

John POLLOCK, ANTHRO 3908, Aug. 3/79

As a professional archaeologist with over ten years field experience in archaeological excavation and analysis, the technology course has proved to be a rewarding and imformative experience.

The amount of information acquired has met and exceeded my expectations and will be of great future benefit in my work.

The format consisting of a one week intensive session with several evening "workshops" is, in my opinion, ideal. A longer session of 2 - 3 weeks would make it impossible for many working archaeologists to attend due to the loss of time and income.

The class size is at a suitable level but at a maximum for this type of learning. Anything larger than a group of 20 would be unworkable.

It would be of advantage if, next year, two classes were offered, one at an introductory level and one at a higher stage for those who have taken the preliminary course.

Don Crabtree as instructor has done a very fine job during this first course and has paved the way for future successful courses of this type at the University of Lethbridge.
