TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

I have met Mr. Bruce Bradley for about one week in September 1970 while he was carrying out some experimental work in my laboratory here. The work was concerned with the experimental reproduction of ancient flint implements in order to assess how they were made and so throw light on prehistoric technology.

I was very much impressed with Mr. Bradley's expertise and his intellectual grasp of the implications of his work and potential for research in prehistory. I should like to support him in his search for practical means of continuing his work in this field and would be prepared to comment on any applications he may make for funds etc. for this purpose.
