Dear Davy:

Thank you for your Christmas letter and a look at the Specimens. I do not think that the lithic material was used for flaking; they are much too small, and this type of material is much too hard and slick to be used to remove flakes. The people who had to use these pieces of stone must have come from a depressed area. I feel sorry for these poor, poverty-stricken creatures.

Evelyn and I are so glad to hear that you are up and around again. Don't overdo and take care of yourself. We, too, have had a bad two years healthwise but things will have to get better.

With best wishes,

Don and Evelyn

P.S. Since we have no functional name for these rocks, we can call them ceremonials as I am sure that there would have been much rejoicing when they lost them.
