

Bunker Hill & Sullivan M. & C.Co.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 5, 1900.

Al Moor, in an interview with Operative, stated that the Democrats have everything their own way here and that they are making things so hot that Sutherland's corporation heelers are offering to trade off the balance of the Republican ticket to aid their favorite. The property holders realize that Sutherland's election means a horde of high salaried deputies and a continuance of the expensive permit system and that they will protect their own financial welfare by placing Lyle in charge of the sheriff's office. But Moor says none of their schemes can elect Sutherland.

Jim Finley is also confident of Democratic success.

Pete Adams says that about 50 Japs were employed on work near Kellogg that should rightly have been given to Americans. Adams says that if the companies begin this kind of work they will get sick of it before long, for he Adams, says he has a rifle and about fifty rounds of ammunition and that 50 other men are equally well armed and that they will protect these Japs and shoot the first man that molests them and in this manner make the people so sick of this kind of labor that they will come to their senses and expel these foreigners. They will then know whether they prefer Japs or Union men.

Jack Connelly says that Joe McDonald had some of his own men shoot at him just to show the out side world that marshal law was a necessity; that if the shooting had been on the square McDonald would not have looked up the hill to see where it was coming from. He says it is the rawest piece of work he ever saw and that the people around here do not take much stock in it. But still Connelly says that some of the Union men had to get out of the country or Burbidge and McDonald would have had them behind the bars to make their bluff go with the people.