screen their patients for common STDs without being asked. Hewitt suggested for patients not to assume they don't have an STD just because their doctor didn't call them back after getting tested, and urges people to follow up with their doctors.

Hewitt said she thinks many college students don't get tested, because they are afraid it will show up on their parent's insurance. According to Hewitt, there are multiple ways to avoid a test showing up on insurance records. She said there are laws that provide the person getting tested a certain amount of control.

Hewitt said she thinks if students aren't scared about talking about the subject, then they instead label the topic as too awkward. A strategy used by Vandal Health Ed is comedy to make people more relaxed about the subject, she said.

Gluten-free oatmeal with chia seed pudding

Hannah Lynch
Crumbs

This recipe makes a delicious breakfast, while still being healthy and filling. Because chia seeds are one of the top super foods, it has many different benefits that makes it the perfect way to start the day. According to an article from Huffington Post, some great reasons to eat chia seeds are that they fill you up faster because not only are they a full of protein, but also contain the amino acid tryptophan which also helps regulate appetite, sleep and mood. Another benefit to chia seeds is that they help with weight control by stabilizing blood sugar. The combination of oatmeal, fresh berries and chia pudding is a perfect meal that is both inexpensive and fast, which becomes a necessity in busy college students' lives.

Ingredients:

- 2 1/2 cups vanilla almond milk
- 1/2 cup chia seeds
- 1/2 cup gluten-free oats (or regular oats)
- 1 cup water
- Fresh berries
- Cinnamon powder

Hannah Lynch | Crumbs

Directions:

1. Whisk together almond milk and chia seeds in a bowl until completely mixed.
2. Cover with plastic wrap and let sit in refrigerator overnight.
3. The next morning, combine oats with one cup of water in a bowl and microwave for 2 minutes.

4. Remove, stir and microwave for another 30 seconds.
5. Once oatmeal is done, you can add as much chia seed pudding as desired.
6. Serve with berries and a dash of cinnamon powder.

Breaking records, not the bank

Residents across the Palouse come together for fundraiser, world record attempt

Jared Jonas
Argonaut

The city of Moscow is looking to earn its place in "The Guinness Book of World Records" at the end of April.

On April 26, Palouse residents will gather on Main Street in Moscow and attempt to break the world record for the largest country swing dance.

According to "The Guinness Book of World Records," the current record for the largest country swing dance is 756 people — a record set in 2012.

However, the idea didn't begin as a world record attempt. It began as a fundraiser to help Jeff Hinz, the football coach and a government teacher at Post Falls High School. He was diagnosed with stage 4 lung cancer last fall, said Zack Goytowski, the event organizer.

Goytowski is a graduate student at the University of Idaho and was both a football player and student under Hinz at Post Falls High School. The original idea was to throw a small fundraiser in order to raise money to help pay for Hinz's medical treatments, he said.

Goytowski contacted Zane Larson, co-owner of the College Cabs taxi service in Pullman, and from there the idea grew.

Larson said Goytowski used to work for the taxi service and came to him looking for help getting sponsorship.

CJ's Nightclub in Moscow already hosts a swing dancing night on Wednesdays, and Larson said he had been speaking with CJ's owner Phil Roderick about the possibility of trying to work for the taxi service and a record attempt when Goytowski approached him with the fundraiser idea.

"They said 'If we're gonna do this, why don't we do it big?'" Goytowski said.

From there, the three set out to break a world record.

Goytowski has been hard at work trying to rally UI and Washington State University students to get participants for the record attempt.

Kelly Fisher is an ASUI senator and was a student of Hinz's at Post Falls High School.

Fisher said Goytowski came to him about the fundraiser and Fisher was immediately onboard.

With the attempt a few weeks away, Fisher said he is hoping to get a bill through ASUI to provide some funding to help promote the event on the UI campus and around Moscow.

"I would like to see as many people there as possible. Not only to break the record, but to show Coach Hinz what he meant to his students and his players and his community," Fisher said.

Goytowski said they are looking to get help from the Greek community at UI and WSU.

Adrian Gonzales is the WSU Greek Adviser and has been promoting the event.

"A lot of people I've talked to have been really into it," Gonzales said.

Gonzales has been going to Greek houses finding volunteers to help break the record, manage the event and help with security, clean up and teardown crews.

Larson and College Cabs have also been promoting the event. He said they have ads running on the back of the headrests in all of their cabs to get people pumped for the record attempt.

"I see this as being something huge ... something that can create a foundation to give back to people that need help in the area," Larson said. Goytowski said the fundraiser would not be possible without the main sponsors — CJ's Nightclub, College Cabs and Zeppoz.

The record attempt will be held at 6 p.m. in front of CJ's Nightclub on Main Street in Moscow. Larson said College Cabs will offer free transportation for people in Pullman to get to Moscow and back for the record attempt.

Only 758 participants in pairs of two are needed to break the current record, Goytowski said.

It doesn't cost anything to participate in the event, but they are asking for $5 donations, which will go to the Spokane Cancer Care Northwest in Spokane to help Hinz pay for his medical bills.

The street in front of CJ's will be closed to traffic for the attempt to take place, Goytowski said.

Goytowski also said that participants in the event will be able to register to get a certificate showing their contribution to the record, if it is indeed broken.

Song, dance and fine dining is part of upcoming India Night

George Wood Jr.

A healthy helping of Indian cuisine and traditional song and dance are just a few highlights of the 2014 India Night at the University of Idaho, presented by the Indian Students Association of UI.

India Night 2014 will be from 5-8 p.m., April 19, in the Student Union Building Ballroom. India Night performer and ISA president Megha Karki said there will be a lot to keep audiences engaged this year.

"This year, we are planning to have a lot of musical and dance performances, and in addition to that, the ISA will be cooking very delicious Indian Cuisine for the audience," Karki said.

Karki said she and 30 to 35 members of the ISA are cooking food the day of the event and most performances are featuring the talents of the ISA as well.

Specifically, she said that one of the India Night performers has had 22 years of classical singing experience and the dances will be from many different areas of India, in order to represent the variety of culture in the country.

"We will be performing a traditional dance from the Indian state of Gujarat, and we will also be having a Bollywood dance performance," Karki said. "Bollywood is India Night is $10 for UI students. Non-student tickets are $12 and the event is free for attendees under 7 years old.

ISA Treasurer Mahalingam Dhamodharan said ticket fees will cover the expenses of the event, as well next year's India Night.

Karki said in years past, the ISA has had enough money to contribute to a scholarship and other charitable endeavors with India Night ticket prices. She said she had interest in revitalizing this tradition in the future.

India Night has been put on by the ISA since the early 1990s, and the variety of performances and traditions taught has been different each year.

Selecting SBA leaders

Student Bar Association names representatives for 2014 - 2015

Arianna Anchustegui
Argonaut

The Student Bar Association at the University of Idaho law school, recently held elections for new officers for the executive board. Six positions were vacant: president, vice president, treasurer, secretary, sergeant-at-arms and Boise vice president for next year.

Each student at the college of law is automatically a member of SBA. SBA maintains and supports an Executive Board, a governing council and student organizations.

This year's SBA Sergeant-at-Arms, Ni-Amma Ollennu, was elected SBA President. Ollennu is studying general law and is finishing his second year at the law school. He is from Frisco, Texas and studied at University of Texas at El Paso, prior to moving to Moscow.

"I enjoy my time at the law school and I wanted to give back," Ollennu said. "I thought this position would allow me to represent the school that I have come to love."

The president of SBA's duty is to coordinate communication between faculty and students.

Katie Hendricks, a first-year law student was elected vice president. Hendricks is from Sumner, Wash. and studied psychology and justice studies at UI, before attending law school. She is now looking into criminal law based studies.

She said she was originally planning to run for a representative position, until Ollennu asked her to be his running mate.

"He was looking for in a partner to make the law school a more cohesive unit," Hendricks said.

The vice president assists the president and plans events and gatherings.

Bonnie Groller is originally from Spokane and is studying criminal law. She was elected secretary and is a first-year law student. She studied business finance and economics at Eastern Oregon University and wanted a leadership role in SBA, because it is the organization that oversees other groups in the law school.

"My particular position does the mentor mentee program for incoming first-year students," Groller said. "That's the most important thing I was excited about, helping students feel connected and part of the community."

As a first-year law student, elected treasurer and from Fruitland, Sandy Lockett will be responsible for making sure each club has funding for activities and programs at the law school. Lockett received her undergraduate degree at Eastern Oregon University.

"I wanted to be an integral part of making the most of the limited resources we have for the clubs we have at the law school," she said.

Loni Hinton is a first-year law student from Seattle studying business law. She was elected sergeant-at-arms and previously studied at the University of Washington. She said she ran because she wanted to be involved in student government. SBA sergeant-at-arms helps run meetings and works with students around the law school.

Currently a second-year law student, Katy Jibben, was elected Boise vice president. Jibben received her undergraduate degree in secondary education at Boise State University in her hometown. She is studying family law and began her role as SBA treasurer this year. Before attending UI's law school, Jibben taught high school students for five years. She said she'd been involved in student government throughout her life and constantly seeks leadership roles.

"With the Boise program, it's really important that we keep the two campuses connected as best as we can — especially since it's expanding," Jibben said.

The Boise vice president is responsible for posting video conferences between the Moscow and Boise law campuses, via Skype.

"I'll also be in charge of communicating with the dean and the faculty members, and I'll host events for the students," Jibben said.

Wilderness Act still going strong Environmental Law Society sponsors two events for 50th anniversary

Karter Krasselt
Argonaut

The Environmental Law Society will host a panel at 4 p.m. April 10 called "Wilderness at 50: Past, Present, and Future," as a tag-on event to a 7 pm. showing at the Kenworthy Performing Arts Centre of the documentary, "A Fierce Green Fire — The Battle for a Living Planet."

The panel discussion will provide an in-depth history of the Wilderness Act, while the film showing will chronicle the stories of people uniting to protect the world's land, water and wildlife.

The Wilderness Act turns 50 this fall, and according to Craig Watt, president of the University of Idaho Environmental Law Society, that number is indicative of a successful act.

"Congress hasn't overturned it," Watt said. "The reason they haven't overturned it is because it's important to the public. Wilderness is the epitome of American ruggedness, and thus part of our character."

The Wilderness Act grew out of this movement. The focus is around five stories where individuals have worked to protect the environment

Craig Watt, President

The act, signed into law by U.S. President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964, pertains to things such as protecting the remaining wilderness from intrusive highway building, excessive logging and gas drilling.

"Idaho has more wilderness area (acreage) than any other state in the lower 48," Watt said. "Wilderness is near and dear to many people's hearts — fishers, hunters, hikers, rafters. This fact alone makes it clear that the Wilderness Act is very relevant to the lives of Idahoans."

The panel will include topics such as the potential for new wilderness, the state of wilderness research and wilderness management challenges — such as wildfire and drought. Panel members will include UI faculty, representatives of the Idaho Conservation League, The Wilderness Society and Wilderness Watch.

"The environmental movement is very broad," Watt said. "It encompasses things like health, as well as natural places. Almost every city has environmental groups."

Attendees of the panel, as well as anyone interested in The Wilderness Act are invited to the Kenworthy for a showing of "A Fierce Green Fire," scheduled to begin at 7 p.m.

"A Fierce Green Fire' is a 50-year retrospective of the environmental movement," Watt said "The Wilderness Act grew out of this movement. The focus is around five stories where individuals have worked to protect the environment."

Watt said he looks forward to meeting new and interesting people at the events.

"A lot of this is about the personal stories — going hiking with your grandkids, or what have you," Watt said.

In addition to the film showing — which is sponsored by The Environmental Law Society, the Palouse Environmental Sustainability Coalition, the Idaho Conservation League and the UI Sustainability Center — there will be a slew of prize giveaways. Raffle and door prizes include 10 items from Northwest River Supplies, a $65 value massage from Balance Wellness Spa, $50 gift certificates from Gnosh and the Moscow Wine Company and numerous other donations from local businesses.

Gerald is a bright yellow waving air dancer who began his trek throughout the UI campus in Dean of Students Bruce Pitman's office Monday. Gerald can be sent to any office on the UI campus for $20. The proceeds go to the Make-A-Wish foundation.

"You don't purchase an air dancer or those wacky wavy inflatable guys and not name it, that's just rude," Moote said. For $20, Gerald can be sent to any office on UI grounds for one hour. Moote said time with Gerald can be purchased on the UI Marketplace website, <https://marketplace.uidaho.edu>. If Gerald invades your office and you do not want to put up with his shenanigans for the full hour, you can have Gerald removed for $30. General donations are also accepted on the UI Marketplace website. You can opt out of the fundraiser altogether by emailing the Office of Fraternity and Sorority Life. Bowles said anyone from a student, to a faculty member to an everyday Moscow citizen can purchase Gerald. Gerald can be sent anonymously, or not, and there is an option to leave a 100 character message with Gerald's arrival. "Someone is sending it to someone on their birthday, and they're like, 'Can he hold a birthday sign?...' and we can definitely make those accommodations, and make sure it's there during certain times or during staff hours when they're there," Bowles said. Bowles said she expects to see Gerald in her office a lot, as well as Pitman's office. In fact, Bowles said someone asked her if they could buy Gerald to put in Pitman's office for an entire day. Moote said she can't wait to see if a student will buy Gerald to put in a professor's office in response to a bad grade they got in their class. Moote said Gerald even has his own Twitter account at @UI-Gerald and that is the best way for someone to follow Gerald on his journey across campus. "We're going to be posting pictures of him wherever he goes," Moote said. "So, we throw him in an office, we take a picture and then they have the option to send it away and stuff like that. But that's going to be the best way to keep track of Gerald's travels and adventures." Bowles said she was excited to see participation and enthusiasm for this fundraiser before it even began. She said she thinks it's a good sign that they'll be able to help make Chase's dream come true. "All of our other philanthropies normally just involve the students, and we really wanted to reach it out to campus and get them involved as well, and have them take part in this fun traveling adventure around campus with Gerald," Bowles said. they have no intention to leave permanently. He described him and his wife as friends who have a lot in common. He said they enjoy their time together and are looking forward to being more involved in the community. Pitman is filled with stories of his time at the university and things he's observed as it's changed over the years. But he said he's glad to have the summer to reflect on those stories and his time before he officially steps down. Until then, he plans to continue to enjoy the work that he does and is grateful and surprised by the outpouring of attention his announcement has received. "I'm grateful for the kind words and for the gracious silence of those eager to see me go," Pitman said. Kaitlyn Krasselt can be reached at arg-news@uidaho.edu

AWARENESS

"The best way, I think, to market to people is laughter," Hewitt said. "Because it just relaxes you. And it's a nice way to hand them something without them feeling like they were left out ... or uncomfortable." Hewitt said the most common STD students at the University of Idaho contract is chlamydia. She said this STD is contracted by students at many college campuses across the U.S. Chlamydia is a bacterial infection of the genital areas. If left untreated, chlamydia can cause pelvic inflammatory disease in women, and an increased risk of infection of other STDs, including HIV, in both men and women. Another commonly contracted STD by college students is Genital Human Papillomavirus (HPV), Hewitt said. HPV is a viral infection of more than 40 types that infects genital areas and can cause warts and cancer. Sarah Clark, another Vandal

Health Ed intern, said STDs can lead to infertility if ignored. Clark said all STDs are treatable and most are curable, so there isn't a reason not to get tested. "If you're worried about having an STD, that's stressful," Hewitt said. "And in college we already have so many stressors on our plate. You could be stressing yourself out about something you don't even have and all you'd have to do is go into your doctor's office, talk to them, get tested, and then that's one less thing you have to worry about." Hewitt said she can't emphasize the importance of getting tested enough. She said that you either have an STD or you don't, so choosing to not find out your status is pointless. "It's not something to be ashamed about," Clark said. "I mean, a lot of people have sex, and so you just want to take those precautions and make sure that you're safe, the people you're with are safe and that is something that you should be proud of." Erin Bamer can be reached at arg-news@uidaho.edu

"We thought there was wind, because Titan's equator has sand dunes which need wind to move around, but we weren't seeing it," he said. "This is science, there's what you expect and what you get and if you don't get what you expect, then you need to rethink." One of the ideas for not seeing waves on Titan was that it was the wrong season, he said. Titan's north has been in winter for many years. Titan goes around the Sun with Saturn, making a single season last for seven years. The research to find waves on Titan began in 2004. Therefore, the real search for waves has only been in the last few months. As Titan begins to get into northern spring, a computer model suggested the winds will pick up and the possibility of seeing more waves could be probable, he said. Another idea for the lack of waves found on Titan was that the lakes are not a liquid form like Earth's lakes but a viscous form like molasses, he said. The waves that were found on Titan were from a specular reflection off of the lake Punga Mare, which is a glare or a glint from the sun off of a lake, Barnes said. If there are waves, the reflection changes the shape of that glint. "We only saw it in a couple isolated areas, which is implying that the whole lake isn't wavy but rather we're just getting to a point where the winds are just big enough to pick up waves in a couple different locations," he said. "You see this on Earth too, it's called cat's paw." The angle of the waves was 6 degrees which when imputed into a computer model simulated to about two centimeters high, he said. Though this is small it shows an onset of wave activity and perhaps as Titan continues into the northern summer the winds will pick up and the waves will become larger. It's not a sure thing, there could be other explanations, he said. "It's the first indication that we might be seeing waves and we're hoping that as we proceed with the rest of the conceding mission we'll be able to see more and more of this as the season progresses," Barnes said. In the future, a mission will be sent to Titan and will land in one of the lakes, he said. When landing in the lakes, researchers and designers must know what the viscosity of the lake is — because if it's like molasses, then instead of splashing down into the lake there will be a "splat" and a loss of a half a billion dollar spacecraft, Barnes said. Learning about the mechanisms of wave generation is fairly understood on Earth, but it has never been tested in one-seventh gravity like on Titan, he said. "We're hoping to at least verify that our ideas make sense as far as how waves are generated on Earth," Barnes said. Emily Aizawa can be reached at arg-news@uidaho.edu

Josh McCain takes off on a scramble attempt against Old Dominion last season. McCain was a special-package quarterback for the Vandals last season, scoring three touchdowns. He's converted into a wide receiver in 2014 and is quickly becoming one of Idaho's top targets on the outside.

Quarterback turned receiver has breakout performance only a week into spring practice

Sean Kramer
Argonaut

It didn't take Idaho quarterback Matt Linehan long to realize what kind of athletic weapon Idaho had at its disposal in Joshua McCain. It actually happened during a bowling trip the two Vandal quarterbacks took shortly after arriving in Moscow for the first time last summer. That's when Linehan told his offensive coordinator, Kris Cinkovich, about the freak athlete Idaho had.

"I remember Matt Linehan when they both got here this summer, and they went bowling and Matt told me after that Josh was the best athlete he's ever seen. I said 'You went bowling?'" Cinkovich said. "He goes, 'Believe me.' We saw it, you can see it in his ball skills — he's very athletic."

At the time, the two were coming in as new Idaho quarterbacks, slated to compete with each-other this spring for positioning on Idaho's quarterback depth chart.

Instead, McCain has now become the weapon of choice for the two quarterbacks competing for the starting position, Linehan and Chad Chalich.

After a conversation with coach Paul Petrino shortly following the conclusion of the 2013 season, McCain began the transition to wide receiver. Now, one week into spring practice, he is staking his claim for a top spot in Idaho's depth chart at the position. In his first scrimmage at his new position, McCain led all receivers with 218 yards and five touchdowns.

"He's just a great all-around athlete. He has everything you want at receiver — he's fast, has great feet, he can get open whenever you want, he has great hands," Chalich said. "He's a great receiver, he made plays like you saw today."

Prior to this spring, McCain had never played receiver. His experience on offense was exclusively as a quarterback through the high school and junior college levels.

He had interest from FBS schools, coming out of De Anza College as a wide receiver, but Idaho was the only school to give McCain an opportunity to play quarterback at the highest level, De Anza coach Dan Atencio told The Argonaut shortly after his

Pittman's Vandals get a draw against his former team

Joshua Gamez

Going into the game with Gonzaga on Saturday, the Vandals wanted to show how far they'd come under new coach and former Gonzaga assistant coach, Derek Pittman.

The Vandals carried their experience from last week's 2-0 loss to Washington State into this weekend's doubleheader and improved on their pressing on the defense and overall organization on the field, Pittman said.

The result in Spokane was a 1-1 draw against the Zags, followed by a 1-1 draw against Central Washington.

"I thought they played fantastic — they came out with the right mentality," Pittman said. "We focused on what we needed to do to be successful and we executed it very well."

Pittman implemented a strategy that emphasized attacking on offense. This plan proved effective early in the game, as the Vandals scored their first goal within about five minutes of the start of the match. The goal came when Kavita Battan slipped behind the defense and hit a low cross that Alyssa Pease hit into net, giving the Vandals a quick 1-0 lead.

After gaining the advantage, the Vandals had to defend the Bulldogs — who ran a very similar offense to the one they had been practicing.

The Idaho men's golf team is enjoying temperatures in the high 80s this Monday and Tuesday, while competing in Scottsdale, Ariz. at the Wyoming Cowboy Classic.

The Vandals, after one round of play, were tied for ninth place in the 21-team tournament.

Rankings from golfweek.com showed three schools ranked in the top 70 in the country competing in the tournament. With Oklahoma at 16th, Brigham Young University at 44th and Colorado at 64th.

Idaho has fallen four spots since the Oregon Duck Invitational, going from being ranked 106th to 110th.

Aaron Cockerill led the way for the Vandals in round one firing a 68, which put him in a tie for fifth at the end of the round.

By Tuesday morning, the team was finished with round two and was in 13th place heading into Tuesday.

Cockerill was tied for 24th and was three-over-par through five holes in his second round.

Jared du Toit, also tied for 24th, shot a 71 one-over-par first round and was even through six holes in round two.

Rylee Iacolucci was tied for 51st, shot a 70-even-par in his first round and three-over-par through four holes in round two.

Ryan Porch and Sean McMullen were tied for 79th, with a 75-five-over-par first round and both one-over-par through six holes in round two.

The Vandals will finish up round two Monday evening and will be back on the course Tuesday morning to finish up the Cowboy Classic.

2014 was good for Vandals

Idaho programs had success over the year in various sports

The school year is beginning to wind down and many people are either getting ready to enjoy the summer or are getting ready to graduate. This includes many of the athletes within the Idaho athletic department. And boy, do most of them have stories to tell.

This year was the last year of competing in the WAC for most of Idaho's programs and what a way to go out. Many teams were able to go the extra mile to bring success to the programs they represented this season.

Most recently, the women's basketball team was able to secure a second bid to the NCAA Women's Tournament with its second straight WAC Tournament title. That of course came after the Vandal women were able to wrap up their first WAC regular season title — in 29 years.

Meanwhile, the men's basketball team shocked a lot of people by advancing to the WAC Tournament title game. They may not have received the result they wanted, but it's a good look for the fans and recruits to see the team make it within one game of a NCAA Tournament berth.

Other sports on campus have brought success as well.

Women's cross country was able to secure its fourth straight WAC Championship, which is an amazing accomplishment for the seniors — Alycia Butterworth, Hannah Kiser, Holly Stanton Browning and Ailene MacPherson — that have been in the program for four years. Even though those four seniors are graduating, the cross country team will not lose much, as it has amazing younger depth on its roster.

The men's indoor track and field team were also able to wrap up a conference championship at the WAC Indoor Championships. It took a team effort, but they were able to pull it off in front of a home crowd in the Kibbie Dome.

Rick Clark
Argonaut

This meant three WAC Championships in three different sports, which indeed is an impressive feat.

Many other teams were able to come close to winning their respective WAC Championships.

The swim and dive team was able to place second in San Antonio at the WAC Swimming and Diving Championships. The women's indoor track and field team took third in their tournament.

Plus, there are still sports on campus still in season that are threats in their championships.

Women's tennis, which has been ranked in the top 75 in ITA polls at various points during the season, looks like it has a shot at the championship.

Both men's and women's track and field teams are also considerable threats within the WAC. Idaho track and field coach Wayne Phipps knows what he's doing and could add to his collection of 10 championship rings.

Idaho has seen success in many sports this season and that is a good sign for the sports that are heading to new conferences. Most Idaho sports will end up in the Big Sky, with football going to the Sun Belt for 2014-2015.

It doesn't matter which conference the Vandals ends up in — they have shown that they can win in several sports and they will continue to have success and improve in the future.

Struggling in SoCal

Women's golf in last place at the end of round one

Korbin McDonald

The women's golf team is down in sunny Southern California, competing in The Gold Rush at Yorba Linda Country Club in Yorba Linda, Calif.

The team was playing without junior Leilanie Kim, one of Idaho's most consistent performers.

Competing without one of their better players, the Vandals were in 11th place at the end of the first round, shooting 324 collectively. Idaho was 30 strokes behind the leader Gonzaga, which fired a 294 the first round.

The tournament had four teams competing who were ranked in golfweek.com's top 100. In the ranking, Gonzaga is at 50th, Long Beach State at 75th, UC-Irvine at 83rd and Cal-Sate Fullerton at 84th. Idaho is currently ranked 107th.

By Tuesday morning the Vandals moved to 9th place and were 59-over-par collectively.

For the Vandals, Kaitlyn Oster tied for 11th, with a 77 in round one and one-over-par through nine holes in round two. Kristin Strankman tied for 23rd, with a 79 in round one and three-over-par through 12-holes in round two. Amy Hasenoehrl was tied for 55th, with an 83 in round one and eight-over-par through 12-holes in round two. Rachel Choi also tied for 55th, with an 85 in round one and six-over-par through nine holes in round two.

Idaho will look to improve its position today, when they'll hit the links for round three to finish the tournament.

The experiment turned out to be a struggle for McCain. A running-threat, he was a special package dual-threat quarterback, but he only rushed for one touchdown and never had a rushing day of over 50 yards. Three interceptions to two touchdowns didn't help his cause.

"I knew I wanted to get on the field, didn't want to sit on the bench," McCain said. "I wanted to have my talents out there to help the team out. I knew if I'm on the field I can help the team out, it's all a team aspect, that's all it is."

Giving McCain that opportunity could pay off for Idaho in 2014, who appear to have added a playmaker on the outside with the position change.

"You know what he can do is he can just play the ball in the air so well, whether it's a little underthrown in the air, it's a deep ball in the air, he has great natural skills," Petrino said after McCain's five touchdown performance on Saturday. "It makes me look like a big dumb, whatever you call it, for not playing him there last year. He looks pretty special."

He received all five of his touchdowns from Chalich, ranging from a deep sideline route down the right side for a 65-yard score, to following Chalich to the sideline for a tip-toeing touchdown in the corner of the end zone.

Throughout all of his eight receptions, McCain looked like a natural at the position on Saturday.

"He's really fast for one," receiver Jacob Sannon said. "He likes to pump his arms, that's basically what coach emphasizes to do is pumping our arms, running after the catch which he's really good at."

McCain is battling senior Dezmon Epps and sophomore Deon Watson for one of the top two starting positions, but regardless is in good position to continue getting a lot of snaps. McCain will have two more scrimmages and the April 25 Silver and Gold spring game to solidify that position. So far, so good for the former quarterback.

"Gonzaga threw a number of numbers at us and put us under a lot of pressure — took a lot of shots on goal and took numerous corner kicks," Pittman said.

After the Vandals first goal, they were able to hold the Bulldogs scoreless until right before the half when the Bulldogs tied the game. After that, the Vandals rose to the occasion and held Gonzaga scoreless for the entire second half and the game ended in a 1-1 draw.

After the 1-1 draw against the Bulldogs, the Vandals faced the Central Washington Wildcats. Unlike their first contest of the day, the Vandals allowed the Wildcats to strike first about halfway through the first half.

"We played three very good halves out of four," Pittman said. "We didn't come out with the same energy — we took our foot off the gas a little bit."

After a few halftime adjustments, the Vandals got back to being the aggressive, swarming defense that Pittman said will make them successful this fall. They didn't allow CWU to offensively advance out of its half of the field for close to 20 minutes of the second half.

After a barrage of shots on the CWU goal, Pease was finally able to tie the game 1-1.

Pittman said the two games presented different challenges to the team that will help them move forward. The main thing the Vandals need to work on is creating cleaner scoring opportunities on offense, he said, adding that the team will learn from these games and it should help make them a better team.

Gonzaga and CWU play different styles of soccer and it showed during the games. In the first game, the Vandals struck early and had to focus on defending from Bulldog attacks. In the second game, Idaho had to claw back into the game after giving up the first score.

The Vandals will play next at home on April 12, when they host North Idaho College on the Sprint Turf before heading back to Spokane to face Concordia.

Nikitin this week earned the men's WAC Player of the Week award. He went 2-0 this week at the No. 1 singles position, defeating Seattle's Kevin Lynch (6-1, 3-6, 6-3) and Hawaii's Nils Schuhmann (6-3, 7-5). Nikitin has won three consecutive singles matches and continues to be a force at the Vandals' No. 1 position. Nikitin and doubles partner Jose Bendeck won their doubles match against Portland, 8-5.

Roberto Asencio - men's basketball and football

Roberto Asencio

After completing the men's basketball season a few weeks ago, the 6-foot-9, 245-pound center from the Dominican Republic has decided to try football. He redshirted for the basketball program this season. This spring he decided to go out for a 14-day tryout. It's clear Asencio isn't the most skilled football player at the moment, but his physical strength would be an asset for a Vandal offense trying to improve. Idaho coach Paul Petrino worked with Asencio during practice on mechanics for the wide receiver position.

Andrea Pikes and Meghan Palesch - women's track and field

This Saturday, Idaho freshmen Pikes and Palesch each earned double victories in separate events in Spokane. Pikes was victorious in the 100-meter and 200 dash, while Palesch took the 100 hurdles and 400 hurdles.

"Overall, I am pleased with how the meet went and look forward to competing at Arizona State next weekend when the team is rested," Idaho coach Wayne Phipps said.

Symptom of bigger problem

Friday's elevated levels of chlorine met with slow action, indicative of larger communication problems

Good news, drinking water, cooking food, washing hands and taking a shower are all now safe things to do on the University of Idaho campus, now that the chlorine concentration has returned to a safe level as of 4:30 p.m. last Friday.

A pump failure in the chlorination system prompted the UI Environmental Health and Safety Office to recommend that no one should drink on-campus water, due to elevated chlorine levels.

What was most alarming about this entire situation was not the water in the pipes, but how UI administrators failed to properly communicate with the university community on an issue of public safety.

UI facilities first acknowledged the problem at 1 p.m. on Friday, when they sent out a one-line email to building alert contacts — a group limited to only a few people in each building. The email not only neglected to give any direction on how to prevent people from consuming the water, but more importantly, did not identify the severity of the contamination — leaving many to wonder about the harm it could cause.

There were no other campus-wide alerts or emails sent out to let UI staff, faculty and students know about the situation.

If only there was a system in place that could warn students, faculty and staff in a timely manner about dangerous situations on campus through multiple communication devices. Oh wait, the Vandal Alert system does exist.

UI administrators have sent out Vandal Alert messages for earthquake drills, snow days and a moose on campus. Why was the Vandal Alert system not utilized?

The Argonaut made contact with UI Facilities at 2 p.m. to confirm the contamination was legitimate. At this point, UI Facilities informed The Argonaut they would need to get approval from UI Communications and Marketing before releasing information to the media. Thirty minutes later, Facilities confirmed the elevated chlorine levels, and

The Argonaut reported it on its Facebook page.

It should be common sense, but administrators and staff should not have to seek approval from media relations to confirm a public safety hazard. The university has fostered a culture that disregards transparency and openness, with the media relations department at the forefront of muzzling information.

UI administrators should be able to have an open conversation with the media, especially when the topic is public safety.

The contamination was resolved in a timely manner, but it revealed a disturbing lack of communication between UI administration and the general public.

Why do we even have Vandal Alert?

I am curious what the University of Idaho deems worthy of a Vandal Alert. After all, according to the UI website, the purpose of a Vandal Alert is to provide official information about "emergencies that may disrupt university operations or threaten our university community." If Friday's elevated chlorine levels rendering UI water undrinkable doesn't account for a threat to the university community, I don't know what does.

False information, lasting consequences

Misinformation can travel quickly due to social media, accuracy is key

I might be the only one with a crazy uncle who preaches pseudoscience and blames the Illuminati for everything from Pearl Harbor to rising gas prices, we all know someone like Uncle Joe. Someone who is so wrong it's hard to believe they are truly misinformed. The good thing about Uncle Joe and people like him, is it's incredibly easy to laugh off their ignorance and not take them seriously.

However, it's a lot harder to recognize when a reputable source is unknowingly spreading misinformation. It happens a lot more often than one would think — especially today, when the Internet allows inaccurate facts to travel quickly. Now more than ever, people need to be confident in the accuracy of what they read and more importantly, what they share with others.

Not to suggest you should follow Uncle Joe's lead, but a healthy dose of skepticism never hurt anyone.

It's especially important to fact check and cross-reference information in a digital world, where rumor and speculation can be shared in a short amount of time. The public witnessed this during the coverage of the Boston Marathon bombings last year.

Shortly after the bombings, news organizations and social media around the country spewed misinformation that was at best heavily sensationalized, and at worst downright false.

For example, two men are suing The New York Post after they released a cover that portrayed them as suspects in the bombing investigation. One problem — both of the men were completely innocent. This sort of publicity is bound to have a negative impact on their lives, and when combined with the power of the Internet, it did.

The desire to catch the attackers fueled by media falsehoods quickly spread on social media. Members of the popular website Reddit wrongfully accused Sunil Tripathi, a missing Brown University student whose body was later found in the Providence River, of carrying out the attack.

Fortunately, the real perpetrators were identified and dealt with, but the trouble inherited by the Tripathi family, due to the social media buzz, will remain a prime example of the consequences of false information.

This often times unintentional spread of inaccurate information is a bigger problem than it may seem. It happens to every news organization, at one point or another.

These mistakes are usually discovered and fixed, and all media organizations should be

Keep the 'b'-word

Ban Bossy campaign looks to form leaders among girls in wrong way

The Ban Bossy campaign released a video a few weeks ago that featured women from all walks of life, such as Beyonce, Jennifer Garner and Condoleezza Rice. They and other women featured, stood in front of the camera and proudly denounced the word bossy, and encouraged others to join them in their effort to ban it.

Ironically, these women came off as nothing less than bossy.

According to the campaign, more girls than boys lose interest in leadership roles by middle school. Apparently, their fear of the dreaded "b"-word prevents them from wanting to become leaders.

So, the campaign is essentially focused on helping make leaders out of people who allow themselves to be scared out of leadership roles.

As wonderful as the campaign might sound, the problem is that banning anything, particularly words, does nothing to encourage true leadership in anyone. Such an action only works to fuel the entitlement mentality that seems pervasive among Americans today.

What is the true message behind the Ban Bossy video? That women leaders can emerge when society removes obstacles in their paths.

Something has to be banned in order to make women feel like they can enter into a leadership role. You know, just like with Susan B. Anthony, Harriet Tubman, Rosa Parks or even Margaret Thatcher.

The Ban Bossy video and campaign encourages younger generations of women to take the easy way out and claim victimhood. It encourages them to pin blame on someone or something else, in order to move to the top.

As silly as it sounds, what really needs to be taught is what Rocky said in the sixth film of the series "Rocky Balboa." At one point in the movie, Rocky stood on a dark street, facing his son. He spoke to him gently at first, but then became more severe as his son scoffed at him.

"Now if you know what you're worth, then go and get what you're worth," Rocky said. "But ya gotta be willing to take the hits, and not pointing fingers saying you ain't where you wanna be because of him or her or anybody. Cowards do that, and that ain't you!"

I know this comes from a fictional character in a cheesy flick. But, this scene and quote is more substantial and powerful than anything I've ever accountable for their actions. But in the new world of social media, readers must be aware of the news organization and their reputation. In a perfect world, we could trust every news outlet at all times. But this is far from a perfect world, and the spread of misinformation can be a lot more dangerous than it appears on the surface. All it takes is false information and people willing to latch onto it. Whether it's Uncle Joe, The New York Post or The New York Times, it's important to demand accuracy when disseminating information. Justin Ackerman can be reached at arg-opinion@uidaho.edu heard from any one part of the Ban Bossy campaign. Rocky described how one truly becomes a leader. You're going to have critics. You're going to have people saying all sorts of things about you — likely beyond the point where they're simply calling you names. Even if you're not striving to be a leader, you're still going to go through this. That's life. You have to deal with it like everyone else. You're going to take "hits," but you have to move on. At some level, even the women featured in the video had to go through the very thing I described. And guess what? They managed to become leaders in their own right. Nobody was around to ban bossy for them, and somehow they managed to get to the top. Again, I dislike using a film to extend words of wisdom. But honestly, all children — gender aside — are better off following advice from a fictional character in a fictional world than following blabber from real human beings who have attained some form or other of leadership in the real world. Andrew Jenson can be reached at arg-opinion@uidaho.edu
