Dear Mr. Crabtree:

In 1971 the Annual General Meeting of the American Philosophical Society will be held on April 22-24, in the Hall of the Society on Independence Square, Philadelphia.

The Committee on Meetings at its recent session directed me to invite you to read a paper at that time on the craft and technique of making stone tools.

Since the audience consists mainly of members of the Society and their guests representing all fields of knowledge, it is desirable that the paper be not too technical. Ordinarily the reader of a paper is given twenty minutes for the presentation of his subject. However, in publishing the paper later in our PROCEEDINGS it is desirable that the paper be of sufficient length to present the subject adequately.

During the meeting invited speakers and their wives are guests of the Society, which provides hotel accommodations and meals.

Hoping that you will be able to accept this invitation, I am

Sincerely yours,

George W. Corner
Executive Officer.
