Dear Professor Crabtree!

Thanks to your friend the Postmaster of Kimberly I found out about your difficulty and I beg of you to allow me to offer my deep sympathy, and pray that your luck has changed to a brighter side by now.

My luck has been rather dull due to the fact that Mrs Fletcher spent the Christmas season in a hospital with severe heart condition, and I now have a full time job of nursing and doing all the chores of running the house and trying to keep her in luck while she is convalescing it has been a rather lonesome time for me and I would have been happy to have some obidian slips to to work on

And if you can possibly find time to gather together some ships for me I will be forever grateful.
And of course I would like to have some now as my eyes are giving out on me, and maybe I could make a few pieces before my eyesight gets worse, I am afraid that the postage money has gotten out by now so I am including a frogskin to cover shipping expense I would also like to know if you received the small package of citrus I sent you from if you are unable to mess with my request at present. Please just forget I was asked and I will still be as always grateful to you for what you have done for me in the past. With kind regards to you and wishes for your wife's complete recovery of health I beg to remain

Sincerely yours
Frisco Fletcher
