Idaho Now Has 17,000 Workers On Relief Rolls

On December 1, 17,082 unemployed men who have qualified for the work relief program of the Idaho Emergency Relief administration were registered by the IERA, Raymond Thompson, head of the public relations departemnt of the IERA announced Wednesday.

"A relief client, in applying for work relief, is allowed two classifications," Thompson explained.

"He may be a carpenter or some other tradesman and may be designated thus in his primary classification, but ralizing that there is little opportunity for his kind of work in the particular work relief project available, the client will register as a laborer, under the secondary classification, thus showing his desire to accept whatever work is available. This accounts for the high percentage of registrations as laborers.

"The general policy of the IERA is that all registered able bodied men and women must work for their relief on some worthwhile project wherever possible," Thompson said.
