Dear Mr. Crabtree:

Although we met at the Great Basin Conference in Pocatello some years back, I am certain that you do not remember me. So, by way of introduction, I was a graduate student at the time from the University of California, Davis and have done most of my work in the central Great Basin.

I am currently in the middle of a book for Holt, Rinehart and Winston, titled something like Anthropological Archaeology. I have extensively cited your work as exemplary of the experimental approach to technology. Specifically, I detailed your experiments on replicating the Lindenmeier Folsoms. The reason I write is that I wonder if it is possible for you to send me a photograph of some of your Folsom points. I realize this is a presumptive thing to ask -- I'll gladly pay any costs involved. But to be able to illustrate some points made by a modern technician would be invaluable to this section. Drawings would also be helpful, but I feel that photographs would be superior. I'd like to show something like 6 or so points, if possible.

I thank you very much for any help you may be able to give me.

Sincerely,

David Thomas
