Dear Mr. Crabtree:

An article concerning your work in making stone tools in the manner of prehistoric peoples appeared in the San Jose, California, newspaper and was sent to me by friends.

I have been producing projectile points from obsidian for some time. However, I am not satisfied with some aspects of the pressure flaking that I can do to date, particularly the problem of producing long flakes in order to arrive at a thin point.

The article mentioned that some of your work techniques have been described in printed materials and also in films. Could I obtain a list of these reference materials, their cost and how they can be obtained.

I would also like to have information about the annual work shops in flint knapping.

Sincerely yours,

George Gröger
