Dear Don,

Received your kind card and thought it best to answer it before too much time elapsed. The Clovis point pictured was most probably not unlike similar tools which you have manufactured. They are indeed attractive pieces. However, ascetically the folsom still takes most awards. I recall from other literature which has come my way that you have manufactured almost every kind of implement and, others who have tried the duplicating arts have only been marginally successful. I recall that Francois Bordes has tried on numerous occasions, and from some of the pieces in his office his margin of success was surprisnly good.

Things here are all relatively unchaged, and one looks forward to a hopefully different spring. As mentioned to you, I was indeed surprised at your phone call and saddened as to your wife's death. There are many things which I would like to do for you but don't know what it is that would suit you best. Please let me know at your earliest convenience what would make you the happiest. As you know, there is a large number of Stone Age tools awaiting your beck and call.

All the veyr best and take care.

George Wili
