It appears that we have enough conflicts in our available free time to make a meeting this semester impossible. As soon as we assemble for second semester, I will again ask you for your available times in the hopes of getting together at least once to discuss our mission and future plans.

The current critical problem relates to some funds which I have available to support Black History and Black Literature courses. Since neither course is being offered this year the funds remain uncommitted. I would like some help in determining the best possible use of this money. Your ideas will be welcome and I think should determine how we do spend it. Will you think about this for our first discussion?
