Dear Don,

Unfortunately, I don't have too much time at the moment, however, I did want to drop you a little note of thanks for those superb specimens which you were kind enough to send. Last night I spent the better part of two hours just examining the pieces and I havn't spent a more enjoyable evening at home for some time.

Don, I just came across a rather interesting piece which I will have in the mail to you soon. It's a neolithic blade still in its original mounting. The grip is of wood while the blade was fixed in place by means of tree pitch. Unfortunately, the party who attempted to treat the wood against possible collapse (which is normal after having removed it from the water after 5 thousand years) didn't do too good a job. The piece is still rather attractive and indicative of what is usually found. One must not forget how rare pieces such as these are and, therefore, one cannot be all too choosy.

That's about it for now Don. Take care and thanks again.

With warmest regards,

PS. In your package I found a portion of a glass Folsom. The front half was missing and I just wondered if it might have been lost in transit or if there wasn't any to begin with. I would appreciate your putting my mind at rest.
