Dear Don:

I have been casting an early fluted point from Panama, recently found, and have this extra copy that I thought you might use. I have seen a number of these Fells Cave Type Points from Central and South America with the large flake scars that carry to and across the median and making for a thin flat blade. Perhaps you can use this as an example of what appears to be flaking assisted with club or mallet. The original is made of a henna colored flinty material.

Best Christmas wishes,

Allen Eichenberger
