Dear Mr. Crabtree,

Last week George Miller took me to task for neglecting to send you copies of several articles I had written. With this in mind I hope that it is not too presumptuous of me to enclose two Pacific Coast Archaeological Society Quarterlies rather than just reprints. You will note an old acquaintance of yours, 'Davey', has the lead article in both. I'm at the end!

George told me that Morlin Childers had been to see you about the flaking of 'ridge-backed' tools. I about flipped when I first saw these tools as I had seen nothing like them before. Later, I did --- in the Museum of Man in Paris, but they were catalogued as coming from the Victoria Cave area in South Africa, no less. I wrote Morlin that I was sorry that I couldn't find any a little closer!

George also stated he hoped that you would come out to look over our area. We would certainly welcome you, but a word of caution -- George is the only one who thrives on the desert summer heat.

Cordially,

Robert S. Begole

P.S. Over the years I have certainly enjoyed your various articles. Now, if I could only absorb and retain it all!
