Dear Mr. Crabtree:

I am enclosing a copy of a flyer on Errett Callahan's Pamunkey Project though I imagine that you have already seen one.

I will be working with Errett this summer (in a paid position). I have been interested in stone-age technology and my wife and I have spent the last 6 months living in a tent and gaining experience in this sort of thing. I am a rank novice at stone working but I have managed to construct several tools (including a bow and arrows) and have tanned a deer hide - all by the exclusive use of stone tools. My ultimate goal is to spend 3 years living a stone-age hunter-gatherer life in complete independence of modern civilization.

We intend to leave here for Virginia somewhere between the 15th & 24th of May with intentions of driving leisurely across country (with perhaps a week stop-over in Ohio).

Would there be any chance that (over)

I might see you and perhaps pick up a few pointers on lithic technology. Our schedule is still flexible and we will adjust it to your convenience if you do feel that you can spare any of your valuable time.

Sincerely,
Andy
