A Vandal love tale

Alumni look back on their college years at UI

Savannah Williams
Argonaut

Kenneth and Lois Siebe met in 1940 while still attending high school in Challis, Idaho. But when Kenneth turned 18, he was shipped out for war during World War II.

"We both put our education on hold," said Lois, who worked for the U.S. Forest Service while Kenneth was overseas.

Kenneth returned home in 1946. The following summer, he and Lois were married and began their education together at the University of Idaho. The couple has been married 69 years and counting.

Even though some time has passed, the couple made many fond memories while at UI.

There was the time UI football players stole Butch the cougar from Washington State University before the big football game.

The time they sat under the moonlight in the Arboretum and were startled by campus security. The couple even has fond memories of their loyal 1939 Hudson Coupe that went with them everywhere they did.

Kenneth was able to attend college on the GI Bill, and said the university his brother attended before the war was much different. He said UI was a smaller school and it cost only his brother $650 to attend.

"The University of Idaho at the time my brother went was a very small nice little university about four to five hundred students," Kenneth said. "After the war, of course, all of us were eligible for the GI Bill. So this little university went from about 500 students to about 4,000 in one year."

Kenneth said the sudden growth of population had a significant impact on the university and UI had to adapt as a result.

"They moved temporary barracks buildings in and everything for classrooms," Kenneth said. "Housing was non-existent so they moved in hundreds of these 17-foot trailers."

The couple moved into one of those trailers after they got married and were attending school.

Kenneth and Lois said they have many memories while living in the trailer, such as the Moscow winter of 1948 — one of the harshest winters of the time — and how the daily cost of food was just $1.37.

They earned their money from working year round and focused on their studies while slowly spending their earnings.

Lois was an art major, and she remembered all her fun times in the art department, while Kenneth majored in business administration and accounting.

Kenneth said he was fortunate to attend UI in the first place.

Epps indefinitely suspended for allegedly slapping girlfriend over weekend

Ryan Tarinelli
Argonaut

The Vandal Football team has indefinitely suspended wide receiver Dezmon Epps for allegedly slapping his girlfriend over the weekend, according to a statement from the University of Idaho Athletic Department.

"I have zero tolerance for any inappropriate behavior toward women," said Vandal football coach Paul Petrino in the statement. "This is a serious allegation and I take it as such. The penalties are immediate and substantive."

Epps

Epps status on the team may be reconsidered after the conclusion of an ongoing investigation into the allegations. The investigation will be run through the Dean of Students office.

Earlier this school year, Epps was identified as being involved in an alleged Aug. 16 shoplifting incident at the VandalStore. The VandalStore decided not to press charges on Epps.

After the incident, the football team took immediate disciplinary action in addition to "strict daily behavioral requirements," for Epps, according to an earlier statement from Petrino.

The allegation is another off-the-field incident for Epps.

In April 2014, Epps was arrested in Pullman on suspicion of driving under the influence.

Months later, Epps was charged for petty theft after allegedly shoplifting items from WinCo in Moscow and was subsequently dismissed from the football team.

Earlier this year, Epps was charged with two misdemeanors for driving without privileges and for driving without a required ignition interlock device.

Epps caught nine passes for 98 yards in Idaho's 27-13 homecoming win against Louisiana-Monroe Saturday. Epps leads the Sun Belt Conference in receptions per game with 10.2 and leads the conference in receiving yards per game with 126.2. Epps also returns punts and has played some defensive back in recent games.

Epps joined the UI football team in 2013 as a community college transfer and was the team's leading receiver that season.

HALLOWEEN

Scares with Staben

Stabens host 2nd annual Halloween party Tuesday

Katie Colson
Argonaut

University of Idaho President Chuck Staben and his wife Mary Beth Staben are throwing a party — costumes are encouraged.

The Stabens will host the 2nd annual President's Halloween Open House from 6-8 p.m. Tuesday at the President's Residence near the UI Golf Course.

The event is open to students, community members, faculty and staff.

When the Stabens first came to UI, Mary Beth said they were surprised to hear there was no Halloween event put on by the school.

"What do we do for Halloween? How can we not do something for Halloween?" Mary Beth said of her reaction to finding out there was no Halloween event.

Mary Beth said Halloween has always been a big tradition in their family.

When their kids were little, Mary Beth said she would dress them up every year in costumes she had made. Mary Beth said they raised their kids in Lexington, Kentucky, and she said it was a great place for Halloween.

She said they lived in a neighborhood full of families, the weather was always nice and Halloween was always a big deal.

Chuck said it would sometimes look a bit like the end scene of "ET," there were so many kids out and about.

Chuck said they also lived in San Francisco for 10 years and Halloween was always a big deal.

Last year, Kevin Ketchie, assistant to the President and Presidential Events, agreed to organize a UI event. They decided to hold the event at the President's Residence, and make it an open house where people can mingle — in costume — and talk over refreshments, Chuck said.

Costumes of offense

Some costumes are worn at the expense of others

Jessica Gee
Argonaut

The lines can be a bit blurred when it comes to which Halloween costumes are considered appropriate. Yet, every year, what some people wear has larger implications than anticipated.

Leathia Botello, coordinator at the Office of Multicultural Affairs, said cultural appropriation when it comes to Halloween costumes is a gray area that students may not know that much about.

"It's basically one culture taking parts from another culture that they are not a part of," Botello said of cultural appropriation.

She said it is important for the University of Idaho to make campus is a safe and inclusive environment for all cultures.

Botello has worked at UI for 16 years and said there haven't been many incidents with offensive costumes, but it is definitely more prevalent during Halloween.

She said she recalls some UI students wearing blackface a couple of years ago. These students were likely not trying to be malicious toward anyone, but the costumes were still offensive, Botello said.

"The history of blackface during slave times was a way for white people to keep African Americans oppressed," Botello said.

Yet, she said that the incident was a good learning experience for those students.

Botello said Native American and Latino costumes are some of the common themes she has seen of the years. She said most of the time students think a costume looks cool and are not intentionally trying to upset anyone.

A Crumbs recipe

Roasted pumpkin seeds

It is the time of year when people carve their pumpkins and just waste the seeds. Don't throw away the seeds. With a little preparation, they taste great and make an awesome snack on the go.

Ingredients

- 1 1/2 cups pumpkin seeds
- 1 tablespoon butter
- 1/2 tablespoon salt
- 1/2 tablespoon pepper
- 2 teaspoons of garlic powder

Directions

1. Preheat oven to 300 degrees Fahrenheit
2. After carving your pumpkin, separate the pulp from the seeds
3. Wash seeds with cold water and dry
4. In a bowl mix together melted butter, salt, pepper and garlic powder
5. Add seeds to the mixture and coat them evenly

HOMECOMING

A night of noise

Vandals turn out, turn up for annual Homecoming Serpentine and Bonfire

Hannah Shirley
Argonaut

Washed in the light of the stage at the Homecoming Bonfire Friday evening, Mary Beth Staben shouted over hundreds of screaming Vandals.

"I just love the noise," she said, standing beside her husband, University of Idaho President Chuck Staben.

And noise there was.

It began atop the hill overlooking the UI Golf Course, where the Vandal Marching Band was waiting and ready to lead the Serpentine march to the annual Homecoming Bonfire. The parade to the Kibbie Dome started at 8 p.m. sharp — but the marching band had started long before that.

Marching band members donned glow sticks, capes, ship captain hats, wigs and Vandal horns.

"It's kind of a party — it's tons of fun," said Jake Snarr, a drummer in the marching band.

For many students, it was their first time witnessing the annual spectacle. As freshman Gaby Broden walked behind the Serpentine, she said she was surprised by how wild the event was.

"I thought there would just be a few people here," she said.

There were a few more than that. As Serpentine wound down New Greek Row and onto Old Greek Row, students poured out of houses to join the fray. Besides the students, dozens of families and alumni lined the street for the festivities.

Many walked alongside the band, and several jumped right in and marched with them. A few drummers peeled away from the march to run through a crowd gathered in front of Gamma Phi Beta sorority, popping loud staccato notes on their drums.

As the procession made its way to the Kibbie Dome, the crowd only multiplied as more students from Greek houses and residence halls joined the crowd.

The marching band arrived in the Kibbie Dome parking lot, blasting a final round of the Fight Song for the now-hundreds of spectators.

With the final, thunderous cheer, a second rally began. Not of the marching band, but of Vandal coaches and athletes who made their way across the stage to take the microphone one by one to shout cheers through booming speakers.

It wasn't like the crowd needed the encouragement.

The shoulder-to-shoulder spectators hushed themselves for the announcement of Homecoming King and Queen. Nominees were called to the stage one by one. A pair of red sashes gleamed in the harsh white light. Finally, the announcement came.

UI 2015 Homecoming King and Queen: Nate Fisher and Anna Pratt.

The crowd roared with excitement. The winners' friends swarmed the side of the stage, Snapchat open on their phones, ready to capture a moment of electricity with the reigning Homecoming Royalty.

"It's such an honor," Pratt said from beneath a pile of hugs from her friends.

"Overjoyed," Fisher said of his reaction. "Over the moon. On top of the world. Any of those three?"

Nate Fisher Sr., the newly crowned Homecoming King's dad, was less articulate, screaming as he twirled circles in the air with the glow sticks around his wrists.

Homecoming King and Queen Nate Fisher and Anna Pratt talk at the Bonfire Rally Friday evening.

Irish Martos | Argonaut

"You can write that his father is giddy," Fisher Sr. said while jumping up and down.

Meanwhile, firefighters were setting a 10-foot stack of pallets alight for the Homecoming Bonfire. The flames grew slowly then erupted all at once, causing spectators to throw their hands up. Some were surprised by the heat but others because they knew a selfie opportunity when they saw one.

For Iain Ferguson, the Homecoming Bonfire is part of a larger culture that's foreign to him, but that just makes the night a treat.

ARG

For more news content, visit uiargonaut.com

Ferguson is a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity at the University of Lethbridge in Alberta, Canada.

"Our school doesn't have a band," Ferguson said. "We'll get to tailgate (here). We're going to the game — we all bought our tickets online."

His house, along with two sororities from Lethbridge, go on a homecoming road trip every year to partake in the homecoming festivities of American universities.

"It's a lot of fun," he said. "It's fun to meet people from other fraternities. We've been openly welcomed."

Unlike Ferguson, the homecoming spirit isn't foreign to alumni Dennis Bines. For Bines, who graduated from UI in 1971, the festivities just bring back memories.

"We try to come every year," Bines said. "The kids enjoy it. The grandkids enjoy it."

He said much has changed since he was a student — but there's just as much that hasn't.

"Everyone is still just proud to be a Vandal," he said. "That hasn't changed."

Constructing an all-inclusive brewery

Rants and Raves Brewery plans to open in December

Taylor Nadauld
Argonaut

A nasty Craigslist ad is behind the name of Rants and Raves Brewery, a new brewery under construction in Moscow.

Founder Neil Attebury said Rants and Raves Brewery got its name after he received an anonymous negative Craigslist review toward himself. Attebury thought it was funny, and decided to name his brewery after it, he said.

Rants and Raves, located on North Jackson Street near the Moscow Recycling Center, is expected to open by mid-December.

Attebury had built a barn for a small goat farm he owned when a friend — who will be the master brewer at Rants and Raves — taught Attebury how to brew his own beer. Attebury said he enjoyed it so much, he transformed the barn into a brewery.

Since then, the hobby has become a business for Attebury and his family.

Attebury said Moscow has a lot of bars, but nothing where people of all types are welcomed.

Attebury said the brewery will have areas everyone can enjoy, including a sports section in the front and a children's section for kids to play video games and color.

"We want to create that type of atmosphere where everybody is welcome," Attebury said. "You could be in a suit, you could be in a pair of shorts. It doesn't matter. This is a good place to come and socialize."

Attebury and his wife Ramirose have lived in Moscow for eight years. He said they could never find a bar that was kid-friendly.

"My vision is to have a place that's comfortable for moms and dads," Attebury said.

The brewery will also include conference rooms for students or others looking to study or do business.

Attebury said the brewery will hold classes every Wednesday where guests can learn to brew their own beer recipes and have them featured in the following weeks at the brewery.

"We want to educate people more on the brewer experience," Attebury said.

Attebury also said the company will host local musicians, and plans to serve breakfast the first Saturday of every month — as well as a new breakfast beer.

Before he started brewing, Attebury owned a construction company.

Attebury said he expects every employee to get involved with the construction of the brewery, even his chefs.

Future service manager, Suzie Lafountain was crouched on the floor doing detail paint work on the brewery walls Thursday afternoon. She said she is excited to work for the company.

"You know, it's gonna be a blast," Lafountain said. "It's interesting, it's been fun ever since I've been here, the people that work here are awesome and it's like a little family."

Despite the passion he has shown for the new business, Attebury said he has only been brewing for five years.

COUPLE

"I had no idea what I wanted to take when I came because I just knew that I was so fortunate to have the GI Bill that I could go to college, otherwise I'd have no chance," Kenneth said. "I expected to learn something that I could make a living with."

After graduating in 1950, the couple had a few temporary jobs.

Kenneth was an accountant — a job he said he absolutely hated — and Lois gave art lessons before becoming a secretary and working for the county in Boise. Kenneth later got a different job bidding for building supplies that he enjoyed much more.

Kenneth said one thing he's learned is that students should enjoy each day to the fullest.

"It took me a whole lifetime to do that," Kenneth said. "Take something you like, take something you have to, and enjoy what you do."

Lois said college is a wonderful time in life and students expand their horizons while they are here.

"Learn all you can, try different things and don't neglect the library," Lois said. "This is a wonderful moment in your life."

Lois said their college years here at UI were memorable, mostly because they had each other.

Whether talking about medical amnesty or college affordability, ASUI legislative ambassadors will aim to create a closer connection between the University of Idaho and Idaho state lawmakers as they head to Boise this spring.

ASUI Director of Policy Nick Wren, who is in charge of ASUI's Legislative Ambassador program, said the program sends a group of students, usually from ASUI, to Boise every January soon after the beginning of the legislative session. During the two-day trip, students meet with legislators to lobby for ASUI's interests.

"We've gotten a lot of feedback from legislators who really liked meeting with students from their own districts," Wren said.

Wren is looking for 35 outgoing applicants who are preferably Idaho natives because of the state-focused nature of the program and the new pairing system. Applications are due Nov. 7.

Wren said this year the group will focus on pairing ambassadors with legislators from their home districts. Additionally, he said the trip will likely last an extra day to give students and lawmakers more time to communicate.

Wren has gone in the past, and said he plans to go again this year. He said in past years the university president would address the Joint Finance and Appropriations Committee and deans of various colleges would set up displays in the capitol.

Wren said this time the event will not have displays and that they will instead have a luncheon to encourage more one-on-one conversations with UI representatives and legislators.

"I've never really had an opportunity to connect like this," said ASUI Senator McKenzie MacDonald, who plans to apply for the program.

She said she wants to be a legislative ambassador because of her passion for policymaking — especially on higher education.

In the program, ASUI suggests lobbying points and then trains the ambassadors before giving them free reign at the capitol.

Wren said that these lobbying points have traditionally been almost identical with those of the university leadership, but they still make the trip to Boise to give a student perspective to legislators.

He said he thinks ASUI definitely made a difference last year lobbying alongside university administration for a Change in Employee Compensation increase.

With the introduction of ASUI's resolution to lobby for a statewide medical amnesty bill, Wren said this will be the first year that their lobbying points have a distinct difference from the university leadership.

Wren said another main lobbying point will address the cost of higher education. For many people, college can be unaffordable — something ASUI and the university have worked on in the past and will continue to work on this spring, Wren said.

"We do want to see scholarship increases," he said.

Wren said Idaho has one of the worst going-on rates in the U.S., and he wants to make sure ambassadors discuss that with legislators.

Wren said the extremely conservative nature of the state can create a difficult environment for higher education.

"Every year we see bills to defund and privatize public universities," he said. "Of course those get shot down in committee, but it shows what kind of atmosphere we are working in."

Some lawmakers, Wren said, do not realize what the university does for their constituents through job creation and research money. He said meeting with legislative ambassadors from UI can act as a light-bulb moment.

COSTUMES

Yet, she said wearing things, such as a traditional Native American headdress, can cause someone with that cultural background to feel belittled.

"There was a time in American history when Native Americans were put on reservations where they were forced to be more like the dominant culture and couldn't wear their traditional clothing," Botello said. "This is taking away something from them that they fought and, a lot of times, died for."

UI Senior Mimi Price, who serves as president of the Feminist Led Activist Movement to Empower (FLAME) organization, said she has spent the last couple months working to bring the national campaign We're a Culture Not a Costume to the university.

We're a Culture Not a Costume is a poster campaign that aims to raise awareness about costumes that are disrespectful to other cultures, Price said.

Price said she began working on this project because accurate representation of other cultures is an important issue for FLAME.

"For the past few years, we have seen some questionable costumes on campus," Price said.

Often students will host Halloween parties with themes such as cowboys and Indians, Price said. She said the theme often results in many students dressing in Native American clothing and engaging in drinking or other activities, which can degrade and misrepresent their culture.

"There are so many other costume options that aren't a part of a living person's culture," Price said.

If a student sees one of their friends wearing a Halloween costume that appropriates or offends a certain culture, Price said students should not be afraid to let them know it is not OK.

"Just make it into a teaching moment and not something where you are attacking them,"

Price said.

Yet, Price said if you don't know the person wearing the costume, the best option is to not confront them and avoid escalating the situation. She said students should continue to spread the message of avoiding offensive Halloween costumes.

Botello said most people are unaware of the repercussions of their costume. She said students should remain mindful of their Halloween costumes and avoid outfits that could misrepresent a culture.

"Wearing costumes like this just perpetuates stereotypes," Botello said.

Idaho running back Elijahha Penny runs early, often for 184 rushing yards in win

When a running back is imposing his will on the defense, it's probably smart to keep feeding him the football.

Idaho kept calling Elijahha Penny's number, and as a result, the senior running back from Lakewood, California, racked up 184 rushing yards on 36 carries in Idaho's 27-13 win over Louisiana-Monroe Saturday at the Kibbie Dome.

It was the Vandals' fourth consecutive homecoming game win and the first time they've won back-to-back games since 2009.

"I think the ceiling's about as high as it's been since I got here," Idaho sophomore quarterback Matt Linehan said. "We know what we're capable of. We know we can go out and compete with just about any team in the Sun Belt."

Idaho (3-4 overall, 2-2 Sun Belt Conference) plays New Mexico State (0-7, 0-3) at 5 p.m. Saturday in Las Cruces, New Mexico.

"We're on a roll," Idaho coach Paul Petrino said. "We won two games in a row. We're .500 in conference. We go win next weekend, we're .500 period. So you just keep putting them together."

Penny's 36 carries is tied for fifth most all-time in Idaho history and his 184 rushing yards are 16th on the Idaho single game rushing list.

"I'm not tired at all," Penny said. "I feel like I can play another game ... All the eating right and working out and extra work I put in — I guess it paid off for me."

Petrino said Penny brought his "A" game and because of the high amount of carries and rushing yards, he should probably spend some time in the whirlpool Sunday.

"You got to give a lot of credit to the offensive line ... making those holes and just giving me one-on-one with a lot of people and breaking tackles and stuff like that," Penny said. "It feels good though to know that I'm in the (record) books for the Vandals."

Idaho senior guard Dallas Sandberg said Penny might be treating his offensive linemen to dinner for opening up big holes for the running back.

"He may be taking us to Gambino's later," Sandberg said.

Linehan completed 23 of his 39 passes for 315 yards with three touchdowns and one interception. Linehan's first touchdown pass was a 36-yarder hauled in by junior tight end Trent Cowan with seven seconds left in the second quarter to put the Vandals up 13-10 at halftime.

Idaho junior tight end Deon Watson caught the other two touchdown passes — a 34-yard reception in the third quarter to break a 13-13 tie and a 23-yard reception early in the fourth quarter to extend the Vandals' lead to 27-13.

"In the previous years, we let a bunch of games get away from us in the fourth quarter, and now we're starting to understand how to go out and win," Linehan said.

Idaho's defense allowed 243 yards of total offense, including 57 rushing yards. The Vandal defense usually got off the field on third down as the Warhawks converted only two out of 13 third downs.

"When you got a defense making plays, it takes a lot of pressure off of you because you know they're going to go out there and play their butt off," Linehan said. "All those guys are making great plays."

Idaho freshman linebacker Kaden Elliss led the Vandals with nine total tackles, including three tackles for loss.

"(Elliss) just has such a great motor," Petrino said. "He loves football. Those are the guys you love to coach, the guys that love to show up and practice every day and just love to fly around."

Idaho soccer clinches Big Sky regular-season title, will host conference tourney

Josh Grissom

As the clock ticked in the final minutes of Sunday's soccer match between Northern Colorado and Idaho, the Vandals nervously held their breath in anticipation, glancing up at the scoreboard.

As the sound of the concluding whistle rang across the field, the team jumped up and down in celebration and mobbed one another in excitement.

Idaho (13-4-1 overall, 9-0 Big Sky Conference) clinched the Big Sky regular-season championship.

"Our team has always been focused on our performance, and today's celebration is just a sum of a lot of effort by all of our players and staff," said Idaho coach Derek Pittman. "We are incredibly excited to have won the Big Sky regular-season championship."

The Vandals began weekend play on Friday against North Dakota (4-11-2, 2-6-1), hoping to gain three vital points in the conference standings before Sunday's game against Northern Colorado, who is now tied with Eastern Washington for second place in the conference.

"We knew that we would have a tough road trip beginning in Grand Forks, and that it was important to remain focused on North Dakota before we even thought about Sunday's game," Pittman said.

The Vandals opened up their offensive attack with a goal in the 12th minute by junior midfielder Alyssa Lloyd, who finished a corner kick from junior midfielder Clara Gomez to put the Vandals on the scoreboard.

The flurry of goals for the Vandals didn't come until the second half when the team took advantage of three separate scoring opportunities to derail North Dakota's chance at a post-season berth.

Junior forward Kavita Battan scored in the 54th minute to extend Idaho's lead to 2-0, and just 12 minutes later, sophomore forward Olivia Baggerly connected off a corner to score Idaho's third goal of the game.

The final goal for the Vandals came in the 79th minute when redshirt freshman forward Kaitlyn Joy took the ball the length of the field and found the back of the net to seal the win for Idaho.

"We challenged the players to be more aggressive physically in the second half and more hungry in front of the goal," Pittman said. "I feel we did a much better job matching North Dakota's intensity, and our execution on set plays were key to our second-half performance."

Despite the Idaho volleyball team's momentum thanks to its recent five-game winning streak, the Vandals were swept by the Idaho State Bengals (16-25, 24-26, 18-25) Saturday at Reed Gym in Pocatello. It is Idaho's first loss since Oct. 3 at Eastern Washington.

The Vandals are now 6-4 in the Big Sky Conference and 9-13 overall.

The Bengals have won 11 out of their last 12 games and are 9-1 in conference, which is tied with Northern Arizona in the South division of the Big Sky. Idaho is still second in the North division, only trailing Eastern Washington.

The Vandals' hitting percentage Saturday was .100 and no players earned 10 or more kills.

Senior outside hitter Katelyn Peterson led Idaho with eight kills. She surpassed the 900-kill mark in Saturday's loss.

Senior defensive specialist and Pocatello native Jenna Ellis was among three Idaho players who earned 10 or more digs. She led the team with 11.

Idaho coach Debbie Buchanan said the team struggled throughout the night staying consistent and stopping the Bengals, who ended the night with a .321 hitting percentage.

"We did not really come out and play our game tonight," Buchanan said. "We learned from game one and came out and competed in game two. At the end of the night we just had too many errors overall. We will hopefully face them again at some point and play a better match."

Idaho's next four matches will be the final home games of the season. The Vandals play Montana State at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Memorial Gym.

MEN'S TENNIS

Vandals claim consolation title

Barta, Fonseca win consolation final in doubles play

Josh Grissom
Argonaut

After a month-long hiatus from tournament play, the Vandal men's tennis team entered the ITA Mountain Regional in New Mexico with the hope of a strong showing against elite programs throughout the region.

Following a long weekend of play in Albuquerque, the Vandals delivered on that goal. The team emerged from the ITA Mountain Regional with several dominating performances in a tournament that consisted of twelve different universities.

Senior Odon Barta and sophomore Felipe Fonseca provided an immediate spark for the Vandals in the tournament, combining to win the consolation final in doubles play.

Idaho also experienced stellar showings in singles play, including a quarterfinal appearance by sophomore Mark Kovacs.

Following their opening-round loss to opponents Lewis Roskilly and Thomas Tenreiro of rival Boise State, Barta and Fonseca tore through the consolation bracket, winning five straight en route to the finals victory.

The Vandal duo began consolation play with a win against Utah State's Romai Ugarte and Javier Araya, before taking down the New Mexico State duo of Strahinja Trecakov and Liam Goldberg.

Barta and Fonseca then claimed back-to-back matches against Brigham Young opponents in two consecutive hard-fought victories to reach the consolation championship.

The Vandal pair then faced the Weber State duo of Todd Fought and Jakub Gewert in the finals, easily securing an 8-2 victory.

Idaho also had a hot start in the main draw of singles play, as Kovacs reached the quarterfinals before his elimination in the fourth round of the tournament.

Following a first-round bye, Kovacs faced Jorge Escutia of New Mexico, easily defeating the Lobo on his home court.

In the following round, Kovacs faced Boise State rival Tenreiro, claiming the tightly contested match in a tiebreaking third set 2-6, 6-0, 6-1.

Kovacs' run through the singles tournament finally halted when he faced Denver's Yannik James. Kovacs lost the match in two sets to the former Grenada Player of the Year, who eventually reached the singles title match Sunday.

The Vandals now turn their attention to the final tournament of the fall season in Spokane. Idaho will take part in the Bulldog Classic Friday through Sunday at Gonzaga.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Small fish in big pond

Vandals facing tough teams, sit in 17th with one round to go at Las Vegas Collegiate Showdown

Mihaela Karst
Argonaut

The first two rounds of the Las Vegas Collegiate Showdown in Boulder City, Nevada, came down to putting.

Idaho women's golf coach Lisa Johnson said the course was very similar during both rounds and the deciding factor was whether or not a putt went in the hole.

"We made more putts from round one to round two," Johnson said. "However, we're still not playing nearly as well as we need to. It's a matter of making putts early and building our confidence."

After the first two rounds, Idaho sits in 17th place with a 1-under-par 575. But Johnson isn't too concerned with their position.

"If a team gets hot with their putter on this course, they could have a great round," Johnson said. "This golf course is very (scoreable) and it is a very strong field. Our scores that we're shooting don't reflect how well the team is playing."

Idaho freshmen Michelle Kim and Sophie Hausmann led the Vandals, both finishing tied for 44th with a 1-under-par 143.

Idaho set its goals high going into the final round Tuesday.

"The greens are slower than other courses we've seen this season and the girls are leaving the putts short," Johnson said. "We need to enter the round with an aggressive mindset."

Idaho is looking to break a school record in Boulder City, Nevada, this week.

POS.	PLAYER	TEAM	TO PAR	TOTAL
T44	KIM	IDAHO	-1	143
T44	HAUSMANN	IDAHO	-1	143
T54	MCKINLEY	IDAHO	E	144
T60	STRANKMAN	IDAHO	+1	145
T92	GRAY	IDAHO	+5	149

"We would like to shoot the school record, 11-under-par for 18 holes," Johnson said.

As the Vandals continue to take on the same course they will be competing on for the Big Sky Conference Championship, they hope to build their confidence.

"Overall the most important goal is to get a feel for the conference championship course in the spring," Johnson said. "We feel very good about our team's confidence with this course and we have demonstrated that we are able to shoot under par on this course."

Idaho is the only team from the Big Sky that was invited to the Las Vegas Collegiate Showdown, and Johnson said that it gave the team a good opportunity to experience the course before any other team.

"We know that if we are able to shoot even or under par, we have a good chance to win the championship," Johnson said.

Johnson said she is confident in the team's ability to shoot well in the final round.

CHAMPIONS

Following their victory at North Dakota, the Vandals traveled to Greeley, Colorado, to face Northern Colorado (11-7-1, 6-2-1) in a matchup that would decide the Big Sky Conference regular-season title.

"Northern Colorado is a really good team," Pittman said. "They play good soccer and they have some really great players. We knew we would need to play our best to win."

The Vandals' offense made an immediate impact in the opening minutes of Sunday's match. Gomez secured a deflected ball and found the back of the net to put Idaho up 1-0 in the sixth minute of the game.

In the next 77 minutes of game action, the two teams traded shots back and forth as freshman goalkeeper Amanda Poertner and the Vandal defense denied any scoring opportunities for the Bears.

Idaho finally got some breathing room in the 83rd minute when Lloyd headed a corner past Northern Colorado's goalkeeper to raise the score to 2-0.

Following Lloyd's goal, the team anxiously watched the scoreboard clock for the remaining seven minutes until the game's final whistle sounded.

"I'm really proud of our team for their focus, effort and perseverance," Pittman said. "For us to come out with the Big Sky regular-season championship is awesome."

With Sunday's victory, the Vandals clinched the top seed and the right to host the Big Sky Tournament next month.

"It's going to feel very nice to play in front of our home fans for the next two weeks," Pittman said. "We'll do everything we can to protect our home field in the tournament."

The Vandals have one last home game on their schedule before the post-season tournament. Idaho will face Eastern Washington at 3 p.m. Friday at Guy Wicks Field.

The Vandals will then host the Big Sky Tournament at Guy Wicks Field Nov. 5-8.

Athletes of the week

Kavita Battan – soccer

Idaho junior forward Kavita Battan headed in her 10th goal of the season against North Dakota Friday in Grand Forks, North Dakota. Battan had scored in four straight matches, including that game, but the streak ended when she didn't score a goal against Northern Colorado Sunday. She has a total of six goals in nine Big Sky Conference games. She is tied for third on the Idaho all-time list in single-season scoring.

The Vandals won the Big Sky regular-season title after they beat Northern Colorado Sunday in Greeley, Colorado. Idaho (13-4-1 overall, 9-0 Big Sky) will host the Big Sky Tournament, which starts Nov. 5. The Vandals will play their final game of the regular season against Eastern Washington at 3 p.m. Friday at Guy Wicks Field.

Kaden Elliss – football

Idaho freshman linebacker Kaden Elliss totaled nine tackles in Saturday's homecoming win against Louisiana-Monroe.

"From the beginning of the season to now, I think our defense has evolved," Elliss said. "It's looking a lot better and we're having fun."

The Vandals (3-4 overall, 2-2 Sun Belt) will play New Mexico State at 5 p.m. Saturday in Las Cruces, New Mexico.

Elijhaa Penny – football

In Saturday's homecoming game against Louisiana-Monroe, Idaho senior running back Elijhaa Penny carried the ball 36 times for 184 rushing yards. Penny's 36 carries is tied for fifth most in a game all-time in Idaho history.

Mau

Becca Mau – volleyball

Idaho sophomore outside hitter Becca Mau accumulated 19 kills against Weber State Thursday in Ogden, Utah, which matched her career high. Idaho won the match 3-1, but the Vandals fell to Idaho State 3-0 Saturday in Pocatello. Idaho (9-13 overall, 6-4 Big Sky) will play Montana State at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Memorial Gym.

Sports brief

The Idaho men's golf team finished fifth at the Price's Give 'Em Five Invite Friday through Sunday at the Butterfield Trail Golf Club in El Paso, Texas.

The Vandals shot a 16-under-par 848, including their best round of 279 in the third round.

Idaho sophomore Daniel Sutton tied for 11th overall after firing a 6-under-par 210.

Kansas won the invite shooting 38-under-par 826 and Missouri-Kansas City's Antoine Rozner took first shooting a 19-under-par 197.

Idaho will compete in the team's final invitational of the fall — the Warrior Invitational — Nov. 2-4 in Kauai, Hawaii.

A sensitive subject

There's a reason why STI talks are so prevalent on college campuses

On any given day, students are surrounded by information about how to maintain their mental health, how to be safe with alcohol and how to prevent sexually transmitted illnesses (STI).

Although the many flyers, emails and events about sexual health and STI prevention might feel overwhelming or ineffective, there's a reason why these talks are so prevalent.

While the Vandal Health Education events and other outreach efforts might seem unnecessary, the reason for them is because the spread of STIs among college populations is a distinct problem. The discussions and extra information about this topic is one of the only things keeping college students informed.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) website, once someone has contracted an STI, they are two to five times more at risk for acquiring HIV through sexual contact. Nearly half of the 20 million STDs diagnosed every year are among people between the ages of 15 and 24 years old.

This is an issue definitely worth the attention of college students.

While the CDC cites abstinence as the primary means of STI prevention, it's an option that's not realistic for everyone. The second best means of prevention is to always use a condom, regardless of whether or not the other partner uses an oral contraceptive or other forms of birth control.

No matter what the situation is, it's important to have an open and honest conversation between partners before engaging in sexual activities.

For anyone participating in sexual activities, it is vital to undergo consistent STD and STI tests. STI symptoms don't always appear right away, and when they do they could be mistaken for something else, like a urinary tract or yeast infection.

STIs have a stigma of being embarrassing topics that shouldn't be discussed, but that's what some medical professionals are here for. They're there to help, not judge.

In addition to safe-sex practices, when it comes to preventing the spread of STIs, maintaining personal, non-sexual health is a crucial element.

Consistent sleep, a healthy diet and regular exercise helps to build a strong immune system that will further prevent students from acquiring an STI or any other infection or disease.

Being a busy college student does not give anyone the excuse to not take care of themselves. Although many people might think school should come first, the ultimate priority for any person should be their overall health, and that includes students.

At the end of the day, STI prevention is a matter of personal responsibility. Regardless of how many events explain the ways to prevent STIs and maintain healthy sexual practices, it's up to each individual to keep themselves safe.

Remember to not only listen to the information, but also to follow the guidelines for safe sex practices. When in doubt, the best course of action is to stay informed and aware.

A homecoming to remember

Why I am proud to be a Vandal after Homecoming Week

As a transfer student, this year's Homecoming Week was the first I have experienced while living in Moscow.

Last year, I went to a school with a student population that almost doubled the University of Idaho's. Suffice to say, the homecoming celebrations I participated in while there did involve a lot more people.

But that doesn't mean the homecoming events at my last school were any better than Homecoming Week at UI. In fact, this past week exceeded my expectations.

At my old school the homecoming events only lasted a couple of days, while an entire week is dedicated to homecoming at UI. I have to say, that made it a lot more fun.

From the beginning of the week, I felt included in the university community through the events of homecoming.

Being a part of the Greek system, I was immediately put to work with the decorations for my house. I spent many tireless hours painting and cutting out cardboard decorations with the girls in my house. Throughout the week, our dining room was full of cardboard, paint and glitter.

Friday, after we finished setting up all of our decorations, I felt a sense of pride knowing that our collective hard work had paid off.

One of my favorite events was painting the windows of businesses in downtown Moscow at the start of Homecoming Week.

Vapor venom

Online e-cigarette sales too easy for teens to access

A trend is forming among today's youth with modern tobacco products like electronic cigarettes, and while these products are supposedly better than smoking the traditional cigarette, the long term effects of "vaping" are still widely unknown.

What is known, and what is most disturbing, is that the number of middle school and high school students who use electronic cigarettes, or "e-cigarettes," tripled in one year between 2013 and 2014.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the number of high school students who consume nicotine increased from 4.5 to 13.4 percent, and the number of middle school consumers increased from 1.1 to 3.9 percent. About 2.5 million students now consume nicotine.

The rise in numbers of these young children who "vape" led me to wonder — how are so many kids accessing these things?

The obvious answer is that they are having someone who is over 18 years old purchase this product for them. But, as it turns out, kids can easily buy electronic cigarettes online using a credit card.

A study by the Journal of the American Medical Association Pediatrics used 11 teenagers between the ages of 14 and 17. The teens were given permission to use their parents' credit cards to try to buy e-cigarettes from 98 different online vendors.

Out of the 98, only five rejected the kids due to their age. Eighteen of them failed because of poor websites, having nothing to do with the age of the buyers. The remaining 75 online vendors allowed the underage consumers to purchase their product.

Most sites have little to no age regulation. Simply clicking on a box to verify if someone is 18 or older doesn't cut it. The vendors either assume all kids are honest or they don't care.

The latter of the two options seems more likely, because why would they care? As long as they get their money, who cares if they are hooking these kids on nicotine and other chemicals? I care, and I think online sales should be discontinued. Kids have enough bad habits, like taking in too much sugar or McDonalds, and we don't need to add to that by making it easy for them to inhale toxins that taste like cotton candy or any of the other flavors there are to choose from.

I'm not saying we should completely ban the sale of e-cigarettes, just the online sales. For adults who smoke traditional cigarettes and are having a hard time trying to quit, the e-cigarette is a much better choice.

E-cigarettes are believed to be better than other forms of tobacco because they extract the nicotine from the tobacco plant, but leave out the other harmful elements like tar that are thought to be the cause of lung cancer.

But they still use chemicals in liquid form and nicotine is still highly addictive. It seems like inhaling a chemical vapor can't be good for anyone. As stated earlier, the long-term effects are unknown because e-cigarettes are a recent development, but we shouldn't risk allowing children to access the product in case the future effects do turn out to be harmful.

REMEMBER

I would feel a little uneasy giving college students painting tools and full access to my business' front window. When I arrived to the business my sorority sisters and I were assigned to paint, I was almost expecting the owner to come out shaking his fist and yelling at us to quit vandalizing his property. However, to my relief, the owner simply asked us what we were planning on painting and said he was excited to see how it turned out.

The overwhelming community involvement throughout Homecoming Week really stood out to me in this moment. Perhaps I am biased because I was raised in a small town, but Moscow has a welcoming charm that makes any university event inclusive to everyone.

I was also a part of my sorority's skit for Vandal Jingles. For anyone who has not attended this event, I strongly recommend going next year. Not only was it a great opportunity to bond with my sisters and the fraternity we partnered with, but the other groups' jingles were hilarious and entertaining.

My favorite event, by far, was the homecoming Serpentine. Before the event, I honestly wasn't excited to walk to the Kibbie Dome in the cold October weather.

I was standing outside of my house with my sisters shivering and grumbling about the cold when I heard the growing roar of the marching band as it approached us.

The events for Homecoming Week were great, but I also enjoyed the fact that the university focuses on a alumni.

Watching all of the students and alumni having such a great time together in honor of this university made me feel a sense of school pride that I hadn't experienced at my previous college.

The events for Homecoming Week were great, but I also enjoyed the fact that the university focuses on alumni. Being able to talk to Vandal alumni and listen to their stories about past traditions was interesting and enlightening. I can see myself coming back after I graduate to reminisce with friends and show my family why UI is one of a kind.

After this year, I'm even more excited for Homecoming Week in 2016.
