Dear Don and Evelyn:

Please accept thanks from us all for your exciting series of demonstrations. The attendance you drew during the last few days before finals was clear testimony to the interest your work has generated here, and the ideas you passed on will have a great deal of influence with many students as time goes by.

Time passed far too quickly, and I regret there was no opportunity for us to get together quietly in a corner. There is much I would have liked to discuss with you, particularly about the papers I have been working on concerning theory of rock fracture and the nature of natural flaking. You may recall that we discussed both of these briefly some years ago; work on both of them had to be dropped because of the Marmes and Apollo commitments that developed unexpectedly. However, if there is time to work here in Pullman this summer, as may be the case, those papers will be high on my priority list, and I would value your comments on them if you might still have time to read the manuscripts. Within the next week, hopefully, the times of my trips to Houston should become clear and I can plan more seriously for the summer. Thus I will let you know as things settle down.

In the meantime, thanks once again for all you did during your stay with us; please come back whenever you can.

Sincerely,

Roald Fryxell
Assistant Professor of Anthropology
(Geochronology)
