FOUR C. C. C. MEN DO BATTLE WITH BIG FISH FROM THE SEA

Company 250 of the Civilian Conservation Corps stationed at Profile Gap near Yellow Pine, Idaho, claims four brave fisherman who did battle with and conquered three large specimen of salmon fish which had found their way up the Columbia River from the Pacific Ocean to the headwaters of Big Creek, a tributary of the Middle Fork of Salmon River. These brave fishermen are Joseph Brennan and Archie Brown of Paterson, New Jersey, James Quinn of Trenton, New Jersey and Mess Sergeant Eberle of the U. S. Regulars. The story runs that these brave men were trespassing in the stream in which these big fish were making their spawning grounds, and being thus disturbed were charged with the lust of battle. In self defense these four brave men were forced to resort to their automatic pistols which were used with deadly effect. When the powder smoke had cleared away these monstrous fish with jaws and teeth like sharks lay prostrate and were at the mercy of their captors. It was necessary to hire a pack train of mules to transport the captured trophies over the 9,000 foot summit into the camp. Fresh baked salmon was soon on the menu and plenty of fish was served to each member of the camp. The length of the fish were 36 inches, 38 inches and 42 ½ inches.
