

likely that if the Republicans made any kind of a showing in the Democratic split would have occurred. When a party majority is slim and the going is tight, it sticks together from sheer necessity. But now, with Republican representation in both branches at time lows, and with the Democratic majority so overwhelming, congressmen are speaking their minds and airing resentments and preferences.

is seen in other matters than the Supreme Court bill. In the past, Roosevelt has always obtained appropriations on a blank check—that is, Congress voted the money requested, with the proviso that it be spent at the President's discretion. This session White House effort to avoid having a substantial portion of relief funds earmarked specifically allocated to certain projects has failed, and seems to have a chance of succeeding in the future. And some of the most biting criticism of the President has come from Democrats.

the potential political repercussions that can follow this are unpredictable. It is no longer regarded as likely that the Democratic party will become permanently divided in camps, roughly classified as "conservative" and "radical," and a new political alignment and political party will result.

to quote Mr. Kent again. "Mr. Roosevelt's Supreme Court issue is a question of party loyalty, which is designed to read opposing Democrats out of the party." Next a number of prominent Democratic senators come up for reelection who have lately shown disinclination to follow the White House lead.

Writing in Collier's, George Elmer, who is perhaps closer to the President than any other newspaperman, asserts that Mr. Roosevelt will use these men and use his power to elect them in the primaries. The list includes Senators Wheeler, Byrd, King, Gerry and Tydings. All of them, with the exception of Senator Wheeler, belong to the conservative wing of the party. Senator Elmer has always been regarded as liberal (he ran for vice-president on La Follette's 1924 independent ticket, favors government own-application at the local police or sheriff's office.

Proper Use Of Valley County Land Big Aim Of Rehabilitation Program

Proper land use and preventing settlement on Valley county lands unsuited to agriculture, is one of the goals of the resettlement administration's rehabilitation program, reports E. W. Warr, county rehabilitation supervisor, First National Bank Building, Emmett, Idaho.

Plans worked out in cooperation with each of the nineteen rehabilitation families in the county, provide for farm management and farm practices that will conserve the soil resources and still provide the maximum cash income. Where possible, participation in the soil conservation program is urged. The cash income is supplemented by plans for sufficient garden to insure a plentiful supply of home-owned fruits and vegetables.

As every family locating on poor land or in isolated districts unsuited to farming increases county road, school and relief costs without comparable tax returns, rehabilitation loans are made only to families on potentially productive farms. A family on a farm capable of being a productive unit thru a loan for necessary livestock, feed, seed, machinery or other capital goods, is not only able to pay its taxes but spends hundreds of dollars each year with local merchants and industry.

To prevent settlement on lands unsuited to farming, newcomers expecting rehabilitation assistance are urged to check with the county supervisor before making final arrangements for purchase or lease. If the farm is located on good soil where county services and marketing facilities are available, eligibility for a loan is easily established.

Loan applications from qualified farm families will be accepted up to July 1 within present limitation of funds in the county.
